In ducem reducem, or A Welcome from the Isle of Ree (1627). Huntington Library, MS. H M 742.

Edmund Ironside the English King, or War Hath Made All Friends. Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 96-119.

Entertainment before James I and the King of Denmark (1606; speeches of Eumone, Dice, and Irene). Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 2877, f. 162b.

Entertainment at Clarke Castle (1634; speeches of Genius, Orpheus, and Winter). Brit. Mus. MS. Egerton 2623, f. 20.

- Faithful Virgins*. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 195. ("To be acted by the Duke's company.")
- The Fary Knight, or Oberon the Second* (c. 1640). Folger Shakespeare Library, MS. 46.1.
- The Fatal Marriage, or A Second Lucretia*. Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 136-161.
- Gigantomachia, or Work for Jupiter*. Folger Shakespeare Library, Commonplace Book (prob. before 1625), MS. 2203.1.
- The Governor* (1656, not the play of this title by Sir Cornelius Formido). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 10,419.
- Grobiana's Nuptials*. Bodleian, MS. Bodl. 30.
- Harefield Entertainment*. 1602. Fragments appear in the Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 5353, f. 95; College of Arms, MS. Talbot K f. 43; Brit. Mus., MS. Birch 4173. Cf. further E. K. Chambers, E. S., IV, 68.
- Hercules Fureus. Thyestis. Oedipus* (Translations from Seneca). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 76.
- Heterochitanomalonomia* (1613). Folger Shakespeare Library, Commonplace Book (prob. before 1625). MS. 2203.1.
- The Hypochondriac, or The Turmoils of Love*. Brit. Mus., MS. Sloane 1863 ff. 43b-70.
- The Illustrious Slaves* (1672). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 32,094. f. 274.
- Judith* (c. 1595; partial translation from Judithae Constantia by Schonaeus). Nat. Library of Wales, Penarth MS. 508.
- Jugurtha, or The Faithless Cosen German*. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 195.
- Julii and Julian*. Folger Shakespeare Library, MS. 448.16 (written c. 1570 in a commonplace book).
- Love Feigned and Unfeigned*. A fragment written on first and last leaves of J. Herolt's Sermones Discipuli (pub. 1492) c. 1575 (?). Brit. Mus., I.B. 2172.
- The Lover's Stratagem, or Virtue Rewarded*. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 18 (holograph).
- Love's Changelings Change*. Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 293-318.
- Love's Victorie* (c. 1630). Huntington Library, MS. H M 600.
- Masculine Bride, or Whimsyes of Senor Hidalgo*. Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 5152, Art. 1.
- Medea* (Tr. from Seneca). Brit. Mus., MS. Sloane 911, ff. 100-115b.
- The Merry Loungers*. Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 6402, f. 84.
- Narcissus, A Twelfth Night Merriment*. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 212.
- The Tragedy of Nero* (1624). Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 245-268.
- The Partial Law* (c. 1620). Folger Shakespeare Library, MS. 553.1.
- Pelopidarium Secunda*. Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 5110, Art 2.
- Pilgrimage to Parnassus and The Return from Parnassus*. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson D. 398.
- The Return from Parnassus, or The Scourge of Simony*. Halliwell-Phillipp MS. (Same as The Progresse to Parnassus: Folger Shakespeare Library, MS. 448.12?)

- Pyrami et Thisbe* (By N. R.). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 15,277, f. 56b.
The Review ("prob. but not certainly later than 1700"). Folger Shakespeare Library, MS. 2018.1.
I Richard the Second. Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 161–186.
Romanus (By Ja. Co.; fragment). Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 4628, Art. 14.
The Second Maiden's Tragedy. Brit. Mus., MS. Lansdowne 807, ff. 28–56.
The Siege of Croya (c. 1700). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 119.
Sir Thomas More. Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 7368, Art. 1.
Sisigambis, Queen of Syracuse. Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 167.
The Tell Tale. Dulwich College, MS. xx.
Timon. Victoria and Albert Museum, MS. Dyce 52.
The True Tragi-Comedie formerly acted at Court, etc. (A five-act dramatization of the Frances Howard—Robert Carr Scandal, written after 1634). Brit. Mus., MS. Add. 25,348.
Trye before your (sic) Truste. Late 17th cent. Brit. Mus., MS. Add. 37,158, f. 17.
The Two Noble Ladies, and the Converted Conjuror. Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 224–245.
Warr of Grammar (Acted by scholars of Cranebrook School, 1666). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 22,725.
The Welsh Ambassador (c. 1623). MS. in Cardiff Public Library.
White Aethiopian. Brit. Mus., MS. Harleian 7313, Art 1.
Wine, Beere, and Ale. University of Edinburgh, MS. Laing, III, 493.
Woodstock Entertainment. The Tale of Hemetes the Heremyte (Variously attributed to George Gascoigne and Sir Henry Lee). Brit. Mus., Royal MS. 18 A. XLVII (27). For fragments of Second Woodstock Entertainment see E. K. Chambers, E. S., III, 404.

ANONYMOUS PLAYS WITHOUT TITLES.

- "A play, no name." Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 5,001.
 "A comedy, wants title." Brit. Mus., MS. Sloane 1828, ff. 1–45b.
 "Fragment of a play, 17th cent." Brit. Mus., MS. Sloane 1911–1913, f. 203.
 "An unidentified play without a title." Folger Shakespeare Library, The Lombarde Volume (bound c. 1700), MS. 1487.2.
 "A play—title not given." MS. at Helmingham Hall, Suffolk. Cf. Hist. MSS. Comm., First Report, p. 61.
 "Masque." c. 1625. Huntington Library, MS. H M 22.
 "A Christmas entertainment" (in 5 acts with characters Leonides, Ingenio, Roscius, Sapientia, Obligia, etc.). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson D 1361, ff. 306–329.
 "A Pastoral" (in five acts, with scene laid in Thrace, with principal characters Rascipolis, Myastis, Cotys, Cleta, Achmea, etc.). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 29,496.
 "A titleless play of the 17th cent." (scene Isle of Scyros, and characters Xamolxis, Perindo, etc.). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 29,496.
 "A play in blank verse on the subject of Tancred and Ghismunda" (Thomson's Tancred and Sigismunda, 1745?). Brit. Mus., Add. MS. 34,312, f. 139.

- "Time's Triumph" (a moral masque resembling Fane's dated Aug. 5, 1643). Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 1994, ff. 212-245.
- "A prose comedy" (begins "Antonio, All this is most true," and features the characters Octavio and Allesandra, daughter of a Turk). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 93. (Sometimes called Antonio of Raguso.)
- "Fragment of a play" (chief characters are Ethelbert, the Duchess his wife, Oswald their son, Orina, Sir Ingram Mouse-trap, etc.; contains a Collier forgery). Brit. Mus., MS. Egerton 2,623, f. 37.
- "A comedy, without a title" (characters are Wardho; Leyman; two English Cavaliers; Bubble, a Frenchman; Grim; etc.; initialed "R.M."). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson C. 923, f. 24.
- "An unfinished indecent comedy" (characters are a Quaker, Woodfall a lawyer, Sir Tho. Trueman, Capt. Mackforrest, Sally Salisbury, the goal-keeper at Newgate, etc.). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson 1413, f. 19.
- "A tragedy with no title" (the scene is laid in Tunis, and the chief characters are the Viceroy Asembeg; and Mustapha, pasha of Aleppo). Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson, poet. 20.

UNLOCATED MANUSCRIPTS.

A few manuscripts which appear to be lost are mentioned above under various authors. Attention may be called also to the lost fragments of George Peele's Theobald's Entertainment (cf. Chambers, E. S., III, 247). Collier printed a fragment of Marlowe's Massacre of Paris from a manuscript now unknown and suspect. Among the Collier papers were the manuscript Masque of the Twelve Months, and Masque of the Four Seasons, both printed for the Shakespeare Society in 1848. In Hazlitt's Manual, passim, several manuscripts are listed from sales catalogues. The most interesting of these are George Chapman's Gentleman Usher and Monsieur d'Olive, but it is questionable if they are extant (cf. Chambers, E. S., III, 253). Others are The Death of the Black Prince, The Battle of the Vices against the Virtues, The Yorkshire Gentleman, R. White's Cupid's Banishment, and B. Barnes, Battle of Hexham. Hazlitt also lists, simply as "MS" or "MS in private hands," Otho (tr. from Corneille), C. Tourneur's The Nobleman, F. Bristowe's King Freewill, J. Hughes' Amalasont, Queen of the Goths, "W. C.'s" The Rape Revenged, or The Spanish Revolution. Fleay, B. C., II, 337, lists Diana's Grove, or The Faithful Genius as a manuscript in private hands. For extant Elizabethan manuscript "plots" see E. K. Chambers, E. S., IV, 406.

ALFRED HARBAGE

University of Pennsylvania

XLVII

EXEMPLUM MATERIALS UNDERLYING MACBETH

OF Shakespeare's awareness of the living currents of literature about him, the late Sir Walter Raleigh had this to say:

His plays are extraordinarily rich in the floating débris of popular literature—scraps, tags and broken ends of a whole world of songs and ballads and romances and proverbs. In this respect he is notable even among his contemporaries; few of them can match him in the wealth that he caught out of the air or picked up by the roadside.<sup>1</sup>

Shakespeare's familiarity with popular literature is, I think, beyond need of argument, but among the forms in which this flotsam drifted to him one is omitted from Sir Walter's graphic accounting. This is the brief tale, somewhere between condensed romance and expanded proverb, the "short short story" of Elizabethan England. These tales, originally written down as sermon illustrations and put into circulation from the pulpit, are preserved in collections of exempla compiled from the thirteenth century through the fifteenth. After that period, interest in the making of moralized collections declined; but at the time Shakespeare was writing, the tales had been disseminated as anecdotes through three centuries of oral circulation, undoubtedly losing in the process much of their original flavor of piety. The significance of this part of the Elizabethans' literary heritage has been stressed by one who speaks with final authority concerning the pulpit literature of the mediæval church, Dr. G. R. Owst:

Much indeed, has been written about William Shakespeare and his times. But we shall never understand him or his audience aright while we continue to ignore this literary upbringing of the immediate generations that produced them.<sup>2</sup>

As one of the cloud of witnesses which this faith commands,<sup>3</sup> I desire to bear testimony by presenting certain items of moralized narrative which appear, outside the limits of influence of Holinshed's Chronicles, to have affected the composition of Macbeth. I have sought to isolate some components, generated by exempla, from that atmosphere of old and ever-changing story, kept in motion by the spoken word, which permeated the England of Shakespeare's day, and which, though less tangible at our distance than the printed symbol, held far more of reality for a populace largely illiterate.

<sup>1</sup> Shakespeare (1907), p. 77.

<sup>2</sup> Literature and Pulpit in Medieval England (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1933), p. 9.

<sup>3</sup> Since the publication of Professor W. W. Lawrence's admirable study, Shakespeare's Problem Comedies (New York, 1931), the mediævalist approach to Shakspearean source-study stands in no need of vindication. The oral circulation of exempla in the sixteenth century has been frequently attested; cf. inter alia A. C. Lee, The Decameron, Its Sources and Analogues (1909) which supplies numerous references.

The echoes in Shakespeare's dramas of these old pious tales are so frequent as to imply a wide background of familiar knowledge, though they do not point definitely to acquaintance with any single collection. The locus classicus for this type of tale is of course the Gesta Romanorum, and this collection does repeatedly supply authority for a Shakesperean reference. It would appear, however, that Shakespeare's contact with the Gesta, as with exemplum literature generally, was through the discrete channels of oral tradition, inasmuch as analogues are encountered now in the Continental Latin version and now in the Anglo-Latin. Further, the printed editions of the Gesta which circulated in Elizabethan England—those of Richard Robinson based on Wynkyn de Worde<sup>4</sup>—do not contain any considerable portion of relevant materials.

As preliminary to an inquiry into the significance of these old stories for the drama of Macbeth, it is necessary to glance once more at the familiar area of Shakespeare's dependence upon the Chronicles of Holinshed. For the murderous career of the hero, motivated by the prophecy of the weird sisters, Holinshed, as we know, supplied the framework, although Shakespeare has combined incidents from several widely separated passages in his source.<sup>5</sup> In relation to this portion of the play, <sup>4</sup> The edition of 1595 contains a version of the casket plot in the Merchant of Venice, pp 99 ff., and the story of the "false steward who stole his master's daughter" (Hamlet iv, vi, 171-172) pp 50 ff. For a comparative table of exempla in the Latin, Anglo-Latin, and English versions of the Gesta together with those in the edition of Wynkyn de Worde, cf. Hertridge, Gesta Romanorum, EETS Ext. Ser. xxxiii, xxix-xxxi. The present writer has in hand a series of studies in the utilization of exemplum material by Shakespeare, of which one, "Mediaeval Prototypes of Lorenzo and Jessica," appeared in MLN, XLIV, 227 ff.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. W. G. Boswell-Stone, Shakespeare's Holinshed (1896), pp 18-30; also Allardyce and Josephine Nicoll, Holinshed's Chronicles as used in Shakespeare's Plays. (Everyman ed., 1927.) In addition to the portions of the Chronicle usually cited as source-material, numerous passages might be assembled, especially from accounts of sovereigns slain by their vassals and of illusory prophecy, which serve to gloss individual lines in Macbeth. For instance, we read that it was prophesied to King Natholocus (†280) that he should be murdered "not by his open enimies but by the hands of one of his moste familiar friendes in whom he had reposed an especiall truste" (Chronicles, ed. 1577, p. 75). The phrase is echoed in Duncan's comment on the traitorous Cawdor, "He was a gentleman on whom I built An absolute trust (i, iv, 14-15). Again, the Chronicles supply a reference for an ingredient in the witches' hell-broth, sow's blood, that hath eaten

Her nine farrow (iv, i. 63-64).

The accursedness of such swine-meat is indicated in one of the laws of Kenneth: "If a sowe eate hir pigges let hyr be stoned to death and buried so that no man eate of hyr flesshe" (Chronicles, ed. cit., p. 181).

the materials I have assembled contribute little of significance beyond some suggestion as to influences upon the legend antedating the Scottish chroniclers. The case is different, however, with the treatment of the supernatural agency in Macbeth. Here, as will be remembered, Holinshed supplies the situation of the first meeting of Macbeth with the weird sisters and gives a hint for the second. In attempting to account for the immeasurable difference between the vaguely-outlined figures of the Chronicle and the grotesque vitality of Shakespeare's witches, criticism has ranged far afield. It has—after excising the Hecate passages as almost certainly spurious—brought together data from the records of Elizabethan witchcraft to verify the realism of Shakespeare's witches, and, from the opposite angle of approach, has analyzed those aspects of contemporary metaphysical theory, as Professor Curry has recently done with thoroughness,<sup>6</sup> which shed light on the current conception of evil as projected in the play through supernatural agents. Supplementing the contribution from both these fields, I would call attention to the popular literature of demonology represented by exempla, from which details were naturally transferred to the lore of witches, agents in mortal form of the demon-world.<sup>7</sup> Some of these stories of demon-lore aid us, in particular, in the interpretation of Act I, Scene iii, both the conversational exchanges of the witches prior to the entrance of Macbeth, and the implications of the prophetic greeting which ramify darkly throughout the play. Finally, there are two scenes in Macbeth, unaccounted for by Holinshed or other known sources hitherto cited, for which striking prototypes are afforded by exempla; namely, Act III, Scene iv, the appearance of the ghost of Banquo at the feast, and Act v, Scene i, the so-called "sleep-walking scene." It is with these two scenes that the present discussion is concerned.

The originality of Act v, scene 1, has never been seriously questioned.<sup>8</sup> Probably no other passage in Shakespeare has been more thoroughly saturated with subjective criticism; much of the comment assembled in the Variorum Macbeth, representative of the romantic school, is emotional to a degree. But the very ecstasies of perfervid commentators testify to the tremendously moving power exerted by the situation per se to an extent unmatched perhaps elsewhere in the play. The sleep-walking scene, indeed, has approached a kind of independent literary existence, as a result of its concentration of high emotional pressure in a situation not contributory to the movement of the plot. In fact, with its brief drama of self-betrayal enacted before the gentlewoman and doctor as most intimate audience, it offers something of the framework of an induction. For this reason it is possible to detach it for purposes of analysis without doing violence to the organic structure of the play; and for this reason also we should expect to find its source, if source there be, in an independent narrative unit.

<sup>6</sup> "The Demonic Metaphysics of Macbeth," SP, xxx, 395-426; see note 1 for convenient bibliography of discussions of Elizabethan witchcraft in relation to Macbeth.

<sup>7</sup> That the majority of persons in the Elizabethan age believed in this relationship between witches and the powers of evil has been often demonstrated; cf. especially Curry, op. cit., pp. 397-400.

<sup>8</sup> The unanimity of scholars on this point is, so far as I know, modified only by the statement of the late J. W. Robertson: "A sleep-walking scene would not be out of his [sc. Kyd's] ambit, perhaps, though Shakespeare has written or rewritten ours" (Literary Detection, A Symposium on Macbeth, p. 151).

Let us, then, repress for the moment our sense of the scene as part of the cataclysm of desolation which is the falling action of Macbeth, and throw it into impersonal terms.

A woman of queenly station and hitherto blameless report has caused, in the interests of her ambition, the murder of an innocent person. Oppressed by the burden of her guilty secret, she develops the hallucination that her hand is stained by the blood of her victim. Although she makes repeated efforts to wash the imagined stain from her hand, it remains, to her abnormally functioning mind, ineffaceable.

The first sentence of the above summary indicates, of course, past action implicit in the scene. What distinguishes the scene itself is the stage business as interpreted through the lines—this washing of a spot that will not out, symbol of guilt concealed.

It is natural to inquire whether Shakespeare, in this instance as in countless others, has laid his hand upon some unregarded clod of story-matter, and quickened it to enduring life. And if we turn, as it is natural to turn, to the popular collections of brief tales, we find in the Gesta Romanorum and elsewhere an incident which, although presented from a different psychological angle, is closely similar to Lady Macbeth's anguished attempt to wash away the symbolic stain. And the incident is set in a narrative framework sufficiently close to that of the heroine of the play to provide a firm nexus of association.

The story as it stands in the Latin Gesta (No. XIII in Oesterley's edition) may be summarized as follows:

A woman of queenly station and hitherto of blameless report murders, in the interests of her own security, an innocent person. The blood of her victim falls upon her hand, and although she makes repeated efforts to remove the stain, it remains. Oppressed by the burden of her guilty secret, she finally makes confession to a priest and the stain vanishes.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Hermann Oesterley, Gesta Romanorum (Berlin, 1872) pp. 291 ff.; cf. also Catalogue of Romances in the Brit. Mus., III, 574 and 680 for references to other texts of this tale.

The likenesses between the two situations have of course been thrown into relief, but they have not been distorted. Although the differences in matters of detail are many, they do not affect the central incident—the attempt to wash away an irremovable stain. There is, in the first place, a difference in the victim of the murder; in the exemplum it is a child, the fruit of an incestuous union. In each case, however, the victim is a person innocent of wrong-doing against the murderess, and there is a further associative link in the modus operandi of the crime—the victim is in both cases killed by the letting of blood.<sup>10</sup> Again, the older story carries no hint of hallucination, chronicling the incredible, in the manner of its type, as sober matter of experience. Shakespeare, grafting as often a slip of fable to the stock of truth, projects the situation into the subliminal world where incredible fantasy may body forth the deepest urges of the heart. Finally, the theological emphasis of the early tale, which seems at first glance a point of differentiation, proves on closer scrutiny to suggest a basic relationship. The miraculous removal of the stain by confession, the raison d'être of the exemplum, has of course no counterpart in the play, but underlying both is the same psychology of inhibition; it is the repressed consciousness of guilt which causes Lady Macbeth's hallucination. The release affirmed in the exemplum through confession is, indeed, suggested in the scene. Shakespeare knew, as the Roman church seems always to have known, the danger to mental life of a suppressed anguish of self-condemnation or self-knowledge, and the katharsis effected by impartation. To this the physician testifies, even calling upon the resources of orthodoxy:

Infected minds

To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.

More needs she the divine than the physician (v, i, 79–81).

The dénouement of the early tale, indeed, depicting the release of mental suffering through the accepted theological channel, suggests a reply to the question somewhat naively raised by an early commentator upon Lady Macbeth, "What might not religion have made of such a character?"<sup>11</sup> The answer requires an inversion of chronology; one asks more reasonably: What did Shakespeare make of a character subject to the compulsions of religion in transferring her experience to a passionate materialist? The didactic excrescences of the exemplum may have fallen away before Shakespeare handled it. In any case, his sure touch singled out the detail in which inhered the survival value of ballad action—the ballad's unmediated appeal to sense and feeling, and, further, its accentuation of pathos through repetition, or suggested repetition. For we should recall that Lady Macbeth's effort to cleanse the stained hand is not to be identified alone with the "sleep-walking scene," but is projected for dramatic purposes from a background like that in the exemplum of recurrent experience. "It is an accustomed action with her," reports the gentlewoman, "to seem thus washing her hands."

<sup>10</sup> "Vidensque parvulum natum statim illum jugulavit, scindens guttur per medium. Sanguis vero gutturis ipsius parvuli in palmam sinistre manus regine cecidit" (Oesterley, op. cit., p. 291).

<sup>11</sup> Mrs. Jameson, cited by Campbell, cf. Variorum Macbeth p. 483.

The evidence of relationship between the exemplum of the blood-stained hand and the sleep-walking scene is accented in one version of the early narrative by a striking correspondence in detail. In this version, which is that identified with the English Gesta, the stain upon the hand of the murderess is made by blood from the wounds of Christ, who appears in a vision to warn her of the need of confessing her secret sin. It maintains, however, the emphasis on the picturesque central situation—the futile washing of an irremovable stain. "She loked on her hande," runs this version, "and it was all bloody, that no hote watyre ne couthe, ne no nothere licoure myght washe it away."<sup>12</sup> It is hardly necessary to recall the lines,

What, will these hands ne'er be clean?

All the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.

And it may not be fantastic to suppose that the sleep-consciousness in which the blood-stained hand is envisaged, in the early tales, may have suggested the somnambulism of the Shakesperean scene.

The story, originally without locale, is in some versions given added interest for English readers by being brought within their own borders. In the Speculum Laicorum it is attached to a woman of London, "mulier quedam london [iensis]." It could without difficulty have reached the men and women of Shakespeare's London.

Variant versions of the tale are numerous, as are its ramifications into other themes of mediæval fiction. This field I have not attempted to cover with thoroughness. A suggestive correspondence occurring in a related narrative very possibly representing an earlier stage of the tradition, may perhaps be noted for what it is worth. In this story the description of the staining of the hand is lacking, but the initial account of the woman's crime, and the stress on the guilt of withholding confession, both common to the genre, are present. The guilty woman, brought to trial before the emperor, is accused by the devil disguised as a "physician."<sup>13</sup> But whatever the value of a possibly casual parallel, the cumulative force of all basic similarities between play and exemplum excludes coincidence. Act v, Scene 1, of Macbeth becomes—if I may borrow a phrase from a recent work of Shakesperean scholarship—a "psychological rationalization of a pre-existent story."<sup>14</sup>

<sup>12</sup> From MS. Harl. 9066; cf. EETS Ext. Ser. XXXIII, 393. This version does not normally occur in the Continental Latin or Anglo-Latin Gesta, but is included in the expanded collection of Odo of Cheriton's Fables, represented in MS. Harl. 219, on which Chapters 41-96 of MS. Harl. 9066 appear to be based (cf. Cat. Rom., III, 55, 255-256). It occurs also in the Speculum Laicorum No. 136, ed. J. Th. Welter, pp. 30-31; the Summa Praedicatorum of John de Bromyard, Venice 1586, Confessio VI. 58, and the Fasciculus Morum, MS. Rawl C 670, Cap. 10, Pt. 5 "De Confessio." For the last reference I am indebted to Professor Frances Foster of Vassar College, who is preparing an edition of the Fasciculus. In a variant of this version a priest revives the slain infant by pouring water over the blood-stained hand (cf. Cat. Rom., III, 682-683).

The primitive ancestor of this mediæval story of the ineffaceable stain may very possibly be the Scriptural account of the "mark" of Cain,—an irremovable seal set by supernatural power upon the first murderer.<sup>15</sup> Intermediate between this ancient tale and the exemplum of the guilty queen, and probably serving as connecting span, lies the narrative tradition of the devil's mark. Those who make guilty compacts with the devil receive his indelible seal, frequently upon the hand. It is removable only by confession. In the collection which goes under the name of Etienne de Bourbon,<sup>16</sup> one of a series of confession-stories concerns a man found by two Friars Preachers "in montibus Hybernice" who had served demons for thirty years, "et eorum ferebat in manu sua impressum sigillum in quo erant scripte littere illius homagii." The "littere" are of interest as a link with the exemplum of the blood-stained hand which stands in the Latin Gesta. Here also the stain resolves itself into an incriminating inscription:

<sup>13</sup> So in the expanded collection of Odo of Cheriton's Fables in MS. Harl. 219; cf. Cat. Rom., III, 56. Gregory is here cited as authority. Elsewhere the devil appears as a clerk; cf. Alphabet of Tales, EETS pp. 220-221, No. cccxx; also Vincent de Beauvais, Speculum Historiale (Nuremberg, 1483), Bk. VIII, 93-95; this form of the narrative is found also in the Exempla of Jacques de Vitry (ed. T. F. Crane, Folk-lore Soc. xxvi, 263; cf. also discussion on pp. 246-249); and occurs in many collections of Mary-legends (cf. Cat. Rom. II, 627, 694, etc.). In this version the child is killed by strangulation. In the opinion of Mr. J. P. Herbert, this is the older version, from which the tale in the Gesta is derived (cf. Cat. Rom., III, 236). For discussion of the elements in the latter tale not supplied by the Mary-legend, viz., the ineffaceable stain and the futile effort to cleanse it, cf. pp. 707-708 below. As an exemplum illustrating deletion of the evidence of guilt by confession, the tale is linked to innumerable others. <sup>14</sup> W. W. Lawrence, Shakespeare's Problem Comedies, p. 8.

<sup>15</sup> "And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him" (Gen. v, 15). The nature of the "mark" has always been a subject for speculation, but its undoubted characteristic was permanency. According to the late Professor Oliver Emerson, allusions to the mark of Cain in English are surprisingly few ("Legends of Cain especially in Old and Middle English" PMLA, XXI, 831-890; see especially Section IV). Cain became closely associated in legend with the demons; cf. Emerson, op. cit., pp. 879-888.

<sup>16</sup> Anecdotes Historiques d'Etienne de Bourbon, ed. A. Lecoy de la Marche (1877), pp. 157-158. For references to various versions of tales of the devil's mark cf. Cat. Rom. III, 119, 138 (Convertimini), 381 (Speculum Laicorum, No. 124), 482, 485, 682. In the preface to the curious treatise entitled "Demonologie in Forme of a Dialogue" written by James I (Edinburgh, 1597) we find the following allusion to the "Devil's mark" in the course of a discussion of the devil's practices in following up an initial successful temptation: "He then discovers what he is vnto them [sc. his victims], makes them to renounce their God and Baptisme directlie, and gives them his mark vpon some secret place of their bodie which remains sore unhealed" (p. 33).

Cum vero manum apertam vidisset [sc. the confessor] vidit quatuor circulos sanguineos ac rotundos. In primo circulo erant quatuor cccc, in secundo quatuor dddd, in tercio quatuor mmmm, in quarto quatuor rrrr. In circuitu circulorum ad modum sigilli erat talis superscriptio rubea, continens que hic sequuntur. Casu Cecidisti Carne Cecata; Demoni Decdisti Dona Donata; Monstrat Manifeste Manus Maculata; Recedit Rubigo Regina Rogata.<sup>17</sup>

The narrative tradition of the devil's mark adapts the theme of the mark of Cain to the ends of an exemplum enforcing the cleansing power of confession, although at the same time transforming the nature of the agency by which the miracle is effected. But the shift in symbolism from a sign of Divine displeasure, in the Cain story, to an evidence of direct physical contact with powers of evil, while it marks a descent in imaginative power, does not destroy the inner principle of the concept—indelibility supernaturally caused—which persists through the mediæval moralized tales.

The second element in the situation—the futile ablution—was apparently joined to the ineffaceable stain in early versions of the tale. Another story of the devil's mark in Etienne's collection offers this detail of ineffectual laving—the scrap of human realism through which perhaps this miracle-story was enabled to survive the skepticism of the New Learning. Etienne describes the blackening of a man's hand when it clasps in fealty the hand of Satan, and its ultimate whitening by the act of confession after repeated futile efforts at cleansing on the part of the sinner. "Cum autem," reports Etienne, "hoc faceret et manum dexteram ad promittendum fedus ei, inter manus dyaboli poneret, ibi nigrefacta est quasi carbo; nec aliqua ablucione vel alio poterat dealbari."<sup>18</sup> For this detail it is perhaps unnecessary to account, inasmuch as it reflects a wholly natural human impulse. At the same time, it presents itself in a familiar Scriptural narrative, which may well have suggested the incident—the symbolic washing of the hands by which Pilate sought to disavow guilt of the innocent blood.<sup>19</sup> This incident, it is of interest to note, twice serves with Shakespeare the ends of metaphor. The first instance is in King Richard II:

<sup>17</sup> Oosterley, ed. cit. p. 291.

<sup>18</sup> Etienne de Bourbon, ed. cit., p. 158.

<sup>19</sup> Matt. xxvii: 24. For the primitive Jewish rite reflected in the act attributed to Pilate cf. Deut. xxi.

K. Rich. Though some of you with Pilate wash your hands
 Showing an outward pity, yet you Pilates
 Have here delivered me to my sour cross,
 And water cannot wash away your sin (iv, i, 239-242).<sup>20</sup>

A briefer allusion stands in Richard III.

Sec. Murd. A bloody deed, and desperately dispatched]
 How fain, like Pilate, would I wash my hands
 Of this most grievous murder (i, iv, 281-283).

Purification from the shedding of blood in battle is sought by Bolingbroke (Rich. II. v, vi, 49-50) through the somewhat perfunctory vow:

I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land
 To wash this blood off from my guilty hand.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>20</sup> This passage was noted by Sir Walter Raleigh, op. cit., p. 185. I have been reminded by Professor Robert Adger Law of the passage in the Faerie Queene describing Sir Guyon's vain effort to cleanse the bloodstained hands of the infant Ruddymane (Bk. II, Canto II, St. iii).

He washt them oft and oft, yet nought they beene
 For all his washing cleaner Still he strove
 Yet still the litle hands were bloody seene.

The blood stain is in this instance symbolic of another's guilt, and intended to serve as a permanent reminder of the duty of vengeance. The lines of Stanza iv, describing Sir Guyon's amazement at the phenomenon, are of interest as bringing in the ancient concept underlying the story of the mark of Cain:

He wist not whether blott of fowle offense
 Might not be purgd with water nor with bath;
 Or that High God, in lieu of innocence
 Imprinted had that token of his wrath,
 To shew how sore bloodguiltinesse he hat'th.

Numerous instances of the appearance in later legend of symbolic washing of the hands could doubtless be assembled. A few may be noted here. The legend of Pilate associated with Lake Lucerne is recorded by Scott in Anne of Geierstein, Chap. I. "According to popular belief, a form is often seen to emerge from the gloomy waters and go through the action of one washing his hands; and when he does so, dark clouds of mist gather first round the bosom of the Infernal Lake (such it has been styled of old) and then wrapping the whole upper part of the mountain in darkness presage a tempest or hurricane which is sure to follow in a short space."—A tradition of the English countryside preserves the legend of a certain Lady Hoby, who killed her son in a fit of anger. After her death she was seen on numerous occasions walking about the house washing her hands in an invisible basin (cf. F. V. Worley, River Thames (1926), p. 144). I am indebted for this reference to Miss Mildred Marcett of New York University. My son Carl called my attention to an allusion to the ineffaceable bloodstain in Stevenson's Black Arrow, near the close of Bk. II: "Ye have my father's blood upon your hands; let be, it will not washe."

<sup>21</sup> Similarly, atonement is urged upon the Red Cross knight by Heavenly Contemplation: "Wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field" (F. Q. Bk. I, Canto x, St. lx).

And finally it was his sense of the futility of physical cleansing to purge a moral stain which prompted the anguished outcry of Macbeth, in his first reaction of terror after the murder of Duncan:

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand? (II, ii, 60-61).

It was, then, upon a strong current of association that the tale of the blood-stained hand was borne to Macbeth in the making. Ultimate origins must elude us, and certainly the beginnings of primitive lustration by water may be referred to the anthropologist. We are, moreover, left to surmise as to what version or crossing of versions was heard by Shakespeare in tap-room or chimney-corner. But we may, I think, feel assured that for many in Shakespeare's audience echoes of old story and the penumbra of an ancient symbolism enhanced the pathos of Lady Macbeth's impotent ritual of despair.

In the case of Act III, Scene iv, in which the spectre of Banquo rises before Macbeth at the feast celebrating his coronation, no such close analogue can be adduced as has been indicated for Lady Macbeth's blood-stained hand. The grimly spectacular banquet scene is rather to be associated with a group of narratives built upon a common formula, the unvarying elements of which are represented in variable detail. For the ghost itself, regarded as a stage effect, it is of course idle to raise the question of a source. Apparitions, as Professor Stoll has abundantly shown, were no novelty on the Elizabethan boards, and Banquo's ghost as such merely repeats a popular convention of melodrama.<sup>22</sup> But the apparition is in this instance inseparable from the setting in which it confronts the hero,—the banquet marking the fulfilment of Macbeth's ambitions. Such a setting affords, of course, special dramatic values; the sudden appearance at the feast signaling the hero's triumph of a ghostly Nemesis carries an element of dramatic irony charged with powerful emotional force. Professor Stoll has thus commented on what he terms this effect of "ironical reversal:"

In the folly and hypocrisy of his homicidal ambition, Macbeth gives voice to a wish that Banquo were present and turns to find him—father of a line of kings—seated on the throne.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>22</sup> E. E. Stoll, "The Objectivity of the Ghosts in Shakespeare," PMLA, xxii, 201-233: cf. especially pp. 205-222.

<sup>23</sup> Op. cit., p. 206. Was it not, however, the "place reserv'd" for Macbeth at the common table, rather than his high seat on the dais, which was usurped by the spectre? For a detailed discussion of the stage-setting and action of this scene, together with admirable interpretation of the situation, cf. J. Q. Adams, ed. Macbeth (1931), pp. 194-197.

The scene is unquestionably good theater, and of a type which, we may well assume, Shakespeare's powers of stagecraft, directed by his knowledge of popular taste, were capable of inventing. Invention, however, is to be discounted, where convention pre-exists, and behind the situation in Act III, Scene iv may be traced a clearly recognizable literary formula, not in this case a convention of the theater, for which Professor Stoll has somewhat accustomed us to look, but a convention of popular narrative. This convention prescribes the scene of a banquet, usually invested with some quality of climax, as the milieu in which a murderer is confronted by a supernatural omen, recognized as presaging doom. The formula emerges from a considerable number of moralized tales of homicide motivated by ambition or greed, and these tales occur for the most part in widely popular collections—circumstances which tend to establish its vitality in oral narrative tradition. For example, we find in the Liber de Dono Timoris,<sup>24</sup> in the fifteenth-century Alphabet of Tales,<sup>25</sup> in the Anecdotes Historiques of Etienne de Bourbon,<sup>26</sup> and elsewhere, a tale of an archdeacon who murdered his bishop and succeeded to the episcopate. The crime was revealed in a vision to one of the guests at the inaugural feast. When this was made known to the usurping bishop, he "wex wude and swelte." Again we may note in the Manuel des Pêchés and Robert of Brunne's adaptation, Handlyng Synne, the story of St. Beatrice, murdered by Lucretius for her land. His death is foretold by an infant miraculously endowed with speech while he sits at a feast. Later he dies tormented by devils.<sup>27</sup> Finally, the Gesta Romanorum has a story employing in a more elaborate narrative the same formula. A knight slays an old earl and seizes his goods. It is foretold by a voice from the victim's grave that the murderer will live thirty years. He builds a castle without comparison in strength, and at the end of the thirtieth year makes a feast for his nobles, defying prophesy. At the feast a bird of divers colors, recognized as a sight of ill omen, flies in. The knight kills it. The earth forthwith opens and swallows the castle and revelers.<sup>28</sup>

It is likely that this list of stories characterized by a supernatural warning at a murderer's feast could be considerably extended, and a further variety of disquieting apparitions noted. But I should predict that other versions when found would but ring changes on the same unchang-

<sup>24</sup> Ed. Hauréau, Notices et Extraits, III, 242.

<sup>25</sup> Ed. cit., p. 60; inc. "We rede in Libro de Dono Timoris."

<sup>26</sup> Ed. cit., pp. 54-66. A dramatic version of the story is found in a collection of Miracles of our Lady, Société des Anciens Textes Français (1876), I, 101, under the title "De l'évesque que l'arcediacle meurtrit." This tale in its general structure is typical of the group to which the legend of Macbeth belongs. The unifying theme is the punishment of acts of violence prompted by unlawful ambition.

<sup>27</sup> EETS, 119, pp. 194-195.

<sup>28</sup> EETS Est. Ser., XXXIII, 268-275.

ing theme; "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." And the essentially same thing is in this instance, as in many themes of mediæval fiction, a narrative tradition deriving from the Old Testament. The earliest example of a supernatural warning at a feast is, as no one needs to be reminded, the hand which wrote on the wall words of dark portent at the feast made by King Belshazzar to a thousand of his lords.<sup>29</sup> It is true that this tyrant differs from the heroes of subsequent similar tales in that he is not, at least according to the presumptively familiar Scriptural account, an usurper or homicide; he is referred to consistently in the book of Daniel as the "King's son."<sup>30</sup> He does, however, sufficiently typify outrageous use of tyrannical power, and his feast, like those in the mediæval tales, illustrates a vainglorious insolence defying moral law.<sup>31</sup> For the use of the sacred vessels from the Temple as drinking cups marks the climax of his impious career, and it is recorded that "in that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain." Thus the Old Testament tale established for future story-tellers an invariable sequence, the banquet signaling an iniquitous success, the supernatural omen pre-saging doom, and the doom itself. This sequence, fitting with apposite-ness into the legend of the Scottish usurper, gives us Act III, Scene iv, of Macbeth.

The apparition in Macbeth is to be distinguished, through its association with traditional formula, from that in Hamlet. In the latter play there is nothing except dramatic fitness to predetermine the time or place at which the ghost of Hamlet's father should appear to him; it might as well be upon the battlements as anywhere apart. But in the case of Macbeth it was virtually inevitable that a supernatural apparition if called for at all should appear in the setting in which, traditionally, an usurper was faced by an omen of impending doom—the ceremonial feast. Shakespeare, dramatizing the Chronicle, would seem to have paused at the point where Macbeth has achieved "all as the weird women promised," to draw into the design a matching thread of old story; and Macbeth is prompted to offer Banquo the mocking invitation, charged with a fuller irony than he is himself aware

Tonight we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. Daniel, Chap., v. The story is treated in the Handlyng Synne, ed. cit., pp. 293-295.

<sup>30</sup> According to the article Belshazzar (unsigned) in the Encyclopædia Britannica, the evidence of the cuneiform inscriptions shows that the tyrant came to the throne as the result of a palace revolution.

<sup>31</sup> The terms used by Professor Stoll to characterize the mood of Macbeth, 'Αρη and ὕβρις, the classical, "Infatuation and Insolence" (op. cit., p. 209), seem more apt in application to his remote ancestor Belshazzar.

Two of the most striking situations in the play may, then, be referred ultimately to the popular literature of piety. But the indirect dependence of the sleep-walking scene and the banquet scene upon exempla does not exhaust the influence of this type of literature upon the play. The language of Macbeth is pervaded by reminiscence of familiar tales, caught from the quick associations of a richly-stored memory into a phrase or line of dialogue. Thus Lady Macbeth's exhortation to her husband on the eve of Duncan's arrival—bear welcome in your eye,

Your hand, your tongue; look like the innocent flower,
But be the serpent under't (I, v, 65-67).—

looks back to an exemplum in the collection of Jacques de Vitry.

Audivi de quodam serpente quod ferebat pulcrum rosam in ore. Quidam attendens tantam rose pulcritudinem cepit eam palpare et odorem cum naso attrahere et quia venenum non attendit, infestus veneno periit. Ita adulator pulchra verba habet exterius sed latet venenum interius; mel et lac sub lingua meretricis, id est adulatoris. Dilexerunt eum in ore suo et lingua sua mentiti sunt ei.<sup>32</sup>

The simile of the serpent concealed by a flower, it is true, had in Shakespeare's day become proverbial.<sup>33</sup> It had been, as will be recalled, employed by Chaucer, "Right as a serpent hit hym under floures."<sup>34</sup> But it would seem to have been current also as anecdote with traditional application; the phrasing of the exemplum, "Ita adulator pulchra verba habet exterius sed latet venenum interius; mel et lac sub lingua," comes close to Lady Macbeth's own words.

Jacques de Vitry may once more be called upon to furnish authority, this time offering a prototype for one of the series of characters summoned from imagination by the drunken porter impersonating the guardian of hell-gate. "Here's a farmer," he avers, "that hanged himself in the expectation of plenty" (II, iii, 4-5). The original hero of this situation is thus presented in an exemplum in Jacques de Vitry's collection:

Audivi de quodam qui multum de grano congregavit et per multos annos carius venderet expectavit. Deus autem semper bonum tempus dabat unde miser ille, spe sua frustratus, tandem pre tristitia super granum suum se ipsum suspendit.<sup>35</sup>

An analogue of de Vitry's exemplum, with the title "Novelletta d'un

<sup>32</sup> Ed. cit., pp. 65-66; cf. also Cat. Rom., III, 660-692.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. M. P. Tilley, Elizabethan Proverb Lore (1926), pp. 278-279. Other allusions to the flower-hidden snake in the plays of Shakespeare are here noted.

<sup>34</sup> Squire's Tale, v. 512.

<sup>35</sup> Ed. cit., p. 71 (no. 164).

avaro," was printed in Venice about 1845 in a slender volume, Lippotopo, etc., which according to the title-page was itself the reprint of a book issued from the press of Thomas Woodcock, London 1591.<sup>36</sup>

The circulation of this story in Shakespeare's time is indicated by the following passage in Hall's Satires:

Ech Muck-worme will be rich with lawlesse gaine
Altho he smother vp mowes of seven years graine
And hang'd himself when corne grows cheap again.<sup>37</sup>

But the currency of the anecdote is in any case attested by the elliptic quality of Shakespeare's lines, which leave to be understood, as a matter of familiar knowledge, the motive for the farmer's apparently irrational act.

Repeatedly, then, the language of Macbeth enables us to glimpse across the centuries the impact of picturesque familiar story upon the dramatist's imagination. Students of Shakesperean backgrounds must perhaps admit a partial truth in the strictures laid upon the investigation of the sources of Macbeth by an eminent contemporary critic:

We may learn much from a comparison of Macbeth and Holinshed, but after all, Shakespeare the dramatist knew that his audience could not so compare his play with the original narrative, and as a consequence the results of the comparison must always have a slight flavour of the study about them.<sup>38</sup>

Professor Nicoll's pronouncement may perhaps be a little questioned even with reference to literary source-documents, inasmuch as any critic's effort to re-create a Shakesperean character or situation must be affected by his knowledge of the nature of the dramatist's materials. But in the case of the influences of popular story on Shakespeare we may, I think, rightfully hold that the subject of study, at least, is a living process, in which playwright and audience are involved in the same confluent realities of the imagination. Thus I believe we may regard the reflections in Macbeth of orally circulated exempla, not as guideposts to obscure trails in the mediæval literary jungle, but as "demonstration of the continuing vital spirit of an earlier time in the splendidly creative age of Elizabeth."<sup>39</sup>

<sup>36</sup> The Italian novelletta was reproduced in 1934 for private circulation by Professor John M. Manly, who called attention to the anticipation in this story of "the farmer that hanged himself on the expectation of plenty."

<sup>37</sup> Satires (ed. 1597), iv. 6. The passage as quoted by Malone is cited in Macbeth, ed. W. G. Clark and W. A. Wright (Oxford, 1880), p. 109. For this reference I am indebted to the kindness of Professor Homer Watt of New York University. Critics have found, in the porter's introduction of the ill-fated farmer disappointed of his profits, a contemporary allusion, pointing to the abundant harvests and consequent low prices which obtained in 1606. (Cf. J. Q. Adams, ed. Macbeth, p. 246; Malone cited as authority). The value of the phrase as a chronological index is to some extent modified by its literary connotation.

<sup>38</sup> Allardyce Nicoll, Studies in Shakespeare (London, 1927), p. 14.

In a later paper I propose to discuss others of the old tales which serve, in Douce's time-honored phrase, as "illustrations" of Macbeth, throwing light especially on the part played by the weird sisters as representatives of the demon world. One group, comprising numerous instances of demonic conclave, provides background for the conversation of the sisters prior to the entrance of Macbeth. A story, originally occurring in Alexander Neckham, suggests a reference for the First Witch's troublesome allusion to "a rat without a tail." Further, certain tales of deceptive diabolic prophecy contribute to an understanding of what might be called the conditioned fatalism of the play. But the relationship which I trust I have demonstrated, indicating the backgrounds of Macbeth in exemplum literature, may be taken as typical of Shakespeare's reaction to the literature of the mediæval church.

And his fructifying use of this material is, I believe, more to be noted in Macbeth than in any other of the great tragedies. This I take to be true because of its closer affinity in subject-matter with the literature of exempla. Such an affirmation holds most obviously perhaps with regard to the element of the supernatural, with which Shakespeare is more seriously preoccupied in Macbeth than in the other tragedies. The figures of the witches, bond-servants of Satan, naturally attracted to themselves fragments from those demon-tales which had some link of association with situations in the play. But we may record a profounder kinship. The majority of exempla, apart from trivia and illustrations of practical wisdom, are concerned with moral issues, painting with a stroke sometimes grotesque, but often powerful, some confrontation of right and wrong as their author conceives these to be. And it is moral realities, inextricably bound up as they are with human suffering, that dominate the play of Macbeth. We recognize in Hamlet, Lear, and Othello the tragedy of the limitation of human judgment; Macbeth alone exemplifies the tragedy of sin.

BEATRICE DAW BROWN

Upper Montclair, New Jersey

<sup>39</sup> W. W. Lawrence, op. cit., p. 17.

XLVIII

IS SHAKESPEARE'S MUCH ADO A REVISED EARLIER PLAY?

THE DATE of the Q text of Much Ado About Nothing is fixed by external evidence within fairly narrow limits. The only quarto edition of the play was registered for publication on August 23, 1600, after having been noted as "to be staied" on a fly-leaf of a volume of the Stationers' Register under date of August 4, with no year attached but closely following another entry dated May 27, 1600, and therefore presumably of the same year. The title does not appear in Meres's list of 1598, although of course there is the ever-present question of the mysterious Love's Labour's Won mentioned by Meres, with which, however, no attempts have been made to identify Much Ado in recent years. These facts apparently fix the date of writing of the play as between shortly before September 7, 1598, when Meres's work was registered, and August 4, 1600. That it was not immediately before the last-mentioned date is evident from the inclusion of As You Like It in the same list with Much Ado as "to be staied." Touchstone is a rôle of the type intended for Robert Armin, who superseded Will Kemp as clown of the Chamberlain's Men, while Kemp is known to have played Dogberry. The writing, staging, and popularizing of As You Like It therefore intervened between that of Much Ado and August 4, 1600. Kemp seems to have left the company early in 1599.<sup>1</sup> These facts tend to date Much Ado in the fall or winter of 1598-99, and this is today the generally accepted date.

There has been a marked tendency throughout the nineteenth- and twentieth-century criticism of the play, however, to consider Much Ado as possibly a revision of a preceding English drama. This tendency is based upon the following facts. (a) An entry of the performance of a Benedicke and Betteris at court appears in the Lord Treasurer's account for 1613, and this has been interpreted as possibly a Benedick-and-Beatrice play antecedent to the present text. (b) An entry in the Revels Accounts of a "matter of Panecia" as rehearsed by Leicester's Men on December 18, 1574, in preparation for a court performance, has been considered as possibly a scribal error for "a matter of Fenicia" and therefore a reference to an early dramatization of the plot from its primary source, the story of Timbreo di Cardona and Fenicia Lionato, the twentieth narrative in Bandello's Novelle. (c) A "historie of Ariodante and Geneuora," performed at court on February 12, 1583, by "m<sup>r</sup> Mulcasters children," was pretty certainly a dramatization from a probable secondary source of Much Ado, the tale of Ginevra in the Fifth Book of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso. (d) Jacob Ayer, of Nuremberg, at some time before his death in 1605 wrote a dramatic version of the story of Fenicia under the title of Die Schoene Phaenicia; and this has been brought into connection with the visits of English actors to Germany in the years following 1585, and the theory evolved that Ayer simply dramatized in the German an English play carried to Germany by the English actors, which play also served as a source for Shakespeare. Another play, Vincentius Ladiszlau by Duke Heinrich Julius of Braunschweig, printed in 1599, has been used to bolster up the theory although it has no direct connection with the Much Ado plot.<sup>2</sup> (e) Mr. A. E. Brae in 1860 argued that Much Ado was the mysterious Love's Labour's Won of Meres's list, and therefore antedated its generally accepted earliest time-limit. (f) The editors of the New Shakespeare edition, Sir Arthur Quiller-Couch and Mr. J. Dover Wilson, in their edition of the play in 1923 argued at length that the 1600 quarto was a revision of some earlier play, however titled, by Shakespeare himself. It is the purpose of the present paper to evaluate these theories in order, with special attention to the latest.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. E. K. Chambers, William Shakespeare, pp. 79 and 79 n. 4.

1. The apparent record of a second version of the story, presented under the title Benedicte and Betteris at court in 1613, is, I think, easily disposed of. Weight has been given to it chiefly by the authority of Dr. Horace Howard Furness, Jr., who in his variorum edition of the play (1899) quoted only part of the original entries in the Lord Treasurer's accounts and failed to appreciate the significance of some of the material he omitted; and it has been perpetuated mainly by investigators who did not take the trouble to go beyond the material he quoted. Lord Treasurer Stanhope's accounts for the season of 1612-13 contain an unusual list of the plays produced at Court in connection with the marriage of the Princess Elizabeth to the Elector Palatine. The Elector arrived at Court October 16, 1612; was betrothed to the Princess on December 27; wedded her on St. Valentine's Day following; and left with his bride for the Continent on April 10. Both of the warrants are dated May 20, and they clearly fix the season involved as the nearly six months between the Elector's arrival and his departure. I quote the lists in full.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The claims of this play as a matter of collateral interest are presented by Cohn, Shakespeare in Germany in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries, pp. lxiv-lxvii, and are dealt with pro and con in the Furness variorum Much Ado, pp. 339-344, quoting Herman Grimm and J. Tittmann. The hero is a miles gloriosus, a type well known to the English predecessors of Shakespeare and in 1598-99 already employed by the poet in Don Armado and Falstaff.

<sup>3</sup> MS. Rawl. A 239 (Bodleian), leaf 47. I follow the text as given by Chambers, William Shakespeare, II, 343. Nine plays by other companies were also performed at court during the same period (Chambers, Eliz. Stage, IV, 180-181).

Item paid to John Heminges vppon the cowncells warrant dated at Whitehall XX die Maij 1613, for presentinge before the Princes Highnes the Lady Elizabeth and the Prince Pallatyne Elector fowerteene severall playes, viz.: one playe called filaster, one other called the Knott of ffooles, One other Much Adoe about Nothings, the Mayeds Tragedy, The Merye Dyvell of Edmonton, The Tempest, A Kinge and no Kinge, The Twins Tragedie, The Winters Tale, Sir John fjalstaffe, The Moore of Venice, The Nobleman, Caesars Tragedye, and on other called Love lyes a bleedinge, all which Playes weare played within the tyme of this Accompte, viz: paid the some of iiij<sup>xx</sup> xiiij<sup>li</sup> vj<sup>s</sup> viij<sup>d</sup> [£93. 6s. 8d.].

Under the same date by separate warrant of the Council was paid to "the said John Heminges" for Sixe severall playes, viz: one play called A badd beginininge makes a good endinge, One other called y<sup>e</sup> Capteyne, One other the Alcumist, One other Cardenno, One other the Hotspur and one other called Benedicte and Betteris, All played within the tyme of this Accompte, viz: paid Fortie powndes, And by ways of his Majesties rewarde twentie powndes, In all lx<sup>li</sup> [£60].

Dr. Furness believed<sup>4</sup> that in the entry Benedicte and Betteris was contained a possible record of a pre-Shakespearean source for Much Ado. Since "no other of the plays was acted twice" and since "after the title . . . had been distinctly given in one warrant," on the same day "a different title . . . was given in another warrant," he felt that "the logical assumption is that two plays are referred to. At the same time," he adds, "it is possible that Much Ado About Nothing may have had, originally, a second alternative title, like Twelfth Night; or What You Will, and that this alternative title bore the names of the two principal characters." Now it is, a priori, a quite untenable hypothesis that a theatrical company would keep in active repertory, after a lapse of fifteen years, two partly identical versions of the same play, one highly successful and popular and the other its long out-moded predecessor. It is still more incredible that that company would then be so ill-advised as to climax a season before the King with the inferior production when, near the beginning, it had led off brilliantly with the favorite. And in fact, Dr. Furness's statement that "no other of the plays was acted twice" is an error. As Benedicte and Betteris ends the second list, so the first list concludes with the opening play, Philaster, duplicated under its subtitle, Love Lies a-Bleeding; so that indubitable precedent exists for the repetition even among the plays covered by a single warrant. Moreover, Sir John fjalstaffe and Hotspur at sight lead one to suspect a third identity (1 Henry IV), and the suspicion deepens to certainty when one considers the implications of the surrounding facts. Hotspur is listed immediately before Benedicte and Betteris. In each of these three pairs of duplications, the second of the pair occupies either a final or a penultimate position in the lists, and two of these seconds occur at the end of the briefer King's list. The sums paid in the warrants too are significant. The first list averages £6. 13s. 4d. a play and the second £10 a play, an advance for the latter of fifty per cent in the rate, and for this the second warrant itself states the reason. The combination of these facts is eloquent to any one versed in matters theatrical. The two lists constitute a series of twenty performances, six of them segregated in the royal accounts merely because when the King was present the regular court payment had to be increased one-half for the King's traditional "largess." The wedding festivities had drawn heavily upon the company's repertory as well as upon the royal treasury, and at the end of the season the King's Men had eked out their artistic resources by repeating their three chief successes, probably "by special request," quite in accordance with theatrical usage. The presence of the King would be an excellent reason for repeating two brilliant plays, 1 Henry IV and Much Ado, that had especially pleased the younger members of the family in his absence; and the love play, Philaster, with its theme of feminine devotion, chosen with diplomatic tact to open the series before the prospective bridegroom, indubitably again closed it. From the scrupulousness with which, contrary to custom, titles of plays were being entered in the warrants, it is clear that in this year of unwonted expense the Lord Treasurer was checking up on bills with unusual care; and naturally the canny business manager of the company, John Heminges, sought to maintain the prestige of the organization and at the same time to avoid needless difficulty with the thrifty official formula "and one other" in the pay warrant, by carefully entering twenty different titles for the twenty different performances, and therefore had to give variant titles to the three repeated plays at the ends of his lists. Further, "the Prince's Highness," who by the record saw the performance of Much Ado in the first list and who naturally would also be present at that of Benedicte and Betteris in the second, was none other than the Prince who later, as Charles I, wrote the title Benedick and Beatrice opposite the title of Shakespeare's play in his copy of the Second Folio in Windsor Castle.<sup>5</sup> This corroborates the only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the evidence in the warrants. The supposed source play for Much Ado conjured out of the last entry in the briefer warrant is a forlorn phantom that never had a real existence. In pace requiescat!

<sup>4</sup> Variorum ed., p. xxii.

The second, third, and fourth of the traces of possible precedent dramatic versions of the Much Ado material require for their discussion a preliminary sketch of the non-dramatic sources.

<sup>5</sup> J. O. Halliwell Philipps, Memoranda on All's Well that Ends Well, . . . Much Ado About Nothing, . . . p. 59. Furness, op. cit., p. xxii, refers to Halliwell Philipps, Outlines of the Life of Shakespeare, ed. 1885, p. 262; but the entry does not appear in either of the two eds. of the Outlines to which I have access.

There can be no doubt that, directly or indirectly, Bandello's story of Timbreo di Cardona and Fenicia Lionato is the primary source of Shakespeare's play. The following elements are common to the two: (1) a close relationship of the names of the two important characters, King Piero (Prince Pedro) and Lionato de' Lionati (Leonato); (2) identity of locale—Messina; (3) the suit of Piero's (Pedro's) favorite for the hand of Fenicia (Hero) and the approval of her father, leading toward an imminent wedding; (4) the use of an intermediary between the lover and the father; (5) the resolve of an antagonistic force, Girondo (Don John), to break off the match by convincing the lover of his fiancée's unchastity; (6) the use of subordinates to produce the required illusion in the lover's mind; (7) the use of a window as the scene of the illusion; (8) the lover's consequent repudiation of the proposed bride; (9) the bride's swooning and mock-burial; (10) the lover's atonement at the supposed tomb of the bride; (11) the lover's consent to marry a lady of the father's choice; (12) the marriage (betrothal) of the lover to an unknown lady; (13) the joyful discovery of the identity of the new bride with the supposed dead fiancée; (14) the arrangement of a second wedding between a friend of the lover's and a relative of the bride to occur at the same date; (15) conclusion of the story with a dance.

This series of events, considerably differentiated from Bandello in motivation, treatment, emphasis, and the method of revealing the deception practiced upon the lover, but unmistakably identical as a narrative sequence, forms the serious plot in Shakespeare's play. For but one of Shakespeare's modifications in it is there a subordinate source. Shakespeare has not only subordinated the scene at the window that forms the crux of Girondo's (Don John's) stratagem by keeping it off the stage, but he has also increased its plausibility by making it, as we learn through dialogue in III, iii, an interview at Hero's chamber window between Don John's follower, Borachio, and Hero's gentlewoman, Margaret, whom Claudio and the Prince are led through her costume to mistake for Hero herself. The details of this stratagem are apparently taken, directly or indirectly, either from Ariosto's story of Ariodante and Ginevra in Orlando Furioso, Book v (translated into English by Sir John Harrington in 1591), or from Spenser's story of Claribell and Phedon in The Faerie Queene, Book II, canto iv. For Shakespeare's two main changes in the play, namely, the development of the high comedy intrigue by which Benedick and Beatrice are lured into matrimony, and the conception of the Dogberry low-comedy group and its blundering intervention in the main plot, by which action Don John's schemes are brought to naught, there is no known literary source or suggestion. The influence of the secondary source upon the present Much Ado, therefore, is limited to a couple of details in an off-stage scene, as they influence speech and action in the scènes à faire.

Of Bandello's Novelle (Lucca, 1554), according to Bishop Tanner as quoted by Warton,<sup>6</sup> there was an English translation by "W.W." in 1580, but if so, this has disappeared. A French version of the story, "enriched" from Bandello, was included in Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques (Paris, 1572);<sup>7</sup> but no sign of the numerous enrichments is in Much Ado, and it is therefore improbable that Shakespeare either directly or indirectly based upon it. With this non-dramatic source situation in mind we may now resume our discussion of the hypothetically possible earlier dramatic versions of the Much Ado material listed in the second paragraph of this article.

2. The "matter of Panecia," rehearsed for Court performance in 1574 on December 18, by the Earl of Leicester's Men,<sup>8</sup> was preceded by Belleforest's French version by only two years and preceded "W.W." 's reported English version by six years. It is possible but improbable that the Paris version would in so short a time have been available for the Leicester Men's source; and therefore if the "matter" really was a dramatization of the story of Fenicia and Don Timbreo, it was pretty certainly based either immediately upon Bandello or upon an unknown translation of him earlier than that of "W.W." This might place it in the same line of development as Shakespeare's play, which apparently bases upon Bandello rather than Belleforest; and it may also be significant that Leicester's players were then headed by James Burbage, the father of Richard Burbage, through whose hands it conceivably might reach the Chamberlain's Men. However, the mere suspicion that a single word, Panecia, is a mis-spelling is too insecure a foundation upon which to erect such a conjecture with any confidence.

3. The performance of the "historie of Ariodante and Geneuora" of 1583<sup>9</sup> is of little importance in this connection (1) because, like its source,

<sup>6</sup> Noted by H. C. Bartlett, Mr. William Shakespeare: Original and Early Editions of His Quartos and Folios, etc., p. 92.

<sup>7</sup> Through the courtesy of the authorities of the Folger Memorial Library in Washington, and especially of their Reference Librarian, Mr. Giles E. Dawson, I have been able to trace the first publication of Belleforest's version back to the third volume of the Histoires Tragiques (Paris, 1572), in which it appears as the eighteenth and last in the volume, with a running title numbering it fifty-fourth in the series. This is ten years earlier than the date given by Furness, who quotes from the ed. of 1582 and is followed by all later editors. The story does not appear in the two-volume eds. of 1559-60 or 1568.

<sup>8</sup> Chambers, Elizabethan Stage, iv, 148, citing the Revels Accounts, ed. Feuillerat, p. 238.

<sup>9</sup> Chambers, op. cit., iv, 99, 159, citing the Declared Accounts of the Record Office, 542. mm. 44-45, also the Revels Accounts, ed. Feuillerat, p. 350.

Ariosto, its contribution to Much Ado could be at best but slight, and (2) because it was apparently a special performance complimentary to the Queen prepared by the children of the Merchant Tailor's School, headed by Richard Mulcaster, and was therefore outside the regular line of professional development either of the adult or the child companies. It probably never passed into any professional repertory and, even if it did, it could not possibly have served as the initial suggestion for Much Ado, the basic relations of which are overwhelmingly with the Bandello version.

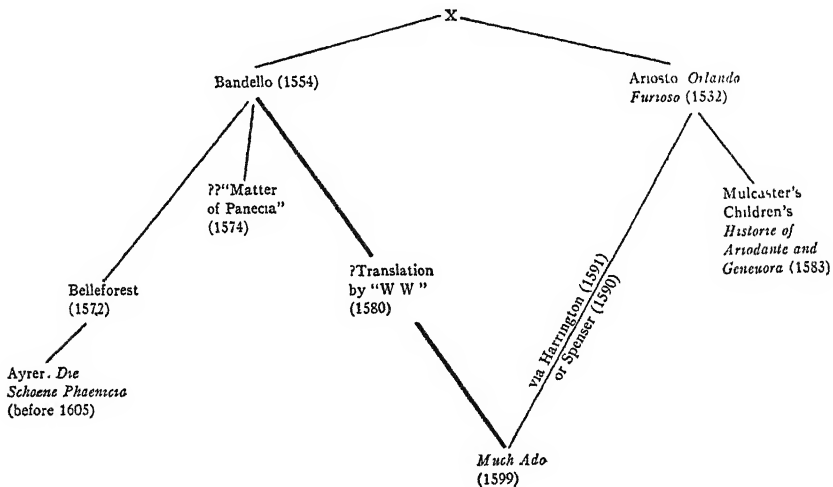

4. As for Jacob Ayrrer's German version of the story, Die Schoene Phaenicia,<sup>10</sup> the author expressly stated that his plays, seventy in number, were composed after the English fashion, and many of them, including the play in question, introduce the typical English clown. For the supposition that this play was based upon an English version antecedent to Shakespeare's, however, there is no tangible foundation. As Dr. Furness demonstrated indubitably in 1899,<sup>11</sup> it is based upon the French of Belleforest, a fact that almost inevitably isolates it from the "matter of Panecia" and also from what, by all positive evidence, is the Italian line of descent of Much Ado. The only elements not in its source that suggest a possible relationship between it and Shakespeare's play are, first, that in Ayrrer's garden (window) scene, unlike both Bandello's and Belleforest's, a character (here the Clown in woman's garb) does actually appear and is mistaken by Timborus (Claudio) for Phaenicia (Hero) as Margaret is reported (not shown) to have done in Much Ado; and second, that Phaenicia's mock death takes place, not that she may later make another marriage, as with Bandello and Belleforest, but, as with Shakespeare, that Tymborus may be led to repent and again receive her. The second was a dramaturgic conception that would naturally arise independently in any dramatist's mind out of the author's knowledge of the approaching sequel. The attempt to make the garden scene more convincing through the lover's belief that he had not merely seen a man enter her apartment but that he had actually witnessed a love scene between the stranger and the betrothed, would also naturally occur to any competent dramatist, and the fact that the scene was used as an outlet for clownery and not as a result of a lady-in-waiting's real love for the villain seems at once to remove this from any actual relationship either to Shakespeare or to Shakespeare's secondary source, whether Ariosto or Spenser. We may disregard Jahn the Clown's vulgarly comic "love" for the servant Anna Maria (brought to a summary close before the play is one-third over by the emptying of a bucket of water upon his head) although this commonest of subplot types<sup>12</sup> has been regarded as an early form of the Benedick-Beatrice situation! In short it may safely be asserted that there is no reliable indication whatever of any connection, direct or indirect, between this German version and any English version of the existence of which there is any evidence.

<sup>10</sup> I have not been able to examine the German edition. A partial translation appears in A. Cohn, Shakespeare in Germany, pp. 82-111 (German and English in parallel columns) and another in Furness, Much Ado, pp. 329-337.

<sup>11</sup> Much Ado, pp. xxx and 329 ff.

From the considerations listed above, and with due allowance for the limitations of linear diagramming, we may indicate the relations of the various known sources of Much Ado and the probable provenance of the three versions just discussed as follows:

<sup>12</sup> Such a comedy subplot with a love complication involving inferiors attached to the principal characters occurs in the earliest known English secular drama, Medwell's Fulgens and Lucres. Before Much Ado the device had appeared in the Comedy of Errors, and Shakespeare again utilizes it in Love's Labour's Lost, The Merchant of Venice, As You Like It, and Twelfth Night, with variations of rank and relationship. Shakespeare needed no such suggestion. Further, some elements in Ayer's subplot derive indirectly from Belleforest, whom neither Cohn nor apparently Shakespeare knew. In an "enrichment" of Bandello, Belleforest says that Timbreo passed and repassed Fenicia's home because "so unbounded is the passion of love that the eye once struck by the arrow of Cupid, transmits the wound and conceit to the heart." With Ayer this commonplace crystallizes into a dramatized assault on Timbreo by Venus and Cupid, which immediately finds a comic duplication in the entrance of the Clown, who with an arrow "dishonorably lodged" in his rear and "holding his hands over the spot, alternately bewails his pain and proclaims his love for Anna Maria." (I quote Furness.) The yokel comedically must be fooled, and the use of water for the climax both here and in Vincentius Ladislaus points to a current German comic stage trick, but establishes no relationship with Shakespeare. Cupid's arrow also naturally suggests to Ayer the trite reference to Vulcan as the forger of the arrows, an idea that, despite Cohn, has no real parallelism of thought to Much Ado, I, i, 185-186.

There remain for consideration only the two attempts to derive the Q text of Much Ado from preceding versions by Shakespeare himself.

5. The possibility that Shakespeare's earlier *Love Labour's Won*ne listed by Meres in 1598 as complementing Love's Labour's Lost, was really Much Ado, as urged by A. E. Brae in 1860,<sup>13</sup> rested upon Brae's assumption that the phrase Love's Labour in the two titles was to be interpreted mythologically as "Cupid's Labour" "in the same sense as the fabled Labours of Hercules," and is an attempt to show that the two plays were intended as companion pieces designed to show Cupid's Failure and Cupid's Success; and in support of this theory Brae collects three references to Cupid and one to one of Hercules' labors in Love's Labour's Lost and one reference to Hercules' labors and six to Cupid in Much Ado. The references are all mythological commonplaces of the day, and the theory has nowhere been seriously maintained in recent years. And unless it can be reasonably shown that Much Ado is early, at least in part, Brae's theory goes down with the New Shakespeare hypothesis of 1923. To the latter, then, we next turn our attention.

6. The New Shakespeare theory I shall endeavor, as briefly as possible, to present in full, amplifying the statements in the New Shakespeare treatment of "The Copy for Much Ado . . . 1600" by the supplementary points urged in Professor J. Dover Wilson's "Notes."

First<sup>14</sup> there are pointed out certain actual and certain supposed peculiarities in the text of the drama. Prominent among these are (a) a number of well known irregularities in the stage directions, namely: the mention of Leonato's otherwise unknown wife, Innogen, in the entrance directions of I, i and II, i; the incongruous entrance of Don John with Don Pedro at I, i, 191; the unnecessary entrance of Don John, Conrade, and Borachio at the same time with the Prince, Hero, and Leonato, at II, i, 194; and the extraordinary direction at II, i, 76, Enter prince, Pedro, Claudio, and Benedicke, and Balthaser, or dumb Iohn. With these there may be classed the minor oddities of the occurrence of two and's in the latter stage direction and in that at the head of III, iv, Enter

<sup>13</sup> See his volume, Collier, Coleridge, and Shakespeare, pp. 131 ff., or the somewhat cut form given by Furness, Much Ado, pp. 367 ff. Apparently the last serious support given this view was that of Fleay (Life and Work of Shakespeare, pp. 135, 204), who argued for 1590 as the original date of the play on the insubstantial ground that at I, i, 276 a date July 6 is mentioned, that at II, i, 351-352 the same day is referred to as Monday, and that July 6 fell on Monday in no year between 1590 and 1601. A parallel argument of Fleay's breaks down for Every Man in His Humour, as J. C. Smith pointed out, Arden ed. of Much Ado, p. x, n. 2. And W. O. Wright had already identified July 6 with "Old Midsummer Day, an appropriate date for such Midsummer madness." The significance of the date is not chronological but dramatic, as if Benedick had said, "the first of April."

<sup>14</sup> New Shakespeare ed., pp. 93-102.

Hero, and Margaret, and Ursula; and Balthasar's entrance in the train of the Prince at I, i, 90 although he is not needed for singing<sup>15</sup> (obviously a mere theatrical device for giving the Prince a little more retinue out of the limited facilities of a small theatrical company). The New Shakespeare editors also comment upon: (b) Shakespeare's alleged short memory of the names of his characters in that he employs variant speech headings for Dogberry, Verges, and Antonio, and has two characters by the name of Seacoal; (c) two passages that are considered by Professor Wilson to betray imperfect deletions of earlier matter, viz., IV, i, 54-57 and V, i, 106-108; and (d) the punctuation, which Professor Wilson finds light in the dialogue prose but in the verse scenes "careful, adequate, and correct."

Constructively, the New Shakespeare editors explain these facts by the hypothesis<sup>16</sup> that there are "clearly two strata" in the play. They conceive that the Claudio-Hero scenes formed the main plot of an early Shakespearean verse play in which there were also two subplots, the one dealing with Benedick and Beatrice (including, as in the present play, the amatory hoodwinking of both by their friends and the participation of both in Hero's interrupted wedding scene), and the other concerned with Margaret and Borachio. This play they think Shakespeare revised in 1599, amplifying the Benedick-Beatrice scenes in prose, tearing out the Borachio-Margaret scenes to make room for the new dialogue, and thereby leaving unexplained some details of the Margaret-Borachio window scene, which was incidentally relegated to a position off stage. In support of this theory Professor Wilson supplements the arguments given above by finding reasons for believing that the verse scenes of the play are metrically of an earlier type than Shakespeare was writing in 1599 and reminiscent of the style of Romeo and Juliet and Two Gentlemen of Verona; by identifying occasional verse rhythms in some prose passages, thus leading to a suspicion that those passages were rewritten from earlier verse; and by a few minor stylistic points as to individual passages. Incidentally, from the questions raised at various points in the discussion it appears that the theory involves the supposition that the earlier play contained scenes answering the queries:—Who was "my uncle's fool" (alluded to by Beatrice at I, i, 37 and hypothetically crowded out of the textus receptus on account of the introduction of the comic Dogberry, Verges, and the Watch)? Why had Don Pedro and Don John quarreled and how been reconciled? What were the preceding love passages between Beatrice and Benedick that she refers to at II, i, 259–262? Why did the Prince and Claudio ask Balthasar to arrange a serenade at II, iii, 88–89? Why did Beatrice not sleep with Hero on her pre-wedding night? Where did Hero sleep? How did Borachio persuade Margaret to help him deceive Claudio? Why did Margaret not report her escapade? How did she defend herself during her interview with Leonato between v, i and v, iv?

<sup>15</sup> He is mute throughout the sixty-seven lines of the passage and is not to be identified for the audience until II, iii, 45, and therefore, whatever may be his apparent significance for a literary editor, in I, i, he as yet has none for the audience, who will not remember his brief presence here when he again appears, or be at all concerned about it if they do. Shakespeare is working in accordance with the principles of audience psychology, not the psychology of an undesired reader.

<sup>16</sup> Pp. 102-107 and Notes passim.

Despite my former marked predisposition in favor of the New Shakespeare theory, and my very lively appreciation of the debt of gratitude that the world of Shakespearean scholarship owes in general to the labors of the New Shakespeare editors, in this case of Much Ado, point by point, I find their evidence fallacious. It is possible for an editor to work so microscopically that he loses his sense of artistic values; and here much of the argument is based upon Professor Wilson's apparent forgetfulness of the nature of the dramatist's art and a misapprehension of the creative processes of dramatic composition.<sup>17</sup> Such is the convincing power of Shakespeare's genius that it often transcends the necessities of the dramatist's craft and amazingly well stands the application of tests that are properly applicable only to other literary media. But one must not expect that this will always be the case. Shakespeare is responsible only for meeting the criteria of his own art. The dramatist is not a historian, a biographer, or even a novelist. He writes, not for the reader in the study, but for the spectator in the theatre. Shakespeare aimed to produce the illusion of life upon his audiences both by presenting certain scenes before their eyes and by giving perspective and motivation in the past and behind the scenes. The New Shakespeare editors are here taking for granted, not merely a fictional illusion of solidity, but the equivalent of a biographical solidarity. Many of the questions raised above for Much Ado we might parallel for Hamlet and on these grounds hypothesize an early Shakespearean play with scenes showing the child Hamlet at play with the jester Yorick (crowded out of Shakespeare's hypothetical later revision by the admission of the comic grave-diggers); depicting Hamlet's life at Wittenberg, where he was so much immersed in "your philosophy" that he quite misunderstood what manner of men Rosencrantz and Guildenstern were; telling in detail how the quarrel arose between the elder Hamlet and the father of young Fortinbras; representing the early relations between the Queen and Claudius and making it extremely clear why the Queen, if innocent of complicity in the murder of her husband, did not denounce Claudius; letting us see the first love passages between Hamlet and Ophelia; and so forth;—all of which, it might be assumed, Shakespeare cut out again from his later play in order to concentrate on the duel between the young Prince and his uncle. The retrospective treatment of these matters in Hamlet is partly to supply past motivation for present action, partly for perspective to give verisimilitude, partly the result of concentration on matters of fundamental importance with proper subordination of minor detail. Not infrequently, too, Shakespeare thus evades an inconvenient question.<sup>18</sup> And with regard to the events of Hero's pre-wedding night he had especial reason for such evasion. Has Professor Wilson considered creatively the full difficulty of the task that he insists Shakespeare at first needlessly undertook? The poet would be called on to contrive plausibly that Borachio, knowing neither of the ladies, should nevertheless oust Hero and Beatrice for that one night from their joint sleeping chamber, at the window of which he and Margaret were to meet, and at the same time he must separate them from each other, else Beatrice's attitude on the denunciation of Hero by Claudio in iv, i, loses the force of its frankness, Leonato's reaction much of its power, and the whole carefully climaxed wedding scene, the chief crisis of the play, is notably weakened. It is obviously impossible that Borachio should do this alone; he must therefore work through Margaret. But he is already taking long risks with the innocent Margaret in asking her to masquerade as Hero on that evening. How could he further ask her to contrive the absence of these two ladies separately from their own sleeping apartment without arousing her suspicions, then or later, concerning the harm intended her mistress by the device? In fact, many an editor, Professor Wilson himself among them, has asked why she was not suspicious as it was. The only possible solution seems to be for Shakespeare to make the scene take place at some other window, pretendedly Hero's; but Bandello himself pointed out<sup>19</sup> the implausibility of using a window other than the heroine's and thus in the lover's eyes weakening the only evidence of his fiancée's unchastity. Let any reader place himself in Shakespeare's position and see if he can invent a natural and safe solution to Borachio's problem. And why should Shakespeare risk the entire plausibility of his drama at its crucial point when, by keeping the scene off stage and putting into Borachio's mouth an airy "I will so fashion the matter," he could do all that the illusion of the play required? And why should he write a special scene or series of scenes in order to satisfy the ultra-critical twentieth century reader (not to say editor) whom he never expected to have, when he knew that under his deft treatment his Elizabethan audiences would delightedly throng his theatre perfectly satisfied? But more: to have written in these scenes would have completely destroyed the delicate balance of dramatic values in the play. Commentators have repeatedly insisted, and rightly, on the skill with which Shakespeare has suppressed the melodrama, of which the window scene is one of the two crises, and has kept the comedy atmosphere dominant. And it was especially needful that the window scene be suppressed as it is necessarily referred to five times (in three at some length) in other scenes of the play. Thus, actually to depict the scene in addition would go far to make all the later repetitions anticlimactic. Common sense and good dramaturgy united in demanding that Shakespeare treat the incident as he did in 1599, and the same logic applies to its occurrence in any possible earlier Shakespearcan version.

<sup>17</sup> I am by no means unmindful of the fact that Professor Wilson's co-editor is the justly admired author of a large body of fiction as well as a volume on Shakespeare's Workmanship; but I am not aware that he has had experience as a playwright, in which profession, I reiterate, the conditions and psychological operations of the author are quite different.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Portia's words to Antonio, Merchant of Venice, v, i, 278-279, "You shall not know by what strange accident / I chanced on this letter."

<sup>19</sup> Cf. conveniently, Furness ed., p. 319.

Especially weak is the climactic argument of the New Shakespeare editors that at II, ii, 43-44, Borachio's words to Don John "hear me call Margaret Hero, hear Margaret term me Claudio," so inappropriately connected with Claudio and Don Pedro, who were presumably intended to watch from a distance in the orchard and hear nothing, were a slip of the pen on Shakespeare's part, due to his knowledge of the un-revised text.

When Borachio speaks thus to Don John he is imaginatively sketching, from his point of view, the scene as he plans it shall take place between him and Margaret, motivating her action in Shakespeare's dramaturgy and not knowing as yet where Don John will place Don Pedro and Claudio; and it is certain from his own later statement<sup>20</sup> that at the interview the plan, at least as to the use of Hero's name for Margaret, was so carried out. This passage is far more explicable as a development by Shakespeare directly from his secondary source, here most probably Ariosto, than as an absent-mindedly slavish following of supposititious scenes that he had previously evolved in an earlier play from that same source and had partly forgotten. Why adopt so curiously complex an explanation when a simple, natural one will serve as well? And in general, it is wholly unlike Shakespeare, busy man that he was, to go to the trouble of inventing a mass of dramatic machinery to add to a source, and a few years later tear it out again. Shakespeare sometimes adds in revision, but where is there any well authenticated evidence, that, on a large scale and in a lump, he ever elsewhere in revision subtracted important and elaborately planned plot elements? And what makes it especially improbable in this case is, that he apparently did so, according to the New Shakespeare theory, for the purpose of adding what, as to the plot action, is unessential matter. Both the primary architectonic reasons for the presence of the Benedick-Beatrice plot were, according to the evidence, already present in the supposed earlier version. The two were already tricked into a mutual belief in each other's desperate love-sickness, and they were both already concerned in the interrupted wedding of the Hero plot and were ranged among Hero's defenders.<sup>21</sup> Wilson's theory is that Shakespeare cut out a mass of elaborate plot machinery, contrived with unusual difficulty and without necessity, for the purpose of merely increasing the brilliance of the dialogue elsewhere.

<sup>20</sup> III. iv. 153-155.

There is, too, a certain unintentional ambiguity in the New Shakespeare editors' use of the phrase "the old play." Either that supposed play is Shakespeare's, or it is some other author's, or Shakespeare had more than one old play before him. But the New Shakespeare editors, while not excluding the possibility of a second "old play," clearly state, "The old play, . . . so far as the internal evidence takes us, was an early play by Shakespeare himself." If so, and if Shakespeare had repeatedly heard the play presented before revising (in fact, had presumably often taken part in it), how, on their theory, can one account for Shakespeare's unparalleled inability in 1599 to remember the names of Antonio and other characters while revising his own dialogue, especially in view of the fact that he had already used the name Antonio in Two Gentlemen of Verona and in the very title rôle of The Merchant of Venice? Again, at II, i, 99-103, we come across the passage:

Don Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof—within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then your visor should be thatched.

Don Pedro.

Speak low if you speak love.

Because these lines are "two fourteeners," say the New Shakespeare editors, "We suggest that they are relics of the old play." What old play? Shakespeare's old play, hypothesized by Professor Wilson, was in iambic pentameter, much of it retained in the pentameters of the present Much Ado. This must then be from an older "old play" prior to Shakespeare's, written in fourteeners of which these two lonely lines are the sole trace. Where, in Shakespeare's earlier plays, is there ordinary dramatic dialogue written in fourteen couplets in series?<sup>22</sup> Again, if "my uncle's fool" was crowded out of "the old play" of Shakespeare by Dogberry, the Watch, et al., as Professor Wilson suggests,<sup>23</sup> then Dogberry and the comic characters around him must have originated in the version of 1599. If so, how, in Shakespeare's earlier version, was Don John's conspiracy brought to nothing, the special function of the comedy group in the drama? There is no clear, organically synthesized conception of "the old play" back of the New Shakespeare hypothesis, and the editors make no attempt to wrestle with the dramaturgic difficulties that their hypothesis involves.

<sup>21</sup> See scenes II, iii; III, i; and IV, i; and Professor Wilson's notes upon them.

<sup>22</sup> Mr. Granville Barker, Companion to Shakespeare Studies, p. 49, refers to "fourteeners" in the Comedy of Errors and Love's Labour's Lost. In the former there are none; the irregular lines are four-stress tumbling verse throughout. In the latter, fourteeners are twice used briefly for special effects—at IV, ii, 58-63, to distinguish an extemporized epigram in stanza form ababcc, and at V, ii, 555-558, to color quaintly Costard's impersonation of Pompey the Great in the antiquated "show" of the Nine Worthies. These are very special functions and by no means parallel with the ordinary dialogue use of the single couplet in Much Ado.

<sup>23</sup> In his note to I, i, 37.

To come now to the more specific facts cited by the editors in support of their hypothesis:

The questions of the irregular entrances listed above under (a) are too complex to be treated at length in the limited space here at disposal. I shall give them a comprehensive discussion elsewhere. In general, the interpretation here laid upon them appears to arise from Professor Wilson's lack of practical experience with the psychology of dramatic creation. The more one studies Shakespeare's dramaturgy, the more clear it becomes that he plotted his story as to general order and content of scenes but, like playwrights in general, left the minor details to be worked out in each scene as he proceeded with its writing. Sometimes he changed his mind with regard to a given detail as he advanced. When this occurred, he frequently did not go back to correct past passages, but permitted them to stand (thus making "scarce . . . a blot in his papers," as Hemynges and Condell tell us) until the necessary adjustments should be made at rehearsals, where he would naturally always be at hand to advise and which perhaps he even himself conducted. This supplies the key to the appearance of Hero's mother, Innogen, to cite one such case. She is listed as entering only in the opening stage directions of I, i and II, i, in both of which scenes she is mute; and she is not present even at the wedding of her daughter. Professor Wilson therefore conjectures that Shakespeare blindly copied her into his script from the stage directions in his preceding "old play"—and then forgot her! A much more natural explanation is this: In his plot Shakespeare really needed only three women—Hero, Beatrice, and a subordinate (Margaret) to serve as Hero's double and converse with Borachio at Hero's window. But he had a fourth boy for a woman's part at his disposal. What should he do with him? In Bandello's story Hero (Fenicia) had a mother. To this character the fourth boy was tentatively assigned, and Shakespeare gave her an entrance with her husband at the beginning of both Acts as indicated, and proceeded with the evolution of his dialogue. She did not work her way into the dialogue in either case; and the author came to recognize that she was not really needed. Then, during the mask and dance scene in II, i (possibly because you can't have an effective walk-around and full-stage dance with only three couples), he found the convenience of a second attendant for Hero, Ursula. He therefore transferred the boy to that new part, which he slightly developed in following scenes, and dropped the mother from the dramatis personae. On this explanation Shakespeare is no longer slavishly copying; he is intelligently changing his plan as the dramatic vista of his play opens before him.

The variant speech-headings for Dogberry and Verges I have elsewhere explained.<sup>24</sup> The somewhat similar phenomenon in the case of Leonato's brother Antonio is not difficult as soon as one gets the creative dramatist's slant on the situation. In the story Antonio was not essential. But in I, ii, of the drama, when the confusion as to who was to be Hero's prospective bridegroom arose, for the benefit of the audience Leonato required a confidant. Dramaturgically Antonio is that confidant; histrionically, in the professional set-up of the company, he is "second old man." (Compare "Second Old Capulet" in Romeo and Juliet, I, v.) At the beginning of the play, therefore, he was merely a stage necessity—a confidant to be played by an actor accustomed to "old man" parts, possibly with a natural bent toward slightly eccentric humor. Such a humorous touch at least appears in him in the dance scene. He makes no appearance in the wedding scene, where he would have been an incumbrance rather than a help. He makes his appearance again in v, i, where Hero's injured father once more needs a confidant, and here at last, the character having grown on Shakespeare as he worked, Hero's uncle attains to his strongest personality. Primarily, however, he is merely a necessary piece of dramaturgic mechanics, and the Quarto entrance directions and the speech-headings, Old Man, throughout betray this fact. Only three times does need for his name develop in the dialogue, and then Shakespeare improvises a name for him, using first an Italian form, "Anthonio," (II, i, 116) and later shifting it to the familiar English, "brother Anthony" (v, i, 91, 99). Once more, these type-character speech-headings arise from no forgetfulness on the part of the poet; he is simply pursuing his work in a craftsmanlike way.

Let us now examine the two "imperfectly deleted" passages that are the most tangible textual basis for the New Shakespeare hypothesis. At IV, i, 157–160, in the midst of six pages of almost uninterrupted blank verse, occur these words, squeezed into the bottom of a page:

Friar. Hear me a little, for I haue only bin silent so long, & giuen way vnto this course of fortune, by noting of the lady, I haue markt, <sup>24</sup> PMLA, XL (Sept., 1925), 543–550.—But whereas I formerly believed, with Wilson, that this represented a revision from before 1598 to the Q version, I now believe it was an immediate amplification of the 1598–99 Q text arising from the popular hit made by Dogberry and possibly from other reasons involved in the make-up of the company.

Here the page turns and the speech continues in iambic pentameter. All editors down to Clark and Wright simply rearrange these lines as blank verse in a three- or four-line division, R. G. White also transposing silent and been. Clark and Wright explain the passage as the result of a printer's "pic" and a consequent resetting with the loss of some words. They print as imperfect, in this form:

Friar. Hear me a little; for I have only been Silent so long and given way unto †This course of fortune . . .
 By noting of the lady I have marked
 A thousand blushing apparitions
 To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames
 In angel whiteness beat away those blushes; etc.

Mr. P. A. Daniel<sup>25</sup> with greater penetration viewed the prose-set passages as arising from a miscalculation in the printer's office with regard to the division of material between two compositors, so that one compositor had to set up four lines of blank verse as two of prose in order to condense them at the bottom of his last page and thus avoid interfering with the following paginated material already set up. Finding nothing missing, Mr. Daniel would read:

Friar. Hear me a little:
 For I have only been silent so long
 And given way unto this course of fortune
 By noting of the lady. I have marked
 A thousand blushing apparitions, etc.

This reading was followed by Professor Neilson in the American Cambridge edition and by Professor Tucker Brooke in the Yale edition. It is smooth in sense and metre and retains inviolate the Q wording. True, it involves the use of by in an unusual sense, "on account of," but over thirty years ago Dr. Furness<sup>26</sup> quoted Matzner and Abbot, showing the usage not unparalleled. The New Shakespeare editors, however, offer a new explanation, namely, that Shakespeare had cut out a passage of some length from the hypothetical "old play," retaining the introductory words, "Hear me a little," and had failed properly to delete the two immediately following lines; that the compositor failed at first to notice the retained "Hear me a little" and began the speech with "By noting," etc.; and that when someone drew his attention to the omission, he included not only the "Hear me a little" but also the following two "imperfectly deleted" lines. They therefore print these two lines in brackets as an unfinished and canceled sentence, thus:

<sup>25</sup> Praetorius facsimile of Much Ado quarto, p. viii.

<sup>26</sup> Variorum ed., pp. 208-209.

Friar. Hear me a little—
 †[For I have only been silent so long
 And given way unto this course of fortune],
 By noting of the lady I have marked, etc.

This is tautological. How could the Friar "mark" what he does except "by noting of the lady"? Thus interpreted, these excrescent five words form a more un-Shakespearean flaw than the alleged difficulty as to the use of by noted in the alternative reading. The Daniel-Neilson-Brooke text, on the contrary, attaches that clause to the preceding two lines, making it a natural and sufficient reason for the Friar's silence. Further, even if Shakespeare did delete two lines that were afterward accidentally replaced, they did not necessarily come from the old play—they may have been only a cancel of an unsatisfactory opening of the speech. The New Shakespeare reading is not only faulty as proposed text; it is also inconclusive as to the conclusion reached.

Quite as unsatisfactory is the treatment of the second of the two "imperfectly deleted" passages. At v, i, 106–109 Q reads:

Leonato. My Lord, my Lord.

Prince. I will not hear you.

Leo[nato]. No come brother, away, I wil be heard. Exeunt amb[o].

Bro[ther]. And shal, or some of vs wil smart for it.

Enter Ben[edick].

Of this passage Professor Wilson says, "It is not easy to arrange these lines properly, and it is even less easy to see why, or how, the two old men abruptly leave the stage when they appear so determined to have the quarrel out." The New Shakespeare assumption is, therefore, that in the older version the quarrel continued, that Shakespeare, in revising, to shorten the scene scribbled Exeunt amb[o] in the margin and come brother away above the third line, and then intended, but forgot, to cancel the third and fourth lines before going on to add fresh Benedick material. But this explanation fails to recognize both the human nature in the situation and the dramaturgic function of the lines that the editors think Shakespeare intended to cut. The actor's tendency is to play down stage toward his audience, but on the Elizabethan platform-stage all entrances and exits were necessarily at the rear. In such cases Shakespeare has constantly to supply dialogue to cover the time required for the walk down or up stage. Here, on "Come, brother, away," Leonato turns, saying defiantly as he begins to cross, "I will be heard" (i.e., if not now, later), as men will, to save face, when for the moment discomfited and in retreat; and his brother, following, continues, "And shall, or some of us will smart for it," which brings them to the door. The New Shakespeare proposed elision would leave the pair to stalk from midstage in awkward silence. Shakespeare was too clever, both as craftsman and as psychologist, to do that.

To turn now to the verse of the play in general, Professor Wilson believes<sup>27</sup> that "so far from resembling what we should expect Shakespeare to be writing at the end of the century, it is all strongly reminiscent of The Two Gentlemen and Romeo and Juliet." It is quite true that as poetry, either for form or content, Much Ado does not rank high. Clearly Shakespeare never developed any deep interest in the Bandello story, which was full of mediæval improbabilities and was, for dramatic purposes, something that must be wrestled with before it could be adapted to his needs. The mood of the play, too, is that of wit rather than romance. Thus the poetic material suffers, especially in the earlier scenes, where one sometimes feels that the author was spurring himself to his task. It is the opinion of the New Shakespeare editors that the verse is early, but that this has escaped notice because of the high percentage of feminine endings. However, while they believe that the verse was cut and in a number of passages rewritten as prose, they nowhere suggest that in what they regard as the revision of 1599 it was anywhere rewritten as verse or that new verse was interpolated. In reviewing the theory, therefore, the verse of the play is to be considered as temporally a homogeneous unit. Consequently, I tabulate herewith in a Metrical Table<sup>28</sup> the figures from recognized authorities for (1) the respective amounts of prose, blank verse, and rhymed verse, (2) the standard metrical tests so far as pertinent, and (3) the percentages for rhymed lines and for short lines mingled with blank verse, for the following plays: Two Gentlemen, Romeo and Juliet, Much Ado, and Twelfth Night; and I supplement these with the corresponding figures for three later dramas to complete the curves of Shakespeare's metrical development. The first three columns give information as to the relative breadth of base upon which the metrical percentages are estimated. The heart of the tables is in columns 4 to 9. Here the figures for Romeo and Juliet are necessarily based upon the revision of the play published in the basic

<sup>27</sup> New Shakespeare ed., p. 104.

<sup>28</sup> Columns (1), (2), and (3) are from Chambers, Shakespeare, II, 398 (2), (4), and (3), who corrects Fleay's figures as given in C. M. Ingleby, Shakespeare, The Man and His Work, II, 99. They are quoted here merely as an aid in interpreting columns (4)-(9). Column (4) is from König, Der Vers in Shakespeares Dramen, p. 132. Column (5) is from Chambers, II, 400 (2), following Fleay in Ingleby, II, 71, I convert to percentages. Column (6) is from Chambers, II, 400 (7), who quotes from Fleay in Ingleby, II, 99; I convert to percentages. Column (7) is from König, 134. Column (8) is from Chambers, II, 402 (4-5). Columns (9)-(10) are from König, pp. 133, 131. Column (11) is from Chambers, II, 400 (1) quoted from Fleay in Ingleby, II, 99; I convert to percentages. In all percentages Chambers turns decimal figures into the nearest integer, treating 0.5 as 1; I follow the same rule in the second decimal place.

METRICAL TABLE

(1) Total prose lines; (2) Number of blank verse lines excluding prologues, epilogues, choruses, interludes, masques, etc.; (3) Number of rhymed lines excluding prologues, epilogues, choruses, interludes, masques, etc.; (4) % of feminine endings in blank verse; (5) % of alexandrines to blank verse; (6) % of mid-line extra syllables; (7) % of broken speech endings to total of speeches over a line long and without rhyme tag; (8) % of total unsplit lines with pauses to total unsplit lines; (9) % of overflow (=non-endstopt) lines; (10) % of rhymed five-foot lines to all five-foot lines; (11) % of blank verse short lines to total blank verse.

	(1)	(2)	(3)	(4)	(5)	(6)	(7)	(8)	(9)	(10)	(11)
Two Gentlemen	654	1510	128	18.4	0.4	0.3	5.8	12	12.4	6.5	4.9
Romeo and Juliet	455	2101	466	8.2	0.4	0.6	14.9	25	14.2	17.2	2.2
Much Ado	2105	644	76	22.9	1.1	1.7	20.7	21	19.3	5.2	4.0
Twelfth Night	1752	762	176	25.6	1.2	3.7	36.3	25	14.7	13.7	7.3
Hamlet	1211	2444	135	22.6	1.3	3.2	51.6	26	23.1	2.7	6.3
Antony and Cleopatra	287	2732	40	26.5	1.7	4.4	77.5	44	43.3	0.7	5.2
Tempest	464	1445	64	35.4	1.3	2.3	84.5	42	41.5	0.1	4.6

text (1599) and made an undetermined time (1596?) before that date; while concerning Twelfth Night Professor Wilson himself is of the opinion<sup>29</sup> that it probably dates at earliest to the winter of 1600-01. If, then, the verse of Much Ado, like the prose, is derived from 1598-99, one would expect that the significant verse tests for that play would in general be intermediate between the other two. Such indeed is the case. Much Ado finds such intermediate position as to feminine endings, alexandrines, mid-line extra syllables, and broken speech endings, and in the matter of feminine endings and alexandrines it is closer to Twelfth Night than to Romeo and Juliet. In the figures for pause in unsplit lines it is below both the revised Romeo and Juliet and Twelfth Night, but far above the really early Two Gentlemen. The immaturity of Two Gentlemen in comparison with Much Ado is evident throughout, and especially so in the matter of alexandrines, mid-line extra syllables, broken speech endings, and pauses in unsplit lines. It is especially noteworthy that in the test of overflow vs. end-stopt lines, which Professor Wilson particularly emphasizes as indicative of the early date of the verse of Much Ado, the fact is that our play has 1.35 times the overflow percentage of Romeo and Juliet, 1.55 times that of Two Gentlemen, and 1.31 times that of the admittedly late Twelfth Night. Even III, i, 1-116, the longest passage Wilson cites in this connection, by his own figures has still 20 per cent of overflow lines, or over one-third more than the average for Twelfth Night. The proportion of rhymed pentameters to blank verse is of limited significance in studying the chronological relations of individual plays because it varies markedly according to the type and mood of the subject matter; but in this respect too among the cited earlier plays Much Ado most closely approaches the maturity of Hamlet, very markedly exceeding Twelfth Night. The proportion of short lines is of no chronological significance whatever, but is given here because Professor Wilson's argument stresses them frequently as signs of cuts in revision, though in fact the proportion of short lines in Much Ado is little more than half that in Twelfth Night, where Wilson's own researches show little revision to have taken place. Altogether, it is obvious that the standard metrical tests give no support whatever to the New Shakespeare theory, but on the contrary confirm the traditional view.

<sup>29</sup> New Shakespeare ed., Twelfth Night, pp. viii, ix, 100-101.

In several prose sections,<sup>30</sup> too, the New Shakespeare editors find isolated lines that can be scanned as iambic pentameters, or group passages that with a little forcing can be made so to scan, and they therefore suggest that these were originally verse that has been rewritten into prose form. This is unfortunately not susceptible of statistical treatment either pro or con. But it must be remembered that for years Shakespeare spent mornings and afternoons, six days in the week, and sometimes evenings, in listening to, memorizing, and speaking blank verse lines, and part of the remaining time in reading and writing them. How could he help instinctively thinking more or less in iambic pentameter rhythms?<sup>31</sup> Anyone with a natural ear for rhythm will do so under more or less parallel conditions. Particularly inconclusive are arguments based upon the opening of prose speeches following a versified section, for the dramatist does not at a given point determine, "I will now write this coming section in prose"; he sensitively catches the prose mood as he advances, and it not infrequently takes him a line or two to do so, which is not only a natural psychological process but affords a graceful transition from the one medium to the other.

As for the punctuation of the verse and prose respectively, the final main point on which the New Shakespeare editors base their argument, I have critically examined and reexamined every sentence in Q from this angle, and I cannot perceive that there is any justification for the conclusions reached. Here and there an important speech of well defined dramaturgic value, both in prose and in verse, is in its pointing "careful, adequate, and correct," as the New Shakespeare editors allege of the verse scenes only. Between these, shorter and less important speeches are apt to be careless, both in verse and in prose. We must remember that comedy prose tends to be much shorter gaited than iambic pentameter verse and is intended to be delivered at a more rapid tempo, which fact tends to be reflected in a lighter punctuation. We must remember also that the shorter the gait, the more punctuation, and the greater the chance of printers' blunders with respect to it. We must remember further that rapid prose conversation frequently begins speeches with well, why, yes, no, vocatives, and the like, and that the punctuation of these in Q is notably unsystematic and inconsistent, all varieties of punctuation and mispunctuation being citable for them in both media. As these occur less frequently in verse, however, their inconsistencies there make less impression on the reader. The formal initial capitalization in verse also conceals many possible inconsistencies of capitalization not so covered in prose. But let us compare three cases of good punctuation in carefully planned passages. First consider Claudio's metrical speech of accusation in iv, i, 31-43. (It must be borne in mind that throughout Q, within a speech as a rule a colon serves as sentence end-stop, the period being generally reserved for the end of the speech.)

<sup>30</sup> Namely, r, iii, 20-27; v, i, 110 ff.; and v, i, 255, though the last is part of a blank verse passage and may be supposed to have a metrical rhythm.

<sup>31</sup> Cf. Chambers, Shakespeare, r, 233, for their frequency in Shakespeare's prose.

Claudio. Sweete Prince, you learne me noble thankfulnes:
 There Leonato, take her backe againe,
 Giue not this rotten orenge to your friend,
 Shee's but the signe and semblance of her honor:
 Behold how like a maide she blushes heere!
 O what authoritie and shew of truth
 Can cunning sinne couer it selfe withall!
 Comes not that blood, as modest euidence,
 To witnesse simple Vertue? would you not sweare
 All you that see her, that she were a maide,
 By these exterior shewes? But she is none:
 She knowes the heate of a luxurious bed:
 Her blush is guiltinesse, not modestie.

As to the prose, the New Shakespeare editors offer no suggestion for differentiating between the material they believe originally written for Benedick and its later amplifications. I shall therefore refrain from reproducing his admirably punctuated lines at ii, iii, 6 ff. But it is certainly fair to quote Dogberry's concluding speech in iv, ii, which labors under threefold disadvantages: it is not only short-gaited prose and low comedy, but, since Dogberry and his comrades by the New Shakespeare theory supposedly drove out the hypothetically earlier "my uncle's fool," it belongs exclusively to the alleged poorly punctuated 1598-99 material.

Kemp. Doost thou not suspect my place? doost thou not suspect my yeeres? O that he were here to write me downe an asse! but maisters, remember that I am an asse, though it bee not written downe, yet forget not that I am an asse: No thou villaine, thou art full of pietie as shal be prou'de vpon thee by good witnes, I am a wise fellow, and which is more, an officer, and which is more, a housholder, and which is more, as pretty a peece of flesh as anie is in Messina, and one that knowes the Law, goe to, and a rich fellow enough, go to, and a fellow that hath had losses, and one that hath two gownes, and euery thing hansome about him bring him away: O that I had bin writ downe an asse!

Exit.

Revise the comma after witnes to a colon, and, for its subject matter and rapid, excited delivery, this is perfect according to the best standards of the play. And wholly unexceptionable is Borachio's prose speech of confession (v, i, 236 ff.) made to the Prince and Claudio in the presence of Dogberry and referring to him, and therefore also belonging to the second version as conceived in the New Shakespeare theory.

Bor[achio] Sweete prince, let me goe no farther to mine answer: do you heare me, and let this Counte kill me: I haue deceiued euen your very eyes: What your wisdoms could not discouer, these shallowe fooles haue broght to light, who in the night ouerheard me confessing to this man, how Don Iohn your brother incensed me to slaunder the Lady Hero, howe you were brought into the orchard, and saw me court Margaret in Heroes garments, how you disgrace hir when you should marry hir: my villany they haue vpon record, which I had rather seale with my death, than repeate ouer to my shame: the lady is dead vpon mine and my masters false accusation: and briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of a villaine.

Is not the pointing in this speech as sensitive as that in Claudio's?

But these are specimens of the punctuation at its best. Soon after Claudio's speech we have, in blank verse, such manifestly faulty pointing as:

Leonato. Hath no mans dagger here a point for me.

Beatrice. Why how now cosin, wherfore sinke you down?

Bastard. Come let vs go: these things come thus to light,
Smother her spirits vp.

Benedicke. How doth the Lady?

Beatrice. Dead I thinke, help vncke,
Hero, why Hero, vncke, signior Benedicke, Frier.

And similarly negligent passages appear in the prose. There is no pervasive distinction in this respect between the prose and the verse.

In the light of these major facts I cannot find any ground for believing in an early Shakespearean version of the play. Nor, as already pointed out, can I find any reason for believing that there was an earlier English dramatic version contributory to that of Shakespeare. If the preceding discussion has exhaustively covered the ground—as I believe that, save for several minor details of the New Shakespeare presentation barred out here merely by space limitations,<sup>32</sup> it has—any reasonable interpretation of the records shows that, apart from Much Ado, there never was a Benedicte and Betteris; Ayrrer's German play derives from a French source that there is no evidence whatever, direct or indirect, that Shakespeare knew, and any pertinent similarities between it and Much Ado either come from the common ultimate Italian original or are such as would be a natural independent development from suggestions contained implicitly in that original; the historie of Ariodante and Geneuora, necessarily basing on Ariosto, could not possibly have served as Shakespeare's main source since the latter lacks many of the details of Much Ado supplied by Bandello, and the matter of Panecia is involved in the discussion only on the ground of a hypothetically erroneous spelling of a single dubious word in the recorded title of an otherwise unknown play. Nor in the light of the relationship between Shakespeare's play and Bandello's original story is there any necessity for supposing the existence of an intervening dramatic form. I conclude that, on analysis, all hitherto proposed bases for belief in the existence of an English dramatic form preceding that of the quarto of Much Ado lack adequate foundation, and that the application of the standard verse tests to the metrical sections of Much Ado, like the brilliance of its prose, adequately supports the traditional view that the text of that quarto originated shortly before its publication in 1600, probably in the theatrical season of 1598–99.

ALLISON GAW

University of Southern California

<sup>32</sup> All such details are considered in my forthcoming edition of the play.

XLIX

THE PUBLIC REPUDIATION OF HERO

ALMOST every nineteenth-century critic has declared one or more of the leading characters of Much Ado in some respects unconvincing or at least distasteful.<sup>1</sup> Chambers, moreover, finds in the play as a whole "inconsistency of purpose" and "the chiaroscuro of melodrama";<sup>2</sup> and Schücking asks why Shakespeare makes his characters "behave as irrationally" as do the characters in Much Ado.<sup>3</sup> Lawrence explains the apparent inconsistencies of the plot as the outcome of Shakespeare's close adherence to the old popular tale that was his ultimate source;<sup>4</sup> but in Much Ado Shakespeare did make bold departures from Bandello and Belleforest in the Hero-Claudio romance,<sup>5</sup> and, furthermore, replaced two insipid minor characters with the vigorous Benedick and the glib and pungent Beatrice. Stoll explains these difficulties rather as the outcome of dramatic convention, and declares that Hero's public repudiation "is a matter of Elizabethan art and taste rather than of character";<sup>6</sup> but Stoll neither makes clear how Elizabethan "art" demanded the interpolation of such an incident, nor cites similar interpolations in other plays. These two explanations, therefore, seem hardly satisfactory, and this study proposes to examine the problem in the light of Elizabethan culture and ideals. Why is Claudio, though clearly intended as a hero, so mercenary in his wooing, so apparently malicious in publicly defaming Hero, and so fickle in accepting another bride? Why does Hero passively accept such treatment?

Elizabethan gentlemen, still looking upon woman as the weaker vessel, did not favor tendencies toward female independence, but exalted submission to the summa of wifely virtue. The ideal wife lived merely to please her husband, and, like Eve, was God's own gift for man's enjoyment.<sup>7</sup> Wife-beating was lawful, though "inconvenient in the decencie of manners."<sup>8</sup> This ideal wife must be chaste;<sup>9</sup> she must be

<sup>1</sup> See Much Ado, Furness' variorum edition, "English Criticism," pp. 350, 362.

<sup>2</sup> E. K. Chambers, Shakespeare: A Survey (New York, 1926), p. 128.

<sup>3</sup> W. W. Lawrence, Shakespeare's Problem Comedies (New York, 1931), p. 72.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., p. 69.

<sup>5</sup> Much Ado, ed. cit., 311-329.—These changes occur in both sources: Hero and Claudio converse together before marriage; Claudio does not make attempts on his love's honor; Hero accepts a proposal of marriage; and she is defamed publicly.

<sup>6</sup> E. Stoll, Shakespeare Studies (New York, 1927), pp. 72, 101.

<sup>7</sup> Sweetman, The Arraignment of Lewd, Idle, Froward, and Inconstant Women (London, 1615), p. 53.      <sup>8</sup> William Heale, An Apologie for Women (London, 1609), p. 50.

<sup>9</sup> Greene, Life and Works of Robert Greene, III (London, 1587), pp. 40, 11.

the "mirrour" of a modesty, preserved at the sacrifice of learning; it were far "better for her to be unlearned and chaste than learned and of a dishonest life";<sup>10</sup> and she should never frequent places of "publicke resort."<sup>11</sup> She must, furthermore, be altogether charming: she should not ape men's fashions,<sup>12</sup> she must speak tenderly, delightfully, lovingly to her husband,<sup>13</sup> she must be attractive but not too "faire."<sup>14</sup> She must covet "less to direct than to be directed,"<sup>15</sup> she must acknowledge her husband to be her superior" for "hee is as a king in his owne house."<sup>16</sup> She must be well trained, moreover, in all household duties, and must know how to "serve and keepe him with true dutie";<sup>17</sup> she must be "both a staff and a chair" for him;<sup>18</sup> and Sir Walter Raleigh admonished his son to take care "that thou be beloved of thy Wife, rather than thyself besotted on her."<sup>19</sup> All of this was not enough: she must have a considerable dowry. Contemporary gentlemen, in fact, were criticized because "they alwaies aime more at the money than at the maide."<sup>20</sup> When no property was in the case, indeed, most of them simply never entertained a notion of marriage;<sup>21</sup> for wedding some poor "mayden" was "utterly unmeete." Truly the ideal wife, especially in the cities, must have been difficult to find; yet these common attributes were emphasized not only in domestic conduct books but also by such different authors as Gouge, Andrewes, Smith, Overbury, Hannay, Braithwait, Swetman, Greene, Markham, and Salter. The Elizabethan parents must educate his daughters to be ideal wives or, since there were no convents, they would remain single and become a financial burden on his hands. The father, of course, maintained absolute authority in all matters concerning their marriage;<sup>22</sup> and without his consent, indeed, marriage was "flat against the commandement of God."<sup>23</sup>

Hero's submission to her father, therefore, reflects the ideal marriageable girl. The characters naturally assume that her choice of a husband is subject to his will: Don Pedro reports to Claudio, "I have wooed in

<sup>10</sup> Salter, A Mirrhor Mete for all Mothers, etc., (London, 1579), f. Biii(r).

<sup>11</sup> Braithwait, The English Gentlewoman (London, 1631), 50. <sup>12</sup> Ibid., 10.

<sup>13</sup> Hannay, A Happy Husband, "The Good Wife" (London, 1618), B8v.

<sup>14</sup> Swetman, op cit, pp. 43, 49.

<sup>15</sup> Markham, The English Huswife (London, 1615), p. 344.

<sup>16</sup> Gouge, Domesticall Duties, Worke (London, 1627), p. 151.

<sup>17</sup> Markham, op cit, p. 4. <sup>18</sup> Overbury, A Wife (London, 1614), pp. 11, 175.

<sup>19</sup> Powell, English Domestic Relations (New York, 1917), p. 176.

<sup>20</sup> Greene, op cit, p. 72.

<sup>21</sup> See J. W. Draper, "The Theme of Timon of Athens," forthcoming in MLR. He finds this interest in a considerable dowry to be a natural result of the economic pressure of the age.

<sup>22</sup> Gouge, op. cit., p. 447.

<sup>23</sup> Perbus, A Commentarie upon the Epistle to the Galatians (London, 1612-1613), III.

thy name, and faire Hero is won, I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained, name the day of marriage",<sup>24</sup> even the independent Beatrice says it is her "cosens dutie to make curtsie" to her father;<sup>25</sup> Leonato, when misinformed that the prince is going to favor his daughter with an offer of marriage at once embraces the possibility and joyously commands her, "If the prince doe solicit you in that kinde, you know your answere",<sup>26</sup> and Hero does not demur. Not only is Hero willing to marry whatever suitor her father demands, but she adjusts her conduct to conform also to his ideas of womanly demeanor. She believes implicitly her father's fling at Beatrice, "thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue",<sup>27</sup> and suits her words accordingly. When the men are absent, she forgets herself, she speaks rapidly and freely,<sup>28</sup> she even calls Beatrice a "foole",<sup>29</sup> but, in their company, she grows docile and deems it intriguing and "modest" to let her cousin make answer for her.<sup>30</sup> All her speeches are "ideally" sweet and short; she contrasts them to those of Beatrice: of Don John, the latter says, "I never can see him, but I am heartburn'd an howre after",<sup>31</sup> and Hero delicately replies, "He is of a very melancholy disposition."<sup>32</sup> By virtue of her own inhibitions, Hero hoped to marry; and her docility is truly Elizabethan.

Even a woman apparently ideal, however, might not find a husband; for Elizabethan men were prejudiced against marriage. Why marry when "batcheler sensuality" was an accepted convention?"<sup>33</sup> "In these corrupt daies," wrote Heywood, "almost everie Boy of fifteen or sixteene yeres old, knows what a strumpet is, better by his own practice than I can illustrate to him by all my reading."<sup>34</sup> The harlots, indeed, insinuated themselves "into the most principall places and into the companie of those women . . . esteemed for their goodnesse"<sup>35</sup> so that "this kind of cattle" prevailed even when those that were "honest" were denied.<sup>36</sup> In the proper, marriageable woman, Renaissance men, in theory at least, found nothing to praise but passive qualities, such as, obedience and chastity; her very beauty might be a handicap, for "No where lives a woman true and fair",<sup>37</sup> her chastity, moreover, was a priceless jewel for which the husband was solely responsible both to society and to God<sup>38</sup>—a task difficult and tormenting, for

<sup>24</sup> Much Ado, ed. cit., II, i, 284–286.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., II, i, 50.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid., II, i, 62, 63.

<sup>27</sup> Ibid., II, i, 19, 20.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid., III, i, 1–122

<sup>29</sup> Ibid., III, iv, 11.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid., II, i, 50.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid., II, i, 6, 7.

<sup>32</sup> Ibid., II, i, 8.

<sup>33</sup> J. W. Draper, "Desdemona: A Compound of Two Cultures," Rev. Lit. Comp., XIII, 337 et seq.

<sup>34</sup> Thomas Heywood, History Concerning Women (London, 1624), p. 287.

<sup>35</sup> Barnabe Rich, The Excellency of Good Women (London, 1613), p. 37.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid., p. 18.

<sup>37</sup> Swetman, op. cit., pp. 43, 49.

<sup>38</sup> Powell, op. cit., pp. 151–3.

Though she were true when you met her,
And last till you write your letter,

Yet she

Will be

False, ere I come, to two or three . . .<sup>39</sup>

A wife was all too likely, furthermore, to bring "destruction to her husbande"<sup>40</sup> through "frowardness"<sup>41</sup> extravagance, or deceit.<sup>42</sup> One author recommended the custom of a trial wife "for so long as she shall remaine, as we use to buy horses, or untill we might change her as we do money",<sup>43</sup> in truth, the average Elizabethan gentleman preferred to a permanent wife some convenient temporary arrangement.

Benedick's resolution then to trust no woman,<sup>44</sup> and his opinion that a man who marries thrusts his "neck into a yoke" and "wears the print of it"<sup>45</sup> merely express the contemporary bachelor attitude; and, for abandoning the single life, the only balm for his conscience was that "the world must be peopled."<sup>46</sup> Shakespeare's change of the villain from a jealous, chivalric lover<sup>47</sup> to the bastard, Don John, who naturally revolts against the family as an institution, and who considers a man "a foole that betrothes himselfe to unquietnesse,"<sup>48</sup> indeed, not only voices the usual opinion, but also gives a more natural motive to the forces that supply complication to the comedy. This unromantic attitude toward marriage, however, reaches its climax in Claudio; his love is unconvincing. Like most young Elizabethans, he is interested only in the financial aspect, and so he makes early inquiry, "Hath Leonato any sonne my Lord?"<sup>49</sup> and, learning that he will be his father-in-law's sole "heire,"<sup>50</sup> he proceeds further with the business. Within a few days, moreover, after Hero's supposed burial, he is willing to marry another maid, for thereby he will receive a "double portion."<sup>51</sup> To the Elizabethans this mercenary love, like Bassanio's wooing of the wealthy Portia, was merely proper prudence.

Christian doctrine pictured woman as morally weak<sup>52</sup> and incapable of preserving her own chastity; and a husband must "present his wife to God as Christ did his church, without spot or wrinkle."<sup>53</sup> Men, therefore, were expected to punish unchaste women: "a soldier," for exam-

<sup>39</sup> Donne, "Go and Catch a Falling Star."

<sup>40</sup> Rich, op. cit., p. 16.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., p. 9

<sup>43</sup> A Discourse of the Married and the Single Life (London, 1621).

<sup>44</sup> Much Ado, ed. cit., i, i, 232-239.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., i, i, 195, 196.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid., ii, ii, 230.

<sup>47</sup> Ibid., Sources, pp. 314-316; 328.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid., i, iii, 43.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid., i, i, 285.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid., i, i, 286.

<sup>51</sup> Ibid., v, i, 299.

<sup>52</sup> Powell, op. cit., p. 148.

<sup>53</sup> A Pattern of Catechistical Doctrine and other minor works of Lancelot Andrewes (Oxford, 1846), p. 186.

ple, "could not afford to overlook this sort of imputation for casting a slur on his manliness and courage."<sup>54</sup> For reasons both selfish and wise, their punishment was usually severe: it offered the offended man a soul-satisfying revenge, for it shifted attention from his weakness to his courage; it was a warning to even the most "froward" wives; and it was a necessary protection of the family integrity. A husband, indeed, "taking his wife in adulterie might lawfully kill her."<sup>55</sup> Generally, a man attempted to "conceal jealousy"<sup>56</sup> or any sentiment about which malicious gossips could taunt him; for he would make himself a figure of public fun, even if he tried to gain absolute proof, and fallen woman, indeed, "got but scant sympathy in either the drama or in the life of the time."<sup>57</sup>

The foregoing details explain Leonato's ready acceptance of Hero's apparent sin. As her father, he feels an overwhelming personal disgrace; her act is so unpardonable that "the wide sea had drops too few to wash her clean again";<sup>58</sup> he says death is "the fairest cover for her shame,"<sup>59</sup> and, indeed, he exclaims that he would have killed her had he not thought that she would shortly die.<sup>60</sup> Claudio's reactions in this crisis likewise are conventional. Had he, as in the sources, quietly told Hero and her father that the nuptial rites could not be celebrated,<sup>61</sup> the Elizabethan audience would have felt that justice had not been done. A gentlemen, in fact a count,<sup>62</sup> had been duped by a seemingly virtuous maiden; a false friend had betrayed him by attempting to unite him with a "common stale";<sup>63</sup> revenge was a sacred obligation. On learning of Hero's fault, Claudio could not require fuller proof and dared not even show the human weakness of sorrow; for he would have been a target for "scambling, out-facing, fashion-monging boys that lie and cog and flout, deprave and slander."<sup>64</sup> Had he no other reason, his duty as a soldier demanded that he punish Hero—a duty rendered greater because her father was Governor of Messina. As a mere youth,<sup>65</sup> moreover—and young men often married as early as fourteen<sup>66</sup>—he could hardly be expected under dis-

<sup>54</sup> J. W. Draper, "Honest Iago," PMLA, xlv, 731.

<sup>55</sup> Ibid., p. 730.

<sup>56</sup> Richard Braithwait, Essaies (London, 1640), p. 127.

<sup>57</sup> Powell, op. cit., p. 204; and Painter, Palace of Pleasure, especially nos. 58, 81.

<sup>58</sup> Much Ado, ed. cit., xv, i, 148, 149.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid., iv, i, 122.

<sup>60</sup> Ibid., iv, i, 132-135. See Cymbeline, III, iv, 20-30.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid., Sources, pp. 315, 328.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid., II, i, 287, et al.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid., iv, i, 68.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid., v, i, 93.

<sup>65</sup> Throughout the courtship and defamation, Don Pedro implies his youth by anticipating his very thoughts and by furnishing the courage and the initiative of a maturer mind (ed. cit., I, i, 282-320; III, ii, 116, 117; IV, i, 31); Don John caustically rates him as a "young start-up" (I, iii, 61) and a very "forward March-chick" (I, iii, 52); Benedick casually calls him "Boy" and "young Claudio," and later taunts him as "Lord Lack-Beard" (V, i, 200); Leonato, too, admits his "May of youth and bloom of lustihood" (V, i, 76).

<sup>66</sup> Gouge, op. cit., p. 105.

grace and humiliation to depart from the usual norm of precept and convention. Claudio is not the "worm" that Chambers calls him,<sup>67</sup> but, like his comrades in the play, a well-born Elizabethan reacting true to type in trying circumstances; and the romantic plot of Much Ado is, therefore, truly realism. Hero's acceptance of Claudio's punishment and her lack of resentment are also of this realism. After such a public defamation, regardless of her innocence, Hero, even with her father's help, could not make another match, she had no alternative; she was happy to be restored.

The present writer cannot agree with Chambers, who finds in the play "the chiaroscuro of melodrama." The dénouement of Shakespeare's source is merely melodrama; but, just as Shakespeare in the Taming of the Shrew changed an old farce into a comedy of manners,<sup>68</sup> so, later in Much Ado, he made possible an impossible conclusion by inserting the public repudiation of Hero. To an Elizabethan, the publicity of this repudiation provided a scene à faire at once theatric and convincing, presented the outraged heroine in a more sympathetic light, and gave point to the complex devices by which Claudio was later persuaded to return. Thus Shakespeare emended his sources to make them more dramatic, more clearly motivated, and more true to Elizabethan life. Indeed, the Hero-Claudio plot essentially conforms with Elizabethan ideals: Leonato explains the proper decorum for a maiden who wishes to marry; Hero, in the presence of men, makes herself apparently ideal; Don John and the two suitors are most unromantic about marriage, Claudio being chiefly interested in the financial side of it; both Leonato and Claudio deem a most severe punishment necessary for Hero's fault; and she in turn is glad to take the only possibility society offered for her happiness. Should we not, beneath the poetic elevation of the style, recognize the social concepts and actualities that, though they seem unconvincing and romantic to our own age, were to the Elizabethans basic and obvious?

NADINE PAGE

West Virginia University

<sup>67</sup> Chambers, op. cit., p. 134.

<sup>68</sup> Pauline Shortridge, The Taming of The Shrew, A Comedy of Manners, forthcoming.

2 AND 3 HENRY VI—WHICH HOLINSHED?

IN a recent article in the Review of English Studies<sup>1</sup> Mr. R. B. McKerrow opens the question of the use of the 1577 or the 1587 edition of Holinshed's Chronicles as a source for 2 Henry VI and gives it as his judgment that the Contention is based on the first edition.<sup>2</sup> In making a study of this question, I have compared in detail the original editions of both the 1577 and the 1587 versions of the history with the Folio texts of 1, 2, and 3 Henry VI instead of with the Quartos, since in my opinion the Folios are the earlier.<sup>3</sup> Such an investigation furnishes distinct evidence that the dramatist used the 1587 Holinshed and not the first edition.<sup>4</sup>

In 2 Henry VI<sup>5</sup> one of the most striking pieces of evidence against the use of the 1577 Holinshed is the omission in that version of the word "housekeeping," which Hall, the drama, and the 1587 Holinshed use to describe Warwick. In the drama Salisbury says that his son by his "housekeeping" has "won the greatest favour of the commons" (I, i, 191-192). Hall says that Warwick "among all sortes of people . . . obteyned great loue [and] muche fauour" by his "plentyfull house keepinge" (p. 232). Under the caption "The earle of Warwike his housekeeping" the 1587 Holinshed writes of Warwick as one "euer had in great fauour of the commons of this land" (p. 678). This phrase is entirely absent from the 1577 Holinshed.

One of the only two noteworthy resemblances which Mr. McKerrow finds between 2 Henry VI and the 1577 Holinshed concerns the death of Cade in Act iv, Scene x. But this episode may be found, as he him-

<sup>1</sup> "A Note on 'Henry VI, Part II' and 'The Contention of York and Lancaster,'" RES, ix (April, 1933), 157-169.

<sup>2</sup> Though in his article Mr. McKerrow is ambiguous on the question of the priority of the two plays, in correspondence with me he has written that "the Folio as a whole represented the play in its original form, the printed Contention being merely a bad version of it." With the history of the plays as he has thus outlined it, I am essentially in accord.

<sup>3</sup> Both Miss Madeleine Doran ("Henry VI, Parts II and III," University of Iowa Humanistic Studies, iv, 1-88 [August 15, 1928] and Mr. Peter Alexander (Shakespeare's Henry VI and Richard III, 1929) have supported this theory. I shall endeavor, in another paper, to establish this same belief further on the grounds of a closer similarity between the Folio and Holinshed than between the Quartos and Holinshed.

<sup>4</sup> He used also Hall's Chronicles constantly and Fabyan's Chronicles occasionally.

<sup>5</sup> The treatment of sources in 1 Henry VI is identical with that in 2 and 3 Henry VI. For the episode of the installation of Winchester as Cardinal in 1 Henry VI it is more probable that Hall than that the 1577 Holinshed was used; and twelve separate instances concerning Joan of Arc show the use of the 1587 Holinshed alone. There is no evidence of the use of the 1577 edition in 1 Henry VI.

self states, in Hall. Since there is evident use of Hall in the dramas but no other example of the use of the 1577 Holinshed, it is reasonable to suppose that the playwright was, here as elsewhere, using Hall. The 1587 Holinshed gives this version of the story:

A gentleman of Kent named Alexander Eden awaited so his time, that he tooke the said Cade in a garden in Sussex: so that there he was slaine at Hothfield, and brought to London in a cart, where he was quartered; his head set on London bridge, and his quarters sent to diuers places to be set up in the shire of Kent.<sup>6</sup>

In the play Cade is slain in a garden in Kent by "Alexander Iden, an esquire of Kent"; his head is struck off and taken to London. The version of Hall and of the 1577 Holinshed is:

One Alexander Iden, esquire of Kent found hym in a garden, and there in his defence, manfully slewe the caitiffe Cade, & brought his ded body to London, whose hed was set on Londō bridge.<sup>7</sup>

It is to be noticed that according to both Hall and the drama Iden finds Cade in a garden and slays him in self-defense, whereas the second edition of Holinshed tells that Eden waits for him and kills him in hope of the reward. Hall spells Iden's name as the dramatist does; and both call him "esquire of Kent," while the term used in the 1587 Holinshed is "a gentlemen of Kent." Then, too, Hall does not give the location of the garden but leaves the impression that it is in Kent, while 1587 Holinshed places it in Hothfield, Sussex. The drama puts it in Kent.

The 1577 Holinshed contains no hint of the fight of Peter with his master in Act II, Scene iii. Here again the following passage in Hall may have been used:

This yere, an Armerors seruant of London, appeled his master of treason, whiche offered to bee tried by battaill. At the daie assigned, the frendes of the master, brought hym Malmesey and Aqua vite, to comforte: for he poured in so much that when he came into the place in Smithfelde, where he should fight, bothe his witte and strength failed hym: and so, he beyng a tall and a hardye personage, ouerladed with hote drynkes, was vanquished of his seruante, beyng but a coward and a wretche, whose body was drawn to Tiborne, & there hanged and beheaded.<sup>8</sup>

In the drama the stage direction as well as the dialogue follows the history:

Enter at one door [Horner], the Armourer, and his Neighbours, drinking to him so much that he is drunk.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Holinshed (1587), p. 623.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid., pp. 207 f.

<sup>7</sup> Hall, p. 222; Hollinshed (1577), p. 1268.

<sup>9</sup> 2 Henry VI, II, iii, 58, s. d.

The second edition of Holinshed is much like Hall:

A certeine armourer was appeached of treason by a seruant of his owne. For prooffe whereof a daie was giuen them to fight in Smithfield, insomuch that in conflict the said armourer was ouercome and slaine; but yet by his misgouerning of himselfe. For on the morrow . . . his neighbours came to him, and gaue him wine and strong drinke in such excessiue sort, that he was therewith distempered, and reeled as he went, and so was slaine without guilt. As for the false seruant, he . . . was iudged to be hanged, and so was, at Tiburne.<sup>10</sup>

While the dramatist may conceivably have used either Hall or the 1587 Holinshed here, the evidence is somewhat stronger for Hall.

Another resemblance between drama and history not found in the 1577 Holinshed is the Queen's charge of Gloucester with the "sale of offices and towns in France." Both Hall and the 1587 Holinshed have the accusation, though it is there made by Gloucester of Winchester:

Neither office, liuelode, nor capteine may be had, without too great good giuen unto him, wherby a great part of all the losse that is lost, they haue beene the causers of; for who that would glue most, his was the price, not considering the merits, seruice, nor sufficiance of persons.<sup>11</sup>

Perhaps the best evidence for the 1587 Holinshed is the reference (p. 623) to the Duchess of Gloucester's wax taper, not mentioned in the first edition, but referred to in the stage direction of Act II, Scene iv, of the drama. Again the 1587 Holinshed is the only history that both mentions the taper and makes Stanley's name, not Thomas, but John, as the dramatist does.<sup>12</sup>

The genealogy scene in Act II, Scene ii, is apparently also based on the 1587 Holinshed to the exclusion of the 1577 edition. Mr. McKerrow suggests, indeed, that the dramatist used 330 pages of the 1577 version and four reigns—those of Edward III, Richard II, Henry IV, and Henry VI—for the source of forty-two lines of his play. But the later and much more concentrated version gives all the necessary information, except for Richard's death (obviously to be found at the end of Richard's reign in the 1587 Holinshed) within thirty-one pages of the reign of Henry VI. It is, then, much more reasonable to suppose that the playwright used the 1587 edition for this scene as for the other parts of the drama. Of course it is possible that he consulted the genealogy under the reign of Edward III; but if so, why not in the identical version of the 1587 edition?

<sup>10</sup> Holinshed (1587), p. 626.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 622, Hall, p. 201.

<sup>12</sup> In an article in RES for July, 1933, Mr. McKerrow has corrected his former statement that the 1587 Holinshed has Thomas for John.

Even the first passage of the genealogy concerning Edward III's sons, if examined closely, will be found to be closer to the extract from the second edition only, than to the earlier version given in both editions. The second edition under the reign of Henry VI has:

Edward the thurd had issue, Edward prince of Wales; William of Hatfield, his second sonne; Lionell the third, duke of Clarence; Iohn of Gant fourth, duke of Lancaster; Edmund of Langleie fift, duke of Yorke; Thomas of Woodstoke sixt, duke of Glocester; and William of Windsor seauenth.<sup>13</sup>

The version of the drama is:

Edward the Third, my lords, had seven sons:
The first, Edward the Black Prince, Prince of Wales;
The second, William of Hatfield; and the third,
Lionel Duke of Clarence; next to whom Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster;
The fifth was Edmund Langley, Duke of York;
The sixth was Thomas of Woodstock, Duke of Gloucester;
William of Windsor was seventh and last.<sup>14</sup>

Both editions of the Holinshed under the reign of Edward III give:

He had issue by his wife, queene Philip 7 sonnes, Edward prince of Wales, William of Hatfield that died yuong, Lionell duke of Clarence, Iohn of Gant duke of Lancaster, Edmund of Langlie earle of Cambridge & after created duke of Yorke, Thomas of Woodstoke erle of Buckingham after made duke of Glocester, and an other William which died likewise yuong<sup>15</sup>

The underlining of identical phraseology shows plainly that the extract from the reign of Henry VI in the second edition is much closer to the drama: to be noticed particularly is the fact that in this passage as in the Folio the sons are numbered and that the seventh son is called "William of Windsor" in both. Moreover, the playwright has done what he later did in Henry V—copied as nearly verbatim as is possible in verse the words of the historical genealogy. The extract from Edward III's reign, however, includes significant words omitted in the drama and changes the description of the seventh son, the only point of greater similarity being in the expression "seven sons" in both versions.

Concerning Richard II, too, the relationship is closer in the second edition than in the version from Edward III's reign. The second edition has:

The said Edward prince of Wales, which died in the life time of his father, had issue Richard, which succeeded Edward the third his grandsire.<sup>16</sup>

Shakespeare's version is:

Edward the Black Prince died before his father
And left behind him Richard, his only son,
Who after Edward the Third's death reign'd as king<sup>17</sup>

Both editions of Holinshed earlier give an account that is not so close: King Edward, after the deceasse of his sonne prince Edward, created the lord Richard, sonne to the said prince, as heire to him, prince of Wales<sup>18</sup>

In these passages the 1587 edition is closer in syntax and in order of words and of thought to the Folio than the third-quoted passage is. In the last extract it is not stated that Richard became king but merely that he was heir-apparent.

Again closer to the 1587 Holinshed is the discussion of York's immediate ancestry. That editions reads:

Lionell the third sonne of Edward the third, duke of Clarence, had issue Philip his daughter and heire, which was coupled in matrimonie unto Edmund Mortimer earle of March, and had issue Roger Mortimer earle of March hir sonne and heire; which Roger had issue of Edmund erle of March, Roger Mortimer, Anne, Elianor.<sup>19</sup>

The dramatic version is almost identical:

The third son, Duke of Clarence, from whose line
I claim the crown, had issue, Philippe, a daughter,
Who married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March;
Edmund had issue, Roger Earl of March;
Roger had issue, Edmund, Anne, and Eleanor.<sup>20</sup>

The extract from Edward III's reign does not parallel the Folio so closely:

Roger lord Mortimer earle of March, sonne and heire of Edmund Mortimer earle of March, and of the ladie Philip eldest daughter and heire unto Lionell duke of Clarence, third sonne to king Edward the third, was established heire apparant to the crowne. . . . This Roger earle of March had issue Edmund, Roger, Anne, Ales, & Eleanor.<sup>21</sup>

It is important that here again the playwright has followed closely the order of the first-quoted passage: (1) Lionel, (2) Philippe and Edmund, (3) Roger, (4) the four children of Roger. The third-quoted extract uses

<sup>17</sup> 2 Henry VI, II, ii, 18-20.

<sup>18</sup> Holinshed (1577), p. 997; (1587), p. 411.

<sup>19</sup> Holinshed (1587), p. 657. The italics are mine.

<sup>20</sup> 2 Henry VI, II, ii, 34-38.

<sup>21</sup> Holinshed (1577), p. 1050; (1587), p. 448. The Alice of this point in the Contention may thus have come as easily from the second as from the first edition of Holinshed. The italics are mine.

the following order: (1) Roger, (2) Philippe and Edmund, (3) Lionel, (4) the five children of Roger.

The last similarity between the dramatic and historical genealogies concerns a repetition of the entire ancestry both by the 1587 Holinshed and by the playwright but not by the earlier versions of the Chronicles. The second edition tells of York's mother and father and then enumerates again the Duke's ancestors, beginning with his parents and ending with Edward III:

And the said Anne coupled in matrimonie to Richard earle of Cambridge, the sonne of Edmund of Langleie, the fift sonne of Edward the third, and had issue Richard Plantagenet, commonlie called duke of York. . . . To the which Richard duke of Yorke, as sonne to Anne daughter to Roger Mortimer earle of March, sonne and heire to the said Lionell, the third sonne of king Edward the third, the right, title, dignitie roiall, and estate of the crownes of the realmes of England and France, and the lordship of Ireland pertaineth and belongeth afore anie issue of the said Iohn of Gant, the fourth sonne of the same king Edward.<sup>22</sup>

The drama has exactly the same repetition in exactly the same order, including even the brief summary at the end:

His eldest sister, Anne,
My mother, being heir unto the crown,
Married Richard Earl of Cambridge, who was son
To Edmund Langley, Edward the Third's fifth son.
By her I claim the kingdom. She was heir
To Roger Earl of March, who was the son
Of Edmund Mortimer, who married Philippe,
Sole daughter unto Lionel Duke of Clarence;
So, if the issue of the elder son
Succeed before the younger, I am king . . .
Henry doth claim the crown from John of Gaunt,
The fourth son; York claims it from the third.
Till Lionel's issue fails, his should not reign.<sup>23</sup>

The earlier version does not have this significant repetition but reads:

Anne the eldest of the daughters was married to Richard earle of Cambridge, sonne unto Edmund of Langlie . . . : the which Richard had issue by the same Anne, a son called Richard, that was after duke of Yorke.<sup>24</sup>

2 Henry VI then, seems to have been based mostly on Hall and the 1587 Holinshed. Of course the larger proportion of the material in this play is from Holinshed where the two editions are identical; but there are six important examples of the use of the second edition alone, while there are none to point to the use of the 1577 Holinshed.

<sup>22</sup> Holinshed (1587), pp. 657 f.

<sup>23</sup> 2 Henry VI, II, ii, 43–56.

<sup>24</sup> Holinshed (1577), p. 1050; (1587), p. 448.

In 3 Henry VI the dramatist's treatment of sources is much the same. Henry's description of the battle at first seems to have a rather definite source in the 1577 Holinshed, but here again Hall may just as well have been used. The drama has:

Now sways it this way, like a mighty sea
Forc'd by the tide to combat with the wind;
Now sways it that way, like the self-same sea
Forc'd to retire by fury of the wind.
Sometime the flood prevails, and then the wind;
Now one the better, then another best.<sup>25</sup>

The 1587 Holinshed states the same fact:

This deadlie conflict continued ten houres in doubtfull state of uictorie, uncerteinlie heauing and setting on both sides.<sup>26</sup>

Hall and the first edition of Holinshed add the important words "the one part some time flowing, and some time ebbing"<sup>27</sup>—an expression which parallels the dramatic figure more closely.

There are also several instances in which we may be fairly sure that the playwright used the second edition of Holinshed. Henry's oath to entail the crown to Richard is reported in the history:

[Henry] is contented, agreed, and consenteth, that he be had, reputed, and taken for king of England and France, with the roiall estate, dignitie, and preheminance belonging thereunto, and lord of Ireland during his naturall life. And for that time, the said duke, without hurt or preiudice of his said right, and title, shall take, worship, and honour him for his souereigne lord.<sup>28</sup>

The diction of the drama is somewhat similar:

I here entail
The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever,
Conditionally, that here thou take an oath
To cease this civil war, and, whilst I live,
To honour me as thy king and sovereign,
And neither by treason nor hostility
To seek to put me down and reign thyself.<sup>29</sup>

In Act III the drama is like the second edition in Henry's defense of his title:

I was anointed king at nine months old;
My father and my grandfather were kings;
And you were sworn true subjects unto me.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>25</sup> 3 Henry VI, II, v, 5-10.

<sup>27</sup> Hall, p. 256; Holinshed (1577), p. 1311.

<sup>29</sup> 3 Henry VI, I, i, 194-200.

<sup>26</sup> Holinshed (1577), p. 1311; (1587), p. 665.

<sup>28</sup> Holinshed (1587), p. 658.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid., III, i, 76-78.

Although both editions of Holinshed record that Henry was proclaimed king at the age of nine months, it is only in the second edition that we find a statement made by Henry shortly before his death:

My father was king of England, quietlie inioieng the crowne all his reigne, and his father my grandsire was also king of England, and I euen a child in my cradell was proclaimed and crowned king without anie interruption . . . ; all the states dooing homage unto me, as to my antecessors <sup>31</sup>

Thus it is apparent that the dramatist, though using Hall again and again, is still using the 1587 Holinshed to the exclusion of the 1577 edition. In 3 Henry VI there are three passages which must have been based on the 1587 Holinshed alone, and none which must have been based on the 1577 Holinshed.

Though both editions of Holinshed are usually parallel and therefore leave only incidentally clues as to which edition was used, we must conclude from the many instances in which Hall and the 1587 Holinshed are unquestionably the source that the dramatist was mainly using these two originals.

LUCILLE KING

The University of Texas

<sup>31</sup> Holinshed (1587), p. 691.

MIDDLETON'S ACQUAINTANCE WITH THE *MERRIE
CONCEITED JESTS OF GEORGE PEELE*

THOMAS MIDDLETON, dramatist (1580–1627),<sup>1</sup> was not by any means the literary discoverer of the rogue's fascination. Even the moral Harman<sup>2</sup> had lost himself, at times, in the romantic appeal of the vagrants he pictured, and Greene, after a perfunctory moral preface to his series of Conny-catching Pamphlets (1591–92), had given himself more and more unreservedly to revealing the adventurous life of rogues.<sup>3</sup>

The following study results from a much longer one<sup>4</sup> undertaken to determine what part of the prolific sixteenth and early seventeenth century literature of roguery Middleton knew and used as source matter. The works investigated included, in the non-dramatic field, social satire, jest-book, translation, "anatomy," rogue pamphlet, ballad, jig, criminal biography, "character," folk-tale; and of these the Merrie Conceited Jests of George Peele reveals itself as one of the most definitely provable sources for certain of Middleton's materials. It permits one to catch the playwright, as he can seldom be caught, following his source closely. Two plays in the Middletonian canon which drew upon the work are A Mad World, My Masters and Your Five Gallants; gaining acceptance as Middleton's, a third drama, The Puritan, has long been known for its close paralleling of sections of the Merrie Conceited Jests.

All three of these plays were entered in the Stationers' Register within two years: The Puritan under the date of "6 Augusti," 1607; Your Five Gallants (as "the fyve Wittie Gallantes") under "22 Marcij," 1608 (i.e., 1607–08); and A Mad World, My Masters under "4 octobris," 1608. All three were published in quarto: The Puritan in 1607, Your Five Gallants without date on its title-page, and A Mad World, My Masters in 1608. No evidence contradicts the natural assumption that Your Five Gallants appeared also in 1607 or 1608. Many facts would point to the composition, likewise, of the three plays within a few months of one another.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For information upon other bearers of the same name, see Mark Eccles, "Middleton's Birth and Education," RES, VII (October, 1931), 431–441.

<sup>2</sup> Thomas Harman, writer of A Caveat or Warening, for Common Cursetors, reprinted by Edward Viles and F. J. Furnivall in The Rogues and Vagabonds of Shakespeare's Youth (New York, 1907), p. 27.

<sup>3</sup> The two writers dealt, however, with almost distinct types. Harman rarely went beyond description of vagrants to be found in the country, Greene rarely discussed figures existent outside of London.

<sup>4</sup> See my Non-Dramatic Sources for the Rogues in Middleton's Plays (December, 1932), typescript in The University of Chicago Libraries.

<sup>5</sup> Compare the opinions hazarded by certain critics on the dates of composition: The

As to the author, the first quarto title-pages of the dramas bear information as follows: "W. S." wrote The Puritan, "T. Middleton," Your Five Gallants; and "T. M.," A Mad World, My Masters. This "T. M." was first identified with Middleton by the old cataloguers, Kirkman and Archer. E. H. C. Oliphant has ably discussed<sup>6</sup> the value of such attributions, looking upon Kirkman's opinion as that which "counts for most," and regarding his decision in this case as "Probably correct."<sup>7</sup>

The "W. S." of The Puritan has, however, led to some conjecture. It appears obvious that the publisher sought to sell this play by implying that Shakespeare wrote it,—a fact which has necessitated its discussion by C. F. Tucker Brooke in The Shakespeare Apocrypha. Bullen was the first to attribute the play to Middleton, and Brooke has advanced his opinion against the theory only because "the second scene of Act I, with its college cant and reminiscence, is the work of an Oxford man,"—a "certainty first pointed out by Dr. Farmer."<sup>8</sup> This fact no longer affords an insuperable difficulty, for Mark Eccles has proved<sup>9</sup> that Middleton was an Oxonian. There remains no other argument in the way of accepting The Puritan as Middleton's. The attribution is one to which E. K. Chambers,<sup>10</sup> W. D. Dunkel,<sup>11</sup> and Eccles conspicuously among modern scholars have given support. The material in this paper tends to support this belief.

The Merrie Conceited Jests of George Peele, whose priority to this drama, as regards printing, has never been established, was published in the same year, 1607. The similarities in incident are as follows: the jests at the expense of the barber are used in III, v (slightly altered) and vi, of the play; the magic trick, in I, iv; the inn trick, in II, ii;<sup>12</sup> "A Jest of George going to Oxford," in I, iv, and IV, ii, with slight changes.<sup>13</sup> The Puritan, 1607? (Bullen), 1606 (Schelling); Your Five Gallants, between 1606 and March 22, 1607-08 (Bullen), 1607 (Chambers), and A Mad World, My Masters, between 1606 and October 12, 1608 (Bullen), 1606 (Schelling), and 1604 < > 1606? (Chambers). The conjectures are voiced by A. H. Bullen in The Works of Thomas Middleton (London, 1885), Introduction; E. K. Chambers in The Elizabethan Stage (Oxford, 1923), III, 438-442, s.v. the plays named, and F. E. Schelling in Elizabethan Drama 1558-1642 (New York, 1908), s.v. the respective dramas.

<sup>6</sup> In "Problems of Authorship in Elizabethan Dramatic Literature," MP, VIII (1910-11), 417

<sup>7</sup> A Mad World, My Masters has long been accepted as a part of the Middletonian canon, no one questioning the assignment.

<sup>8</sup> Op. cit., p. xxxi.

<sup>9</sup> Loc. cit., pp. 437-439.

<sup>10</sup> Op. cit., III, 442.

<sup>11</sup> "The Authorship of The Puritan," PMLA, XLV (September, 1930), 804-808.

<sup>12</sup> Pointed out by F. W. Chandler, The Literature of Roguery (New York, 1907), p. 64, n. 1. To some of these, attention had already been called by W. C. Hazlitt, Shakespeare's Jest-Books (London, 1864), III, notes.

<sup>13</sup> Hazlitt, loc. cit.

jest-book was, like others, largely made up of other jest-books, but differed from most earlier collections of the sort in that the chief figure is not inane or clownish but is the gay conny-catcher, of gentleman class, of keen alertness, and full of appreciation of his own skill in avoiding creditors and gulling victims. The rogues depicted by the play are not merely George Pyeboord, who corresponds to George Peele, but include Peter Skirmish, an old soldier; Captain Idle, a highwayman; and Corporal Oath, a "Vaine-glorious fellow."<sup>14</sup> The Captain acts the Conjurer<sup>15</sup> in the play, never appearing in the rôle of highwayman. Skirmish and Oath are minor figures. George is the brains of the group, the true conny-catcher, making plans, playing jokes—always with an ulterior purpose—and shifting disguises. His escapades form over half of the play: I, ii and iv; II, i, iii, III, iii, iv, v; IV, ii, iii; V, i, iv—eleven out of eighteen scenes. But George Pyeboord is such a tame figure when weighed against the brilliant (by comparison), many-faceted character of the hero of the Merrie Conceited Jests that I cannot believe he could have suggested the "George Peele" of that work. Rather, it seems far more reasonable to suppose that the latter existed before the drama but proved too difficult of imitation in the hands of an inexperienced playwright. For The Puritan is certainly the least expert of the plays attributed to Middleton and suggests that he was yet experimenting in the art of dramatic composition.<sup>16</sup> I believe, then, (1) that the Jests existed prior to the play; (2) for reasons to be set forth hereafter, that the published, rather than the MS. form of the Jests was the source for the author of The Puritan; and (3) that that author was very likely Middleton. Certainly it can be proved that Middleton knew the collection called the Merrie Conceited Jests and that he drew upon it for suggestion in A Mad World, My Masters and closely followed it in parts of Your Five Gallants.

In the collection under discussion occurs a jest where George's four friends pass themselves off as his servants, inventing an intricate scheme to steal various objects and escape—a plan very similar to, though by no means identical with, the schemes of Folliwit and his companions, Lieutenant Mawworm and Ancient Hoboy, in A Mad World, My Masters.

<sup>14</sup> The opening stage directions to I, iii.

<sup>15</sup> He here appears in place of George, who, in the source, acts the magician. See Number XI, "A Jest of George Riding to Oxford."

<sup>16</sup> In view of the facts that this work and The Family of Love both satirize Puritans (one can detect many of the ideas behind the satire of The Family of Love in embryo, as it were, in The Puritan), that both bear the date of 1607 (the latter in SR, "12 Octobris"), and that the latter's prologue says "opinion hath not blaz'd" the author's "fame," one is led to speculate upon the possibility that The Puritan just antedates The Family of Love, and was printed as by "W. S." because the real author was still, as he tells us, a nonentity.

The jest<sup>17</sup> follows:

[So that the four friends] should seeme as servants to George Peele and the better to colour it [it was decided] they should goe change their cloakes, the one like the other, so neere as they could possible. the which, at Beelzebub's brother, the Broker's, they might quickly doe: This was soone accomplished.<sup>18</sup>

They repaired to the Three Pigeons inn at Brentford, where they spent all the friends had between them—£5. George then sent a man for an additional piece of baggage, for "I intend not to goe home this two dayes." The man borrowed a horse on which to go, never intending to return. Then George said he expected friends from London and hence wished a good supper prepared.

Now you [the reader] must imagine there was not a peny owing in the house, for he had paid as liberall as Caesar, as far as Caesar's wealth went. For indeed most of the money was one Caesar's an honest man yet living in London.<sup>19</sup>

Meanwhile, one of the servants besought the hostess to beg his master for permission to go to see a sweetheart of his in Kingstone. She did and provided him with a horse for the trip. He escaped. George was now "accompanied with none but one Anthony Nit, a Barber, who Din'd and Sup't with him continually, of whom he had borrowed a Lute to passe away the melancholy afternoone." George asked the man to supper, the barber departing till then. Peele next complained how raw and cold it was and borrowed a cloak of the Hostess—"her Husbands holiday Gowne"; with it on, he walked "into the Meddowes" to "practise upon his Lute," never returning, of course. The other two servants escaped while Host and Hostess were busy. In London, "they all met, and sold the Horse and the Mare, the Gowne and the Lute."<sup>20</sup>

For a similar tale, consider the play. Its hero, Folliwit, stands midway between the rogue who yields to occasion and the professional, able to make the most of the passing moment, skilled as if by constant practice, employing disguise in a professional manner—like "George Peele." Folliwit lives in a perfect whirl of rascality. He is seeking to secure for present use some of the money he knows his grandfather has willed to him. Hence he disguises himself and his companions, himself as Lord

<sup>17</sup> Number 1 in the collection. Its title reads: "The Jest of George Peele with Four of His Companions at Brainford" <sup>18</sup> Cf. A Mad World, My Masters, I, i, 79–80 and II, i.

<sup>19</sup> Could this be a reference to Robert Keysar or Caesar, goldsmith and manager of the Children of the Revels, who, in Trinity Term 1609, brought suit against Thomas Middleton for a debt? See H. N. Hillebrand, "Thomas Middleton's 'The Viper's Brood,'" MLN (January, 1927), pp. 36 ff.

<sup>20</sup> The thieving of the play is accomplished by an entirely different method (see II, iv and v; III, iii; and so on) but the tone is identical—one of impudent rascality.

Owemuch and his fellows as servants. They do not relish this makeup, but, for the sake of the spoils, give in. He is welcomed by Sir Bounteous Progress, his grandfather, who has heard a great deal of Lord Owemuch and who is so fearful of being thought stingy that he heaps courtesies upon them. After everyone has retired for the night, they disguise themselves as robbers, bind all the servants and then Sir Bounteous. They force him to give them all the contents of his cabinets. He begs that they shall not touch Lord Owemuch, but is informed that the lord has already been bound and rifled. He is horrified that a guest should receive such treatment in his house. The robbers, having bound him, resume their first disguise. One, as the footman, can bind all the others and himself remain unbound since

The footman, of all other, will be supposed to 'scape, for he comes to no bed all night, but lies in's clothes, to be first ready i' the morning; the horse and he lies in litter together, that's the right fashion of your bonny footman: and his freedom will make the better for our purpose, for we must have one i' the morning to unbind the knight, that we may have our sport within ourselves.<sup>21</sup>

In the morning Sir Bounteous pays the servant of Lord Owemuch for what has been supposedly stolen from the guest.

In a later part of the play, Folliwit disguises as Frank Gullman, the lady-love of Sir Bounteous, and, while waiting in a room of the knight's house, steals jewels and escapes. His last escapade is to appear at the house of Sir Bounteous, this time disguised as one of the strolling players belonging to Lord Owemuch's company. Lieutenant Mawworm and Ancient Hoboy, his accomplices throughout, are likewise his assistants here. They ask to present The Slip, a play, before Sir Bounteous and his guests, and borrow for use as properties "a chain for a justice's hat," a jewel, and Sir Bounteous's watch. While Folliwit speaks the prologue, the rest of his fellows flee with the loot. They are arrested and brought back by the constable, but Folliwit so plays his part that the onlookers think the whole thing part of the play. Folliwit can truly be called a "cheerful knave."

The likenesses between the play and the Jests are: (1) the similarity between the heroes' characters is great; (2) the hero's assistants put on the disguise of servants;<sup>22</sup> and (3) a play is presented only to permit thieveries. The last incident occurs in "The Jest of George Peele at Bristow," Number 6 of the collection, which tells of George's arranging for a play, collecting an audience, taking the gate receipts and then, in a borrowed silk robe, giving a prologue which, at his exit (and escape), keeps the audience until he has at least got some distance away. He and Folliwit resemble one another in their hearty enjoyment of the gulling they do. Neither fails to profit by his mischief, yet each proceeds on the slimmest margin in accomplishing his frauds. Brazenness carries them to success.

<sup>21</sup> II, v, 76-83.

<sup>22</sup> Dekker's Lanthorne and Candlelight, Chap. VII, "Rank Riders," has a somewhat similar "blue coats" incident, but the work appears to have been written after The Belman's success in 1608; that necessarily was after March 14, 1608 (when The Belman was entered in the SR), rather late for Middleton unless A Mad World, My Masters was written after a reading of the MS. of Lanthorne and Candlelight. The SR entry of the play was on October 4, 1608, that of Lanthorne and Candlelight not until October 25, 1608. The postulation of relationship is hardly worth while.

The Merrie Conceited Jests is the only work of the sixteenth or seventeenth century among all those which I have investigated which affords resemblance sufficient to suggest it as a source for Middleton in A Mad World, My Masters. The similarities are, however, more general than particular, so that conclusive proof is yet to seek that Middleton knew the jests of this collection. For such proof, one may turn to Your Five Gallants.

Almost none but rascals form the dramatis personae of this drama, yet Goldstone and Pursenet are by far the most adept of the company. Their dexterity is so great as to justify one in calling it finesse, especially in Goldstone. Both are assisted by "light-fingered" servants. Fulk acts as serving-man to Goldstone and, conniving with his master, manages to game with his betters-in-rank,<sup>23</sup> leaving them penniless by the end of the evening, for he has used false dice. His gain is about eighty angels, to be shared with his master. Goldstone by now is so triumphant that he says to Fulk, "We'll join powers anon, and see how strong we are in the whole number [of coins]. Mass, yon gilt goblet stands so full in mine eye . . . it comes like cheese after a great feast."<sup>24</sup> His inventive powers are instantly set in motion and he wards against the Vintner's presence by sending him for soft wax. Then he hides the goblet, while Fulk screens him a little. Next he proposes that the company disperse. But two Drawers with the Vintner discover that the goblet is gone. The tavern-keeper, tactful as he knows how to be, says:

All's paid, and your worships are welcome, only there's a goblet missing, gentlemen, and cannot be found about house.

Gol. How, a goblet? . . . Came there no stranger here?

Vin. No, sir.

Gol. 'Tis a marvellous matter, that a goblet should be gone, and none but we in the room; the loss is near all, here as we are; keep the door, vintner.<sup>25</sup>

Pursenet meanwhile becomes intensely concerned; aside to the Boy, he says:

<sup>23</sup> The scene occurs in II, iii.

<sup>24</sup> II, iii, 320-323.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., II, 349-352, 357, 359-361.

'Slife, you have not stole the goblet, boy, have you?

Boy. Not I, sir.

Pur. I was afraid.—[Then aloud, boldly] . . . let each man search his fellow. . . .

Gol. Seek about floor.—What was the goblet worth, vintner?<sup>26</sup>

Goldstone proposes that each person present contribute an angel, else "it may grow to a gangrene in our credits, and be incurable." They agree gladly, whereupon he attempts to mollify the Vintner with assurances that the event "has dismayed the gentlemen much" and "not three times thrice the worth of the goblet shall hang between them and thee, both in their continual custom and all their acquaintances'.<sup>27</sup> The money is paid: all go out—Goldstone and Fulk last, snatching the goblet from its hiding-place.

Compare "How George Peele Served Half a Score Citizens," the tenth of the Merrie Conceited Jestes. It has a situation in which a group of men at a tavern (?) are forced to share payment for a supper to which George had invited them. George had had a good meal at their expense and had escaped. The situation is not identical with Middleton's but is based upon the scheme of having a company pay for the trickery of one who alone profits, as Goldstone did when he stole the gilt goblet. There is, however, a yet more striking parallel between Middleton and the Jestes in connection with this same incident. One seldom has the good fortune to catch Middleton so perfectly as here. In the "Jest of George Riding to Oxford," Number 11, a tale prominent in The Puritan also, one finds the hero seeking diligently for a rapier he had hidden from its owner.

"This is strange," quoth George, "it should be gone in this fashion, none being here but ourselves, and the fellows of the house"; who were examined, but no rapier could be heard of: all the company much grieved; but George, in a pitiful chafe, swore it should cost him forty shillings but he would know what was become of it, if art could do it.

The close likeness of this passage to Middleton's wording, quoted earlier, is too striking to be accidental. Compare the following details from the play: (1) Goldstone's "Came there no stranger here? . . . 'Tis a marvelous matter, that a goblet should be gone and none but we in the room"; (2) the gallants search one another in vain; (3) the event "has dismayed the gentlemen much," Goldstone assures the Vintner; (4) it is Goldstone, the thief, who is the most persistent in search for the lost article. Since Middleton undoubtedly used the Jestes as source in this case, and since the eleventh jest was laid under particular contribution in this and The Puritan, there is, it may be noted in passing, still less reason to deny his authorship of the latter drama.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid., II. 369-373, 378-379.

<sup>27</sup> II, iii, 385-386, 391, 395-398.

In III, v of Your Five Gallants, Bungler catches the Boy trying to pick his pocket. Pursenet is horrified: "Where learnt you that manners? what company have you kept a' late, that you are so transformed into a rogue?"<sup>28</sup> He represents the boy as a degenerate in a noble family. Yet he threatens Bridewell and elaborates on its horrors until Bungler, feeling a mere boy does not deserve such severity, becomes pleader in his behalf: "Come, I'll be his surety for onco."<sup>29</sup> Pursenet appears unwilling, but is persuaded at last; then in an aside to the boy, he says: "You put me to my set speech once a quarter."<sup>30</sup>

The stratagem of getting injured persons to plead for one who has victimized them appears in the Merrie Conceited Jests as Number 4, "How George Helped His Friend to a Supper." George there belabored his friend with ill words as Goldstone sometimes did Fulk,<sup>31</sup> and Pursenet, the Boy. George threw food from the table, at the friend, and at length threatened to send his dagger after it. But "the gentlemen stayed him," and George, "after a little fretting," sat quietly, unsuspected by those around him. Goldstone and Pursenet likewise offered to prove dangerous in their feigned anger. Both provoked pity in those who were the real sufferers from cheats, and both managed to appear sincere.

Inasmuch as three plays thus far have been shown to be indebted to the Jests, shall one believe all three were written in 1607 after the publication of the collection? The conclusive evidence seems to be the fact that the Jests were licensed December 14, 1605, yet none of the plays by Middleton drawing upon the work were licensed before 1607; all three of those which do show its influence were entered within a few months of each other, as has been shown above,<sup>32</sup> in 1607 and 1608. The published form of the Jests appeared in 1607. Though date of entry does not prove date of composition, neither does it disprove it, and I believe Middleton composed the three plays under discussion near together, while his source was yet fresh in his mind, and that the source, as regards the Jests, was the published form of that work.<sup>33</sup>

MILDRED GAYLER CHRISTIAN

H. Sophie Newcomb Memorial College

<sup>28</sup> III, v, 97-100.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid., l. 131.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid., l. 151.

<sup>31</sup> Especially in II, iii, where Fulk attempted to join the game from which he eventually emerged with so much gain (see p. 759 above).

<sup>32</sup> See p. 753 above

<sup>33</sup> The argument here tends to strengthen that advanced previously (p. 755) on a different basis.

THE CONTEMPORARY SIGNIFICANCE OF MIDDLETON'S GAME AT CHESSE

THOMAS MIDDLETON'S Game at Chesse (1624), expressing the national hatred of Spaniard and Jesuit alike, was played nine days straight before houses packed to suffocation for the first consecutive long run in English theatrical history.<sup>1</sup> With England aroused over the religious wars of the Continent and the return of Prince Charles from his unsuccessful visit to Madrid in quest of the Spanish Princess, the play appeared as a satirical allegory in the form of a game of chess, in which the English have the White and the Spaniards and Jesuits the Black men. Black secures the treacherous Fat Bishop and the White King's Pawn. Overthrow of the English Church and State seems imminent. The White Knight and the White Duke visit the Black House (Madrid), where their capture is attempted; but they checkmate the Black King and overthrow the Black forces. Its most recent editor has said that "more is known about A Game at Chesse than about any other pre-Restoration play."<sup>2</sup> Even so, some promising approaches to a fuller understanding have been overlooked.

The title-page of the first two quartos contains a double picture<sup>3</sup> divided by a line, above which eight figures are seated about a chess-table and below which stand three larger figures. As one of the eleven is duplicated, there are ten different personages, each labelled according to his part in the game. Two of the larger figures, the Fat Bishop and the Black Knight, are so clearly distinguished that writers have identified them as the Bishop of Spalato and the former Spanish ambassador, Gondomar, and have observed that the Black Knight is drawn from a particular engraving of Gondomar by Velasquez. Such minute realism is to be expected from everything we know of the play. As a professional writer of City pageants, Middleton was expert in the use of allegorical designs which the popular mind would grasp.<sup>4</sup> The assigned reason for suppressing the play was that it had brought modern Christian kings upon the stage: not an offense against the abstract idea of kingship, but actual impersonation. An official document states that the play represented the King of England, the King of Spain, the Count Gondomar, the Bishop of Spalato, and others.<sup>5</sup> The actor who played the Black

<sup>1</sup> A Game at Chesse, edited by R. C. Bald (Cambridge, 1929), p. 19.      <sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. ix.

<sup>3</sup> See reproductions in editions of Dyce and Bald. That in Bullen's edition is less distinct.

<sup>4</sup> R. C. Bald, "Middleton's Civic Employments," MP, xxxi, No. 1, 65-78.

<sup>5</sup> Conway's letter to the Privy Council, Aug. 12, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 39).

Knight made up perfectly, wore a cast suit of Gondomar's, and rode in the litter<sup>6</sup> which Gondomar used because of his fistula. Descriptive lines throughout the play indicate attention to the personal appearance of the other characters.

And yet, in the attempts to identify the personages of the allegory, no one has observed that the eight other figures are likewise differentiated, as if to represent individuals. The two Kings are conspicuously contrasted: the White King as a rather elderly man bearded like the royal head on the gold sovereigns called "jacobuses,"<sup>7</sup> and the Black King as a boyish fellow—the only beardless man in the group—with the heavy jaw of the Habsburgs and the long shock of wavy hair behind his ear which appears in all portraits of Philip IV.<sup>8</sup> The two Queens are equally unlike. The middle-aged White Queen, with the high forehead and prominently beaked nose of Anne,<sup>9</sup> wearing the pleated ruff and high-cut bodice of an earlier style of dress,<sup>10</sup> is sharply contrasted with the young Black Queen, with her more delicate features, wearing the fan-shaped ruff and the low square-cut bodice of the new style which had spread from France,<sup>11</sup> the native home of Isabella of Bourbon.<sup>12</sup> These four figures, despite their minute size, afford unmistakable suggestions of the sovereigns of England and Spain. The four other figures do not offer like contrasts, but they seem to me to be recognizable if examined carefully. The White Bishop is distinctly like Abbot, the Archbishop of Canterbury.<sup>13</sup> The Black Duke resembles Olivares<sup>14</sup> in the cut of his beard and the heavy outlines of his body. The White Duke has the

<sup>6</sup> Chamberlain's letter to Carleton, Aug. 21, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 66).

<sup>7</sup> Cf. the pictures of jacobuses in Shakespeare's England (Oxford, 1916), I, 340.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. pictures of Philip IV in Enciclopedia Universal Ilustrada, LXVII, 626, 634; XXIII, 602.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. the picture of Anne in Sir John Skelton, Charles I (London, 1898), p. 26.

<sup>10</sup> J. R. Planché, British Costumes (London, 1849), p. 280: "The portrait of Anne of Denmark, queen of James I, exactly resembles, in the general character of the dress, that of Queen Elizabeth, painted by Holbein." Cf. also Mary Evans, Costume throughout the Ages (Philadelphia, 1930), p. 148.

<sup>11</sup> Between 1610 and 1630 there was a development from the pleated ruff to the fan-shaped ruff, the latter soon giving way to the falling collar. Cf. Rubens' portraits of his wives, Isabella Brant (1610) and Helene Fourment (1630), in Die Mode, by Max von Boehm (Munich, 1913), pp. 5, 50. Cf. also Carl Köhler and Emma Von Sichart, A History of Costume, trans. by A. K. Dallas (New York, 1928), pp. 286, 287, 317; H. Knackfuss, Van Dyke, trans. by Campbell Dodgson (Leipzig, 1899), p. 52; Evans, op. cit., Fig. 44.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. the picture of Isabella in Enciclopedia Universal Ilustrada, LXVII, 652, and the portrait attributed to Velasquez in the Chicago Art Institute (on loan from Mr. Max Epstein).

<sup>13</sup> Cf. the picture of Abbot in Edmund Lodge, Portraits of Illustrious Personages of Great Britain (London, 1850), III, 285.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. the picture of Olivares in Enciclopedia Universal Ilustrada, LXVII, 640.

strikingly triangular beard of Buckingham.<sup>15</sup> The White Knight has the same face, with the delicate profile and the large mournful eyes, which Van Dyke immortalized in portraits of Charles.

It has been conjectured that the quartos were surreptitiously printed;<sup>16</sup> difficulties may have attended the publication as well as the acting of the play. Rather curiously, the title-page of the third quarto (an awkward adaptation which was engraved in Holland, printed separately, and attached to a butt left for the purpose)<sup>17</sup> enlarges the figures of Gondomar and the Bishop of Spalato—which would have given no offense to the authorities—but omits all other likenesses. Whether or not Middleton had any direct concern with the quartos, the figures of the earlier title-pages resembled ten individuals, four of whom were explicitly named in a contemporary account of the dramatic performance.<sup>18</sup> If, as seems probable, the original title-page was engraved in England by a man who was acquainted with the popular interpretation of the play, it affords contemporary evidence for the identification of characters.

For the second approach, let us consider the introductory poem, "The Picture Plainly Explained." Bald points out that it is found in Quartos I and II, and adds, "Whether or not Middleton was the author it is impossible to say."<sup>19</sup> Whoever wrote the poem knew nothing of chess; he made three unpardonable blunders, twice saying that a Knight checks another Knight, and once saying that the White Knight checkmates the Black Knight by "discovery." Then as now, no Knight could be checked or checkmated, and of the attacking forces the Knight was the only piece which could not give check by discovery. It is incredible that the author of this poem knew the rudiments of chess. He was equally ignorant of the crisis of the play. From the simplified scene and the abbreviated speech, "Check by discovery," on the title-page (not in themselves wrong, although likely to be misleading), he assumed that the White Knight checkmates the Black Knight. In the play nothing of the sort happens. When the Black Knight exposes his own treachery, the White Knight gives him the lie; then, turning to the Black King and speaking for the White Duke and himself, he announces that

. . . wee giue thee Checkmate by Discouerye, King, the Noblest Mate of all.<sup>20</sup>

This is perfectly sound chess; a Rook [Duke] and a Knight together can checkmate a King by discovery. The author of this passage would not <sup>15</sup> Cf. the picture of Buckingham in Lodge, op. cit., III, 223, and the group of Buckingham and his family in the National Portrait Gallery.

<sup>16</sup> Bald, A Game at Chesse, p. 32.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid., 30, 31.

<sup>18</sup> Supra, Note 5.

<sup>19</sup> Bald, A Game at Chesse, p. 121.

<sup>20</sup> v, iii, 177-178 (ed. Bald).

have contradicted himself and the rules of chess by the absurd statement that one Knight checkmates another. The introductory poem may have been by any bookseller's hack; not by Thomas Middleton.

For our third approach, let us consider why a game of chess was chosen for the allegory. Ward remarks that the allegory "follows a line of fancy not wholly unknown to the Elizabethan drama," but he cites no parallel except the remote one of A Game of the Cards forty-three years before.<sup>21</sup> If Middleton desired an allegorical game, why not cards, as in the realistic scene of English life in A Woman Killed with Kindness?<sup>22</sup> That scene derived its peculiar force from the homely familiarity of the sight of an English family engaged at cards, as well as from the fact that the audience as a whole must have understood the detailed allusions which were introduced. Why did Middleton attack the Spaniards and Jesuits by the symbolism of anything so unfamiliar to the average Englishman in 1624 as the Royal Game?

The clue to this is the Londoners' idea of chess. As late as 1732, in a play by Fielding, we find Lady Charlotte Gaywit exclaiming, "I wish my whole life was one party at Quadrille." Captain Bellamant replies, "As a Spaniard's is a game at Chess, egad."<sup>23</sup> The King's Men, who acted A Game at Chesse, had staged three other plays which represented Italians or Spaniards engaged in chess games: The Tempest<sup>24</sup> (c. 1611); The Spanish Curate<sup>25</sup> (1622); and Middleton's Women Beware Women<sup>26</sup> (1622). For a century before Middleton's time and a century afterwards, the best chess-players were Spaniards or Italian subjects of the Spanish King. Still further, chess was the game of the Roman Catholic clergy; many of them were eminent players, and the best players in the world were under their patronage. Many chess experts, such as Ruy Lopez, were rewarded with benefices in the Church.<sup>27</sup>

The greatest chess-player of the seventeenth century<sup>28</sup> resided in England from 1622 to 1624.<sup>29</sup> An Italian subject of the Spanish King,<sup>30</sup> and a Jesuit<sup>31</sup> who had grown up under the intimate patronage of a cardinal and other prelates,<sup>32</sup> Greco left England, never to return, in the year of

<sup>21</sup> A. W. Ward, A History of English Dramatic Literature (London, 1899), II, 530.

<sup>22</sup> III, II.

<sup>23</sup> The Modern Husband (ed. Leslie Stephen), III, VI.

<sup>24</sup> V, I.

<sup>25</sup> III, IV.

<sup>26</sup> II, II. As in A Game at Chesse, the older name Duke is substituted for Rook to emphasize the personal allusion.

<sup>27</sup> H. J. R. Murray, A History of Chess (Oxford, 1913), pp. 817-820.

<sup>28</sup> Louis Hoffman, The Games of Greco (London, 1900), Preface: "Greco was the Morphy of the seventeenth century, and it may safely be said that in brilliancy and fertility of invention he has never been surpassed."

<sup>29</sup> Murray, op. cit., p. 828.

<sup>30</sup> He was born in Calabria, and was commonly called "the Calabrese."

<sup>31</sup> He left his fortune to the Jesuits (Murray, op. cit., p. 828).

<sup>32</sup> Loc. cit.

Middleton's play. At least six copies of Greco's manuscript book of games were left in the hands of courtiers.<sup>33</sup> One copy is known to have been a favorite possession of Charles I.<sup>34</sup> As late as 1656 a chess-book<sup>35</sup> flaunted on its title-page a picture of Charles, claiming that chess was "The recreation of the late King, with many of the Nobility," and announcing that its text was "The study of Biochimo [i.e., Greco] the famous Italian."<sup>36</sup> The English courtiers were enthusiastic about chess, but they were miserable players. In their popular manual, Saul's Famous Game of Chesse-Play (1614), the only opening discussed at length is a childish one involving the attempted capture of the Queen in six moves, which Saul says "one author affirmeth that no man possibly can prevent."<sup>37</sup> It is unlikely that Greco ever lost a game in England. As chess was played for stakes,<sup>38</sup> it would be very easy for the courtiers to remember him when they saw an allegorical game in which Jesuits and Spaniards set out to overthrow the English.

The main features of the game are perfectly intelligible. The opening is the Queen's Gambit Declined, Black having first move as so often in seventeenth-century chess.<sup>39</sup> Thereafter all development takes place on the Queen's side. The ending is a double checkmate given jointly by the Knight and Rook (Duke). The Knight, in moving to one side to deliver his own check, "discovers" the check by the Rook, and leaves the Black King trapped. The opening is one of Greco's games,<sup>40</sup> and the ending is peculiarly characteristic of his brilliant style of play. A double check by the Knight and another piece, with both pieces liable to capture and yet invulnerable in their joint attack, is one of his favorite ways of concluding a victory.<sup>41</sup> As this is exactly the situation when the White Knight and the White Duke (Rook) give checkmate, at the very instant they are threatened with capture, it is tempting to suppose that Middleton

<sup>33</sup> Ibid., p. 829.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid., p. 830.

<sup>35</sup> The Royall Game of Chesse-Play, edited by Francis Beale.

<sup>36</sup> Hoffman, op. cit., p. 234.

<sup>37</sup> Saul, op. cit., Chap. xviii.

<sup>38</sup> Saul speaks particularly of the stakes. Hoffman, op. cit., p. x, says that Greco left Paris richer by 5000 crowns.

<sup>39</sup> The players chose their colors. Black received first move if he touched the hand in which his opponent held the Black King's Pawn. (Cf. the title-page of Saul, op. cit.)—I am indebted to Dr. Percy W. Long for an exceedingly interesting suggestion: "Note that this opening Queen's Gambit Declined is allegorical of the Spanish marriage." Such an allusion would be too subtle for the average spectator, but it would be all the more amusing to the few who perceived it and to such a lover of chess as Middleton seems to have been.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. Hoffman, op. cit., p. 204.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid., p. 55: "A brilliant example of Greco's combinations, and his expert adaptation of means to end. At move 10 White's Q and Kt are both en prise, but the double check preserves them from all danger, and the next move gives the coup de grâce." For somewhat similar double checks leading to mates, cf. pp. 34, 60, 66, 68, 89, 112, 161.

had seen Greco playing in the ordinaries about London, and that he retorted upon the Jesuits the master trick of their own champion. The White Knight was quoting from Saul's handbook,<sup>42</sup> but he was playing a strategy far beyond Saul's power, when he announced checkmate "by discovery, the noblest mate of all."

Several details of the allegory are worthy of note: (1) Black is assigned to the Jesuit faction, probably because of the dress of the clergy and the popular symbolism of white and black for good and evil. The scene in which the traitors are found to be Black underneath must have been theatrically effective. (2) It is not uncommon for chessmen to resemble sovereigns of the period. White Queens of nineteenth-century sets sometimes have the face of Victoria. When Middleton represented James as the White King he was perhaps showing on the stage what he had seen on the chess-board. (3) Metaphors from chess were often used in the language of the Court. Bacon would almost seem to describe the treachery of the White King's Pawn when he wrote, "I know at Chesse a Pawn before the King is ever much plaid upon."<sup>43</sup> (4) The White King's Pawn, Middlesex,<sup>44</sup> is probably referred to in the symbolism of the chess-board. A checkered board, or counter, the common means of reckoning until the end of the sixteenth century or later,<sup>45</sup> was not only the best-known fixture of a merchant's establishment; it was the recognized symbol of the Exchequer,<sup>46</sup> from the checkered cloth which was always laid on the table of the Court of the Exchequer,<sup>47</sup> and from the ancient system of Exchequer reckoning on the checkered cloth by what was called "The Game of Chess."<sup>48</sup> Middlesex, as head of the Exchequer and as a former London apprentice whose success in business had advanced him to the nobility,<sup>49</sup> was peculiarly open to the familiar symbolism of the counting-board. When his treachery as White King's Pawn is announced, the King reminds him of his mercantile origin,<sup>50</sup> echoing a speech before Parliament in which James had boasted of the royal pre-

<sup>42</sup> Cf. Saul's classification of the mates: "A Mate by discouery, the worthiest of all."

<sup>43</sup> Quoted by Murray, op. cit., p. 839, from the Apologie.

<sup>44</sup> Bald, A Game at Chesse, pp. 11-12, establishes this identification.

<sup>45</sup> Hubert, Hall, The Antiquities and Curiosities of the Exchequer (New York and London, 1891), p. 131, cites one example dating as late as 1676. Frequent references to counter-casting occur in 17th-century drama; e.g., Othello, I, i, 31; The Winter's Tale, IV, iii, 38.

<sup>46</sup> Hall, op. cit., p. 132. The checkered board must have been a familiar symbol, used for such things as tavern signs, e.g., Pepys refers repeatedly to the "Exchequer" or "Chequers" at Charing Cross.

<sup>47</sup> Thomas Madox, The History and Antiquities of the Exchequer of the Kings of England, (second edition, London, 1769), I, 160.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid., I, 160, Note 1; Hall, op. cit., 114-134.

<sup>49</sup> Lodge, op. cit., IV, 170-173. Cf. p. 170: "a merchant he remained until he had nearly reached the fortieth year of his age."

<sup>50</sup> III, i, 301-305 (ed. Bald).

rogative to raise a Pawn to high position and to degrade whom he chose.<sup>51</sup> Middlesex had been convicted of corruption in May;<sup>52</sup> his disgrace was the most immediately contemporary event alluded to. If the stage was set as a chess-board,<sup>53</sup> the fallen Treasurer might have been associated with the symbol of his lowly beginnings and of his later high office.

For our last approach, let us consider why the production of the play was ever allowed. There was nothing irregular about the licensing; Herbert must have known that this was perilous stuff, and he would hardly have passed it without the approval of some of his superiors. Until recent years no one has remarked on the fact that the play was licensed in June but not shown until the Court was away from Westminster on a Progress. According to contemporary observers, the actors knew the play would not be allowed to run long.<sup>54</sup> The absence of the Court and the date of performance may have been synchronized by intention; after Herbert had licensed the play, there was no one at hand to stop it.

The immediate protest came from Colonna, the Spanish ambassador, but the playwright had overshot his mark by bringing James on the stage.<sup>55</sup> Although the White King has a few big speeches and is addressed in the same strain of adulation to which the English Solomon was accustomed,<sup>56</sup> he appears as an easy dupe. The Venetian ambassador wrote to the Doge and Senate that "The Spaniards are touched from their tricks being discovered, but the king's reputation is much more deeply affected by representing the case with which he was deceived."<sup>57</sup> The State Papers indicate that James was irritated because he was presented on the stage and because his own ministers were in a conspiracy of silence, so that he heard of the play first through the Spanish ambassador;<sup>58</sup> that he was humored into receiving the play as an attack on the Spanish and not on himself;<sup>59</sup> and that he was influenced to leave the final decision to the Council, who let the actors off easily.<sup>60</sup>

<sup>51</sup> Quoted by Murray, op. cit., p. 839.

<sup>52</sup> Bald, A Game at Chess, p. 19.

<sup>53</sup> A chess-board figures prominently on the title-page of Quarto III as well as on that of Quartos I and II.

<sup>54</sup> Lowe's letter to Ingram, Aug. 7, 1624 (Historical MSS Commission, Report on MSS. in Various Collections, VII, 27); Nethersole's letter to Carleton, Aug. 14, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 49).

<sup>55</sup> Chamberlain's letter to Carleton, Aug. 21, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 66).

<sup>56</sup> "Spoke like heuens Substitute" (III, i, 315, ed. Bald).

<sup>57</sup> Valaresso's letter to the Doge and Senate, Aug. 20/30, 1624 (Cal. of S. P. [Ven.], 1623-25, No. 577).

<sup>58</sup> Conway's letter to the Privy Council, Aug. 12, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 39).

<sup>59</sup> Conway's letter to the Privy Council, Aug. 27, 1624 (State Papers [Dom.], James I, Vol. 171, No. 75).

<sup>60</sup> Pembroke's letter to the President of the Council, Aug. 27, 1624 (B. M. Egerton MS. 2623 f. 28).

Who in high authority would have countenanced such a play in August, 1624? Buckingham, advocating war with Spain, had been resisted in the Council by Middlesex alone,<sup>61</sup> and had secured his impeachment over the King's protest.<sup>62</sup> As the play hints broadly, Middlesex had previously married Buckingham's cousin and had received royal favor through the Duke's influence.<sup>63</sup> There was a persistent rumor that Gondomar, who had coaxed Charles and Buckingham to Madrid, was to return as Spanish ambassador.<sup>64</sup> At the moment there were probably no men in the world whom Buckingham hated more than he did Middlesex and Gondomar. Wright<sup>65</sup> and Wilson<sup>66</sup> hold that the play was propaganda for Buckingham. Bald contends that two speeches present the Duke satirically, and that a contemporary allusion shows that he was offended by the play.<sup>67</sup> This allusion refers to James,<sup>68</sup> not to Buckingham; and the lines in which the White Duke and the White Knight confess their vices<sup>69</sup> are meant only to mislead the Black forces. The clue to this is the White Knight's preliminary remark,

What a payne it is
For Truth to fayne a litle.<sup>70</sup>

The White Duke, extravagantly praised by the White King and the White Knight,<sup>71</sup> is associated with the White Knight as joint-hero of the play. If Buckingham was offended, it is hard to imagine whom the play could have pleased. Nor is Wright convincing in his argument that "the Spanish marriage was now practically a closed affair."<sup>72</sup> No doubt the Palatinate was in the public mind at the time, but in the play allusions to it are obscure. Contemporary letters<sup>73</sup> show that popular interest lay in Gondomar and the fiasco of the Spanish marriage. Whoever furthered the production of the play, whether Buckingham or another, was willing to raise the wind among the Londoners to injure Middlesex, to prevent Gondomar's return to England, and to kindle national animosity against the Spanish nation. It is not too much to claim for the play that its success confirmed the judgment of its political sponsor.

JOHN ROBERT MOORE

Indiana University

<sup>61</sup> Bald, A Game at Chesse, p. 12.

<sup>62</sup> Lodge, op. cit., iv, 176.

<sup>63</sup> Ibid., iv, 171; A Game at Chesse, iii, i, 301-306.

<sup>64</sup> F. H. Lyon, Diego de Sarmiento de Acuña, Conde de Gondomar (Oxford, 1910), p. 112.

<sup>65</sup> Times Lit. Supplement, Feb. 16, 1928, p. 112.

<sup>66</sup> The Library, Fourth Series, xi, 110-111.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid., xii, 247-248.

<sup>68</sup> Supra, Note 55.

<sup>69</sup> v, iii, 63-64, 84-85, 116, 130-136.

<sup>70</sup> iv, ii, 17-18.

<sup>71</sup> ii, 265; iii, i, 178-180, 187-190; iv, ii, 1; iv, ii, 103-104; iv, iii, 186-187.

<sup>72</sup> Supra, Note 65.

<sup>73</sup> Supra, Notes 6, 54, 57, 59.

BISHOP PERCY, THOMAS WARTON, AND CHATTERTON'S
ROWLEY POEMS (1773-1790)

(Unpublished Letters)<sup>1</sup>

IN 1768 the first batch of certain supposed transcripts from ancient original manuscripts was shown to Messrs. Catcott and Barrett of Bristol and offered for publication by Thomas Chatterton, who alleged that he had copied them from original documents in the muniment room of the Church of St. Mary Redcliffe. He declared them to be mostly the compositions of one Thomas Rowley, a secular priest of the fifteenth century. Towards the end of 1768 Chatterton communicated with James Dodsley, the famous London bookseller, in the hope of publishing his manuscripts, but Dodsley, after a little hesitation, refused to take up the matter. Then Chatterton attempted to secure Horace Walpole's patronage, (March 1769), and for a moment succeeded; but Walpole, after a little further reflection realized the imposture. In 1770 after some fruitless correspondence with Walpole, Chatterton set out for London in person, to try his fortune; the end came very soon, August 24.

After his death the Bristol manuscripts in the keeping of Messrs. Catcott and Barrett, became a favorite topic of conversation in the literary circles of London.<sup>2</sup> Such eminent littérateurs as Gray, Mason, and Walpole had already satisfied themselves that the manuscripts were forgeries, and though Dr. Johnson had sufficient curiosity to visit Catcott and Barrett to inspect the manuscripts in 1776, he did not hesitate to join in the general verdict.<sup>3</sup> Goldsmith alone amongst the London littérateurs championed Rowley.

Sometime in 1772-73 Lord Dacre visited Bristol, and was allowed to borrow for expert examination two "original" Rowley manuscripts in parchment—the "Songe to Ælla" and the "Yellow Roll."<sup>4</sup> As a result of the publication of the "Reliques" (1765) Percy, now regarded as an authority on such matters, was consulted, and ultimately sent his Re-

<sup>1</sup> In the Life of Thomas Chatterton, by E. H. W. Meyerstein (1930), chapter XIX, the reader will find the narrative of Percy's adventure into the controversy lightly sketched. But as the author is writing the life of Chatterton and not of Percy, he naturally treats the matter with minimum attention to Percy. One or two recent essays have touched on this topic, but so far no serious attempt has been made to print all the documents in full, and to follow up all the clues in this story of detection and mystery.

<sup>2</sup> At a meeting of the Literary Club, March 26, 1773, "Lord Charlemont read the Bristol Poetry" (Percy's Diary).

<sup>3</sup> Boswell's Johnson (ed. Hill), III, 50.

<sup>4</sup> See Catcott MSS. (Bristol Public Library).

port on these two manuscripts to Dacre on Sept 6, 1773, pronouncing them to be modern fabrications. This was not his first sight of Rowleiana, for he had perused many specimens before 1773:<sup>5</sup>

Dr. Percy presents his best respects to Dr. Ducarel, and is extremely obliged to him for a sight of the curious letter and specimen with which he favoured him. Dr. Percy has seen many former specimens of the same verses, and heard a great deal of the history of the discovery; which, when he has the pleasure to see Dr. Ducarel, he will relate at large; at present he can only say, that their genuineness is rather doubled till the original MS. can be produced.

He had just returned to Alnwick (August 14, 1773) from his very short tour in Scotland, and was now residing at the Castle, as chaplain to the Duke of Northumberland. Here he studied the manuscripts showing them to Robert Chambers, who happened to be at hand. Chambers was visiting relations in Newcastle before leaving for India and in his journey north had accompanied Dr. Johnson, who was en route for the Hebrides (August 1773). "Mr. Chambers also was much interested in the Question respecting the Genuineness of the Bristoll Poetry and gave with me a second very minute examination of the Specimens."<sup>6</sup> Fearing to trust the precious documents to the post, Percy asked Chambers, who was setting out to London, to deliver them to Lord Dacre by hand:<sup>7</sup>

P. S. As I was fearful lest the Specimens sh<sup>d</sup>. come to any accident by being sent by the Post, I have sent them directed to your Lordship by the hands of a faithful friend: which is M<sup>r</sup>. Justice Chambers. . . . I had observed that some of our letters that came by the Post, were so wet, that if they had touched these Specimens they must have suffered very much: and M<sup>r</sup>. Chambers, who was here upon a visit, being to set out in a short time for London, and being a Gentleman of the most respectable character, I thought your Lordship would not disapprove of my sending them by him, as he very willingly took the charge and engaged to be responsible for their safe delivery at your Lordship's house in Bruton St.

Unfortunately, when Chambers reached London he failed to find the manuscripts amongst his luggage, could not deliver his packet at Bruton Street, and thus placed Percy in a most unpleasant situation. Soon after, Chambers left for India to take up a judgeship, and so far dismissed the subject from his mind as to neglect answering Percy's two letters of anxious enquiry until 1789.

<sup>5</sup> Nichols' Illustrations of 18th Century Literary History, iv, 573. Letter dated Jan. 13, 1772, Northumberland House.

<sup>6</sup> Percy's letter to Lord Dacre, Sept. 6, 1773, printed in full below.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid.

During my residence in this country [1774-1789] I have been honoured with two letters from you, . . . though I must own that your Lordship, having received no answer to the last of the two, has had reason to suspect me of insensibility and ingratitude.

Percy wrote to Chambers first of all on October 15, 1773;<sup>8</sup> but this letter is not extant. Then he wrote again on March 9, 1778:

I should be particularly happy if accidentally dipping into some of your books you should have found the two pieces of parchment attributed to Rowley (the supposed Bristoll-Poet). His pretended poems have run through two editions, and are received as genuine by a large party of pseudo-antiquaries, and critics: who make a great clamour about the disappearance of these two parchments: and it would be a most fortunate circumstance, if they could at last be produced, with all the evidence they carry of fraud and imposture.<sup>9</sup> At no distance of time would they be the less valuable or decisive.<sup>10</sup>

In 1782, apparently, Percy had good reason to bemoan the loss of the documents:<sup>11</sup>

However the illiteral Fantors of the Rowleian Side of the Question have gladly caught hold of the disappearance of the Scraps, to insinuate that they were wilfully destroyed to conceal the evidence they afforded to their hypothesis: this was boldly urged ag.st me by name in a pamphlet published in 1782, and that Pamphlet was even sent after me into my Diocese here.

Whilst acknowledging the gift of T. J. Mathias' "Essay on the evidence—relating to the Poems attributed to Thomas Rowley" (1783) from the author on June 6, 1783,<sup>12</sup> he tells his friend the whole story, bemoaning the injustice done to him by the Rowleians:

Though the Bishop never wrote a line on the subject of the Rowleian controversy nor has ever given his opinion publicly, nor probably ever may, on this difficult question, yet he has had the honour to be abused as much respecting it, as if he had stood foremost in the controversy. In particular it has been insinuated that he suppressed or destroyed the two parchment specimens sent him by Lord Dacre or, at least, that there has been something very mysterious in his account of that transaction &c."

At last on November 9, 1789, Chambers answered Percy's letters, and suggested various ways in which he might have lost the manu-

<sup>8</sup> Letter to Percy, 1789. See below. Cf. Johnson's Letters (ed. Hill), I, 285.

<sup>9</sup> Some of the Rowleians made great capital out of the disappearance of the supposed "original" parchments, by challenging their antagonists to find them and prove Chatterton's originals false. Cf. "Observations" on Rowley Poems, by Hickford and Fell, 1782.

<sup>10</sup> Quoted by Sir Ernest Clarke in his New Lights on Chatterton (1914), p. 10, from the original in possession of a descendant of Chambers.

<sup>11</sup> Percy's letter to Chambers, Apr. 29, 1790. (See below for whole letter.)

<sup>12</sup> Nichols' Illustrs. VIII, 213.

scripts; however, they were not forthcoming in 1789. Strangely enough, the documents in question were not actually found and made known to the world till 1916 when Sir Ernest Clarke read his well-known paper, "New Lights on Chatterton" to the Bibliographical Society and published collotypes of the newly discovered "Songe to Ælla" and the "Yellow Roll." These manuscripts are now in the possession of Sir William Rose Smith. In 1926 came to light the final letter written by Percy to Chambers, April 29, 1790,<sup>13</sup> acknowledging the letter from Calcutta in 1789, with its explanation of Chambers' part in the affair, and the exoneration of Percy from all wilful intent or carelessness. How glad Percy was to be able to produce this authoritative vindication of his conduct and how eager he was to reassure the literary world, even as late as 1790, when the controversy had petered out in sheer exhaustion, is evident from more than one source. Michael Lort wrote to Percy:

Sir Robert Chambers' letter I immediately communicated to Mr. H. Walpole,<sup>14</sup> Sir Wm. Scott, and Mr. Steevens; and have just now received it back from Cambridge, whither I had sent it by a safe hand to Dr. Glynn. He gave no opinion on it to my friend but said he should deposit all the letters he had relative to the Rowleian Controversy in the British Museum. The three former are, I know, very well satisfied, as indeed every unprejudiced person must be who reads Sir Robert's letter, which Mr. Steevens recommends to be published in the European Magazine, that part at least that relates to Chatterton.<sup>15</sup>

Perhaps the readiness on the part of the literary world to accept this evidence accounts for the extremely forbearing tone of Percy's reply to Chambers, who had caused his friend considerable inconvenience.

Appended is the full text of three of the letters which give us the material for our narrative, now published, we believe, for the first time. Percy's Letter to Lord Dacre, containing a full report on the Rowley Parchments is transcribed from Add. MS. 32,329, f. 72 etc., in the British Museum, together with the alterations made later by Percy when he got back his letter, of which, as he tells us, he had kept no copy. That Percy later collected his own letters from correspondents and revised them, there is ample evidence in the Percy manuscripts extant. Clarke in his paper before the Bibliographical Society was content with re-

<sup>13</sup> See below for whole letter.

<sup>14</sup> "I am much obliged to you, dear Sir, for this communication, which is a complete vindication of the Bishop of Dromore. As to Rowley, when Dr. Glynn is gone, he will be as much abandoned as King Arthur." Walpoles' letter to Dr. Lort, June 5, 1790.

<sup>15</sup> Letter from M. Lort to Percy, June 16, 1790, in Nichols' Illustrs. vii, 510.—Nichols adds a note to the effect that Chambers' letter was not, after all, published in the European Magazine.

producing (pp. 13–15) a transcript of this letter, which contains roughly only half the original, made by Catcott in 1777, and now preserved, in a volume of similar transcripts made by him, in the Bristol Public Library. “The whereabouts of the original of this report I have not been able yet to trace,” says Clarke in 1914 (p. 13). Miss A. C. C. Gausson in her biography, Percy: Prelate and Poet (1908), p. 153, gives only a brief summary of the report.

In order to appreciate the points at issue in the following discussion, the reader should have clearly in mind the contents of the two parchments: the Larger manuscript the “Yellow Roll” contained “The Auntiant Forme of Monies,” and “Englandes Glorye revyved in Maystre Canynge,” all in prose; the smaller manuscript contained Rowley’s Verses to Lydgate, Song to Ælla, and Lydgate’s Answer, all in verse.

(All in Percy’s hand)

[f. 72v]

Alnwick Castle, Sep<sup>r</sup>. 6. 1773

To Lord Dacre.

from T. P. (Later annotation)

My Lord,

I rec<sup>d</sup>. the honour of your Lordship’s most obliging letter accompanied with the Specimens of the Writing on Parchment attributed to Rowlie. I am extremely thankful for this ocular Inspection, which is quite decisive of the Question so far as it depends on the genuineness of these writings; for these are undoubtedly spurious and modern.—By good fortune I had with me at this place a Friend, who is one of the best Judges in England of old Writings, having had for many years the Custody of all the ancient Records & Charters, &c of the Northumberland Family, and been all his life conversant with English Manuscripts, &c of every age; who is critically exact in distinguishing the peculiar modes of writing & the several Alphabets which prevailed in every Æra; and who, having never heard of the Controversy concerning the Bristoll Poetry was quite impartial; this [verso] gentleman is Thomas Butler Esqr. Clerk of the Peace for the County of Middlesex & principal agent to the Duke of Northumberland. To him I showed the Specimens Your Lordship sent me, and he immediately pronounced them Spurious. Not only so, but he declared them to be most bungling attempts to imitate old Writing that he ever saw: in which I cannot but intirely agree with him. For the Characters uniformly resemble the writing of no Æra whatever, nor are in any degree uniform and consistent with themselves: but are evidently written by a modern Pen, which has endeavoured to render the letters as uncouth and obscure as possible, and yet is frequently betrayed into Escapes which are in the most modern Characters. As for instance. in the larger MS. Tho. in the first line and The in the second, could only have been written since our current hand was adapted and altered to the Roman & Italian Alphabets in books: before that time when the handwriting was formed after the Gothic Alphabet, the writing would have been written po and more currently, pe. This continued generally to prevail so late as the middle of the last century [i. 73r]. Similar Instances occur in every line; & it is even diverting to observe how in the Prose Writing<sup>16</sup> as the writer went on, he altered & changed the form of his letters; so that the lines towards the bottom are tenfold more uncouth and obscure, than those towards the top; & are not reducible to the same Alphabets: We remarked some of the letters to have been written in 4 or 5 different manners, so that the Writer evidently went upon no principles, had previously formed to himself no Alphabet, had a very imperfect random guess at the old Alphabets & was incapable of imitating any of them truly.—Even the poetical Specimen,<sup>17</sup> tho' infinitely more uncouth & more obscurely written than the Prose,<sup>18</sup> does not come nearer the genuine old alphabets, in proportion as it differs from the modern characters; it is merely rendered obscure by a fanciful uncouth alphabet of the writer's own invention, reducible to no principle of genuine ancient writing.—With regard to the Parchment itself,<sup>19</sup> it is evidently stained yellow on the back with Oker, to look like old parchment; but the fraud is so unskilfully performed, that you may see stains & besmearings on the other side; and if you rub the back with a wet white handkerchief it will be stained with the oker. [verso] He hath also contrived an Ink (than which nothing is more easy) that should be very faint and yellow; which being washed with an Infusion of Galls would naturally become blacker.—This is the whole secret of the Writing Part, which exhibits in every respect the most glaring & undoubted Fraud.—and the contents contain no less Proofs of the Forgery, for they assert gross and ridiculous falshoods, such as there having been ancient Moneys current in England coined with the Arms of Bristoll on the reverse, etc. etc. etc.—I cannot conclude without pointing out one further proof that the writing is not ancient, which strikes one towards the beginning of the Prose Specimens,<sup>20</sup> that is the writer's having been so imprudent as to distinguish one or two of his Quotations by an inverted comma at the beginning & the end of the sentence—"thus"—which is not to be found in any genuine Writing whatever of any age; much less in the time when these Writings are pretended to have been written; when instead of the Comma (,) our writers used an oblique stroke thus / to divide the sentence.—Upon the whole I must again repeat, that so far as depends on the evidence of these Specimens,<sup>21</sup> the writings attributed to Mr. Tho<sup>s</sup>. Rowlie may finally be pronounced to be forged and spurious. I have the honour to be with the greatest Respect.

My Lord

Your Lordship's most obliged Servant.

Tho. Percy.

<sup>16</sup> "Larger manuscript" crossed out. See below.

<sup>17</sup> "Smaller manuscript" crossed out.

<sup>18</sup> "Larger" crossed out.

<sup>19</sup> As first written, "Parchments themselves": Percy must have made these corrections after receiving Chambers' letter of Nov. 9, 1789, and getting back his own letter to Dacre. See note at end.

<sup>20</sup> "Larger manuscript" crossed out. See above.

<sup>21</sup> "Parchments" crossed out.

[f. 74r.] P.S.

As I was fearful lest the Specimens<sup>22</sup> sh<sup>d</sup> come to any accident by being sent by the Post, I have sent then directed to Your Lordship by the hands of a faithful friend; which is Mr. Justice Chambers lately appointed one of the Judges to the East Indies; Under the same Injunction as I received the same; Not to suffer a line to be copied.—I had observed that some of our letters that came by the Post, were so wet, that if they had touched these Specimens<sup>23</sup> they must have suffered very much: and Mr. Chambers who was here upon a visit, being to set out in a short time for London, and being a gentleman of the most respectable character I thought your Lordship would not disapprove of my sending them by him, as he very willingly took the charge and engaged to be responsible for their safe delivery at your Lordship's house in Bruton St. Mr. Chambers also was much interested in the Question respecting the Genuineness of the Bristoll Poetry & gave with me a second very minute examination of the Specimens,<sup>24</sup> the result of which was a full conviction of their being spurious. [verso] As he took them away from me last week in order to keep them safe till his return to London, and as I would not allow myself to copy a line the arguments I have urged are given from Memory, but could have been rendered stronger if I had had the Precaution to draw up my letter with the Specimens<sup>25</sup> lying before me, for then I could have pointed out the deviations in every letter both from the old alphabets, and from the writers own adopted Characters in other places. I could also more particularly have showed the gross falshoods expressed in the contents of the Writing itself. But the forgery [is] so very glaring & manifest, that no one much conversant with genuine old MSS. will hesitate a moment in pronouncing these to be spurious.

With regard to Mr. Baret I leave to your Lordship to communicate to him in whatever manner you think proper the above Sentence passed on these Specimens.<sup>26</sup> As he seems a man of a liberal ingenuous Mind, & open to conviction, I flatter myself upon recollection [f. 75r] he will be glad to have had the forgery detected before he had reposed too securely upon these Writings.—After all tho' I think from the style of the Composition, arises as Strong Evidence that the Poetry cannot be ancient, as does even from the forged spurious Writing, itself, yet still it may be highly deserving of Publication, not only on account of the Poetical Merit of the Poems, but also to show what human Invention is capable of performing: And I am persuaded that if all the undoubted Pieces of Chatterton were collected into a Volume, they would prove him not only capable of writing these Poems attributed to Rowlie, but considering his early youth and the disadvantage of his Education, to have been one of the greatest geniuses that ever existed in the World.—For my own part, I would subscribe to such a publication with as much pleasure as if the Pieces could be proved to be Rowlie's own: and would lend all the assistance in my power to promote the sale & formation<sup>27</sup> of such a work.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.

<sup>26</sup> Ibid.

<sup>27</sup> "Execution" crossed out, at first writing.

[verso] As I have kept no copy of this letter,<sup>28</sup> wth contains the Proofs that occurred to me of the forgery & I could wish at some future time to transcribe them for my own Use, I should be much obliged to your Lordship, if you w<sup>d</sup>. be pleased to preserve this letter, & if you communicate it to Mr. Baret, obtain the favour of him to return it back when perused.

I should also beg the favour of your Lordship to show it to my Lord Camden if you please: and together with my most respectful compliments to his Lordship, have the goodness to present my excuses for not being able to pay my Respects at Chislehurst before I left Town as I had intended. The Duke of Northumberland's Removal into the North was earlier than I was aware of, & did not allow me time to have the honour of waiting on his Lordship; but when I [go] to London in the winter I shall at all times be happy to attend on him in Lincoln's Inn Fields.

Here follows from Add. MS. 32,329, f. 124 etc. (Brit. Mus.), Sir Robert Chambers' reply of 1789, a document which we have every reason to believe is the original letter, in Chambers' own handwriting (cf. his "hand" in Add MS. 16,264). Yet Clarke, (p. 16), claims to have obtained his copy, from which he does not quote a line, from the Percy Collection in possession of "the great granddaughter of the Bishop of Dromore." Incidentally, Clarke, using the copy in this private Percy collection, fails to make the point that both correspondents were evidently very doubtful as to whether there were one or two parchments lost. As will have been seen, in revising his letter to Lord Dacre Percy takes great trouble to correct himself on this point—quite unnecessarily and incorrectly, as it happened. Miss Gaussen, in her biography, reproduced (pp. 154–5) a much-shortened version of this letter. Perhaps, like Clarke, she was working from the same copy.

Sir Rob<sup>t</sup>. Chambers to Bp. Percy.
[f.124r]

My Dear Lord,

During my residence in this country, in which I have now spent fifteen years, I have been honoured with two letters from you, each of which gave me great pleasure as a token of remembrance from a much respected friend; though I must own that your Lordship, having received no answer to the last of the two, has had reason to suspect me of insensibility and ingratitude. I have not however been quite so much to blame as I must hitherto have appeared to be.

That letter, which was dated in 1778, was intended to introduce Mr. Woodington to me in case he should ever come to Calcutta, and though such an event was not very probable, the young gentleman kept the letter by him at Bombay; thinking [verso] I suppose that the chance of war might possibly send him hither, with a detachment of Bombay troops. At length in the year 1785, it was delivered to me by a Mr. Treves, who, having come from Europe over land, had stopt at Bombay in his way to Bengal. Had Mr. Woodington come hither himself, I should have been happy to have cultivated an acquaintance with a relation of yours, and to have done him any little service that might have been in my power. When I received the letter I was sick, and no ship was despatched to England for some months after Mr. Treves's arrival—accidents which may in some measure account for, though they cannot entirely excuse, my subsequent negligence.

<sup>28</sup> The italics here are my own.

I now beg leave to approach your Lordship in the oriental mode, with a peace offering in my hand. I have directed my London bookseller (Mr. B. White in Fleet Street) to forward to your Lordship, in my name, the first volume of Transactions lately published here by the Asiatick Society, with the title of Asiatick Researches. Your Lordship will not be displeased to find among [f. 125] them, several curious disquisitions by our old friend Sir William Jones (who is as indefatigable as ever in his oriental studies, at the same time that he is an able and learned Judge), and one by my youngest brother Mr. William Chambers, whom you have heard me mention formerly when he was a very young servant of the India Company at Madras.

Your letter of 1778 surprised me by mentioning two pieces of parchment attributed to Rowley, the supposed Bristol Poet, as having been in my possession. To the best of my remembrance I never had but one such parchment, though it contained two very different compositions; for on one side of it was written (if my memory is not erroneous) a list of rarities, not many in number belonging to Mastre Canynge, and on the other a copy of very indifferent verses. The size of the parchment, as I bear it in my mind, was considerably less than that of the page I am writing [i.e., big quarto] and it was, I think, narrower at the bottom than at the top. You may perhaps recollect [verso] that when you delivered it to me at Alnwick Castle, I folded it and put it with ease into a pocket letter case which I happened to have about me.

Though I have mentioned these circumstances with diffidence, I have no reason for doubting the accuracy of my memory with regard to them, unless it be that I am conscious of not having paid much attention to that parchment, because I thought it did not deserve much. The verses were in my opinion far inferior to some of those which have since been published under the name of Rowley;—the list of rarities appeared to me, on my perusal of it, to be such as any man might have composed who was moderately acquainted with the state of physical knowledge and of the mechanick arts in the time of the supposed writer, and with the manners, whims and superstitions of that age:—the characters used in the writing did not appear to me to be of the same age with each other, some of them had, I believe, been obsolete for several centuries before some of [f. 126] the rest came into use:—and lastly the pigment that had been employed to stain the parchment, in order to give it the appearance of antiquity, was literally speaking both visible and palpable: It came off with a moistened finger, and you, I remember, supposed it to be yellow ochre.

The falsification being thus clumsy and unskilful, and in Your Lordship's opinion, as well as mine, indisputable, I cannot think that there was much intrinsick worth in that scrap of writing, but it might have had an accidental value as an evidence of guilt in the unhappy Youth who produced it, and as a criterion by which some judgement might be formed of the authenticity of other writings which he produced, not indeed as originals but as copies, of which he had destroyed the originals; and on that account I am sorry for the sake of truth that it is lost, and still more sorry that it has been lost by me:—Insomuch that although I am no Nabob, I would willingly give an hundred pounds [verso] to recover it.

Of the manner in which it was lost I can only form vague conjectures.—It might possibly be stolen, but I have no reason to think that it was;—it might be carried away from my chambers in the Temple by some attorney's clerk who, seeing it on my table with papers that belonged to his master, might snatch it up in haste by mistake for a Bailpiece which it somewhat resembled in size and shape;—or it might be lost at sea, in a portfolio which my servant, in a sudden roll of the ship, let fall from my cabin window, being obliged to employ both his hands in saving himself: The last is, I think, the most probable conjecture, because that port-folio was filled with letters and miscellaneous papers, which I had not had time to look at before I embarked, and which I intended to have examined during my voyage. All that I can venture however to say with confidence is that there is no chance [f. 127r] now of finding it among my books and papers, which have been often clean'd and often removed, and on such occasions have always been inspected in search of the lost parchment, though with little or no hope of finding it.

In the account which I have now given your Lordship of the writing which I had the misfortune to lose, it would have been improper to omit a declaration of my own opinion—that it was a counterfeit. On the more general and more doubtful question, whether any of the verses published under the name of Rowley be really ancient, it would be presumption in me to offer any opinion of my own to a critick and antiquary of your Lordship's skill and experience. I will however venture hastily to put down one or two observations that just now occur to me.

It is admitted, I think, by all, that some of the verses which have been printed [verso] as the compositions of Rowley and others of the 15th century were really written by Chatterton. He confessed to Mr. Barrett that one of the two poems entitled Battle of Hastings was written by himself; and an examination of the internal evidence has obliged even Chatterton's advocates to allow that other poems must in part at least belong to him, which have been given to the world as Rowley's.

It is also admitted that Chatterton has inserted words of his own that are utterly unintelligible;—which Mr. Catcott supposes him to have done only in places where he could not make out the original reading of Rowley's MS.; but others will think and perhaps with more reason, that he hoped thereby to give to compositions of his own an appearance of antiquity to those who were not well versed in old English.

Of the authenticity of the few parchments that are in Mr. Baret's possession, those must judge who have seen them, and who are at the [f. 128r] same time able to judge. If your Lordship had examined them and had determined any of them to be genuine, it would afford a ground for supposing that, among the old title deeds found in the church at Bristol (of which you may remember that poor Goldsmith showed one or two to his friends) Chatterton might have found other poetical writings also, from which he might have taken the substance of some of the poems that he gave out as ancient; but then, as he has not produced the originals, I should think myself obliged to believe that in copying he had altered and added to them, whatever his fancy suggested, or his ear accustomed to modern versification required. I should believe also in that case that his motives for destroying the originals was to conceal his falsifications of the copies and the many falsehoods he had told about them.

One remark more is obvious and with that I shall conclude. If any of the poems [verso] whose originals do not appear, be really ancient in substance, or in part, it is impossible for any man to distinguish with precision, in every instance, that which is genuine from that which is counterfeit; and therefore these poems cannot be of any use to the philologist, historian, or antiquary, neither can they afford any proof of the state of our versification in the 15th century.

I have the honour to be, with the sincerest respect and attachment, My Lord,
 Your Lordship's most faithful and affectionate servant,
 Rob<sup>t</sup>. Chambers.

Calcutta,

9 Nov: 1789.

To the Right Reverend

Thomas Lord Bishop of Dromore, &c. &c. &c.

Then (f. 129r.) follows a page of notes pencilled in Percy's hand.

Mem. From all the mention of Specimens in my letter to Lord Dacre Sep<sup>r</sup>. 6, 1773, I thought there had been 2 pieces of Parchment, & so mentioned them to Sir Robert Chambers in my letter to him. Whereas he thinks the 2 Specimens were both written on one Piece of Parchment. If so, the Prose must have been written on One side and the Verse on the Other. In other Respects we both agree.

My letter to Lord Dacre was written while I thought the Specimens safe on their way to him. It therefore shows my Opinion and Observations, when I thought they w<sup>d</sup>. be confronted with the original Writing itself.

T. D.

The text of the third unpublished letter, that of Percy to Chambers in 1790, I am able to append through the kindness of Mr. Dobell, who allowed me to make a copy of it from the original in his possession (December 10, 1926).

Dublin, April 29th 1790

Dear Sir,

I wrote a few days since a letter to express my grateful acknowledgments for the kind Pledge of Friendship, w<sup>ch</sup>. I rec<sup>d</sup>. in your valuable present of the Asiatic Researches.—I have since rec<sup>d</sup>. your very obliging favour of the 9th Nov<sup>r</sup>. 1789, containing some judicious strictures on the Poems, etc., attributed to Rowley, & a full account of the scraps of Poetry & Prose, which you rec<sup>d</sup>. from me at Alnwick Castle, & your Conjectures concerning the cause of their mis-carriage. I had thought they had been written on 2 Pieces of Parchment; you think they were written on 2 sides of one piece.—The difference is [verso] of no great importance; & after a lapse of so many years such a variation in our different memories may be excused. But we both mean the same thing.—However the illiberal Fanlors of the Rowleian Side of the Question have gladly caught hold of the disappearance of the said scraps to insinuate that they were wilfully destroy'd to conceal the evidence they afforded to their hypothesis. this was boldly urged agst. me by name in a pamphlet published in 1782,<sup>29</sup> & that pamphlet was even sent after me into my Diocese here.—Mr. Tyrwhitt gave so compleat a Refutation of that Hypothesis,<sup>30</sup> that we thought it was compleatly crush'd: [next f.] But since this Death, a Dr. Gregory has publish'd a Life of Chatterton,<sup>31</sup> which is also printed in 4th Vol. of Biographia Britannica, wherein under a pretended statement of the Arguments pro & con, in this Controversy, he has urged many things on the side of Rowley much stronger than they will bear & endeavours to leave the Question doubtful.

So much for this subject w<sup>ch</sup>. has however acquired a merit with me, by producing me the valued acquisition of 3 Epistolary Sheets from a Friend I so highly respect & regard as yourself. As I presume this letter will accompany my former, I will now only add that I am most sincerely ever Dear Sir.

Your faithful and obliged servant,
Tho: Dromore.

As proof of Percy's interest in the Rowley problem, mention should be made of Sir Ernest Clarke's discovery<sup>32</sup> that, amongst Percy's papers which have come down to his descendants, were found not only a copy in Catcott's handwriting of Chatterton's original contribution to Felix Farley's Journal in 1768 about the opening of the Old Bridge at Bristol, <sup>29</sup> For an excellent list of the host of books and pamphlets published during the Rowley Controversy, see "Chattertoniana" by Hyett and Bazeley (Reprinted from A Bibliographers' Manual of Gloucestershire Literature, 1914), also B. M. Catalogue, C. 39 f and h. I have not yet succeeded in finding this particular pamphlet.

<sup>30</sup> "Poems, supposed to have been written at Bristol by Thomas Rowley and others.—The Third Edition: To which is added An Appendix containing some Observations upon the language of these Poems; tending to prove that they were written, not by any Ancient Author but entirely by Thomas Chatterton—1778" (by Tyrwhitt).

<sup>31</sup> The Life of Thomas Chatterton, Criticisms on his Genius and Writings, and A Concise View on the Controversy concerning Rowley's Poems. By G. Gregory, D.D., 1789.

<sup>32</sup> New Lights on Chatterton, pp. 16–20.

and the original manuscript Vindication by Horace Walpole of his conduct towards Chatterton, but also the Rowley Poem "Elinour and Juga" in Chatterton's own writing. We may infer that Percy was well read in Rowleiana by the time he came to advise Dacre, Warton, and probably others.<sup>33</sup> There is also to be mentioned the contemporary tradition that Percy edited the first Rowley Poem, "The Death of Sir Charles Bawdin" (1772); but the manuscripts at Bristol Library prove that it was Catcotts venture.<sup>34</sup>

Yet Percy did not take a very prominent part, at least in public, in the controversy raging round the Rowley manuscripts; perhaps he did not care to appear publicly in the debate after the loss of the two parchments in 1773. But at about that time Thomas Warton began to take an interest in the problem, and, as behoved a reputable historian of literature, he had to decide definitely what should be his attitude. In 1772 he was shown some copies of the Rowley poem by the Earl of Lichfield, Chancellor of Oxford University. He was hard at work on his History of English Poetry at this time, and in 1774, he wrote to Percy to ask his opinion on the subject:

(Add. MS. 32,329 Brit. Mus.)

(f. 76r)

Dear Sir,

I should esteem it a particular favour if you could conveniently communicate to me what you know about Rowlie's poems of Bristol. I have a correspondence with Mr. Barret of that place, but he rather embarrasses than clears the subject. He has sent me a fragment of Parchment; on it a piece of a poem on a Mayor's feast, the ink & Parchment seemingly antient. It is necessary that I should consider him,<sup>35</sup> whether spurious or not, as there has been so much noise about the Discovery, & as so many are convinced of the poems being genuine. If possible, I request the favour of your answer immediately; & am, Dear Sir,

Your very affectionate friend & servt.

T. Warton.

Jul. 29. 1774

Winchester.

P.S. Please to direct it Winton.

In the same bound volume of manuscript letters (f. 83) there is a short letter dated January 25. 1776, in which Warton acknowledges Percy's advice. By this time he has decided to "lean to the side of the forgery," though with some reluctance.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. Many letters addressed to him on the subject. Nichols, op. cit., vol. VIII.

<sup>34</sup> New Lights etc., p. 22.

<sup>35</sup> Here Percy's Secretary, at his master's dictation has written in: "(in his Hist. of Eng. Poetry)." The hand of Meredith Darby (cf. Diary & other MSS.).

These two letters are reproduced in Clarissa Rinaker's Thomas Warton, (Univ. of Illinois Studies 1916, Chap. vi); but, though the author gives a brief account of Warton's share in the controversy she has no explanation to offer of his indebtedness to Percy. "Percy's reply is not to be found, but cannot have been convincing" (p. 93), i.e., in answer to Warton's first letter, 1774. Surely Percy's Report to Lord Dacre the previous year was convincing enough.

Dear Sir,

I have received the favour of your's which is quite satisfactory.

As to Chatterton, I have considered that subject pro and con not proposing to enter minutely into the Controversy, but just as much as the general nature of my work properly required. I own I lean to the side of the forgery: but if you could find me only one capital argument in favour of the genuineness of Rowley's poems, I should accept it most thankfully, I would willingly come to town on purpose, but it is impossible: and at the same time I am ashamed to interrupt your Engagements. The Press is drawing near to this period. I will find you speedily the Extract you mention from the Selden Manuscript: and am, Dear Sir,

Your most affectionate humble servt.,
T. Warton.

Trin. Coll.

jan. 25. 1776

In 1778 appeared the second volume of Warton's History of English Poetry, with a whole section (§8, pp. 139-164) devoted to the Rowley poems. The previous year (1777) the first collected edition of the poems had been published by Tyrwhitt from the manuscripts of Messrs. Catcott and Barrett; and it was not long before two more editions were wanted. The second edition was a mere reproduction of the first: but the third (1778) contained an Appendix, "tending to prove that the Rowley poems were written not by any ancient author but entirely by Thomas Chatterton." Warton makes no reference to this appendix in his chapter; probably he had completed his account before it was published. In his "Contents" he heads his chapter "Poems under the name of Thomas Rowley. Supposed to be spurious." He begins very impartially:<sup>36</sup>

As there is some degree of plausibility in the history of their discovery, as they possess considerable merit, and are held to be the real productions of Rowley by many respectable critics; it is my duty to give them a place in this series of our poetry.

He then gives a summary of the circumstances of their appearance and generous quotations from them. But in his summing up he pronounces them forgeries (pp. 153, 164):

<sup>36</sup> P. 139.—Page references are to the first edition.

I am of opinion that none of these pieces are genuine. . . . It is with regret that I find myself obliged to pronounce Rowlie's poems to be spurious.

His references to Percy and the Two Lost Parchments are interesting:

The Ode to Ella, and the Epistle to Lydgate, with his Answer, were written on one piece of parchment; and, as pretended, in Rowlie's own hand. This was shown to an ingenious critic and intelligent antiquary of my acquaintance; who assures me, that the writing was a gross and palpable forgery. . . . The form of the letters, although artfully contrived to wear an antiquated appearance, differed very essentially from every one of our early alphabets. Nor were the characters uniform and consistent.<sup>37</sup> . . . The parchment was old; and that it might look still older was stained on the outside with ochre, which was easily rubbed off with a linen cloth.<sup>38</sup> Care had also been evidently taken to tincture the ink with a yellow cast<sup>39</sup> . . . This parchment has since been unfortunately lost.

Here Warton adds a footnote:

At the same time, another manuscript on parchment, written as pretended, by Rowlie, was shown to this gentleman: which, tallying in every respect with the Ode to Ella, plainly appeared to be forged, in the same manner, and by the same modern hand. It was in prose, and contained an account of Saxon coins, and the rise of coining in England, with a list of coins, poems, antient inscriptions, monuments, and other curiosities, in the cabinet of Cannynge above mentioned. This parchment is also lost; and, I believe, no copy remains (pp. 153-154).

We may safely assume from the close resemblance of this account to Percy's Report either that Warton read the Report written for Dacre, or more probably, that Percy recapitulated his arguments in a letter to Warton, sometime between 1774 and 1776. Although in 1776, he was "not proposing to enter myself into the Controversy,"<sup>40</sup> Warton soon found himself involved in the dispute. In 1779 his chapter on the poems was adversely criticized in a pamphlet by one Henry Dampier, entitled "Remarks upon the Eight Section of the Second Volume of Mr. Warton's History of English Poetry," which upheld their genuineness. He replied in 1782 with an "Enquiry into the Authenticity of

<sup>37</sup> Cf. "For the Characters uniformly resemble the writing of no Era whatever, nor are in any degree uniform and consistent with themselves. . . . (He) had a very imperfect random guess at the old Alphabets." (Percy's Report to Lord Dacre, 1773. See above.)

<sup>38</sup> "With regard to the Parchment itself, it is evidently stained yellow on the back with Oker, to look like old parchment . . . if you rub the back with a wet white handkerchief it will be stained with the Oker" (ibid.).

<sup>39</sup> "He hath also contrived an Ink . . . that should be very faint and yellow: etc." (ibid.).

<sup>40</sup> Letter to Percy, Jan. 25, 1776. (See above.)

the Poems attributed to Thomas Rowley," and found himself on the full tide of the controversy which reached a climax in that year when Dean Milles published his sumptuous edition with its elaborate and uncompromising championing of the authenticity of the Rowleiana.

In conclusion, it is worth while recording the high esteem in which the two scholars held Chatterton himself, despite all the trouble and pother of the Controversy. "This youth, who died at eighteen, was a prodigy of genius: and would have proved the first of English poets, had he reached a maturer age," says Warton in 1778.<sup>41</sup> Previously<sup>42</sup> he had been prepared to believe in Chatterton's manuscripts, "if you could find me only one capital argument in favor of the genuineness of Rowlie's poems, I should accept it most thankfully." Percy was equally enthusiastic.<sup>43</sup>

And I am persuaded that if all the undoubted Pieces of Chatterton were collected into a Volume, they would prove him not only capable of writing these Poems attributed to Rowlie, but considering his early youth & the disadvantages of his Education, to have been one of the greatest geniuses that ever existed in the World.

Later, Wordsworth, Coleridge, Keats, and other romantics regarded him with even greater affection; and his influence on them was considerable.

A. WATKIN-JONES

Exeter Coll. Oxford

The MS. of Percy's letter to Lord Dacre, 6 September 1773, is catalogued in the British Museum as a draft of a letter only. But on further examination, I am inclined to take it for the original letter posted: 1. In the postscript there are the words, "As I have kept no copy of this letter," and a request to Dacre "to return it back when perused" 2. The many corrections are written in later (in heavier ink)—Percy often corrected his own original letters after receiving them back. 3. The sheets bear marks of having been folded for posting, and the postmark was once clear on the outside of the packet.

<sup>41</sup> History of English Poetry, II, 157.

<sup>42</sup> Letter to Percy, Jan. 25, 1776. (See above.)

<sup>43</sup> Letter to Lord Dacre, 1773. (See above.)

CARLYLE AND THE GERMAN PHILOSOPHY PROBLEM DURING THE YEAR 1826-1827*

THE year 1825-26, was of very great importance to Carlyle. It marked his emergence from the ethnic or purely humanistic phase of intellectual development, into the phase of transcendental thought. During the year he found for the first time a permanent within the flux. He encountered an unchanging truth through art: "the fiction of the poet," he said, "is not falsehood but the purest truth."<sup>1</sup> This culmination is the result of the æsthetic progress traceable through the preceding period.

Of still greater importance, as later developments in his life show, was the new religious viewpoint that Carlyle reached during the year. The key to that new position in Carlyle's case was Entsagen.<sup>2</sup> During this year he had conquered all his scepticisms.<sup>3</sup> From this point he developed a firm but undogmatic belief in the religion of Christ.<sup>4</sup> For the purposes of this paper it need simply be pointed out that religious faith discovers to its holders a permanent within the flux: a spiritual permanence that gives value to a life of physical change.

The third avenue by which Carlyle discovered the permanent within the flux was transcendental philosophy. It was closely related to his progress in æsthetics. Largely through the æsthetic writers in Carlyle's humanistic period he had gradually approached the tenets of transcendentalism. And the third avenue was also connected with his religion. Although transcendental philosophy cannot be said to have given Carlyle back his religious faith, it can be proved to have inter-

* Since this article was accepted the materials in some of Professor C. F. Harrold's articles referred to in the footnotes have been embodied in his Carlyle and German Thought, Yale Studies in English, LXXXII (1934).

<sup>1</sup> Goethe, J. W., Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship and Travels; translated by Carlyle (London: Chapman and Hall, 1907), I, 29.

<sup>2</sup> See Carlyle and Miss Welsh, Love Letters of Thomas Carlyle and Jane Welsh, edited by A. Carlyle (New York: John Lowe Co., 1909), II, 158-159, 186, 238, 242-243.

<sup>3</sup> Carlyle, Thomas, Reminiscences (London: Macmillan and Co., 1887), II, 179-180. See also Froude's Thomas Carlyle, 1795-1835, 2 v. (New York: Scribner's Sons, 1897), I, 269-270.

<sup>4</sup> Carlyle, Thomas, Critical and Miscellaneous Essays, 5 v. (London: Chapman and Hall, 1899) (The Works of Thomas Carlyle, xxvi-xxx) I, 398, 457. Carlyle, Thomas, Sartor Resartus, edited by MacMechan (Boston: Ginn and Co., 1896, New impression 1905), pp. 175, 203, 206-207, 239. Carlyle, Thomas, Letters of Thomas Carlyle to John Stuart Mill, John Sterling and Robert Browning, edited by A. Carlyle (London: T. Fisher Unwin, 1923), pp. 78-79.

acted intimately with his irrational religious experiences and to have provided him a ready-prepared rational warrant for religious faith.<sup>5</sup> Thus, during the year 1825-26, three lines of interest—æsthetics, religion, German philosophy—coalesced in the tendency to discover to him the permanent within the flux, which he had sought long. Each of these three lines of interest can be traced. But it is only with the last of these—German philosophy—that this paper is chiefly concerned.

One more preliminary remark will be helpful. Although Carlyle came into contact with many systems of philosophic thought, he was never a systematic philosopher himself.<sup>6</sup> Evidences of the superficiality of Carlyle's connection with the systematic aspect of German philosophy will emerge in the following discussion of his actual entry into this connection.

The first positive record of Carlyle's reading any work written by one of the German critical philosophers comes on September 27, 1826.<sup>7</sup> He wrote Miss Welch that he had lately been reading Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft; that he had been not only reading but partly understanding it; that upon reaching the 150th page of the work, he had found Kant rather abstruse, and had stopped reading, puzzled.<sup>8</sup> There is no evidence that he ever resumed his reading of Kant after September 1826. In fact, at some time during the next spring, he wrote in his notebook that he had read only 100 pages of Kant.<sup>9</sup> This reference merely makes it certain that Carlyle's reading of Kant was not resumed during the period when he was trying to understand transcendentalism as a system.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>5</sup> See the following references. (a) Carlyle, Letters of Thomas Carlyle to John Stuart Mill, p. 95. (b) Espinasse, Francis, Literary Recollections and Sketches (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1893), pp. 220-221 (c) Carlyle, Essays, II, 26 (d) Carlyle, Two Note Books (New York: Grolier Club, 1898), 221-222 (e) Allingham, William, A Diary, edited by H. Allingham and D. Radford (London: Macmillan and Co., 1907), p. 273

<sup>6</sup> For instance, in 1816, after trying for eighteen months, he still did not understand such a fundamental principle in English philosophy as the distinction between primary and secondary qualities of matter. See Early Letters of Thomas Carlyle, edited by C. F. Norton, 2 vols. (London: Macmillan and Co., 1886), I, 82.

<sup>7</sup> It is true that, long before this time, Carlyle had affected an air of familiarity when he alluded to the German philosophers. Miss Margaret Storrs has gathered many of these allusions for her dissertation, The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte (Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, Bryn Mawr College, 1929). I have gathered still more. But they are usually vague in content and are wholly lacking in references to specific works. Perhaps the most striking of the allusions to Kant before 1826 occurs in the Third Part of The Life of Schiller, which was finished by early February 1824 (London Magazine, x, 22). In it Carlyle stands at a safe distance from his subject and makes the well-worn complaint about abstruse terminology used to cloak simple meanings. Then he admits that his remarks are the result of only very limited acquaintance with the subject. I do not find in these allusions a sound basis for supposing that Carlyle had actually read in any of Kant's books before the fall of 1826. On the other hand, I find that Carlyle had made very similar remarks about the philosophy of Kant in March 1823, when he was avowedly viewing it through borrowed eyes (Two Note Books, pp. 40-47). Perhaps the best case of Carlyle's conjuring with Fichte's name occurs also in the Third Part of The Life of Schiller. Only two pages before the allusion to Kant's philosophy, Carlyle puts quotation marks around a passage that he attributes to Fichte (London Magazine, x, 20). However, the matter of this passage—without the signs of direct discourse—had appeared in Madame de Staël's Germany (see the London 1814 edition, III, 110), the book that had turned Carlyle's attention to Germany in 1817. See Early Letters of Thomas Carlyle, I, 119 and Letters of Charles Eliot Norton (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1913), I, 480-481.

During his life in Scotland, Carlyle makes only two more references to a specific work by Kant: both are to the Kritik der reinen Vernunft. Since both seem based upon the reading done in the fall of 1826, chronology will not be violated if we examine these references now. The first of these references, made late in 1827, assures the reader that the forbidding terminology of Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft can be mastered.<sup>11</sup> The second, made early in 1829, says that the relativity of Time and Space is carefully deduced with the strictest form of argument in Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft.<sup>12</sup> An examination of Kant's work by this title shows that the matter referred to occurs well within the 150 pages, or even the 100 pages, that Carlyle at different times says he read. The list of books in Carlyle's library at Chelsea contains only one work by Kant—the 1818 edition of the Kritik der reinen Vernunft.<sup>13</sup> As the evidence piles up, it continues to strengthen the suggestion that Carlyle knew only one work by Kant.

<sup>8</sup> The Love Letters of Thomas Carlyle and Jane Welsh, II, 324.

<sup>9</sup> Two Note Books, 112–113 —The entry was made between March 1827 (see p. 105) and June. The assurance for the latter date lies in the quotations from Richter on p. 114, which were taken for use in the essay on Richter, upon which Carlyle was busy in June (Letters of Thomas Carlyle pp. 49–50). Carlyle's statement of 100 pages of Kant does not agree with his former statement of 150 pages, but this disagreement need not be taken too seriously in what is obviously a springtime reference to his reading during the preceding fall.

<sup>10</sup> See Two Note Books, pp. 72–112, passim, for references to philosophic matters. Froude's statement (Thomas Carlyle . . . 1795–1836, I, 302, cited by Miss Storrs in The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 21) that Carlyle read Kant, Fichte, and Schelling in the winter of 1827 at Edinburgh cannot be substantiated. Froude probably misconstrued some of the notes that Carlyle took on these men while he was reading Reinhold's account or Stapfer's (see later, pp. 814–817 of this paper).

<sup>11</sup> Essays, I, 75.

<sup>12</sup> Essays, II, 25–26.

<sup>13</sup> Illustrated Memorial Volume of the Carlyle's House Purchase Fund Committee with Catalogue of Carlyle's Books, Manuscripts, Pictures and Furniture Exhibited Therein (London, 1896), p. 77.—However, it is not certain that this volume is the copy he used in his 1826 reading. There seems no way to be certain on this point. Mrs. Strong, Curator of the Carlyle's house, writes me concerning the volume in her care: "Carlyle's book-plate ('Humiliate') is pasted on the inside of the cover but otherwise it has no marking or annotation whatever."

Besides the Time-Space relativity, the only other principle that Carlyle seems to refer to Kant during his residence in Scotland, is the distinction between Vernunft and Verstand. It is the distinction between the faculties that deal with the noumenal and with the phenomenal respectively. But nowhere does he assign this distinction to a definite work by Kant. Nevertheless, wherever he derived it, it was of central importance for a while to Carlyle. In 1827 he thought it the grand characteristic of Kant's philosophy.<sup>14</sup> In 1829 he understood the transcendental philosophy to teach that in Reason (Vernunft) lay the foundation of all Poetry, Virtue, and Religion.<sup>15</sup> And he thought the Vernunft-over-Verstand distinction and subordination included more or less all true Christian Faith and Devotion.<sup>16</sup> But at the same time he indicated the Time-Space relativity and the principle underlying it, as the premise from which would follow the conclusion that the Understanding produced only relative truth.<sup>17</sup> Furthermore, in a passage written at the same time, he appears to pass directly from the principle of Time-Space relativity to a resulting assurance of the permanent within the flux, overleaping the Vernunft-Verstand distinction as implicit.<sup>18</sup> In November 1831 Carlyle said our conception of immortality depends on that of time; indicated its connection with Sartor; considered the new conception of time the deepest belonging to philosophy; believed this conception the one wherein modern philosophy had gained its best triumph; and pointed to the Time-Space relativity as a reconciler of contradictions.<sup>19</sup> And late in life he indicated a connection between Kant's Time and Space doctrine and his own faith in immortality.<sup>20</sup> Thus, although Carlyle once set great store by the Vernunft-Verstand distinction, he remained vague as to whence he drew it. He merely stated that it was uniformly implied in Kant's philosophy. Later he seems to have regarded it as subordinate to the Time-Space relativity and logically sequent to it. There is no proof that Carlyle derived his distinction between Vernunft and Verstand directly from Kant.

Although the records show many general allusions to Kant and to Kantism, there is no point now in mustering those that are already commonly known. Miss Storrs, for example, has done this. And she has gone further. She has examined the philosophic import of Carlyle's writings in comparison with Kant's writings. Her conclusions in regard to this comparison may be taken as those of a qualified expert. She finds that Carlyle's conception of the ideality of Time and Space is quite divorced from the whole significance given it by Kant;<sup>21</sup> that

<sup>14</sup> Essays, I, 81.<sup>15</sup> Ibid., II, 27.<sup>16</sup> Ibid., II, 27.<sup>17</sup> Ibid., II, 26-27.<sup>18</sup> Ibid., II, 26.<sup>19</sup> Two Note Books, pp. 221-222.<sup>20</sup> Allingham, William, A Diary, p. 273. One Saturday early in 1879.<sup>21</sup> The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 27.

Carlyle's and Kant's conceptions of the nature of the Reason and of the Understanding, as well as their interpretations of the value of the distinction between the two faculties, are essentially at variance;<sup>22</sup> that Carlyle is opposed to Kant's whole explanation of the derivation and character of the moral law,<sup>23</sup> and that on the whole the essence of idealistic philosophy remained foreign to Carlyle.<sup>24</sup>

Also the verdict of the excellently qualified scholar, Dr. René Wellek, bears on the point. He seems to feel that Carlyle had a more correct grasp of Kant's ethics than he had of Kant's distinction between Reason and Understanding and of Kant's ideality of Space and Time. He says:<sup>25</sup>

Kant's opposition to Eudaemonism permeates the whole of "Wotton Reinfred." The very first sentence of the fragment [i.e., "Wotton Reinfred"] asserts: "happiness if it be the aim was never meant to be the end of our being. . . ."

However, it is noteworthy that before Carlyle had studied Kant he had shown his opposition to the ethical principle that is stated in Pope's celebrated line. Apparently about the end of 1821 Carlyle first read through Goethe's Wilhelm Meisters Lehrjahre.<sup>26</sup> Carlyle himself afterward said that as a result of his reading of Lehrjahre<sup>27</sup> he found that "No man has the right to ask for a recipe of happiness, he can do without happiness. There is something better than that. . . ."<sup>28</sup> His opposition to the ethical principle that happiness is our being's end and aim goes still further back than to the end of 1821. As early as June 4, 1820, apparently on his own account, Carlyle had reduced this popular eighteenth-century principle to an absurdity.<sup>29</sup> And on September 1, 1821, he again indicated the absurdity of the principle.<sup>30</sup> A paragraph later than the one already quoted from clears up Dr. Wellek's position:<sup>31</sup>

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., 42 —Especially on the point that Carlyle's use of Reason differs from Kant's use, see Professor C. F. Harrold's article "Carlyle's Interpretation of Kant," Philological Quarterly, VII (1928), 345-357.

<sup>23</sup> Miss Storrs, The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 52.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., p. 29.

<sup>25</sup> Wellek, René, Immanuel Kant in England 1793-1838 (Princeton University Press, 1931), pp. 188-189.

<sup>26</sup> See Wilson, David Alec, Carlyle Till Marriage (London: Kegan Paul, Trench, Trubner and Co., 1924), p. 211.

<sup>27</sup> The passage in point can be found in Carlyle's translation of Goethe's Wilhelm Meister's Apprenticeship and Travels, II, 129.

<sup>28</sup> Carlyle, Thomas, Lectures on the History of Literature . . ., edited by J. R. Greene (London: Ellis and Elvey, 1892), second edition, pp. 202-203.

<sup>29</sup> See "Eight Unpublished Letters of Thomas Carlyle," edited by R. Garnett, Archiv für das Studium der Neueren Sprachen und Literaturen, CII (1899), 322-323.

<sup>30</sup> The Love Letters of Thomas Carlyle and Jane Welsh, I, 12.

<sup>31</sup> Kant in England, p. 189.

All these three ideas: the distinction between Understanding and Reason, the ideality of Space and Time and the moral law within us, recur again and again in Carlyle's expositions of Kant and they recur with the same misinterpretations with which we find them in this half-forgotten early fragment which was published only in 1892 [i.e., "Wotton Reinfred"].

And a few pages later he concludes:<sup>32</sup>

It must be clear from the whole preceding discussion that Carlyle never came close to Kant's position. . . . In Kant he found a few appealing thoughts (or possibly mostly in second-hand reports of Kant). the general idealism and immaterialism, the ideality of space and time, the difference between Reason and Understanding, the Moral Law within us. But he gave a twist to all, which makes them Carlyle instead of Kant.

I find no proof, either from Carlyle's own statements or from expert comparison of Carlyle's doctrines with those of Kant, that Carlyle during his Scottish period read more than a part of one of Kant's works—150 pages of the Kritik der reinen Vernunft.<sup>33</sup> The more one studies Carlyle's connection with German philosophy, the more evident it becomes that Carlyle read little in the primary sources and that he derived much of his knowledge of this philosophy from secondary or popular sources. The 150 pages of Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft is the only systematic work that Carlyle is known to have read by any of the three original philosophers—Kant, Schelling, and Fichte—who appear in the record of his reading during his period in Scotland.

For the present we shall consider some secondary sources. Something has already been done in this field. For instance, Professor Harrold indicates Novalis's Fragmente as a source through which Carlyle derived knowledge of transcendental philosophy.<sup>33a</sup> Miss Storrs suggests Richter.<sup>34</sup> Dr. Wellek adds Jacobi.<sup>35</sup> I shall point out in chronological order some other important secondary sources of quite different kinds from these and from each other. But there remains, and will long remain, much to be found out on the matter.

As already indicated, Carlyle's Two Note Books, published only in a limited edition of 390 copies, throws some light, which has not been adequately examined, on the development, the extent, and the sources of Carlyle's information about German philosophy. The brief period from the fall of 1826 to the fall of 1827 seems to be the time in which

<sup>32</sup> Ibid., p. 200.

<sup>33</sup> This and similar statements herein are based on an unpublished record (some 4400 entries) of Carlyle's readings up to 1834.

<sup>33a</sup> C. F. Harrold, "Carlyle and Novalis," S.P., xxvii (1930), 48-49.

<sup>34</sup> The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 34.

<sup>35</sup> Kant in England, p. 201.

he was trying hardest to understand the systems of German thought as systems.<sup>36</sup>

So far as the records show, Carlyle's second book of German philosophy was Ideen zur Philosophie der Geschichte der Menschheit, by Herder, an opponent of Kant. On December 3, Carlyle found it an extraordinary book, but believed its conclusions very dubious.<sup>37</sup> His next philosophic entry, within two days, shows him feeling that he "half or three-fourths" understood Coleridge's distinction between an Idea and a Perception. Carlyle's entry runs thus:<sup>38</sup>

Coleridge says, "Many men live all their days without ever having an idea; and some of them with thousands of things they call ideas; but an Idea is not a Perception or Image, it cannot be painted, it is infinite." Such was his meaning (not his words). I half or three-fourths seem to understand him.

Apparently Carlyle was concerning himself with the distinction between Vernunft and Verstand in Coleridge's work The Friend. And, within two weeks, Carlyle made his first recorded philosophical statement of the permanent within the flux, which had as its basis the dis-

<sup>36</sup> In addition to the evidence already given concerning Carlyle's study of Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft, see Carlyle's Two Note Books, pp. 72-112, passim, for references to philosophic matters. See also post, pp. 817-825, in which Carlyle's reading of Schelling and Fichte is shown as part of the transition of Carlyle's interest from the theoretical aspect to the practical aspect of German philosophy. Carlyle himself points out that he did not tarry long with the German or any other systems, but he does not say how long (Lectures on the History of Literature . . ., pp. 204-205). <sup>37</sup> Two Note Books, pp. 72-73.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid., p. 78.—The passage in Coleridge to which Carlyle referred may have been the following one from the third essay in The Friend, Section the First, "On the Principle of Political Knowledge" "By the pure Reason, I mean the power by which we become possessed of principle, (the eternal verities of Plato and Descartes), and of ideas, (N B. not images) as the ideas of a point, a line, a circle, in Mathematics, and of Justice, Holiness, Free-Will, etc., in Morals" See The Works of S. T. Coleridge (Philadelphia: Crissy and Markley, 1849), p. 416 Or Carlyle may have had in mind a footnote to the postscript to the first essay in Section the Second, "On the grounds of Morals and Religion, and the Discipline of the Mind Requisite for the True Understanding of the Same." In this footnote, after explaining Particularity as one of the manifestations of the French intellect, Coleridge continued. "Hence the idolism of the French, here expressed in one of its results, viz., palpability. Ideas are here out of the question I had almost said, that Ideas and a Parisian philosopher are incompatible terms, since the latter half, I mean, of the reign of Louis XVI. But even the Conceptions of a Frenchman, whatever he admits to be conceivable, must be imageable, and the imageable must be fancied tangible—the non-apparency of either or both being accounted for by the disproportion of our senses, not by the nature of the conceptions." (The Works of S. T. Coleridge, p. 497. Closely related thoughts occur in Biographia Literaria, Chapters VIII, IX, XII, on pages 263, 266, and 288 respectively.) The probability that the passage just quoted is the one in question is somewhat strengthened by the fact that it occurs in connection with Coleridge's distinction between genius and talent (ibid., 496-498). With this distinction Carlyle had long been familiar. he had pointed to it in March 1823. (Two Note Books, pp. 46-47.)

inction between Vernunft and Verstand.<sup>39</sup> Here, as the year 1826 ended, was his first clear statement of the great phoenix idea, the permanent within the organic flux. But it had to undergo a period of development in Carlyle's mind, as all his tenets did. For the present he simply reacted against the associationalist philosophy.<sup>40</sup>

The doctrine of immortality is a doctrine of the permanent within the flux. As the new year, 1827, began, Carlyle read Moses Mendelssohn's Phädon on the subject, but concluded that immortality was to be believed by faith rather than proved to the understanding.<sup>41</sup> He was deeply confused. He added:<sup>42</sup>

For the present, I will confess it, I scarce see how we can reason with absolute certainty on the nature or fate of any thing; for it seems to me we only see our own perceptions and their relations; that is to say, our soul sees only its own partial reflex and manner of existing and conceiving. I should have this cleared up: How does Kant manage it?

However, instead of going to Kant himself to find out how Kant cleared up this matter, Carlyle went to a work by Reinhold. Although Carlyle nowhere mentions the book by name, it now appears to have been Carl Leonhard Reinhold's Beyträge zur leichtern Uebersicht des Zustandes der Philosophie bey dem Anfange des 19 Jahrhunderts.<sup>43</sup> Carlyle was reading this work early in January. And, as a result, at some time between January 1 and 16, he made the following entry in his notebook:<sup>44</sup>

<sup>39</sup> Two Note Books, pp. 83-84.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid., p. 84

<sup>41</sup> Two Note Books, pp. 96-97.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., pp. 96-97.

<sup>43</sup> Hamburg, bey Friedrich Perthes, 1801-1803, 6 vols.

<sup>44</sup> Two Note Books, p. 100 —It would be hard to say which of the two trends seen in this entry is the more characteristic of Carlyle at this period: the tendency to make a brilliant stylistic antithesis or the tendency to point out a reform for his country. At all events, little strictly philosophic tendency on Carlyle's part is revealed in this entry. The philosophic constituents of Carlyle's notes are to be found in Reinhold's distinction between Rationalism and Empiricism. On pages 12 and 13 of the first volume of Beyträge occurs this passage concerning Descartes: "Auch Ihm ist, wie dem Platon, die reale Erkenntniß, als solche, nichts anderes als die Wahrnehmung im Denken und durch Denken—das Philosophiren nichts anderes als reines, des Einflusses der Phantasie sich erwehrendes, und auf das Urwahre zurückgehendes Denken—das Urwahre nichts anderes als die Gottheit—und das Wahre—die denkenden und materiellen Wesen unter Gott." (The italics here and hereafter are Reinhold's.) Reinhold's next sentence indicates that Leibnitz developed still further than Descartes had done, these Platonic "Grundgedanken." Thus the first part of Carlyle's antithesis can be traced to Reinhold. In the second part of the antithesis, Carlyle was obviously referring to English empiricism. On page seven of the first volume of Beyträge Reinhold said that the English had given up all genuine philosophic thinking after Locke and Hume had brought to conclusion the investigations introduced into England by Bacon. Two pages further on, Reinhold explained: "Baco legte den Glauben an die Natur, und an die, an derselben sich selbst ankündigende, Gottheit, in welchen Beyden Ihm "das an sich selbst Wahre und Gewisse bestand, allen seinen Nachforschungen bald ausdrücklich, bald stillschweigend zum Grunde. Er dachte sich die ursprüngliche reale

Leibnitz and Descartes found all Truth to rest on our seeing and believing in God: we English have found our seeing and believing in God to rest on all Truth, and pretty work we have made of it!

On January 16, Carlyle made two more paragraphs of notes based on Reinhold. In both of these latter passages he mentioned Reinhold's name: in the first, he mentioned it only parenthetically; in the second, he registered a doubt as to the trustworthiness of Reinhold as a guide. The entries are as follows:

Who was Gassendi? and what were his Metaphysics? I have seen his Commentaries on Newton;<sup>45</sup> but know nothing more of him; yet he is said (by Reinhold) to be the father of the existing French Philosophy.<sup>46</sup>

Locke, Hume, Reid, etc., etc., are Empirics; Descartes, Leibnitz, Kant, etc., are Rationalists. Which is right? I begin to see some light thro' the clouds in Kantism; tho' Reinhold is somewhat of a Will-o'-wisp guide, I fear. Empiricism, if consistent, they say, leads direct to Atheism!—I am afraid it does <sup>47</sup>

---

Erkenntniss als die Wahrnehmung des Naturlichen, als solchen, und des Gotlichen am Naturlichen." On pages 10 and 11 Reinhold rounded his point on English empiricism by saying that a certain characteristic of the English nation seemed to commit England's philosophy to the empirical method and to cause even its moral and religious ideas to be based on sensation.

<sup>45</sup> Carlyle appears to be mistaken: Pierre Gassendi (1592–1655) died when Isaac Newton (1642–1727) was thirteen years old.

<sup>46</sup> This entry occurs in Carlyle's Two Note Books, p. 102. Reinhold's Beytrage contains the reference to Gassendi as an empiricist, it occurs near the end of a long sentence dealing with the influence of Malebranche, Fenelon, and Pascal. "Aber diese Männer trieben den Platonismus der Cartesianischen Philosophie, durch die etwas zu stark angebrachte Wurze mystischer Ansichten und blosser Gefühle der Religiosität, bis zu einem Extreme, welches, zumal durch seinen zu starken Contrast mit dem Nationalcharakter und den Sitten der Franzosen, nicht wenig dazu beytrug, das entgegengesetzte Extrem der griechischen Sensualphilosophie—den Gassendistischen Epikurismus—und den englischen Empiricismus in Frankreich herbey zu führen" (I, 20).

<sup>47</sup> This entry on page 102 of Two Note Books follows immediately after the one on Gassendi. In next to the last sentence Carlyle is restating in his own words the rationalist's indictments of the moral and religious implications of empiricism. He may have had in mind the following passages from Reinhold, for, in view of Reinhold's religious bias, it does not seem out of place to give the word Glauben some religious significance: "Auch im Glauben wird das Wahre nie ohne das Urwahre, und Dieses nie ohne Jenes geglaubt. Aber das Verhältniss zwischen beyden wird im blossen Glauben nur genossen und gefühlt, nicht erkannt und gedacht. Jeder mißlungene Versuch, dasselbe zu erkennen, giebt ein falsches Wissen, eine Afterphilosophie, welche, wenn und inwieferne sie nicht etwa durch den Glauben und die Liebe des Wahren niedergeschlagen, überwogen, wird, Unglauben erzeugt" (Beytrage, I, 72–73). Two pages further on, Reinhold said that speculation becomes skepticism, "wenn und inwieferne der Philosoph bey näherer Untersuchung seines angenommenen Ersten einsieht, dass dasselbe weder das Urwahre selbst seyn, noch auf ein Urwahres zurückführen könne. Aus dieser Einfach, und durch die Darstellung derselben, wird er den Beweis führen, dass die Realität der Erkenntniss durchaus fur kein Wissen

From Reinhold's biased book Carlyle seems to have derived some notions of philosophic matters in the large, to have caught sight of "some light thro' the clouds in Kantism," and, still more important with both Reinhold and Carlyle, to have sensed some of the moral and religious bearings of various systems of philosophy. Thus Reinhold's Beytrage occupied, at least for a time, the position of guide of Carlyle's thought.

In addition to using Coleridge and Reinhold, Carlyle made use of another guide to transcendental philosophy—a book review. It seems to have been in April or May of 1827 that Carlyle entered in his notebook a page full of illuminating notes concerning Kant and his successors.<sup>48</sup> I shall give them here exactly as they occur in the notebook:<sup>49</sup>

Wagner, Weiller, Hegel, Krug, are testators,<sup>50a</sup> opposers or commentators of Kant. Eschenmayer also.

Bardili's Rational Realism, is it not like the doctrine of Malebranche?

Bouterwek, System of Virtuality: "the subjective and objective are nothing without each other."

Annihilation of the Subject—Spinosism and materialism.

Fichte's Transcendental Idealism, "elimination of the object", that is deducing the not-me from the me?

Schelling's Ideal Realism, Philosophy of Nature, but usually called the System of Identity; "because it represents the subject and the object as absolutely identical and commingling and compounding themselves in intellectual intuition."—To this I can attach next to no meaning.

Fichte pretended to have deduced his system from Kant, which Kant eagerly denied. Kant's system of morality is universal in Germany, his metaphysics are und durch kein Wissen bewahrt und vergewissert werden, und dass der Versuch einer solchen Bewährung und Vergewisserung, so lange seine Unmöglichkeit nicht eingesehen wird, keinen andern Erfolg haben könne, als ein falsches Wissen zu erkunsten, und die Realität des Glaubens zu untergraben" (Beytrage, I, 75-76). Moreover, I cannot resist the feeling that there is a connection between the passages just quoted from Reinhold and still another of Carlyle's notebook entries, made, presumably, on January 16 also: "To prove the existence of God as Paley has attempted to do (a Kantian would say) is like lighting a lantern to seek for the Sun: if you look hard by your lantern, you may even miss your search" (Two Note Books, p. 103). There is still one more point in connection with Reinhold. Carlyle's discussion of the aim of "what may be called Primary or Critical philosophy" as the discovery of Urwahr, God, the Absolute (see "The State of German Literature," Essays, I, 79-81) seems reminiscent of Reinhold's allusions to certain Philosophae primae, from Descartes to the recent Germans. Reinhold's discussion involves and identifies the terms Urwahr, Gottheit, and Prius kar 'ἐξοχήν' (Beytrage, I, 12-16, and I, 71-72. Part of this first reference has already been quoted in footnote 44.)

<sup>48</sup> It is impossible to date these entries with perfect accuracy. They fall between passages dated March 1827 and January 1828. I have dated them April or May because they precede quotations from Richter, with whom Carlyle was occupied by June 4. See Letters of Thomas Carlyle, 1826-1836, edited by C. E. Norton (London: Macmillan and Co., 1889), pp. 45-46.

<sup>49</sup> Two Note Books, pp. 112-113.

disfigured, misrepresented, no longer studied in his own writings, but (says this critic) well worthy of being studied.

Kant reminded me of father Boscovich: but alas! I have only read 100 pages of his works. How difficult it is to live! How many things to do, how little strength, how little time to do them!

Although the editor of Two Note Books, appears not to have known it, these notes were based on Carlyle's reading of Part II of P. A. Stapfer's article "Problème de l'esprit humain" in the Revue Encyclopédique.<sup>50</sup> The comments—not the questions or the confessions of ignorance—were taken almost literally from Stapfer's article. These notes seem to show that at this time Carlyle knew little of the various philosophic systems of Germany.

Although Carlyle could not look upon a philosophic system with the eye of a trained philosopher, he could form a shrewd estimate of its tendencies and effects. It is toward this practical aspect that we must look to find his interest. Early in June he put aside forever, unfinished, a novel that he had begun in January.<sup>51</sup> This fragment is of some importance here, in that it indicates part of what Carlyle had seen when with Coleridge's, Reinhold's, and Stapfer's help he had looked through the clouds of Kantism. In this novel Carlyle let one character say:<sup>52</sup>

Much of this which you call Kantism seems but the more scientific expression of what all true poets and thinkers, nay, all good men, have felt more or less distinctly, and acted on the faith of, in all ages.

Moreover, Carlyle lets one of the characters say that time is an eternal now.<sup>53</sup> And he lets still another attempt a distinction between Reason and Understanding.<sup>54</sup> In these passages Carlyle was unquestionably looking to the practical rather than to the theoretical aspect of transcendental philosophy; he was chiefly concerned with the application of Kantian tenets rather than with their systematic derivation.

The next philosophic reference, in August, shows too the drift of Carlyle's interest away from the theoretical aspect to the practical. He was reading popular applications of the transcendental philosophy. That is, he was reading popular lectures by Schelling and Fichte.<sup>55</sup>

<sup>50</sup> Revue encyclopédique, XXXIII (February 1827), 414-431.—Norton identified notes on other articles in the same magazine: for example, on the article that introduced Carlyle to Saint-Simonism.

<sup>50a</sup> J. A. S. Barrett reads sectators instead of testators; See N and Q., March 10, 1934, p. 165

<sup>51</sup> Letters of Thomas Carlyle, pp. 45-46 and 20.

<sup>52</sup> Carlyle, Thomas, Last Word of Thomas Carlyle (London: Longmans, Green and Co., 1892), p. 99. The novel was called Wotten Reinfred.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid., p. 99.

<sup>54</sup> Ibid., pp. 62-63.

<sup>55</sup> Letters of Thomas Carlyle; p. 53; read with Essays, I, 83, footnote, and 59-61 and footnote.

The book of popular lectures by Schelling was Vorlesungen über die Methode des Akademischen Studiums.<sup>56</sup> In October, in the essay on "The State of German Literature," Carlyle referred to pages 105-111 of this book to point his distinction between Reason and Understanding. He admitted with frankness—too often construed as modest understatement<sup>57</sup>—that he knew only a little of Schelling's thought and was therefore not qualified to pass judgment on his system.<sup>58</sup> There is no suggestion that Carlyle at this time had made any study of Schelling's elaborate works. And during the remainder of his residence in Scotland, Carlyle left no record of reading any other work by Schelling.<sup>59</sup>

In the essay in which Carlyle showed his familiarity with the book of popular lectures by Schelling, Carlyle turned his attention to an examination of the critical philosophy in general. But it was an examination of the aim rather than of the method, of the practical application rather than of the theory. He found that the aim of the critical philosophy was to open man's inward eye to the Primatively True.<sup>60</sup> In his consideration of the distinction between Reason and Understanding, he did not examine the systematic reasoning that produced the distinction. Instead, he was occupied with the different objects and provinces with which these faculties might concern themselves.<sup>61</sup> And, finally, Carlyle believed the importance of the distinction to be "vast, nay, in these days boundless, . . . could it be scientifically established."<sup>62</sup>

The book of popular lectures by Fichte that Carlyle was reading in August 1827, along with the book by Schelling, proved to be Über das Wesen des Gelehrten.<sup>63</sup> And in the essay, finished in October 1827, Carlyle gave Fichte unqualified praise as a man and as a thinker, without attempting to judge his philosophic opinions.<sup>64</sup> He found in Fichte's book a conception of the Divine Idea that underlies experience;<sup>65</sup> he found an organic conception of human history;<sup>66</sup> and he found a con-

<sup>56</sup> Carlyle, Essays, I, 83, footnote.

<sup>57</sup> Ibid., I, 83, footnote.

<sup>58</sup> Ibid., I, 76-77.

<sup>59</sup> Dr. Wellek (Kant in England, p. 295, note 182, see also p. 201) says: "Schelling was probably quite unknown to Carlyle with the exception of the lectures 'Methode des akademischen Studiums'." And he suggests further, parenthetically, that even the passage Carlyle assigned to this work was "possibly quoted second-hand."

<sup>60</sup> Ibid., I, 81.—Also see end of footnote 47 in this paper for a suggestion of the connection of Reinhold with this viewpoint.

<sup>61</sup> Carlyle, Essays, I, 82-83.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid., I, 83.

<sup>63</sup> Letters of Thomas Carlyle, p. 53, read with Essays, I, 59-61, and footnote.

<sup>64</sup> Essays, I, 77.

<sup>65</sup> Ibid., I, 58-61.

<sup>66</sup> Carlyle's passage on pp. 58-59 of Essays, Vol. I, should be considered in relation to its context, pp. 58-61 and the footnote on p. 60. Also in the lectures On Heroes, Hero-Worship, and the Heroic in History, edited by J. C. Adams (Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1907), pp. 217-218, Carlyle ascribes to Über das Wesen des Gelehrten the notion that the manifestations of the Divine Idea change in every new generation. The idea is common ception of elect individuals who serve as heaven-appointed intermediators between the unchanging Divine Idea and the changing world of sense.<sup>67</sup> As has been indicated by Carlyle and by several critics, Carlyle's Hero-doctrine is deeply indebted to this work.<sup>68</sup> But Miss Storrs has pointed out that Carlyle did not understand the philosophic system of which the above-mentioned conceptions were parts, and that he therefore misunderstood the philosophic significance of these and of the other doctrines which he referred to Fichte.<sup>69</sup>

Miss Storrs has further pointed out that the basic metaphysical conceptions upon which Fichte's popular works were built are to be found in Fichte's early Wissenschaftslehre.<sup>70</sup> However, in the record of Carlyle's reading up to 1834, there is, to me, no convincing evidence that he read any work by Fichte except Über das Wesen des Gelehrten. Thus it would seem that part of Carlyle's misunderstanding of the philosophic significance of Fichte's doctrines is due to the smallness of his reading in Fichte. But, before one can form his judgment concerning the amount of Carlyle's reading in Fichte, there is a body of evidence to examine.

Carlyle's relation to Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre is apt to prove a snare to critics. The difficulty is a peculiar one, probably arising chiefly from Carlyle's use of the expression "Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre" in the 1829 essay on Novalis. In this essay Carlyle put into quotation marks the statement that Friedrich Schlegel and Fichte had " 'a great and abiding effect on his [Novalis's] whole life.' " <sup>71</sup> And Carlyle continued:<sup>72</sup>

Fichte, in particular, . . . had quite gained Novalis to his doctrines; indeed the Wissenschaftslehre, which, as we are told of the latter, "he studied with un-in Über das Wesen des Gelehrten see J. G. Fichte's Sämmtliche Werke, edited by I. H. Fichte (Leipzig, 1844), vi, 352, 366, 406, 415, 438, 446, or Smith's translation of The Popular Works of J. G. Fichte (London: John Chapman, 1849), i, 247, 263, 312-313, 324, 352, 361.

<sup>67</sup> Essays, i, 58-61.

<sup>68</sup> Carlyle himself first pointed out the connection between his Hero as Man of Letters and Fichte's Über das Wesen des Gelehrten. See On Heroes, Hero-Worship, and the Heroic in History, pp. 217-219.—C. E. Vaughan and B. H. Lehman both recognize Carlyle's indebtedness to Fichte's book, and both realize that Carlyle adapted for his own purposes what he took from Fichte. See Vaughan, "Carlyle and his German Masters," Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, collected by A. C. Bradley (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1910), i, 193-195, and Lehman, Carlyle's Theory of the Hero . . . (Durham, N. C.: Duke University Press, 1928), pp. 113-128, especially 122-123.—Moreover, Professor Harrold says that Carlyle appropriated ideas from Fichte's Über das Wesen des Gelehrten for his own philosophy of history. See S P, xxvii (1930), 58, footnote 55.

<sup>69</sup> The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, 53-100, especially 61, 62, 68, 69, 73, 88.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid., 62.—She thus takes issue with Vaughan (Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, i, 186), who does not consider the works of Fichte's two periods harmonious with each other.

<sup>71</sup> Essays, ii, 10.

<sup>72</sup> Ibid., ii, 10.

wearied zeal," appears to have been the groundwork of all his future speculations in Philosophy.

And still further in the essay Carlyle wrote:<sup>73</sup>

To ourselves, it somewhat illustrates the nature of Novalis's opinions, when we consider the then and present state of German metaphysical science generally, and the fact, stated above, that he gained his first notions on this subject from Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre. It is true, as Tieck remarks, "he sought to open for himself a new path in Philosophy; to unite Philosophy with Religion", and so diverged in some degree from his first instructor; or, as it more probably seemed to himself, prosecuted Fichte's scientific inquiry into its highest practical results

Thereupon Carlyle added that Novalis's metaphysical creed appeared essentially synonymous with what little he understood of Fichte's and might for present purposes be classed under the head of Kantism, or German metaphysics generally.<sup>74</sup>

The first element of the difficulty is the ambiguity of the word Wissenschaftslehre. This term might mean philosophy, in a general sense, quite as well as it might mean any particular work by Fichte. In fact the word does occur prominently in more than one of Fichte's own publications.<sup>75</sup> Furthermore there is no evidence that Carlyle thought the word signified any particular work by Fichte. In other instances besides the one in question he seems to use the words Wissenschaftslehre and philosophy interchangeably.<sup>76</sup> The solution of the difficulty lies in Tieck's Vorrede to Novalis Schriften. Two passages from it seem to have furnished the basis of Carlyle's remarks concerning Fichte's Wis-

<sup>73</sup> Essays, II, 22-23.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid., II, 23.

<sup>75</sup> When Professor Harrold (S. P., XXVII, 58, footnote 55) says that Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre, 1794, perhaps helped furnish ideas for Carlyle's philosophy of history, one supposes that he has in mind Grundlage der gesamten Wissenschaftslehre. But another work, Grundriss der gesamten Wissenschaftslehre, with the same key-word in its title, belongs to the same year. See J. G. Fichte's Sammtliche Werke, edited by J. H. Fichte (Leipzig, 1844). Miss Storrs (op. cit., pp. 60, 68, 69) also refers to Wissenschaftslehre as a book; but she gives no date of publication.

<sup>76</sup> Notice the following uses of the words Wissenschaftslehre and Philosophy interchangeably. (1) In a footnote to the Novalis essay Carlyle wrote: "Schelling, we have been informed, gives account of Fichte and his Wissenschaftslehre to the following effect: 'The Philosophy of Fichte was like lightning; it appeared only for a moment, but it kindled a fire which will burn forever'" (Essays, II, 10, note). (2) Further in the essay, Carlyle translated one of Novalis's Fragmente which contained the expression "Fichtesche Philosophie." See Novalis Schriften (Jena, 1907), II, 294. Carlyle's translation of this passage runs: "The Catholic Religion is to a certain extent applied Christianity. Fichte's Philosophy too is perhaps applied Christianity" (Essays, II, 42). But when Carlyle wrote Sartor Resartus, he, perhaps unconsciously, changed the expression "Fichte's Philosophy" to "Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre" (Sartor Resartus, p. 177 and note).

senschaftslehre and Novalis. Tieck had written thus concerning Novalis:<sup>77</sup>

In der Philosophie hatte er vorzüglich Spinoza und Fichte studiert; aber er suchte nacher eine eigne Bahn, die Philosophie mit der Religion zu vereinigen, und so wurden ihm, was wir von den Neuplatonikern besitzen, sowie die Schriften den Mystiker, sehr wichtig.

And after speaking of the very warm friendship that existed between Novalis and Friedrich Schlegel, Tieck had said:<sup>78</sup> auch Fichte lernte er [i.e., Novalis] kennen, und diese beiden Geister hatten einen grossen und bleibenden Einfluss auf sein ganzes Leben. Er studierte nach einiger Zeit die Wissenschaftslehre mit unermüdlichem Eifer.

It will be noticed that the particular term that has caused trouble, Wissenschaftslehre,<sup>79</sup> here simply means philosophy, and has no reference to any particular work by Fichte. In failing to translate it into the English equivalent—philosophy—Carlyle has, unintentionally perhaps, thrown out a false clue. But it should mislead no more. With the Tieck Preface to Novalis Schriften in his hands Carlyle did not need to have read Fichte's technical philosophy to make the statements that occur in the Novalis essay. In saying that Novalis gained his first notions of modern German philosophy from Fichte's Wissenschaftslehre, which was the groundwork of Novalis's further philosophic speculations, Carlyle was merely restating, as he repeatedly hints, Tieck's statement of the matter.

There are still other works by Fichte that have been assigned an influence upon Carlyle. Probably it is the striking similarity of titles that has led critics to search Fichte's Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters for similarities to Carlyle's "Characteristics."<sup>80</sup> Professor

<sup>77</sup> Novalis Schriften, I, xxi. This Vorrede by Tieck was reprinted from the third edition of Novalis Schriften, 1815. Carlyle used the fourth edition, 1826. See Carlyle's Essays, II, 1, footnote

<sup>78</sup> Novalis Schriften, Bd I, x.

<sup>79</sup> The printer's type that is used for this word in Tieck's Vorrede is in no way distinguished from the type used for the rest of the passage. Nor is there any other distinguishing mark. A change in type was the customary distinction for book titles then in German, as now in English.

<sup>80</sup> But such a line of reasoning would, if one wished, lead him just as logically to the third Earl of Shaftesbury's Characteristics of Men, Manners, Opinions, Times. According to Carlyle's own statements he read this work twice: the first reading came before December 4, 1826 (Two Note Books, pp. 71-72), the second, before October 15, 1832 (Essays, III, 200). At least one of these readings, and possibly both, came before he wrote the essay "Characteristics." A more modern English instance would be Hazlitt's Characteristics, in the Manner of Rochefortcauld's Maxims. In the fall of 1831, just before writing "Characteristics," Carlyle was much interested in Hazlitt. While he was still balancing between an essay "On Man" and one "On Authors" (Two Note Books, p. 212), he read Hazlitt's Table

Harrold believes that this work by Fichte furnished ideas for Carlyle's philosophy of history.<sup>81</sup> And Professor Lehman presents evidence for what he believes to be a slight influence of Fichte's work on Carlyle's Hero-doctrine.<sup>82</sup> One idea that Professor Lehman presents is particularly striking.<sup>83</sup> In Fichte's Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters, Fichte distinguishes four different modes by which the Divine Idea may manifest itself in the world of sense: these various modes are (1) Art, (2) Social Relations, (3) Science, and (4) Religion.<sup>84</sup> Professor Lehman compares three of these distinctions with Carlyle's Hero-doctrine. He says:<sup>85</sup>

... we have here the hero as Divinity, Prophet, and Priest, in the fourth; as King and Man of Letters in the second; as Poet in the first.

As Professor Lehman knows, one has to use considerable imagination to bring Carlyle's Divinity, his Prophet, his Priest, his King, his Man of Letters, and his Poet out of Fichte's general divisions of Religion, Social Relations, and Art. But that is not the point at issue. My point now is that the same effort of the imagination will just as readily bring all of them out of Fichte's five-fold division in Über das Wesen des Gelehrten. And from this work it will far more readily bring two of them: Carlyle's Man of Letters and his King. In this Über das Wesen des Gelehrten Fichte stipulates the following five modes whereby the Divine Idea manifests itself through men in the world of sense: (1) Legislation, (2) Natural Science (Knowledge of Nature), (3) Religion, (4) Philosophic Science (Knowledge of the Divine Idea), and (5) Art.<sup>86</sup> In short, these five modes in Über das Wesen des Gelehrten include the previously mentioned four. It must be borne in mind that Carlyle is otherwise known to have read, and to have been influenced by, Über das Wesen des Gelehrten. As we have already seen, it was in Fichte's conception of the nature of the scholar in this work that Carlyle found, or thought he found, his conception of the Hero as Man of Letters. Also, Carlyle's conception of the Hero as King shows more notable similarity to Über das Wesen des Gelehrten than to Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters. The Legislator in the second lecture of the former work is at least as suggestive of Carlyle's King as is anything in the

---

Talk (Ibid., p. 213). Eventually he decided on the former topic, "On Man." "Characteristics" was the result. And in this very essay he made a pointed statement concerning Hazlitt (Essays, III, 32).

<sup>81</sup> S. P., xxvii, 58, footnote 55.

<sup>82</sup> Lehman, Carlyle's Theory of the Hero, pp. 114-116.

<sup>83</sup> It, alone, in this evidence looks strong enough to support the charge of influence, but it runs foul of Über das Wesen des Gelehrten, and sinks, as we shall see.

<sup>84</sup> Fichte's Werke, vii, 58-60 (Smith's translation of The Popular Works of J. G. Fichte, II, 57-59).

<sup>85</sup> Lehman, Carlyle's Theory of the Hero, p. 116.

<sup>86</sup> Fichte's Werke, vi, 369-371 (Smith's translation of Popular Works, I, 267-269).

discussion of Social Relations in the latter work. Moreover, in the seventh lecture of the former work, Über das Wesen des Gelehrten, Fichte gives a discussion of the guide of human affairs.<sup>87</sup> And, finally, the eighth of these lectures concerns itself primarily with the Ruler.<sup>88</sup> One may look further and still be unconvinced that Carlyle was influenced by Fichte's Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters.

Miss Storrs indicates a passage in Carlyle's "The State of German Literature" which, she says, "might seem to refer to the Characteristics of the Present Age [by Fichte] rather than to the Nature of the Scholar."<sup>89</sup> The passage in Carlyle's essay runs: "For each age, by the law of its nature, is different from every other age, and demands a different representation of the Divine Idea, the essence of which is the same in all; so that the literary man of one century is only by mediation and re-interpretation applicable to the wants of another."<sup>90</sup> But this conception of organic change in the manifestation of the Divine Idea in different ages is common in Fichte's Über das Wesen des Gelehrten.<sup>91</sup> Moreover, in "The State of German Literature" Carlyle indicated Fichte's Über das Wesen des Gelehrten as the source of it.<sup>92</sup>

What at first glance appeared to me to offer a more striking parallel than the passage pointed out by Miss Storrs occurs in a statement of Carlyle's concerning different epochs in human history, as follows:<sup>93</sup>

Every society, every Polity, has a spiritual principle; is the embodiment, tentative and more or less complete, of an Idea: all its tendencies of endeavour, specialities of custom, its laws, politics and whole procedure (as the glance of some Montesquieu, across innumerable superficial entanglements, can partly decipher), are prescribed by an Idea, and flow naturally from it, as movements from the living source of motion. This Idea, be it of devotion to a man or class of men, to a creed, to an institution, or even, as in more ancient times, to a piece of land, is ever a true Loyalty; has in it something of a religious, paramount, quite infinite character; it is properly the Soul of the State, its Life; mysterious as other forms of Life, and like these working secretly, and in a depth beyond that of consciousness.

<sup>87</sup> Fichte's Werke, vi, 415 (Smith's translation of Popular Works, i, 324).

<sup>88</sup> Fichte's Werke, vi, 420-428 (Smith's translation of Popular Works, i, 330-339).

<sup>89</sup> Storrs, The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 87. <sup>90</sup> Essays, i, 58-59.

<sup>91</sup> See Fichte's Werke, vi, 352 (Smith's translation of Popular Works, i, 247); Werke, vi, 366 (Popular Works, i, 263); Werke, vi, 406 (Popular Works, i, 312-313); Werke, vi, 415 (Popular Works, i, 324); Werke, vi, 438 (Popular Works, i, 352); Werke, vi, 446 (Popular Works, i, 361).

<sup>92</sup> Carlyle's passage on pp. 58-59 of Essays, i, should be considered in relation to its context, pp. 58-61 and the footnote on p. 60. Also in Heroes and Hero-Worship, pp. 217-218, Carlyle ascribes to Über das Wesen des Gelehrten the notion that the manifestations of the Divine Idea change in every new generation. <sup>93</sup> Essays, iii, 13-14.

One might take this statement for a reflection of Fichte's doctrine concerning the "Idea of the Age." But closer examination shows greater difference than similarity. Carlyle's idea or spiritual principle of a society or polity was decipherable only partially to the historian, after he had examined the phenomena of the age. It worked, he said, "secretly, and in a depth beyond that of consciousness."

This Idea, be it of devotion to a man or class of men, to a creed, to an institution, or even . . . to a piece of land, is ever a true Loyalty.

Apparently it was a devotion to some object existing in time, and was simply a loyalty of individuals. Fichte's notion was almost opposite in meaning. According to Fichte, only the abstract philosopher could adequately describe the Age: he would, said Fichte,<sup>94</sup> independently of all experience, seek out an Idea of the Age (which indeed in its own form,—as Idea,—cannot be apparent in experience), and exhibit the mode in which this Idea would reveal itself under the forms of the necessary phenomena of the Age. . . .

The philosopher, according to Fichte, would deduce absolutely a priori all the possible phenomena of existence from the Unity of his presupposed principle.<sup>95</sup> Furthermore, Fichte says, "he must be able a priori to describe Time as a whole, and all its possible Epochs."<sup>96</sup> The more one sees of such examples, the more he feels the force of Miss Storrs' statement that the theories of history held by Fichte and Carlyle differ fundamentally.<sup>97</sup> She of course is speaking from a strictly philosophic rather than from a popular or from a practical point of view.

Miss Storrs concludes her comparison of Carlyle's "Characteristics" and Fichte's Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters with the following:<sup>98</sup>

. . . while many of Carlyle's phrases strongly recall Fichte, and were very probably suggested by the philosopher, they are divorced from their original significance, and used in the presentation of so different an argument, that the similarity is largely of word, where it is not of transitory detail.

Possibly these phrasal resemblances to which Miss Storrs alludes would be traceable to other sources if our knowledge were complete. At all events, there is insufficient evidence that Carlyle was familiar with the Grundzüge des gegenwärtigen Zeitalters.

Fichte's Staatslehre calls for only brief mention. This work is nowhere mentioned in the record of Carlyle's reading up to the year 1834. Miss

<sup>94</sup> Fichte's Werke, VII, 4 and 5 (Popular Works, II, 2 and 3).

<sup>95</sup> Fichte's Werke, VII, 4 and 5 (Popular Works, II, 2 and 3).

<sup>96</sup> Fichte's Werke, VII, 5 (Popular Works, II, 3).

<sup>97</sup> The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 78.

<sup>98</sup> Ibid., p. 80.

Storrs for some reason ignores the work. It seems probable that Professor Lehman takes it up for consideration only because of Professor Vaughan's broad, confident, but unproved suggestion that it influenced Carlyle.<sup>99</sup> At any rate the former writes:<sup>100</sup>

It would seem that Professor Vaughan's attribution of the doctrine of Heroes to what Carlyle found "between the lines of Das Wesen des Gelehrten" but "written large in the more systematic exposition of the Staatslehre" is misleading if not downright wrong.

Professor Lehman then proceeds to dispose of the Staatslehre by quoting some passages that only in a general way connect themselves with the Hero-idea.<sup>101</sup> In stating that these five winnowed-out passages leave the reader unconvinced of Carlyle's indebtedness to Fichte's Staatslehre, it is only fair for me to repeat that Professor Lehman introduced his examination of this work as a correction of Professor Vaughn's attribution of Carlyle's Hero-doctrine to what he found in the Staatslehre. It appears that the case must be dismissed because of lack of evidence.

This discussion of Carlyle's connection with Fichte's works gives evidence for my opinion that, up to 1834, at least, Carlyle had read only one of the works by Fichte that he has been supposed to have read. This one work was Über das Wesen des Gelehrten.<sup>102</sup> And the reading of this book of popular lectures late in 1827 brings to a close the record of Carlyle's readings in German philosophy during the year 1826-27.

By suggesting 1826-27 as the period in which Carlyle was trying hardest to understand the systems of German philosophy as systems, I do not mean to minimize the part played by the poets and the æsthetic writers who, both before and during this period, helped Carlyle toward his transcendental tenets. More will be said of them at another time. There seems no reason to doubt Professor Harrold's belief that Novalis was an important source through which Carlyle derived knowledge of transcendental philosophy.<sup>103</sup> But I would point out now, that when Carlyle read Novalis the second time, in January 1829,<sup>104</sup> he read him

<sup>99</sup> Vaughan, "Carlyle and His German Masters," Essays and Studies by Members of the English Association, I, 193-194.

<sup>100</sup> Lehman, Carlyle's Theory of the Hero, pp. 117-118.

<sup>101</sup> Ibid., p. 118

<sup>102</sup> Dr. Wellek writes: "An analysis of Carlyle's relation to Fichte would lead to the same negative results [as did Dr. Wellek's analysis of Carlyle's relation to Kant], even if it can be shown that Carlyle borrowed certain phrases and little tags of speech and that Fichte had some influence on his theory of the hero." (Kant in England, p. 201.)

<sup>103</sup> Harrold, "Carlyle and Novalis," S. P., xxvii (1930), 48-49.

<sup>104</sup> Letters of Thomas Carlyle, 137, when read with Two Note Books, 135 and 140. Carlyle's first reading of Novalis seems to have been in the year 1825-26 (see Carlyle's translation, German Romance, I, 260).

for his philosophy of life and interpretation of life rather than to discover a system of thought. And I would suggest that Novalis's chief service to Carlyle lay in showing him Natural Supernaturalism, which served him as a transition from Transcendentalism to Poetic Realism.

There are a few more facts that are worthy of place here because of their close connection with my topic. A letter written by Carlyle in 1841 throws some light over the matter of what he read and admired in German philosophy. In this letter he was advising two young men as to how they might find their way about in German philosophy. He mentioned only four works; three of them we have already considered in this paper. The first of these works, in order of importance, was Kant's Kritik der reinen Vernunft. Carlyle thought it the key to all German thought.<sup>105</sup> And he thought that perhaps the sole value of German philosophy was the fact that it offered "deliverance from the fatal incubus of Scotch or French philosophy, with its mechanisms and its Atheisms."<sup>106</sup> Bright in Carlyle's memory beyond all other works he had read on the subject of German philosophy were the two books of popular lectures that we have already noticed: Schelling's Über die Methode des Akademischen Studiums and Fichte's Über das Wesen des Gelehrten.<sup>107</sup> The fourth book that Carlyle mentioned in 1841 was a two-volume life and literary correspondence of Fichte, prepared by his son.<sup>108</sup> On account of Carlyle's statement on March 17, 1832, that he intended writing an essay on Fichte,<sup>109</sup> one would guess that he came into contact with this biography at London in 1831-32. By the end of 1831, Carlyle had denounced the systematic side of all philosophic speculation,<sup>110</sup> and at this time was probably interested in Fichte primarily from the biographical standpoint.<sup>111</sup> At all events, in 1841, Carlyle wrote two young men struggling with German philosophy that this work was worth their reading because of the general glimpse it gave of the whole field of German thought.<sup>112</sup>

Besides the four works that the letter of 1841 recommended, three more works with which Carlyle became acquainted at various times

<sup>105</sup> Espinasse, Literary Recollections and Sketches, p. 59. It is interesting, and perhaps significant, that Madame de Stael had advanced the same opinion in the book that introduced Carlyle to German literature and thought (Germany, III, 71).

<sup>106</sup> Espinasse, Literary Recollections and Sketches, p. 59.

<sup>107</sup> Ibid., p. 59 and footnote

<sup>108</sup> Ibid., p. 59.—The work alluded to appears to have been J. G. Fichte's Leben und literarischen Briefwechsel, edited by I. H. Fichte (1830-31).

<sup>109</sup> Two Note Books, p. 255.

<sup>110</sup> Essays, III, 25.

<sup>111</sup> On June 13, 1833, he called attention to this attitude of biographical interest even toward philosophers (Letters of Thomas Carlyle to John Stuart Mill . . . , p. 57).

<sup>112</sup> Espinasse, Literary Recollections and Sketches, p. 59.

after 1827 may be briefly mentioned here. The first of the three is a review of Friedrich Schlegel's philosophy of life, probably in the Janaische Allgemeine Literatur Zeitung for March 1828.<sup>113</sup> The second is the book of lectures in which Schlegel presented his philosophy of life. At some time in 1830 the lectures that had been completed at Schlegel's death were published under the title Philosophische Vorlesungen, insbesondere über Philosophie der Sprache und des Wortes. And before August 4, 1831, Carlyle had procured the book and read it.<sup>114</sup> The essay "Characteristics," purporting to be in part a review of this work, contains Carlyle's denunciation of all philosophic systems as systems.<sup>115</sup> The third, and last, work to be mentioned here is a translation from Fichte's works, in which Carlyle was reading at some time between 1840 and 1850.<sup>116</sup> Probably it was William Smith's translation called The Popular Works of J. G. Fichte.<sup>117</sup> And perhaps Carlyle's reason for reading in it may be seen in Miss Storr's statement that Smith's translation was inscribed "to Thomas Carlyle . . . with his permission. . . ."<sup>118</sup> Whatever the reason for this reading, Carlyle had definitely fallen away from his old admiration; he now thought Fichte "a thick skinned fellow."<sup>119</sup> A detailed study of this alienation from Fichte would lead us back to Carlyle's change from Transcendentalism to Poetic Realism.

HILL SHINE

Maryville College

<sup>113</sup> Carlyle, Two Note Books, p. 129.—I have had no opportunity to examine the German journal to see if my guess is right.

<sup>114</sup> Macvey Napier, Selections from the Correspondence of Macvey Napier, Esq., edited by his son, Macvey Napier (London: Macmillan and Co., 1879), pp. 116-117. See also Illustrated Memorial Volume of the Carlyle's House Purchase Fund Committee with Catalogue of Carlyle's Books, Manuscripts, Pictures, and Furniture exhibited therein, p. 88.

<sup>115</sup> Essays, III, 25.

<sup>116</sup> Espinasse, Literary Recollections and Sketches, p. 220.

<sup>117</sup> Dr. Wellek, who has examined an 1848 edition of this translation in the library of the Carlyle House in Chelsea, writes of it: "The body of the book is obviously unread, the introduction has marginal notes in Carlyle's hand" (Kant in England, p. 295, note 182).

<sup>118</sup> The Relation of Carlyle to Kant and Fichte, p. 99. Also Professor Harrold informs me that his copy of Smith's translation, dated 1873, bears this inscription. However, I have seen only a copy of the 1849 edition; it contains no such inscription.

<sup>119</sup> Espinasse, Literary Recollections and Sketches, p. 220. Instead of going to primary sources, Carlyle appears to have relied upon secondary or popular writings, such as a survey work by Reinhold, a book review by Stapfer, and a preface by Tieck.

UN JOVEN DE PROVECHO: AN UNPUBLISHED PLAY
BY B. PÉREZ GALDÓS

WHEN, in 1892, Galdós startled Spanish literary circles by his decision to turn dramatist, few of either his supporters or his detractors were aware of the fact that as far back as his student days he had already carried on a serious flirtation with the drama. Certainly in the confused discussions which his dramatic appearance as playwright precipitated in the press of Madrid, no more than an occasional passing reference was made to his previous essays at the theater.<sup>1</sup> It seems that only two newspapers gave adequate space to Galdós' early preparation for the career of a dramatist and these reproduced an article by Eusebio Blasco, originally published in France.<sup>2</sup> Because they are pertinent to our discussion, the principal facts in Blasco's article merit repetition.

In 1867, Galdós submitted two dramatic works to Manuel Catalina, at that time the director of the Teatro Español.<sup>3</sup> After three years of patient waiting, the aspiring young dramatist, armed with a letter of recommendation from Federico Balart, appeared before Blasco who was to intercede with Catalina in his behalf. That very day Blasco called on the negligent director who, by way of an apology for his obvious remissness, characterized the two dramas thus: "Sí, ya sé . . . un drama histórico muy malo, y unca comedia dramática muy violenta . . ." Blasco, who earlier in the day had been intrigued by Galdós' seriousness, modesty, and apparent indifference into reading the plays, formulated his own opinion as follows:

La comedia me pareció hermosísima; era poa el estilo de lo que en Francia ha producido más tarde el Teatro Libre. Un drama íntimo, que, sin ningún género de duda, estaba por encima de nuestro público de entonces.

Since he failed to pass judgment on the historical drama, Blasco evidently agreed with Catalina about its deficiencies and pleaded only for the comedy. The director, however, could not be persuaded to favor the second work either. "¡Quia!" he replied. "No es posible; el drama es demasiado crudo, y sobre todo, el autor no es conocido."

<sup>1</sup> Galdós' early experience with the drama has been adequately discussed by Professor Jacob Warshaw in his article on "Galdós' Apprenticeship in the Drama," MLN, iv (1929), 459-463.

<sup>2</sup> The Galdós family has preserved in San Quintin an apparently complete file, started by the author himself, of the principal reviews and articles written about his dramas. The article in question appeared in La Iberia (April 2, 1892) and in La Justicia (March 26, 1892). The dates may be slightly inaccurate; they were furnished by a clipping company.

<sup>3</sup> The Teatro Príncipe, according to Galdós. Cf. L. A. del Olmet and A. Gracia Carrafia, Galdós (Madrid, 1912), p. 29.

One may safely assume that the "drama histórico muy malo" is the now oft-mentioned but never seen La expulsión de los moriscos.<sup>4</sup> Concerning the identity of the "comedia dramática muy violenta" there can be only very broad speculation. Possibly it is the dramatic work mentioned by Clarín in his highly penetrating biographical sketch of Galdós published in 1889. Galdós wrote to his biographer:<sup>5</sup>

Tengo una idea muy vaga que en los tres ó cuatro años que precedieron á la revolución del 68 me ocurrían á mí unas cosas muy raras. Hice algunos ensayos de obras de teatro, todo bastante mediano, excepto una cosa que me parece que era menos mala, si bien me alegro de que no hubiera pasado de las Musas al teatro . . .

And while Galdós' exasperating identification of the tolerably bad play as "una cosa" does not exclude the possibility that he had in mind La expulsión de los moriscos, the words "menos mala" might refer to the comedy which elicited high praise from Blasco in 1870. Again, the modest description might also fit El hombre fuerte, the play which Eduardo de Lustonó made known in 1902.<sup>6</sup> The temptation is naturally very strong to conclude that this work is identical with the comedy mentioned by Blasco, but the passages reproduced by Lustonó reveal none of the qualities attributed by Blasco to the second of the two dramatic efforts which Galdós submitted to Catalina in 1867. Finally, but without insisting too much, we may suggest the case of Un joven de provecho<sup>7</sup> as another possibility.

This four-act original comedy in prose is thus far the only extant complete dramatic composition of the many which Galdós wrote before

<sup>4</sup> Galdós apparently did not agree with Catalina. Speaking of this drama in 1912, he said: "A Catalina le gustó mucho y estuvo á punto de representarse, pero . . . no se representó. ¿Por qué? Por lo que no se representan las obras de los que empiezan." (Cf. del Olmet, op. cit., pp. 29-30) It should be noted that the reason advanced by Galdós for the failure of La expulsión de los moriscos to reach the boards coincides with the second part of Catalina's reason for rejecting the comedy which Galdós submitted in 1867.

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Leopoldo Alas, Galdós, in Obras completas, I (Madrid, 1912), pp. 20-21.

<sup>6</sup> Cf. El primer drama de Galdós, in Nuestro tiempo, I, 13 (1902), 155-165—Lustonó's suggestion that this is Galdós' first play is obviously unfounded; it is not even his first attempt at dramatic writing in verse. Cf. Arunci, Quien mal hace, bien no espere. Ensayo dramático en un acto y en verso . . . Benito Perez Galdós, año 1861, in El Globo (Jan. 27, 1894).

<sup>7</sup> I am gratefully indebted to María Pérez-Galdós de Verde for permission to examine in 1931 her father's miscellaneous and unclassified papers among which I had the good fortune to come upon this hitherto unknown play in Galdós' handwriting and bearing his signature.

he definitely decided to dedicate himself to the novel. We are led to believe that for a time Galdós had saved all his efforts in behalf of an improved Spanish theater, although very frequently he was tempted to destroy them,<sup>8</sup> but Un joven de provecho he must have regarded as of sufficient merit to be preserved permanently. It is therefore not unlikely that this is the play Galdós had in mind in his statement to Clarín in 1889. Even more plausible does it seem that this is the companion work to La expulsión de los moriscos, for its qualities do bear out to some extent Blasco's characterization. Particularly significant is Blasco's opinion that the comedy would have been too advanced for the Spanish public of the sixties. Many years later Galdós remarked, perhaps not too seriously, that the period of the Revolution of 1868 inspired him to revolutionize Spanish literature with his dramas.<sup>9</sup>

Un joven de provecho was probably written before 1868. Lustonó's is the only assertion that Galdós wrote plays as late as October, 1870, this being the date assigned to El hombre fuerte.<sup>10</sup> Lustonó very manifestly had inadequate information about Galdós' early dramatic career, it would have been more accurate to claim that in 1870 Galdós was still seeking an outlet for the plays which he had written several years before. The novelist's statement to Clarín in 1889 and to his interviewers, del Olmet and García Carraffa, in 1912—to both of which we have referred above—makes it fairly clear that by 1868 he had very definitely committed himself to the career of novelist exclusively. Even in his last years Galdós suggested approximately this date as marking the end of his youthful dramatic essays. Speaking of his first trip to Paris, he says in his Memorias.<sup>11</sup>

Con las personas que me llevaron a París volví a Madrid sin incidente notable, y en el intervalo entre este primer viaje y el segundo, 1868, saqué del cajón donde yacían mis comedias y dramas y los encontré hechos polvo; quiero decir, que me parecieron ridículos y dignos de perecer en el fuego. Pasados algunos meses, reanudé mi trabajo literario, y, sin descuidar mis estudios en la Universidad, me lancé a escribir La Fontana de Oro . . .

Internal evidence in Un joven de provecho, though too scant and too uncertain to be used very seriously, also argues in favor of approximately 1867 as the year of composition. In Act II, Scene 5, mention is made of a minister, "el célebre Villaurrutia, que en paz descansa," who held a portfolio ten years before the time of the play. Thus far all efforts to identify this would-be celebrated statesman have been unsuccessful; even the only living descendant of the Villaurrutia family, the Marqués

<sup>8</sup> Cf. B. Pérez Galdós, Memorias, in Obras inéditas, x (Madrid, 1930), p. 37.

<sup>9</sup> Loc. cit.

<sup>10</sup> Op. cit., p. 155.

<sup>11</sup> P. 41.

de Villa-Urrutia, has no knowledge of this personage<sup>11a</sup>. However, in the Espasa encyclopedia there does appear a Spanish statesman by the name of Wenceslao Villaurrutia y Puente (1790-1866), but he is not described as ever having held a cabinet post in Spain. In fact, it would seem that in 1816 this person settled definitely in Cuba and died there.<sup>12</sup> In any event, it is difficult to believe that Galdós was referring to a real figure of the period, for his characterization of Villaurrutia is highly uncomplimentary, even libelous. "Aquel ministro era un hombre corrompido, y vicioso, que escandalizaba al país con sus licenciosas costumbres . . ."<sup>13</sup> Even the distant and disinherited relatives of the deceased minister would have taken serious offense at this unflattering sketch. Another bit of internal evidence is helpfully suggestive but not conclusive: the newspaper La Iberia is spoken of in Act II, Scene 3. According to Hartzenbusch, there were published in Madrid before 1870 two newspapers with the name of La Iberia: one ran from 1842 to 1843 and the other from 1854 to 1866.<sup>14</sup> Since Galdós' reference must have been to the second paper, the date of Un joven de provecho would thus become definitely 1866. Still another clue is offered by the phrase "más tronado que Carrasco" which appears in Act III, Scene 8. This expression does not appear as a stock Spanish idiom in the standard dictionaries and was probably used by Galdós with playful reference to Agustín Carrasco, Spanish economist of the middle of the nineteenth century.<sup>15</sup> Again, one might adduce as significant evidence the fact that the handwriting in Un joven de provecho scarcely differs from that in the Galdós manuscripts of 1861 and 1862 preserved in the Museo Canario of Las Palmas.<sup>16</sup> Finally, in the matter of orthography, the several instances where Galdós confuses the letter "z," "c," and "s" suggest that he was still under the influence of the pronunciation of the Canary Islands.<sup>17</sup> In short, it seems safe to assert that Un joven de provecho was written before 1868.

The manuscript of the comedy is in four parts, each act being bound separately. It is written only on the recto side of ruled paper of loose-leaf notebook size, and the pagination is as follows: title-page, p. 1; Perso-

<sup>11a</sup> The Marqués de Villa-Urrutia has died since the writing of this article in 1932.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. LXVIII, 1529.

<sup>13</sup> See Act II, Scene 5.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Eugenio Hartzenbusch, Periódicos de Madrid (Madrid, 1876), p. 293.

<sup>15</sup> The article in the Espasa encyclopedia (XI, 1299) does not give the dates of Carrasco; it does, however, speak of two of his works on economics which appeared in 1867 and 1872 respectively. A few of the official titles held by Carrasco will perhaps show the appropriateness of the phrase coined by Galdós. He was: "Segundo Jefe de las Direcciones Generales de Propiedades y Derechos del Estado y de Contribuciones"; "Inspector General de Hacienda"; "Contador Central y Jefe de la Deuda Pública."

<sup>16</sup> See in Hispanic Review, I, 2 a facsimile page of the manuscript of 1861.

<sup>17</sup> Galdós spells as follows. agazajo, martirize, pretencion, etc.

nages, p. 2; Act I, pp. 3-31; Act II, pp. 33-69; Act III, pp. 70-99; Act IV, pp. 100-124. Changes and erasures are relatively few, and not in one single instance does this manuscript reveal Galdós' well-known idiosyncrasy of drawing pictures over the deleted portions of his "cuartillas," a practice already in evidence on a small scale in the manuscripts of his childhood writings. Here and there a mechanical error can be encountered: confusion of the names of the characters, misspelled words, inconsistent and faulty punctuation. On the whole, however, the handwriting is so even, uniformly neat, and legible that one suspects this was not the original draft. In all probability, and especially in view of the fact that each act is bound separately (a procedure which Galdós followed in later years), this was the copy intended for stage use. The whole appearance of the manuscript suggests extreme care on the part of the author that the outer form of the comedy enhance its intrinsic qualities.

In reproducing the text it has seemed advisable to make no corrections of any sort, since in no instance do the author's errors obscure his meaning. Spelling, punctuation, capitalization, and italicization remain unaltered; but in the case of abbreviations the rest of the word is supplied between brackets in keeping with conventional practice. The few footnotes are intended merely as a means of pointing out occasionally an interesting detail which, because it is of slight consequence, would otherwise escape the notice of the reader.

UN JOVEN DE PROVECHO

COMEDIA ORIGINAL EN CUATRO ACTOS EN PROSA

B. PÉREZ GALDÓS

PersonagesSofíaEugeniaAlejandroEl MarquésDn JoaquínCárlosJacintoSimón, criadoLa escena es en Madrid y contemporaneaSofía (36 años) madre de Carlos, cuñada del marques*Eugenia* (20 años) hija del*Marqués* (50 años)D. Joaquín (60 años) amigo del Marques*Alejandro* (36 años)Cárlos (20 años) hijo de Sofía, sobrino del Marques*Jacinto* (40 años) amigo de AlejandroSimón, criado de d. Joaquín.

ACTO PRIMERO

Sala lujosa en casa del Marqués

Escena primeraEugenia sentada y muy pensativa. El Marqués, que entra por la izquierda.Marqués. No te has arreglado aun?Eugenia. (levantándose) Pero ya es hora?Marq(ués). (mira el reloj) Mientras llegamos á la estacion . . . Parece que no tienes prisa por ver á tu madrina ni á tu primo.Eug(enia). Que no tengo prisa? Cuando Vd. recibió la carta en que le anunciaban repentinamente su llegada, me puse tan alegre, tan impaciente que las horas me han parecido siglos.Marq(ués). No—tu andas un poco distraida. Hace poco sí mostrabas deseos de ver á tu primo Cárlos, que es hoy, segun me han dicho, un joven de merito incontestable . . . Ya le verás, ya le veras hoy; y me alegro de que venga tambien su madre, mi cuñada Sofía, que te quiere como una hermana, y que ahora me ayudará a hacerte entrar en razon.Eug(enia). Acaso estoy loca?Marq(ués). Así, así . . . En fin, despues hablaremos. Ve á arreglarte . . . No les hagamos esperar.Eug(enia). Es que lo que Vd. me ha dicho . . . Explíqueme Vd.Marq(ués). Despues, despues, hija mia . . . (en tono de repension) Despues hablaremos despacio, porque el asunto es grave.Eug(enia). (impaciente) Y por qué no ahora? Estoy impaciente.Marq(ués). Y yo muy enojado.

- Eug(enia)*. Por qué papá? Vd . . . conmigo . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Si señorita . . . su papa de Vd. está enojado, y con mucha razon.
- Eug(enia)*. Yo desenojaré á mi papa, á quien jamas he ofendido, ni puedo ofender.
- Marq(ués)*. Lo que es ahora . . . (con severidad) Si, Eugenia: ya lo sé todo, ya conozco tus secretos.
- Eug(enia)*. No será ningun secreto que me perjudique.
- Marq(ués)*. Así, así. Esta mañana me lo han dicho. Yo no sospechaba nada . . . Como habia de pensar . . . Te diré de una vez mi resolucion. Las pretensiones de ese caballero me han disgustado mucho, y de ninguna manera puedo consentir . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Oh! Vd. juzga muy de ligero . . .
- Marq(ués)*. No . . . no juzgo de ligero . . . (confuso) Pero si no he vuelto aun de mi asombro . . . Te digo que me quedé viendo visiones esta mañana, cuando llegó Joaquín y me dijo que Alejandro te ama, y lo que es peor, que tu le amas tambien; y lo que es peor aun, que quiere casarse contigo. Y yo sin sospechar! . . . Como no me habias dicho nada?
- Eug(enia)*. Quería Vd. que yo le dijera . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Que niñas estas! . . . Pero cuando han principiado esos amores? —Hace poco mas ó menos un mes que vino ese hombre á mi casa por primera vez . . . Yo le conocí en el Congreso, donde nos hicimos amigos, amigos particulares nada mas, porque políticos . . . ¡que disparate! . . . Despues . . . ya me ha chocado la frecuencia con que viene á casa de noche y de día. Explícame tu . . . Como en tan poco tiempo . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Vds. le elogiaban tanto; Vd. mismo le ponía por esas nubes . . . Todos encarecian su talento, su superioridad . . . Luego, cuando le traté y siempre que hablábamos, encontraba tan justificada aquella opinion entusiasta . . . todo lo que el decia se me figuraba tan superior, tan fuera de lo comun, que . . . Ahora si quieren Vds. que amemos á los tontos . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Ya . . . te ha trastornado el juicio con palabritas. Estos hombres elocuentes son la gran calamidad de nuestro país . . . Con un poco de imaginacion, y unas cuantas frases . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Ademas Alejandro es un hombre de bien, una persona digna y formal. Ni sus mayores enemigos lo niegan.
- Marq(ués)*. Tampoco yo lo niego . . . pero te diré . . . Las eminencias contemporaneas me cargan: no lo puedo remediar. Reconozco en Alejandro una gran inteligencia; admito que sea hombre de buenas costumbres; convengo en que tendrá un porvenir brillantísimo; pero esto no tiene fuerza ninguna, cuando considero que es un hombre de ideas arrebatadas, un hombre peligroso, un fanático que no sabe, ni sabía nunca contenerse en los límites de . . .
- Eug(enia)*. (interrumpiendo con malicia) Del justo medio: ya salió aquello.

- Marq(ués)*. Si, pues si . . . Además es un joven de una ambición inmensa, desenfrenada, loca. Sabes tu lo que puede hacer un hombre arrastrado por esa funesta pasión? El hombre desmedidamente ambicioso, aunque sea de buen natural, puede llegar hasta los mayores extravíos, hasta el crimen mismo casi sin darse cuenta de ello.
- Eug(enia)*. La ambición! (riendo) Pues poco dice de Vd. el periódico . . . En el número de hoy le dicen á Vd. que (toma un periódico que hay sobre la mesa y lee) por su ciega y desapoderada ambición, fue causa . . .
- Marq(ués)*. (quitándole el periódico) Quien hace caso de periódicos . . . Querer comparar á los hombres de hoy con aquella ilustre pleyade . . .
- Eug(enia)*. De modo que . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Y sobre todo, hija mía (con bondad). Dejando eso á un lado, yo tengo un proyecto de familia que ha de asegurar tu felicidad. Eugenia: ya sabes lo que me decía tu madrina en todas sus cartas, hablando de su hijo Carlos . . . Es un chico inapreciable, tiene tu misma edad, os habeis criado juntos . . . Afortunadamente hoy llegan la madre y el hijo. Les veremos después de dos años de ausencia, y . . . (acariciándola) Estoy tan seguro de que te has de convencer . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Yo quiero mucho á mi primo; pero . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Vamos, vamos—Vd. es una joven muy discreta . . . Esto no puede ser un afecto normal . . . Tu te harás cargo . . . no pensarás mas en eso . . . (se siente ruido fuera) Ahí son ellos. (se acerca a la puerta del fondo) Alejandro en persona, y mi amigo Joaquín: el pretendiente y el intermediario (á Eugenia con prisa) Vete: arreglate pronto, que es muy tarde: ya nos aguarda el coche . . .
- Eug(enia)*. En seguida estoy . . . (vase por la d[erech]a)

Escena 2ª.

El Marqués—Alejandro, Dn. Joaquín

- D. Joaquín*. Aquí le tienes: no quería venir; pero le he convencido . . .
- Marq(ués)*. (saludando á Alejandro con frialdad) Amigo mío.
- Alejandro*. Señor Marqués.
- Marq(ués)*. Amigos sí; pero nada mas. Intelligenti pauca. Ya Joaquín habrá dicho á Vd. que no puedo consentir . . .
- Alej(andro)*. (secamente) Ya.
- Marq(ués)*. Yo tengo sobre este particular ideas que Vd. creará tal vez un poco anticuadas; pero . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Yo respeto las ideas y hasta las preocupaciones de los demás.
- Marq(ués)*. Y me parece que mi hija está dispuesta á conformarse con mi voluntad. Es tan discreta . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Por mi desgracia conozco demasiado sus buenas cualidades. Digo por mi desgracia, toda vez que se opone Vd. á la generosa inclinación . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. (por el marq[ui]és) Si hubiera seguido mis consejos . . .

- Marq(ués)*. Siento no haberlo sabido antes para impedir que se desarrollara un afecto imposible. Vd. no necesita hacer grandes esfuerzos para curarse de él. Metido de cabeza en la política, tiene mil ocasiones de olvidar . . . (con jovialidad) Francamente me parece raro y anómalo el amor en un hombre que va á ser ministro; que quizás lo será mañana.
- Joaq(uín)*. Prontito, si No hay ejemplo de un engrandecimiento tan repentino. A ningun joven de los muchos que salen aqui con la imaginacion exaltada y la lengua expedita, he visto recorrer con tanta fortuna el camino que ha recorrido este hombre desde que volvió de la emigracion.
- Alej(andro)*. Oh! que recuerdo! (con tristeza) La emigracion evoca en mi memorias tan dolorosas . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Lo comprendo; pero váyase lo uno por lo otro. (al marq[ué]) Hoy hasta sus adversarios tenemos que reconocer en él lo que se llama el hombre del día.
- Marq(ués)*. El hombre necesario, como se dice ahora.
- Joaq(uín)*. Que discurso el de ayer!
- Marq(ués)*. Sí.
- Joaq(uín)*. Versó sobre la vida privada de sus adversarios políticos. Con mucha habilidad y valiéndose de fórmulas ingeniosas les sacó á relucir todos sus trapos . . . aludió á las concupiscencias<sup>1</sup> del uno, á las infidelidades conyugales del otro, á la ingratitud filial de este, á la cruel avaricia de aquel, en fin . . . les puso como neuvos, y todo dicho con tal arte que podían darse por ofendidos<sup>2</sup>
- Marq(ués)*. Ya . . . aunque de muy mala intencion, fué un buen discurso. Yo fuí ministro la tercera vez gracias á un discurso asi.
- Joaq(uín)*. Ese era tu fuerte en tus buenos tiempos.
- Marq(ués)*. Y concluia demostrando que el que no es honrado en la vida privada no puede serlo en la pública.
- Alej(andro)*. Justo. En tratando esa cuestión, me parece que personalmente tengo autoridad . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Claro: sus enemigos podran decir de él todas las picardias imaginables; pero nadie negará que es intachable en la vida privada. (á Alejandro por el marq[ué]) Ya se lo dije claramente esta mañana; pero aunque hice la mas perfecta apologia del novio . . .
- Marq(ués)*. No hablemos mas de este delicado asunto. No podria insistir en mi negativa; no podria exponer las razones en que me fundo, sin decir algo que quizás ofendiera á Vd.
- Alej(andro)*. Si: este es asunto de los que no se discuten.
- Marq(ués)*. Si . . . y yo, conociendo la prudencia de Vd., no necesito encarecerle . . . En cuanto á Eugenia no necesito hacer grandes esfuerzos para persuadirla.

<sup>1</sup> Concupiscencias.

<sup>2</sup> It would seem more logical to say "que no podían darse por ofendidos," unless the implication is that anyone might have thought the reference was to him.

Alej(andro). Y está Vd. seguro de conseguirlo?

Marq(ués). Pues no: las muchachas del día son impresionables y caprichosas. Si se exaltan de improviso y con gran impetu sus sentimientos, también se aplacan pronto. Yo tengo además respecto á ella un proyecto de familia, que espero ver realizado brevemente.

Alej(andro). Esa confianza de los padres suele traer lamentables consecuencias, quizas terribles infortunios, y lo peor es que los pobres hijos son los que los padecen.

Marq(ués). (contrariado) Si, si . . . yo tengo mis ideas.

Alej(andro). Que yo respeto.

Joaq(uín). Yo no: yo soy enemigo de preocupaciones.

Marq(ués). En fin, señores, dispenseme<sup>3</sup> Vds tengo que salir.

Joaq(uín). Volveras pronto?

Marq(ués). Si, pronto . . . Hasta luego. (Vase por la d[erech]a)

Escena 3ª.

Alejandro, Dn. Joaquin.

Joaq(uín). Ya lo ve Vd. Es implacable.

Alej(andro). Si: ya lo veo. La noticia le ha cogido de sorpresa.

Joaq(uín). Esta mañana cuando se lo dije se puso furioso. Lo mas gracioso es que descargó su cólera sobre mí, su antiguo y leal amigo, y me decía: "tu le adulas y le sirves ahora, porque le ves próximo á subir al poder."—Ve Vd. que modo de razonar? De Vd. dice que es un ambicioso y un insensato, y á mí me acusa de adulador y complaciente con todos los afortunados . . . Si yo fuera á enojarme por esto . . . Y sobre todo que digan de mi inconsecuencia lo que quieran. Yo no soy hombre político; yo soy hombre de negocios.

Alej(andro). (preocupado) Ya esperaba yo esta dificultad y me preparaba á vencerla.

Joaq(uín). Será difícil. Pero desiste Vd.?

Alej(andro). Yo no desisto jamas.

Joaq(uín). Y espera Vd. que Eugenia sea su muger?

Alej(andro). Estoy seguro de conseguirlo.

Joaq(uín). A pesar de la opinion de Juan?<sup>4</sup>

Alej(andro). A pesar de todo. Yo, cuando, despues de meditar mucho, reconozco la conveniencia de llegar á un fin y rindo palmo á palmo el camino, arrojó mis dados y no retrocedo jamas. Por eso llego siempre.

Joaq(uín). Comprendo su obstinación en este caso. Eugenia tiene una fortuna considerable.

Alej(andro). Ah! Yo no me fijo en eso.

Joaq(uín). (con malicia) Pero siempre es bueno . . .

Alej(andro). Amo á Eugenia.

Joaq(uín). Si: no lo dudo; pero conozco á mi siglo, y sé cuan facilmente se enamoran los juvenes ilustres del día de una muchacha rica, y que ademas es linda y buena. La que á Vd. le vuelve loco, heredó de su madre un gran caudal; pero harto lo sabe Vd. que tendrá grabadas las cifras en su inflamado corazon.

<sup>3</sup> Dispénsenme.

<sup>4</sup> Juan is the Marqués.

Alej(andro). Vd. es un viejo esceptico y todo lo juzga mal.

Joaq(uín). Viejo esceptico! . . . Ya los jovenes han aprendido mas que nosotros y nos dejan atras en esa materia. (con malignidad) Bueno: quedamos en que Vd. esta loco por la muchacha. Da la casualidad de que es millonaria: de modo que no se pierde nada. En el dia es tan necesaria una fortunilla, cuando se tiene un poco de ambicion. He dicho algo?

Alej(andro). Ha dicho Vd. que soy ambicioso.

Joaq(uín). Verdad es que pocos lo justifican como Vd. con su superior talento.

Alej(andro). Y quien tiene autoridad para reprender este defecto. Lo que nos rodea, lo que vemos, todo cuanto esta junto á nosotros contribuye á fomentar esta locura de nuestra epoca, que á todos nos ha puesto en la cabeza la idea de ser grandes hombres.

Joaq(uín). O de aparentarlo.

Alej(andro). Entre participar de este frenesi ó anularse por completo en la sociedad la decision no es dudosa. Una vez en el camino, tras la primera tentativa viene el éxito á concluir de enloquecernos, y el éxito es facil donde un dia de escandalo, una hora de audacia, un momento de inspirada elocuencia pueden elevar repentinamente á un hombre . . . Sin querer se encuentra uno colocado en un punto del que no puede retroceder . . . Mil fuerzas le empujan hacia adelante: la emulacion, la lisonja, el interés, la envidia de los demas, la vanidad propia . . .

Joaq(uín). (interrumpiendole) El orgullo, la conveniencia, los compromisos, los antecedentes, las prendas soltadas, los sobornos de todas clases . . . Oh! la cuenta es larga.

Alej(andro). Solicitada, espoleada sin cesar, nuestra impaciente ambicion lo olvida todo para no atender mas que á su objeto . . . Nos cegamos nos aturdimos, no vemos mas que nuestra propia persona, y es porque la misma posicion conquistada llega á ser una segunda naturaleza, con sus apremiantes exigencias. Es preciso satisfacerlas á toda costa, y lo que al principio parecia vanidad, al fin viene á ser una cuestion de decoro.

Joaq(uín). Justo: y aqui viene la segunda parte, lo que yo he dicho siempre: la superioridad es artículo muy costoso.

Alej(andro). Desde el principio se siente el deseo de ponerse á la altura de los demas ó sobrepujarla si es preciso. El amor propio, convertido en pasion irresistible, no tolera situaciones secundarias, y al mismo tiempo—lo que Vd. dice—la posicion, esa artificial atmosfera que nos creamos, exige dispendios horribles . . .

Joaq(uín). Pero los hombres hábiles como Vd. saben salir del paso sin dejar de ser honrados.

- Alej(andro)*. Es preciso buscárselas como cada uno pueda. Oh! Si no, estamos perdidos.
- Joaq(uín)*. Vd. no lo hace mal. Yo, francamente, admiro su exquisito tacto, su admirable tino. Hay pocos tan aprovechados como Vd. amiguito. Pesando escrupulosamente lo que le conviene, conquista á fuerza de luchas una reputacion honrosa, y la cultiva con esmero, evitando todo incidente que pueda menoscabarla. Enemigo de escandalos en la vida intima, porque sabe que perjudican en el concepto publico, cuida siempre de que su vida sea ejemplar ó al menos de que lo parezca. Quiere disponer de una fortuna que es hoy tan necesaria al grande hombre como la atmosfera al aire, y aspira á ser rico por lo que empobrece á otros por el matrimonio. En fin Vd. no pierde ripio, y Vd. llegara, si señor, Vd. llegará. Macbeth: tu serás Rey. Yo le admiro á Vd. porque el egoismo tambien tiene sus sublimidades, y, como dijo el otro: "la caridad debe empezar por uno mismo," ó lo que es igual: "primero soy yo, y despues los demas.
- Alej(andro)*. Yo soy de los pocos que pueden decir que todo se lo deben á si mismos.
- Joaq(uín)*. Vd. llegará y pronto, lo repito. Yo me felicito de ello, porque somos amigos, pese á quien pese, y como hombre de negocios, no vacilo en fomentar una amistad que á entrambos puede ser provechosa.
- Alej(andro)*. A mi sobre todo.
- Joaq(uín)*. No: á mi. Por ahora yo soy el que sale ganando. Vd. esta en el apogeo de sus triunfos políticos y parlamentarios, yo en una situacion financiera muy parecida á la ruina.
- Alej(andro)*. Que diablos! aun podrá Vd. levantarse.
- Joaq(uín)*. Yo he tenido grandes caidas, y al fin con mi genio he conseguido reponerme . . . Veremos ahora: no quedará por que deje de intentarlo.
- Alej(andro)*. Y esa sociedad anónima, que ha tenido tan buenas épocas?
- Joaq(uín)*. El Ancora? Esta es una áncora de perdicion, no de salvacion.
- Alej(andro)*. Pero ya no tiene remedio?
- Joaq(uín)*. Es cosa perdida, absolutamente perdida.
- Alej(andro)*. El marqués, que es hombre rico, y ha sido socio de Vd., podrá sacarle de apuros.
- Joaq(uín)*. (con malicia) El marques, Juan?
- Alej(andro)*. Si.
- Joaq(uín)*. (bajando la voz) Esta tronado.
- Alej(andro)*. Que me dice Vd.?
- Joaq(uín)*. No tiene un cuarto. La ruina de nuestra sociedad anónima le ha cogido de medio á medio, y ademas otros negocios fallidos.
- Alej(andro)*. Pues no sospechaba.
- Joaq(uín)*. Si—lo que es la apariencia . . . Pero veo que se apura Vd . . . No: la fortuna de Eugenia es considerable, y aunque está en mobiliario, su padre no la tocará. Conozco sus principios, y en este punto puede

Vd. estar tranquilo. (con ironía) Vuelva el sosiego á ese enamorado corazón.

Alej(andro). No me ocupaba de eso.

Joaq(uín). Pues vea Vd. . . considerando su situación, que es deplorable, me esforzaba esta mañana en convencerle, “Hombre, le decía, si niegas á Alejandro la mano de tu hija, te creas inutilmente un enemigo, y nada será tan conveniente para los dos en los actuales momentos, como la amistad de un hombre, que tiene puesto el pié en el primer peldaño del poder.

Alej(andro). Le dijo Vd. eso?

Joaq(uín). Y efectivamente lo único que puede sacar á flote á nuestra sociedad anónima es . . .

Alej(andro). Que el gobierno le encargue una emisión, entregándole títulos.

Joaq(uín). Justo: así fué como se levantó después de su tercera caída; pero ahora . . .

Alej(andro). El actual gobierno no quiere . . .

Joaq(uín). Este gobierno no tiene patriotismo.

Alej(andro). La cosa es difícil.

Joaq(uín). Pero como cuando Vd. subiera lo conseguiríamos . . .

Alej(andro). Por que no? Esa sociedad tiene algún crédito todavía.

Joaq(uín). Le diré á Vd.—Aparentemente vive; pero es como un pajarito diseccionado que muestra al que lo mira magníficas plumas y esbelta forma, pero, examinado de cerca, se vé que no encierra más que paja.

Alej(andro). La paja puede convertirse fácilmente en oro.

Joaq(uín). Si se reúnen en maravilloso consorcio el genio del estadista y el del hombre de negocios . . . De todos modos, amigo mío, Vd. y yo nos entenderemos, y que haga Juan lo que quiera.

Alej(andro). Por mi parte no tendría inconveniente en hacerme socio, como dije ayer.

Joaq(uín). Bueno: se le cederán á Vd. algunas acciones á precio ínfimo . . . casi de balde. Yo le cedo las mías.

Alej(andro). Y Vd. renuncia á los beneficios que podrían resultar?

Joaq(uín). Siempre me quedaré con una parte. (bajando la voz) Aquí para entre los dos: mi situación es bastante comprometida, y si no me sale bien en estos días el único negocio que puede salvarme, tal vez tenga que marchar al extranjero, y . . .

Alej(andro). Antes que llegue ese caso veremos. Nos ayudaremos mutuamente como cumple á hombres leales y generosos . . .

Joaq(uín). Chito: que viene alguien . . .

Escena 4ª.

Dichos—Jacinto

Jacinto. Señores: aquí conferenciando la política y el comercio, como si dijéramos Piramo y Tisbe . . . Y el marqués?

Joaq(uín). Ha salido.

Alej(andro). Y yo me retiro.

Jac(into). Te vas? Cuando yo llego? He interrumpido alguna conferencia grave? No sea cosa que un simple empleado . . .

Alej(andro). No.

Joaq(uín). No vuelve Vd.?

Alej(andro). Si: el marqués y yo no nos hemos explicado todavia, y es preciso . . .

Joaq(uín). Tal vez logremos convencerle . . .

Alej(andro). Volveré despues. (vase)

Escena 5ª.

Dn. Joaquin, Jacinto

Jac(into). Y yo queria hablarle de mi empleo.

Joaq(uín). Del que tiene Vd.

Jac(into). No: del que me ha de dar. Pero estos hombres importantes estan siempre de prisa en todas partes . . . Les falta tiempo hasta para hablar á sus amigos.

Joaq(uín). Y asi es realmente.

Jacinto. Luego tienen unos humos . . . Le ve Vd.? Pues somos camaradas desde la niñez; juntos estuvimos en el colegio; juntos estudiamos la carrera de leyes; juntos practicamos la abogacia; juntos dejamos el foro para dedicarnos á la política, y á pesar de esta fraternidad en el trabajo y en la desgracia . . .

Joaq(uín). También fué Vd. con él á la emigracion?

Jacinto. Salimos juntos; pero él se quedó en Francia, y yo no paré hasta Bélgica . . . Pues decia que á pesar de esta fraternidad, no encuentro en él aquel agazajo<sup>5</sup> que debiera inspirarle una amistad tan antigua.

Joaq(uín). Pero no le debe Vd. su empleo?

Jacinto. Y que vale eso? Vea Vd. lo que es la mala suerte. El se ha encumbrado repentinamente, y yo . . . que soy yo? . . . Nada. Francamente me cargan las eminencias.

Joaq(uín). Que demonio! Todos no pueden avanzar lo mismo. El camino es difícil.

Jacinto. Si; porque todos no tienen la audacia que se necesita . . .

Joaq(uín). No es eso solo. Alejandro tiene cualidades superiores. Bien lo dice la fama adquirida.

Jacinto. No negaré su fama. Este articulo se elabora como el jabon, como las velas ó el papel. Si podre yo negar la fama de Alejandro, cuando he tenido tanta parte en su fabricacion. Si señor: yo he estado por espacio de cuatro años cantando sus alabanzas desde las columnas de un periodico, y diciendo todos los dias á tres mil suscritores que era el hombre de mas talento del mundo. Si se van á mirar por dentro las grandes figuras . . . Lo dicho: me cargan las eminencias.

<sup>5</sup> Agasajo.

- Joaq(uín)*. No negará Vd. que es un hombre ejemplar en su vida privada . . .
- Jacinto*. Lo que es eso . . . También, también . . . si se va á averiguar . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Que . . .
- Jacinto*. También tiene sus aventuras de mal genero, ciertas cosas . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. ¡Qué no inventara la maledicencia para rebajar á los hombres de merito!
- Jacinto*. No es eso. Yo . . . le diré á Vd.: me vuelvo loco por averiguar la vida y aventuras de todas las personas importantes.
- Joaq(uín)*. También Vd. es una eminencia á su modo.
- Jacinto*. Y cuando tengo indicios de alguna flaqueza . . . sobre todo si es de persona importante, no paso hasta saber . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Y que sabe Vd. de él?
- Jacinto*. Por ahí se cuenta . . . Pero callaré; me llamará Vd. difamador, y . . . En esta casa no se oiran mas que alabanzas de nuestro amigo. Como pretende á Eugenia . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Pero como el marques se opone . . .
- Jacinto*. (con alegría) Se opone . . . Oh! me alegro . . . Hombre: algo habia de salirle mal. Estos hombres mimados por la fortuna parece que insultan á la desgracia con su insoportable orgullo . . . Me alegro, me alegro . . . Y él estará furioso, eh?
- Joaq(uín)*. No: esta tranquilo.
- Jacinto*. Esperará salirse con la suya. Eso sí: á él no le arredran obstáculos, y como haya decidido . . . (se siente fuera ruido de voces) Cuanta gente viene ahí . . . voz de muger desconocida.
- Joaq(uín)*. Carlos y Sofia que acaban de llegar.
- Jacinto*. (recordando) Ah! ya . . . Carlos, sobrino del marques . . . Le conocí en San Sebastián. Es un chico muy joven, de temperamento un poco arrebatado?
- Joaq(uín)*. Justo.
- Jacinto*. Y su madre la cuñada del marqués, una de las mugeres mas guapas y mas discretas de Madrid, que ha vivido en Francia algún tiempo.
- Joaq(uín)*. La misma.
- Jacinto*. También la vi hace tres años.
- Joaq(uín)*. Aquí estan.

Escena 6*.

Dichos—el Marqués, Eugenia, Sofia, Carlos los dos ultimos en traje de viaje.

Sofia. Gracias a Dios que me veo al fin entre vosotros.

Joaq(uín). (saludandola) Señora . . .

Marq(ués). (presentando á Jacinto) Un amigo de casa.

Carlos. (dando la mano á Jacinto) A quien tuve el gusto de conocer en San Sebastian. (Jacinto, Carlos y Joaquin forman un grupo á la izquierda y continuan hablando en voz baja)

Sofia. (con el marques y Eugenia en el centro del teatro) Al fin estoy de vuelta ¡que ausencia tan larga!

Marq(ués). Año y medio en Francia y seis meses en Asturias.

- Sof(ía).* Son dos años y me parece que he estado veinte sin veros . . . Pero que guapisima estas, Eugenia. No me canso de mirarte. (se besan)
- Marq(ués).* Supongo que no lo habrás pasado mal.
- Eug(enia).* Cuando has estado tanto tiempo fuera . . .
- Sofía.* Así tal cual.
- Marq(ués).* Cuando Carlos fué á Asturias, tu, cansada de vivir en Madrid, huistes<sup>6</sup> á Francia; pero por lo visto tambien te cansastes<sup>6</sup> allí; volviste á España; acompañastes<sup>6</sup> al pobre muchacho por algun tiempo, y al fin uno y otro os habeis haziado de aquella soledad y regresais á vuestros penates.
- Sof(ía).* Y no pienso abandonarlos ya hasta el verano.
- Marq(ués).* Pues mira, Eugenia y yo hemos murmurado de ti varias veces. Sabes por que? Por haber olvidado de nosotros, por haber prolongado tu permanencia en Francia, cuando al partir, dijiste que ibas por poco tiempo. Esta se quejaba y yo le decia: "Mi cuñada es muger de grande imaginacion y de gustos muy elevados; pero no creo ofenderla, si tambien veo en ella ciertas rarezas, que nos obligarian á quererla menos, si no conociéramos su buen corazon." (con cariño) Ah! eres tan buena que sin esfuerzo te perdonamos el desvio con que nos has mirado.
- Sof(ía).* Yo! con desvio . . . Para desenojaros, os prometo que os acompañaré por mucho tiempo. (á Eug[enia]) Si es cierto que tu padre te ha dicho eso de las rarezas, te habrá hecho creer que soy una romantica, y eso . . . Ya habras observado que me voy poniendo vieja.
- Marq(ués).* Pues, chica, sabes que parece que los años no pasan por ti. Te encuentro lo mismo que cuando te casaste con mi pobre hermano. Tenias entonces . . . pero no quiero hacer cuentas . . .
- Sofía.* Te vas á asombrar: ayer he entrado en los treinta y seis.
- Marq(ués).* Pues, hija, si Eugenia y tu pareceis hermanas. (recordando) Y ahora que recuerdo. Aqui se dijo que te ibas á casar.
- Sof(ía).* Yo . . . que desatino! . . . Y dices que Eugenia parece mi hermana?
- Marq(ués).* Si.
- Sof(ía).* Pues yo traigo la pretension de tener con ella otra clase de parentesco.
- Marq(ués).* (a Eug[enia]) Lo que te dije.
- Sofía.* No adivinas? . . . El te quiere tanto! . . . No es amor es una ciega idolatria lo que ese muchacho siente por ti.
- Marq(ués).* Ya sabe . . .
- Sof(ía).* Juan: no es verdad que nuestros hijos hacen una hermosa pareja?
- Marq(ués).* Si: de eso hemos hablado esta mañana.
- Eug(enia).* (confusa) De eso?
- Sof(ía).* Se hace la tonta. Te lo diré. (Le habla al oido. Continuan hablando en voz baja. Carlos, Jacinto y D. Joaquin continuan el dialogo en voz alta)

<sup>6</sup> Note the popular form of the verb.

- Joaq(uín)*. Ya se conoce que ha trabajado Vd. bastante.
- Jac(into)*. Se necesita mucha fuerza de voluntad para vivir tanto tiempo en el campo.
- Cárlos*. Era preciso hacerlo así. Mi padre, á causa de la política, habia abandonado sus intereses, y fué preciso atender á ellos. Todas nuestras haciendas estaban tan descuidadas, que habrían ccncluido por ser improductivas, si yo no me hubiera propuesto ponerlo todo en órden.
- Jac(into)*. Y al fin lo ha conseguido Vd.
- Cárlos*. Me parece que sí.
- Sofía*. (en voz alta) Quiero quitarme esto. (el abrigo y el sombrero)
- Eug(enia)*. Ven á mi cuarto. (se dirigen hacia la d[er]ec[ha])
- Marques*. Y yo á ver si me han traído las cartas.
- Sof(ía)*. (retrocediendo) Olvidaba lo mejor. (al marques) Me has tomado casa?
- Marq(ués)*. (retrocede) Sí: un hermoso cuarto principal, aquí mismo en la casa inmediata. Que vaya Carlos á verlo.
- Sofí(a)*. (a Carlos) Sí, ve. Con tal que á ti te guste.
- Marques*. (a Eugenia) Almorzaremos pronto, eh? Mira que he de salir dentro de un rato.
- Eug(enia)*. Dispondré que dentro de un cuarto de hora . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Bueno. (vase el marques por la izq[ui]erda), Eug[enia] y Sof[ía] p[or] la d[er]ec[ha])

Escena 7ª.

D. Joaquín, Carlos, Jacinto, despues El Marqués

- Jac(into)*. Pues sí, la memoria que guardo de Vd. es que hace dos años en San Sebastián el marques estaba allí con Eugenia y Sofía: Vds. las acompañaba<sup>7</sup> siempre . . . Por cierto que allí oí decir que Vd. se casaría con su prima . . .
- Carlos*. Si . . . ya . . .
- Jacinto*. Supongo que esos dulces proyectos no habrán fracasado . . . Segun he oído por ahí el marques no quiere tener por yerno á Alejandro.
- Cárlos*. (vivamente) Que?
- Joaq(uín)*. (Siempre tan parlanchino!) (á Carlos) No haga Vd. caso . . .
- Jac(into)*. Oh! Los hombres eminentes cautivan á las muchachas con el prestigio de su gloria, y no hay quien las convenza de que son hombres como los demas.
- Carlos*. (alterado) Con que Eugenia . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. (ap[arte] á Jacinto queriendo que calle) Hombre . . .
- Jacinto*. (ap[arte] á Joaq[ui]n) Me alegro de que tenga un rival. Todo no ha de salirle á pedir de boca. (a Cárlos) Pero no conseguirá su objeto. Ya verá Vd. como no.
- Carlos*. Pero que?—de quien habla Vd.?

<sup>7</sup> Should be acompañaban.

Carlos (abriendo). Bien que llegues...
 Inés (soplando fuerte y diciendo que está). No te...
 Inés (soplando fuerte). No alegro de que tengas un rival. Te-do no ha de salir a la piedad de boca. (a Carlos) Pero no conseguirá en el juego. Ha visto 'M. como no.
 Carlos. Pero que?... de quien habla todo?
 Inés. El que quisiera ser como es... de figura que todo se lo merece... está cargado a' él las empujadas.
 Marqués (entre sí). No lo he visto ninguna carta suportante (a Carlos) esto vas a ser la sala?
 Carlos. El momento es...
 Inés. Voy a retirarme. Sr. Marqués (le muestra)
 Marqués. Inés.
 Inés (a Carlos). Dale 'M. la carta (sopla a Carlos el papel) Pero como decía... ya no puedo repetir a' estos hombres verdades... que han sido... que vanidosos!
 (Mueve Carlos y se aparta)
 Escena 8.
 D. Fraguas, Marqués
 Fraguas. Alejandro volverá.
 Marqués. Para que? no me hará cambiar de parecer.
 Fraguas. Bueno, para lo que quieras; pero con una siempre en amistad.
 Marqués. No la rechazo, es la voluntad. Voy a decirte, que desprecio a los crímenes y me miro a' los que duelen?
 Fraguas. Di de mi lo que quieras. Mi silencio y la mía son lo mismo. Malos los dos.

- Jac(into)*. El cree que por ser quien es . . . Se figura que todo se lo merece . . . No le cargan á Vd. las eminencias?
- Marqués*. (entra por la izq[uierta]) No he tenido ninguna carta importante. (a Carlos) No vas á ver la casa?
- Carlos*. Al momento voy.
- Jac(into)*. Y yo me retiro. Sr. Marqués. (le saluda)
- Marq(ués)*. Amigo.
- Jac(into)*. (á Carlos) Sale Vd. tambien? (ap[arte] á Carlos al salir) Pues como decia . . . yo no puedo soportar á estos hombres eminentes . . . ¡que humos! . . . que vanidad! (Vanse Carlos y Jac(into) por el fondo)

Escena 8ª.

Dn. Joaquín, Marqués

- Joaq(uín)*. Alejandro volverá.
- Marq(ués)*. Para que? No me hará cambiar de parecer.
- Joaq(uín)*. Bueno: haz lo que quieras; pero conserva siempre su amistad.
- Marq(ués)*. Ni la rechazo, ni la solicito. Soy como tu, que desprecio á los caidos y me arrimo á los que suben?
- Joaq(uín)*. Di de mi lo que quieras. Tu situacion y la mia son igualmente malas. Veremos quien sale mejor librado.
- Marq(ués)*. Saldrás tu. Yo no tengo tu elasticidad salvadora, ni esa ligereza que le hace flotar en todas las aguas.
- Joaq(uín)*. Adios, hombre incorruptible. (con afectacion y jovialidad)
- Marq(ués)*. Yo quisiera tener tu genio.
- Joaq(uín)*. Pues tenlo.
- Marq(ués)*. Pero te vas, no almeurzas aqui?
- Joaq(uín)*. No; tengo que hacer. Alejandro volvera. Cuidado y cuidado . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Si viene será por última vez.

Escena 9ª.

el Marqués—Sofía, Eugenia. (entran por el fondo)

- Sof(ía)*. Pero, di Juan: tu hija se ha vuelto tonta? Le hablo de nuestros proyectos, y dice que lo pensará. Has visto? que lo pensará.
- Marq(ués)*. Pues no puedes figurarte que elogios hacia de tu hijo esta mañana. Decia que era un joven de grande energia, de elevados sentimientos ¿que mas dijiste?
- Eug(enia)*. Sí, y lo sostengo.
- Sof(ía)*. Que ingrata serias, sino correspondieras á su generoso afecto! Segun me ha confesado, lo que le impulsaba á trabajar tanto era el deseo de casarse contigo, para lo cual necesitaba restablecer su fortuna. El infeliz ha vivido en aquella soledad, alentado por tan risueña idea. Cuando fuí á reunirme con él, me reveló sus sentimientos. A todas horas hablaba de ti, y á veces me decia:—“Pero mientras estoy yo aquí hecho un alma de cántaro, Eugenia no se acordará de su pobre primo; se le presentará un buen partido, tendra un novio, le amará, y entonces . . . adios mis proyectos"—Pero yo procuraba consolarlo y le decia: "pero tonto, no comprendes que Eugenia no puede amar á nadie mas que á ti?"

Marq(ués). Asi es la verdad. De eso hemos hablado varias veces, y siempre ha opinado como yo.

Eug(enia). Yo . . . yo . . . (Por variar de conversacion) Pero, muger, no nos has contado nada de tu viage? Te has cansado mucho?

Sof(ía). Parece que lo preguntas por variar de conversacion.

Eug(enia). No . . . que cosas tienes . . .

Escena 10ª.

Dichos—Cárlos

Sof(ía). (á Carlos) Llegas á tiempo . . . Sabes lo que dice Eugenia? que lo pensara?

Carlos. La cosa lo merece. Sabe Vd. que en el poco tiempo que estoy aquí, he podido explorar el terreno, y me parece que hay moros por la costa?

Sof(ía). Cavilaciones tuyas. (á Eug[enia]) Te advierto que será celosísimo; y que es preciso no hacerle caso porque si se le acostumbra . . .

Carlos. Pues si. (por Eugenia) Ven Vds. qué seria se ha puesto? Apostamos á que quiere mudar de conversacion?

Sof(ía). Hay algo? (al Marq[ués]) Hay algo, Juan?—No es extraño: á una joven bonita y rica, no pueden faltarle pretendientes . . . pero, hija, hay derechos adquiridos.

Carlos. A mi me han dicho . . .

Marq(ués). Ella misma disipará tus dudas ¿no es verdad, hija?

Sof(ía). Callas? . . . Tu me contarás. (á Carlos) Pero nada dirá delante de ti. (al Marques) Juan: quieres poner un parte telegráfico á Valencia, anunciando á mi madre que he llegado sin novedad?

Marq(ués). Al instante.

Sof(ía). (a Car[los]) Dejanos solas Cárlos.

Carlos. Vamos: que yo tambien puedo tomar parte en la conferencia.

Sof(ía). No, no vete. No queremos estorbos.

Escena 11ª.

Sofía, Eugenia

Sof(ía). Dime la verdad.

Eug(enia). (como haciendo un esfuerzo) Pues si: si no lo confio á ti, á quien lo voy á confiar?

Sof(ía). Tienes un novio, un pretendiente?

Eug(enia). Si.

Sof(ía). Pero tu no le amas.

Eug(enia). (turbada) Yo . . . á ti puedo decirte todo lo que siento, porque eres mi amiga, mi hermana, mi segunda madre. Si: le amo.

- Sof(ía).* Eugenia! . . . Y mi pobre hijo . . . Pero es cierto? Piensalo bien. Sabes tu lo que es amor?
- Eug(enia).* Lo sé por mi desgracia. Tu eres quien no lo sabe. Varias veces he oído decir á papá que en toda tu vida has amado á hombre ninguno. De modo que no podrás comprender . . .
- Sof(ía).* No hablemos de mí . . . Pero es cierto? . . . Esto trastorna todos mis proyectos. Y tu padre?
- Eug(enia).* Se opone. Estoy disgustadísima. Tu me favoreceras, tu me ayudarás.
- Sof(ía).* (con insistencia) Y le amas de veras?
- Eug(enia).* Mucho: y te juro que lo merece . . . Calla: papá viene.

Escena 12ª.

- Dichas—Marques* (sale por la izq[ui]erd]a con un papel en la mano)
- Marq(ués).* Aquí está el parte . . . (a Eug[enia]) Pero Eugenia: que pasa en esta casa? No almorzamos hoy? Tengo un hambre horrorosa.
- Eug(enia).* Voy al momento. (vase)
- Marq(ués).* (mostrando el papel a Sof[ía]) Esta bien así?
- Sof(ía).* (después de mirarlo) Esta bien.
- Marq(ués).* Te lo ha dicho Eugenia? Es una fruslería, un capricho pasajero . . . Tu le quitarás eso de la cabeza.
- Sof(ía).* (preocupada) No sé . . .
- Marq(ués).* Te habrá dicho que me opongo. Es hombre de mucha fama; pero altamente peligroso, y aunque goza de buena reputación, yo tengo para mí . . .
- Sof(ía).* De todos modos, es una contrariedad . . .
- Marq(ués).* Voy á que Francisco ponga el parte. (Vase por la izq[ui]erd]a)

Escena 13ª.

Sofía, Alejandro después Carlos, y el Marqués.

- Sofía.* (meditabunda) Es particular. No sé por qué asocio lo que acabo de oír, con . . .
- Alejandro.* (entra por el fondo y se detiene estupefacto al ver á Sofía) Cielos! Sofía!
- Sofía.* (se vuelve y lo ve. exclama con la mayor sorpresa) Alejandro! . . . tu! tu aquí!
- Alejandro.* (con rabia ap[arte]) (Me lo temía!)
- Sofía.* (tremula y con mucha agitación) Al fin te encuentro, al fin te veo . . . Te he aguardado llena de ansiedad . . . En Francia primero, y en Asturias después he esperado tus cartas, ya que no me era posible esperar tu vuelta. (en tono severo) Alejandro—no me ves? Soy yo . . . Mi presencia te ha causado cierto terror . . . He venido en busca tuya, y que pronto, que pronto te encuentre!
- Alej(andro).* (con inquietud) Calla . . . calla por Dios—Sofía: no me canses sin oírme—soy el mismo para ti—te amé, y todavía . . .

- Sofía* Ya no me queda duda de tu deslealtad, tu silencio primero, y ahora . . . que haces aquí? Seras acaso . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Por Dios—no alces la voz . . .
- Sofía*. (con ira) Si—hablaré—dire todo.
- Alej(andro)*. Sofía!
- Sof(ía)*. Diré que me has engañado villanamente . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Por Dios (al sentir que el marques se acerca por la izquierda los dos disimulan su agitacion)
- Marq(ués)*. (asomandose por la izq[ui]erda) Sr. Dn. Alejandro: pase Vd.
- Carlos*. (se presenta en la puerta del fondo en el momento en que Alejandro entra en el despacho del marqués, Lo observa atentamente y dice) Ese es. (Cuando Alejandro ha desaparecido, Carlos se acerca á Sofía, y le dice al oído.) Ese es.
- Sof(ía)*. (muy agitada) Quien?
- Carlos*. El pretendiente de Eugenia.

Fin del acto primero.

ACTO SEGUNDO

Sala en casa de Sofía. Es de noche. Reunion de confianza.

Escena primera

Sofía, en la escena—Alejandro, entra por el fondo.

- Sofía*. Te decides al fin á venir á mi casa?
- Alejand(ro)*. Y francamente, aun me parece un disparate. Recibes aquí á mucha gente y no conviene . . . Ya comprenderas que mi retraimiento consiste en el deseo de no dar ocasion á las lenguas murmuradoras . . .
- Sofía*. Bonito pretexto. Nadie murmura de mi, por la sencilla razon de que no doy motivo para ello. Ademas aquí todos ignoran la infame y descarada deslealtad del que me ha precipitado por un camino, cuyos tropiezos y peligros no hubiera yo soñado antes de conocerle.
- Alej(andro)*. No tratemos de eso, y escucha bien lo que te digo. Desde que nos encontramos hace veinte días en casa del marqués, yo he procurado evitar todo escándalo, poniendo tu reputacion a cubierto de la maledicencia . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (interrumpiendo) Acaso lo necesito?
- Alej(andro)*. He evitado toda entrevista en casa de nuestros amigos, y por esto mismo, tus celos, tu imprudente obcecacion . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (ofendida) Celos yo!
- Alej(andro)*. No sé que sentimiento seria el que te impulsó á ir á mi casa una noche, exponiendote al peligro de ser vista, y ¡ay! Sofía—á pesar de tus precauciones, siento decirte que alguien te vió salir, aunque por fortuna no te conocieron . . . Pero existen tal vez sospechas, y si repitieras la misma imprudencia . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (con ira) Yo! . . . Una sola vez estuve. Exasperada por tu conducta, y no siéndome posible verte en ninguna parte, me vi en la cruel necesidad de ir en persona á tu casa, con objeto de reclamar de ti algunas cartas que deseo quemar, para que se extingan como el afecto que las ha inspirado. No sé que pretexto alegaste para no entregármelas, y salí sin conseguir mi objeto. Dices que alguien me vio?

Alej(andro). Si

Sof(ía). Estas seguro?

Alej(andro). Seguro.

Sof(ía). Oh! que me vea yo expuesta . . . Tu tienes la culpa de esta contrariedad, y de las consecuencias que pueda traer para mí.

Alej(andro). Tampoco á mí me hace favor . . .

Sof(ía). No volverá á pasar. Entre nosotros todo ha concluido. Despues de tu inicuo comportamiento, yo seria demasiado inocente, seria despreciable, si ni aun con el pensamiento prolongara unas relaciones, que pueden haber sido una disculpable debilidad; pero que hoy son para mí un mal recuerdo y una vergüenza.

Alej(andro). No te precipites . . . todavia.

Sof(ía). Al considerar lo que ha pasado me parece mentira que yo . . .

Alej(andro). Tanto le pesa haberme amado?

Sof(ía). Lo que hubiera sido para mí una dulce memoria, tu lo has trocado en insoportable remordimiento . . . Antes era yo tan feliz! . . . Y hubo un tiempo en que la monotonía calma de mi espíritu me parecia una desgracia! Ojala mi corazón no hubiera conocido nunca mas que el aburrimiento . . . Mis padres me casaron por conveniencia con un hombre que no amaba, y en los dos años que viví junto á mí, ni siquiera supo conquistar mi afecto. Viuda despues, obsequiada, galanteada sin cesar, habiendo inspirado algunas pasiones, que no encendieron en mi corazón ni una chispa de amor, viví mucho tiempo sin conocer otro afecto que el de madre. Pero se me preparaba una prueba tremenda, la primera, y sin duda la última—¡y quien habia de decirme que mi desdicha tendria origen en un acto compasivo, al parecer destinado á ennoblecerme. Yo vivia en mi casa de Dax, cuando tu apareciste por allí, errante, enfermo, miserable, perseguido por la policia. Extenuado de cansancio y dolor, caíste sin aliento en el camino, y ya te conducian al hospital, donde probablemente hubieras muerto, cuando yo . . . (movimiento de Alejandro) te recogí, te oculté en mi casa, y allí recobraste la vida, la salud, la alegría . . . Que orgullosa estaba yo de mi generosa acción! Ah! Cuando se entabló nuestra cariñosa amistad, fundada en mi compasión y en tu gratitud, no sospeché que al hacer el bien, estaba labrando mi desgracia, y lo que es peor, mi deshonra.

Alej(andro). (confundido) Ah! No creas que puedo olvidar tus beneficios. Fuiste mi amparo en el destierro . . . Mis ideas, mis desgracias hallaron eso en tu corazón. Tu generosidad, tu sensibilidad conmovieron profundamente el mio, y . . . La estrecha simpatía que nos unió entonces, espero que no ha de extinguirse nunca en nuestros corazones.

- Sofía.* Que perfidia! . . . y tienes valor para sostener . . . La farsa ha concluido. No te pido cuentas, ni menos protestas de amor, que no me hacen falta, ni deseo escuchar.
- Alejandro.* Tu me juzgas mal, tu! . . .
- Sofía.* (vivamente) Cuando llegué a Madrid, no te halle dispuesto a casarte con Eugenia, si te lo hubieran permitido?
- Alejandro.* Si, pero ya . . .
- Sofía.* No: tu no has renunciado á ella. A pesar de la oposicion de su padre, tu persistes en tu idea; y por muy bien que uno y otro disimulen, ya se conoce que os escribis, que os hablais en alguna parte.
- Alejandro.* No: te aseguro . . .
- Sofía.* Y si esta noche has venido aqui, ha sido con esperanza de verla y hablarla en mi propia casa.
- Alejandro.* Eso has creido?
- Sofía.* Confiesa la verdad: por mi no temas nada. Tu insistes en casarte con ella. Ten franqueza.
- Alejandro.* Te diré: es que tu no te haces cargo de las circunstancias . . .
- Sofía.* Las circunstancias! Di que en ti se ha verificado una mudanza horrorosa. Te apartaste de mi con un alma que parecia llena de nobleza, y te encuentro dominado por el mas insensato egoismo.
- Alejandro.* Ah! Si ahondaras un poco en mi corazon, quizas me encontrarias el mismo. Pero cuando uno se ha metido en este laberinto, la misma posicion conquistada le traza una linea de conducta de que no puede separarse. Nos debemos á nuestro nombre; somos esclavos de las tremendas necesidades que crea cada dia la importancia adquirida y es forzoso que nos ocupemos un poco de nosotros mismos: á esto llamas egoismo.
- Sofía.* Si: tu estas consagrado desde hace algun tiempo á la idolatria de la propia persona. Harto lo sé.
- Alejandro.* Es que como todo lo que soy me lo debo á mi mismo . . . Pero me será muy difícil hacerte comprender . . . Lo que ha pasado contigo, lo que llamas mi ingratitud, mis pretensiones respecto á Eugenia, todo puede explicarse, y si lograras ver claro en mi espiritu, comprenderias que no soy peor que los demas.
- Sofía.* Nunca te falta una palabra bonita para defender todas las causas. Pero todo eso me importa poco. Yo, que contigo no quiero tener ni amistad, me he tomado á mi cargo impedir que logres tu objeto. Quiero demasiado á Eugenia para no apresurarme á impedir su desgracia. Lo entiendes bien?
- Alejandro.* (ap[arte]) (La taimada desbaratará todos mis planes.)

Escena 2ª.Dichos—el Marques, Dn. Joaquin.

- Marqués.* (ap[arte] á Joaquín al entrar) (Si sé que esta aqui, no traigo á Eugenia.)

- Joaq(uín)*. (ap[arte] á Mar[qués]) Pues que: todavía? . . .
- Marq(ués)*. (id) Mi hija esta curada de su necio amor; pero en todas las enfermedades la convalescencia exige grandes cuidados.
- Alej(andro)*. (saludando al Marq(ués)) Señor marqués . . . (Se saludan)
- Sofía*. Has traído á Eugenia?
- Marq(ués)*. Ahí está. (a Alej[andro]) Cuanto tiempo sin vernos.
- Joaq(uín)*. Y quieres que vuelva á poner los pies en esta casa despues de aquel desaire . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Oh! yo aseguro que no guardo resentimiento . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Ya esperaba yo que siempre seríamos amigos.
- Alej(andro)*. Y lo seremos.
- Joaq(uín)*. Pues si hubiera sido yo el agraviado.
- Mar(qués)*. Para que resucitas ahora tan delicada cuestion? Si todo ha concluido.
- Alejand(ro)*. Eso digo yo.
- Joaq(uín)*. Es que sigo en mis trece . . . Y si no, (á Sofia) sea Vd. juez, Sofia.
- Sof(ía)*. A ver? yo decidiré.
- Marq(ués)*. Dejemos eso.
- Joaq(uín)*. Ya no hay peligro en tratar la cuestion. El amor que la motivó se ha extinguido, y los amantes no han vuelto á verse desde tu negativa. De modo que . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (con jovialidad) Se puede poner á la orden del dia . . . Como (á Alej[andro]) la cuestion no es palpitante el debate no será borrasco.
- Marq(ués)*. Pues bien: tu eres juez. En tratándose de un asunto amoroso, nadie, como tu, merece la presidencia. No hay imparcialidad comparable á la de un corazon incombustible. Si señores, mi cuñada es la heroína de los tiempos modernos. Sofia no ha amado nunca.
- Sof(ía)*. Tu que sabes?
- Joaq(uín)*. Con que decida Vd.—Que razones podrá tener mi amigo para negar la mano de su hija . . .
- Alej(andro)*. (con disgusto) Si eso pasó . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Hagamos un examen de los méritos del interesado.
- Sofía*. Eso ofenderia su modestia. Por lo demas la pareja habria sido soberbia; porque, dejando á un lado las prendas morales de uno y otro, quedaba siempre el consorcio de la riqueza y el talento. ¡Con que admirable armonia se completan estos dos elementos!
- Alej(andro)*. No quiero ofender á la mesa; pero la cuestión que ya era delicada, se agrava desde que nuestro digno presidente le ha dado ese giro.
- Sof(ía)*. El criterio de la mesa es el del señor (señala á Alej[andro])
- Mar(qués)*. Ya . . .
- Sof(ía)*. Si: hablaba conmigo hace poco, antes de llegar Vds. y se lamentaba de que hoy para nada sirve el talento sin la riqueza.
- Alej(andro)*. Yo . . .
- Sof(ía)*. Si. (con naturalidad) No fué esto lo que Vd. me dijo?

Alej(andro). (Maldita!)

Sof(ía). Y añadió: "los que han tenido la desgracia de ser celebres sin dejar de ser pobres, han necesitado procurarse una fortuna por medios licitos . . . No fué esto lo que Vd. dijo?"

Alej(andro). Perdone Vd. . . . Es preciso dar un voto de censura á la mesa por alterar los hechos. Yo dije . . .

Sof(ía). Me demiente!

Alej(andro). Vamos: el orador se explicó mal.

Marq(ués). Dejemos la cuestion.

Sof(ía). Es lo mejor. Tu hija se ha conformado con tu voluntad Alejandro ha dirigido sus miras á otra parte.

Alej(andro). (con sorpresa) Yo . . .

Sof(ía). Yo presumo. Y no hay para que hablar mas del caso.

Mar(qués). (por Joaq[úin]) Lo singular es que este no abandona el tema, y á todas horas resucita una cuestion de que no se acuerda ni el mismo interesado

Joaq(uín). Es que aquella injusticia me impresionó.

Marq(ués). Y como te has pasado al partido del señor . . .

Joaq(uín). (a Alej[andro]) Lo ve Vd. Porque somos amigos . . .

Alej(andro). Si: ya murmuran de Vd. Le llamaran inconsecuente . . .

Sof(ía). Si no se puede ser importante ni en la política ni en la alta banca.

Joaq(uín). (con jovialidad) Pues dicen que adulo á los que suben y vuelvo la espalda á los que caen.

Sof(ía). Que picardia!

Joaq(uín). Felizmente no me hace gran efecto . . .

Marq(ués). No, Joaquín: digas lo que quieras, Alejandro y tu tracís entre manos alguna negociacion . . .

Sof(ía). Eminencia política y eminencia financiera. bien dice el refran aquello de que un lobo á otro . . .

Marq(ués). No se muerden. Apuesto á que el futuro gabinete prepara una emision en grande escala.

Sof(ía). Eso es: las bromas ó pesadas ó no darlas.

Joaq(uín). Voy á revelar la negociacion que tenemos pendiente. Asombraos generaciones todas.

Marq(ués). A ver?

Joaq(uín). Es probable que yo tenga que marchar al extranjero á hacerme cargo de cierta empresa. Con este motivo, Alejandro quiere alquilar mi casa.

Sof(ía). Aquel hermoso palacito, tan pequeño y tan mono?

Joaq(uín). Si:

Alej(andro). Eso es todo.

Joaq(uín). Vean Vds. que inmoralidad, que corrupcion!

Alej(andro). (con ironia) Cuando lo sepa la prensa . . . Dos hombres de ideas políticas diferentes se conciertan . . . para alquilar una casa.

Sof(ía). Juan: razon tenias tu el otro dia, cuando decias . . .

- Juan.* Que, que decia yo?
- Sof(ía).* (á Alej[andro]) No . . . no: era Vd. si me parece que era Vd. quien lo decia.
- Alej(andro).* Que?
- Sof(ía).* No es alusion. Vd. decia que los hombres eminentes del día en cuanto pronuncian dos ó tres discursos en las Cortes, ya estan en el caso de alquilar palacios.
- Alej(andro).* Yo dije . . . señora . . . (confundido)
- Sof(ía).* Yo no sé como se las componen.
- Marq(ués).* La posicion . . .
- Sof(ía).* La gloria es muy costosa. Tambien he oido . . . debe ser una invencion de los desocupados . . . que Vd. (á Joaq[ui]n) le ha encargado la salvacion de cierta sociedad anónima que necesita de una mano ministerial para salir a flote.
- Marq(ués).* Eso no va conmigo.
- Alej(andro).* Tambien dicen?
- Joaq(ui)n.* Pero quien hace caso? . . . En cuanto á mi amistad baste decir que ha comenzado por pura admiracion. Pero que gentes! . . . Hasta me echan en cara que le defienda con calor cuando le veo injustamente atacado.
- Alej(andro).* Gracias, amigo, gracias.
- Joaq(ui)n.* Precisamente ayer . . .
- Sof(ía).* Si . . . le pusieron como nuevo. La envidia, amigo mio, la envidia.
- Joaq(ui)n.* No me pude contener. Todos callaron cuando hice una calurosa defensa . . . Todos callaron al oirme sostener la notoria ejemplaridad de sus costumbres, y convinieron en que su vida privada es intachable
- Alej(andro).* Y gracias que lo conceden.
- Sof(ía).* Lo que es eso . . . Me comprometo á defenderle á Vd. en todas partes. Diré que es un modelo de desinterés, un prodigio de lealtad, un compendio de todas las virtudes imaginables.
- Mar(qués).* Parece que lo dice así . . . con cierta ironía
- Sof(ía).* Sinceramente.

Escena 3ª.

Dichos—Jacinto, Carlos

- Jacinto.* (ap[arte] á Carlos al entrar) (Aquí está: quiero decirselo delante de todos.) (saluda á Sof[ía]) Señora . . .
- Sof(ía).* (continua lo que decia, dirigiendose a Jacinto) No es opinion general que Alejandro? . . .
- Jac(into).* Oí al entrar lo que Vd. decia. La opinion general si; pero la opinion general se equivoca tan a menudo . . . Precisamente corren por ahí unos rumores . . .
- Alej(andro).* De mi?
- Mar(qués).* A ver.

- Jacinto*. (a Alej[andro]) Chico: no te enfades. La cosa en si tiene poca gravedad; pero te perjudica, te perjudica . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Sepámosla.
- Jac(into)*. Y no has oído nada? . . . Pues yo lo he oído en el salón de conferencias, en la Iberia, en todos los círculos. Ya los periodicos se han apoderado del asunto y . . . veras, veras que cosas.
- Mar(qués)*. Alguna aventurilla.
- Sof(ía)*. Le vamos á confundir.
- Alej(andro)*. Pues empieza de una vez (a Jac(into))
- Jac(into)*. Pues . . . (a Carlos) El caso no es infamante, verdad?
- Carlos*. Pero tampoco favorece mucho á quien vive (con sequedad) cantando un himno á la propia moralidad, lo cual equivale á poner en duda la de los demas.
- Alej(andro)*. Vaya . . . contad el cuento.
- Jac(into)*. Cuento? . . . Si lo he visto yo.
- Carlos*. Y yo.
- Marq(ués)*. Apuesto á que le habeis descubierto algun trapicheo.
- Sof(ía)*. No puede ser: el grande hombre se precia de no hacer jamas cosa alguna que le perjudique á su reputación.
- Carlos*. Hay gentes que son honradas por egoismo, es decir porque creen que la honradez es siempre provechosa.
- Joaq(uín)*. No estoy por esa maxima.
- Carlos*. (con intencion) Es cierta; pero el egoismo de la honradez se llama propiamente hipocresia.
- Alej(andro)*. (Tambien este se atreve . . . )
- Mar(qués)*. Vaya: cuente Vd. (a Sofía) Sofía: tu seras juez
- Alej(andro)*. Otra vez . . . bien: me alegro.
- Marq(ués)*. Tu dirás si se le baja del pedestal en que se ha puesto, y si por lo que vamos á oír merece que se le llame ex-intachable.
- Sofía*. Será peligroso decidir: yo seré inexorable y tal vez me guarde rencor. Me retiraré.
- Alej(andro)*. No . . . quedese Vd. . . se lo suplico. Yo acepto, es mas solícito su fallo.
- Sof(ía)*. Seré benevola.
- Alej(andro)*. Estoy seguro de la absolucion.
- Jacint(o)*. Picaro: como disimulas . . . Te atreveras á negarlo . . . La han visto, la han visto entrar en tu casa una noche . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (Dios mío!) (Se inmuta repentinamente; pero procura dominar su turbacion)
- Jac(into)*. Desgraciadamente nadie pudo conocerla, y como nadie sabe á punto fijo quien es ella, cada cual dice lo que le parece y resulta un conjunto delicioso.
- Mar(qués)*. Y eso es todo?
- Jac(into)*. Yo la vi, y Carlos tambien
- Alej(andro)*. Pero á quien?

- Carlos.* Su nombre Vd. lo sabrá. En cuanto á su persona podemos dar fé de que parecia ser muy distinguida.
- Sof(ía).* (Estoy muerta!) (dominandose) Pero . . . hasta ahora no veo . . . Ya no puede entrar una muger en casa de este caballero?
- Jac(into).* Cuando el favorecido es soltero, y vive sin familia en un hotelito, construido expresamente para el amor . . .
- Mar(qués).* Y Vds. no sospechan quien es?
- Alej(andro).* Eso, eso: les desafío á que digan quien es
- Sof(ía).* Si—que digan . . .
- Alej(andro).* Si no, mi juez os declarará á todos tontos rematados.
- Jac(into).* Puede ser que se averigüe. Carlos dice que tiene gran empeño en saberlo, y jura que lo sabrá.
- Sof(ía).* (a C[arlos]) ¡Tu!
- Carlos.* Si; me ha despertado la curiosidad. (con decision) Lo sabré, y pronto.
- Alej(andro).* Que empeño. Tanto le interesa a Vd.?
- Carlos.* Quizas. (secamente)
- Alej(andro).* Joven: la curiosidad en asuntos ajenos suele traer consecuencias desagradables.
- Carlos.* (irritandose) No las rehuyo . . . Y si á Vd. le mistifica mi curiosidad, yo . . .
- Sofía.* Carlos! (conteniendole)
- Joaq(uín).* Haya paz.
- Carlos.* (ap[arte] dominando su ira) (Yo detesto este hombre! no me puedo contener, cuando le oigo . . . )
- Sof(ía).* Calla por Dios.
- Alej(andro).* (observando la fisonomia de Sofia, que pugna por aparecer serena) Me parece que mi juez . . . Si no me engaña mi conocimiento de las fisonomias, me parece que veo retratada en su rostro una cordial benevolencia, que me augura la deseada absolucion.
- Mar(qués).* (examinando tambien á Sof[ía]) Pues no dice nada. Verdaderamente la cosa es bien simple.
- Sof(ía).* Ya lo creo.
- Joaq(uín).* Que una muger entró . . . una necedad
- Mar(qués).* Una tontuna.
- Sof(ía).* Pues si no se descubre otro delito . . .
- Jac(into).* Ya iran saliendo.
- Sof(ía).* Tengo que dejarles á Vds.
- M(arqués).* Tan pronto? te vas á lo mejor.
- Jac(into).* Si no he acabado de contar.
- Alej(andro).* Oiga Vd. hasta el fin mi aventura.
- Sof(ía).* No puedo . . . Tengo que recibir á mis amigas . . . (a Carlos) Ven.
- Carlos.* (Quiero oir lo que contesta este . . . )
- Sof(ía).* (resueltamente) Acompañame te digo.
- Carlos.* Pero . . .
- Sof(ía).* Ven (toma el brazo de Carlos) Señores . . .

Escena 4ª.

Alejandro, D. Joaquín, el Marqués, Jacinto

Alejandro). Valiente tontería habeis contado.

Joaquín). Lo que es la maledicencia. Cuando no halla motivo . . .

Marqués). Y Vd. vió?

Jacinto). Antes otros amigos habian observado el fenomeno. Les picó la curiosidad, sin duda por tratarse de una eminencia politica y parlamentaria. Corrió la voz en un pequeño círculo, y como yo te aprecio verdaderamente, quise cerciorarme por mis propios ojos de que era mentira. Rondé tu casa, y en efecto vi que era cierto. Pero ni los que me acompañaban, ni yo pudimos conocerla. La taimada en cuanto comprendió que la observabamos, se dió tanta prisa á entrar en el coche, y este partió con tal rapidez que nos quedamos . . .

Alejandro). Y la visteis varias veces? Han sido muchas las visitas?

Jacinto). Lo menos diez.

Alejandro). (riendo) Ya, ya . . . !

Jacinto). Te ries?

Alejandro). Si me rio: el asunto no merece otra cosa. Y dices que por ahí se ocupan de eso?

Jacinto). Pues yo creo: basta que seas tu quien eres

Alejandro). Es terrible ocupar una posicion politica que atraca la atencion del vulgo suspicaz y difamador. Un leve indicio, un suceso insignificante sirve de fundamento á groseras historias que el público acepta sin discusion y con alborozo, porque le gusta ver rebajados á los que todo se lo deben á si mismos.

Jacinto). Convengo en que la cosa en si no tiene gravedad. Pero diré, imitando a D. Hermógenes, que ningun hecho es escandaloso per se sino relativamente. A esta frusleria le da importancia el ser tu quien eres, un hombre que no aguarda mas que á la primera crisis para subir al poder. Pues no digo nada si resultase que la que te visita es alguna dama . . . que se yo . . . tan importante como tu. Tambien hay mugeres eminentes, si no por sus discursos, por su hermosura, por su distincion, por su riqueza . . . En fin· échese Vd. á calcular . . .

Alejandro). Afortunadamente, yo hago poco caso de estas miserias. Nos tiran con piedra y con fango, porque cuando no pueden mancharnos ni herirnos, se complacen en vernos manchados . . . Y vea Vd., señor Marqués: estos son los que se llaman amigos.

Jacinto). (con buen humor) Te enfadas de veras?

Alejandro). Me debe cuanto tiene, y ahora solicita que le de cierto destino de importancia en cuanto ocupe el poder.

Jacinto). Y me lo darás. Lo cortés no quita lo valiente.

Alejandro). No quiero oírte mas. (con disgusto)

Jacinto). Pues me oíras: tengo que decirte muchas cosas.

Alej(andro). (retirandose) Dejame.

Jac(into). (siguiendole) No: te sigo: tenemos que hablar . . .

Joaquín. Cuando este se pega . . .

Alej(andro). (a Joaqu[ui]n) En el salón nos veremos.

Joaq(ui)n. Allá voy al instante.

Escena 5ª.

el Marques, Dn. Joaquín.

Marq(ués). Pues sí, querido Joaquín, como antes te decía, tu repentina y estrecha amistad con un hombre que siempre fué nuestro adversario, da mucho que hablar.

Joaq(ui)n. (con desden) Valiente disgusto me das. Los hombres de negocios no debemos tener ideas, es decir no debemos atender á las de los demás.

Marq(ués). Y que negocio traes entre manos con ese hombre? Piensas que él te sacará de apuros? Que es eso del Ancora? El te compra las acciones?

Joaq(ui)n. (con cierto misterio) Sí: pero esto es reservado. Solo á ti . . .

Marq(ués). Descuida.

Joaq(ui)n. Tomará las que tu me cediste.

Marq(ués). Con esperanza de reconstituir la sociedad cuando sea ministro

Joaq(ui)n. Creo que lo conseguirá.

Marq(ués). Pero tu ¿no me has dicho que quizás marches al extranjero? . . .

Joaq(ui)n. Si; pero en el caso de que nuestra Áncora agarrara en el fondo, yo, despues de arreglar en Londres algunos negocios, volveria para ponerme al frente de la regenerada sociedad.

Marq(ués). No sé como te las compones. Siempre encuentras una salida.

Joaq(ui)n. No creo que en esto haya nada de ilícito. Levantar á una sociedad, que se encuentra en medio del arroyo, es una accion caritativa, prevista en las obras de misericordia, que dicen levantar al caido, ó alguna cosa que significa lo mismo.

Marq(ués). Bravo, Joaquín; tu elasticidad, tu flexibilidad, tu genio resbaladizo y acomodaticio me pasman. Si al morir te condenas, hallarás alguna rendija por donde colarte en el cielo.

Joaq(ui)n. Pues no me elogies: esto que hago, no es de mi cosecha, ni me he quebrado la cabeza para aprenderlo. Doctores tiene la iglesia que lo saben enseñar.

Marq(ués). Pues por ahí dicen que te has vendido á nuestros enemigos, porque ves cercana su elevacion, y esperas realizar algun pingüe negocio.

Joaq(ui)n. Que digan lo que quieran.

Marq(ués). Ahora se renueva contra ti la misma cruzada que se armó hace diez años, cuando era ministro el celebre Villaurrutia, que en paz descanse.

Joaq(ui)n. Harto me mortificaron entonces, y ya oiste que caso hacia . . .

Marq(ués). Entonces te di saludables consejos, y no quisiste escucharme. Me acuerdo como si fuera ayer . . . Aquel ministro, nuestro enemigo, te cautivó de tal modo, que tu, atraído por el cebo de no sé que contratas muy lucrativas, le servías, le adulabas, eras su inseparable compañero, le defendías con celo excesivo, encomiabas hasta sus defectos . . . en fin, lo mismo que haces ahora con este nuevo astro que ha aparecido en el firmamento político . . . Y no recuerdas hasta donde llegó el atrevimiento de tus difamadores?

Joaq(uín). (con pena) Sí: no me repitas eso, que aun me causa disgusto.

Marq(ués). Aquel ministro era un hombre corrompido, y vicioso, que escandalizaba al país con sus licenciosas costrumbres . . . Tu te pegabas tanto á él que la voz pública y especialmente las gacetillas, entonces mas chistosas que ahora, llegaron á indicar que prestabas tu casa á aquel hombre para sus escandalosas orgias.

Joaq(uín). (con ira) Oh! Semejantes infamias se me han quedado muy presentes.

Marq(ués). Y un periodico que hacia mucho ruido entonces, decia que tu casa era el gineceo del señor ministro . . .

Joaq(uín). (vivamente tapandole la boca) No repitas eso por Dios. Si supiera quien fué el periodista que lo escribió, le estrangularia.

Marq(ués). Pues se publicó en el periódico que entonces inspiraba Alejandro. El debe saber quien lo escribió.

Joaq(uín). El no pudo ser capaz de autorizarlo . . . pero á que recuerdas eso?

Marq(ués). Fué una calumnia, lo sé: pero el mejor medio de sobreponerse á la calumnia, es preverla y evitarla á tiempo. He aqui porque te doy ahora los mismos consejos que hace diez años . . . Tu amistad con ese hombre . . .

Joaq(uín). Bah! . . . Estas pesado.

Marq(ués). Puez haz lo que quieras.

Joaq(uín). Pero, amigo, si mi situacion es deplorable, angustiosa. Si ese hombre no me da la mano, estoy perdido para siempre. Tu, aunque lo pierdas todo, siempre podras vivir decentemente con tu hija, cuya gran fortuna no puedes tocar. A mi despues de este gran desastio, no me quedará nada, y me aterra el pensar en mi pobre Adolfiná, que nada heredó de su madre.

Marq(ués). Siempre hay medios decorosos . . . Y de veras te marchas de España?

Joaq(uín). Decididamente, aunque no he fijado día. Eso depende de la liquidacion de mañana. Por que no haces tu lo mismo? Es bueno huir el bulto, sin perjuicio de presentarse despues, cuando haya pasado la tormenta.

Marq(ués). Yo no huyo el bulto: recibiré la tormenta sobre mi cabeza, aunque me aplaste.

Joaq(uín). Pero tu tambien tienes compromisos horribles, y tan apremiantes que no dan espera.

Marq(ués). Es verdad. (con tristeza) Mi situacion es tan mala como la tuya. Veremos quien conjura mejor este gran peligro, si tu esquivándolo, ó yo recibiendo de frente y con la entereza de un hombre de bien.

Joaq(uín). Veremos, Juan.

Marq(ués). Yo espero salir adelante con la ayuda de Dios.

Escena 6

Dichos—Jacinto

Jacinto. (con alegría) Nuevos datos señores, nuevos datos.

Marq(ués). Que?

Jac(into). Sobre la dama misteriosa.

Joaq(uín). Todavía se ocupa Vd. de esa tontería?

Jac(into). Cárlos acaba de decirme que esta en vias de averiguar . . . No sé como han llegado á sus manos ciertas pruebas . . . tiene indicios . . . da gusto de oírle . . . <sup>s</sup> vengan Vds. . . .

Marq(ués). Observo que ese chico detesta cordialmente á Alejandro. No sé porque . . . ya no hay motivo . . . (Que bien hice en librar á Eugenia del peligro . . . )

Jac(into). Esta furioso. Y segun dice, parece que la dama en cuestion se halla actualmente en esta casa.

Joaq(uín). Entre tantas . . . Si va Vd. á continuar el tratado de las damas misteriosas, me retiro . . .

Jac(into). Pues lo continuaré; pero Vd. ha de oírme

Joaq(uín). Eso no. (alejandose)

Jac(into). Ah! No puede Vd. estar separado ni un momento de su amigo.

Joaq(uín). Asi es . . . Adios.

Escena 7

el Marques, Jacinto

Jac(into). Lo que digo: el negocio que traen entre manos, debe ser colosal.

Marq(ués). Vd. tambien? . . . No tengo entendido que se ocupen de ningun negocio. Son amigos y nada mas. Referente á intereses, no creo que hayan celebrado mas contrato que el de la casa.

Jac(into). Que casa?

Marq(ués). Como Joaquín tiene que marchar á Inglaterra para no sé que gran negocio, parece que Alejandro alquila el palacio . . .

Jac(into). Alquila el palacio. No será para nada bueno.

Marq(ués). Vd. siempre piensa mal.

Jac(into). Por eso acierto siempre. Oh! Alejandro es hombre muy travieso y de ingeniosos recursos para salir del paso en todos los apuros.

Marq(ués). Y cuales son sus apuros?

Jac(into). Desengáñese Vd. amigo mio: esa dama de quien he hablado, esta muy expuesta á la deshonra, si siguen celebrandose las entrevistas en casa del amante.

Marq(ués). Bah!

Jac(into). Y Dn. Joaquín es tambien hombre de mucho ingenio. En fin no quiero ofenderle. Para que comprenda Vd. el quid de mi sospecha, le referiré un hecho.

<sup>s</sup> Should read da gusto oírle. The de-infinitive is not impossible: it was common in older Spanish.

- Marq(ués)*. A ver?
- Jac(into)*. El ha sido hombre de muchas aventuras. Figurese Vd. si lo sabré yo, que he sido su compañero de glorias y fatigas.—Hace algunos años hacíamos el amor á dos hermanas lindísimas, ambas casadas; y sus maridos no eran maridos, eran dos leones. El de la mia se enteró de todo, y tuvimos un lance . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Y el de la otra?
- Jac(into)*. Quia. A Alejandro todo le sale á pedir de boca: eso es lo que me carga. Enamorados ella y él ciegamente, no podían verse en ninguna parte, porque el marido . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Ya.
- Jac(into)*. Una fiera . . . Y como el amante no podía entrar en su casa . . .
- Marq(ués)*. La llevaba á la suya, como ahora.
- Jac(into)*. No . . . entonces estaba en fondos: alquilo un palacio, si señor, una pequeña casa con jardín, á donde la dama podía acudir sin ser vista, ni escitar sospechas. Vea Vd. de que modo quedó todo en secreto, y salió ileso el honor de aquella encantadora muger, que era una de las principales de la Corte.
- Marq(ués)*. Y Vd. cree que tambien ahora? . . . (indignado) En nombre de mi amigo, rechazo sospecha tan indecorosa.
- Jac(into)*. No hay que enfadarse, Sr. marques. Un poco de memoria. El caso no es nuevo. Hace unos diez años . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Y fué la mayor de las infamias. Hace poco lo recordabamos aqui Joaquín y yo, y él decia: "si conociera al periodista que escribió tan gran vileza, le estrangularia sin compasion"
- Jac(into)*. Estrangularle! pobrecito (ap[arte]) (Como que fui yo.)
- Marq(ués)*. Pues no faltaba mas . . . Cree Vd. que Joaquín es capaz?
- Jac(into)*. No . . . yo no afirmo . . . Fué una idea, una presuncion. Lo que fuere sonará . . . Yo lo decia porque como quiero auxiliar á Cárlos en sus investigaciones, recojo todos los datos que puedo . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Tambien Cárlos esta inaguantable con su empeño . . .
- Jac(into)*. Esta fuera de sí, y no ha de pasar la noche sin que le provoque y tengamos aqui una sesion divertida . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Como? . . . un altercado?
- Jac(into)*. Venga Vd. . . nos reiremos. Me gusta que alguien le diga cuatro verdades . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Vamos si; pero á impedirlo. (Alejandro se asoma por la puerta de la izquierda y al verlos, se oculta)
- Jac(into)*. No pasará de unas cuantas palabras bien dichas.
- Marq(ués)*. Pues no faltaba mas . . . (vanse)

Escena 8

Alejandro, solo

(sale p[or] la izq[ui]erda) cuando ve que se han ido el marques y Jacinto)

Alej(andro). Al fin se van . . . Eugenia vendrá aqui . . . podré hablarla un momento . . . un momento tan solo, porque nos vigilan, nos acechan . . . Oh! De cuantos enemigos tengo que triunfar; del padre que se obstina en no tenerme por yerno, de Sofía, que rechaza toda transacción con su antiguo amante; de Cárlos, que furioso de celos me provoca á cada momento . . . y sin embargo, á pesar de todo . . . Eugenia será mía! Tengo muy calculados, muy medidos los pasos que me han de conducir á este anhelado fin, para que retroceda ante tan frívolos obstáculos. Empresas mas difíciles he realizado, y en esta no he de sucumbir como un inexperto mozalvete . . . (con inquietud) Pero es preciso precipitar el negocio . . . Yo sé que el marques esta muy mal de fondos, y si en un día de apuro se le ocurre echar mano de la fortuna de su hija . . . Esta idea que quita el sueño . . . Ya—estos padres son tan descorazonados, que no piensan en el porvenir de sus hijas, y solo atienden á satisfacer su vanidad . . . Y esa señora marquesa . . . porque en vez de esos valores mobiliarios, que son tan peligrosos, no dejaría la fortuna de su hija representada en buenas y seguras fincas? . . . que diablos . . . estas madres no tienen prevision! . . . (meditabundo) Oh! Cuanto no cuesta el satisfacer nuestra ambicion! ¡Que incesante trabajo! que lucha tan espantosa contra toda clase de obstáculos! Se lucha por ser diputado, despues por tener un nombre é imponerse á la muchedumbre . . . se desvive uno por ser ministro . . . Bien: llegamos á ser ministros y que? Esto no basta, es preciso algo mas. El mérito es una joya preciosísima, convengo; pero este diamante no luce á los ojos del vulgo su deslumbradora hermosura sino engastado en oro. La verdadera gloria, la elevacion sobre tantas gentes corrompidas, prontas á besar la mano del enemigo si les alarga un pedazo de pan; esa superioridad que á la vez forman el talento, el caracter, la riqueza . . . ¡cuan cara es! . . . Parece que no es nada, y . . . ¡si las pequeñeces de la vida no influyeran tanto en nuestro destino! La sociedad se ha puesto de tal modo que va á ser imposible vivir en ella! Cuanta superfluidad indispensable, cuanta frivolidad necesaria, cuanta tontería de que no se puede prescindir! . . . y sin esto nada . . . un nombre que suena por algun tiempo . . . una fama que pasa una posicion insegura, el peligro de ceder á los mil sobornos . . . Vamos, no se puede, no se puede . . . (con impaciencia) Y esa chica que no viene . . . Yo la convenceré de que es preciso que busquemos el amparo de esa ley bienhechora, por la cual pueden las muchachas sensibles casarse á cierta edad con quien mejor les cuadre . . . Si: y el depósito ha de tener lugar mañana mismo: no se puede perder un día. Los pobres menores que no tienen su fortuna en fincas estan expuestos á pedir limosna, si a un padre se le antoja . . . (con resolucion) Nada . . . adelante. (receloso) Pero ella consentirá? Aquí está el quid . . . no está preparada para un paso tan aventurado y . . . Ah! . . . procuraré tener una entrevista con ella en casa de cualquiera de nuestros amigos . . . Si . . . Mi elocuencia, que ha hecho ya tantos prodigios, no dejara de obtener ahora un nuevo triunfo . . . (receloso) Tal vez se resista . . . esta noche no me atrevo á decirselo . . . se lo indicaré tan solo . . . apenas podré hablarla un momento . . . Mañana, mañana será la gran sesión . . . Le dire mil cosas bonitas, la convenceré, se pide el consejo paterno, se deposita, y á los tres meses . . . Ah! aquí esta

Escena 9

Alejandro, Eugenia

Eug(enia). (con recelo) Nadie nos ve. Disponemos de un momento tan solo.

Alej(andro). Momento precioso, que vale días enteros de vida, porque me permite verte y hablarte.

Eug(enia). Es terrible que no podamos vernos. Aborrezco las cartas. Cuando las escribo, me ocurren tantas cosas que llenaría cien pliegos de papel y no quedaria contenta.

Alej(andro). Siempre me parecen cortas.

Eug(enia). Pues bien larguitas son. Paso la mayor parte de la noche escribiéndolas, y casi siempre tengo que fingirme mala para poder encerrarme en mi cuarto. ¡Que vida! Gracias á Dios que nos vemos! Mas se dice en una palabra que en veinte pliegos de escritura.

Alej(andro). Pues empieza. Tienes muchas cosas que decirme?

Eug(enia). Muchas, muchísimas. Ay! ahora no me acuerdo de ninguna. Esto me sucede siempre.

Alej(andro). Tu padre . . .

Eug(enia). (con tristeza) No me digas . . . Cada vez se opone mas. Y no es él solo. También Sofía . . . pues y Carlos?

Alej(andro). Rábia de celos.

Eug(enia). Ya le habrás visto esta noche. Su aspecto sombrío, y las terribles miradas que nos dirige, me causan pavor.

Alej(andro). Tenemos muchos enemigos (con energía) Pero que no nos falte valor y confianza en Dios. Oye lo que tengo que decirte (con afectada ternura) Eugenia mía: yo te amo tanto, que estoy decidido á sacrificar por ti mi posición y mi porvenir, renunciando á la política para siempre.

Eug(enia). De veras? (con alborozo) Lo harás? Ah! Las frases mas galantes y mas lisongeras que me has dirigido no me han halagado tanto como lo que acabas de decirme. Sabes que no tengo ni pizca de vanidad. Si nos casamos, no me gustará que seas ministro, ni que hablen de ti los periodicos, ni que pronuncies discursos. Si no cambiaras de vida, me parecería que compartía con todo el mundo la felicidad de nuestra casa. Con que harás lo que has dicho?

Alej(andro). Si; pero con la condición de que tu has de corresponder á mi sacrificio con otro.

Eug(enia). Cual?

Alej(andro). Prescindir de la oposición de tu padre, y casarte conmigo.

Eug(enia). (asustada) Contra su voluntad . . . y como?

Alej(andro). (ap[arte]) (Esta floja: hablemos un poco á su imaginación) Yo espero que no me negarás esa prueba de cariño que tan bien merezco . . . Es posible que tu no hayas llegado á comprender cuanto vale el amor que te profeso, un amor que ha tenido fuerza suficiente para hacerme aborrecer lo que antes era mi delirio? Tu me has transformado por completo, descubriendo y resucitando en mí sentimientos ocultos, esas riquezas del alma que por largo tiempo yacían escondidas y enterradas, como inútiles formas de la vida. He sido feliz soñando con una tranquila existencia, consagrada á amarte, y si despues de haberme dejado trastornar por tan risueña ilusion, no se realizara, creo que me volvería loco.

Eug(enia). (con amabilidad) Pero tonto . . . que dices? . . . Desconfiar de mí?

Alej(andro). Yo esperaba que una mano salvadora me sacara del infierno en que vivo, y ultimamente creí que esa mano no podía ser sino la tuya . . . Pero ahora te veo vacilar, desconoces la grandeza de tu triunfo, me abandonas, te falta valor, tienes miedo de chocar con tus parientes . . .

Eug(enia). Oh! yo no . . . pero todo puede conciliarse.

Alej(andro). Para mí siempre ha sido difícil retroceder lo mismo en el camino de la perdicion, que en el de la salvacion. ¡Pobre de mí, si ahora me abandonas, cuando un amor apacible tiende á lograr la reconstitucion de mi turbado espiritu . . . Rodeado de gentes infames é insensibles, arrastrado á pesar mio por este funesto carril que no conduce sino á la pérdida de todo sentimiento tierno, mi juventud se consumiria en un esfuerzo insensato, y la aridez de mi alma me convertiría poco á poco en un ser empedernido y calculador, solo animado y movido por la fuerza del pensamiento.

Eug(enia). Yo abandonarte! (conmovida) Que dices?

Alej(andro). Para unirnos no hay mas que un medio . . .

Eug(enia). Un medio violento.

Alej(andro). El unico. (con energia) La incertidumbre me mata, Eugenia. Si no te decides á adoptar ese medio, es preciso que desde esta noche nos separemos para siempre.

Eug(enia). Estas loco? . . . (afigida) Oh: me ofendes con esas palabras. Yo haré todo lo que me mandas . . . Que debo hacer?

Alej(andro). (Venceré) No puedo revelarte ahora todo<sup>9</sup> proyecto. Necesito hablarte detenidamente y sin que nadie nos estorbe . . .

Eug(enia). Estamos solos.

Alej(andro). Pero es preciso que nos separemos al instante. Lo mejor es que nos veamos mañana en casa de Dn. Joaquin. Adolfiná, que es tu amiga íntima, está un poco mala. De modo que ya tienes un pretexto para ir allá.

Eug(enia). Iré: por la tarde?

<sup>9</sup> Insert el after todo.

Alej(andro). No: por la noche. Allí hablaremos largamente y con calma. Te dire tales razones que quedaras convencida.

Eug(enia). Pues iré sin falta.

Alej(andro). A las ocho . . . y ahora debemos separarnos.

Eug(enia). (mirando con recelo a la izq[ui]erda) Me parece que siento pasos . . .

Alej(andro). Tal vez.

Eug(enia). Me ire yo.

Alej(andro). No (mirando á la izq[ui]erda) Sofia viene. Me retiraré yo: es mejor que te quedes tu. Adios. (vase por el fondo)

Escena 10ª.

Eugenia—Sofia

Sofia. Todo lo he oido . . . (reparando en la agitacion de Eugenia) Pero por que tiembblas? . . .

Eug(enia). Yo . . . te diré . . .

Sof(ia). Conque nos has engañado á todos . . . y mientras tu padre estaba tan tranquilo, juzgándote curada de esa pasion, habia cartitas, entrevistas, y se proyecta una gran conferencia para mañana, con objeto de discutir un plan de casamiento . . .

Eug(enia). (con expansion) Ah! Sofia: á ti te confesaré todo . . . yo no puedo ocultarte nada . . . tu eres mi hermana y como tal puedo descubrirte todo lo que pienso y todo lo que siento. La oposicion de mi padre, la de Carlos, la tuya, me han obligado á disimular. Aborrezco el disimulo, y á ti, á ti sola te confesaré que no puedo, que me es imposible dejar de amarle.

Sof(ia). (con ira que trata de ocultar) Bien, Eugenia . . . te has portado . . .

Eug(enia). (con aficcion) Yo espero que me favoreceras, que ayudaras á vencer la obstinacion de mi padre

Sof(ia). Yo! . . . y esa entrevista de mañana . . . (Iré tambien á casa de Joaquin.)

Eug(enia). Tu me amas mucho, tu no puedes dejar de interesarte por mi, Sofia: por que te enfadas? por que me miras asi?

Sof(ia). Pero tu no sabes que ese hombre? . . .

Eug(enia). Que?

Sof(ia). Ama á otra muger . . .

Eug(enia). (vivamente) Que has dicho? No puede ser. Tu me engañas . . .

Sof(ia). Es cierto.

Eug(enia). Y quien, quien es . . . (con calor) No puede ser . . . te digo que no puede ser.

Sof(ia). Alguien viene. Calmate . . . Despues hablaremos.

Escena 9ª.

Dichos—Jacinto, Carlos, (que demuestra una gran agitacion)

Jacinto. Ha estado Vd. felicísimo, Carlos; ha estado Vd. elocuente.

- Sof(ía).* (con inquietud) Que ha pasado?
Jac(into). Que cree Vd.: si no le hubieramos contenido, ya habria pasado un buen susto cierta persona . . .
Sof(ía). (alarmada) Carlos!
Eug(enía). (id) (Dios mio! Sin duda han tenido una cuestion)
Jac(into). Les aseguro á Vds. que pasé un buen rato. No recuerdo que palabras dijo el otro al salir de aqui cuando este se dirigió á él en tono tan destemplado . . .
Carlos. (ap[arte] sombríamente) Buenas cosas le dije! ese hombre y yo no podemos estar juntos en ninguna parte.)
Sof(ía). Pero Alejandro y Carlos . . .
Jac(into). El otro es algo provocativo . . . y con esos humos de hombre eminente . . . Bueno es que le digan cuatro verdades.
Sof(ía). (con indignacion) Oh! y en mi casa! . . .
Jac(into). Todo no ha de salirle á pedir de boca. (riendo) ja, ja! Las eminencias me revientan.

Escena 11ª.

Dichos—el Marqués

- Marq(ués).* (riendo) Me parece que estuvo demasiado fuerte.
Sof(ía). Cuéntame tu: que ha sido?
Mar(qués). Palabras nada mas: algunas bien dichas . . . un poco fuerte (á Carlos) Chico: es preciso moderar esos arrebatos.
Sof(ía). Semejante altercado en mi casa!
Marq(ués). (á Eug(enía)) Me parece que ya es hora.
Eug(enía). Nos vamos?
Mar(qués). Si—(despidiendose) Sofía?
Sof(ía). Se van Vds?
Mar(qués). Sí.
Sof(ía). Adios. (besa á Eug(enía))
Eug(enía). )ap[arte] á Sof(ía) (Estoy temblando!)
Sof(ía). (ap[arte]) (Tu eres la causa de todo.)
Jac(into). Y yo vuelvo al salon. (vanse Eug(enía), el marq(ués) y Jacinto)

Escena 12ª.

Sofía, Carlos

- Sof(ía).* (en tono de repension) Carlos!
Carlos. (agitado) No haga Vd. caso si le dicen que no tuve razon.
Sof(ía). Parece que sin motivo alguno!
Carlos. Yo no puedo contenerme: yo no puedo permanecer tranquilo delante de ese hombre. Me inspira una repulsion instintiva que no puede explicarse por la sola causa de los terribles celos que me consumen.
Sof(ía). Pero que razon.
Carlos. Es la falsedad en persona! Todos aqui creian que habia renunciado

- á ella. Yo sé que no, yo sé que se escriben, yo sé que se ven en alguna parte.
- Sof(ía).* Quizas te equivoques
- Carlos.* No: yo tengo indicios, yo he sorprendido miradas, señas, palabras sueltas . . . A Eugenia no se la ve en ninguna parte por las noches. Se finge mala, dice que se encierra en su cuarto . . .
- Sof(ía).* Cálmate por Dios!
- Eug(enía).*<sup>10</sup> Pero yo he jurado que ese vil no se casará con mi prima.
- Sof(ía).* (con brio) No—no se casará.
- Carlos.* Lo impediré yo
- Sof(ía).* (con calor) Lo impediremos.
- Cárlos.* No . . . yo solo.
- Sof(ía).* Como?
- Cárlos.* (arrebataadamente) Matándole!
- Sof(ía).* (asustada) Cárlos! . . . que dices . . . estas loco?
- Carlos.* Yo sé que el duelo es un crimen, yo sé que Vd. se morira de pena, si ese hombre me hiere ó me mata; pero tiene que ser, tiene que ser.
- Sof(ía).* (dominandose) Insensato! y te atreves á decirlo á tu madre!
- Carlos.* Ese hombre es un infame!
- Sof(ía).* (con arrebato) Si—un infame!
- Carlos.* Es peor de lo que Vd. cree. Mientras ella le ama con delirio, él la engaña y tiene relaciones con otra.
- Sof(ía).* (confundida) Que? . . . que sabes tu? . . .
- Carlos.* Lo sé . . . No oyó Vd. lo que contamos Jacinto y yo? . . .
- Sof(ía).* No te ocupes mas de eso, hijo mio. En cuanto á Eugenia, yo te prometo estar al tanto de todo, seguirle los pasos, desbaratar todos los planes de ese hombre—descuida: yo me encargo de todo.
- Carlos.* Hay aqui un dilema terrible. Ó ese miserable engaña á mi prima, amando á otra, mientras pretende su mano, en cuyo caso merece la muerte, ó la muger desconocida que le visita es . . . Eugenia misma, y entonces . . .
- Sof(ía).* (con terror) Oh! calla . . . Cárlos . . . me horrorizas!
- Carlos.* (con decision) Entonces sé lo que tengo que hacer (vase por el fondo)
- Sof(ía).* (sola) Ah! Dios mio! que abismo se abre ante mis ojos!

Fin del acto segundo.

ACTO TERCERO

Sala en casa de Dn. Joaquín. Puerta al fondo. A la izquierda una ventana que da a un jardín. A la derecha puerta que conduce a lo interior.

Escena primera

Dn. Joaquín, Simon.

Dn. Joaquín. Está todo empaquetado?

<sup>10</sup> This should be Carlos.

- Simon.* Todo.
- Joaq(uín).* Has avisado al despacho central?
- Simon.* Vendrán por el equipage.
- Joaq(uín).* Bueno. Se han marchado los otros criados?
- Simon.* Si señor: yo solo quedo en la casa.
- Joaq(uín).* Pues vete. Me avisaras cuando sea hora.
- Simon.* (al salir) (Se marcha de ocultis . . . ya . . . son tantas las trampas . . . Me gustan estos señorones. Mucha facha, y á lo mejor . . . ) vase

Escena 2ª.Dn. Joaquín—Alejandro.

- Alejandro(ro).* Con que tan pronto?
- Joaq(uín).* Aquí me tiene Vd dispuesto á partir. Y al fin se queda Vd. en la casa?
- Alejandro).* No sé . . . ya le escribiré á Vd . . . Ay amigo: esta repentina partida de Vd., es para mi una gran contrariedad.
- Joaq(uín).* Por que? . . . Ya sabe Vd. la causa de esta precipitacion. Mi desastrosa ruina, los terribles compromisos que ha traído para mi la liquidacion de fin de mes, no me permiten estar ni un dia mas en Madrid. Esta noche me voy clandestinamente, y una vez que esté sano y salvo en Francia, ya procuraremos quedar bien con todo el mundo y dejar á salvo la negra honrilla.
- Alejandro).* Pero no podría Vd. esperar á mañana?
- Joaq(uín).* No: ni un dia, ni una hora, ni un minuto mas. Me voy a escape y quisiera que el ferrocarril centuplicara su velocidad para estar dentro de un rato en Irun.
- Alejandro).* Pues le diré á Vd. porque lo siento. Yo habia citado á Eugenia aqui esta noche.
- Joaq(uín).* Si? Vd. insiste en llevar adelante su proyecto contra viento y marea?
- Alejandro).* Justo. Quiero hablarla largamente y sin estorbo. Esta noche misma, si accede á mi deseo, como espero, quedara depositada, se pide ante notario el consejo paterno y dentro de tres meses nos casamos.
- Joaq(uín).* Demonio: eso va muy á prisa. Y viene aqui esta noche para conferenciar con Vd.? Si no es mas que eso?
- Alejandro).* Nada mas.
- Joaq(uín).* Pero yo me voy: la casa quedará sola.
- Alejandro).* Y Adolfin se va tambien?
- Joaq(uín).* No se va, sino que se ha ido. Para que mi partida por nadie sea sospechada, hice salir á mi hija desde este mañana para el Escorial. Las chicas todo lo charlan, y saliendo juntos de aqui habria sido imposible ocultar el viaje.
- Alejandro).* Eso no puede impedir que Eugenia venga aqui. Mientras Vd. esté . . .

- Joaq(uín)*. Que venga . . . Se enfadará el marqués; pero bien sé que le hago un favor adjudicándole un yerno de tanto merito . . . Ah! . . . sabe Vd. que Juan ha pagado hoy los vencimientos . . . ?
- Alej(andro)*. Y Vd. cree que habrá sido capaz de tocar . . . ?
- Joaq(uín)*. No. esté Vd. tranquilo. Juan habrá sacado el dinero de alguna parte. Muchas veces le he oído decir: "iré á presidio antes que hacer uso de la fortuna de mi hija."
- Alej(andro)*. Veremos . . . es preciso abrir una información sobre el asunto.
- Joaq(uín)*. Vd. es hombre afortunado. Ah! y á propósito. Hoy han circulado rumores de crisis
- Alej(andro)*. No creo que tengan fundamento. Mas adelante
- Joaq(uín)*. Como aquí se precipitan los sucesos . . . Siento un coche . . . será Eugenia.
- Alej(andro)*. (se acer[c]a á la puerta del fondo) Oh! . . . que diablura! Es Sofía!

Escena 3ª.

Dichos—Sofía

- Sof(ía)*. Sr. D. Joaquín . . . Oh! Alejandro Vd. aquí?
- Alej(andro)*. (¡A que vendrá esta maldita!)
- Joaq(uín)*. ¡Señora: que agradable sorpresa! (ap[arte] á Alej[andro]) Se marchará pronto)
- Sof(ía)*. Pues diré á Vd. . . . Me dijeron que Adolfiná esta enferma, y corrí á saber . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Quia—no señora—Esta buena!
- Sof(ía)*. Y no esta en casa?
- Joaq(uín)*. Le diré á Vd. . . . Ha salido . . . hace un momento
- Sof(ía)*. Volverá pronto. En fin me alegro de que no haya sido nada
- Joaq(uín)*. Señora: si Vd. me lo permite . . . Tengo que dar ordenes . . . (ap[arte] á Alej[andro]) Entreténgala Vd. un poco.
- Alej(andro)*. (Si ahora viene la otra)
- Joaq(uín)*. Soy con Vds. (vase)

Escena 4ª.

Alejandro, Sofía

- Sof(ía)*. Al verme entrar aquí te has quedado como confuso, aturcido . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Yo? no lo creas.
- Sof(ía)*. No temas: Eugenia tarda pero vendrá (con jovialidad) No se puede contar para nada con estas niñas del día. Gastan tres horas delante del espejo para ponerse el sombrero y el infeliz amante aguarda que aguardarás!
- Alej(andro)*. (Sabe que la espero . . . )
- Sof(ía)*. Pero vendra, vendra. Yo misma le aconseje que viniera
- Alej(andro)*. Tu tenaz intervencion en este asunto me sorprende y me mortifica.
- Sof(ía)*. Que quieres. Dicen que á falta de madres, las madrinas tenemos el deber de velar por el bienestar de las pobres huérfanas.

- Alej(andro)*. No puedo soportar esta fiscalizacion que ejerce Vd. sobre mí (con arrogancia) Basta de disimulo.
- Sofía*. Eso es lo que quiero: que arrojes la máscara de una vez.
- Alej(andro)*. (dominandose) Sofía: hablemos friamente. Yo te diré los motivos que me mueven á obra(r) así. Seré franco hasta lo último; te confesaré hasta mis faltas . . .
- Sof(ía)*. Demasiado las conozco.
- Alej(andro)*. Y al fin conoceras cuan impertinente es la sistemática guerra que me estas haciendo.
- Sof(ía)*. Si tu amaras sinceramente á Eugenia, yo, respetaría una pasión honrada. Pero tu no tienes otro móvil que el interés. Para conseguir los fines que te indica tu atroz egoísmo, tienes todo, fama, talento, prestigio: no te falta mas que una gran fortuna y eso es lo que buscas.
- Alej(andro)*. Que suposición tan inicua!
- Sof(ía)*. Entonces la amas?
- Alej(andro)*. Te diré. Tu no puedes comprenderme porque no tienes serenidad en esta ocasión. Te sientes herida en tus sentimientos, y . . . (¿Seré tan torpe que no pueda convencerla, para que me deje en paz?)
- Sof(ía)*. Acaba.
- Alej(andro)*. Quiero decirte que si reflexionaras . . . por que has de juzgarme peor de lo que soy? Yo, sin embargo conservo hacia ti los mismos sentimientos que me inspiraste en el destierro, y por respeto, por gratitud, por . . . amor ocuparas siempre el mismo lugar en mi corazón.
- Sof(ía)*. (El miserable quiere sobornarme) (afectando amabilidad) Te ruego que me expliques eso mejor.
- Alej(andro)*. Tu has creído que he dejado de amarte. No . . . ese sería el mayor y el mas imperdonable de mis extravíos. Fíjate en las circunstancias, en la posición q(u)e ocupó, en todo lo que me rodea, fíjate bien, y no podras menos de ser indulgente con esta aparente perfidia que cometo al pretender . . . Oh! veo que frunces el ceño: no me comprendes (exaltandose) Pues bien: te hablaré al corazón, diciendote que, cualesquiera<sup>11</sup> que sea la situación en que pronto me halle, seré el mismo para ti, y no tendras motivo para ar(re)pentirte de haberme amado.
- Sof(ía)*. Que monstruosidad. (levántase) Y tiene Vd. el valor, la imprudencia de decirme . . . Para disculpar lo que llama una pequeña perfidia, comete la villanía de indicarme . . . si . . . claramente lo ha dicho . . . de indicarme que me ama todavía, que me amará Vd. mas que á su esposa . . . rebaja Vd. ante mí á aquella niña inocente, á quien quiero como una hermana, y no vacila en infundirme respecto á ella el compasivo desprecio que inspira siempre la rival humillada. Al oír tales absurdos, me espanto de que haya existido una muger

<sup>11</sup> An error for cualquiera.

capaz de amarle a Vd., y no solo me espanto, sino me avergüenzo de que esa muger haya sido yo. (aparta el rostro con repugnancia)

Alej(andro). Tu no quieres entenderme.

Sof(ia). La insistencia con que me opongo á ese casamiento habra hecho creer á Vd. que le amo todavia! . . . (con dignidad) Oh! no . . . y si aun le amara, tendria el remedio de esta desgracia en Vd. mismo, cuyas indignidades son suficientes á curarme por completo.

Alej(andro). Y aun te quejas de mí, cuando me ves sufrir con paciencia lo que me dices.

Sofia. (con elocuencia) No debo ocultar en este momento nada de lo que pasa en mi ánimo. Habré podido dejarme arrastrar por seducciones mentirosas; habré cedido á un arrebató de la imaginacion, seré culpable por debilidad, por vehemencia de sentimientos, por . . . á veces cometemos las mayores faltas no por malas, ni por torpes, ni por coquetas, sino por tontas . . . Sea por lo que quiera: yo lo reconozco; pero jamas persistiré en el crimen con ese indigno cinismo que Vd. profesa . . . Yo vivia atormentada por los remordimientos; yo me avergonzaba, me despreciaba, tenia momentos terribles al hallarme á solas con mi conciencia; pero ahora, delante de Vd., tengo la presuncion de reconocermé regenerada. Vd. me hace buena; Vd. es mucho peor que yo; y si le amara un momento mas; si bajara hasta Vd., me creeria envilecida para siempre.

Alej(andro). Vd.<sup>12</sup> hará lo que quiera; pero Eugenia . . .

Sof(ia). No será esposa de Vd.

Alej(andro). Vd. no puede oponerse á ello.

Sof(ia). Lo veremos. Todo esfuerzo es inutil. Demita Vd.

Alej(andro). Lo he meditado bien, y no puedo demitir.

Sof(ia). Esta Vd. dominado por el espiritu de las conveniencias

Alej(andro). Y Vd. ciega por el despecho.

Sof(ia). Yo no tengo despecho. Concluido este asunto, no quiero ni oír hablar de Vd. Anoche he vuelto á pedirle á Vd. las cartas mías que conserva. Cree Vd. que aun no es tiempo de que vuelvan á mi poder?

Alej(andro). Las tendrá Vd. (con una idea repentina) (Ah! que idea! Quizas por ese medio . . .) Me retiro.

Sof(ia). Y no la aguarda Vd.? Ya no puede tardar

Alej(andro). Volveré. Señora: no temo hablar á Eugenia delante de Vd. Volveré. (vase)

Escena 5ª.

Sofia (sola)

Sof(ia). Volverá . . . que intentará . . . Oh! Dios mio! que este bienhechor aborrecimiento crezca pronto irresistible y poderoso para que no me atormente mas la cruel indecision entre el amor y el desprecio <sup>12</sup> Alejandro is now adopting the formal mode of address the same as Sofia did three speeches before.

... Oh! no ... ya no dudo ... la vacilacion seria una mengua mayor que la de haberle amado ... Grande ha sido el yerro; pero ahora ... corazon: ten dignidad ... Con este ardiente menosprecio me siento ennoblecida, y ahora ... soy incapaz de perdonarle ... no tengo virtud para tanto—necesito una venganza, si, una venganza ... noble ... Ah! ... Eugenia viene.

Escena 6ª.

Sofia, Eugenia

- Eug(enia).* (ap[arte] al entrar) Es particular. El salia cuando yo entraba y me dijo que le aguardara que volverá pronto ... ¡Sofía aquí!
- Sof(ía).* Como ves, yo tambien he acudido á la cita.
- Eug(enia)* Y Adolfiná?
- Sof(ía).* Ha salido. Me dijeron que estaba mala y por eso vine ...
- Eug(enia).* (con recelo) (Por eso ...)
- Sof(ía).* Si.
- Eug(enia).* (sentándose) Tengo que hablarte, tengo que contarte.
- Sof(ía).* Que te pasa?
- Eug(enia).* Verdaderamente no debi venir acá esta noche.
- Sof(ía).* Por que faltar á una cita que quizás sea decisiva para tu porvenir?
- Eug(enia).* Debi quedarme acompañando á papá.
- Sof(ía).* Esta malo Juan?
- Eug(enia).* No: esta bueno; pero muy triste. Me da tanta pena verlo asi.
- Sof(ía).* Pero que tiene?
- Eug(enia).* (despues de vacilar) En fin ... para ti no tengo secretos. Papa ha tenido muy fuertes reveses en los negocios. Como es tan hombre de bien ...
- Sof(ía).* Habrá tenido que pagar culpas ajenas.
- Eug(enia).* Esta mañana adquirió de repente la certeza de su completa ruina. Parece que la baja de la Bolsa ... en fin ... no sé el motivo ... Pero no sabes lo que padezco viéndole tan acongojado, tan aburrido. Hoy ha tenido lugar en casa una escena que me ha conmovido.
- Sof(ía).* Cuéntamelo todo.
- Eug(enia).* Presentoseme papá con lagrimas en los ojos, y abrazandome con ternura, me dijo: “estoy arruinado” (conmovida) No puedes figurarte que impresion me hicieron aquellas palabras y el tono con que las pronunció. Luego dijo: “todo lo he perdido, y ni el honor me quedará, si no salgo de cierto terrible compromiso con lo que tu tienes, con la cuantiosa herencia de tu madre, que yo no puedo tocar, ni tocaré si tu no lo consientes.”—Por un rato no supe que contestar. Me sofocaba, me aturdia ver su afliccion; pero poco tardé en comprender que de mi voluntad dependia su honor y su reposo, y esta idea me causó la mas viva alegria:
- Sof(ía).* Eres menor, y aunque podia materialmente disponer de tu fortuna por no ser nominativa, él es hombre de conciencia, y ha querido tener tu consentimiento.

- Eug(enia)*. No habia yo de consentir? Como lo que tengo está en mobiliario no es preciso que llegue á la mayor edad para disponer de ello.
- Sof(ía)*. La ley te autoriza para comerciar á los veinte años.
- Eug(enia)*. Yo comerciar!
- Sof(ía)*. De modo que . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Yo me resigno facilmente á la pobreza. Si vieras que peso se me quitó de encima . . . (con satisfaccion) Ay! He devuelto á mi padre la honra y la tranquilidad: esto produce una satisfaccion y un alivio que no es posible espresar.
- Sof(ía)*. Y has perdido todo tu patrimonio!
- Eug(enia)*. Todo.
- Sof(ía)*. Tu abnegacion no tiene precio. ¡Que buena eres, que noble, que generosa, que grande! Conque eres pobre! . . . (ya estoy vengada!) (con cierta exaltacion) Oh! deja que admire á mis anchas la sublimidad de tus sentimientos.
- Eug(enia)*. Ay! que placer tan grande, tan puro proporciona hacer el bien y sacrificarse por los demas.
- Sof(ía)*. Pues es preciso que inmediatamente hagas una cosa.
- Eug(enia)*. Que?
- Sof(ía)*. Decir lo que te pasa al hombre que te pretende por esposa.
- Eug(enia)*. Se lo diré. Pero tu sospechas que porque soy pobre puede dejar de quererme?
- Sof(ía)*. No digo tanto. Pero estas cosas son delicadas, y hasta seria una falta muy grave ocultárselo.
- Eug(enia)*. Yo estoy segura de que aplaudirá mi conducta. El es tan admirador de las acciones generosas!
- Sof(ía)*. De palabra ya lo creo . . . Diselo. cuando yo te aconsejo que se lo digas.
- Eug(enia)*. Esta misma noche, si vuelve . . . Otra cosa. Como no hay pena que no lleve tras si un poco de alegria lo que ha pasado, al mismo tiempo que me entristece, considerando la desgracia de papá, me ha dado esperanza de conseguir . . . ya sabes lo que quiero decir.
- Sof(ía)*. Ahora tienes esperanza de que Juan consienta . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Eso es. Siempre conmovido y sin dejar de besarme con ardiente cariño, me dijo: "hija mía: mi voluntad es la tuya. Acabas de hacerme tu esclavo y no podré oponerme á ninguno de tus deseos." En aquella ocasion no me atrevi á hablarle del asunto; no me pareció oportuno; pero mañana . . . Estoy segura de que accederá.
- Sof(ía)*. Tal vez.
- Eug(enia)*. De modo que por esa parte estoy contenta. Ahora lo único que me contrista es lo que me dijiste anoche.
- Sof(ía)*. Que?
- Eug(enia)*. Que amaba á otra muger. Pero es cierto?
- Sof(ía)*. Tan cierto que
- Eug(enia)*. Pero quien, quien es? Cuanto he cavilado esta noche. Para trastornarme mas, ya oíste lo que decia Cárlos esta mañana. Habló de una muger que visita á Alejandro—dijo que él lo habia visto y que sé yo . . . Aunque todo me parece una insensatez de mi primo, me hace pensar . . .

Sof(ta). No hagas caso de Cárlos; pero ten por cierto . . .

Eug(enia). Oh! Si fuera verdad! . . .

Escena 7ª.

Dichas—Dn. Joaquín

Joaq(uín). Señoras . . . dispénsenme Vds. la tardanza; pero estoy tan ocupado esta noche . . . Ahora me ha entrado otra visita . . .

Sofia. (vivamente) Alejandro?

Joaq(uín). No señora: es el majadero de Jacinto, que siempre tiene el don de la inoportunidad

Eug(enia). Oh! que posma!

Sof(ta). Que calamidad! Yo no quiero recibirle

Eug(enia). Ni yo.

Simon. (anunciando) El S. Dn. Jacinto . . . pasa aqui?

Joaq(uín). (a Sof[ia] y Eug[enia]) Pasen Vds. al cuarto de Adol[ina] (á Simon) Hay luz allá?

Simon. Si señor.

Joaq(uín). (Abre la puerta de la d[er]ec[h]a) Por aqui . . . al fin de ese pasillo: yo las acompañare a Vds. (vanse Sof[ia] y Eugenia, y detras Joa[u]n)

Escena 8ª.

Jacinto, Simon

Jac(into). (entrando) Pero no hay nadie en esta casa? Ola Simon!

Simon. Señorito Dn. Jacinto . . . Vd. por aqui. Y la señorita?

Jac(into). Buena. Que tal te va con tu nuevo amo?

Simon. (con pena) Oh! señorito. Desde que dejé el servicio de Vd. para pasarme al de Dn. Joaquín, todo ha sido . . . (bajando la voz) Aqui no hay mas que facha.

Jac(into). Pero Dn. Joaquín . . . ?

Simon. (en voz muy baja) Tronado, mas tronado que Carrasco.

Jac(into). Y me dejaste creyendo mejorar!

Simon. Harto me ha pesado.

Jac(into). Con que dime: esto esta perdido?

Simon. Tan perdido, que el señorito se va esta noche para Paris de ocultis.

Jac(into). Y su hija.

Simon. La señorita se fué esta mañana al Escorial. Nadie lo sabe. Guarde Vd. el secreto.

Jac(into). Y tu amo se marcha tambien esta noche.

Simon. Si. Como me voy á reir mañana cuando vengán los acreedores.

Jac(into). Ya sé que la casa la alquila Alejandro.

Simon. Asi parece; mas por ahora queda á mi cargo.

Jac(into). No he visto criados ni portero.

- Simon.* Todos han sido despedidos: no queda nadie mas que yo.
Jac(into). (ap[arte]) Aqui hay misterio.) Di otra cosa. Aqui han entrado esta noche dos señoras. Yo las he visto.
Simon. Si . . . y muy guapas las dos.
Jac(into). Las conoces tu?
Simon. No señor: como hace poco que estoy en la casa . . .
Jac(into). (Juraría que una de las que vi entrar es Eugenia.) No entró tambien un caballero . . . ?
Simon. Dn. Alejandro . . . le conozco. Ese que va á ser ministro . . . un hombre que me gusta.
Jac(into). Demasiado pagado de si mismo. Como es hombre importante . . . No te cargan á ti las eminencias?
Simon. Lo que es ese . . . Le voy á hablar á ver si me coloca.
Jac(into). Tambien tu quieres ser funcionario publico?
Simon. Tambien . . . esta vida es muy perra. Ya que uno sirve, lo que da mas lustre es servir á la nacion.
Jac(into). Oye bien lo que te digo. La casa queda á tu cargo?
Simon. Si señor.
Jac(into). Si vuelvo esta noche solo ó acompañado, me dejaras entrar?
Simon. Despues que se haya marchado el amo, por que no?
Jac(into). (dandole dinero) Toma.
Simon. No es preciso . . . El amo viene. (vase)

Escena 9ª.Dn. Joaquin, Jacinto

- Jac(into).* Sr. Dn. Joaquin . . .
Joaq(uín). (friamente) Amigo . . .
Jac(into). Como anoche dijo Vd. que su hija estaba mala, venia á saber . . .
Joaq(uín). Esta mejor.
Jac(into). Me alegro . . . Sabe Vd. que hay crisis?
Joaq(uín). Si?
Jac(into). Si señor: ha sido una cosa imprevista como todo lo que pasa en este pais . . . Crisis total. No es preciso decir que Alejandro formará ministerio. Pero donde se ha metido ese hombre esta noche, que no se le ve en ninguna parte? Esta aqui?
Joaq(uín). No.
Jac(into). En su casa tampoco está. Vengo de allá . . . por cierto que esta noche nada hemos visto.
Joaq(uín). De que?
Jac(into). Se conoce que las entrevistas son en otra parte, para desorientar á los que les observan.
Joaq(uín). De que habla Vd. . . . Ah! de la dama que visita . . . acabáramos. Y tambien esta noche . . . ?
Jac(into). Si señor . . . hemos visto entrar una dama; pero no alli sino aqui.
Joaq(uín). Aqui? no sé nada . . . Será alguna amiga de mi hija . . . estará en su cuarto.

Ja(cinto). (¡Y su hija que esta en el Escorial! aqui hay algo). Pues al poco rato entró otra.

D. Joaquin. Dos! Hombre . . . pues no sabia.

Jacinto. (Lo niega!) Y diga Vd. . . . puedo ver á Adolfiná?

D. Joaq(uín). Esta un poco mala . . . no sé si estaran ahí sus amigas . . . (Demonio de zascandil)

Jac(into). Ah! D. Joaquin . . . Dispénsese Vd. la malignidad de mis juicios. Al ver entrar aquí á las dos muchachas, me ocurrió . . . Tambien Vd. pasa por aficionado al bello sexo . . .

D. Joaq(uín) (amoscado) De todos modos es una impertinencia . . .

Jac(into). Es broma: no se enoje Vd. . . . Como seguimos la pista á nuestro eminente amigo, y estamos en camino de probar que es un libertino, un hombre inmoral . . .

Joaq(uín). Eso cuenteselo Vd. á él.

Jac(into). Pero me parece que alguien le ha de dar un gran disgusto el mismo día del triunfo . . .

Joaq(uín). Quien?

Ja(cinto). Carlos . . . ya le oyó Vd. anoche . . . Y como se le ha metido en la cabeza que Eugenia . . .

Joaq(uín). Ama á Alejandro?

Jac(into). Algo peor. Lo que cree es una locura, una monstruosidad, y como se confirman sus sospechas, habrá la de San Quintín . . . Hace un rato hemos estado hablando de eso, y ahora me espera en el Suizo, donde volveremos á hablar de lo mismo, porque no hay nadie que le quite su tema.

Joaq(uín). Pues amigo . . . nada de eso me importa gran cosa.

Jac(into). Molesto á Vd.?

Joaq(uín). Estoy algo ocupado.

Escena 10ª.

Dichos—Alejandro (que entra muy inquieto)

Jac(into). Gracias a Dios que se te ve.

Joaq(uín). Es cierta la crisis?

Alej(andro). Si . . . á todos nos ha cogido de sorpresa. El ministerio por una disidencia intestina ha presentado su dimision y le ha sido aceptada.

Jac(into). Chico mil enhorabuenas.

Alej(andro). Mira Jacinto: haz el favor de dejarnos solos.

Jac(into). Ya, ya . . . (con intencion) Me marchó . . . (Sé lo que tengo que hacer . . . ¡que descubrimiento!) (alto) Adios . . . y en esta feliz ocasion seras desmemoriado con tus antiguos y leales amigos?

Alej(andro). Descuida . . . dejanos.

Jac(into). Ten presente mi pretension . . . aquel destino de que te he hablado mil veces . . .

Alej(andro). No lo mereces pero lo tendrás . . .

Jac(into). Bien se conoce que somos amigos desde la infancia . . . Gracias . . . adios, adios.

Escena 11ª.

Joaquín—Alejandro

- Joaq(uín)*. Conque es decir que sube Vd.?
- Alej(andro)*. Probablemente. En todo pensaba hoy menos en eso. (rápidamente toda la escena) Por de pronto tengo que renunciar al proyecto . . .
- Joaq(uín)*. Del depósito, y . . . la chica . . .
- Alej(andro)*. No me parece oportuno en día de crisis.
- Joaq(uín)*. Esto no va bien. Aun esta ahí Sofía.
- Alej(andro)*. Pues es preciso que se marchen.
- Joaq(uín)*. Ya convencerá Vd. á Eugenia otro día . . . Además: ese tronera de Jacinto sabe que estan aquí, y podría . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Si esto diera margen á un escandalo, en que saliera perjudicada mi reputacion, ¡que horror! y en día de crisis . . . Haga Vd. que se marchen.
- Joaq(uín)*. Si yo me voy . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Tan pronto?
- Joaq(uín)*. No me puedo detener . . . el tren se va.
- Alej(andro)*. Yo tambien tengo que salir de aquí . . . las despediré como pueda. Diré que Vd. esta fuera.
- Joaq(uín)*. Entiendase Vd. como pueda . . . adios. No me escriba Vd. sino para decirme que mi sociedad anónima esta por esas nubes . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Adios.
- Joaq(uín)*. Adios. Buena suerte. (se despiden afectuosamente)

Escena 12ª.

Alejandro, Sofía, Eugenia

- Alej(andro)*. (inquieta) Fracasó mi plan de esta noche. Y esas dos mugeres aquí . . . Es preciso que se marchen esta noche . . . Los días de crisis son muy delicados, y es preciso cuidar . . . (salen Eugenia y Sofía por la d[erec]ha)
- Eug(enia)*. Ah! aquí esta ya!
- Sof(ía)*. (con jovialidad) Aquí le tienes, Eugenia, El picaro te ha hecho esperar . . . pero ya le diras tu buenas cosas!
- Alej(andro)*. (con embarazo) Eugenia: habia pensado . . . tengo que hacer . . .
- Sof(ía)*. No se irá Vd. caballero. Es preciso que Vd. se quede y oiga.
- Alej(andro)*. (Que significa esto!)
- Sof(ía)*. Eugenia tiene que hablar á Vd. Me permitiran asistir á la conferencia?
- Eug(enia)*. Si: tu debes oirla: quédate.
- Alej(andro)*. Y que me vas á decir? (se sientan los tres)
- Eug(enia)*. (con amabilidad) Tengo que darte una buena noticia. Mi padre que hasta hoy se ha opuesto tanto, al fin . . .
- Alej(andro)*. (vivamente) Que te ha dicho?
- Sof(ía)*. (por Alej[andro]) (Como me gozo en su turbacion!)
- Eug(enia)*. Contesta antes á una pregunta. No es verdad que me amas desinteresadamente?

- Alej(andro)*. Has podido dudarlo?
- Sof(ía)*. Que pregunta tan impertinente! Como habias de poner en duda . . .
- Eug(enia)*. No es que yo dudara; pero hay una persona que te juzga capaz de no quererme desde que sepas lo que te voy á decir
- Alej(andro)*. (con curiosidad vivísima) Pues dilo.
- Eug(enia)*. Por ahora guarda el secreto. Mi padre ha tenido necesidad de vender todos los títulos que constituían mi fortuna.
- Alej(andro)*. (sin poderse contener) De veras? . . . Cuando? . . . y has consentido?
- Eug(enia)*. Pues no habia de consentir si se trataba de la honra de mi pobre papá? . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (a Alej[andro] con malicia) No es verdad que la generosidad llevada á ese extremo es quizas una falta? Antes debió consultarlo con Vd.
- Eug(enia)*. (con naturalidad) De modo Alejandro que ya soy pobre.
- Alej(andro)*. Pobre!
- Sof(ía)*. No cree Vd. que ha sido una imprevision?
- Alej(andro)*. (aturdido despues de vacilar dice) Oh! . . . no.
- Sof(ía)*. Cree Vd. que hizo bien?
- Alejan(dro)*. Si . . . lo creo . . .
- Sof(ía)*. Veo que Vd. es tan generoso como ella.
- Eug(enia)*. Si vieras que congoja sentí, cuando se me presentó mi padre llorando como un niño. Tu comprenderas la gran satisfaccion que he experimentado al saber todo el bien que podia resultar de una palabra mia.
- Sof(ía)*. (a Alej[andro]) Vea Vd. . . . estas niñas sentimentales son una calamidad. Ah! diga Vd. lo que quiera, no sirven para esposas de los hombres del dia. (a Eug[enia]) Crees tu que estamos en aquellos tiempos de contigo pan y cebolla? Hoy cuesta todo un ojo de la cara . . . es preciso mantenerse en cierto pié . . . y luego viene una plaga de chiquillos . . . (a Alej[andro]) Si no se les ocurre nada. En un momento de sublime alucinacion, renuncian á su fortuna, y creen que con cariñitos, con palabras blandas, y con tonterias se mantiene una casa. Por supuesto que, á pesar de no llevar nada en la carta dotal, se vuelven locas, . . . eso si . . . porque sus maridos sean ministros, derrochen, figuren . . . (a Eug[enia]) Hija mia: en estos tiempos la gloria es muy cara . . . (a Alej[andro]) No cree Vd. . . . que esta niña ha hecho una gran tonteria.
- Alej(andro)*. No señora: creo que sus buenos sentimientos la han impulsado á obrar asi.
- Eug(enia)*. Yo lo hice creyendo que mi generosa conducta mas bien te causaria agrado que pena.
- Alej(andro)*. Es cierto, si. (dominando su turbacion)
- Sof(ía)*. Veo que es Vd. desinteresado como pocos. (a Eug[enia]) Chica! me equivoqué . . . nada . . . me equivoqué.
- Eug(enia)*. Es claro: como ha de gustarle tener por esposa á una muger descorazonada y egoista?

Alej(andro). Es mucha verdad.

Eug(enia). (á Sof[ía]) Lo ves? Ya te dije que aplaudiría mi conducta.

Alej(andro). Sin duda . . . (¡Me han cogido en la red!)

Sof(ía). (a Alej[andro]) Francamente; lo que es yo, en el caso de Vd . . .

Eug(enia). En premio de mi desprendimiento,—y del tuyo, porque yo comparto contigo el mérito de esta acción—Dios nos allana el camino para llegar á nuestro fin. Mi padre nos concederá el permiso que tanto anhelamos.

Alej(andro). Lo crees tú?

Eug(enia). Lo presumo. Casi estoy segura de ello.

Alej(andro). Ya . . . de veras? (ap[arte]) (No: este matrimonio no puede efectuarse . . . (confuso) Que hacer . . . Es preciso salir por algun lado.)

Sof(ía). Y al fin logran Vds. su deseo? Me gusta verlos conformarse con la pobreza. Pero el señor es hombre importante; será ministro. Ahuécate, chica. Crees que todas pueden alabarse de dar su mano á la celebridad en persona. Algun día no dejaré de ir á tu casa con cualquier pretencion.<sup>13</sup> (a Eug[enia]) Ay! hija no puedes negar que estas rebosando de satisfaccion. (A Alej[andro]) Alguna vez he oido decir á Vd. que toda accion generosa trae consigo un gran bien.

Alej(andro). (ap[arte] con rabia) (Como se venga esta maldita!)

Eug(enia). De modo que ya no tenemos que pensar en contrariedades. Tan segura estoy de obtener el consentimiento, que ya puedes publicar nuestro proximo matrimonio. Yo lo diré á todas mis amigas.

Alej(andro). Ya . . . (Estoy perdido! Es preciso buscar una malla rota por donde escurrirme.

Sof(ía). Si: lo anunciaremos oficialmente. Esto da cierto no sé que cuando somos parientes de la novia, y el novio es ministro.

Eug(enia). Ahora que nos hemos explicado bien, tengo que hablarte de otra cosa. Tengo una queja de ti; pero una queja muy grave.

Alej(andro). De mi?

Eug(enia). Si: me han dicho una cosa, una cosilla . . . Me confesaras la verdad?

Alej(andro). Explicate.

Eug(enia). Yo me he resistido á creerlo; pero si fuera cierto . . . Me han dicho que has querido mucho á otra muger, y que la quieres todavia.

Alej(andro). (con una idea repentina) (Ah! ya encontré la malla rota.) No hagas caso. Alguien ha intentado desunirnos.

Sof(ía). Hablillas del vulgo envidioso.

Alej(andro). (Buena ocasion para desviarme) No pienses en eso. Quien te lo dijo se fundaba en algun suceso remoto.

Eug(enia). Con que hay algo?—Caballero: explíqueme Vd. ese suceso remoto.

Alej(andro). No tengas celos: eso pasó.

Eug(enia). Cuando, cuando?

Alej(andro). (Con habilidad puedo echar las bases de un rompimiento. Es preciso romper) Pues . . . hace tiempo . . . Mas que amor aquello fué agradecimiento

<sup>13</sup> Pretensión.

Eug(enia). (con ansiedad) Es joven?

Alej(andro). Si.

Eug(enia). Pues eso no me gusta. La querras, la querras todavía.

Alej(andro). Es una persona á quien respeto.

Eug(enia). Respeto! todavía! Caballero: no quiero que respete Vd. á ninguna muger.

Sof(ía).<sup>14</sup> Que disparate!

Alej(andro).<sup>14</sup> La ves todavía?

Sof(ía).<sup>14</sup> Alguna vez.

Eug(enia). Y os tratais?

Alej(andro). Por que no?

Eug(enia). Como se llama?

Alej(andro). No puedo decírtelo.

Eug(enia). (muy apurada) Veo que no me habian engañado. Pero quien es?
Es hermosa?

Alej(andro). Para que quieres saberlo?

Eug(enia). Si señor, quiero saberlo.

Alej(andro). Pues te lo diré: es muy hermosa.

Eug(enia). Caballero: Vd. me insulta. Y has tenido valor para confesármelo.
La amas mucho?

Alej(andro). Solo una amistad profunda . . .

Eug(enia). Jesus! que desgraciada soy!

Sof(ía). (ap[arte]) (Conozco su intencion. Quiere romper con ella) (alto)
Me parece que Alejandro bromea: cualquiera pensaria que su objeto es obligarte á reñir con él

Alej(andro). Lo cree Vd. así?

Sof(ía). Digo que podria creerse.

Eug(enia). (á Sof[ía]) Y dices que será invencion suya? (a Alej[andro]) Tu la ves la visitas?

Alej(andro). Hemos roto nuestras relaciones. Precisamente hace poco me pidio sus cartas.

Eug(enia). Y se las diste?

Alej(andro). Fui esta noche á su casa con ese objeto, y no estaba

Eug(enia). Has estado en su casa! Donde estan las cartas?

Alej(andro). (señalando el bolsillo del pecho) Aqui las tengo.

Sof(ía). (ap[arte] con terror) (Oh!)

Eug(enia). Quiero verlas.

Sof(ía). (sin poderse contener.) No . . . no . . .

Eug(enia). Que dices?

Sof(ía). (procurando dominarse) Digo . . . que . . . pretendes unas cosas Como quieres que una persona delicada te entregue las cartas de otra muger?

Eug(enia). No quiero ver mas que la firma.

Alej(andro). (a Sofia) Como Vd. dudaba que fuera cierto lo que decia

<sup>14</sup> Although Sofía is possible, Alejandro would be more logical. Alejandro should be Eugenia.

- Eug(enia)*. Es facil probárnoslo: vengan las cartas.
- Alej(andro)*. No basta mi palabra? (acercando la mano al bolsillo)
- Sof(ía)*. Si . . . nos basta, nos basta.
- Eug(enia)*. Pero diga Vd. al menos el nombre de esa muger. Donde la conociste?
- Alej(andro)*. En Francia.
- Eug(enia)*. (a Sof[ía]) Tu tambien has estado allá . . . Has oido algo?
- Sof(ía)*. Yo . . . yo . . . no.
- Eug(enia)*. Si . . . tu debes de saber algo. Tu fuiste la primera que me lo dijo. Porque lo ocultas.
- Sof(ía)*. No lo averigues: que te importa? (sin poder disimular ni contener su indignacion se levanta y exclama) Pues di: no conoces ya bastante al hombre que has amado; no ves la mezquindad de sus sentimientos, su inmenso egoismo? . . . Asombrate ante este espectáculo de la ambicion y la codicia! No ves que te ha pretendido por interés; no ves como al conocer tu pobreza, te arroja á la cara sus antiguos amores, para que rompas tu misma unas relaciones, que le estorban desde que no eres rica!
- Alej(andro)*. Señora! . . .
- Eug(enia)*. Será posible . . . De modo que lo que Vd. me ha dicho es una impostura, una fábula, inventada para librarse de mi.
- Alej(andro)*. Oh! no creas tal cosa. Si crees que es farsa te enseñaré las cartas.
- Sof(ía)*. (vivamente) No, no: lo creemos.
- Eug(enia)*. Pues yo quiero verlas, quiero verlas.
- Alej(andro)*. (a Eug[enia]) A ti tan solo amo, Eugenia. La confesion que has oido de mis labios es hija de un sentimiento de lealtad. A esa otra muger, ya no (con calor) la amo, ni puedo amarla.
- Eug(enia)*. Que indigna fábula!
- Sof(ía)*. (exaltandose) No es fábula. Amó, es decir, engañó vilmente á la que le salvó la vida. No supo pagar sus beneficios sino abandonándola á la desesperacion y á la deshonra.
- Eug(enia)*. A la deshonra!
- Sof(ía)*. Aquella muger será el eterno remordimiento del impostor, y si este tuviera una sombra de conciencia, la memoria de conducta tan vil, amargaria todas las horas felices, que le proporcionara su ambicion satisfecha.
- Eug(enia)*. Y Vd. tuvo valor para acercarme<sup>15</sup> á mi, para pretender mi mano, con tan terrible antecedente.
- Alej(andro)*. (con energia e intencion) Ya no puedo amar á esa muger. Somos enemigos irreconciliables, aunque en mi pecho no se haya extinguido la gratitud, ni en mi mente el recuerdo de sus beneficios . . . Pero ella me ha perseguido encarnizadamente, y toda avenencia es imposible á causa de su tenacidad impertinente, de su cólera de su odio.
- Sofía*. Si: es cierto: esa muger ha luchado por impedir tu casamiento, y al fin tiene la satisfaccion de haberlo conseguido. Resuelta á no tener con Vd. ninguna clase de relaciones, le rechazo con indignacion cuando Vd., ansioso de alcanzar su benevolencia, le manifesto que la amaria, aun despues de casado con otra!

<sup>15</sup> Obviously it should read acercarse.

Eug(enia). Que indignidad!

Sof(ía). Y esa muger considera como un triunfo el descubrimiento de los bajos fines de Vd., y es feliz señalándole al mundo como un ejemplo de la ciega ambicion, de las torpes conveniencias, del egoísmo insensato y corrompido que en nada repara para conseguir sus fines. Eug(enia). (contemplando con estupor la exaltacion de Sofia) Pero tu . . . tu! . . . te exaltas! . . . tu tiembles! Sofia . . . que horrorosa sospecha! Serás tu!

Sof(ía). (con emocion y desaliento) Oh! Eugenia! (se cubre el rostro con las manos. Eugenia permanece absorta)

Alej(andro). (Ella misma se ha vendido!)

Eug(enia). Tu, Sofia . . . has sido tu . . . !

Alej(andro). (Es ocasion de retirarme.) (vase)

Escena 13ª.

Eugenia, Sofia

Sof(ía). Mi propia indignacion me ha descubierto.

Eug(enia). Ahora recuerdo . . . mil indicios vienen en tropel á mi imaginacion . . . Tu escribiste que habias dado asilo á un emigrado . . . despues se dijo que te ibas á casar . . . (con ansiedad) Desde tu llegada te opusistes<sup>18</sup> á mi amor . . . Oh! esa muger desconocida, á quien sorprendieron . . .

Sof(ía). Yo, arrastrada por la ira, y deseando . . . Pero ya te contaré despacio esta triste y vergonzosa historia.

Eug(enia). Que iniquidad! (con profunda pena) Oh! yo no puedo resistir esta terrible impresion . . . Le amas tu!

Sof(ía). (con energia) Yo . . . no.

Eug(enia). Como has llegado á aborrecerle de improviso? Dímelos para hacerlo mismo. (con un repentino arrebato de ira) Pero tu me engañaste, tu!

Sof(ía). Cálmate: no guardemos ni una sombra de rencor sino para quien lo merece.

Escena 14ª.

Dichas—Alejandro

Alejandro. (entra por el fondo precipitadamente y muy inquieto) Eugenia, Sofia . . . que contrariedad . . . que compromiso! Dos hombres quieren entrar . . . (se asoma a la ventana izq[ui]erda) Que es esto? . . . Una indigna celada de mis amigos . . . terribles amigos! (Toda la escena hasta el fin rapidísima).

<sup>18</sup> Note the popular form of the verb.

- Sof(ía)*. (con sorpresa) Entran aquí!
- Eug(enía)*. Estamos en casa de nuestra amiga.
- Alej(andro)*. No: Joaquín ha partido al extranjero.
- Eug(enía)*. Y Adolfiná?
- Alej(andro)*. También: la casa está sola.
- Sof(ía)*. ¡Que indigna farsa!
- Alej(andro)*. No conviene que os vean . . . Escondéos . . . por Dios . . . Que no haya escándalo . . . un escándalo me hundiría en estos momentos . . . Hay crisis . . . (suplicando) Que no haya escándalo . . . os lo ruego, os lo suplico.
- Eug(enía)*. (atendiendo á fuera) Se sienten voces.
- Alej(andro)*. (se asoma á la ventana y dice precipitadamente y con la mayor turbación) El criado les permite subir . . . (volviendo al proscenio) Disimulad . . . decid . . . (con rabia) Este escándalo me perderá, y yo no quiero que se diga . . . Esos infames quieren desprestigiarme . . . (a Eug[enia]) Eugenia, si te ven: escóndete.
- Eug(enía)*. (con serenidad) Nada debo temer.
- Alej(andro)*. (vuelve á mirar) Uno sube . . . habrán sobornado al lacayo . . . Es Carlos!
- Sof(ía)*. (con terror) Mi hijo!
- Alej(andro)*. (a Eug[enia]) Sospecha de ti!
- Sof(ía)*. (sobrecogida) Si: sus viles amigos le han hecho creer que tú!
- Eug(enía)*. De mí! . . .
- Sof(ía)*. Sospecha que eres tú la mujer desconocida . . .
- Eug(enía)*. Eras tú! (con energía) Yo soy inocente, yo soy honrada, y si todo el mundo viniera aquí ante todo el mundo lo probaría.
- Sof(ía)*. Por Dios ocultémonos.
- Eug(enía)*. Eso sería declararnos culpables.
- Alej(andro)*. Y ese infame criado les permitirá registrar toda la casa!
- Eug(enía)*. Contaré todo, diré la verdad. Se trata de mi honor!, de mi honor!
- Alej(andro)*. (con ansiedad) Sí, Eugenia mía . . . Defiéndete: dirán que te he seducido . . . que te envilecido . . .<sup>17</sup> á una joven como tú . . . Esto es horroroso!
- Eug(enía)*. Yo probaré mi inocencia! (á Sof[ía]) Tú sola puedes temer . . .
- Alej(andro)*. Prueba tu inocencia . . . las cartas de Sofía . . . (saca precipitadamente del bolsillo un paquete de cartas y las da a Eugenia) Tómalas. (Eugenia las toma)
- Sof(ía)*. Estoy perdida!
- Eug(enía)*. Yo soy inocente . . . yo lo probaré . . . (con exaltación)
- Alej(andro)*. Ya están ahí. se siente ruido de puertas y pasos
- Sof(ía)*. (a Eugenia con desesperación) ¡Eugenia: es mi hijo!
- Eug(enía)*. (con una repentina transición) Su hijo!

<sup>17</sup> te envilecido is an interesting case of spelling according to sound.

Escena 15ª.Dichos—Carlos

Cárlos. (deteniéndose en la puerta mira á Eugenia con indignacion y espanto) Ah! tu . . . estas aqui . . . al fin te encuentro . . . (viendo a Sofía dice con extrañeza) Y Vd.? . . .

Eug(enia). Vino, vino á buscarme . . .

Carlos. Si . . . ya me prometió no perderte de vista hasta arrancarte á la deshonra.

(Eugenia cae desmayada en un sillón. Sofía y Carlos acuden á prestarle auxilio.)

Alej(andro). (Ni un momento mas aqui. Corro á palacio).

Carlos. (vuelve el rostro buscando á Alejandro que sale precipitadamente, y esclama con rabia) Y ese miserable! . . . Oh! ya no esta!

Fin del acto tercero

ACTO CUARTO

La decoracion del acto primeroEscena 1ª.

El Marqués (se pasea muy agitado por la escena con un papel en la mano)

Marq(ués). Veremos lo que ese hombre pretende (lee) Dice que este asunto le interesa á él tanto como á mi . . . y añade que no se atreve á venir aqui sin mi licencia. ¡Que humilde está! Su language no indica que hoy mismo será ministro, si la crisis se resuelve como parece . . . Oh! Bien dije desde luego que ese hombre traeria á mi casa alguna desgracia . . . El suceso de anoche . . . Veremos como él explica . . . ¿He de creer lo que dice Cárlos? . . . No . . . imposible . . . aqui ha de haber ocurrido una equivocacion espantosa . . . (entra Alejandro) Aqui esta: oigámosle.

Escena 2ª.El Marqués—Alejandro

Alej(andro). Señor marqués . . .

Marq(ués). Le aguardaba á Vd. con impaciencia. Yo le exijo á Vd. esplicaciones terminantes, sobre el suceso de anoche, antes de tomar la determinacion que mejor cuadre á mi decoro.

Alej(andro). Si: como hombre de honor me apresuro á prevenirle á Vd. para que no dé oídos á las malignas interpretaciones que aqui pudieran hacer sobre un incidente que en si no tiene gravedad alguna.

Marq(ués). Eso precisamente es lo que quiero saber.

Alej(andro). Todo ha sido una travesura de muy mal género ideada por su sobrino de Vd. y otros jóvenes amigos míos. Eugenia fué como otras veces á visitar á su amiga, creyendola enferma Con esta visita coincidió la partida clandestina de Joaquin para el extranjero, por motivos que Vd. sabe Yo me encontraba allí por casualidad y ya me disponia á salir, anunciando á Sofia y Eugenia que la casa estaba sola, cuando entra Cárlos de improviso, increpa á Eugenia, suponiendo que la infeliz muchacha se encontraba allí por sugestion mia, y obedeciendo á móviles que no pueden caber en un recto caracter é intachable virtud.

Marq(ués). Oh! no: mi hija es incapaz de semejante infamia Por fuerza ha habido aqui una intriga de Vd.

Alej(andro). Yo esclareceré<sup>18</sup> todas las dudas y cada cual quedará en su lugar. Seguiré contando. El escandalo fué pues inevitable, porque detras de Cárlos y Jacinto acudieron á la casa otros amigos ¡de esos amigos que viven atentos a nuestros actos, esperando que les demos el placer de cometer alguna falta para gozarse en nuestra humillacion!

Marq(ués). Y habrá corrido la voz?

Alej(andro). Si señor: aquellos infames propalaron por todo Madrid lo ocurrido; y á estas horas, precisamente en los momentos en que estoy indicado para subir al poder, semejantes murmuraciones me hacen un daño horrible.

Marq(ués). (indignado) Eso á mi no me importa. Lo que me importa es la reputacion de mi hija, señor mio. Es preciso que esto se aclare hoy mismo.

Alej(andro). Nadie tiene mas interés en ello que yo. Lo de anoche me ha disgustado mucho. Eugenia es tan inocente, tan pura, tan honrada como los ángeles del cielo. Si alguna duda . . .

Marq(ués). No . . . yo no dudo.

Alej(andro). Es inocente y yo quisiera tener mil bocas para decirlo mil veces á todo el mundo en estos momentos terribles en que la atencion pública se fija en mi, y comentando este suceso, me observa, me examina, me analiza, me desmenuza, y está abrumándome con sus tremendos juicios.

Marq(ués). Comprendo caballero: veo que Vd. no se cuidaria de probar la inocencia de mi hija, si no le impulsara á ello su inmenso egoísmo. Oh! esto no tiene nombre.

Alej(andro). Cállese Vd. por favor. Es que Vd. olvida que soy hombre político; que me debo á mi pais; que debo cuidar mi reputacion, como un tesoro que no es enteramente mio, sino . . .

Marq(ués). Sino del país.

Alej(andro). Justo. Yo he llegado tras largas fatigas al objeto de mi deseo. Mi legítima ambicion está en parte satisfecha. Ahora solo deseo hacer el bien: todo lo que trascienda á deshonra, á bajeza, á error me repugna, me indigna, me horroriza. Yo he hablado mucho en programas y discursos de la moralidad en la vida privada. Por esto me repugnaria entrar en el poder, dejando tras mi una reputacion manchada. Lo diré claro: en estos momentos solemnes, no quiero que mi nombre se asocie á ningun escándalo. Quiero ser bueno y parecerlo. Quiero, cuando el poder viene á mis manos, tener la fuerza moral que da una honrosa fama en la vida doméstica

<sup>18</sup> The confusion of "x" and "s" in the prefix ex was common in the period of this play.

Marq(ués). Y Vd. no teme la deshonor de mi hija, sino la propia!

Alej(andro). La de los dos. La calumnia se ceba en mi. Lo de anoche es el madero en que me estan crucificando. Precisamente yo pronuncié hace días aquel discurso que hizo tanto ruido, y del cual repartimos medio millon de ejemplares.

Mar(qués). Si: sobre la vida privada de . . .

Alej(andro). Pues ahora mis propios argumentos caen sobre mi como una avalancha. Ya un diario de la mañana hace una ingeniosa parafrasis de mi discurso, explicando la moraleja á su autor, que es hoy objeto de la general envidia.

Ma(rqués). (escandalizado) Y publican este suceso! Y el nombre de mi inocente hija, anda de boca en boca sirviendo de comidilla á la corrompida juventud. Esto es horroroso! Por que ha venido Vd á esta casa; porque entablamos una amistad que habia de serme tan funesta?

Alej(andro). No hay culpa de mi parte. Yo lo deploro mas que Vd. En el momento en que mi orgullo parecia estar satisfecho, me anonada, me destroza la acusacion de que soy objeto.

Marq(ués). Cual?

Alej(andro). Que he seducido á una hija de familia, á una de las jovenes mas discretas, mas bellas, mas estimadas de Madrid.

Marq(ués). (con furia) Eso dicen! Y Vd. no arranca la lengua á los miserables?

Alej(andro). Yo trato de disipar las sospechas, de aclarar la verdad.

Marq(ués). Pero Vd. lo hace por su propio interes, Vd. lo hace por si mismo . . . Demonio: ya me sulfura no oírle decir á Vd. mas que yo, yo y siempre yo.

Alej(andro). Lo hago tambien por ella.

Marq(ués). Diremos á todo el mundo que es inocente. Nos creeran . . . pues no han de creernos?

Alej(andro). Oh! la torpe y vil difamacion rectifica dificilmente. Es muy difícil arrancar de las garras de esa terrible fiera lo que una vez ha caído en ellas.

Mar(qués). Se convencerán. Todos los que me conocen . . .

Alej(andro). El peso de un grano de arena basta á hun(dir) una buena reputacion, y todas las fuerzas del mundo no son suficientes á levantarla.

Marq(ués). Pero habrá un medio de probarlo de un modo terminante, irrecusable.

Alej(andro). Eso es lo que quiero. Pero es preciso que su hija de Vd. se determine á hablar.

Marq(ués). A hablar que?

Alej(andro). Quizas ella conserve alguna prueba material de su inocencia.

Marq(ués). Entonces que ha pasado ahí?

- Alej(andro)*. Yo exijo a Vd. que interrogue solemnemente a su hija; que la interrogue delante de Sofia; que pida á esta su cooperacion para el esclarecimiento<sup>19</sup> de este hecho.
- Marq(ués)*. Sofia? Segun me dijo Carlos, ella tenia no sé que antecedentes.
- Alej(andro)*. Puede ser muy bien que ella pueda sacarnos de apuros. Eso. Vd. que tiene verdadero ascendiente sobre las dos . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Bien: yo les hablaré.
- Alej(andro)*. Cuente Vd. á Eugenia lo que se dice por ahi. Rueguele que sea franca . . .
- Marq(ués)*. No entiendo una palabra. De todos modos caballero, yo me reservo exigir de Vd. la reparacion que convenga, en caso de que aclarado el asunto, resulte distinto de como Vd. lo pinta.
- Alej(andro)*. (se levanta) Me ofrezco á obedecer á Vd. en todo lo q(ue) contribuya al esclarecimiento<sup>19</sup> de la verdad.
- Marq(ués)*. Y le exijo á Vd. que vuelva hoy mismo.
- Alej(andro)*. Si: ahora quiero dejarle á Vd. en libertad para hacer averiguaciones dentro de su propia casa.
- Marq(ués)*. Hasta luego.
- Alej(andro)*. Adios.

Escena 3ª.

el Marques, Carlos, Sofia

- Carlos*. (viendo salir a Alej[andro]) Ese hombre aqui! Vd. consiente! . . .
- Marq(ués)*. Calma, calma . . . Estoy loco . . . (aturdido) Dejad que ponga en orden mis ideas. Ese hombre ha dicho . . .
- Sof(ía)*. (con ansiedad) Que?
- Marq(ués)*. Que escándalo . . . lo de anoche . . . los periódicos hablan del caso, y mi pobre hija . . . (a Sof[ía]) Pero tu, tu, que estabas alli . . . cuenta . . . dime . . . tu fuiste tambien.
- Cárlos*. Al saber que Eugenia habia accedido á la cita, fué allá con objeto de evitar . . .
- Sofía*. Calla tu.
- Carlos*. Ayer mañana, al oir que yo insistia en mis sospechas, Vd. me dijo: "Descuida Carlos, yo estoy sobre aviso, y si se ven secretamente en alguna parte, yo me apresuraré á librar á Eugenia de un compromiso.
- Sof(ía)*. Si: lo dije.
- Marq(ués)*. Luego tu sospechabas tambien!
- Sof(ía)*. Si . . . pero . . . yo tambien estoy loca. No me confundais mas.
- Marq(ués)*. De modo que esas entrevistas . . . y yo las oia contar tan tranquilo! (a Sofia) Conque tu lo sabias tambien . . . Sofia por Dios, dime la verdad aunque sea terrible. Dimelo: es verdad que tu sabias todo, y fuiste alla con objeto de salvar á mi hija de la deshonra? . . . Oh! no puede ser . . . sin duda te has equivocado. Eugenia no es capaz de semejante envilecimiento.

<sup>19</sup> See note 18.

- Sof(ía).* Eugenia es inocente.
Marq(ués). Entonces á que fuiste tu allá . . . Oh! esto es para volverse loco. Ese hombre me dijo que entre las dos podrias esclarecer el hecho. (llama) Eugenia, Eugenia!
Sof(ía). (ap[artel]) (Mi cobardia es un crimen; pero me es imposible dominarla.)

Escena 4ª.Dichos—Eugenia

- Carlos.* Aqui está.
Marq(ués). Vamos á ver, Eugenia yo no me atrevo á creer lo que dicen de ti, pero ten franqueza . . . En esto no habrá falta grave; pero puede haber ocurrido un extravio, una alucinacion momentánea. Di la verdad a tu padre, que te perdona, que te ha perdonado.
Eug(enia). Yo . . . la verdad!
Marq(ués) Tu amas á ese hombre?
Eug(enia). Le detesto.
Marq(ués). Desde cuando le aborreces?
Eug(enia). Desde anoche
Marq(ués). Oh! que pasó? que ha sido? yo quiero saberlo.
Eug(enia). No . . . desde antes comprendí la bajeza de su corazon.
Marq(ués). (a Sof[ía]) Pero entonces . . . tu no sospechabas? Tu no fuiste á deshacer las intrigas de ese hombre? no fuiste á velar por la honra de mi hija . . . Esas entrevistas de que se ha hablado tanto . . . Di . . . porque callas?
Cárlos. Mi madre no la acusará jamas.
Marq(ués). (á Sofía en tono de repension) Tu benignidad es inoportuna. La situacion es terrible y conviene hablar claro. Y tu que dices? (á Eugenia que calla) Tambien callas!
Sof(ía). (¡Dios mio! que horrorosa situacion!)
Marq(ués). Poco puedo sacar en claro por vosotras . . . Quiero oir lo que se dice . . . quiero oir á todo el mundo . . . No puedo continuar en esta cruel incertidumbre. (vase precipitadamente por el fondo)

Escena 5ª.Carlos, Sofía, Eugenia

- Carlos.* Mi tio se afana inutilmente; yo sé lo que conviene hacer en estos casos.
Sof(ía). (á Eugenia) Quiero hablar á Carlos . . . Dejanos solas.<sup>20</sup> Y las cartas?
Eug(enia). (id)<sup>21</sup> Las quemé todas al llegar aqui.
Sof(ía). (id)<sup>21</sup> (Bien . . . Espero tener valor para echar sobre mi la culpa que me corresponde . . . no me juzgues mal . . . vete . . .)

<sup>20</sup> Should read solos.<sup>21</sup> The abbreviation is used rather awkwardly.

Escena 6ª.

Sofía, Carlos

Sof(ía). Carlos: eres un insensato.

Carlos. Lo dice Vd. que sabe lo que ha pasado; que no ignora la ciega idolatría con que amaba á Eugenia . . . Cuando la he visto ultrajada y envilecida por ese hombre abominable, extraña Vd. que desee matarle, que le persiga como se persigue á un perro rabioso!

Sof(ía). Aquí ha habido un grande error que es preciso desvanecer Eugenia es inocente; cree lo que yo te digo. Es inocente: te lo repito y te lo repetiré mil veces.

Carlos. Aunque Vd. me lo diga no lo puedo creer. Lo que vi anoche que ha sido sino una confirmacion de lo que yo sospechaba, fundandome en indicios seguros? Es evidente que el tenia amores con una muger desconocida . . . es evidente que esa muger iba á su casa. Yo mismo la vi: . . . él, por desorientar á los que le acechaban, y deseando al mismo tiempo no comprometerla, traslado la escena de su vergonzoso libertinage á la casa de Dn. Joaquin; pero con tan poca fortuna, que Vd. y yo casi al mismo tiempo pudimos burlar sus planes inicuos, descubriendolo todo.

Sof(ía). Ciertó es, segun dicen que tenia amores con otra muger, cierto que esa muger le visitó alguna noche; cierto que tuvo la desgracia de ser vista . . . segun dicen . . . pero esa muger no era Eugenia.

Carlos. Yo no me convenceré sino con pruebas irrecusables. Para probarme que no es Eugenia la culpable, es preciso que Vd. me diga quien es.

Sof(ía). Tal vez puedo decírtelo.

Carlos. Que?

Sof(ía). (arrepintandose con espanto) No . . . no, no . . . yo que puedo saber?

Carlos. Entonces . . . Vd. lo sabe?

Sof(ía). Sospechaba . . . Pero Eugenia es inocente . . . Creelo, hijo mio. Yo te lo juro!

Carlos. Oh! si yo llegara á adquirir la certidumbre de que Eugenia no ha cometido la falta q(u)e que<sup>22</sup> atribuyo, seria el mas feliz de los hombres, aunque ella jamas fuera mia. La gran idolatría que siento por ella me hacia considerarla como la mas pura, la mas noble, la mas digna muger de la tierra. Mi desengaño ha sido terrible: yo creo que he de volverme malo tambien, y ser el mas indigno de los hombres, solo con la influencia de esta gran pesadumbre . . . Daria la vida por la creencia de que Eugenia es honrada, y si Vd. . . . llegara á convencerme de ello . . . la querria á Vd. mucho, muchísimo mas de lo que la quiero.

Sof(ía). (besandole conmovida) Hijo mio!

<sup>22</sup> Should read le.

- Carlos.* Aquí hay algun misterio.
Sof(ía). Si . . . si: yo te explicaré.
Carlos. Me parece que Vd. sabe algo.
Sof(ía). (con terror) No . . . yo no sé nada . . . (vacilando) Espera . . . sí . . . dejame pensar. Pues te diré . . . ese hombre . . .
Carlos. Es un miserable.
Sofía. (con mucha energia) Si: un miserable (como resolviéndose a contar) Pues bien . . .
Carlos. Siga Vd.
Sof(ía). (con la mayor confusion) Si no tengo nada que decir . . .
Carlos. Vd. sostiene que Eugenia es inocente.
Sof(ía). Eso si.
Carlos. Y que yo me habia equivocado.
Sof(ía). Tambien
Carlos. Y que Alejandro tiene ó tenia amores con una muger que no es mi prima.
Sof(ía). Si: justo.
Carlos. Pues siga Vd. contando.
Sof(ía). Si . . . te diré (luchando angustiadamente) Ese hombre . . . Eugenia antes . . . pues . . . No . . . no puedo decirte mas . . . (ap[arte] con dolor) (A todo el mundo menos á él!)
Carlos. Vd. no sabe nada y quiere disculparla. Yo he tomado mi resolucion y no vacilaré. (vase por la d[erech]a)

Escena 7ª.

Sofía, el Marques, despues Jacinto

- Sof(ía).* (sofocada) Eso no puede seguir así . . . Me morire de pena, si no descubro la verdad . . . No tengo perdon de Dios; merezco el desprecio de las gentes y un remordimiento eterno, si no saco á Eugenia de la terrible situacion en que se puso por mi.
Marq(ués). (entra por el fondo con mucha inquietud) Es horrible. Todos mis amigos lo saben; todos hablan de lo mismo . . . (con ira) Las frases compasivas que me han dirigido, me han desgarrado el corazon.
Sof(ía). Juan: yo quiero convencerte. yo . . .
Marq(ués). Nada me digas si has de aumentar mi confusion con tus vagos conceptos . . . Estoy aturdido . . . mi espiritu necesita reposo
Sof(ía). Quizas yo pueda . . .
Marq(ués). (con mal humor) No quiero oír nada, quiero estar solo. Entre todos me voy a trastornar el juicio. (vase por la izq[uierta])
Jacinto. (entra y se dirige a Sof[ía]) Señora: yo quisiera explicarme con Vds. Por ahí se me acusa de haber, y . . . francamente, yo . . .
Sof(ía). (sin hacerle caso, dice ap[arte]) Me avergüenzo de mi cobardia. Valor: se lo confesaré todo. (vase por la izq[uierta])

Escena 8ª.

Jacinto, Alejandro

- Jacinto.* Pues me gusta. Se marcha sin contestarme una palabra.
- Alej(andro).* (entra p[or] el fondo) Estas aqui, bribon, Como te atreves á venir á esta casa?
- Jac(into)* Pues que? he tenido yo la culpa? Supongo que ya no te casaras con Eugenia. Es lo natural. Aquello habia de parar necesariamente en esto.
- Alej(andro).* Calla; persistes en creer como ese demente de Carlos que Eugenia . . .
- Jac(into).* Y lo negarás todavía? Vamos: acá entre los dos . . .
- Alej(andro)* Eugenia es la virtud en persona Yo haré que salga ilesa su reputacion de la miserable intriga urdida por ti, y otros juvenes tan corrompidos y tan holgazanes como tu.
- Jac(into).* (dominando su ira) A veces es preciso disculpar los insultos del amigo
- Alej(andro).* Yo no te insulto, te desprecio.
- Jac(into).* El orgullo, la ceguedad que te domina, te impide hasta la gratitud con los que han formado tu reputacion. Tu, con tus humos de hombre intachable . . .
- Alej(andro).* Yo no soy intachable, no yo podré cometer grandes faltas; pero no tengo como tu por único movil la baja pasion de la envidia
- Jac(into)* Convendremos en que eres un modelo de todas las sublimidades Si señor: eres la abnegacion misma y el pudor en persona Son unos tontos los que dicen que sedujiste á Eugenia . . .
- Alej(andro).* (amenazando con rabia) Si lo vuelves á repetir . . .
- Jac(into).* Son unos menguados los que dicen que el movil de tu amor fué la gran fortuna de esa muchacha . . . Bonitos antecedentes para subir al poder . . . Te has lucido . . .
- Alej(andro).* Tu todo lo mides por el nivel de tu bajo espiritu.
- Jac(into)* Si: convengo. Yo soy un miserable, un corrompido, un holgazan, un envidioso. Tu en cambio . . .
- Alej(andro).* Todo me lo debes . . y ultimamente para confundirte mas, y pagar con beneficios tu infame conducta, hasta te concedo el pingue destino q(ue) pretendias.
- Jac(into).* Será broma tuya No espero de ti sino venganza.
- Alej(andro).* Yo me vengo de ese modo.
- Jac(into).* Será posible?
- Alej(andro).* Si: el primer nombramiento que ha de firmar el nuevo ministerio será el tuyo.
- Jac(into)* De veras que me confundes . . . Fuertes razones habras tenido para eso . . . Sin duda el recuerdo de nuestra antigua amistad . . . Te diré . . . yo siempre te he defendido, me he interesado por tu reputacion . . .
- Alej(andro).* Si . . . eres buena pieza.

Jac(into). Con que es cierto que ese destino . . . Chico: sabes que ahora se me presenta ocasion de hacerte un gran servicio?

Alej(andro). A mi?

Jac(into). Si . . . Carlos me ha llamado para tratar de ese desafio . . . Es un disparate! y en dia de crisis. Pero yo procuraré que todo concluya honrosamente. Luego dirás que no me intereso por ti . . .

Escena 9ª.

Dichos—el Marques

Marq(ués). (a Alej[andro]) Ha venido Vd. á tiempo. Tenemos que hablar. Sr D. Jacinto. tendra Vd. la bondad de dejarnos solos?

Jac(into). Con mucho gusto Precisamente tenia que ver á Carlos. No molesto á Vds (vase)

Escena 10ª

el Marques, Alejandro

Marq(ués). Caballero Sofia me lo ha revelado todo.

Alej(andro). Que?

Marq(ués). Sus amores, sus relaciones, la ingratitud de Vd. Su revelacion me convence de la inocencia de mi Eugenia.

Alej(andro). Lo ve Vd.?

Marq(ués). Pero el nombre de mi hija anda de boca en boca; y el medio de devolverle su honor es decir la verdad, la verdad pura.

Alej(andro). Eso precisamente es lo que yo queria; pero esta es cuestion delicada, y quise esperar á que la resolvieran ellas entre si.

Marq(ués). La resolveremos nosotros, diciendo lo que ha pasado. El honor de Sofia me interesa mucho; pero sobre todas las consideraciones está el de mi hija. Publicaré todo, publicaré sus antiguas relaciones, diré que era ella la muger que le visitaba . . .

Alej(andro). Oh! no . . . señor marqués.

Marq(ués). Si ella me lo ha confesado.

Alej(andro). Sofia fué una noche á mi casa para pedirme unas cartas que no pude devolverle entonces Oyendo despues que se hablaba de una dama encubierta, se dió por aludida, y en la turbacion de su conciencia, creyó que las inicuas observaciones de mis amigos se referian á ella.

Marq(ués). Luego . . .

Alej(andro). La muger á quien esos vieron entrar repetidas veces en mi casa debió ser otra, cierta joven casada . . .

Marq(ués). Quien? Es que me importa saberlo.

Alej(andro). Para que? Es una muchacha de facil honestidad, á quien ni siquiera me he tomado el trabajo de conquistar, porque ella lo ha hecho todo.

Marq(ués). La conozco?

- Alej(andro)*. Tal vez. Su amor no era desinteresado. Proponiase conseguir para su marido la intendencia de Filipinas, y he tenido que prometérsela. Para que quiere Vd. saber mas?
- Marq(ués)*. Me basta . . . Todo esto se hará conocer de nuestros amigos.
- Alej(andro)*. Bien me alegro de que este asunto tome tan buen giro. Publicaremos lo de Sofia, contaremos todo ce por be. Esto no me perjudica en el concepto publico, porque Sofia es libre. Hechos tales se ven todos los días, sin que ningún hombre de bien sea censurado por ellos
- Marq(ués)*. Al contrario. (con pena) La corrupcion presente es tal que Vd. escitará la general envidia, adquiriendo tal vez un nuevo título de fama en el concepto de ciertas gentes.
- Alej(andro)*. Yo no me vanaglorio de esta clase de hazañas; pero del mal el menos. Vd. quedará convencido y Eugenia en el lugar que le corresponde . . . Oh! la suposicion de que yo la habia seducido me hacia un daño terrible.
- Marq(ués)*. Y entanto, esa infeliz muger avergonzada para siempre. Vd. no se conoce, Vd. no ve toda la fealdad de su conducta. Se disculpa todo menos esa horrorosa ingratitud. A ella debe Vd. la vida, la salud, todo!
- Alej(andro)*. Es verdad; pero despues las circunstancias me indicaron otro camino, y fué forzoso seguirlo.
- Marq(ués)*. Vd. no conocerá la fealdad de su conducta, hasta que la fortuna se canse de protegerle. Aquí se anda pronto el camino; Vd. caerá; Vd. se verá abandonado por sus propios amigos; será Vd. victima á su vez de la mas negra ingratitud, le perseguirán; será expulsado de la patria, y entonces . . . tal vez se encuentre en situacion igualmente triste; y enfermo, abandonado, miserable, pedirá un asilo, un pedazo de pan, una asistencia consoladora; pero hay en el cielo un Dios justiciero, y ninguna puerta se abrirá para Vd.
- Alej(andro)*. Amigo mio: le aseguro á Vd. que no deja de hacerme algun efecto ese sentimentalismo; pero ahora . . . ahora no tengo cabeza para pensar en eso, ni corazon para sentirlo.
- Marq(ués)*. Considere Vd. bien la situacion. Vd. y yo, porque estamos interesados en ella, vamos á salir por ahi publicando la deshonor de esa pobre muger. Haga Vd. cuenta de que cada uno lleva un puñal en la mano para matarla. Y cuando tal hacemos, ha de quedar esa infeliz entregada á la desesperacion? Es esto justo? Esto no clama al cielo? Habrá perdon para Vd. si tal cosa consiente?
- Alej(andro)*. Es verdad; pero yo . . . yo estoy pronto siempre á hacer lo que la sociedad me exige: estoy pronto á cumplir sus extravagantes leyes para tenerla siempre contenta, para que no me martirize<sup>23</sup> disparando sobre mi las terribles armas de la difamacion y la calumnia . . . Pero en este asunto considere Vd. que la sociedad no me exige nada.

<sup>23</sup> Martirice.

Marq(ués). (exaltandose por grados) Pero lo que no exige una sociedad frívola, lo exige la conciencia, lo exige Dios. Por ventura ya no hay mas ley que el egoismo. Oh! ya veo que Vd. tan aficionado á hablar de moralidad, entiende por esto el artificio de guardar las apariencias, haciendo siempre lo que reclama el propio interés. Vd. es incapaz de toda accion verdaderamente grande y generosa, y si alguna vez hace el bien, no será porque el bien es un deber, y una religion, sino porque del bien le ha de resultar algun provecho . . . Dejeme Vd. solo. Publicare la deshonra de Sofia, la publicaré yo mismo que soy su hermano. No necesito de Vd. ni aun para cumplir este penoso deber.

Alej(andro). No puedo consentir que Vd. me tenga por un malvado.

Marq(ués). Pruebeme Vd. que no lo es.

Alej(andro). Me exige Vd. una prueba terrible. El matrimonio es asunto demasiado serio para tratado asi. Si se tratara de Eugenia, que es hija de familia, no hubiera vacilado un momento. La deshonra, causada por mi, habria sido un oprobio indeleble en mi historia publica y privada . . . Pero Sofia es libre . . .

Alej(andro).<sup>24</sup> Conozco su falta. Si mi cuñada tuviera una gran fortuna.

Marq(ués).<sup>24</sup> Que acusacion!

Alej(andro).<sup>24</sup> Si . . . Vd. no da un paso en su vida sino movido por el espiritu de las conveniencias, superior á toda razon y a toda ley. Una vez desarrollada y satisfecha su ambicion, elevado sobre los demas, enloquecido por la lisonja, embriagado por los goces de la celebridad adquirida á fuerza de audacia, Vd. no conoce mas Dios que si mismo; se me representa como el prototipo de esa inquieta juventud, que nos asombra lo mismo por su talento que por su gran corrupcion, y que ciega, insensible, desenfrenada, se precipita tras un torpe ideal, ansiosa del poder, porque con el poder lo tiene todo.

Alej(andro). No es eso no . . . Ademas Sofia no me ama.

Marq(ués). Le amará á Vd. si vé que lo merece.

Alej(andro). En esta cuestion.

Marq(ués). Esto no tiene nombre! (con grande energia) Pues bien: ya no se lo ruego á Vd. sino que se lo exijo. Si señor, Sofia es mi hermana, y si Vd. no se casa con ella, le insultaré publicamente hoy mismo; no será mi sobrino quien le desafíe, seré yo mismo, y con un escandalo de esta clase no podrá Vd. ser ministro. Soy enemigo del duelo; pero en este caso, exponiéndome á dejar huérfana á mi hija, me batiré con Vd., no por el mero placer de matarle, ni menos porque me mate Vd. á mi, sino con el deseo de hundirle, de arrojarle al suelo en este dia solemne. Iré al Congreso; alli donde haya mas gente allí entraré yo, para arrojarle á Vd. á la cara todas las ignominias imaginables. No será Vd. ministro; no manchará esa honrada carterá, que simboliza la autoridad suprema.

Alej(andro). Pero Sr. Marques . . .

<sup>24</sup> The speakers should be Marqués, Alejandro and Marqués respectively.

- Marq(ués)* Lo dicho: estoy decidido. Elija Vd.
- Alej(andro)* Esa violencia!
- Marq(ués)* Es justicia.
- Alej(andro)* El escándalo me mata.
- Marq(ués)* Es lo que deseo. Y en vano querra Vd evitarlo. No hav remedio . . . No será Vd. ministro
- Alej(andro)* Vd. me asesina
- Marq(ués)* Es lo que Vd merece Pienselo Vd . . .
- Alej(andro)* (vacilando) Bien . . . hablaremos . . .
- Marq(ués)* No hay hablaremos . . . Es preciso decidirse.
- Alej(andro)* Pues . . . aguarde Vd. . . . (apurado) Lo pensaré.
- Marq(ués)* No hay que pensar mas.
- Alej(andro)* Pues bien: nos arreglaremos . . . tal vez . . .
- Marq(ués)* Hará Vd. lo que digo . . .
- Alej(andro)* Bien . . . pero renunciará Vd. á ese endiablado proyecto . . . Estoy á la orden de Vd.
- Marq(ués)* Doy á Vd. un cuarto de hora para contestar definitivamente.
- Alej(andro)* Bien volveré . . . (Será preciso ceder . . .)
- Marq(ués)* Le espero á Vd. aqui? Va á palacio?
- Alej(andro)* Ahora mismo.
- Marq(ués)* Pues aqui espero
- Alej(andro)* Volveré . . . (rapidamente) Creo que . . . quedaremos conformes . . . Es preciso ceder . . .
- Marq(ués)* Hasta luego . . . (vase Alej[andro])

Escena 11*.

Marques—Sofia, Eugenia

- Marq(ués)* (a Sof[ía] que entra por la izq[ui]erda) Descuida: espero arreglarlo todo
- Sof(ía)* Estoy decidida á partir.
- Eug(enia)* (entra por la d[ere]cha con mucha agitacion) Carlos, al ver entrar aqui á ese hombre por segunda vez, está poseido de un furor insensato . . . Recorre la casa como un loco . . . dando voces, y jurando que le ha de matar . . . Agita en su mano una pistola, y . . .
- Sof(ía)* ¡Que horror!
- Marq(ués)* (con inquietud) Es preciso contenerle. (llama) Carlos, Carlos Traele tu Sofia . . . Llévale á mi despacho. Allí hare un esfuerzo, y lo sabrá todo.

Escena 12*.

Sofia, Eugenia, Carlos (que entra revelando un gran desorden.
Trae en la mano una pistola.)

- Sof(ía)* Hijo mio . . . oye ven . . .
- Carlos* (con furor) Ese hombre no entrará mas en esta casa!

- Sof(ía).* Escucha, Carlos . . . Tu tío quiere hablarte . . . Suelta esa arma terrible . . . Me da miedo . . . me parece que vas á matarme con ella . . . Dámela. (se la quita) (conmoviéndose) Ah! hijo: ya no te veré mas
- Carlos.* (con asombro) Como . . .
- Sof(ía).* Me voy . . . no volveré mas.
- Carlos.* Se va!
- Sof(ía).* Adios—adios . . . (á Eug[enia]) Y tu Eugenia . . . no olvides mi deseo . . . (ap[arte] á Eug[enia]) (Todo se sabe ya . . . no podia durar mas tiempo un engaño que era para ti una vergüenza y para mí un crimen )
- Cárlos.* (observando el llanto de su madre) Que es esto . . . ese llanto.
- Sof(ía).* (les abraza á entrambos muy conmovida) Adios, adios . . . (vase por el fondo)

Escena 13ª.Eugenia. Carlos—Jacinto

- Cárlos.* (en la mayor confusion) Tu me diras que significa esto.
- Eug(enia).* Mi padre quiere hablarte.
- Carlos.* (con impaciencia) Corro al instante. (vase por la izq[ui]erda)
- Jac(into).* Me he encontrado á Alejandro en la puerta . . . parece loco . . . que ocurre? . . . parece que hay boda.
- Eug(enia).* Boda!
- Jac(into).* Si . . . Parecia trastornado . . . Quise que explicara la causa de su turbacion; pero no decia mas que “Me casaré, me casaré” . . . “tendre que casarme” . . . y de aqui no le pude sacar . . . Ya me lo figuraba yo . . . La felicito á Vd.
- Eug(enia)* A mí!
- Jac(into).* Oh! Alejandro vale mucho . . . Y aunque parece así . . . un poco . . . pues . . . Su fondo es bueno . . . Y muy amigo de sus amigos—muy leal, de costumbres arregladisimas, incapaz de ofender á nadie . . . de su talento no hablemos: en fin un hombre modelo. Hemos sido camaradas toda la vida, así no extrañe Vd que tenga por él verdadero fanatismo Cuando empiezo á elogiarle, no sé acabar nunca . . . Conque se casan Vds. al fin? . . . Ya él es ministro: acaba de jurar. .

Escena 14ª.Dichos—El Marqués, Cárlos

- Eugenia.* (Lo sabe ya )
- Carlos.* (sale muy demudado) No . . . no puede ser—Esta es una indigna farsa . . . Mi madre!
- Marq(ués).* Ha llegado el momento de perdonar. (a Eugenia) Hija mia: Para devolverte tu honor ha sido preciso el sacrificio de una noble víctima. (á Carlos) Hijo mio. la vida suele curar las dudas mortales con amargas certidumbres. Triste es el espectáculo que ofrece la debilidad humana espiando con terribles dolores la falta de un día; pero la inocencia calumniada es mas digna de lástima. Todo esta puesto en claro: la prueba ha sido horrorosa para ti, para mí, para todos; pero mi crueldad y tu doloroso convencimiento realizan una grande accion, el triunfo de la verdad, hija de Dios . . .

Carlos. (abrazando a Eugenia) Oh! Eugenia!

Marq(ués). (a Jacinto) Señor mio. Vd. es de los que mayor parte tienen en este embrollo. Sepa Vd. que mi hija es inocente; sepa Vd. que Alejandro se casara con Sofia á quien ama desde hace tiempo . . .

Jacinto. Ah! Luego . . .

Marq(ués). Pero ni mi hija, ni mi cuñada deben confundirse con la muger de cuyas visitas nocturnas sacó Vd tanto partido.

Jac(into). Y cree Vd. que yo podia sospechar que fueran ellas? ¡que disparate! Ya indique que aquella dama misteriosa debia ser alguna muger-zuela . . .

Marq(ués). Como que ella fué quien le conquistó á él, solo con objeto de conseguir para su marido la intendencia de Filipinas.

Jac(in)to. (con el mayor asombro) La intendencia de Filipinas! lanzando una fuerte exclamacion de terror) Mi muger!! . . . Tomaré una venganza terrible! (sale precipitadamente)

Escena última

Dichos—Alejandro

El Marques. Sofia me ha dejado esta carta (lee una que trajo en la mano) Se va . . . se separa de nosotros . . . Insiste en que se cumpla su deseo . . . ya sabeis . . .

Carlos. (a Eugenia) Tu tienes un corazon noble y recto y no puedes dejar de amarme (Alejandro se presenta en la puerta del fondo)

Marq(ués). Ah! ya esta Vd. aquí. Tambien la esquila dice algo para Vd.

Alej(andro). (entrando) Estoy pronto á ceder á la justa exigencia de Vd.

Marq(ués). (pasando la vista por la carta) Dice que ya ha espiado su falta . . . que cuando espiara Vd. la suya

Alej(andro). Y no accede . . . ?

Marq(ués). Dice que prefiere la deshonra á ser esposa de un hombre como Vd.

Alej(andro). (con interes) Ah! yo quiero verla . . . ha partido . . . ?

Marq(ués). (leyendo) Dice algo mas . . . Dice que puede Vd. verla, cuando vuelva á la emigracion.

Fin de la comedia.

It would be idle to discuss seriously the artistic merit of Un joven de provecho; it has all the rough edges and loose ends of the product of a novice. Yet, those unfamiliar with Galdós' presumably inevitable difficulties with the drama will be impressed precisely by the clear insight into dramatic technique of a highly stereotyped variety which he reveals in this instance. It all demonstrates that the nights which as a student Galdós spent at "estrenos" instead of at his desk afforded him vicarious experience in the exacting art of dramaturgy. In Un joven de provecho he practices all the traditional tricks of the trade with such telling effect that the comedy might well have been written by an accomplished playwright who regards as the essence of dramatic art devices like timely entrances and exits, coincident meetings and contemporaneous events, eavesdropping, misdirected letters, soliloquies, melodramatic emphasis, epigrammatic wisdom, ornate metaphors, etc. The plot is constructed with mechanical precision and moves smoothly and resolutely toward an effective ending, although the sophisticated spectator would not fail to see through the plot the perfectly functioning mechanism which propels it. It is curious indeed to find that Galdós the novice handles adroitly the very conventional patterns of dramatic art which years later he ventured to defy and, if possible, to banish from the Spanish stage. This is a detail of capital importance for those critics who maintain—and they are almost all those who have discussed Galdós' dramas—that Galdós' failure as dramatist is ascribable to a natural lack of ability accentuated by long years of practice as novelist and not to the desire to be an innovator. It cannot be that what Galdós was able to do well in the sixties he could not have done equally well in the nineties if he had wished to. Un joven de provecho is the handiwork of an intelligent dramatic technician, precisely the type of dramatist that Galdós did not choose to become when he seriously turned to the drama in 1892.

With respect to content, one misses in this comedy the basic qualities invariably associated with Galdós' art: his creative power, his humanness, his genial humor, his vivid and convincing realism, and, in a sense, even his personal and colorful language. The characters are for the most part animated pawns moved about quite deftly by the author in a set of stock and intricately interrelated situations. One feels that the persons of this comedy are either accurate reproductions of the stereotyped figures which Galdós had observed on the stage or figures purposefully conceived by him for the performance of stock tasks which dramatists are wont to assign to their characters. The sensitive father saved from dishonor by a financially independent daughter; the ruined industrialist who seeks an alliance with politics to rescue his interests; the romantic and love-starved widow who showers generosity and ultimately love upon the first man in need of the hand of a woman to lift him out of despair; the ardent and impassioned youth of twenty who turns into a veritable symbol of Calderonian honor the very moment his mother, for reasons of state, chooses for him a keeper of his sacred honor—a virtuous young lady no older than himself, these and other familiar types carry out to perfection the dramatist's orders but fail to impress the reader with their realness. The hero of the play deserves to be featured independently, for in his delineation Galdós accomplished something noteworthy if not interesting. Alejandro is a villain in the full sense of the term, perhaps the only villain in all Galdós' works, and the author treats him with manifest disapproval and contempt. Every appearance of Alejandro seems to be a signal for his interlocutors to combine against him and to defeat him, and they fight him with crude weapons, striking where it hurts the most. The scenes in which Alejandro appears seem to be so many traps skilfully set for him by the author. One might perhaps explain the lack of Galdós' essential kindness in this instance as a case of youthful idealism out of patience with human behavior which does not spring from a pure and clear conscience. Alejandro is selfishly ambitious, scheming, unscrupulous, ungrateful, insincere, untrustworthy, and incapable of pure love, and Galdós the idealist rises in indignation to crush this foe of society. Only the earnestness of its moral tone stamps Un joven de provecho as a work of Galdós, to assign it further significance would perhaps amount to superimposing upon it qualities of which the author was wholly unaware. For all its shortcomings, however, the comedy remains a highly valuable document for the study of Galdós' dramatic career.

H. CHONON BERKOWITZ

University of Wisconsin

COMMENT AND CRITICISM

1. THE THREE DAUGHTERS OF DEORMAN

IN earlier articles<sup>1</sup> I have argued that the Ancren Riwe was written originally for "Emma, Christina, and Gunhilda," to whom the abbot of Westminster gave the hermitage of Kilburn, with corrodies and other benefits, during the last years of the reign of Henry I. In a letter to the Times Literary Supplement (February 14, 1935) I mentioned that I would now identify the Kilburn recluses with the trio of whom we have record in a royal writ, as follows "Sciatis me concessisse deo et sancto Petro ac monachis Westm' illas terras quas tres filie Deormanni pro salute animarum suarum et sepulturis suis, et ut plenam haberent ejusdem ecclesie societatem, consilio et voluntate Ordgari fratris earum, in Lundon' eis dederunt."<sup>2</sup> The same sort of circumstantial evidence which led me to identify the three recluses of the Riwe with those enclosed at Kilburn now leads me to identify the latter with the trio of women mentioned in this writ of Henry I.

The identification of the Kilburn ladies with the three daughters of Deorman rests on the fact that two references would carry the recluses back to the period of the writ (though they were not enclosed till years later). In view of the extreme rarity of medieval trios of devout women, it seems most unlikely that there should have been two such, associated with a convent of men at the same moment. Dean Robinson has already conjectured that the fact that the Kilburn recluses were to commemorate especially Abbot Crispin (d. 1117) "may perhaps" indicate<sup>3</sup> that their foundation had been projected in Crispin's life-time. He is inclined to doubt the second retrospective reference attached to Kilburn: namely, the statement of Prior Flete that the first inmates of Kilburn Priory had been domicellæ camerae of "good Queen Maud." His doubts arose from the lapse of time between her death and the foundation, and the lack of provision of prayers for her soul.

Abbot Crispin was very learned and saintly, and linked to Queen Maud by the close relation of both to St Anselm. It would be very likely that pious girls in royal service at the palace might come under Abbot Gilbert's influence, during the last years of the queen's life, while she was living mainly at Westminster. She died in 1118. I believe that an effort was made to canonize "the good queen" (along with her uncle, the Confessor),<sup>4</sup> and it was probably in this connection that her devout maidens received very special favors from the abbot and convent. I now believe that Abbot Herbert's foundation of "canonesses" (as Flete

<sup>1</sup> PMLA, xxxiii, 474-546; xlv, 635-680. The research of which I now give a preliminary notice has been made possible by grants from the American Council of Learned Societies. I have profited by the facilities provided at Westminster Abbey by the Pilgraim Trust.

<sup>2</sup> Printed from Westminster Domesday, J. A. Robinson, Gilbert Crispin, (Cambridge, 1911), pp. 147-148, also in B. M. Cotton MS Faustina A. iii, f. 77<sup>v</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> Op cit, p. 34, Church Quarterly Review (1909), p. 353.

<sup>4</sup> See PMLA, xxxiii, 477 n. W. Holtzmann, Papsturkunden in England (Berlin), II (1931), to which I was directed by Professor Lunt, pp. 236, 250-251; Robinson, Crispin, p. 156, and British Numismatic Journal, (xii), 1916, pp. 53-54.

calls it) took place in 1127–28.<sup>4</sup> This was a time when to take devout women under their protection was a not uncommon act<sup>5</sup> for convents of men, the idea of the double monastery was in the air. But there have been special circumstances difficult to explain in the foundation of Kilburn, most of which I believe can now be accounted for.<sup>6</sup>

Who were the “three daughters of Deorman?” The answer to this question leads us to a most interesting genealogical study, but it should be said at once that the only absolutely certain fact which we have as to the pedigree of the trio of Westminster associates is that they were sisters of Ordgar, who was probably the head of their family at the time of their donation.

“Orgarus filius Deremanni” was one of the fifteen members of what Mr. J. H. Round called “that ancient and remarkable institution, the English Cnihtengild of London.”<sup>7</sup> This guild in 1125 became associates (in their turn) of a religious house (Holy Trinity, Aldgate, founded, under the influence of St. Anselm, by Queen Maud). The guild was said to be hereditary, and the fact that the brother of the three sisters belonged to it, might indicate that their family was of important Anglo-Saxon stock. Probably, therefore, Ordgar and his sisters (who owned land in London) were children of the Domesday tenant-in-chief, “Derman of London.” If so, Ordgar may have died before 1130, when the ultimate heir to Derman’s Islington property, “Tierri son of Derman,” seems to be in possession. Algar, son of Derman, prebendary of Islington at St. Paul’s, is dead by 1104, but Tierri is alive in 1137, and probably for some years later. He is dead by 1148. His heirs can be traced through a remarkable series of charters pointed out to me by Miss D. M. B. Ellis.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>4a</sup> The foundation is generally dated 1134, but Westminster was in 1133 involved in a bitter quarrel with Gilbert the Universal, bishop of London (Holtzman, II, 241). It is unlikely that he would have later granted Westminster full power over this nunnery in his see (in any case a remarkable act, since the house was never Benedictine). See PMLA, XXXIII, 474, n., 489 ff.

<sup>5</sup> In the late eleventh century Abbot Crispin’s mother retired with two companions to the abbey of Bec (see PMLA, XXXIII, 539, n.); in the mid-twelfth, in England, a countess of Oxford (who was by birth a Clare) retired to the house of canons at St. Osyth’s (J. H. Round, Geoffrey de Mandeville [London, 1892], p. 390). See also G. G. Coulton, Five Centuries of Religion, I (Cambridge, 1923), 241.

<sup>6</sup> Letters of fraternity were often issued to great persons of no very real piety, but the present instance is likely to indicate a personal act. For women, rich enough to bestow sufficient land to buy Westminster fraternity, not to marry, probably in itself indicates piety. No such early case of lay private persons becoming associates of a monastery is cited in Prebendary Clark—Maxwell’s valuable articles in Archaeologia, LXXV, 19–60; LXXIX, 179–216. The Scottish royal family (the parents of Queen Maud), St. Margaret, her husband and children, were received into the fraternity of Durham (ibid., LXXV, 27). I wish to thank Prebendary Maxwell for kind assistance.

<sup>7</sup> The Commune of London (London, 1899), p. 102.

<sup>8</sup> Calendar of Charter Rolls, II, 71–72. In spite of all that has been written on this family this inspeximus has escaped notice. Cf., for Algar, W. Dugdale, St Paul’s (London, 1818), p. 256, Round, in Domesday Commemoration, Domesday Studies, ed. P. E. Dove (London, 1891), II, 558; on Derman and Tierri, Trans. London and Middlesex Archaeol. Soc., III,

It is probably significant of the position of this family in early London history that Tierri's daughter was the wife of William Blemund, who gave his name to Bloomsbury. We learn, from the charters discovered by Miss Ellis, that Tierri's wife was a cognata of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Pembroke. In other words, this Anglo-Saxon family, a century after the Conquest, had intermarried with the leading family of the Norman baronage. This fact makes more likely the identification, which has been suggested, of Derman of London with Derman, an important Anglo-Saxon thane of William the Conqueror (whose charter to "Deorman my man" is still preserved at the London Guildhall). And, if Derman of London had three daughters who were in the service of Queen Maud, an Anglo-Saxon princess, we would thus have another possible link of connection between the two Derman. Both the estates in question had been held by thanes of King Edward the Confessor (whose names might suggest a blood connection with "Derman" who inherited the properties, as I shall later show).

The relationship between Ordgar and Tierri is not proved, nor the identity of the two Derman. Other uncertainties enter this important family history (which is probably that of the first mayor of London). Nothing, therefore, is certain about the connections of the three daughters of Deorman except that they had a brother Ordgar. But it should be pointed out that Mr. Round would identify the thane, Derman, with a person lately dead in 1093-97,<sup>9</sup> and only on the supposition that daughters of his were infants at his death could, I believe, they have been the persons for whom the Ancren Riwle was written. As we have it, I believe that that work belongs to the period of the coming of the Cistercians and could not have been written before c. 1130. I believe that it was written for women who were mature, but not for women who were old.<sup>10</sup>

The conceivable possibility that the Ancren Riwle may have been written for the three daughters of Deorman presents a working hypothesis which from the historical side lights up so clearly the tradition of the treatise that it must be studied so long as any chance remains of its validity. Work which I have been

---

153 ff.; Round, V. C. H., Herts, I, 285-286, Commune, p. 106, The King's Serjeants (London, 1911), p. 13; W. Page, London (London, 1923), pp. 211, 253, etc. Mr. Page rejects the identification (v. infra) of the two Domesday "Derman" (taking, more positively than it was given, a suggestion of Mr. Round's).

<sup>9</sup> This person's brother probably lived till 1115 (Page, op. cit. p. 249, LTLS, Feb. 14, 1935, and English Hist. Rev., 34, p. 369 n.). Cf. V. C. H., Herts, loc. cit.; H. W. C. Davis, Regesta Regum Anglo-Normannorum (Oxford, 1913), No. 399, p. 101. I shall discuss later one or more contemporary more obscure persons named Derman.

<sup>10</sup> For my opinion as to the age of the anchoresses of the Riwle see PMLA, xxxiii, 477-478 (n.), and (by implication) MLR, xlix (April, 1934), 173, n. 1, where I suggest a date of "about 1140, or even possibly a few years later" (on the supposition that Kilburn was founded c. 1134). I now realise that puella in the foundation charter of Kilburn means merely virgo; see C. Johnson, Medieval Latin Word-List (Oxford, 1935). I find no address to the sisters in the Riwle that certainly implies their youth at the moment. On the other hand, the tone is adapted to persons much younger than St. Aelred's recluse sister (see PMLA, xlv, 659). The range of possible age is probably that indicated by Latin juvenis; see my Writings Ascribed to Richard Rolle, MLA. Monog. III (1927), p. 539.

doing on the provenance of the extant manuscripts of the Riwle has brought out the extraordinary persistence of court connections with this English treatise. It may be said that all our extant clues as to who actually owned the existing copies bring us back to the court circles. It is therefore very interesting that Tierri, "the heir, perhaps the son, of Derman of London," as Mr. Round calls him, married a Clare. At about the time when our clues to the provenance of manuscripts of the Ancien Riwe begin, the countess of Clare owned the Cleopatra manuscript of the work, and Tierri's representative at that moment was closely linked to the court: she had married a Giffard, brother of the archbishop of York, of the bishop of Worcester (each, in turn, Lord Chancellor), of the abbesses of Shaftesbury and Wilton, the son of parents both in the royal service.<sup>11</sup> These facts naturally prove nothing for the possible connection with the Riwle of the putative sisters of Tierri, but they make it worth while to push the investigation of his family history to the uttermost. Herein would seem to lie the chance of final disproof of the theory of the origin of the Ancien Riwe at Kilburn; it would be a tremendous stroke of good fortune if the same investigation should, on the other hand, substantiate that hypothesis.

HOPE EMILY ALLEN

<sup>11</sup> See Charter Rolls, loc. cit., Bishops and Reform, M. Gibbs, and J. Lang. (Oxford, 1934), p. 192, Register of Giffard, Worcestershire Historical Society (1902), pp. xxiv ff.; Register of Giffard, Surtees Society, 109, xiv n. I shall show later other possible links, with the Clare connection, of the Ancien Riwe through the Merton copy and the "Dublin Rule."

2. THOMAS CHURCHYARD'S PENSION

NEITHER Mr. Gamzue (PMLA, XLIX, 1041-9) nor earlier writers on Churchyard seem to have noted that on July 19, 1597, the Queen granted the old poet a pension of 20d a day—or slightly more than 30£ a year—for life.<sup>1</sup> This was a respectable sum; certainly it was entirely commensurate with Churchyard's skill as a poet. It would have enabled Churchyard to live out his remaining six years in modest comfort; and there is no reason to suppose that the pension was not paid. Churchyard's annuity is of some interest, since it is recorded in an official document, and only the pension granted to Spenser enjoyed a similar distinction.

ALLAN GRIFFITH CHESTER

University of Pennsylvania

<sup>1</sup> Calendar of State Papers, Domestic, 1595-97 (London, 1869), iv, 466.

3. THEOPHRASTUS AND HALL: A CORRECTION

AN interesting illustration of one of the dangers incident to parallel passages is afforded by a paper of Professor Edward Chauncey Baldwin's, "The Relation of the English 'Character' to its Greek Prototype,"<sup>1</sup> in which, by error, the words of Theophrastus are attributed to Hall and those of Hall attributed to Theophrastus. The lines should read:

<sup>1</sup> PMLA, XVIII (N.S. XI), 412-423.

THEOPHRASTUS

The Distrustful Man

The Distrustful man is one who, having sent his slave to market, will send another to ascertain what price he gave. . . . He will ask his wife in bed if she has locked the wardrobe, and if the cupboard has been sealed, and the bolt put upon the halldoor; and, if the reply is "Yes," not the less will he forsake the blankets and run about shoeless to inspect all these matters, and barely thus find sleep.<sup>2</sup>

HALL

Of the Distrustful

When he hath committed a message to his servant, he sends a second after him to listen how it is delivered. . . . After his first sleep, he starts up, and asks if the furthest gate were barr'd, and out of a fearful sweat calls up his servant, and bolts the door after him, and then studies whether it were better to lie still and believe, or rise and see.<sup>3</sup>

In Professor Baldwin's paper (p. 418) the last nine lines under HALL are from Theophrastus and the last eight under THEOPHRASTUS are from Hall.

ZAIDEE E. GREEN

Duquesne University

<sup>2</sup> R. C. Jebb, Tr., The Characters of Theophrastus (London, 1870), p. 145

<sup>3</sup> Fetherstone and Griffin Ed., The Works of Joseph Hall (London, 1617), p. 229.

4. SPENSER OR ANTHONY MUNDAY?—A NOTE ON THE AXIOCHUS

FROM time to time during the past two hundred years there have been allusions to a certain translation of the Axiochus printed in 1592, possibly made by Edmund Spenser, but apparently not extant. The recent discovery of a copy of this lost work is the good fortune of Professor Padelford, well known as the principal editor of the Johns Hopkins Variorum edition of Spenser's works. It is now handsomely published in facsimile, with a brief introduction by the discoverer, under the title: "The Axiochus of Plato Translated by Edmund Spenser, edited by Frederick Morgan Padelford, University of Washington: Baltimore, The Johns Hopkins Press, 1934."<sup>1</sup> The discovery was first announced at the meeting of the Modern Language Association in December, 1932.<sup>2</sup> The many months of delay in publication have been months of laborious research. The discoverer is confident, and he is not alone in his confidence, that we have here a genuine work of Edmund Spenser. But before receiving this work into the Spenserian canon, the basis of its claims should be examined.

First, as to what may be called the external authority as distinguished from the internal evidence. The editor's introduction begins by citing the earliest known mention of the work, in the Catalogus Bibliothecæ Harleianæ, 1744: "Dialogue concerning the Shortnesse and Uncertainty of this Life, by Plato, translated by Edw. Spenser 1592." Then in 1758 John Upton, in the preface to his edition of the Faerie Queene, speaks of a projected (but never published) "third Volume; which will contain his Pastorals, Sonnets, &c. together with his View of the State of Ireland, and a translation of a Socratic dialogue, entitled Axiochus or of Death; which is not taken notice of by any Editor of any part of his works." But even if by these words Upton meant to vouch for the genuineness of the work (which may be doubted), it should be noted that his reputation is not of the best. He is the putative author of a spurious "new canto" of the Faerie Queene.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> References are to this publication unless otherwise stated.

<sup>2</sup> In an unpublished paper entitled "One of Spenser's Lost Works Comes to Light." See PMLA, XLVII (1932), 1335.

Next, in 1773, Steevens included in his edition of Shakespeare a list of "Ancient Translations from Classic Authors," in which he mentions "Axiochus, a Dialogue, attributed to Plato, by Edm. Spenser, 4to, 1592." This entry is so slipshod as to make it unlikely that he ever saw the book, and hence his mention of "Edm. Spenser" carries no weight. And in Herbert's edition of Ames' Typographical Antiquities, 1785-90, in the list of books printed in Scotland is entered: "1592. Plato's Axiochus: on the shortness and uncertainty of life. Quarto." Whether Herbert actually saw the work or not, he makes no suggestion of Edmund Spenser being the translator.

The preface of Todd's edition of Spenser, 1805, is quoted in Padelford's introduction (p. 2): "I should have added to the present collection, the translation of Axiochus attributed to him, if my endeavours to obtain it had been attended with success." But Todd himself seems to have had little faith in the attribution of the work to Edmund Spenser. Elsewhere in his preface (p. clxxiii) he makes the rather obvious remark: "Some readers will wonder when it is asserted that Plato wrote no Dialogue of this name. . . . And if Edmund Spenser, the poet, be really the English translator, we cannot but be surprised that a scholar so accomplished should be misled in regard to the author of the original."<sup>4</sup>

The entry in Malone's Shakespeare of 1821 (II, 274) is muddled and signifies nothing: "a translation of Axiocha's Dialogues, attributed to Plato, by Spenser, . . . published in 1592."

According to the title-page of the work itself the translator is "Edw. Spenser." In the brief address "To the Reader" it is said that the dialogue "was translated out of Greeke, by that worthy Scholler and Poet, Maister Edward Spenser, whose studies haue & doe carry no mean commendation, because their deserts are of so great esteeme." It is true enough, as Professor Padelford points out (p. 9), that the fact that the name was printed as "Edw." or "Edward" Spenser "is not surprising, in view of the fact that Spenser's full name had not appeared in any of his works published prior to 1592." But Burbie's ignorance of Spenser's exact name is equally a fact whether or not the work itself is genuine, and throws no light on the very point at issue. It should also be remembered that from 1590 to the end of Spenser's life Ponsonbie was his one and only publisher. Genuine or not, this publication was pirated by one who was eager to print "whatever would catch the public" (p. 7); and this being the case, we need not believe that it was the work of any Spenser, whether Edmund or Edward.

<sup>3</sup> In H. J. Todd's edition of The Works of Edmund Spenser (1805), I, clxxxiii, in the list of "Imitations of Spenser," appears the following entry: "A [pretended] New Canto of Spenser's Fairy Queen. Now first published. 4to. Lond. 1747. Mr. Upton is stated to be the author, in Lockyer Davis's Catalogue, 1783, p. 242. I think it very probable. . . . The Notes also bespeak the hand of Upton."

<sup>4</sup> In this connection it may be noted that Padelford labors under some confusion in saying (p. 16) that in the sixteenth century "by most scholars it [the Axiochus] was attributed to Plato, although its authenticity was already being questioned." The fact is that the spuriousness of this dialogue has always been unquestioned.

This leaves one and only one positive authority for saying that "Edward" is a mistake on Burbie's part. This is a certain H. Atterbury, a previous owner of the book, whose marginal note opposite "Edward," in the address "To the Reader," says "A mistake for Edmund" (p. 63). Of him no information is given except Padelford's own description of his notes as "much more superficial" than other notes found in the book in a different handwriting (p. 5).

As to internal evidence, the editor calls attention (p. 28) to "passages which fall into rhythmical patterns, notably the iambic five-stress verse, a characteristic which the Axiochus shares with the View of the Present State of Ireland," and cites the authority of Professor Osgood's paper in ELH, April, 1934. He adds that it is "further evidence, if such were needed, of the Spenserian authorship of the Axiochus." But Osgood, at the very beginning of his paper, is careful to emphasize that this is a characteristic which the translation of the Axiochus shares not only with the View of the Present State of Ireland but with a great many other prose works by all sorts of writers. Osgood says also (p. 4): "In the earlier prose of Spenser's familiar letters I do not observe the tendency." This is evidence against, and not for, Padelford's contention that the work belongs to Spenser's youth.

The editor proceeds to remark of the translation that "the alliteration, the antitheses, the balanced sentences, and the tendency to over-decoration are Euphuistic." As to this, it need only be said that Spenser himself never attempted to imitate Euphuies.<sup>5</sup>

Next he asserts that "the strongest evidence of early authorship is furnished by the translation of the snatches of poetry." He copies, with three mistakes, the following two passages:

Of all that in the earth are ordained by nature,
Than man, is not to bee found a more wretched creature.

Him loued highest Iupiter and Apollo deare, yet could he not reache to his eldest yeare.

These verses are said to "recall the youthfull (sic) attempts at translation in the epigrams of The Theatre for Worldlings." They are not beyond the talents of lesser men than Spenser. The reader may easily compare them with the Theatre epigrams. He may judge whether there is any resemblance.

<sup>5</sup> E. Legouis, Spenser, p. 134: "He has none of Lyly's euphuism."

The editor, in speaking (p. 29) of the appeal of the Axiochus to a "Stoic" attitude, goes on to say. "It is interesting to reflect upon the extent to which the translation of the Axiochus in his formative years may have influenced the future outlook of the poet." But, according to the best living authority,<sup>6</sup> there is no trace of Stoicism to be found in the Axiochus. And it may be hoped that Professor Padelford will take occasion to inform us to what extent Spenser was influenced by Stoicism, or by whatever else there is in this dialogue.

Professor F. I. Carpenter<sup>7</sup> places this work among the Spenser Apocrypha, and remarks "In the case of Shakespeare almost every work of his time signed 'W. S.' has been ascribed to him, whether confidently or doubtfully. Something of the same sort is now happening in the case of Spenser."

It appears that there is no external authority of any weight whatever for ascribing this translation to Edmund Spenser. And the internal evidence of style and content is definitely against such an ascription.

If this work is not Spenser's, who can claim it? There is one obvious candidate. Originally there was annexed to the translation, and presumably by the same author, "a sweet speech or Oration, spoken at the Tryumphe at White-hall before her Maiestie, by the Page to the right noble Earle of Oxenforde." For many years Anthony Munday was the leading writer of "triumphs" and civic pageants on just such occasions.<sup>8</sup> In many of his works he describes himself as "servant" of the Earl of Oxford.<sup>9</sup> The inference is that whatever was spoken on these occasions by the Earl of Oxford's page was written by none other than Munday.

Munday was not averse to pseudonymity in its boldest form. It is well known that his play Sir John Oldcastle was published under the name of William Shakespeare.

While Burbie was never Spenser's publisher, he published Munday's translation Gerileon of England, and in this same year of 1592<sup>10</sup> Burbie also published Munday's translation of the first and second books of Primaleon of Grece, in 1595 and 1596 respectively.<sup>11</sup> And among the many other foreign books translated by Munday is The Defence of Contraries, dated 1593: this is a series of sophistical paradoxes, arguing for example that blindness is desirable, just as the Axiochus argues that death is desirable.<sup>12</sup>

The translator of the Axiochus does not base himself on the original as Spenser would have done. Padelford has elaborately demonstrated (pp. 17-25) that the translator used the text of Welsdalius, which gives Greek and Latin in parallel columns, that he followed the Latin version, and that he shows no sign

<sup>6</sup> See A. E. Taylor, Plato, The Man and his Work (1929), pp. 550-552: "The dialogue is a piece of anti-Epicurean polemic, intended to contrast the Platonic with the Epicurean answer to the perennial question What may I hope for? and to insinuate that the 'wisdom' of Epicurus is not even original. It is a mere revival of the ideas of a second-rate sophist, and a 'doctrine of despair' into the bargain. . . . I see no need to suppose a date later than the time of Epicurus, whose Greek is much of the same stamp."

<sup>7</sup> Reference Guide to Edmund Spenser, p. 129.

<sup>8</sup> Celeste Turner, "Anthony Munday: An Elizabethan Man of Letters," Univ. of California Publ. in Eng., II, pp. 152-168.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid., p. 25-26.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid., p. 208.

<sup>11</sup> Pollard and Redgrave, Short-Title Catalogue, 1926, p. 468.

<sup>12</sup> Turner, pp. 90-92.

of having consulted the original Greek. But it should be noted that Spenser, like Browning's father, "was a scholar and knew Greek" as well as Latin,<sup>13</sup> whereas Munday knew Latin but not Greek. The translator's mode of procedure is what should be expected from such a hack as Munday, but not from Spenser (especially if the work was done while he was at, or fresh from, the University).

Stress is laid in the introduction (pp. 26-27) on several characteristic words and phrases in this translation which are compared with passages in Spenser's poetry. The parallel-passage argument is weak from overwork: it has been used to infer that all the works, not only of Spenser himself but of a dozen others more or less, were written by the same Bacon who wrote Shakespeare.<sup>14</sup> Writers of this school have only succeeded in proving, what hardly requires proof, that authors, and Elizabethan authors in particular, echo one another quite as much as they echo themselves. A leading authority on Munday writes:<sup>15</sup> "The annotations of Elizabethan editors are largely composed of such parallels, but the only deduction that can reasonably be drawn is that the writers all had good ears and retentive memories." What more natural than that the sedulous Munday, who twelve years before had been the first to imitate Euphues,<sup>16</sup> should have copied phrases here and there from the newly popular poet whose name he ventured to filch?

There is further evidence, "if such were needed." Miss Byrne has observed<sup>17</sup> that the habitual use of the double instead of single "o" in certain words is a distinctive mark of Munday's spelling; that just at this time, during the last decade of the sixteenth century, he used it in approximately half the cases in which these words occur (among them are "woonted," "moouue" and "woonder"); that he, singularly enough, persisted in writing "freend" instead of "friend"; and that these peculiarities may decide questions of disputed authorship. Applying this test (and not counting "doo," "doost," "dooth," which occur in the translation of the Axiarchus and in Spenser, but were quite common at the time), we find what is certainly never found in Spenser, namely: "woont" (A<sub>2</sub> verso, line 1), "moouue" (lines 12 and 13, and B<sub>4</sub> verso, line 2), and "woonderfull" (B<sub>4</sub> recto, line 18). And while "yoong" (B<sub>4</sub> recto, line 21) does not occur in Miss Byrne's list, it exemplifies the same habit, and moreover it never occurs in Spenser. There is also "freends" at B<sub>3</sub> verso, line 5. At the same time "wont" is properly spelled at A verso, lines 8 and 13, A<sub>2</sub> recto, line 22, and A<sub>3</sub> recto, line 1, and "wonted" at A<sub>4</sub> recto, line 1. This is just what we should expect.

In brief, to meet the essential conditions of the problem, a "Spenser" must be produced whose prose style was Euphuistic, who was attracted by sophistical

<sup>13</sup> "Perfect in the Greek tongue" is the well-known phrase of Lodowick Bryskett's Discourse of Civill Life.

<sup>14</sup> See E. G. Harman, Edmund Spenser and the Impersonations of Francis Bacon (London, 1914). Particular reference is made to pp. 133-142, 170, 191, 223, 330-332, 389-390, 492-494, 499-501, 529-566. Carpenter (op. cit., p. 264) tersely comments, "A mad world, my masters!"

<sup>15</sup> M. St. Clare Byrne, in The Library (June, 1932), p. 32.

<sup>16</sup> In Zelauto, 1580. See Turner, op. cit., p. 29-30.

<sup>17</sup> "Anthony Munday's Spelling as a Literary Clue," The Library (1923). Accompanying this article is a commendation from no less an authority than A. W. Pollard.

paradoxes, who wrote "triumphs," who labored at translation without knowing Greek, and whose spelling was his own. He is not the Spenser whom we know; his name is Anthony Munday.<sup>18</sup>

BERNARD FREYD

<sup>18</sup> The following errata have been noted. P. vii, last line, "Records" should be "Record." P. 1, line 13, "etc," should be "&c." P. 2, line 6, "five" should be "eight", and line 8, put comma after "added." P. 3, line 9, "man wise (1553)" should be "wise man (1533)." P. 4, line 30, and P. 5, line 19, "Records" should be "Record." P. 10, line 12, put comma after "Oration." P. 11, line 17, "Woods" should be "Wood's"; line 24, put comma after "Archaeologia", line 28, put comma after "street", line 29, delete comma after "benefaction"; and line 32, "the" should be "an." P. 12, line 2, "Life 3" should be "Life, in." P. 13, line 12, "Phillippe" should be "Philippe." P. 16, line 17, "Bilbaldus" should be "Wilbaldus." P. 18, line 18, "& also" should be "and also." P. 27, line 28, "having" should be "haung." P. 28, line 25, "That man is" should be "Than man, is", line 29, "reach" should be "reache"; and line 30, "youthfull" should be "youthful." P. 63, line 4, "Cynosargus" should be "Cynosarges"; and line 5, "took" should be "tooke." P. 64, last line, "Cynosargus" should be "Cynosarges."

MR. FREYD's criticism is an attempt to show that Anthony Munday and not Spenser was the author of the translation of the Axiochus published in 1592. This hypothesis was one which I carefully considered when engaged upon the editorial work, and I came to the conclusion, in which the Spenser scholars who reviewed the evidence with me agreed, that the translation could not have been the work of Munday. In the interests of scholarship, I therefore welcome the opportunity to present the evidence.

My critic strangely misconceives the opening paragraphs of the Introduction in which I review chronologically all previous mention of the translation, either by scholars or in bibliographies.<sup>1</sup> As should be obvious to any casual reader, this is given merely by way of background and is not employed to support the thesis that Spenser was the author.

The only external evidence to which I gave weight is the attribution of the work to Spenser on the title-page and in the brief address "To the Reader." It must be recognized that this creates presumptive evidence in Spenser's favor. I acknowledged that Burbie was ignorant of Spenser's first name, but I showed why this might well have been. In this connection it may be interesting to observe incidentally, as Dr. Heffner discovered after the publication of my book, that even Camden, whom we have reason to believe was a personal friend of the poet, in his Remains, 1623 (also 1629), at the end of the section on "Poems," p. 289 (p. 285 in 1629), refers to the poet as Edward Spenser.

As external evidence in support of Munday's authorship, Mr. Freyd stresses the fact that Munday prided himself upon being the "servant" of the Earl of Oxford, which would account for the inclusion of the "sweet speech" in the same volume with the Axiochus, that he was not averse to pseudonymity, and that <sup>1</sup> The fact that Carpenter placed the Axiochus in the Apocrypha is of course readily to be understood, since he had never seen the work, and mistakenly thought that the 1607 translation, which does not suggest Spenser's style, might be the one in question.

Burbie printed certain of Munday's translations. As the "sweet speech" is not extant, and as we know nothing of its date or the occasion of its delivery, it is idle to conjecture as to its authorship. To be sure Munday employed the stereotyped epithet of "servant" in dedicating his Mirroure of Mutabilitie to Oxford, but he was only one of a group of satellites among men of letters who clustered around the Earl. Thus Spenser himself was at pains to address to the Earl one of the original series of dedicatory sonnets to the Faerie Queene, in which he acknowledges the love which Oxford bears to "th' Heliconian ymps" and professes his own love for the Earl with a warmth which differentiates this sonnet from all the others addressed to men save that to Lord Grey, but we do not know how much Spenser may actually have seen of Oxford during his first visit to England. We do not even know how long before 1600, when Jonson held him up to ridicule as Balladino, "pageant-poet to the city of Milan," Munday turned his attention to pageants. According to Withington (Eng. Pag. II, 26), there were no civic pageants in 1592 and 1593, and probably none in 1594.

There is no warrant for saying, on the basis of Sir John Oldcastle, that "Munday was not averse to pseudonymity in its boldest form." The edition of the play which bears Shakespeare's name on the title-page actually appeared in 1619, though dated 1600.<sup>2</sup> Where is the slightest evidence that Munday, one of the four authors, had any responsibility for this title-page?

The fact that Burbie published Munday's Gerileon in England in 1592 should not be overlooked, but in the light of the evidence as a whole cannot be given much weight.

The only internal evidence which Mr. Freyd offers in support of his thesis is the presence of a euphuistic element in the translation and certain double "o" spellings in words where the single "o" would be expected. The first is turned to Munday's account with the remark that "it need only be said that Spenser never attempted to imitate Euphues," and M. Legouis is quoted in a footnote to the effect that "He [Spenser] has none of Lyly's euphuism." The quotation as given is entirely misleading and places an eminent scholar in a ridiculous light. M. Legouis makes this observation in a passage where he is discussing the style of the Faerie Queene, not of the poetry as a whole; certainly so exact a student would be the first to recognize the use of alliteration, antitheses, balanced sentences, rhetorical questions, and paronomasia in The Shepheardes Calender (Cf. "Januarye," ll. 48-62) and of conventional conceits and artificial analogies in the Amoretti.

And now as to Munday's predilection for the double "o" in words where the single "o" would be expected, and for spelling friend "freend." As Miss Byrne points out, Munday preferred these more archaic spellings and they persist to some extent in his later works despite the tendency of compositors to normalize spelling. Miss Byrne gives the following list of these double "o" words found in John A Kent and Sir Thomas More: affoord, approoue, aboard, abooue, boorde, doone, vndoone, doost, dooth, foorth, looue, loouers, loouely, loouing, belooud, mooue, remoooue, prooue, reprooue, woord, woork, woorschip, woorth, woorthie, woorthly Of this list it is interesting to note that the following are to be found in Spenser afford, aproue, aboard, boorde, doone, vndooone, doost, dooth, foorth, looue, mooue, prooue In addition we find in Spenser many similar words employing the double "o" which Munday did not happen to use in the above plays.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. William J. Neidig, "The Shakespeare Quartos of 1619," MP, III (1910), 145-163.

As we should expect to find, this tendency to employ the double "o" occurs more frequently in Spenser's earlier poetry than in the later, but these spellings are conspicuous in one late work, Colin Clout's Come Home Again (1595). soong (l. 92), doone (l. 127), aboard (l. 224), doo (l. 257), foorth (l. 330), goolds (l. 339), moo'u'd (l. 649), prooued (l. 664), hooued (l. 666), and woond (in the sense of dwelt, l. 774). If we are to assign the Axiochus to Munday on the basis of a few double "o" spellings, we must assign Colin Clout to him as well. Indeed we shall also have to acknowledge his authorship of the original version of Sidney's Arcadia, and also of Sidney's contribution (Chapters 1-6) to Of the Trewnes of the Christian Religion, since these double "o" spellings occur with some frequency in the former, and are strewn through the pages of the latter. Of course the fallacy is obvious: one cannot reason that because Munday employed the double "o" spelling, a work in which such spellings occur is therefore to be assigned to him. Again it was especially unfortunate to cite the spelling of friend as "freend," since this spelling occurs so frequently in Spenser and is the preferred spelling in The Shepheardes Calendar (cf. May, 167; May, 305, and July, 194).

The internal evidence upon which we must necessarily rely is that of style. In my Introduction I quoted a few of the words and phrases peculiarly characteristic of Spenser's diction. Mr. Freyd attempts to sweep aside this evidence with the observation that "The parallel-passage argument is weak from overwork." This of course is just begging the question. One could argue with equal logic that Darwin failed to establish his thesis because he furnished too much evidence. Mr. Freyd finds an easy explanation by proposing that Munday "copied phrases here and there from the newly popular poet." But the evidence rests not merely on these characteristic words and phrases but as well upon the musical and flowing style of the whole translation, written by one who had a most sensitive ear. Again and again the prose assumes a poetical character.

As opposed to the conclusions of a newcomer in the field, it is significant to contrast those of Professor Osgood, who is as well, or better, qualified than any other living scholar to pass upon the question at issue:

As for the genuineness of the translation as a work of Spenser, there is no doubt in my mind whatever. Not only the striking Spenserian phrases which you point out, and which would be apparent to anyone much read in Spenser, but the presence of metrical lines of Spenserian verse embedded in the prose after Spenser's habit, are such as no one else would use, or could counterfeit, at least in Spenser's day. I think after my work in compiling the Concordance to Spenser my ear is fairly quick to detect the Spenserian cadence; in reading the Axiochus I hear it again and again. Short of Spenser's own affidavit, the evidence is as strong as it can be contemporaries when he characterized him as "destitute of originality or style" (D N B) Munday's translations are pure hack-work, his sentences are often clumsy, sometimes ambiguous, and his diction is singularly lacking in cadence. He has, moreover, certain mannerisms which are easily detected, such as bringing into unpleasant juxtaposition words with the same endings. Lest I seem to be begging the question, a few quotations are in order.

How anyone familiar with Munday's prose could assign this translation to him, is hard to imagine. Thomas Seccombe only echoed the verdict of Munday's

I have before me photostats, from the unique copy owned by Sir R. L. Harmsworth, of two essays translated by Munday from the French of Plessis de Mornay: The True knowledge of a man's owne selfe and Of the immortalitie of the soule,<sup>3</sup> along with A Dialogue of the providence of God, written in Xenophon, his first booke of the deedes and sayings of Socrates.<sup>4</sup> These are expository treatises and therefore comparable to the Axiomachus, and Munday's style may properly be tested by them. The following may serve as examples:

The fourth cōmaundement, consisteth in the obseruation of ceremonies and duties, thereto belonging, as also in their diligent regarding according to our entraunce into the knowledge of God, of which knowledge they are visible signes, exciting vs to obseruance of true religion (The True knowledge, p. 139)

Ye haue the very like combination betweene the powers of nature, and that the motions of the hart, doe iustly answer to the knowledge which a man hath of any thing but there is a difference in the complexions or temperatures of the hart, & the spirits, and the bloods present beeing, for, the hart beeing hotte and dry, is the sooner kindled, whereon wee see some more suddenly to bee enflamed with anger, then others are, & the moouings of the hart & the spirits, moueth the blood (not euermore) after one kinde, but diuersly, and according to the diuersitie of the affections. (Ibid, pp. 158-159)

That the soule is no way cōsisting or made of any part of the elements, is apparant and manifest by this reason. It is impossible, that nature being corruptible, should cōprehend and conceiue thinges vniuersall and incorruptible as to conceiue and apprehend God, with the vniuersality of thinges the numbers, the differences of thinges honest and dishonest yet naturally, and euen without teaching, men doe apprehend these things. It is then to bee rudded, that the seates of these apprehēsiōns, are not natures elementaries, but much more excellent thē corruptible things, & likewise that they are perpetual see heere what natural reasons are yeilded, for the immortalitie of the soule (Of the immortalitie of the soule, 195-197)

Thou hast in thee a little portion of thys earth, which thou seest to be so great, & a small quantitie of humour, which is of so large aboūdance in the world nowe, consideing eyther of these thinges to be so great, & yet thou hast of eyther some final portion, and altogether being so assembled [sic] in thy body, as thou couldest haue no vnderstāding at all, except they were in this sort ordered These thinges (I say) being so great, and in multitude infinite, howe doost thou imagine, but that they should be well ordained? (Dialogue, L 4 verso—l 5 recto.)

<sup>3</sup> Excerpted from Mornay's work on The Truth of the Christian Religion, which Munday states in the Epistle had recently come to hand and which he intended to translate in its entirety. He seems to have been ignorant of Sidney and Golding's translation, published in 1587.

<sup>4</sup> The inclusion of the Dialogue was seemingly an afterthought, since the pagination is indicated by signatures only.

Yes, hold and belecue it for most certaine that God sees, heares, regards, and hath care of thee, mee, & all thinges else whatsoeuer together. (Ibid , A 1 recto )

Wherever one dips into these translations he encounters the same bungling, jerky, and jangling prose. In many passages the style is not even decently pedestrian. Yet it is proposed that we assign the Axiochus to a hack who stumbled through a translation in this manner.

A few other points remain to be considered. My critic takes exception to the statement that "By most scholars it [the Axiochus] was attributed to Plato, although its authenticity was already being questioned." Since, for the first time, I have assembled the Renaissance versions and editions of the dialogue, no one else has been, or is, in a position to state what Renaissance scholars thought of the authorship. The facts are as follows: Agricola, Pirckheymer, Perionius, Dolet, Belprato, and Welsdalius attribute the dialogue to Plato: Ficino and Postel, to Xenocrates; and Mornay to "Plato, or some other Ancient Pagan Philosopher." It should be said that Belprato in his original manuscript assigned the work to Xenocrates on the title-page, presumably upon the authority of Ficino, but when he submitted his manuscript to Ludovico Domenichi for critical examination, that distinguished scholar changed the title to read "L'Assiocho . . . di Platone." In a letter to Belprato which serves as a foreword, Ludovico comments on this change as follows:

Ma ben vi voglio prepare, che non ui marauigliate, ch'io habbia mutato il titolo al Dialogo da voi tradotto col nome di Xenocrate perciocche anchor che sia openio ne d'alcuni, che non sia di Platone, ma di Xenocrate, & secondo certi altri d'altro authore non dimeno m'è paruto nõ errare seguendo il parer commune & quello dell' Agricola che lo tradusse in Latino.

Ludovico, writing in 1550, is thus authority for the statement that "the common belief" was that Plato was the author. Postel and Welsdalius are the other two editors who comment on the authorship. The title-page of Postel's version (1537-39) reads "AXIOCHVS DIALOGVE de Xenocrates Platonique . . ." and in the "Epistre a ma Damoiselle de Mesieres" is the following comment (a i recto) "Cest vn dialogue daulchuns attribue a Platon, mais quāt a la verite il est dun sien disciple nōme XENOCRATES." Welsdalius, in his Argumentum, remarks (3) "Νοθενόμενος) Suidas etiam hunc dialogum Aeschini Socratico ascriptum fuisse dicit."

As to Spensers knowledge of Greek. Despite the assertion of Bryskett that the poet was "perfect in the Greek tongue," there is division of opinion among scholars on this point, and this is not the place to go into the merits of so nice a question.

And now a word about the translations of the poetry. To be sure "they are not beyond the talents of lesser men than Spenser," but like the verses in The Theatre for Wordlings they illustrate the difficulty which the young poet experienced in throwing his accents on the important words. They scan as follows:

Ōf áll thát in thē eárrth áre órdáinéđ bý náttúre,
Thán mán, is nóť tő bée fōund á mōre wrétchēđ créátúre.

Hím loúed hġhest Íúpġtġr ánd Ąpóllō déare,
Yġt cóuld hġ nót réache tó hġs éldġst yġare.

Whġt thġnkġst thóu őf hġm thġt táught thġ chġlde tó crġe:
Whġn frġst thġ Súnne brġght dáy hġ séeth wġth tġndġr ġye.

A comparison with the "Epigrams" and "Sonets" will substantiate the correctness of my statement.

In commenting upon my concluding paragraph (p. 29) Mr. Freyd denies traces of Stoicism in the Axiochus. My position there was that the dialogue manifests an undoubted characteristic of the Stoic philosophers, "an attitude of heroism in confronting the issues of life and death." There is no doubt that this, of itself, is not Stoicism in its complete and technical sense, but no one can deny that it is a genuine Stoic principle or that the Axiochus does contain it. His statement that A. E. Taylor finds no element of Stoicism in the Axiochus is not borne out by the quotation from that authority, for Taylor merely declares the dialogue to be a polemic contrasting "the Platonic with the Epicurean answer to the question Why may I hope for?" Mr. Freyd here implies that an anti-Epicurean polemic cannot show traces of Stoicism and that there were no traces of Platonic tenets in Stoic doctrine. His citation of authority is as irrelevant to his argument as the argument itself is to my position. As a matter of fact Spenser was appreciably influenced by Stoic philosophy. No Spenser scholar will be inclined to quarrel with the following statement by Professor Merritt Y. Hughes in his paper on "Spenser's Debt to the Greek Romances" (MP xxiii, 73): "Spenser conceived temperance as the subordination of the passions to the mind, and was as much interested in the restraint of anger and grief as in that of the lust for pleasure. The conception was essentially stoic, and Upton's notes on the second book of the Faerie Queene leave no doubt that Cicero, Seneca, and Epictetus were Spenser's mentors." Likewise Professor Renwick (Edmund Spenser, p. 160) comments on the indebtedness of Book Six to Seneca, and is bold to remark that Cicero influenced Spenser more profoundly than did any other writer. That Spenser found the theme of the Axiochus congenial will hardly be questioned by those who know him well. The problems of mutability as opposed to stability and of the ultimate destiny of the human spirit are dominant in his latest works, the Cantos of Mutability and the last two hymns.

In conclusion, I regret that some errata escaped me. But on what authority does Mr. Freyd give Pirckheymer's first name as "Wilibaldus?" It appears as "Bilibaldus" on the title-page of his Axiochus and of all his works listed in the catalogue of the British Museum. Again, it is conjectural whether or not Spenser correctly transliterated "Cynosarges."

FREDERICK M. PADELFOED

University of Washington

5. ASTERY'S TRANSFORMATION IN MUIOPOTMOS

It may, I think, be postulated that the chief source of the transformation of Astery in Spenser's Muiopotmos<sup>1</sup> is to be found in the following passage in Lactantius's commentary on Statius:

<sup>1</sup> Stanzas 15, 16 and 17.

Venus and Cupid, having once alighted on a certain beautiful meadow, strove in playful contest to see who should pick most flowers. Cupid, though aided by his swift wings, which readily overcame the weight of his body, was nevertheless vanquished, for the nymph Peristera hastened to the assistance of Venus and gave the goddess the victory. She did so to her cost. Cupid, full of indignation, transformed the nymph into the bird called περιστέρα by the Greeks. But a notable honor softened the punishment inflicted on Peristera. Venus, in order to comfort the hapless and innocent nymph, took the dove under her special protection.<sup>2</sup>

In Muopotmos it is Venus that is enraged and that vents her anger on the nymph. In this difference we may perhaps see reflected Apuleius's famous story of Cupid and Psyche,<sup>3</sup> but if I am right in conjecturing that Venus stands for Queen Elizabeth and Astery for Penelope Devereux,<sup>4</sup> it may well be that the poet had special reasons for altering Lactantius's tale.

CHARLES W. LEMMI

Goucher College

<sup>2</sup> Lactantius Placidus, Commentarii in Statii Thebaida (Teubner: Leipzig, 1898), iv. 226: Venus et Cupido, cum quodam tempore voluptatis gratia in quosdam nitentes discendissent campos, lasciva contentione certare coeperunt, qui plus sibi gemmantes colligeret flores. Quorum Cupido, adiutus mobilitate pennarum, postquam naturam corporis volatu superavit, victus est numero. Peristera enim nympa subito accurrit et adiuvando Venerem superiorem efficit cum poena sua. Cupido siquidem indignatus mutavit puellam in avem quae a Graecis περιστέρα appellatur. Sed poenam honor minuit. Venus, namque consolaturam puellae et innocentis transfigurationem, columbam in tutela sua esse mandavit.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. I. E. Rathborne, "Another Interpretation of Muopotmos," PMLA, xlix, 1061.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Lemmi, "The Allegorical Meaning of Spenser's Muopotmos," in PMLA, xlv (1930), 732-748.

6. THE DATE OF SPENSER'S MUTABILITIE CANTOS

THE date of composition of Spenser's Mutabilite cantos has been the concern of several articles and a variety of evidence has been offered to prove that they were composed after the first three books of The Faerie Queene, if not after the second three also—or else was early as 1579-80.<sup>1</sup>

Except for Miss Albright, scholars in general believe that the Mutabilite cantos are a mature, and so a late, work of Spenser's, and that they rightly belong where tradition has placed them, immediately after Book vi. My paper, depending upon the same type of evidence as was used by Professor Padelford, will at least cast doubt upon some of the evidence presented in support of the argument for a late date of composition. I come to directly opposite conclusions.

As there seems to exist no definite external evidence for determining the date of the Mutabilite cantos, scholars depend for proof upon the cantos themselves.

<sup>1</sup> The evidence is summarized in A Spenser Handbook by H. S. V. Jones (1930), Chap. xx. The chief articles on the subject are as follows: "The Cantos of Mutabilite. Further Considerations Bearing on the Date" by Frederick M. Padelford, PMLA, xlv (1930), 704 ff.; "The Date of Spenser's Cantos of Mutability," by Douglas Bush, Ibid., pp. 954-957; "On the Dating of Spenser's 'Mutability' Cantos" by E. M. Albright, SP, xxvi (1929), 482 ff.

In a recent article<sup>2</sup> Professor Fletcher points out what appears to be a definite change in Spenser's style, as reflected in his use of words denoting and connoting color, light, and shade, between the first three and the second three books of The Faerie Queene. If Professor Fletcher's study is a dependable indication of Spenser's changing method as a writer, an examination of the color, light, and shade words in the Mutabilitie cantos might supply probable evidence as to whether these cantos were composed before or after Spenser's style changed, that is, before 1590 or between 1590 and 1596. If the Mutabilitie cantos were composed before 1590 the probabilities are that they were not part of the uncompleted Book VII, but were probably discarded from one of the earlier books.

For this study I have taken the same lists of words that were used by Professor Fletcher, but since the Mutabilitie cantos are two only, and each completed book contains twelve cantos, it is best, as more clearly showing the relationship existing between the Mutabilitie and the other books of The Faerie Queene, to make a percentile table. Therefore I have taken the total number of times the color, light, and shade words occur in each book and divided these totals by the number of stanzas in each book.<sup>3</sup> This gives us percentile figures which may be used for comparison with each other, and with the percentile findings for the Mutabilitie cantos.

The following is a color word frequency table for the Mutabilitie cantos. I leave out, for economy's sake, those words of Fletcher's list which are not found at all in the Mutabilitie cantos, and I shall repeat only the totals per book as given by Professor Fletcher.

Blood, bloody, gore, gory	2	ivory	2
gold, golden, gilt	5	lilly	1
silver	4	red	1
green	5	gray	2
black, cole black	4	yellow	1
purple empurpled	1	marble	1
hore, hoarie	3	browne	1
white	2	Total	35

The total number of stanzas, the total number of color words per book, and the percentage of color words to stanzas, are as follows:

	Stanzas	Color words	Percentages
Book I.	617	222	35.98
Book II	683	243	35.57
Book III	677	193	28.508
Book IV	599	121	20.20
Book V.	565	98	17.34
Book VI	554	86	15.52
Mutabilitie.	114	35	30.70

<sup>2</sup> James V. Fletcher, "Some Observations on the Changing Style of the Faerie Queene," SP, xxxi (1934), 152-159.

<sup>3</sup> I exclude the two stanzas of Mutabilitie canto VIII because this fraction of a canto is too small to work with satisfactorily.

Professor Fletcher has pointed out one of the facts presented in this table—that there is a decided falling off in Spenser's use of color words between the first three and the second three books of The Faerie Queene. If this is, as he believes, an indication of Spenser's changing style, then the figures for the Mutabilitie cantos need explanation, for the proportion of color words to stanzas in these cantos is much closer to the proportions of Books I, II, and III, than to those of Books, IV, V, and VI.

Similar conclusions must be drawn from an examination of Spenser's use of light and shade words. These words and the number of times each appears in the Mutabilitie cantos are as follows (again I exclude words in Fletcher's list which do not appear in Mutabilitie):

bright . . . . .	7	burn, burning. . . . .	3
light . . . . .	9	cristall . . . . .	1
dark, darksome . . . . .	3	flasht, flashing . . . . .	1
flame, flaming . . . . .	2	moon . . . . .	7
fire, fiery. . . . .	7	glas, glassy. . . . .	2
twinkling. . . . .	1	lightning, levin . . . . .	1
shady, shadow. . . . .	1	sun, sunny, sunshiny . . . . .	4
beames, beamy. . . . .	3	blaze, blazing . . . . .	1
stars, starry. . . . .	5	clouds, cloudy . . . . .	1
		sparkling . . . . .	1
		Total. . . . .	60

The total number of stanzas, the total number of words denoting and connoting light, shade, and darkness, and the percentages of their appearance in the various books of The Faerie Queene, are as follows:

	stanzas	light and shade words	Percentages
Book I. . . . .	617	312	50.56
Book II. . . . .	683	210	30.74
Book III. . . . .	677	213	31.46
Book IV. . . . .	599	111	18.53
Book V. . . . .	565	116	20.53
Book VI. . . . .	554	100	18.05
Mutabilitie. . . . .	114	60	52.63

This table shows that the proportion of light and shade words in the Mutabilitie cantos is decidedly nearer those of Books I, II, and III of The Faerie Queene than to the proportions of Books IV, V, and VI. Our evidence proves, therefore, that the style of the Mutabilitie cantos is more nearly like that of the first three books than of the last three books and so of about the same time as the earlier books.

Professor Padelford's study of Spenser's use of compound words, and the conclusions he draws from Floyd Stovall's article on Spenser's use of feminine rimes,<sup>4</sup> do not agree with these findings. If, however, my conclusions are wrong, Professor Padelford's must be wrong also, for exactly the same method, though a different set of words, is used in both; and if my conclusions seem to lead Professor Fletcher further than he might wish to go in his analysis of Spenser's style, nevertheless I have used exactly the same material in exactly the same way.

<sup>4</sup> Floyd Stovall, "Feminine Rimes in the Faerie Queene" JEGPH, xxvi (1927), 91-95. For Padelford's article see note 1 above.

From these various studies analyzing Spenser's style—Padelford's, Fletcher's, and the present article—it is safe to draw only one conclusion; that is, that the counting of words in a partial analysis of vocabulary is not satisfactory evidence for determining the dates of composition of portions of The Faerie Queene. As to Professor Fletcher's findings, my study may well indicate that even if there is a difference of style between the first three and the second three books of The Faerie Queene, it may have been deliberate on Spenser's part and not the result of a weary or flagging imagination.

J. M. PURCELL

Marquette University

7. UNA AND DUESSA

It has long been thought that Spenser got the suggestion for the name of his heroine Una in Ireland, where the name was a common one.<sup>1</sup> There is every reason for accepting this conjecture,<sup>2</sup> though it should be added that the poet, with his classical training and background, was doubtless confirmed in his decision to use the name by its Latin implications.

Less attention has been given to the source of Spenser's name for Una's foil and antagonist, Duessa, the first syllable of which also suggests a Latin origin, quite in keeping with the duplicity of the witch's character. But the ending -essa is not so readily accounted for. As a matter of fact, the name Duessa is even more incontrovertibly Irish than the name Una. The following occurrences of it are drawn from documents dealing with the period between 1000 A.D. and the time of Spenser.

(a) A.D. 1050. Dubheassa ingen Briain moritur. "Dubheassa, daughter of Brian, died." (Chronicon Scotorum, ed. Hennessy, p. 280.)

(b) A.D. 1078. Dubesa ingen Amhalgadh, comarba Patraic, ben righ Airther, do-eaibh. "Dubesa, daughter of Amhalgaidh successor of Patrick, wife of the king of the Airthir, died." (Annals of Ulster, ed. MacCarthy, II, 30.)

(c) Dubeasa ingen Augairi (ob. 1112?) hUi Lorcain. "Dubeasa daughter of Aughaire Ui Lorcain." (The Banshenchus, Revue Celtique, XLVIII (1931), 196.)

<sup>1</sup> See P. Woulfe, Sloinne Gaedheal is Gall [Irish Names and Surnames], (Dublin, 1922), II, 49.

<sup>2</sup> Miss Henley, Spenser in Ireland, (Cork, 1928), p. 127, after claiming an Irish origin for Spenser's Artagall, Ferraugh, Brianor, and Briana, is less positive about Una. "Dr. Grosart is convinced that Spenser got the name Una in Ireland. Perhaps he did. He may have heard during that first visit, of the Una who was queen of the fairies of Ormond, and the double meaning would have appealed to that love of covert allusion that characterized the Elizabethans." The "covert allusion" theory applies equally well in the case of Duessa. In legendary history, the best-known Una is the mother of the famous second-century king, Conn of the Hundred Battles. See Keating, History of Ireland, ed. Dinneen, II, 262; T. O'Donnchadha, Leabhar Cloinne Aodha Buidhe (Dublin, 1931), pp. 70, 203, Revue Celtique, XLVIII, 211.

(d) Dubesa ingen hUí Anluain, mathair Aeda (ob 1114) hUí Eochada rig Uladb. "Dubesa daughter of Uí Anluain, mother of Aed Uí Eochada, king of Ulster." (Ibid., 194)

(e) Dubeasa ingen hUí Brain mathair Eochada (ob 1133) hUí Nuallain rí Fotharta "Dubesa daughter of Uí Brain, mother of Eochad Uí Nuallain, king of Fotharta" (Ibid., 195)

(f) Dubeasa ingen Aeda hUí Conaing (Ibid., 199)

There can be no doubt that the name Dubés[s]a (Duibésa, Dubéasa) was originally a compound of Dub, "Black," and Ésa, itself a woman's name.<sup>3</sup> The pronunciation of the Middle-Irish form Dubhéasa would be well represented, to an Englishman of the sixteenth century hearing it, by the spelling Duessa. [For the loss of the b through aspiration, compare the corresponding development of other Irish compounds of Dubh, such as Douglas, Duffy, Doyle, MacDowell. More strictly parallel with Dubhéasa, where the aspirated b is intervocalic, are names like Dubhagáin, which becomes in English Dugan, Dubhdáin (Duane), and Dubhaltach (Dualtagh, Duald).]

For the modern reader, as for the contemporary of Spenser, it would be perfectly natural to make an erroneous partition Du-bhéasa, to accord with a noun current long before<sup>4</sup> and after Spenser's day:

doibhéas, "vice, bad manners" (O'Reilly's Irish-English Dictionary, with Supplement, 1864);<sup>5</sup>

do-bhéas, "a bad habit, an ill custom" (Dinneen, Irish-English Dictionary, 1927)

The plural of this noun would be identical in form with the proper name Dubhéasa, which would consequently (divided Du-bhéasa) have the connotation "wicked customs," or "evil usages," just as Una to one familiar with Latin would suggest "uniqueness" or "singularity." Some such significance would seem to have been in Spenser's mind when he described his "false Duessa" (the phrase occurs 22 times in The Faerie Queene) or when in connection with her he referred to "her malicious use" (iv, i, 31), "the wicked driftes of trayterous desynes" (v, ix, 42), her "mischievous arts" (i, ii, 34), "her wicked arts" and "her wicked will" (i, xii, 32), "her false sleights" (i, xii, arg.). With the Duessa "Whose secret filth good manners biddeth not be told" (i, viii, 46) compare the meaning "bad manners" assigned by O'Reilly (above) to doibheas.

<sup>3</sup> On the group of Irish legends in which Ésa figures, see Gwynn's notes on the Dindsenchas of Ráth Ésa (Metrical Dindsenchas, Part II, 89); also Thurneysen, Die irische Helden- und Königsage, pp. 617-619, 621, 629; Revue Celtique XLVIII, 170. In the Bunsenchus (Revue Celtique, XLVII, 294 f.) the lines on Ésa are translated (p. 320) as follows. "Ésa was her (Étan's) daughter—evil were her rites [better practices, customs]. Her name is given to a lofty spot, allied by her crimes to pollution . . . By her methods manners (bésa) were coarsened."

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Thurneysen, Handbuch des Alt-Irischen, I, 222; Pedersen, Vergl. Keltische Grammatik, I, 475; II, 9; Dottin, Manuel d'Irlandais Moyen, I, 57, 106.

<sup>5</sup> For Scottish Gaelic see MacBain, Etymological Gaelic Dictionary, s.v. doibheas. See further Windisch, Worterbuch, Irische Texte, I, s.v. dobus. For the opposite, sobés, "good custom, manners," cf. Revue Celtique XLV (1928), 88, §16.

It is quite reasonable to suppose that Spenser, knowing from his Irish tutor<sup>6</sup> the name he spells "Duessa,"<sup>7</sup> was struck by the single and dual (Latin) implications in the Irish names Una and Duessa.<sup>8</sup> That Una has continued to be a popular name in Ireland while Duessa has dropped out of existence, may be due in some degree to the influence of The Faerie Queene.

ROLAND M. SMITH

Wesleyan University

<sup>6</sup> On the possible identity of Spenser's Irish tutor, see Miss Henley, p. 103. In connection with the poet's possible familiarity with the poetry of his Irish contemporary Tadhg Dall O'Huiginn (p. 107), it is worth noting that Tadhg's poem to Brian O'Rourke refers to the Una who was mother of Conn (cf. note 2 above). Knott, The Bardic Poems of Tadhg Dall O'Huiginn, Irish Texts Soc. edition, II, 73.

<sup>7</sup> If Spenser knew, for instance, a tale concerning the "Dubheassa daughter of Brian" (cf. the first entry above), it might help also to explain his slightly disguised names Brianor and Briana.

<sup>8</sup> On Spenser's habit of cloaking characters from Irish folklore under the names of their classical counterparts, see my "Spenser's Irish River Stories," forthcoming in PMLA.

8. HENRY VI AND THE CONTENTION PLAYS

I HAVE no wish to plunge into the controversy as to the relation of 2 and 3 Henry VI to The First Part of the Contention and The True Tragedy, but there is one point in Mr. Greer's elaborate article in the PMLA for September, 1933 to which I should like to call attention, since it is open to a very different explanation from that offered.

In 2 Henry VI the last item of the articles of peace is read differently by Duke Humphrey (I, i, 50-52) and by the Cardinal (57-62). In The Contention, on the other hand, the words read by each agree exactly. (A somewhat parallel case is found in one of the questions read in the conjuring scene (I, iv, 37, 69), but it is more complicated since it is only in Henry VI that the reading is repeated.)

Mr. Greer assumes that the text free from inconsistency must be the original, and that it was a reviser who in Henry VI altered the wording in one instance and forgot to make the corresponding change in the other.

His assumption, however, appears to be a risky one. An author, repeating a passage, might not trouble to turn back to what he had already written and might unconsciously alter its form in some inessential manner. Messages and conversations are often not exactly repeated, and probably no greater care would be thought necessary in rendering a written document. But the significant point is that the passage is to be read, and would be actually read from a script on the stage. This script would not vary, and the words, therefore, would not vary on the stage. Neither would they vary in a report, so far as this was correct. The fact, therefore, that the inconsistency occurs in Henry VI and not in The Contention may be evidence that the former is the original and the latter a report.

That The Whole Contention was printed from manuscript, as Mr. Greer contends, seems on general grounds highly improbable, and though I do not know that any positive proof can be produced, the typographical evidence points to printed copy. It seems probable, however, that both parts were set up from the original editions rather than the reprints of 1600.

W. W. GREG

London

9. AN ELIZABETHAN TOURNAMENT

THE tournament in England had one final burst of glory before it fell into oblivion. Elizabeth recalled this magnificent chivalric pastime in which her father had taken such great delight, but the Renaissance transformed it into a vehicle for spectacular display and expanded the masque-like elements. In the reign of James the tournament gradually degenerated into the masque. Accounts of these Elizabethan tournaments furnish quite a body of literature and are worth recording in order to follow this development of the masque.

Kenilworth Illustrated, edited by William Hamper and published in 1821, contains a fragment of a masque, a group of speeches declared at a tilting. The editor in his preface has made several gross errors in attempting to fix the authorship and date of this piece.<sup>1</sup> It was preserved, along with other masques, in a manuscript volume of collections gathered together by Henry Ferrers, a descendant of the Elizabethan writer George Ferrers. Mr. Hamper believed the latter to have been the author of the masques, but unfortunately for this theory George Ferrers died in 1579 and the work, as may readily be seen from internal evidence, was written after 1590. The only Ferrers who could have composed the piece is Henry Ferrers, Elizabethan authority on heraldic matters.

The masque which is labelled Part 1 in Kenilworth Illustrated consists of the challenge to a tournament, an explanation of a challenger's device, and the speech of the Owld Knight. The challenge follows:

To all the Noble Chosen and Hopefull Gentlemen, in this most notable assemble. The strange forsaken Knightes send greeting, &—

Whereas the question hath ben long and often, and yett resteth doubtfull and undiscussed, whether that wick Menne call love be good or evill; and that it is manifest that there be manie woorthye Knightes, in this presence, to whom Love is most delightfull, and his lawes no paynes; I bring this scedule, to signifie to all the Gentlemen here, that love Armes, and list to defend this Cause, that there be three armed and unknown Knightes here at hande, of one minde and divers fortune, that, with stroke of Arme and dynt of sworde, be come to maintaine against all that will defende the Contrary, that Love is worse than hate, his Subiectes worse than slaves, and his Rewarde worse than naught; And that there is a Ladie that scorns Love and his power, of more vertue and greater bewtie than all the Amorous Dames that be at this day in the worlde.

A group of challengers, then, fight on the side of Despair against the knights of Hope and Fortune. The Lady who scorns Love and his power is, as is generally the case in these Elizabethan tournaments, Elizabeth herself.

The second item is labelled "Sir Henry Lee's Challenge before the Shampanie." Sir Henry Lee was the instigator of the annual Queen's-Day tournaments that were held on November 17th, the day of Elizabeth's accession to the throne, and retired in 1590 on account of old age in favor of the Earl of Cumberland.<sup>2</sup> As will be seen, it is extremely doubtful that the old champion himself ran at this time; however, the speech may have been delivered by him to introduce the green knight, who seems to have been Lee's protégé.

<sup>1</sup> This masque is reprinted in Nichols' Progresses of Queen Elizabeth, III, 195-213.

There is a strange Knight that warres against hope and fortune, who, overturned with griefe, hath cast himself into the Crewe of Care and to maintain his passion, as an enemy to all that live in delight, determineth to be here forthwith; and hath sent mee to tell the Procurer of this Asseble, that under the hue of a grene [suit] is covered that unfortunate Carcas that scornes at others joyes and weepes at all delightes. And knowing that there be manie Servants to Hope and Frenedes to Fortune (whom he treadeth under foote), meaneth to maintaine, as farr as his posting horse will give him leave, that the servants of Dispaire have as much Vertue, and carry as much Goodwill to the guide of his Troupe, as those that serve the other turning and trustless Goddes.

And so this green knight took the side of the despairing gentlemen.

The third section is called "The Supplication of the Owld Knight." This is truly Sir Henry Lee's speech and must have been delivered after the tilting.

In humble wise, sheweth unto your honorable lordships, and the woorthie Gentelmen of this Asseble, and serveres of this English Holiday, or rather Englandes Happie Daye; a poore faithfull feeble Knight, yet once (thowe unwoorthie) your fellowe in Armes, and first Celebrator, in this kinde, of this sacred memorie of that blessed reigne, which shall leave to this land an eternall monument of Godes favoure, and great glorie. That whereas Age, the Foe of Love and Armes, hath disabled me (as you see) to performe with my handes the office of my harte, and hath turned me from a staffe to run with, to a staffe to rest on, making me a glasse for Joylite to looke in, since all strength and bewtie upon Earth, and whatsoever we most lyke and strive for, muste alter and end, eyther soddenlie, by chaunce, or certainly, by small contynuaunce. It may please you of your honourable favoures and curtesies, in regard of my past services, and present humble sute, to accept to your fellow-shippe, in his father's rome, this onely sonne of mine, young, and honest, and toward, though I say it; thus shall you incurrage a young gentlemanne in vertuous exercises, that is labouring the waies of Hope, comfort an aged Knight, worn and weried with thoughtes and travales, drawing to his ende, and binde him with his force, and me with my prayre, to do you ever the service wee are able and further, least I forfait my tenure (which I would not for my lyfe) of this daies honoring her excellent Majestie, being not able in person to paye with the launce this rent of my service, I must beseeche somme noble, or woorthie Gentleman, that is most lyke to have next access to her sacred personne, lowlie to present this little from me, as the yearly syne of his faith: which no cause shall make light, and no tyme can make less. So the high and mercifull preserver of all things best, preserve hir that thus preserves us all, and send you, most noble Gentelmen, and all that be woorth anie thing, best bodies to serve her, best hartes to love her, and best happes to honor her, and her most gracious Majestie the longest life, the most felicitie, the heavens did ever give, or the earth did ever take. Amen. Amen.

It is obvious from this passage that the tilting was one of the annual Queen's-Day tournaments, but not the 1590 one celebrated by Peele and Segar (as Mr. Hamper believed), because it is clearly stated that Lee was no longer champion and because the Queen, contrary to her wont, was not present in person. The language is reminiscent of the lyric sung at the 1590 affair and of the extant Lee letters, especially the 1586 one quoted in part below. It is possible, then, for this speech to have been composed by the "Owld Knight" himself. The expression "English Holiday, or rather Englandes Happie Daye" reminds one of George Peele's poem on the 1595 tilting entitled Eliza's Holiday; consequently, to proceed on this slight basis would mean that the masque was composed after that year. Another possibility is to discover those tournaments which Elizabeth was unable to attend. Record could be found of only one, the 1591 celebration, at which time she was visiting Christopher Hatton in his last illness at Ely Palace. She went there on the eleventh of November and he died on the nineteenth.

<sup>2</sup> For a biography of Sir Henry Lee, see an article by the author "The Queen's Champion," in Western Reserve University Bulletin, vol. xxxiv, N.S.

The "onely sonne" was apparently a nephew, for Lee's own children died in youth. Mention of this relative may be found in a letter of Lee's to Walsingham, dated February, 1586, where the knight wrote of his ill-health and increasing old age, and of this "nevew of myne who I have brought uppe and muche love, and is better able to serve her [Elizabeth] than to my self."<sup>3</sup> It is quite probable that this is the same young man mentioned in the masque where Lee is seeking for his protégé membership in the Society of Knights Tilters.

These speeches then are certainly the remnants of an Elizabethan masque spoken at a late Queen's-Day Tournament, after 1590. The whole can be easily reconstructed: the challengers upholding the cause of Despair tilt against the defendants representing Hope and Fortune; a Green Knight enters on the side of the challengers who was probably encouraged by Lee and indeed might have been his nephew; the "Ladie who scorns Love and his power" is the queen, after the running Lee, upholding the tradition of the 1590 tournament, appeared in the character of the old knight turned hermit and made his supplication to the fellowship of gentlemen-tilters.

SARA RUTH WATSON

Western Reserve University

<sup>3</sup> Brit. Mus. MS Harley, 286, fols. 100 and 101.

10. THE IDEA OF TASTE IN THE EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

IN an extremely interesting article in PMLA for June, 1934, Mr. E. N. Hooker has bravely plunged into the problem of Taste in the eighteenth century, with particular reference to the decades from 1750 to 1770.<sup>1</sup> No doubt this subject greatly needs discussion, and also no doubt Mr. Hooker brings to it an ample background and a distinct critical perspicuity. But the present writer does not believe that sixteen pages can ever do full justice to twenty years' discussion of taste in the late eighteenth century, having had bitter relevant experience in writing The Genesis of Shakespeare Idolatry a few years ago.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Hooker also has an article in PQ for April, 1934, on "The Reviewers and the New Criticism, 1754-70," but it is merely a cursory summary of a few reviews of some prominent critical texts produced in this period. The ideas of "Gothic" and "Genius," for example, were aptly handled some time ago by Longueil [MLN, xxxviii (1923), 453-460] and by Kaufman [Essay in Memory of Barre Wendell (Harvard, 1926)], but Mr. Hooker mentions neither of these men. The reviews of Johnson's Preface were already developed by Raysor [MLN, xlii (1927), 1-9], but Mr. Hooker fails to give acknowledgment—he mentions Raysor casually in another connection. He would also do well to orient himself on the position of imagination in neo-classic theory by reading Mr. F. B. Kaye on Babbitt in PQ (April, 1928), p. 178, and Mr. R. S. Crane in PQ (April, 1932), p. 189.

The problem involves many more texts and points of view than Mr. Hooker was able to introduce in his brief but illuminating study. Consider, for example, the following figures. Professor Draper, according to Mr. F. T. Wood,<sup>2</sup> listed, in his Eighteenth Century English Aesthetics: a Bibliography (1931), 110 general books on æsthetics, 103 treatises on pictorial art, 65 on gardening, and 244 literary discourses—all of these for the period of 1752–1800—a total of 522 texts, many of which would necessarily fall within Mr. Hooker's chosen years, 1750–70. Yet nowhere in Mr. Hooker's article is Mr. Draper mentioned. To continue with figures, the reviewers of Mr. Draper's work of course added items to the tremendous list. Mr. R. S. Crane suggested four more pieces<sup>3</sup> for the period, 1750–70; Mr. R. D. Havens sixteen<sup>4</sup> for the same period, and Mr. W. D. Templeman seventeen,<sup>5</sup> together with the interesting addendum that previous reviewers, working separately, had produced only four duplicates. Against this amazing mass of texts—Mr. Crane himself asked for additional newspaper and periodical material, which Mr. Draper had had to neglect—Mr. Hooker offers something like ten items (Whitehead, Hogarth, Kames, Burke,<sup>6</sup> Gerard, Melmoth, Blair, Hume, Reynolds, and Armstrong), one literary periodical (the Connoisseur), and a few reviews of a few of the above ten texts (from the more significant general periodicals). It is an inadequate statement of the case for Taste from 1750–70.<sup>7</sup>

And Mr. Hooker's analysis of ideas within the few critical pieces he has used is something of "an over-simplification of experience,"<sup>8</sup> to use his own words on the essays themselves. He comes out of his discussion with three main ideas: (1) there were "old assumptions of literary criticism"<sup>9</sup> (i.e., those of "critics of the old type, who based their rules upon Aristotle and the classics");<sup>10</sup> (2) these "assumptions" were being undermined in the period studied (1750–70) by "psychological investigation"<sup>11</sup> (i.e., by Kames, Burke, Gerard), and also by (3) "The emphasis on taste, as meaning individual sensibility"<sup>12</sup> (i.e., "Taste, in fact, is more than once described as a kind of intuition").<sup>13</sup> There are a few other minor ideas dropped in a little confusingly, such as. "... there is a norm for the sense and mental structure of man";<sup>14</sup> "There were other essayists who accepted public approval as being identical or consonant with the standard of

<sup>2</sup> Englische Studien, LXVI (1931), 279–81.

<sup>3</sup> MP, xxix (1931), 251–252.

<sup>4</sup> MLN, XLVII (1932), 118–120.

<sup>5</sup> MP, xxx (Feb., 1933), 309–316.

<sup>6</sup> The date of Burke's essay on Taste Mr. Hooker confuses twice as of 1770 and 1756 (p. 581 n). It was really prefixed to the edition of 1759.

<sup>7</sup> Why, also, should Mr. Hooker ignore such a point of view as Mr. Havens' in "Changing Taste in the Eighteenth Century," PMLA, XLIV (June, 1929), 501–536? There is, further, such semi-popular material as E. E. Kellett's The Whirligig of Taste (Hogarth, 1929) and Fashion in Literature: A Study in Changing Taste (Routledge, 1931). And what of Mr. F. P. Chambers' The History of Taste (Columbia Univ., 1932)?

<sup>8</sup> P. 590.

<sup>9</sup> P. 577.

<sup>10</sup> P. 579.

<sup>11</sup> P. 579.

<sup>12</sup> P. 586.

<sup>13</sup> P. 586.

<sup>14</sup> P. 580.

taste",<sup>15</sup> and "an artist is permitted to depart from the rules governing one sort of beauty in order to attain beauty of another sort."<sup>16</sup> The ultimate conclusion Mr. Hooker draws from all this is, in his own words again, "hopeless confusion",<sup>17</sup> "chaos in aesthetic criticism";<sup>18</sup> "confusion among the essayists on taste."<sup>19</sup>

The present writer wrote a chapter originally for his The Genesis of Shakespeare Idolatry entitled "Shakespeare and the General Idea of Taste [in the Late Eighteenth Century]." He too fell promptly and readily into Mr. Hooker's "over-simplification" of the subject on the basis of the Intuitionists and the Psychologizers. Into the former category he put, rather glibly, Shaftesbury, Welsted, Hutcheson, Akenside as background material and Mrs. Montagu, Sherlock, and possibly Richard Hole as direct critics of Shakespeare; into the latter group he dropped Addison, Hume, Burke, Kames, Blair, Jackson, Beattie, W. Richardson, and Alison. But all this splendid simplicity fell perfectly flat when Mr. R. S. Crane wrote the present writer a letter, Dec. 10, 1928, demolishing the chapter and setting up seven different pairs of conflicting ideas on Taste in the eighteenth century: "... a good dissertation could be written on this subject," Mr. Crane concluded (he said he had been working on the subject the previous summer). Hence the chapter on "Shakespeare and Taste" was never written, though some of the material was necessarily incorporated in other chapters in the book. It is now a curious fact that Mr. Hooker's concluding summarizing antitheses<sup>20</sup> distinctly echo a few of Mr. Crane's. Mr. Hooker is on the right track.

The present writer wishes to present some periodical items in a feeble response to Mr. Crane's request in his review of Mr. Draper's bibliography. This material is offered merely chronologically, with here and there a comment or excerpt inserted from "the chapter never published." An attempt will be made to avoid duplicating both Mr. Draper and his followers.

[Not all these pieces, of course, discuss taste in formal theoretical style.]

Spectator (1712-14). Nos. 29, 447, 502.

Englishman (1713-4). No. 7.

T. Reresby's Miscellany (1721), p. 371.

"Fine Taste."

New Memoirs of Literature, III (1726), 330.

London Magazine, I (1732), 224. "Reasons of the Present Want of Taste."

London Magazine, III (1734), 180. "Essay on Taste." "Tis hard to determine whether there is an eternal Difference in the Essence of Souls."

Gentleman's Magazine, VI (1736), 260. "Of Modern Taste and Novelty." (Not in general index.)

London Magazine, VII (1738), 69. "Of Taste."

British Magazine, II (1747), 240.

Universal Magazine, x (1752), 33. "Prologue to Taste." Garrick's Prologue to Foote's play.

Covent Garden Journal (1752). Nos. 10, 18.

The World (1753-6). Nos. 30, 67. Mr. Havens added to Mr. Draper Nos. 6, 15, 26, 32, 76, 118, and 119, but Mr. Draper already had 15, 118, 119.

Connoisseur (1754-56). No. 120 (Mr. Hooker uses this).

Universal Spectator, II (1756), 274-276; III (1756), 46.

Universal Magazine, XX (1757), 309-310.

Critical Review, VI (1758), 389: "Taste is a delicate, acute perception, in the powers of fancy, as well as in faculties of the understanding."

<sup>15</sup> P. 580.

<sup>18</sup> P. 589.

<sup>16</sup> P. 587.

<sup>19</sup> P. 585.

<sup>17</sup> P. 591.

<sup>20</sup> P. 591.

Critical Review, vii (1759), 440 (Mr. Hooker uses this item, a review of Gerard).

London Magazine, xxxi (1762), 387. "A Search after Taste."

Monthly Review, xxviii (1763), 308 (not in general index).

Dublin Magazine, iii (1764) 221. Shenstone on Taste.

Gentleman's Magazine, xxxvi (1766), 405. "What we call taste, is a kind of extempore judgement, it is a settled habit of distinguishing, without staying to attend to rules, or ratiocination, and arises from long use and experience." This item is in the general index (to 1787), along with eleven other essays under "Taste."

Royal Magazine, xvi (1767), 313 "Discussion of the Question, whether there is an Universal Standard of Taste in the Soul of Man?"

Scots Magazine, xxix (1767), 17. (From "Sketch of an Essay on Style".)

Universal Magazine, li (1772), 179-180. "An Essay on Taste." "It [taste] may be defined to be 'the power of receiving pleasure from the beauties of nature and art' . . . To form good taste, are requisite a sound judgment, a thorough acquaintance with the liberal arts, and let me add a good heart" (p. 180).

Universal Magazine, lxx (1776), 188-189. "On the Progress of Taste."

Monthly Review, lvii (1777), 204-205. "Taste and Nature"—a review. This item is in the general index, together with thirty-one other entries under "Taste."

Hibernian Magazine, viii (1778), 20. "On the Fluctuation of Taste."

London Magazine, xlvii (1778), 360: "Taste consists in discerning the different beauties interspersed in the works of nature and art, so far as this knowledge is accompanied with sentiment."

Mirror (1779-80). No. 47. "Delicacy and Taste."

Universal Magazine, lxxvii (1780), 193 ("Taste and Genius": "a certain elegance of soul"—from Donaldson's Elements of Beauty); lxxxi (1782), 180; lxxxi (1783), 120 ("Birth of Taste").

London Magazine, xlix (1780), 526. Review.

Critical Review, lvi (1783), 45. Review of Blair.

Monthly Review, lxxviii (1783), 13. A review (not in general index).

Critical Review, lvii (1784), 101. Review of W. Richardson.

European Magazine, vi (1784), 186. "On True and False Taste."

Wit's Magazine (1784-85), p. 176. "Search after True Taste."

Lady's Magazine, xv (1784), 640. "On False Taste."

Universal Magazine, lxxvi (1785), 290 ("On a General Taste for the Fine Arts"); lxxvii (1785), 19 (Excerpt from Reid's Essay on the Intellectual Powers of Man).

The Observer (1785-90). No. 68. "On natural and acquired taste." Mr. Templeman had the title of this right but mis-numbered it 84.

Gentleman's Magazine, lvii, Pt. 2 (1787), 1163. And see second general index (1787-1818) for others.

Analytical Review, iv (1789), 216. A review. Monthly Review, iii (1790), 361-73. Review of Alison. The review is continued in iv (1791), 8-19.

Universal Magazine, lxxxviii (1791), 263. "On the Literary Taste of the Present Day." Hibernian Magazine, 1791, Pt. 1, p. 439. "Literary Taste of the Present Day."

Analytical Review, lxx (1791), 528. "Taste and Morality."

Looker-On (1792). No. 74. Experience and training play a large part in every person's sense of taste; comparison with music and painting. No. 77: Taste is a combination or "imagination," "memory," "reason," "understanding," and "judgment."

The Bee, xi (1792), 113. "Essay on the Influence of Taste."

Literary Magazine and British Review, xii (1794) 205. "Essay on Taste."

Anthologica Hibernica, iii (1794), 16. "On Taste."

Scots Magazine, lvi (1794), 322. "On Taste and Elegance."

Monthly Mirror, I (1795-96), 265. "General Reflections on What is Called Taste."

Analytical Review, XXI (1795), 106 (a review of a French book); XXVI (1797), 589 (review of The Philanthrope).

Monthly Magazine, III (1797), 279.

Monthly Mirror, IV (1797), 47. "Modern Writers and Modern Taste."

Analytical Review, XXVIII (1798), 19. Review of Goldsmith's essays (nos. 13 and 14 of vol. II are on Taste).

Universal Magazine, CII (1798), 117 (Ethics and Taste), CIII (1798), 92 ("Corruption of Taste"—by H. Walpole), CV (1799), 7, 238

Scots Magazine, LX (1798), 683 "Effect of Taste on the Heart."

The above list, not duplicated in either Draper or his followers, does not by any means exhaust the total potentiality of periodical material even in the late eighteenth century (see Crane and Kaye's Census), from which it is largely drawn and with which The Genesis of Shakespeare Idolatry properly dealt.<sup>21</sup> For the specific years 1750-70, it adds some fifteen to twenty-five items to Mr. Hooker's dozen, and in the course of the whole cursory list above there are ideas suggested which do not fit nicely into the scheme of Mr. Hooker's article: note especially the accent on taste and morality, natural and acquired taste, taste and elegance, taste and sentiment, taste and novelty, taste and the soul, taste and delicacy, etc. One can only glean from this brief, suggestive list of periodical references a hint of what the full scope of the problem of taste will involve, for all of Mr. Draper's books and the reviewers' additions should be taken into account, to say nothing of newspaper items which have so far, apparently, been presented by nobody. The present writer counted twenty-seven newspapers beginning in the years 1700-20, in the British Museum, and then left the newspaper room in despair. The task of surveying all the newspapers for the late eighteenth century would be simply enormous. Yet that is what Mr. Crane has asked for, and no doubt something should be done with it.

To return to Mr. Hooker, one can only grant him considerable admiration for his bravery in attempting such a tremendous subject, even for the limited period of 1750-70. He has made a fair beginning, which is more than the rest of us have dared.

R. W. BABCOCK

Wayne University, Detroit, Mich.

<sup>21</sup> One might even add to it pieces on Beauty, such as the following: New Memoirs of Literature, I (1725), 51; British Magazine, II (1747), 49; Rambler (1750-52), No. 92; Adventurer (1753-54), No. 82; Critical Rev., III (1757), 366; European Magazine, VI (1784), 187; Universal Mag., LXXXIX (1786), 4 and LXXXIV (1789), 322, 364; Hibernian Mag., 1790, Pt. 2, p. 104 and 1799, Pt. 1, p. 255; Lady's Magazine, XXII (1791), 205; Monthly Rev., XXV (1798), 584 (rev. of Kant on the Beautiful)—not in index; Universal Mag., CIII (1798), 197 and CV (1799), 10; Monthly Mirror, VII (1799), 148. And see indexes to the Gentleman's Mag. (1731-87 and 1787-1818) and the Monthly Rev. (vol. II). There is also a second series of the Monthly, beginning in 1790.

11. THE RAMBLER, No. 191

IN the closing number of The Rambler, Dr. Samuel Johnson states:

The essays professedly serious, if I have been able to execute my own intentions, will be found exactly conformable to the precepts of Christianity, without any accomodation to the licentiousness and levity of the present age.

We would suggest that No. 191 is worthy of note as a possible exception to this dictum, and the only exception. Not only does it fail to point the usual moral, but a charge of immoral suggestion might even be defended without the necessity of reading between the lines. Its tone is quite different, nor is the authorship of this particular issue disavowed by Johnson in his closing number.

Of special interest, perhaps as partly explanatory, is the following extract from the letter which makes up the issue, from a sixteen-year-old correspondent, "Bellarial":

. . . Mr. Shuffle, a grave gentleman, who has daughters older than myself, plays with me so negligently, that I am sometimes inclined to believe he loses his money by design; and yet he is so fond of play, that he says he will one day take me to his house in the country, that we may try by ourselves who can conquer. I have not yet promised him, but when the town grows a little empty, I shall think upon it, for I want some trinkets like Letitia's, to my watch.

The date of The Rambler No. 191 is January 14, 1752. The Memoirs of Mrs. Letitia Pilkington had appeared in 1748, the third volume being published in 1754. A third edition of the first two volumes appeared in 1751. "The town rang with her name."<sup>1</sup>

The only reference to "trinkets" which I recall in the Memoirs of this intimate of Dean Swift occurs in her relation of one of the questionable visits to the "Deanery House":<sup>2</sup>

When we came into the parlour, the Dean kindly saluted me, and, without allowing me time to sit down, bade me come and see his study; Mr. Pilkington was for following us, but the Dean told him merrily: "He did not desire his company"; and so he ventured to trust me with him into the library. "Well," says he, "I have brought you here to show you all the money I got when I was in the Ministry, but do not steal any of it." "I will not indeed, Sir," says I; so he opened a cabinet, and showed me a whole parcel of empty drawers. "Bless me," says he, "the money is flown!" He then opened his bureau, wherein he had a great number of curious trinkets of various kinds, some of which he told me: "Were presented to him by the Earl and Countess of Oxford; some by Lady Masham, and some by Lady Betty Germain"; at last, coming to a drawer filled with medals, he bade me choose two for myself, but he could not help smiling when I began to poise them in my hands, choosing them by weight rather than antiquity, of which indeed I was not then a judge. The Dean amused me in this manner till we were summoned to dinner.

Presuming on the popularity of the Memoirs, Johnson may rightly have assumed a ready recognition of this reference to Letitia and her "trinkets" on the part of the reading public, and intended further to call attention to the relations of Letitia Pilkington with Dean Swift, whom Boswell tells us Johnson usually "treated with little respect as an author," and attacked "on all occasions."

<sup>1</sup> Memoirs of Mrs. Letitia Pilkington (N.Y.: Dodd, Mead & Company, 1928), p. 19.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., pp. 50-51.

The Rambler had been appearing regularly for more than two years prior to this issue, and in two months was to cease publication, with the death of Mrs. Johnson. It is possible that Johnson foresaw the end at this time, and judging reader interest by the popularity of the Pilkington memoirs had temporarily lowered his standards in a bid for increased circulation.

MALLIE J. MURPHY

Washington, D. C.

12. JOHNSON ON THE SANCTITY OF AN AUTHOR'S TEXT

EVERY student interested in Johnson's attitude toward the responsibilities of an editor is probably familiar with the following passages which touch upon the subject. In the Preface to his Edition of Shakespeare he wrote (Paragraph 138): " . . . the history of our language, and the true force of our words, can only be preserved, by keeping the text of authors free from adulteration."

The text of Shakespeare, however, provides problems somewhat different from those presented by texts which have been prepared for the press by their authors. Such a different case occurred with Thomson's Liberty, and Johnson further defined his attitude toward the writer's property when he wrote in the Life of Thomson (Paragraph 26):

The poem of Liberty does not now appear in its original state, but when the author's works were collected after his death was shortened by Sir George Lyttelton, with a liberty which, as it has a manifest tendency to lessen the confidence of society, and to confound the characters of authors by making one man write by the judgement of another, cannot be justified by any supposed propriety of the alteration or kindness of the friend.—I wish to see it exhibited as its author left it.

But for a clear statement of precept followed by a concrete example we are indebted to Edmond Malone in the following report of a conversation with Johnson, an item of Johnsoniana hitherto unpublished.<sup>1</sup>

March 15, 1782. In a conversation with Dr Johnson this day, he mentioned that Pope owned to a Mr. Brindley<sup>2</sup> at one time that he was the author of the Translation of Ambubaiarum Collegia<sup>3</sup> &c tho' he afterwards thought proper to disown it.*

<sup>1</sup> Bodley MS Malone 30 folio 64v and 65 r contained in the second of two paper-backed notebooks labelled "Pope"

<sup>2</sup> Probably James Brindley, who had a bookshop in New Bond Street from 1726 until his death in 1758. Curll is quoted as saying that he was among the sellers of Sober Advice. (Elwin, vi, 437; the initial "F" is erroneously given.)

<sup>3</sup> These are the first two words of Horace's Second Satire, Book I, imitated by Pope as Sober Advice from Horace to the Young Gentlemen of the Town. This was included in Dodsley's 1738 edition of Pope's works and, as Elwin has remarked, "certainly did not appear there without the connivance of the poet." It is interesting in this connection to notice that among Malone's papers (Bodley MS Malone 30, folio 70) is a sheet in some other hand than Malone's containing the dates of Pope's writings, which had evidently been submitted to Dr Johnson, perhaps to assist in the preparation of the Life of Pope. It concludes with this paragraph: "Sober Advice from Horace not being in Dr Warburton's Edition is sent for Dr Johnson's perusal. If he desires to see the pieces by Lord Hervey & Lady MSW

I mentioned to him a scheme I had for a new ed<sup>n</sup> of Pope's Works—He said he thought whatever Warburton had done ought to be retained. Add as much as you will to his notes—but suppress nothing. He supposed that the new arrangement that W. had made of P's works was concerted between them before the death of Pope—& that therefore I had no right to alter it—So also of the Letters (w<sup>ch</sup> I thought might be better arranged in the order of time<sup>4</sup>)—"P choose to class them as written to particular persons—The most you have a right to do is by a table to direct how they may be most conveniently read.—An author's disposition of his own works is sacred, & an ed<sup>r</sup> has no right to vary it—For the same reason he said, he s<sup>d</sup> not insert the Satire of Horace nor the paraphrase on the 1st Psalm—tho' undoubtedly Pope's—

He once he said had thought of publishing a new edit<sup>n</sup> of Hooker's Eccl. Polity—to which book it was an obj<sup>n</sup> that there was not a sufficient number of breaks or pauses in it.—But if he had executed his scheme, he said he sh<sup>d</sup> have thought it incumbent upon him to distinguish the beginning of all Hooker's Paragraphs by a certain mark, & his own by another—lest perhaps he sh<sup>d</sup> break sentences which the author perhaps would have thought more properly conjoined.

* Mem. a line of it in the first ed<sup>n</sup> of the Dunciad—Show'd her fore buttocks &c.<sup>5</sup>

Doubtless few conjectures would be less fruitful than to attempt to estimate the extent of Johnson's influence on subsequent conceptions of the sanctity of an author's text and the humble responsibilities of an editor. But Johnson could hardly have chosen a better pupil to transmit his principle to the world than Edmond Malone.

Oxford University

JAMES M' OSBORN

---

Montague after the publication of the 1st Satire of 2 book of Horace they are in my possession & shall be ready for Dr Johnson whenever they are wanted."

<sup>4</sup> Malone later stated this principle of epistolary editing in the Foreword to his collection of Dryden's letters. (Prose Works of John Dryden, 1800, Vol. I, Part ii, page 4.

<sup>5</sup> This is a misquotation of line 141 of the 1728 "Owl" Dunciad where it is part of the attack on Eliza Haywood. In the Sober Advice from Horace line 34 is parallel, which carries the footnote "A Verse taken from Mr Pope."

13. MARIANELA Y DE L'INTELLIGENCE DE TAINÉ

CLASIFICÁNDOSE a Galdós generalmente en la escuela naturalista y sabiendo el valor que concedían los escritores de esta escuela al documento humano y la observación, se puede pensar fácilmente, al leer en Marianela la manera de reaccionar de Pablo—ciego de nacimiento, al que se le devuelve el sentido la de vista extirpándole las cataratas—ante la realidad, que nos encontramos con uno de tantos ejemplos de observación de la vida real como nos ofrecen los novelistas de los últimos treinta años del interesante siglo XIX. Es posible que sea así; pero, por todas las confrontaciones que voy a citar inmediatamente, me parece mucho más probable que la fuente de Galdós no sea en este caso la realidad, sino un tratado de Psicología.

Comienza diciendo Pablo, que no conoce "el mundo más que por el pensamiento, el tacto y el oído";<sup>1</sup> luego se habla de las posibilidades de la operación y, como es natural, al lado de voces de uso común hay otras de un vocabulario más estrictamente científico: cornea, cristalino, hialoides, humor vitreo, estado pigmentario, calóptica. Se lleva a cabo la intervención quirúrgica con resultado positivo y en seguida se nos presenta la manera de reaccionar de Pablo al ver por primera vez, quien es observado con viva curiosidad por su doctor, Teodoro Gólfín, "porque era aquél el segundo caso de curación de ceguera congénita que había presenciado"<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Marianela (Madrid. 1902), p. 15.

Pablo al poder ver, lo primero que sintió fué, que

las imágenes entraban, digámoslo así, en su cerebro violenta y atropelladamente con una especie de brusca embestida, de tal modo que él creía chocar contra los objetos; las montañas lejanas se le figuraban hallarse al alcance de su mano, y veía los objetos y personas que le rodeaban cual si rápidamente cayeran sobre sus ojos<sup>3</sup>. . . Principia a hacerse cargo de los colores. . . Aun no posee bien la adaptación a las distancias.<sup>4</sup> . . . Trajeron un espejo y Pablo se miró en él. Este soy yo . . . -dijo con loca admiración. Trabajo me cuesta el creerlo . . . ¿Y como estoy dentro de esta agua dura y quieta? ¡Qué cosa tan admirable es el vidrio! Parece mentira que los hombres hayan hecho esta atmósfera de piedra.<sup>5</sup>

Taine nos cuenta que, "Dans un cas rapporté par M. Nunnely, "le jeune patient disait que les objets touchaient ses yeux, et il marchait avec précaution, tenant les mains élevées devant ses yeux, pour empêcher ces objets de les toucher et de les blesser."<sup>6</sup> Al ciego de Cheselden quand avec les yeux il eut connu le visage de ses parents, on lui montra le portrait de son père en miniature sur la montre de sa mère, on lui dit ce que c'était, et il le reconnut comme ressemblant. Mais il s'étonna fort qu'un grand visage pût être représenté dans un si petit espace; auparavant, disait-il, cela lui aurait paru aussi impossible que de mettre un boisseau dans un setier<sup>7</sup>

Respecto a las distancias dice:

Il leur faut du temps pour accorder les diverses sensations visuelles que le même objet leur fournit selon ses diverses distances, et pour les raccorder toutes ensemble avec les musculaires et tactiles que l'objet leur a déjà fournies<sup>8</sup>

Sobre los colores, al citar el caso de la operada por Waldrop: "Cependant elle apprenait peu à peu le nom de couleurs, et les distinguait vite."<sup>9</sup>

No creo aventurado afirmar que la relación de los pasajes citados de Taine con los de Galdós es clara y nos permiten ver su procedimiento de trabajo: elaboración del documento científico buscado en el libro, no sólo para hacerlo entrar más naturalmente en la narración, sino para acomodarlo a su nuevo papel que ya no es científico, es poético. Los dos últimos ejemplos—distancias, colores—quedan reducidos a una referencia brevísima, que al mostrarnos el lento progreso de la acomodación del ojo a su función da una sensación de completa realidad a la convalecencia de Pablo.

En cambio los dos primeros ejemplos los transforma Galdós convenientemente, aprovechando el sentido dramático que contiene el primero—el tocar y el herir

<sup>2</sup> Ibid., p. 229.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid., p. 228.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., p. 231.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., p. 234.

<sup>6</sup> H. Taine, De L'Intelligence (Paris, 1923), II, 156.

<sup>7</sup> Ibid. p. 157.

<sup>8</sup> Ibid. p. 158.

<sup>9</sup> Ibid. p. 159.

son en manos del autor de Marianela, "una entrada violenta y atropellada en el cerebro"; "una brusca embestida"; "un rapido caer"; y los objetos se han desdoblados en montañas, objetos y personas; haciendo que sea la reacción de Pablo al abrir por segunda vez los ojos; pues, claro la primera nos muestra sólo el terror de Pablo ante la luz. La mutación del segundo pasaje es más completa, porque el retrato del padre se cambia en espejo en el cual el mismo Pablo se contempla y se adivina fácilmente que la intención de Galdós ha sido lograr un valor lírico.

Por esto, aunque Taine dice: "D'ordinaire, leur cristallin, quoique opaque, laisse déjà passer un peu de lumière",<sup>10</sup> Galdós escribe: "Pero pienso otra cosa. (Es el doctor que habla). La fisura y la catarata permiten comúnmente que entre un poco de claridad, y nuestro ciego no percibe claridad alguna,"<sup>11</sup> porque quiere que Pablo desconozca totalmente lo que es la luz hasta el momento de la operación. Y donde podemos seguir todo el proceso de elaboración que sufren los materiales empleados por Galdós es al comparar la cita que hace Taine de un caso contado por Franz, On the eye: "Gaspard Hauser donne les détails suivants sur ce qu'il éprouva lorsque, pour la première fois, il fut tiré de la prison obscure où il avait passé seul tout sa vie . . .",<sup>12</sup> con lo que dice el padre de Pablo refiriéndose a su hijo: "Pero lo más raro es que arrastrado de su imaginación potente, la cual es como un Hércules atado con cadenas dentro de un calabozo y que forcejea por romper hierros y muros . . ."<sup>13</sup>

Este Hércules con cadenas y forcejeando por romper hierros y muros lo debemos a la asociación, para un español tan natural, de la prisión obscura con el recuerdo de Segismundo, reforzando así el elemento dramático que se encuentra ya en la metáfora de Franz.

JOAQUÍN CASALDUERO

Smith College

<sup>10</sup> Ibid. p. 155.

<sup>12</sup> Taine, O.c., p. 158.

<sup>11</sup> Marianela, p. 140.

<sup>13</sup> Marianela, p. 133.

The Modern Language Association of America

ORGANIZED 1883
INCORPORATED 1900

Officers for the Year 1935

President: COLBERT SEARLES, University of Minnesota,
Minneapolis, Minn.

Vice-President: CARLETON BROWN, New York University,
New York, N.Y.

ROBERT HERNDON FIFE, Columbia University, New York, N.Y.

Executive Council

For the term ending Dec. 31, 1935

JOSEPH QUINCY ADAMS, Foger Shakespeare Library, Washington, D.C.

W. W. LAWRENCE, Columbia University, New York, N.Y.

FRED N. ROBINSON, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

For the term ending Dec. 31, 1936

ALBERT FEUILLERAT, Yale University, New Haven, Conn.

VIRGINIA C. GILDERSLEEVE, Barnard College, Columbia University,
New York, N.Y.

J. S. P. TATLOCK, University of California, Berkeley, Calif.

For the term ending Dec. 31, 1937

H. CARRINGTON LANCASTER, The Johns Hopkins University,
Baltimore, Md.

WILLIAM A. NITZE, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

JOHN A. WALZ, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

For the term ending Dec. 31, 1938

LEONARD BLOOMFIELD, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

HARDIN CRAIG, Stanford University, Calif.

ARCHER TAYLOR, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

Executive Officers

Secretary: PERCY W. LONG    Treasurer: LYMAN R. BRADLEY
New York University, New York, N.Y.

Trustees of Invested Funds

J. P. WICKERSHAM CRAWFORD, University of Pennsylvania

GEORGE HENRY NETTLETON, Yale University

LEROY ELWOOD KIMBALL, New York University, Managing Trustee

The next annual meeting of the Modern Language Association will be held in Cincinnati, Ohio, on the invitation of the University of Cincinnati, December 30, 1935-January 1, 1936.

VOLUME L OF PMLA IS DEDICATED TO PROFESSOR CARLETON BROWN, SECRETARY OF THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA, 1920-1934,
AND FIRST VICE PRESIDENT 1935, ON THE OC-CASION OF HIS TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY AS PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH
(BY VOTE OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL)

Resolution unanimously adopted by the Modern Language Association of America at its fifty-first annual meeting, Swarthmore College, Pennsylvania, on December 28, 1934:

THE Modern Language Association of America wishes to express its recognition of the distinguished work of its Secretary, Professor Carleton Brown, who retires after fifteen years of arduous and devoted service. Professor Brown's contribution to the development of our Association and to the promotion of its welfare may be partly appraised by a review of its expansion during his long secretaryship from 1920 to 1934. In 1920 the membership was 1507; it is now over 3700. In 1920 the publications of the M.L.A. printed 483 pages; they now cover over 1500 pages, printed in more compact form. In 1920 the total invested funds amounted to less than $10,000; they now exceed $80,000. The Monograph Series, the Revolving Fund Series, and the Rotograph Service were established through the efforts of our Secretary. The Discussion Group system was inaugurated and developed with striking increase in productivity. Large projects of research were initiated, as the Middle English Dictionary and the New Shakespeare Variorum Series. A Research Fund has been established. The Eastern and Western Divisions have been united into one truly national organization, which is administered by an Executive Council of which the Secretary is the Appointee.

To Professor Brown's guidance and leadership, to his industry and faithfulness, to his painstaking administration of every detail, the Association owes more than to any one else its immense increase in resources, service, and prestige. Our secretary has as well gladdened the heart of many a member by the cordiality of his manner in personal conference and professional correspondence. His loyal and unselfish services will be remembered with the grateful esteem which they so abundantly deserve.

ERNEST BERNBAUM,
ARTHUR BURKHARD, Chairman,
J. D. FITZ-GERALD,
Committee on Resolutions.

CARLETON BROWN

THE Modern Language Association of America, acting through its Executive Council, dedicates this the fiftieth volume of its Publications to Carleton Brown, in recognition of his services to the Association, his eminence as a scholar, and his worth as a man. Carleton Brown was born in Oberlin, Ohio, on July 15, 1869. He did his undergraduate work at Carleton College, in Northfield, Minnesota, where he was awarded the A.B. degree in 1888. Having decided to become a minister of the gospel, he entered the Andover Theological Seminary in 1890 and took there the three-year course of study. In 1894 he was ordained a Congregational minister, and until 1900 served as pastor in Minnesota and Montana. He gradually became aware, however, that scholarship was his true calling, and in 1900 gave up his pastorate and entered Harvard University as a graduate student in English.

Carleton Brown had hardly begun his graduate studies when he linked his fortunes with ours. His name appears as a member of the Modern Language Association in the Proceedings for 1901, and in 1903 he contributed to the Publications a paper on Cynewulf and Alcuin which he had read at our Baltimore meeting of 1902. To be more precise (and this début calls for precision), he began reading the paper at 10:10 A.M., Wednesday, December 31, in McCoy Hall. Unluckily the all too scant records of the day do not tell us how long it took him to finish the reading, but we learn that his paper was discussed by J. M. Garnett and J. W. Bright, and we gather that the new star had indeed swum into their ken. At this time Carleton Brown was still a graduate student, but by 1903 he had his Ph.D. and a Harvard instructorship, and two years later he went to Bryn Mawr as Associate in English. Thereafter his promotion was rapid: he became Associate Professor in 1907 and Professor in 1910. This is not the place to give a survey of his activities at Bryn Mawr. It will be enough to say that largely through his work and that of his students this newly founded woman's college came to be better known than most universities as a center for medieval research. In 1917 Carleton Brown left Bryn Mawr for the University of Minnesota, but returned in 1921. He entered in 1927 upon his present duties as Professor of English in New York University.

From the beginning Carleton Brown showed himself firm in the faith and fellowship upon which our Association rests. He came to our annual meetings, he took an active part in our proceedings, and before many years he won general recognition as a loyal member and a leader. His move to Minnesota in 1917 took him into the old Central Division of the Association, and brought to his attention the unhappy consequences of our separation into eastern and western branches. We have it on good authority that the Modern Language Club of the University of Minnesota, when in 1920 it urged, among other reforms, "that the Association be no longer split into Eastern and Central Divisions but meet as a whole," followed the promptings of Carleton Brown. The five proposals of the Club<sup>1</sup> were voted down at the time, but since then they have nearly all been put into effect. The year 1920 stands out in our annals, however, for another reason: on March 31 of that year, at our Columbus meeting, Carleton Brown was elected Secretary of the Association. This election marks a turning-point in our history. Under our first two secretaries, Elliott and Bright, we learned to walk, in the leading-strings of Johns Hopkins; under their successors, Grandgent and Howard, we advanced to maturity, in the shadow of Harvard; when Carleton Brown took the helm, we became aware of our years and struck out for ourselves. With the new Secretary the national period of our Association had begun.

In his recent "Survey of the First Half-Century"<sup>2</sup> Carleton Brown has himself given us an admirable account of all three periods of our history. With characteristic modesty, however, he passes over in silence his own leadership as Secretary of the Association, a leadership so wise and so fruitful that we must always remain deep in his debt. At the Swarthmore meeting of 1934, when Carleton Brown retired as Secretary to become Vice President of our Association, a resolution was adopted which sets forth his services in words that we should seek in vain to better. Let us conclude, then, with a prophecy. In our history, alongside the name of Marshall Elliott, our founder, will stand the name of Carleton Brown, our upbuilder.

EDWARD C. ARMSTRONG,
KEMP MALONE, Chairman,
EDUARD PROKOSCH,
Committee.

<sup>1</sup> Published in our Proceedings for 1919, pp. viii-ix.

<sup>2</sup> PMLA, XLVIII, 1409-22.

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF CARLETON BROWN'S WRITINGS

BOOKS

- 1910 A Study of the Miracle of Our Lady told by Chaucer's Prioress. Chaucer Society Publications, 2d Series, 45. Pp. x+141. London.
- 1913 Venus and Adonis. The Rape of Lucrece, and other Poems. The Tudor Shakespeare. Pp. xxvi+200. New York. Macmillan. Poems by Sir John Salusbury and Robert Chester. Bryn Mawr College Monographs, XIV. Pp. lxxiv+86. Bryn Mawr, Pa.—1914 Idem. Early English Text Society, Extra Series, No. cxiii. Pp. lxxiv+86. London.
- 1916 A Register of Middle English Religious and Didactic Verse, vol. i. The Bibliographical Society. Pp. xv+528. Oxford.—1920 Idem, vol. ii. Pp. xx+458. Oxford.
- 1919 Selections from Old and Middle English. Pp. 18. New York: The Century Company.
- 1920 The Stonyhurst Pageants (edition). Hesperia, Ergänzungsreihe vii. Pp. xxx+302. Baltimore and Göttingen.
- 1924 Religious Lyrics of the XIVth Century. Pp. xxiv+358. Oxford.
- 1932 English Lyrics of the XIIIth Century. Pp. xlii+312. Oxford. Foreword to Three Chaucer Studies by R. Krauss, H. Braddy, and C. R. Kase. Pp. vii+182, 101, 89. New York: Oxford University Press.
- 1935 Chaucer: The Pardoner's Tale. Pp. xl+63 Oxford.
Religious Lyrics of the XVth Century (in preparation).

EDITOR

- 1920–1932 PMLA, Volumes xxxv–xlvi.

(Anonymous assistance to contributors, gratefully acknowledged in letters, and too considerable to be left unrecorded. The Secretary's Reports, 1920–1934, are listed in the forthcoming Index.)

ARTICLES AND REVIEWS

- 1903 Cynewulf and Alcuin. PMLA, xviii, 308–334.
- 1904 The Author of the Pearl, Considered in the Light of his Theological Opinions. PMLA, xix, 115–153, 215.
Notes and Introduction to "The Long-Hidden Friend." JAFL, xvii, 89–100, 144–152.
(review) C. Abbetmeyer's Old English Poetical Motives derived from the doctrine of sin. MLN, xix, 221–231.

- 1906 Chaucer's Prioresses Tale and its Analogues. PMLA, xxi, 486-518.
Chaucer's litel clergeon. MP, iii, 467-491.
- 1907 The Autobiographical Element in the Cynewulfian Rune Passages. ESt, xxxviii, 196-233.
- 1908 The Etymology of bicched bones. MLN, xxiii, 126.
Additional Note on bicched bones. MLN, xxiii, 159-160.
- 1909 Irish-Latin Influence in Cynewulfian Texts. ESt, xl, 1-29.
The "Lost Leaf" of Piers the Plowman. The (N. Y.) Nation, xciv, 298-299.
- 1910 The Vernon Disputisoun bytwene a cristenemon and a jew. MLN, xxv, 141-144.
- 1911 Shul and Shal in the Chaucer Manuscripts. PMLA, xxvi, 6-30.
The Prologue of Chaucer's Lyf of Seint Cecile. MP, ix, 1-16.
The Cursor Mundi and the "Southern Passion." MLN, xxvi, 15-18.
Another Contemporary Allusion in Chaucer's Troilus. MLN, xxvi, 208-211.
- 1912 (reviews) A. J. Barnouw's Schriftuurlijke poezie der Angelsaksen; G. Binz's Untersuchungen zum altenglischen sogenannten Crist; K. Jansen's Die Cynewulfforschung von ihren Anfängen bis zur Gegenwart. ESt, xlv, 90-101.
The "Pride of Life" and the "Twelve Abuses." Archiv (Herrig's), cxxviii, 72-78.
Lydgate's Verses on Queen Margaret's Entry into London. MLR, vii, 225-234.
The Fifteen Conditions of a Good Horse. MLN, xxvii, 125.
Shakespeare and the Horse. The Library, iii (3d series), 152-180.
- 1913 Caiphaz as a Palm-Sunday Prophet. Anniversary Papers by Colleagues and Pupils of George Lyman Kittredge. Pp. 105-117. Boston and London: Ginn and Company.
Lydgate and the Legend of Good Women. ESt, xlvii, 59-62.
(review) F. A. Patterson's The Middle English Penitential Lyric. MLR, viii, 215-218.
Manuscripts of William Lichfield's Complaint of God. ESt, xlvii, 317.
- 1914 A Textual Correction. MLN, xxix, 60-61.
(review) J. M. Booker's Middle English Bibliography. MLN, xxix, 153-156.
Chaucer's Serpent-Pit. MLN, xxix, 198-199.

- 1915 A Passage from Sir Isumbras. ESt, XLVIII, 329.
 (review) Blanche C. Williams' "Gnomic Poetry in Anglo-Saxon."
The (N. Y.) Nation, c (June 24), 716-717.
 A Homiletic Debate between Heart and Eye. MLN, xxx, 197-198.
 Chaucer and the Hours of the Blessed Virgin. MLN, xxx, 231-232.
- 1916 The Towneley Play of the Doctors and the Speculum Christiani.
MLN, xxxi, 223-226.
- 1917 (review) J. E. Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400. MLN, xxxii, 162-166.
 (review) C. H. Turner, Early Worcester MSS., fragments of four books and a charter of the eighth century, belonging to Worcester Cathedral. The (N. Y.) Nation, cv, 263-264.
- 1918 Dialogue between a Clerk and a Husbandman. MLN, xxxiii, 415-417.
- 1919 (review) R. M. Garrett, The Pearl: an Interpretation. MLN, xxxiv, 42-45.
 (review) Death and Liffe, an Alliterative Poem, ed. by J. H. Hanford and J. M. Steadman. MLN, xxxiv, 63-64.
Beowulf, vv. 1080-1106. MLN, xxxiv, 181-183.
- 1920 Mulier est hominis confusio. MLN, xxxv, 479-482.
- 1921 The Stonyhurst Pageants. MLR, xvi, 167-169.
- 1923 William Herebert and Chaucer's Prioresses Tale. MLN, xxxviii, 92-94.
 (review) H. G. Leach's Angevin Britain and Scandinavia. The Literary Review, iv, b.
- 1925 An Holy Medytacion—by Lydgate? MLN, xl, 282-285.
 Studies in the First Folio. Christian Science Monitor (June 20), p. 3.
- 1926 A Thirteenth Century MS. at Maidstone. MLR, xxi, 1-12.
 The Maidstone Text of the Proverbs of Alfred. MLR, xxi, 249-260.
- 1928 Texts and the Man. MHRA Bulletin ii, 97-111.
 A Thirteenth-Century Manuscript from Llanthony Priory. Speculum, iii, 587-595.

- 1929 Somer Soneday. Studies in English Philology in Honor of Frederick Klaeber. Pp. 362-374.
- 1931 An Early Mention of a St. Nicholas Play in England. SP, xxviii, 594-601.
- 1933 A Survey of the First Half-Century of the MLA. PMLA, xlviii, 1409-22.
The Evolution of the Canterbury "Marriage Group." PMLA, xlviii, 1041-59.
- 1934 The Squire and the Number of the Canterbury Pilgrims. MLN, xlix, 216-222.
Sermons and Miracle Plays. MLN, xlix, 394-396.
- 1935 Chaucer's "Wreched Engendring." PMLA, l, 997-1011.
K. M.

PMLA

PUBLICATIONS OF
THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA
Issued Quarterly

---

VOLUME L

DECEMBER, 1935

NUMBER 4

---

LVII

HEOROT

IT IS increasingly the tendency of Beowulf students to stress the importance of the historical passages of the poem. Since Grundtvig established the date of Hygelac's last raid, one is inclined to expect corroboration of other parts of the narrative. But the extent to which one may reasonably accept the poet's statements is a matter for dispute. When he says that Beowulf was present at the last raid of Hygelac, there is no reason for doubt. Not so when he says that the hero swam off with thirty suits of armor. When the swimming match with Breca is mentioned, one may reasonably suppose that the hero distinguished himself in a swimming contest in his youth. But when he swims for days and fights off all manner of uncouth beasts, there seems to be sufficient grounds for skepticism. Or when Beowulf, filled with years dies fighting the dragon, we may feel sure that he died a violent death, without accepting the existence of dragons in the sixth century. Thus in general, we may limit confidence to simple facts simply asserted.

In no place does this principle require to be applied with greater circumspection than in the effort to localize the action of the poem and to identify the spot upon which Heorot stood. It may be well to summarize the material offered by the poem itself; that is, to consider the testimony, topographical, personal, and historical, which is contained in Beowulf and which may assist us in the attempt to find the ancient terrain.* But we must first recall, and constantly recall, the fact that all that we have is a single manuscript of about the year 1000, of a poem written perhaps two or three centuries before that time, dealing with events a quarter of a millenium earlier still. Additions, contaminations, misunderstandings, and scribal alterations may have occurred in the intervening centuries and they may have impaired the value of the poem as an historical document.

* I wish gratefully to acknowledge aid generously given by my friend, the late Professor Aage Brunsendorf of the University of Copenhagen.

The circumstances attending the building or reconstruction of the hall are so familiar that they need no rehearsal. No indication is given of its actual location, outside the reference to the people who held it, who were Spear Danes ruled by members of the Scylding dynasty. One of these kings, the builder of the hall, according to Beowulf, gives it a name, Heort, Hiort, or Heorot. Very little is told about the land which these people inhabited. It is not said whether the capital city was on an island or not. We are not informed as to the size of the town that was about the castle, except for an occasional reference to the bower and other outbuildings.

One very important note is to be found in the text, referring to pagan worship and to some sort of structure in the vicinity for such rites. This has been turned to Chistian uses by someone at a later time, perhaps. It occurs in lines 175 and following:

Hwilum hie geheton æt hærgratfum wigweorþunga, wordum bædon, þæt him gastbona geoce gefremede wiþ þeodþreaum. Swylc wæs þeaw hyra, hæðþenra hyht; etc.

For the rest of the settlement, all is silence. It must have been something of a town, being, as it was, the royal seat of the Scyldings; but this is an inference, not a stated fact in the text. The remark of Beowulf on landing, which ends: "þenden þær wunað/on heahstede husa selest"<sup>1</sup> may mean that Heorot was on a hill. It may equally be interpreted as a figure of speech.

The news of the inroads of Grendel reaches the ears of Beowulf, and he sets out to the court of Hrothgar. But the departure, the journey, and the landing are shrouded in a fog of hazy speech that not only makes the geographical identity of their destination a matter of question but has given modern scholars cause to write reams about the nationality of the Geats. The journey is safely accomplished and the warriors disembark. They are met by a mounted sentry, who challenges them and then points out the hall:<sup>2</sup>

Guman onettan,
sigon ætsomne, oþ þæt hy [s]æl timbred geatolic ond foldfah ongyton mihton;
. . . . .

<sup>1</sup> Ll. 284-285. [Ed. used, Fr. Klaeber (D. C. Heath & Co., 1922).]

<sup>2</sup> Ll. 306-308, 312-314.

Him þa hildedeor [h]of modigra torht getæhte, þæt hie him to mihton gegnum gangan; etc.

This seems to indicate that the distance from the ship to the hall was not very great. The warden of the coast rides with them a little way until the hall may be seen in the distance and then lets them follow the path. If the march were long, it seems reasonable to suppose that there would be a definite reference to a somewhat more involved journey. Then comes the "Stræt wæs stanfah" line,<sup>3</sup> whatever "stanfah" means, and the warriors have arrived.

The morning after the fight, the Danes mount and seek out the nicker's mere where Grendel crawled off to die. On their return the poet extends himself with a description of the racing and leaping of the horsemen and the tales of the scop who sought to magnify the deeds of the hero by comparison with those of others. "Ða wæs morgenleoht/scofen and scyended."<sup>4</sup> Now this may be taken in two ways: (1) that the trip to the mere took all morning to accomplish in going and returning, or (2) that it was a day of rejoicing for the Danes and was celebrated by games and a general rejoicing before the drinking bout and gift-giving in the hall. We are not, in the opinion of the present writer, to assume that the poet's intention was to picture the dying Grendel dragging himself off the distance of a couple of hours ride, his shoulder torn out, bleeding to death. At any rate, the distance to the pool is only hinted at, though it was not likely far away.

After the fight, and the further depredations of Grendel's Dam, we do get a definite statement on the subject from the lips of Hrothgar: "Nis þæt feor heonon/milgemeanres, þæt se mere standeð";<sup>5</sup> Following the description of the mere, the warriors mount again and ride off, over the murky moor, the steep stonefells, and narrow tracks, in close by-paths, many an unknown way by beetling cliffs and many a nickers' lair.<sup>6</sup> Evidently a plain contradiction of Hrothgar's remark.

Of the return from the mere, naught of consequence is said. No further bit of evidence may be adduced from the description of the departure of Beowulf from the hall of Hrothgar. No mention is made of the "stanfah stræt"; in fact, the poet says:<sup>7</sup>

Him Beowulf þanan, guðrinc goldwlanc græsmoldan træd
 since hremig;

which looks as though the poet had forgotten about the cobbled street

<sup>3</sup> L. 320.

<sup>4</sup> Ll. 917-918.

<sup>5</sup> Ll. 1361-1362.

<sup>6</sup> Ll. 1408-1415.

<sup>7</sup> Ll. 1880-1882.

or was having his hero go home cross-lots. Such, then, are the efforts of the composer to surround his scene with landmarks that identify the spot. If he had deliberately sought to deny all aid, he could not have been much more successful. He is not even consistent, and plainly shows that he was creating a landscape from his own imagination and from the store of poetic commonplaces that formed his heritage. Far from picturing a typical Danish landscape, he provides his audience with a combination of topographical characteristics that cannot be duplicated anywhere in that flat little land. His ignorance of Danish affairs is further demonstrated by the fact that he fails to mention a single place-name of undoubted Danish origin, excepting, of course, Heort.

All that we are entitled to assume about the location of the hall from the testimony of this poem is readily summed up. Heort is in Denmark, near the sea, but not directly upon the coast, possibly on a hill-top, some little distance from a haunted mere. A heathen fane of some sort is in the immediate vicinity.

But there is other information to be drawn from English sources. Who were these kings who held the hall? Have we any further information about them? Heorot was the seat and high hall of the Scyldings, as we are definitely told in the early lines of Beowulf. It is likewise mentioned in Widsith,<sup>8</sup> with reference to two of the persons appearing in the longer poem; namely, Hrothgar and Hrothulf. These persons are found in the Scandinavian monuments with the names Hroarr and Hrolf (or Roe and Rolf in the Latin chronicles) and are connected with the great royal hall and capital, Leire. Thus (unless one wishes to postulate the existence of two halls) it seems justifiable to equate, geographically, Heorot and Leire.

But here is an unusual and rather amazing fact about the place-names. The English poems invariably refer to the hall of the Scyldings by the name Heorot. Never in these poems is the word Leire, or any similar appellation, employed. On the other hand, the Northern monuments with great consistency refuse to acknowledge the existence of any such name as Hart Hall, using instead the name of the town, Leire. This fact encourages speculation as to why the palace name should be preserved in England and no mention made of the settlement, while in Scandinavia exactly the opposite literary convention should be in force. It is very difficult to speak with any certainty about the reasons for such a condition, but one can assume that both names were at one time existent and hope to find justification for such a theory. If we could find a Heorot in the vicinity of Leire, we might justly assume that our search for the treasure-seat of the Schyldings had come to an end and leave the question of the curious preferences of the two literatures for later reflection.

<sup>8</sup> LL. 45 ff.

The village of Leire exists to the present day. It is a not unattractive hamlet, a few miles from the cathedral city of Roskilde and surrounded by cultivated land, in part the elaborate estate belonging to the family of Holstein-Ledreborg. On every side, but unevenly distributed, are grave-mounds of nearly all shapes and sizes. There is thus an abundance of evidence pointing to a protracted habitation of this immediate district in ancient times. A body of local tradition and a few place-names of the "Kongsgaard" type give support to this belief. It has been generally accepted from Sven Aageson to the present as the locality at which the court of Hrolf Kraki was established and by generations of Beowulf scholars as the scene of the visit of that hero to the Danish court.

In the opinion of the present writer this view is utterly untenable. The Leire of Hrolf Kraki, and therefore the hall Heorot, was located on a hillside miles away from the present village of Leire, on a spot now doing service as a cornfield, part of a farm in Vixø parish: To demonstrate this fact, it will be necessary to examine the evidence which has caused the misascription and also the merits of the contradictory claims. The conventional view will be discussed first.

The place-name Leire is derived from the Middle Danish Lethrae and eventually from the Old Norse Hleithrar, in which form it is to be found repeatedly in the older literature, notably, of course, in the Hrolfs Saga Kraka. The name occurs in the Latin chroniclers, Saxo and the rest, as Lethra and the fame of the court was sufficiently widespread to account for the name being transported to Iceland, where it appears as a new place-name in a stanza in the Brennu Njals Saga.

In the medieval chronicles, besides Saxo, the place-name occurs with great frequency, nearly to the exclusion of the other royal residences, for in spite of occasional references to Ringsted, Sigerssted and Roskilde, it was Leire that captured the imagination of the Danish writers and which stood in legend and in history as the Camelot of Northern chivalry. However, the definite identification of the humble village which we now know as Leire with the royal seat of Hrolf Kraki is asserted only in the chronicle of Sven Aageson. He says;

Huic [Helgi] in regno successit filius Hrolf Kraki, patria virtute pollens, occisus in Lethra, quae tunc famosissima regis extitit curia, nunc autem Koskildensi vicina civitati inter abjectissima ferme vix collitur oppida.<sup>9</sup>

The other references in the SRD, some twenty-seven in number, do not specify the exact district in which Leire is to be found, save an occasional reference to Sjaeland. Thietmar of Merseberg, the earliest writer of all, does not mention "Lederun" as being near Roskilde, but simply says that it is in the island of "Selon."<sup>10</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Scriptores Rerum Danicarum (Langebeck), I, 45.

The most important confirmatory evidence is the existence of the multitude of grave-mounds that dot the landscape surrounding the hamlet. These are far from unimpressive, and it may be readily felt how strongly they convinced the early writers that the district in which they stand was one of great historical importance and the burial spot of many kings. These ancient monuments inspired the imaginations of the beholders and gave rise to a series of local traditions and legends that have not lost their currency even down to our own day. The most conspicuous of the mounds were given the names of bygone kings and the implication was naturally that the bones of these heroes were enclosed therein. Olai Worm and others in the seventeenth century accepted these vain imaginings of the rural antiquarians at face value, and the traditions thus begun found their way into the immortality of printer's ink. The futility of putting one's faith in such material is shown in the case of one of the most striking of the eminences which lies near Leire Brook, not far from the cross-roads southwest of the settlement. This is known as "Hestebjerget" (Horse Hill) and has appropriate local traditions connected with royal stables, mounted corpses, and other horsey affairs. The elevation is not a mound at all, but a perfectly natural hill, without the least probability of its having received its name from equine contents. An article based upon the extravagant fantasies of the present inhabitants of Leire and vicinity will be found in the American-Scandinavian Review,<sup>11</sup> together with some excellent photographs of Leire as it exists.

The claims of the present-day Leire for identification with the Hleithra of Hrolf Kraki, and therefore with the scene of the first two episodes of Beowulf, may then be summarized as follows: (1) There is a perfect correspondence of names, historically considered; (2) There is a written tradition of centuries standing; (3) There is archaeological evidence tending to support a claim for considerable importance in ancient times; (4) There is a mass of local tradition that has found its way into print, appropriately identifying the mounds with definite heroes of great fame.

The thinness of this testimony has frequently been noted. The nearby cathedral city of Roskilde with its impressive edifice and its silent host of buried kings has been thought a worthy place to establish as the still more ancient capital of Denmark. This attempt has been given the support of dubious etymology, those who seek to advance it asserting that the town was originally Roe's Kilde, the spring of Roe or Hroarr (Hroth-gar). This may be dispelled by the consideration of the more probable (if not positive) derivation, Hros Kilde, i.e. the horse's spring,<sup>12</sup> indicative perhaps of the importance of the spot as a horse market, a distinction which it maintains to the present day.

<sup>10</sup> Thietmari Merseburgensis Episcopi Chronicon, ed. Lappenburg and Kurze (Hanover, 1889), p. 11.

<sup>11</sup> March, 1923.

It is the proximity of the cathedral town which rouses skepticism. The establishment of Roskilde as a political and religious center for Denmark took place at a comparatively late date when the country had already a very distinguished history. With the founding of the cathedral and its scriptorium, Roskilde became a center of learning. What could be more normal than that scribes and clergy should attempt to claim historical importance for the locality and attach all possible significance to the appropriately named village nearby? Especially can one understand this when the manifold mounds are considered. Whether in the early centuries of our millenium there were definite traditions connected with specific mounds cannot be proved and does not matter.<sup>13</sup> The mounds were there, the monks were not archæologists, and the very existence of the clusters was sufficient proof that Leire had been a royal burying place; and what more glamorous personage could be desired than Hrolf Kraki, king at Leire, to illuminate the newly founded capital through the mists of obscure centuries?

That such an interpretation of misplaced local zeal is reasonable, is to be supported by the example of better equipped scholars of our own day who see a reference to Hrothgar in the name Roskilde and thus endeavor to give to the royal city itself an antiquity that is not highly probable. It is the opinion of the present writer that the monastic chronicles are not to be admitted as testimony at this point because of the laudable and comprehensible effort that they make to add luster to Roskilde at the expense of archæological accuracy.

The value of the grave-mounds themselves is open to even greater suspicion. Not all of them have been opened, thanks to the foresight of the government authorities who are saving them from tampering in our time for the benefit of future generations of students. For this reason the last word on the subject of their contents cannot be said for many years. But the obvious fact is that there has been no evidence obtained from any of the large group that have been opened pointing to an Iron Age origin. In fact, one authority freely states<sup>14</sup> that in his estimation these interesting relics of the past are from the Bronze Age and the Stone Age, and therefore not of the least advantage to those who would use them as an argument for the location of the Danish capital in Leire in the sixth century.

<sup>12</sup> R. W. Chambers. Beowulf, An Introduction (Cambridge, 1932), p. 19 (quoting Sophus Larsen).

<sup>13</sup> In this connection.

<sup>14</sup> La Cour, Danske Studier (1921), p. 166.

One important observation should be made here. Saxo makes reference to a King Olaf in the ninth century as being buried near Lethra in a mound named for him.<sup>15</sup> This, Olrik asserts,<sup>16</sup> must mean the tumulus called Olufshøj, midway between Roskilde and Leire. On the opening of this howe nearly a century ago a silver spur was found in the center, although the structure was obviously of Stone Age origin. It is perfectly true that Stone Age barrows were occasionally crowned by Iron Age structures, but it seems far-fetched to postulate the identity of Leire by a single find of questionable occurrence in a fairly distant grave, and still more so to use the spur as a corroboration of Saxo's statement when there is no proof save the name of the mound that the object was the property of the man in question. It seems at once a pitiful relic of a royal burial, and from its composition exactly the sort of thing that plunderers would not leave behind. Further, this is not the only Olafshøj in the vicinity of Roskilde; at least one other might have been the one described.

In general, then, the gravemounds surrounding Leire, instead of supporting the claim of that town to the honor of Hrolf's court, give no evidence of such a late importance to the vicinity and cannot be used to bolster up the dubious distinction of the spot in the sixth century.

Thus if we throw serious doubts upon the validity of the points (2), (3), and (4) of the case of Leire, the only unquestioned matter is that of the name. And this should be the starting point of the investigation of the whole matter. The first question that arises is: what was the meaning of the original name and why was it applied to the particular locality under discussion? Axel Olrik says:<sup>17</sup>

The name Hleithrar itself probably means huts (cf. Gothic hlaiþrs, hut) and would seem to indicate a settlement that grew from a small beginning. Besides, we have the name Heorot (hart, stag) applied in the English epics to Hroar's slender hall.

It is with diffidence that one attacks a statement made by this accomplished scholar, but if there is any close connection between those two successive sentences it is very carefully disguised. Certainly Hrothgar's broad gabled palace as described in Beowulf cannot be designated as a "slender royal hall," much less a "hut." In point of fact, hlaiþrs as used in Ulfilas probably should not be translated as a hut, and may mean something quite different, a tabernacle.<sup>18</sup> This meaning casts a flood of light upon the problem.

<sup>15</sup> Saxo, Bk ix, "Olavus Gotrici" etc. to "congestus excepit"

<sup>16</sup> Axel Olrik, The Heroic Legends of Denmark (New York, 1919), p. 334, and "Danmarks Aldste Kongegrav," Nordisk Tids. f. Fil. (1908), 138 ff. <sup>17</sup> H. L. D., p. 340.

<sup>18</sup> Ulfilas uses the word to render the Greek σκηπός, Luke, ix, 33; xiv. 9, 2 Corinthians, v. 1 and 4, which his contemporary, Jerome, translates thrice by tabernaculum, once by ædificatio.

If Leire is derived from a word which means a tabernacle or a place of worship, one may readily understand why it was used to name a royal residence, the centralization not only of civil but of religious authority. Furthermore, if the word were a common noun before it became a place-name, it is unreasonable to suppose that its use was restricted to this particular locality. In fact, it seems justifiable to postulate as many potential Leires in Sjaeland as there were pagan places of worship. If this is the case, and doubts are thrown upon the identity of the present spot with the ancient king's seat, it becomes necessary to go on a hunt for modern Leires, existing, of course, under altered names, and to investigate the possibilities of these localities as aspirants for the honor, such as it is. It may be assumed from the first that, to avoid confusion, the names will have been linguistically altered, the present town having had the advantage of proximity to a scriptorium and an important city to keep its own intact.

Sorting out the references to Lethræ in the documents assembled in the SRD is a nearly hopeless task. If there might have been a diversity of Leires, the events said to have happened in Lethræ might have taken place all over the map, except where that town is definitely located in Sven Aageson. In all likelihood there is not such a wide distribution. Undoubtedly the same Leire was meant by all save a Saxo reference<sup>19</sup> which pretty plainly indicated Sþborg and Esrom. A thorough investigation of the merits of Sþborg, which is superfluous to introduce here, has convinced the present writer that there is nothing to be expected from that quarter. No evidence of royal occupation of that locality in the sixth century is forthcoming.

A third spot that offers some promise is the district about Udleire, a small hamlet lying between Leire and the ocean, some miles to the north. This will be found on the Danish Ordnance map (1:16,000) a little southwest of Fredericksund. This place-name is obviously to be translated "Outer Leire," and perhaps means a village farther out toward the open sea than Leire itself. Such has been the view taken by students who have noted the spot. While such an interpretation is perfectly reasonable, it is not justifiable to dismiss the importance of the coincident names. Particularly is this so when one finds traces of another Udleire, now no longer existing as a name on the map, but at one time so to speak a flourishing little suburb (which was recorded as late as 1663) of the other and better known Leire (hereafter to be called Leire ved Roskilde (LvR) to avoid confusion). If LvR had its own Ud-Leire, it is fantastic to believe that the present town of that name could have had anything to do with LvR and it becomes proper to search east of it for a suspected "Leire" without the "Ud." Such fortunate preservation does not occur, as indeed there is no reason to hope, but there is found a Løjesø nearby, in Vexø (Vixø, Vig-Sø)<sup>20</sup> parish which one may justly connect with the object of the search. In fact, the development of the name has been suggested as following some such process as this:

<sup>19</sup> Saxo., Bk. xrv, "Tunc rex urbem in solido Lethricæ" etc.

Lethresø		Leirsø alternating with	>	Leiresø
	>	or
Ledresø		Leiesø
	>	Løiesø <sup>21</sup>
		Leiesessø

Only the last step offers any difficulties, and the change seems explicable as a late dialectal distortion when the original meaning of the word had become forgotten. Quite properly one may suppose the "tabernacle" that gave its name to the lake to have been located not far from the existing Løiesø.

A further search for likely place-names in the same district is rewarded by the discovery of a lesser pond now known as Praestesø (the priests' lake) not far from the collection of houses having the name of Hove (the temple) and a place-name nearby gives us Lund (the grove).<sup>22</sup> Quite evidently this has been sacred ground. The holy lake, the grove, the temple, and all familiar essentials to a place of heathen worship—we may feel perfectly certain through the preservation of these names that the immediate locality once was revered as a pagan sanctum of more than passing importance. This is more strongly impressed upon the curious when in the local parish history one reads (Vigsø Sogns Historie, C. Carstensen, 1884) of the unexplained tradition that Løiet Sø demands an annual victim. This seems to point fairly directly to a forgotten custom of a human sacrifice, and causes one to recall Thietmar of Merseburg and the fortieth chapter of Tacitus' Germania.

The district about LvR abounded in grave-mounds and so gave tangible evidence of importance in the remote past. In this respect it does not greatly differ from dozens of less advertised localities elsewhere in Sjælland and Denmark. Vixø Sogn and Smorum Amt also can boast an impressive number of these monuments. In this district there are dozens, literally, of tumuli and barrows of various descriptions. The contents of these cannot be stated with accuracy. Some of them are preserved by the crown, others have been neglected and abused by the local farmers. A systematic opening of them has not been undertaken. Quite obviously, the objection to the validity of the LvR graves as testimony in behalf of that village is equally applicable here. The last word cannot be said until the last mound has been investigated. But if any importance is to

<sup>20</sup> Anglice, "Sacred Lake."

<sup>21</sup> See Knudsen, Annaler f. nordisk Oldkyndighed (1838), p. 363.

<sup>22</sup> Compare the first verse extract of the Hrólf's Saga Kraka.

A bracteate and wunden gold from the vicinity of Heorot.

be given to the profusion of such structures at LvR, the same value must be placed upon the similar objects near Vixø.

The argument for locating Hrolf's stronghold at LvR by the nearby mound of King Olaf is further vitiated by the existence of an Olehøj about a kilometer south of Hove, i.e. in the direction of Roskilde. The contents of this mound cannot be stated; local testimony on the finds would seem to indicate a Neolithic origin. Otherwise, it has as much validity as the similarly named howe farther south.

A census of the finds from the district which are preserved in the Royal Museum in Copenhagen brings forth a mass of interesting material. Those from the Stone and Bronze Ages are, of course, to be ignored, however interesting. Late finds from the Middle Ages are likewise of no relevance, but there is a profusion of Early and Late Iron Age finds that are important. Three of gold are particularly noteworthy. There is a gold bracteate, (C 8780) from Vixø, two gold arm-rings (C 3438-3439) from Smørum Sogn, and one of the most magnificent silver fibulae ever found (10739-10740), together with five large beads. One of the arm-rings deserves especial mention. C 3438 is a very heavy ornament composed of two thick gold rods and a finer two-part strand of gold twisted together in such a way as to resemble hawser-laid rope. The workmanship is not remarkable as in the case of the fibula, but there is a very noticeable massiveness and richness to this splendid object. It is an example of the "wunden gold" mentioned in Beowulf. The presence of such finds shows a definite inhabitation of the district during the Iron Age. Further, one would like to suppose, although this does not of necessity follow, that the presence of so rich objects in this locality may be used to corroborate the theory of nearby splendor and wealth.

For present purposes this exhausts the possibilities of current place-names. Of course, there are hundreds which have gone out of use and are preserved solely in early maps. One could wish for a fuller preservation of such documents relating to Vigsø parish. The earliest now in existence is Originalskort no. 1, in the Matriculs Kontoret Archiv. It dates from 1780, and is not very well preserved. Sufficient interest still attaches to it, however, for in the immediate district which is now under consideration, we find a hill-top farm-land called Stor Hjort and one directly adjoining called Lille Hjorte. This might not seem so extraordinary were it not that Hjort as an independent, uncompounded place-name is of the greatest rarity in Denmark, if indeed it is not otherwise unknown. There seems small reason to doubt that the field in question was the spot upon which Heorot stood, and the adjoining land from its name might well have been the place occupied by the lesser buildings connected with the great hall, the bower, or what not.

Further, at the foot of the hill upon which Stor Hiort is found, there was a body of water, now a swampy waste land, which is called on the map Halekier, and which had near its center an island called Trollholm (the trolls' island). This looks suspiciously like a reference to Grendel.

The one piece of archæological evidence that would clinch the whole matter is wanting. It is impossible to dig up the foundations of Heorot and display them as the final argument. We have unshakeable testimony from four sources, Beowulf, Widsith, Saxo, and the Hrolfs Saga Kraka, that the hall of Hrolf was burned by his conquering enemies. It is useless to hope that this was not a thorough destruction of the palace and all connected with it. If this destruction took place about the middle of the sixth century, any remains of a wooden building would be gone by now, unless a miracle occurred to save some significant vestige. Nevertheless, excavations on large scale at this place might still turn up single finds of corroborative importance.

The evidence may be summed up, then, in the same manner as was employed for the case of LvR. (1) There is a good correspondence of place-names historically considered. This holds equally well for both localities. (2) There is no written tradition of long standing as was the dubious case with LvR. (3) There is archæological evidence that this district was inhabited at the period under consideration, and that it has been a burial place for distinguished men as far back as the Stone Age. (4) There is sufficient local tradition to justify the claim of antique religious importance, and this is not open to the suspicion of relatively modern manufacture. (5) Finally, there is a correspondence of now forgotten place-names that indicates definitely the proper name of the palace in Beowulf, and one archæological find is illustrative of objects described and named in that poem.

It may now be profitable to note whether there is any correspondence between the topography as set forth in the English poem and the surroundings of Heorot as above localized. As has already been suggested, the English poet is both ignorant and unreliable in his attempt to describe Danish geography.

The localization of Heorot on a hill-top in Vixø Parish is not hindered, though not greatly supported by his information. LvR is near the sea but not actually on the coast. Sarrazin<sup>23</sup> has tried to identify the haunted lake with a nearby indentation of the ocean, but this is open to the suspicion of being forced. Certainly the miracles of Christian times are of but little value in explaining the unholy terror that fell upon Hrothgar's capital in the fifth or early sixth century. The present attempt to identify the hall has this to be said for it, though the hill under discussion is now some considerable distance from tide water, the sea came much nearer to it than the present maps show. The naval battle of Vaerbro in 1133 took place at a spot between the locus of Heorot and the present coast, i.e. to the west, where now there is dry land. The sea might have come very much closer, judged from the contour lines of the ordinance maps, but whether it did or not cannot positively be asserted. All that we can definitely set forth is that the hall was not actually on the coast, but was no great distance away. As to the proximity of the mere, one has the option of accepting either Løiet Sø or Halekier. If the former, it is separated by enough distance to warrant the mounting of the warriors. If the latter, it might be reached in a five-minute walk by the most heavily armed man. But, as has been asserted above, the poet was in the greatest confusion about his geography. All that he knew, evidently, was that a haunted mere existed; what its relation to the place was, he had no idea. The present attempt to discover the high hall of the Scyldings fulfills all the requirements of the poem, but these are not sufficient to exclude an almost infinite number of possible localities.

<sup>23</sup> Beowulf Studien (1888), p. 11 ff.

The more valuable evidence is the preservation of the names on the old map. These assist, but do not finally conclude, one of the most puzzling problems of Beowulfian lore. The hall of the Scyldings is known to the composer of Widsith and Beowulf as Heorot, and yet this name has never been observed in the writers of Scandinavian literature. To them the capital is known, but not the name of the palace. It seems reasonable, though not demonstrable, that the capital was of greater interest to the Scandinavian story tellers than was the hall itself.

A word like Eleithargarth carried with it a connotation that might have been lacking in Heorot. The glamour of the old seat of royalty was in the name of Leire. The palace was not given its name of Hart Hall until after its erection (or extensive alteration) by Hroarr, by which time Leire may well have been already very famous. On the other hand, there was no great national tradition associated in the minds of the English with this spot. It may have been that they had a better understanding of the royal hall as a social institution which might have preserved the description of life at Heorot, while the pagan center of Leire gradually lost meaning and interest and so was finally lost track of, as a proper name. This suggestion does not by any means dispose of the matter beyond discussion, but may serve as a possible explanation. It is noteworthy that the name Heorot was never quite lost sight of in Denmark, although the literary monuments do not mention it. For the existence of the name in Vixø Parish confirms the name in Beowulf and shows us that the glory that was Hrothgar's and the importance of his efforts as a builder were reflected, unconsciously until the end of the eighteenth century.

STEPHEN J. HERBEN, JR.

SOME IRREGULAR USES OF THE INSTRUMENTAL CASE IN OLD ENGLISH

PROBABLY the chief reason for many of the linguistic irregularities of Old Northumbrian is the fact that the great bulk (about 98 per cent) of its literary remains exist in the form of glosses, in which a scribe is often so intent upon conveying the general meaning of a concept in the Latin parallel that he lets the outer dressing of the vernacular—the grammatical or syntactic form, even the spelling, of a word—take care of itself. The fact, however, that these glosses may be in consequence entirely untrustworthy as a basis for an acceptance or a rejection of linguistic rules need not detract from the interest that their anomalies may happen to afford us. Thus, in a recent survey of Northumbrian relics to observe the treatment therein of the instrumental case, there appeared no fewer than ten constructions which have not as yet been recorded in any systematic study of Old English case-syntax as a whole.<sup>1</sup>

Our materials for a study of Old Northumbrian are comparatively limited in extent to (1) a small collection of antiquities: Caedmon's Hymn, Bede's Death-Song, the inscriptions on the Ruthwell Cross, on the Newcastle Column, on the Franks Casket, and on the Falstone Ring; (2) interlinear native glosses to the four gospels in two manuscripts—the older manuscript being designated as the Lindisfarne Gloss and the younger as the Rushworth Gloss;<sup>2</sup> (3) interlinear glosses to a Latin Ritual Book from <sup>1</sup> The finest of these studies of Old English case-syntax is that of J. E. Wulffing, Syntax Alfreds des grossen (Bonn, 1894); somewhat later is the monograph of H. Winkler, Germanische Kasusyntax (Berlin, 1896). There are many other works on individual problems. The most complete bibliography is included in Morgan Callaway's "Studies in the Syntax of the Lindisfarne Gospels," Hesperia no. 5 (Baltimore, 1918). Note also G. K. Anderson, A Study of Case-Syntax in some Old Northumbrian Texts, summarized in Summaries of Harvard University Ph. D. Theses for 1925 (Cambridge, Mass., 1928).

<sup>2</sup> Of the two glosses, the Lindisfarne gloss is the more reliable for the student of Old Northumbrian. The Rushworth gloss is mixed—that portion of the gospels from Matthew i, 1 to Mark ii, 15 (Rushworth i), the work of the scribe Farman, is Mercian with Northumbrian admixture; from geliionade in Mark ii, 15 to the end of John, the work of the scribe Owun, is Northumbrian with Mercian admixture. John xviii 1-3, however, is the work of Farman. R. J. Menner's recent article in Anglia for January, 1934 (LVIII 1 ff), not only affords a fine review of the whole vexed matter, but establishes clearly the individuality of the glossator Farman. The most cautious statement, in a mass of rather fine-spun inferences, is that of K. Bulbring, Altenglisches Elementarbuch (Heidelberg, 1902), §25: "Spät-mercisch (aus der zweiten Hälfte des 10. Jahrhunderts)—jedoch mit nordhumbrischen und sächsischen Formen gemischt—ist die Interlinear-glosse zum Mattheus-Evangelium im Rushworth MS" [Rushworth i]. In §24 he affirms the Northumbrian nature of Rushworth ii. But Owun's portion (Rushworth ii) needs more investigation. Other scholars have detected even West Saxon peculiarities in Rushworth i (cf. Menner's bibliography in his the cathedral at Durham. These texts have all been described at length: the first by Sweet in Volume 83 of EETS (original series); the second by Skeat in his definitive editions;<sup>3</sup> the third by Stevenson in the publications of the Surtees Society, Volume 10. These are the texts to which all subsequent references in this article are to be made. It is sufficient here to repeat the general dates usually assigned to the writing of the texts: the archæological fragments about 700; the Lindisfarne interlinear text about 950; the Rushworth glosses about 975; and the Durham Ritual Book, "tenth century." By way of further repetition, I should like to emphasize the exhaustive nature of Callaway's bibliography on the entire field of Old Northumbrian.<sup>4</sup> Since the valuable Liber Vitae<sup>5</sup> has no bearing on the subject of the present study, it has been omitted from further consideration.

I find ten constructions of interest, only the first of which makes use of an instrumental without preposition, and even in this instance the preposition may be used.

I. This is the construction in which the instrumental is employed to express the indirect object of a transitive verb. The remaining constructions to be discussed are:

II. The instrumental with a prepositional æc or æc to (the Northumbrian equivalent of the West Saxon eac or eac to).

III. With from.

IV. With in.

V. With of in a variety of relations.

VI. With æfter in a nonce-case to express cause(?).

VII. With for(e) to indicate interest or reference.<sup>6</sup>

VIII. With berh (through).

IX. With to.

X. With on. Although this is not a stranger to West Saxon texts, I add one or two rather queer uses of it in Northumbrian.

Only when the instrumental can be found in a distinct and characteristic form is the construction noted. I have thought it best to discuss together those constructions which resemble each other and so have violated a article mentioned above), but such details do not come into the province of my present study.

<sup>3</sup> The Holy Gospels: Anglo-Saxon and Northumbrian Versions (Cambridge, 1871-1887).

<sup>4</sup> In the afore-mentioned Hesperia, no. 5 (Baltimore, 1918).—I might add here that the only subsequent contributions to the field are the thesis of Anderson (already noted), a collation by Lindelof of the Durham Ritual Book in MLR for June, 1923, and a complete discussion of Caedmon's Hymn by M. G. Frampton in Mod. Phil. for August, 1924, and Menner's article in Anglia, LVIII, mentioned in note 2 above.

<sup>5</sup> in EETS 83.

<sup>6</sup> pro rather than coram.

strictly alphabetical order. It is understood that, unless otherwise stated, every reference to the gospels is to the Lindisfarne manuscript.

I. The instrumental without preposition to express the indirect object of a transitive verb.

1. "Gionn higo þine (praesta . . . familiae tuae) . . ." the direct object being an ut-clause following (Ritual 14, 6).<sup>7</sup>

2. "Bodigaþ godspel elce gescafte (Prædicare evangelium omni creaturæ)" (Mark 16, 15). This is clean-cut. Here the same passage in Lindisfarne, perversely enough, has the normal dative construction eghuelcum sceafta. A variant reading in Lindisfarne, however, gives alle sceafta. We may, in other words, assign two examples to this particular construction.

II. The instrumental used with to to express the indirect object of a transitive verb.

1. "To hwon . . . þa tosceades (cui . . . ea exposcit)" (Int. Luke 2, 7).<sup>8</sup>

2. "Cwoeþ to Simoni Petri<sup>9</sup> (dicit Simoni Petro)" (John 21, 15). Here the likelihood is great that Simoni has been copied boldly from the Latin dative Simoni, case-ending and all. Note, however, that the Latin dative Petro has not been so treated. Perhaps this is a typical case of analogy in the scribe's mind.

III. Closely connected with this instrumental expressing the indirect object of a transitive verb is the combination aec þon, found frequently to gloss the Latin etiam, etsi, or quoque, apparently in pure adverbial relationship. Sometimes the combination exists as aec to þon, with precisely the same value that the shorter form has. Wulfing in his Syntax Alfreds des Grossen speaks of eac in such a combination as a preposition of substantival origin,<sup>10</sup> but notes its union with the dative only. I have collected thirteen examples, of which the two following are typical:

1. "Fordraf of þæm temple þa scipo æc to þon and þa exin (Eiecit de templo oves quoque et boves)" (John 2, 15).

2. "God . . . gilef . . . þætte (we) life æc þon bisen ginime bisene (Deus . . . concede . . . ut nos vitæ quoque imitemur exempla)" (Ritual 57, 9).<sup>11</sup>

<sup>7</sup> All references to the Ritual Book and to the Introduction to the gospels are to page and line; for the gospels proper, to chapter and verse; for the archæological fragments, to line.

<sup>8</sup> As in note 7.

<sup>9</sup> That is, accepting the statement of Sievers' Grammar of Old English, tr. of A. S. Cook (Boston, 1899), §237, n. 2—and of J. Wright, Old English Grammar (Oxford Univ. Press, 1908), §334, note—that the instrumental ending of the masculine a-stems (I.E. o-stems) was originally -i. Accepting also the fact that most masculine proper names in Old English, when inflected at all, are usually declined as a-stems.

<sup>10</sup> Wulfing's Syntax Alfreds des Grossen, II, 658, §1067—"von Hauptwörtern gebildeten Präpositionen").

<sup>11</sup> Other examples of this same idiom: Int. Luke 10, 16; Int. Luke 10, 18; Int. Luke 11, 6; Int. John 6, 16; Int. John 3, 8; Int. John 4, 11; Ritual 17, 7; Ritual 18, 1; Ritual 94, 5; Ritual 94, 8.

The general effect of this idiom is that conveyed by an intensifier only. Yet this particular type of adverbial conjunction is well represented by the common conjunctions forþon (therefore, because) and presumably by sipþan, which occur throughout Old English literature.

Still, the most unusual instances of this abnormal use of the instrumental form are the occurrences of this case with prepositions of ablative or locative force. There is nothing organically illogical about such idioms—we should rather expect them in accordance with the laws of the "Synkretismus," or falling together, of cases—but we have not seen them before in precisely this form in Old English.

IV. Important among these constructions is the use of from and the instrumental, not found, for example, in all the pages of Alfredian prose. I submit the following instances:

1. To denote separation in general, an ablative relation, as indicated by some verb: "Wæs hal from adle þine (Esto sana a plaga tua)" (Mark 5, 34). Lindisfarne, not Rushworth, which uses the normal dative from adle þinum.

2. Still in ablative relation, to indicate the Source or Origin of any thing: "Ðæt wuldor þie from ane is (Gode) ne soecaþ gie? (Gloriam quæ a solo est Deo non quæritis?)" (John 5, 44). Lindisfarne only; Rushworth has anum. There is, of course, a remote possibility that ane may be that weakened form of the weak declension ana so frequently found in these Northumbrian texts.

V. Moreover, while we have some examples of the appearance in West Saxon of the preposition of with the instrumental in a general ablative or separative function, the Northumbrian offers a few unusual extensions of this idiom.

1. To express source, with a blending of a purely instrumental idea (means)—"Lufa God of alle hearte þine (Diliges Dominum Deum tuum ex toto corde tuo)" (Matt. 22, 37).

2. To emphasize the instrumentality or means—"Bod acwoden is of þon alle to hreownisse getrymed biþ (Prædicatio dicitur qua cunctos ad pænitentiam cohortatur)" (Int. Luke 4, 6).

3. To express price in an extension of the means element—"Gesomnung ge-wearþ miþ woercmonnum of þenning dæghwamlice (Conventione facta cum operariis ex denario diurno)" (Matt. 20, 2).<sup>12</sup>

4. In still further extension of the source-idea is the following: "Of micle aes bebode gecunned (De magno legis mandato tentatus)" (Int. Matt. 21, 12).<sup>13</sup> where the idea approaches that of a general reference or interest, analogous to the normal dative construction.

<sup>12</sup> Note the treatment, customary in these glosses, of the Latin ablative absolute, and incidentally the treatment of the Latin deponent verb in the example immediately preceding from Int. Luke 4, 6. Callaway in Hesperia, no. 5, devotes considerable time to a discussion of absolute participial constructions in the Lindisfarne texts.

<sup>13</sup> This affords us a good example of the slavish imitation of Latin word order on the part of the Northumbrian scribe.

5. To express the terminus a quo in time-relations, the "time from which" idea of our old Latin grammars: "Hwu long firstes is of þon þis him gelamp? (Quantum temporis est ex quo hoc ei accidit?)" (Mark 9, 21).<sup>14</sup>

As for examples of the instrumental with locative prepositions, we have here the usual representatives in and on, presented in a variety of uses. There seems to be actually very little if any difference between the functions of the two individual prepositions, although on is often reserved to indicate the Limit of Motion in normally accusative constructions.<sup>15</sup>

VI. The instrumental with in is found in no less than six varying relations in Northumbrian, where Wulfing did not find any at all in West Saxon Alfredian prose. The fundamentally locative force of in is, of course, at all times valid, but the abstractions of this locative force are often rather far-fetched.

1. Real concrete location is indicated in the following: "Hall . . . eadges Marie, in þon þu giwunedest (Aulam . . . beatae Mariae, in qua habitares)" (Ritual 66, 3).

2. The idea may be more fanciful than realistic: "We sitta in wuldre pine (Sedeamus in gloria tua)" (Mark 10, 37).

Two similar examples of the concrete and four examples of the abstract phases of this instrumental idiom with locative functions are present in these texts.

3. In what is probably an extension of the locative idea just illustrated is the instance of the instrumental with in: "Ne in hwon þu hlada hæfis þu? (Neque in quo haurias habes?)" (John 4, 11), or the examples of "to baptize in the Holy Ghost", where the general impression meant to be conveyed is as much the actual means as anything.<sup>16</sup>

4. In addition, there is the instrumental found with in to express a relation translatable by "in reference to"—distinctly a Dative of Reference phrase: "Gif in groene tree þas doap, in alde hwæd biþ? (Si in viridi ligne haec faciunt, in arido quid fiet?)" (Luke 23, 31).

<sup>14</sup> There are four other examples of this construction: Int. Luke 3, 19; Luke 7, 45; 13, 7; 24, 21

<sup>15</sup> Wulfing has an excellent discussion of both prepositions in his aforementioned work, vol. II.

<sup>16</sup> Further examples in Int. John 3, 6 and Luke 14, 34. Manner, Attendant Circumstance or even a Comitative idea are other possible interpretations, to be sure. Winkler, in his Germanische Kasusyntax, actually remarks (p. 453): "Der Instrumental mit Präpositionen kommt so gut wie gar nicht in Betracht; ich kenne ihn fast nur bei dem comitativ-instrumentalen mit." He notes another case with for, but the Old Northumbrian seems to fall outside the confines of his rather flat statement.

5. A little more difficult to classify is the following: "Gif salt forworþes, in þon gesalted biþ?)" (Matt. 5, 13), where the general idea is presumably that of means, although the idea is certainly not forcibly expressed by such a construction.

6. As a pure case of the locative idea fundamental to the question when? (Time When), we have two examples, of which the following is one: "Dæg . . . in þon Godes sunucenn' deaþ undereade tidlic (Festivitas . . . in qua genetrix dei mortem subiit temporalem)" (Ritual 66, 12-13). Also in John 7, 37.

VII. In the matter of the instrumental with on, we find a rather interesting fact. The two prepositions in and on are strikingly similar in meaning: it would be possible to find hundreds of examples in which their use is to all intents and purposes interchangeable. Hence the instrumental with in might be expected to have the same general functions as the instrumental with on, and in these Northumbrian texts our expectations are realized. Yet, while the instrumental with in appears to be foreign to West Saxon usage, the instrumental with on, on the contrary, is by no means unknown. Wülfiŋ notes several examples of on and the instrumental in ideas of locative nature, and the concept may be expressed either concretely or abstractly, as with in and the instrumental. I have found the same thing to be true of the Northumbrian examples, with certain peculiarities, however, which I make the occasion for this present digression.

1. In conformity with the generally held theory that the old instrumental ending in O.E. a-stems is -i, we should certainly include in this paragraph the following example from the Ruthwell Cross Inscription, about the only example in this whole study from the early archæological fragments, and one of the very few examples where the more archaic case-ending is available<sup>17</sup>: "Krist wæs on rodi," where the concrete locative notion is obvious.<sup>18</sup>

2. In one case the instrumental with on is used where we should expect an accusative of Limit of Motion in a general Indo-European idiom: "Uteodon on <sup>17</sup> Both Sievers and Wright (see note 9 on p. 948) in determining the -i to be the instrumental ending for a-stem masculine nouns, speak of this ending as an original locative (I. E. -ei). An interesting fact that this is an actual locative construction!

<sup>18</sup> Of course, rod (and dun below) are generally feminine o-stems in Germanic, and it is natural so to regard them here, in which case they could be regarded as variants in -i of the normal dative feminine -e. But cf. Sievers Grammar of Old English (tr. A. S. Cook), §251, note: "In Northumbrian many of these feminines are also employed as neuters and masculines, and then conform to the inflections of these genders (§236, note)", and again (§252, note 1) "... sporadically does the dative-instrumental [sic] exhibit -i, as in rodi . . . in which it is probably borrowed from the o-declension." This may be rationalizing. Rushworth's on dune (Matt. 26, 30) makes me feel that duni may be an ignorant misspelling, and that both examples 1 and 2 on page 951 are inadmissible, yet a suspicion of their validity in these locative constructions persists.

duni olebearwas (Exierunt in montem Oliveti)" (Matt. 26, 30).<sup>19</sup> Lindisfarne alone has this form; Rushworth on dune.

3. Again, as with in and the instrumental, there seems to be a tendency to make the locative construction serve as a vehicle to express means: "Gif ic on Beelzebub aworpe diowlas, sunu iuere, on hwon aworpeþ? (Si ego in Beelzebub cicio daemonia, filii vestri in quo eiciunt?)" (Luke 11, 19).<sup>20</sup>

4. Lastly, we can apparently use the on-construction in a temporal function, to express time when. I have been able to find eight examples of this idiom<sup>21</sup>: "On dagi<sup>22</sup> wolcenes and mistes (In die nubis et caliginis)" (Ritual 10, 1). Indeed, the usual phrase glossing in die is this same phrase on dagi.

Beyond the clear-cut intrusions into Old English case-syntax of the constructions just mentioned, there exist in the Old Northumbrian two or three scattered idioms of the instrumental with prepositions recognized elsewhere in Old English as capable of governing the instrumental. But, as the meanings found in these few instances are a little out of the ordinary, I append them here.

VIII. While the instrumental is found frequently with æfter in other Old English dialects, I find no good parallel for the following passage from Luke 20, 33: "Hwæs hiora biþ þæt wif, æfter þon þe seofono hæfdon þæt ilca wif? (Cuius eorum erit uxor, siquidem habuereunt septem eam uxorem?)."

<sup>19</sup> Since this is a normally accusative construction, this may be even more surely a careless misspelling on the part of the scribe. By the way, the Old Saxon illustrates the locative with instrumental construction by an thiu, there is the well-known case in the Heliand of an with the instrumental to indicate Limit of Motion (an thiu holmclicu, Hel. 4734). Or so I read it. Both these Old Saxon idioms parallel closely these Old English idioms under discussion.

<sup>20</sup> Again, note the Old Saxon an thiu phrase to introduce purpose-clauses. Cf. Holthausen, Altsächsisches Elementarbuch (Heidelberg, 1900), §539 note.

<sup>21</sup> In addition to Ritual 10, 1 cited in the text—Mark 14, 2; John 7, 37; Ritual 9, 20; 173, 8; 11, 13; 20, 15; 115, 2

<sup>22</sup> The resemblance of this phrase to the Old Saxon an dag is obvious. Holthausen, Altsächsisches Elementarbuch (Heidelberg, 1900), §265, note 4), mentions this as an old locative (Urgermanisch-i; I.E. -ei). It would help us much, however, if the O.S. **dagi* were not altered—according to Holthausen, by analogy—to its uninflected form.—An examination of A. Norcen's Altislandische u. Allnorwegische Grammatik (Halle, 1903) reveals (§138) the fact that an e/i interchange in unaccented syllables in Old Norse is not uncommon, although not, as it happens, in such specific cases as in the dative of the nouns dagr or dánn. The possibility of Scandinavian influence upon Northumbrian cannot be ignored, but there is little direct evidence of any such influence here. For that matter, the same alternation of e and i in final unaccented syllables is in Old English throughout (cf. Sievers Angelsächsische Grammatik, §45, 2 and particularly note 1). The preservation of this tendency toward the interchange of final -e and -i in Northern English dialects is amply illustrated in J. Wright's English Dialect Dictionary (Oxford, 1905) vi, Grammar Supplement, §229. What I am calling here instrumentals in -i (dagi, duni, rodi) may be northern variations of datives in -e (dæge, dune, rode). On the other hand, perhaps not!

Here is an example of the adverbial conjunction in which the instrumental case is an integral part, as shown by the preceding example of æc þon for "quoque" or æc to þon (pp. 948 above, et seq.) or the very common forþon. Exactly what underlies the use of æfter here is to me a little dubious. The usual force of the Latin siquidem seems to be that of cause expressed in the general form of a condition. Yet all subsequent translators of the Latin Vulgate have taken this clause to be a clause introduced by a purely causal conjunction: since, inasmuch as, for, etc. So the glossator may have taken it here, but he translates it nevertheless by æfter, which, when used with either the dative or instrumental cases in Old English, implies either a time- or a space-relation, with time predominating. My personal suggestion is that the Latin siquidem is actually understood by the Northumbrian scribe as the equivalent of æfter in a time-relation, in a usage differing no whit from the usage in dozens of passages involving time-relations that can be introduced by æfter, æfter þaem (by, þon) þe, or the very common and apparently similar formation sipþan. I should then interpret the passage thus: "Whose wife will she be, after the seven have had her as wife?" Otherwise we should have here what might be called a nonce-construction.

IX. A real nonce-construction, as a matter of fact, is apparently forthcoming in the case offered by the instrumental with fore to denote that in reference to which an action is carried out, a true Dative of Reference idiom: "Bearn þin Drihten Crist, wyrcente fore þon (Filium tuum Dominum Christum, operantem pro quo)" (Ritual 98, 14).

X. There is finally the use of the instrumental with þerh in one instance to convey the idea of Extent of Time, a distinctly accusative idiom, if we are to judge by the standard usages elsewhere in Indo-European: "Ðoncunco þe we doeþ . . . gihaldene þerh dægi (Gratias tibi agimus . . . custoditi per diem)" (Ritual 124, 8).

In considering the reasons for such deviations from the normal OE case-constructions, whether influences from within or without, native or foreign, perhaps I am unduly pessimistic when I say that it does not seem to me that a very convincing reason is forthcoming. Glosses are queer rudimentary affairs at best, and the mere arbitrary whim of a glossator may be sufficient to account for any violation of grammatical laws.

All things considered, I should reject the possibility that they are the result of external, foreign influences. My point may be clearer if we take stock for a moment of the general facts. While it is always tempting to look for parallels in other Germanic languages, the question of date plays too important a part in the problem to be ignored. The approximate date of the early archaeological fragments (700), together with their intrinsic originality, effectively rules out the practicability of showing in them concrete evidence of outside influences on Northumbrian case-syntax, except for the Gothic—and the Gothic instrumental in Ulfilas has already become the dative. As a matter of fact, as far as this particular body of materials is concerned, only the on rodi example from the Ruthwell Cross Inscription comes into the discussion, and, as I pointed out in my notes (p. 951), this example is questionable. Moreover, the general date of the later texts—the Lindisfarne and Rushworth gospels, or the Ritual Book (ca. 950)—disposes almost as neatly of the practicability of demonstrating direct Scandinavian influence, inasmuch as the Scandinavian texts extant do not in general antedate 1200, with some minor exceptions. More important than the date, however, is the fact that the instrumental as a distinct form has ceased to concern us in Old Norse. The Old German texts, on the other hand, both Low and High, are old enough to show possible influence on these Northumbrian texts, yet I must confess that, aside from one or two interesting parallels, no particularly clear influences are suggested. The Old Saxon especially, treated exhaustively from the viewpoint of syntax, as it has been in the careful work of Behaghel,<sup>23</sup> can be seen to resemble Old English in the matter of normal functions of the instrumental case; even an Old English abnormality may be said to run parallel, witness the on duni—an holmclicū and (with less conviction on my part) the on daegi—an dag<sup>24</sup> examples cited above (p. 952). In view of the well-recognized closeness between Low German and English, this is scarcely surprising. I cannot see that the instrumental in Old High German, as referred to these Northumbrian peculiarities, is much of a problem. To be sure, we have in Old High German several cases of the instrumental with in, represented by such an idiom as Notkers in pardisu. But the amount of evidence that could be brought forward to show any actual relationship between these instrumental idioms in Northumbrian and in the Old German dialects is irritatingly scanty, nor does it seem to me that it would be possible to prove conclusively an influence either way, except to point out the patent relationship, from the standpoint of history, ethnology, language, and literature, of the English and German branches of the Germanic languages in general and of Old English and Old Saxon in particular.

<sup>23</sup> O. Behaghel—Die Syntax des Heland (Vienna, 1897).

<sup>24</sup> May we not consider the instrumental dægi, with such a form, such a background, and in such a construction, as a true locative? The Auslautsgesetze will not be unduly violated, I believe, and the whole explanation clarified. So Brugmann, Comparative Grammar of the Indo-Germanic Languages, III, §263.

In the glosses, however, where most of my examples have been found, there is a foreign influence of vast importance to be reckoned with, and that is the Latin. As I said earlier in my discussion (p. 946), the Latin texts translated comprise most of the total remains of Old Northumbrian—I should estimate at least ninety-eight percent of the whole. Consequently the slavish imitation practiced by glossators must have had overwhelming influence on the handling of many idioms in the vernacular. Whole constructions were imitated, doubtless in parrot fashion. The Latin ablative, for instance, may have prompted some of the instrumentals in the examples just considered. Yet even so, the other Old English dialects are subjected to this Latin influence, although perhaps in slightly less degree, and still they do not use the instrumental in the way the Northumbrian does. In other words, the reason why the West Saxon should use a dative to translate a Latin ablative where the Northumbrian uses an instrumental to render the same case does not seem to me to depend entirely upon Latin influence.

Rather do we have to deal here, I think, with either a fundamental carelessness or an inability of the Lindisfarne scribe to comprehend or to appreciate the usual grammatical precepts of his language in respect to case-functions. Whether this is the fault entirely of the individual glossator or the fault of the people as a whole can never be settled from our materials at hand. Before we attribute the error to the scribe, however, on the grounds of his relative literacy, let us remember that -i and -e unaccented are frequently blurred to a general -ə sound in the northerly dialects (cf. footnote 22)—a fact which may react in turn upon the written form of the word and produce easily a confusion between dative and instrumental forms in the manuscript. This slovenliness of pronunciation might account for my examples in -i, and, when wedded to the general breaking down of inflections at an early date in the northerly dialects, might account for my examples among the strong adjectives in -e, but it could hardly account for my examples in þy and þon. One important fact, moreover, must be borne in mind. With two exceptions (the example of þerh dægi in Ritual 124, 8 and of on duni in Matt. 26, 30, the latter of which bears resemblance to the Old Saxon idiom), every one of these anomalous instances of the instrumental case occurs in idioms expressed usually by the dative, both in classic West Saxon and even here in the Northumbrian. Many examples cited above occur in the Lindisfarne (practically pure Northumbrian) where the corresponding passage in the Rushworth (mixed) has the dative. In short, we are dealing here basically with a dative-instrumental blend, and we may have to look no farther for our explanation than in the interchangeability of -i and -e in northern dialects under a lack of stress. Analogy could account for the rest—analogy, too often the last refuge of the baffled scholar.

If, on the other hand, we disregard the obviously important matter of the scribe's pronunciation and inquire into his apparent indifference to the normal principles of case-syntax throughout his gloss, we merely throw the searchlight upon a recognized fact, that the more northerly Old English dialects combine archiasm and disintegration.<sup>25</sup> For this indifference is not confined merely to the functions of the dative and instrumental cases. So pronounced is the lack of discrimination between dative and accusative functions that this particular fact serves as a distinguishing characteristic of Old Northumbrian, and Callaway (op. cit., pp. 1 ff.) has even found this discrimination lacking in such a fundamentally artificial idiom as the absolute participle construction. In short, the movement which later resulted in the blending of the two cases, dative and accusative, into the Modern English "objective" case had already begun.

Yet we must not overlook the fact that, among the irregular constructions just reviewed, there are only two instances of an instrumental where we should expect an accusative, which is a far smaller proportion than can be found when we look for dative and accusative mixtures. While the Northumbrian scribe does often confuse his grammatical cases badly in these glosses, he seems to shrink from mixing instrumentals and accusatives.

Such a study, moreover, gives a sidelight interesting to the philologist at work on the history of general Indo-European cases. In the on dægi forms above mentioned we have the Old English instrumental descended directly from the Indo-European locative ending. We see also the other two component factors in the Old English instrumental—the Indo-European ablative and the Indo-European instrumental—working with a freer force and probably stronger effect, in function if not in form, than elsewhere in Old English. Of course the whole group of cases covered by the Northumbrian instrumental has already been absorbed in large measure by the dative, but the transition from instrumental to dative is not yet so completely developed in the Old Northumbrian as in the more southerly dialects of Old English.

GEORGE K. ANDERSON

Brown University

<sup>25</sup> Some excellent examples of this disintegration are brought forward in W. F. Bryan's "The Midland Present Plural Indicative Ending -e(n)," Mod. Phil., xviii, 124.

LIX

THE ADDRESS OF THE SOUL TO THE BODY

I

THERE exist in Old English a number of compilations in which an address of the soul to its body is a conspicuous feature. The best known is the poem in the Vercelli<sup>1</sup> and the Exeter Books, in which the soul returns to its body once a week and communes with it, the sinful soul reproaching it vituperatively, the righteous comforting it lovingly and joyously. The fourth Vercelli homily<sup>2</sup> has a remarkable scene, an elaborated account of the judgement of the soul at Doomsday, in which the souls address their bodies as they stand in the presence of the Judge. The Last Judgement is again the scene of an address, and that in one of the homilies presented by Assmann.<sup>3</sup> There is, finally, the Old English vision, printed by Thorpe<sup>4</sup> and Napier,<sup>5</sup> of the bringing forth of the soul,<sup>6</sup> wherein the newly-released soul of a sinner vituperates the body it has just left. To this literature, I wish to add passages from two unpublished Old English homilies, in which the address is made, not at the moment of death, as in Thorpe and Napier, nor at the Last Judgement, as in Vercelli Homily iv and in Assmann, but at some intermediate time, when the soul returns intermittently to its body for that purpose, as in the Old English poem. These two texts are Homilies II and IV of MS. Junius 85<sup>7</sup> of the Bodleian Library, and Homily XL of MS. II. 1.33 of the Cambridge University Library.<sup>8</sup>

My first text, Homilies II and IV of MS. Junius 85 (which I shall refer to hereafter as Junius) has had a strange fate. This manuscript, belonging

<sup>1</sup> George Philip Krapp, The Vercelli Book (New York, 1932), pp. 54–59. For a convenient English translation, see R. K. Gordon, Anglo-Saxon Poetry, no. 794 of Everyman's Library (London, n. d.), pp. 310–313.

<sup>2</sup> Max Förster, Die Vercelli-Homilien, Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Prosa, XII (Hamburg, 1932), 82–103.

<sup>3</sup> Bruno Assmann, Angelsächsische Homilien und Heiligenleben, Bibliothek der Angelsächsischen Prosa, III (Kassel, 1889), p. 167.

<sup>4</sup> Benjamin Thorpe, Ancient Laws and Institutes of England (London, 1849), folio. ed., pp. 466 ff.

<sup>5</sup> A. S. Napier, Wulfstan (Berlin, 1883), pp. 140–141.

<sup>6</sup> For this, see Louise Dudley, "An Early Homily on the Body and Soul Theme," JEGP, VIII (1909), 225 ff., and The Egyptian Elements in the Legend of the Body and Soul (Baltimore, 1911), pp. 91 ff.

<sup>7</sup> George Hickes, Antiquae Literaturae Septentrionalis Liber Alter, seu Humphredi Wanleii Librorum Vell. Septentrionalium, qui in Angliae Bibliothecis extant. nec non multorum Vell. Codd. Septentrionalium alibi extantium Catalogus Historico-Criticus . . . (Oxford, 1705), p. 44. (Generally referred to as 'Wanley'). Texts II and IV are really the separated parts of one homily, as I show below.

<sup>8</sup> Wanley, p. 165.

to the mid-eleventh century, seems to have suffered some misfortune in Old English times. In places the ink has faded, and the text has been inked over (twice, in fact. once by an Old English hand, and later by Junius). The manuscript must have come apart and been rebound, with the result that a whole quire has got misplaced. This quire, folios 3r-11v, contains the opening sections of the Apocalypse of Paul in an Old English translation; it presents, with certain omissions, Sections 4 to 17 of the full version,<sup>9</sup> and is thus the only western vernacular text of this form of the apocalypse before modern times.<sup>10</sup> The apocalypse breaks off abruptly in the account of the third judgement scene,<sup>11</sup> that of the impenitent and recalcitrant soul. The present folio 2v, the first page of our address of the soul to the body, of which Wanley says "Præter unam pagellam deest tota Hom.",<sup>12</sup> is now separated by the Apocalypse of Paul, Wanley's text No. III, from its continuation, which is to be found on folios 12r-17r of the manuscript in its present form. This continuation, Wanley's No. IV, he describes as "Fragmentum Hom. capite et calce truncatum." Folio 2 is a single leaf, now bound in before the present first gathering, folios 3r-11v, with which, however, it has no essential connection. Its rightful place is before the second gathering, folios 12r following, where it must have stood originally, either attached to it as its first leaf or as the last leaf of a preceding gathering, now lost. This lost gathering would have contained the body of Wulfstan Homily XLIX, the closing lines of which occupy the recto of folio 2.<sup>13</sup> As a single leaf attached at the beginning or end of a gathering, this folio could easily be misplaced in reforming the book in case it had once come apart. These circumstances explain how it is that the first folio of our homily on the address of the soul is separated from the body of the text by the accidental binding in out of place of this Old English redaction of the Apocalypse of Paul, with which it has no immediate connection. This incongruity was observed in Old English times, as the corrector, whose hand we see at work here and there in the manuscript, has erased some of the closing words of folio 2v, and has written in some connective matter,<sup>14</sup> in amplifi-

<sup>9</sup> That is, from the appeal of the sun to the middle of the third judgement scene.

<sup>10</sup> For a bibliography, see R. P. Casey, "The Apocalypse of Paul," J. of Theolog. Stud., xxxiv (1933), 1-5.

<sup>11</sup> At about line 33 of p. 534 of Montague Rhodes James, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1924). I believe, furthermore, that the beginning has been lost, and that something other than the present 2v, contained the true beginning of this Old English version of the apocalypse.

<sup>12</sup> Wanley, p. 44, under II.

<sup>13</sup> Napier, in manuscript notes written on his transcript of this Junius fragment, identified the matter on folio 2r as the conclusion of this homily, and as corresponding to the text printed by him in Wulfstan, p. 265, lines 13-20.

<sup>14</sup> See below, p. 961, note. 18.

cation of a phrase found in the preceding lines,<sup>15</sup> and in this manner has attained a sort of transition to the unrelated outcry of the sun against the sinfulness of man with which the Apocalypse of Paul begins. As there was not quite room enough at the bottom of folio 2v, the corrector ran the few extra words of this matter over at the bottom of folio 3r. By sheer coincidence, some sort of continuity was found to exist in passing from folio 11v, the abrupt truncation of the Apocalypse of Paul, to folio 12r, the actual continuation of the address of the soul. The last words of 11v are And hie hine ðanne gegretað ðæs synfullan mannes, while the first words of folio 12r are sawl and ðus cweð, which happens to make sense and give continuity, though in what follows there is no connection with the thought of folio 11v. Actually, then, Wanley's sections II and IV of MS. Junius 85 are parts of the same text. It ought to be pointed out, in addition, that they are in the same hand, writing on the same soft, greyish white velum, while Wanley's III, the Apocalypse of Paul, is in a different hand, on a more yellowish, slightly stiffer, velum.

This Junius homily is taken up principally with the matter of the addresses of the two souls to their bodies, the sinful first, and then the righteous. In this particular matter of the words of the souls, Junius is very close to Assmann's homily, though it is much fuller than the latter. The chief difference is in the setting, which I shall discuss below.<sup>16</sup> With the concluding words of the righteous soul, the homilist continues with an exhortatory section identical with that in Assmann at the same point,<sup>17</sup> then there follows a free interpretation of II Timothy 3, 1-9, and with appropriate warnings to heed diligently the last things, the homily finally is brought to a close.

My second text, that in MS. li. 1.33 of the Cambridge University Library, which I shall call Cambridge, is a rather lengthy compilation attributed to St. Augustine. A late sixteenth—or a seventeenth—century hand<sup>18</sup> has, in fact, written at the head of this homily the words Augustini Sermo. Such an ascription is easy to arrive at from the internal evidence of the text. In the very first sentence St. Augustine is invoked in the phrase swa swa Sanctus Augustinus hit ærest on bocum awrat.<sup>19</sup> Again, shortly after, as the Ubi sunt reges? is introduced, the same authority is named: Be þam se halga mann Sanctus Augustinus wæs sprecende in and þus cwæð, O homo, dic mihi: Ubi sunt reges?<sup>20</sup> Finally, the actual description of the period:ic return of the soul to its body at Eastertide, and the very words of the soul, are likewise attributed to St. Augustine: þæt is

<sup>15</sup> on þam alysende Gode ælmihtigum, se for ðinum ðingum manigfeald wite þrowode, fol. 2v, ll 15-16. <sup>16</sup> Pp. 979-980 <sup>17</sup> Assmann, p. 167, l. 102-; p. 168, l. 112.

<sup>18</sup> Wanley, p. 165, describes it as manu recenti.

<sup>19</sup> P. 409, l. 4.

<sup>20</sup> P. 410, l. 7.

easterdæg, swa ðe eadiga Augustinus þur God be þam sæde, þe þis godspel dihte, and þus cwæð.<sup>21</sup>

This particular homily is of three distinct sources. The first part, pp. 409–412, i.e., from the beginning up to the address of the soul, is a translation of some version of a homily at one time attributed to St. Augustine: Ad Fratres in Eremo Sermo LXVIII;<sup>22</sup> the third part, that which follows immediately after the address of the sinful soul, is based on another of these sermons Ad Fratres in Eremo, Number LXVI.<sup>23</sup> It is to be remembered that still another homily of this series, Number LXIX,<sup>24</sup> does contain body and soul material, closely parallel to Batiouchkof's Nonantola Latin text,<sup>25</sup> and some form of this particular homily served as the source for that account of the bringing forth of the soul which appeared in Thorpe<sup>26</sup> and in Napier,<sup>26</sup> and was the basis of Miss Dudley's study of this form of the legend.<sup>27</sup> In the Irish version of the material represented by Ad Fratres in Eremo Sermo LXIX, in both the Latin tag<sup>28</sup> and in the Irish translation,<sup>29</sup> St. Augustine is given as the source of this theme: "This is what St. Augustine says: There come two hosts to meet every soul. . . ." As Gaidoz remarks, however, a search for this in the works of St. Augustine has not been attended with success.<sup>30</sup> He means, of course, in the canonical works. It is most likely, on the other hand, that some supposititious work or works were current, bearing as their mark of authority St. Augustine's name, and containing body and soul material. It might be added in this connection that another homily dealing with the departure of the soul from the body has also been ascribed to Augustine. The rubricated title of Miss Dudley's eleventh-century Latin text of the Two Deaths and the Three Utterances<sup>31</sup> in MS Latin 2628 of the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, reads thus : INCIPIUNT OMELIE BEATI AUGUSTINI. DE ANIMA EXEUNTE DE CORPORE. The interest of the saint in problems connected with the soul and the body is clear from his authentic writings, and surely his reputation in patristic literature was large enough to draw to it works not his. Volumes XXXIX and XL of the

<sup>21</sup> P. 412, l. 20.

<sup>22</sup> Migne, Patr. Lat., XL, col. 1354. For this identification I am indebted to Miss Eleanor H. Kellogg of New York University.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., col. 1352. Section 1.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., cols. 1355–57.

<sup>25</sup> Th. Batiouchkof, "Le Débat de l'Âme et du Corps," Romania, XX (1891), 9–10, 576–578.

<sup>26</sup> See above, notes 4 and 5.

<sup>27</sup> Louise Dudley, op. cit., J.E.G.P., VIII (1909), 225 ff. Bibliography on p. 225.

<sup>28</sup> H. Gaidoz, "Le Débat du Corps et de l'Âme en Irlande," Revue Celtique, X (1889), 466: Dicens Augustinus; variant ut dixit Augustinus dicens.

<sup>29</sup> Robert Atkinson, The Passions and Homilies from Leabhar Breac (Royal Irish Academy, Todd Lecture Series), II (Dublin, 1887), p. 507.

<sup>30</sup> Op. cit., p. 465.

<sup>31</sup> Louise Dudley, The Egyptian Elements in the Legend of the Body and Soul (Baltimore, 1911), pp. 164–165.

Patrologia Latina are a rich treasury of these texts, some of which are of such a nature as to scandalize their editor and draw from him an indignant protest against the Augustinian ascription.

Note: In printing the two OE texts I have expanded scribal abbreviations, indicating them in the usual fashion. The sign for the conjunction, "7", is silently expanded, and the punctuation is mine. Emendations are confined to those necessary for intelligent reading.

MS Junius 85

MEN<sup>1</sup> ða leofestan, we geleornodon<sup>2</sup> on godcundum gewritum þæt<sup>3</sup> æghwylces monnes sawul æfter þisse weorulde scyl gesecegan<sup>4</sup> eft<sup>5</sup> (ð)ane<sup>6</sup> lic(homan)<sup>7</sup> and<sup>7</sup> þissum<sup>7</sup> wordum ærest þus sprecaþ and cweð þæs synfullan monnes sawle: 'Gehyrstu,<sup>8</sup> earma senfulla<sup>9</sup> lichoma, ic cyrre to ðe to ðan þæt ic ðe werge<sup>10</sup> and þine ungeleafulnesse ðe gesece.<sup>11</sup> Forhwon,<sup>12</sup> earma lichoma, lufodesðu þone feond, ðæt wæs se<sup>13</sup> diofol? Forhwon lyfdest þu þam (ðe)<sup>14</sup> þe forlærde<sup>15</sup> þurh synne-lustas? And<sup>16</sup> forhwon, earma lichoma, noldest þu gelyfan (on þa)m<sup>17</sup> alysende Gode ælmihtigum, se for ðinum ðingum manigfeald wite þrowode?' <And hio þanne gyt clypað, seo><sup>18</sup> [fol. 12r] sawl and ðus

<sup>1</sup> Folio 2v. Large rubricated initial M. On the condition of this page Napier remarks: "The same late hand as on fol. 1 (I think it is Junius), has inked over the whole of this page with the exception of a few words, and it is, in most cases, impossible to see what was underneath. . . . I am not sure that in one or two places here and on folio 1, an older hand had not inked over the letters before Junius." Quoted from Napier's notes on his transcript of this text.

<sup>2</sup> ge superscript.

<sup>3</sup> þ inked over; space for at least two letters after þ.

<sup>4</sup> -egegan eft dane lic in another hand [neither the scribe, the reviser, nor Junius] and larger letters. Napier remarks: "-egegan ist auf Rasur, eft dane dagegen scheint nicht auf Rasur zu sein." The reading of line 27, hio hine eft seceþ, suggests that the original reading here may have been gesecan or gesecean, but that in revision and overwriting, in Old English times, the present reading, gesecean, resulted.

<sup>5</sup> See preceding note.

<sup>6</sup> MS. dane; see note 4.

<sup>7</sup> lic in another(?) hand in the right margin, line 4; between the left margin, line 5, and þissum there is space for ten or eleven letters, of which "and" (7) can be made out at about two letters distance to the left of þissum. The other letters are too faint to be traced. Napier remarks: "I almost fancy I can see faint traces of homan (or haman) at the beginning of the line, but it may be fancy."

<sup>8</sup> MS. gihyrstu. Napier remarks: "gihyrstu all inked over; the i was originally e."

<sup>9</sup> -fulla is very faint, but discernible, sen- is probably the original spelling, though the letters have been inked over.

<sup>10</sup> = wierge, "curse"

<sup>11</sup> ge- superscript. Gesece very faint.

<sup>12</sup> h superscript. <sup>13</sup> Superscript.

<sup>14</sup> Napier remarks: "Hinter þam Rasur von etwa zwei Buchstaben. Ich glaube es war ðe."

<sup>15</sup> Napier notes that Junius, in re-inking forlærde, made fof out of for.

<sup>16</sup> 7 inserted within the line.

<sup>17</sup> Space for about seven letters before alysende I can make out m clearly. I supply on þa.

<sup>18</sup> And hie þanne gyt clypað seo is pure conjecture, and is supplied on the basis of lines 6-7 of folio 12r. The present reading of the manuscript is not original, and is the attempt of the reviser to bridge over the gap between folios 2v and 3r after the two were accidentally bound up together in this order in the present make-up of the manuscript. After þrowode the present reading is. *God gefæste .xxxx. dage<s?> <t>o->s<o>mne and after ðam fæstene he self w<æ>s on> rode gefæstnod his fet and his hand . . . ge næghum and ðurh ð ð<row>unge he us [continued at bottom of folio 3r] <w>olde of hylle<witum?> alysan. The passage is difficult to read, and the conjectured letters of ða ðrowunge . . . wolde of hellewitum are Napier's, the rest mine. On the state and significance of this matter, see above, pp. 958-959.*

- 10 cweð: 'Gehyrstu, hearda<sup>19</sup> lichoma, þu ungeleaffulla, sceawa on me to hwylcere<sup>20</sup> susle ðu eart toward Ic ðe eft onfo, and þu me, and wit þonne butu sculon beon birnende in ðæm ecan fyre.' And hio þanne gyt þus clypað and cweð. 'Geherstu, forworhta<sup>21</sup> lichoma, forhwan lærde þe deofol to helle, butan þæt þu fela yfela dydest? Forhwon noldest ðu, forwordena and eac forwyrhta, geheran ða godcundan lare, þe þe lærdon to Godes rice? And þu noldest gecerran to him Ac þu, earma lichoma, þu eart deofles hus, forðan ðu deofles willen worhtest. Þu wære yrres hyrde<sup>22</sup> and oferhydig.' Þonne cweþ seo sawl, 'Wa me, forðæm ic þa awirgedan þinc mid ðe lufode! Wa me, forðæm ic ða towardan [fol. 12v] þingc ne gemunde! Wa me, forðæm þe ic me hellewite ne ondred! Wa me, forðæm þe ic heofonarice ne lufode! Wa me, forðæm þe ic gefafode ealle ða yfel þe þu dydest! Forþon ic nu for ðinum gewyrhtum eom cwylmed,<sup>23</sup> and for þinum yfelum dædum ic eom on hellewite bescofen. Ic wæs Godes dohter, and angla swistor gescapen, and þu me hafæst forworht, þæt ic eam deofles bearn, and deoflum gelic. Forþon ic ðe wrege and þe ofercyme mid wærignesse,<sup>24</sup> forþæm
- 25 þu me forworhtest and awergedne geddydest.'
- Þonne, mæn ða leofestan, ungelice sio gode and seo clæne sawl gret<sup>25</sup> þone lichaman sioððan hio him ofalæd biþ. Hio hine eft seceþ, and þanne him þus to cweð: 'Gehyrstu, eadiga lichama, and þu un [fol. 13r] synnig; ic com o ðe toþan þæt ic þe hyrige<sup>26</sup> and pine geselignesse þe secge. Geherstu, goda lichoma and þu geleaffulla, þu wære godes brytta,<sup>27</sup> forðon þu Godes willan worhtest; þu þæt georne beoðdest<sup>28</sup> dagum and neahtum.' Hio ðonne eft, seo gode sawl, him þus to cwæð: 'Geherstu, gesæliga lichoma; wel þe, wel þe, forðam þu þinum fconde deofle ne geherdest, se þe wolde forlæran þurh synnelustas! Ac ðu gyt<sup>29</sup> swiðor ongæte<sup>30</sup> and heolde þa godcundan lare, þa ðe laþedon to þam upplcan rice on
- 30 heofonas.' Hio hine ðanne<sup>31</sup> gyt heræþ, sio clæne sawl, þone<sup>32</sup> lichoman, 'Geherstu, gebletsoda lichoma, sceawa on me to hwilcum setle þu eart toward. And þin med [fol. 13v] is in me<sup>33</sup> fægere gesionne, þæt þu most simble eces eardes brucan in blisse.' And hio hine ðonne get greteþ<sup>34</sup> and to cwyð, 'Wel þe, goda lichoma, forþam þu me hafast medomne gedon, þæt<sup>35</sup> ic eam mare manegum
- 40 siðum þara micelra goda ðe nis æniges mannes mubes gemet, þæt þæt asecgan mæge, ne næniges<sup>36</sup> mannes mod, þæt hit aðæncen cunne, hwilce þa gefean earon<sup>37</sup> þe God gegerwod<sup>38</sup> hafað eallum ðam mannum þe hine her on wurulde

<sup>19</sup> Cf. Atkinson, Passions and Homilies from Leabhar Breac, p. 511, where the soul addresses its body as "O stubborn body."

<sup>20</sup> MS. hwylcere; y<sup>1</sup> struck out by original scribe. <sup>21</sup> r<sup>2</sup> superscript.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. Atkinson, op. cit., pp. 511-512, where the soul twice calls its body "maintenance of anger."

<sup>23</sup> cyl erased before cwylmed.

<sup>24</sup> Napier remarks: "The i has been inked over by Junius. What was underneath I can't make out with certainty; it may possibly have been i, or it may have been another letter." MS. wærignesse.

<sup>25</sup> See below, p. 963, note 7. <sup>26</sup> = herige.

<sup>27</sup> Interesting occurrence of this poetical and Anglian word in a prose homily.

<sup>28</sup> Between s and t part of a letter has been erased.

<sup>29</sup> One or two letters erased after gyt.

<sup>30</sup> The original reading was ongæte, but this has been inked over by Junius to read ongete.

<sup>31</sup> e superscript.

<sup>32</sup> MS. þonne; one n is to be deleted.

<sup>33</sup> A letter erased after me.

<sup>34</sup> A later form; cf. the earlier above, line 26.

<sup>35</sup> A letter erased before ic.

<sup>36</sup> ni superscript.

<sup>37</sup> On this Anglian form see Gerhard Heidemann, "Die Flexion des Verb. Subst. im Ags.," Archiv für das Studium der Neueren Sprachen, cxlvii (1924), 33-34.

<sup>38</sup> = gegearwod.

lufiað and lufian willað. þu eart halig lichoma and wæstmberende; and þu eart Godes hus, forðæm þe God wunaþ on þam and eardað ðe his bebodu fylgiaþ and healdað. Ðu wære ðæt scarepuste scyrsex,<sup>39</sup> forþon ðu cuðest synna þe fram- 45 [fol. 14r]—aceorfan.<sup>7</sup> And hio þonne get cweð, seo sawl, 'Gehersðu, min se leofesta lichoma. Ic wæs Godes dohter and ængla swystor, and þu m<e><sup>40</sup> hafast gemedemod monegum siþum And for ðinum gewyrtum ic eom in heofonarice, þær is leoht and<sup>41</sup> ece lif and unaspringenlic gefea. Forðon, ic gelomlice cume to þe mid miclum geleafan and mid sibbe, þæt ic þe ðancas do 50 and secge. And ic þe bletsie, and þu bist gebletsad mid me, and ic mid ðe, a in ecnesse.<sup>7</sup>

þanne, mæn ða leofestan, glæwlice us is to ongitanne þa word þe mon us mid gretan wile, godes oððe yfeles, uren ærgewyrhtum. . . .<sup>42</sup>

<sup>39</sup> = scearsear

<sup>40</sup> MS þum.

<sup>42</sup> Concerning the continuation of this homily, see above, p. 959.

<sup>41</sup> g erased before and.

Cambridge University Library, MS. II.1 33

Soðlice,<sup>1</sup> þis halige gewrit cwyð þæt ealle þas fordonan and heora gelican on mycelre unare beoð þar [i.e., in hell] gecwylmede, forþan þe hi heora lif ær mid unrihte leofedon on þisum deadlican life, and næfre nan dædbote don noldon.
 And hig þonne þar nane reste nabað, dæges ne nihtes, butan on þære drihtenlican 5 æristes tide, þa we weorþiað and mærsiað ymbe twelfmonð. þæt is ðe<sup>2</sup> easterdæg, swa ðe<sup>2</sup> eadiga Augustinus þur<sup>3</sup> God be þam sæde, þe þis godspel dihte, and þus cwæð: "Dominice resurrectionis mane," inquit, "hora Dominus noster Iesus Cristus resurrexit a mortuis, ille omnes anime iustorum ueniunt uisitare sepulchra sua." Nabbað þa sawla [p. 413] witodlice nane oðre reste, þe on witum beoð, butan on þam drihtenlican æriste. On þam dæge þe Drihten of deaþe aras, þonne mot anra 10 gehwylces mannes sawl, ge soðfæstes mannes ge synfulles, þa byrgenstowe gesecan þe ðe<sup>2</sup> lichama<sup>4</sup> on aled wæs. Vton nu þi gehyran hwæt ðe<sup>2</sup> gode<sup>5</sup> gast specð<sup>6</sup> to þam lichaman, þonne he him ærest to cymð; þonne gret<sup>7</sup> he hine þus þysum wordum: "Bene ualeas, bene sis, quia bonum uas electio <nis>"<sup>8</sup> mihi fuisti, amice dilectissime, quia bene mecum egisti in seculo." þæt is, "Hal westu, 15 min se leofa freond, þu þe on þisum restest! Hwæt, ðu wære me god gefera<sup>9</sup> þa hwile þe ic on worulde wæs mid þe, and þu wære me god fætels and gecoren. Eall swa ic wolde þæt þu wære godes donde, eall þæt þu me gefafodest. And þu a Godes engla larum geornor hyrsumedest þonne þu æfre deofles tihtingum oððe costnungum gefaþa wære; ac þu him eallum wiðsoce æfre on uncrum life. Soðlice 20 þonne ic wolde þæt ðu fæstest oððe ælmeßan sealdest for Godes lufan, oððe

<sup>1</sup> Page 412, line 13. For the preceding sections of this homily, see above, p. 960 ff.

<sup>2</sup> ðe for se is characteristic of a twelfth-century text.

<sup>3</sup> Unstressed form; cf. N.E.D., through.

<sup>4</sup> h superscript.

<sup>5</sup> se goda would be expected in Old English; see se leofa, l. 16. Another sign that this is a transitional text.

<sup>6</sup> is before specð marked with punctum delens and partially erased.

<sup>7</sup> = greted; see Joseph and Elizabeth Mary Wright, Old English Grammar (Oxford, 1925), 3rd ed., §305.

<sup>8</sup> MS. electio.

<sup>9</sup> a originally e, but altered by original scribe to a by the addition of another stroke.

- ænig god wære donde, eall þu þæt dūdest<sup>10</sup>: earme þu gefrefrodest, nacode þu scruddest,<sup>11</sup> untrume þu geneosedest, þearfan þu feddest; Godes cyrcan gelome þu sohtest; Godes þeowana freond þu wære, and hi þe leote wære<sup>12</sup> and weorþe,
- 25 Godes þam halgum gewitum þu georne ghyrdest, and þare laic hlystest, þe hig Gode <s><sup>13</sup> folce bodedon and sædon. Falles þyses þu wære me geþafiend,<sup>14</sup> and mid eallum þisum gegyredest þæt ic on godre reste þin beo abidende, and hwænne þu [p. 414] scealt of deape arisan on þam mycelan deige,<sup>15</sup> forþan þu eart Godes handgeworc, gescapenum<sup>16</sup> unc bam. Geieste nu on sibbe, and ic eft
- 30 hwyf to þe; and ic þonne mot beon mid þe æfre siððen, and þu þonne gesyhst hwylc wuldor and hwylce wynsumnesse un <c><sup>17</sup> togeanes gegearwod hæfð Drihten Hælend Crist on þære heofenlican ecan wununge, þar næfre nan ende ne cumað þæs wuldres. Þæs wuldres brucað æfre þa þe Godes willan wyrcað on þisum life, and hi þær beoð scinende and lyhtende, swa swa sunne on þam ecan
- 35 life, a on woru <l><sup>18</sup>. And þu þonne on þam mid me leofast, a butan ende, and wyt þonne onfoð þære mede on þam ecan wuldre þe ðu unc her gecarnodest.”
- Vngelice cwyde þonne þysum byð þes synfullan mannes sawl spreccende to þam synfullan lichaman, þonne hu þus<sup>19</sup> cwyð hreowlicere stefne þysum wordum: “Wa þe, earme lichama min, wa þe! forþan þe þu worhtest mycel yfel mid me,
- 40 þa þu on life wære and on eorðan, and ic unlæde wæs þin þafiend<sup>20</sup> þinra hæta. Þu noldest næfre beon gehyrsum Godes engla larum wið deofles costnungum. He þe lærde þæt þu manigfealde synne wære begangende, and þu him þæs gefafa wære. And æt ærestan he þe lærde mid his folum<sup>21</sup> lotwrencum oferetas and oferdruncennysse and morgenmettas and synlice lustas and stalan and þyfa<sup>22</sup>
- 45 and lease gewinessa and morðslyhtas and manaðas and yfel gewit and facn and tælnysa and reafac and oþer manigfealde [p. 415] yfel þysum ungelice. And þu wære a unsibbe sawende betweox mannum. And þu noldest þyssera yfela næfre geswican ær þines deapes ende. Lige nu on þysum duste afulæd and forrotad;

<sup>10</sup> A French spelling for dydest; cf. Karl Luick, Historische Grammatik der Englischen Sprache (Leipzig, 1914), §57.

<sup>11</sup> c superscript. u for y another French spelling; see preceding note. It is barely possible, of course, that scruddest is a new formation from scrud, and is thus the earliest recorded instance of the verb “to shroud.” On the other hand, the earliest observed instances of this are from the fourteenth century, cf. N.E.D., shroud, v.

<sup>12</sup> e altered by original scribe from e MS reads: leofe and were and weorþe. wære is probably a transitional form for wæron. I have, therefore, deleted the first and.

<sup>13</sup> MS gode.

<sup>14</sup> geþafiende would normally be expected in Old English; see abidende in the next line, but þafiend again in line 40.

<sup>15</sup> On this form, see Luick, Historische Grammatik, §257.2 and note 2.

<sup>16</sup> Possibly this agrees with deige, in which case the sentence is to be translated thus: “In all this thou wert consenting to me, and with all this thou didst make it possible for me await thee in good rest, when thou shalt arise from death, because thou art God’s handiwork, on the great day which is destined for us both.” More probably gescapenum unc bam is, as Professor Max Foister suggests, an attempt to render an ablative absolute in the Latin original, and is to be taken with Godes handgeworc: “because thou art God’s handiwork, who created us both.”

<sup>17</sup> MS. un.

<sup>18</sup> MS. woruð.

<sup>19</sup> Another spelling of u for y; see above, notes 10 and 11. <sup>20</sup> See above, note 14.

<sup>21</sup> Probably a miswriting of fulum, though it is not inconceivably an error for feolum. The inflected form of feola is very rare, however; but see esenfela (2), in T. Northcote Toller’s Supplement to Bosworth-Toller’s An Anglo-Saxon Dictionary. Another possibility is that folum is an early French spelling for fulum, with o for O.E. u. This occurs usually in the case of short u only, as long u, when it is not retained, is generally represented by ou. See Luick, §57.2. <sup>22</sup> y altered from e.

and ic eom gecwylmed and forbærned dæghwamlice on hellewitum. Forþan, domesdæg is wel neah, þe þu arisan scealt, and ic þonne cume to þe, and þu 50 þonne onfehst min, mid þinum yfelum dædum þe þu ær geworhtest on þisum middanearde, and wyt þonne beoð mid deofle, and wyt þar beoð gecwylmede and getintregode butan ælcum ende, æfre to worulde.<sup>7</sup>

La, þu man þe þis nu gehyrest, forhta nu, ic bidde, and ondræd for þinum synnum and for þinum gymeleastum þa hwile þe þu þyssere tide fyrst hæbbe, 55 and efst nu swiðe, and gecyr to dædbote and to hreowsunge þinra synna, ærþan þe þu sy belocen beforan þines lifes durum, þæt þu mage onfon þære wulderfullan mede on þam ecan life, þe us togeanes is gearcod on heofenarice . . .<sup>23</sup>

<sup>23</sup> P. 415, l. 17. For what follows, see above, p. 960.

II

In the Old English literature of the address of the soul to the body, as distinct from that of the debate proper,<sup>1</sup> there are at least three traditions concerning the time at which the soul makes an address to its body: (1) at the hour of death, (2) at regular intervals (e.g., once a week) after death; (3) at the Last Judgement.

The first tradition is represented by that vision in Homily xxix of the Wulfstan collection,<sup>2</sup> and Thorpe's homily in the Ancient Laws and Institutes, wherein the death of the wicked soul is described. As the soul attempts to leave the body, it beholds the demons waiting to receive it; it is aghast and turns back in despair, crying out, "Woe is me!", and reproaching the body for their sinful life. Thereupon the devils bring forth the soul and carry it off to eternal darkness. This address occurs, then, before the soul has actually come forth from the body.<sup>3</sup> In the Irish version of this homily, there appear long imprecatory passages addressed by the awaiting devils to the soul at the hour of death. When the soul does come forth from the body, they force it to return to it; whereupon the soul heaps violent abuse upon its body. But the body now replies, and meets this abusive outburst, overwhelming the soul with a scathing counterattack.<sup>4</sup> Finally, as the wicked soul passes into the

<sup>1</sup> This came to its full development in Middle English times. The development of the address itself, the interrelationship of the various texts of the address, and the relation of the address to the debate, are being fully studied by Miss Eleanor H. Kellogg, of New York University. I confine myself to a consideration of the time at which the address is made.

<sup>2</sup> See above, p. 957, notes 4 and 5.

<sup>3</sup> In another of the Wulfstan homilies, Number XLVI (pp. 235-237), the body, rather than the soul, cries out just before the separation. This is a variant of the death scene from the Apocalypse of Paul, with which is blended some material from the theme of the Three Utterances; on this, see Rudolph Willard, Two Apocrypha in Old English Homilies, Beiträge zur Englischen Philologie, xxx (Leipzig, 1935), pp. 74-76.

<sup>4</sup> Atkinson, Passions and Homilies from Leabhar Breac, p. 512.

hands of the awaiting demons, who will hale it off to hell, "the soul, cursing, and being cursed by the body, goes out from it among the demons, and then the body says to the soul, 'Go now into the hands of demons . . .'," and in dismissing it, the body elaborates on the torments into which the soul will come.<sup>5</sup> In the parallel episode of the righteous man, however, the only address made is that of the angels, who cheer the soul on its way.<sup>6</sup>

The origin of this first tradition is apparently that account of the two deaths which is so moving an episode in the Apocalypse of Paul.<sup>6a</sup> It has had a profound effect upon western Christendom, and did much to shape the popular imagination as it dwelt upon the mystery of death and the destiny of the soul, and the manner of man's leaving this world.

The second tradition is that of a more or less frequent return of the soul to the body, that it may comfort or reproach it. This was recognized by Batiouchkof to be an extension of the periodic respite from the pains of hell,<sup>7</sup> which came to be so marked a feature of the Apocalypse of Paul. Batiouchkof approached this matter chiefly, as this was the principal<sup>8</sup> Latin version known to him, from the very popular and widely spread, though late, Redaction iv of the apocalypse, wherein the Respite is weekly and dominical. The full versions of this apocalypse readily accessible at that time were Tischendorf's Greek text, Perkins's and Zingerle's translations of the Syriac, and the Old Slavic version.<sup>9</sup> Naturally enough, these texts, though illuminating, were too remote to be considered as having had an immediate influence on our tradition in the West, especially as there was at hand that widely known and contemporary<sup>10</sup> Latin version which had made its way into the principal western vernacular languages.<sup>11</sup> It was not until two years after the appearance

<sup>5</sup> Ibid., p. 513.

<sup>6</sup> Ibid., p. 514 In the Irish version of the Two Deaths, after the Third Utterance the sinful soul goes round its body on the left, and curses it before taking final leave of it; Carl Marstrander, "The Two Deaths," Ériu, v (1911), 123, and Willard, Two Apocrypha, p. 45 [h]

<sup>6a</sup> James, Apocryphal New Testament, pp. 531-534.

<sup>7</sup> Th Batiouchkof, "Le Débat de l'âme et du Corps," Romania, xx (1891), 33-34.

<sup>8</sup> Brandes, Visio S. Pauli, pp. 65-80, published only two Latin texts Redactions i and iv. Redaction i has been shown to be two distinct texts, but neither of them is of such a nature as to alter Batiouchkof's impression of the sources in the Latin versions of the Apocalypse of Paul of our Body and Soul legend. The Latin form of the apocalypse generally known in print was Redaction iv. The whole matter of the various Latin texts and of their interrelationship is now set forth by Dr. H. Theodore Silverstein, Visio Sancti Pauli: The History of the Apocalypse in Latin together with Nine Texts, Studies and Documents, ed. Kirsopp and Silva Lake, iv (London, 1935).

<sup>9</sup> Romania, xx, 18 and notes, 1, 3, and 5.

<sup>10</sup> Contemporary, roughly speaking, with the Old English texts treated by Batiouchkof.

<sup>11</sup> Romania, xx, 22, 32.

of Batiouchkof's study in Romania, xx, that James brought forth his edition of the Latin text of the apocalypse from MS. Nouv. acq. Lat. 1631 of the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris, thus giving scholars for the first time a western text, and in Latin at that, of the full version of the Apocalypse of Paul.<sup>12</sup> Batiouchkof recognized the difference in structure and emphasis between the full (Greek, Syriac, and Old Slavic) redactions of the Apocalypse of Paul and the abbreviated redactions; but because of the tremendous vogue of the abbreviated Latin redactions, he recognized them as the western form of the apocalypse, and he derived from them, and not from the long versions, the idea of a return of the soul to the body during the weekly period of respite.<sup>13</sup> The addresses of the souls to their bodies he derived from the farewell of the soul as found in the stories of its separation from the body at the hour of death,<sup>14</sup> and from the account of the two deaths, which is so conspicuous a feature of the long versions of the Apocalypse of Paul.<sup>15</sup> The order of these addresses, the sinful soul first, and then the righteous, as in the Debate material and in the Vercelli-Exeter poem, he would have explained as following the order of the introduction of the newly released souls in the abbreviated redactions of the Apocalypse of Paul. That this order, as for instance in Redaction iv, was not that of the full versions of the apocalypse, he knew; he accounted for it, however, as resulting from the process of condensation which attended the formation of the abbreviated redactions, and which brought about a change in perspective, consequent on the concentration in hell of the whole St. Paul's experiences in the other-world.<sup>16</sup> Now that we have the full Latin version of the vision of Paul and the Cambridge Old English text of the address of the soul of the body, we are in position to see that the tradition represented by the Greek, Syriac, and Slavic texts existed also in the West in Latin, and, as I can show from MS. Junius 85, in Old English as well. In the light of this, I propose to re-examine this feature of the address legend, namely, of the time at which the soul makes an address to its body, and to discuss anew its origins.

After St. Paul has been shown the torments of the damned, and while he is still in the pit of hell, he sees the damned weeping, and hears them cry out, "Lord God, have mercy upon us." The heavens open, and St. Michael comes down with all the host of angels. He addresses them and rebukes them at first; then, yielding to their entreaties, he leads St. Paul and the whole company of heaven in a united petition that the damned be given some alleviation of their pains in hell. At length the heavens

<sup>12</sup> Montague Rhodes James, Apocrypha Anecdota, Texts and Studies, II, 3 (Cambridge, 1893), pp. 1-42.

<sup>13</sup> Romania, xx, 34.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid., 5 ff.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., 34.

<sup>16</sup> Romania, xx, 23.

open a second time, and the Son of Man descends, crowned with a diadem. Those in torment plead earnestly with Him for respite. He rebukes them for having spurned His grace and neglected their opportunities during their lifetime, and, in a passage remarkably like the Ego te O homo,<sup>17</sup> He enumerates all that He did for man, setting in contrast man's ingratitude. In the end, at the repeated tears and entreaties of St. Paul, St. Michael, the host of heaven, and of the souls in torment, He of His mercy grants unto all those that are in torment<sup>18</sup> refreshment for a day and a night for ever on the day whereon He arose from the dead.

The extant recensions of the long version of this apocalypse show many variants as to the duration of the Respite. These range all the way from the Urūmiah and Vatican Syriac texts, wherein no respite is declared,<sup>19</sup> to the fourth Armenian redaction, in which hell is destroyed, and all the sinners released. In between are the Coptic, with the Respite extending from Easter to Ascension, the Ethiopic, wherein only one single night is granted, and the Harvard Syriac, in which repose is given for a day and a night on Sunday for ever.<sup>20</sup> The reading of the Latin, a day and a night at Easter, as in the Paris manuscript (which here is supported by the Slavic), Casey holds to be the best reading.

In the abbreviated Latin versions the release is to occur each Sunday, and the exact extent of each respite is accurately defined:

Nunc propter Mychaelem archangelum, et Paulum dilectissimum meum, et propter omnes fratres uestros sanctos, qui in mundo offerunt oblaciones pro uiuis et defunctis, maxime autem per meam misericordiam et propter bonitatem meam, do uobis requiem omnibus qui estis in penis nocte dominice diei et refrigerium usque in perpetuum de hora nona sabbati usque ad secundam feriam <hore prime>.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>17</sup> Patr. Lat., xxxix, col. 2207. See Albert Stanburrough Cook, The Christ of Cynewulf (Boston, 1900), p. 210, and Rudolph Willard, "Vercelli Homili VIII and the Christ," PMLA, xlii (1927), 314 ff.

<sup>18</sup> Montague Rhodes James, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1924), pp. 547-549, sections 43 and 44. For a discussion of the theology (popular and sentimental) of the Respite, and of its early history, see Arturo Graf, "A Proposito della 'Visio Pauli'," Giornale Storico della Letteratura Italiana, xi (1888), 344-362.

<sup>19</sup> This might be explained as accidental, and as resulting from a lacuna observable in the text at this point. Casey feels that this omission is probably to be attributed to the deliberate intention of the redactor, who was not in sympathy with the idea of the Respite, and who handled his material clumsily; Jl. Theolog. Stud., xxxiv, 18-19.

<sup>20</sup> Casey, op. cit., gives these variants succinctly.

<sup>21</sup> Not in MS.; added from the related text in MS. 20 of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. I quote from MS. Latin 2625 of the Staatsbibliothek, Munich. This text belongs to Brandes Redaction III (Visio S. Pauli, pp. 29-34). The existence of this text of the apocalypse has been overlooked, because it was not listed in the catalogues of manuscripts in

At some time, then, between the long Latin versions<sup>22</sup> and the later abbreviated forms<sup>23</sup> of this apocalypse, two important changes took place in the details of the Respite: the release became weekly instead of annual, and its duration became accurately defined as extending from the ninth hour of Saturday to the first hour of Monday.<sup>24</sup>

With the change from an annual to a hebdomedal release of the soul from the pains of hell, the basis for the Respite has itself changed; its sanction is now less a memorial of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, and more the great reverence in which Sunday is to be held. So, at least, we are to judge from Redaction IV, the most popular and widely spread of the brief versions,<sup>25</sup> the keynote of which is the opening declaration: Dies dominicus dies est electus, in quo gaudent angeli et archangeli maior diebus ceteris.<sup>26</sup> The whole moral significance of this redaction is thus focused on the high dignity of Sunday, and the granting of the weekly respite becomes the central feature and climax of the St. Paul's experiences in hell. Some of the redactions emphasize still further the the Munich library. A page containing the beginning of the apocalypse is missing. The text now opens abruptly, folio 56r, in the midst of a description of the hundred-headed infernal dragon, which it calls Pathmot or Pathinot (see Brandes, op. cit., p. 26 and p. 102, last note). The conclusion of the preceding text, a Pseudo-Melitus Assumption of the Virgin (Tischendorf's B-text [cf. James, Apocryphal New Testament, p. 194 and 209]), is also lost, so that the cataloguer, who had caught the rubricated title of the Assumption, and reasoned from the absence of any rubricated title or break later in the text, assumed, therefore, that the remainder of the book was occupied with this same matter. This loss of a leaf between folios 55 and 56 is not at all apparent to one who is not actually reading the text carefully. The missing portion of the Assumption and of the Apocalypse of Paul (judging from the closely related text in MS. 20 of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge) is just enough to fill easily the missing folio. The numbering of the manuscript has been done since the loss of this page, as it is continuous without break: folio 55v is the last page at present of the Assumption, and folio 56r is the truncated beginning of the Apocalypse of Paul. This Manuscript, ascribed by the catalogue to the thirteenth century, is a remarkable little volume (its dimensions are 10.15×7 cm.), in that its contents are almost entirely apocryphal matter: the Gospel of Nicodemus, the Infancy Gospel, the Signs of the Doom, the Sunday Epistle, the Assumption of the Virgin, and Redaction III of the Apocalypse of Paul. It must have been as much an entertaining as an edifying addition to the monastery library at Aldersbach, to which it formerly belonged. This text of the Sunday Epistle, fol. 39 ff., is to be added to the list of Latin Manuscripts of this document given by E. Renou in his article in Cabrol's Dictionnaire; see below, note 31.

---

<sup>22</sup> The Paris text, which exists in an eighth-century manuscript, "has been assigned on philological grounds to the fifth or sixth century, but may be earlier"; Casey, Jl. of Theolog. Stud., xxxiv, 2.

<sup>23</sup> Before the twelfth century, certainly; cf. H. Theodore Silverstein, "The Vision of St Paul," Speculum, viii (1933), 354.

<sup>24</sup> So I translate de hora nona sabbati usque ad secundam feriam hore prime.

<sup>25</sup> Speculum, viii, 354.

<sup>26</sup> Brandes, Visio S. Pauli, p. 75, ll. 1-2.

honor and reverence due to the Lord's Day by adding, from the Benedictions of Sunday,<sup>27</sup> a passage in praise of Sunday and, in contrast, in dispraise of Friday,<sup>28</sup> while MS. Latin 12005 of the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Munich, adds from the Sunday Epistle itself the curses and punishments pronounced against those who disregard the day.<sup>29</sup> This shift from the high worth of Easter to that of Sunday as the sanction for the Respite, is not so much, originally, a difference in essence as in emphasis. Sunday took on its great significance because of the Resurrection, of which it is the weekly memorial. But the increased and increasing respect for Sunday, and the formalized and intensified definition of the honor due to the day, resulted in deflecting emphasis from the Resurrection, which gave the day its significance, and for which it was made a holy day, to the Day itself, the Dies Dominicus, the right observance of which is zealously to be guarded and taught.<sup>30</sup> That is the lesson, not only of the Apocalypse of Paul in Redactions III and IV, but of the Sunday Epistle as well, which had such tremendous influence in the Middle Ages and even up to our day.<sup>31</sup>

The Sunday Epistle is a symptom of the great Judaizing and Sabatarian movement of the sixth and seventh centuries that engendered it, and the Epistle in turn contributed to the advanced stages of this

<sup>27</sup> Brandes, op cit, pp. 101-102, On the Benedictions of Sunday or the Dignatio diei Dominici, as they are also called, see Les Bénédictiones du Dimanche, by H. Dumaine, in Cabrol's Dictionnaire, IV, 986-990, Robert Preibsch, M.L.R., II (1906), 143 (no. 14), and the very fine text, De Die Dominico, recently published by Dom André Wilmart from MS. Regina Latin 49 of the Vatican Library, in Analecta Reginensia, Studi e Testi, LXXX, (Città del Vaticano, 1933), pp. 111-112.

<sup>28</sup> See Israel Levy, "La Recommandation de Vendredi," Méluine, IV (1888-1889), coll. 133-135 and 204.

<sup>29</sup> Folio 191r. For much the same thing in twelfth-century English, see the homily, In Diebus Dominicis, from MS. Lambeth 487, published by Richard Morris, Old English Homilies: First Series, EETS, XXIX (London, 1867), pp. 41-47.

<sup>30</sup> On Sunday and Sunday Observance, and the contrast between the joyous and free early apostolic, and the later highly restricted and formalized, observance of Sunday, see the extensive article by H. Dumaine, Dimanche, in Fernand Cabrol's Dictionnaire d'Archéologie Chrétienne et du Liturgie (Paris, 1921), IV, coll. 858-994.

<sup>31</sup> On the Sunday Epistle, see Robert Preibsch, "The chief Sources of Some Anglo-Saxon Homilies," Otia Merseiana, I (Liverpool, 1899), 129-147, and "Quelle und Abfassungszeit der Sonntagsepistel in der Irischen 'Cain Domnaig'," MLR, II (1906), 138-154, Hippolyte Delehaye, "Note sur la Légende de la Lettre du Christ Tombée du Ciel," Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques et de la Classe des Beaux-Arts, Académie Royale de Belgique (Brussels, 1899), Classe des Lettres, pp. 171-213, and the comprehensive treatment and bibliography in E. Renou's article, Christ (Lettre du) Tombée du Ciel, in Cabrol's Dictionnaire (Paris, 1914), III, coll. 1534 ff. To the list of Latin Manuscripts of the Epistle might be added MS. Latin 2625, of the Bayerische Staatsbibliothek, Munich, fol. 39 ff; see above note 23.

movement by intensifying and defining still further Sunday observance.<sup>32</sup> This remarkable compilation had a great vogue in both the East and West, and is, apparently, still an active force. It seems to have taken on supernatural powers, and to have been used in modern times, even in the West, as a sort of an amulet. Levy remarks that during the World War many a soldier carried the Sunday Epistle on his breast as a protection against enemy bullets.<sup>33</sup>

That the Sunday Epistle should make an impression on religious literature, especially that of a popular nature, is inevitable. It affected the vision of Nial, as Pribsch has shown,<sup>34</sup> and it seems to have influenced the Apocalypse of Paul, and was in turn affected by it.<sup>35</sup> It is perhaps responsible for the definition of the Sunday Respite as from the ninth hour of Saturday to the first hour of Monday, as in Redactions III and IV, in contrast to the earlier and long Latin version of this episode of the apocalypse, wherein the release is simply for a day and a night at Easter.<sup>36</sup> In the earlier legislation in Anglo-Saxon England, the period of Sunday was defined, in accordance with the principle expressed in Leviticus 23, 32, as from sunset on Saturday to sunset on Sunday evening.<sup>37</sup> By the eleventh century, however, Anglo-Saxon law defined the Sunday period as from the ninth hour of Saturday until dawn on Monday,<sup>38</sup> showing thus, apparently, the influence of the new dominical movement, perhaps also of the Sunday Epistle.

In the Irish version of the Sunday Epistle, the Lord's Day is declared to last "from vesper-time on Saturday to tierce on Monday,"<sup>39</sup> while in MS. Munich Latin 9550 the limits are "de hora nona sabbati usque ad horam primam secundae feriae,"<sup>40</sup> precisely the same as in redactions III and IV of the Apocalypse of Paul. By hora nona sabbati, three o'clock Saturday afternoon is certainly meant. But what is hora prima of Monday? dawn? six o'clock, or some other hour? It is tempting to interpret hora prima as "prime," the monastic office; this the Vercelli Poem

<sup>32</sup> On the influence of the Sunday Epistle, see Levy, Der Sabbath in England, pp. 65-67.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid., p. 66. Cf. Pribsch, M. L. Rev. II, 138: "Und sie [the Sunday Epistle] lebt, zum Schutzbrief gegen Kugel, Krankheit und Kindsnot geworden, noch heutigen Tags." For a Middle English example of the Schutzbrief, see Max Forster, "Ein Mittelenglischer Himmels-Schutzbrief (ca. 1470)," published as the ninth of his Kleinere Mittelenglische Texte, in Anglia, XLII, (1918), 217-219. For a popular account of this Schutzbrief, see R. Stube, "Der Himmelsbrief," Westermanns Monatshefte, CXXIII, (1917-1918) 699-702.

<sup>34</sup> M. L. R., II, 149-153.

<sup>35</sup> See above, pp. 967-970.

<sup>36</sup> See above, p. 968.

<sup>37</sup> See Levy, Der Sabbath in England, pp. 57-58.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid., p. 62.

<sup>39</sup> J. G. O'Keefe, "Cáin Domnaig," Ériu, II, (1905), 194, no. 6, quoted by Pribsch, MLR, II, 141.

<sup>40</sup> Hippolyte Delehaye, "Note sur la Légende de la Lettre du Christ Tombée du Ciel," Bulletin, Académie Royale de Belgique, Classe des Lettres (1899) pp. 179-181.

may, perhaps, imply when the sinful soul informs its body that, at the first cock-crow, at the hour when holy men sing praises to the living God (lines 68–69), it must return whence it came. The clear indications of the late Old English laws,<sup>41</sup> and the evidence of the Old English redactions of the Sunday Epistle, make it clear that, for Anglo-Saxon England at least, the limits of the Sunday period and of the Sunday Respite were from three o'clock on Saturday afternoon until dawn on Monday. It is significant that in that version of Pehtréd's homily of Nial's vision and of the Sunday Epistle which appears in the Wulfstan collection,<sup>42</sup> the definition of the Sunday period is given at least ten times, as against the single occurrence in both the Munich Latin, and in the Irish version, and each time it is from three o'clock Saturday afternoon until dawn on Monday. The Sunday Respite has made its way into this redaction of the Sunday Epistle as one of the Benedictions of Sunday, and there, too, the definition is given in Old English in exactly the same terms:

And it is also known that in consideration of the sanctity and honor of the day all the inhabitants of hell enjoy rest, if they have ever received baptism, from the ninth hour (nontide) of Saturday until Monday's dawn (lihtincge).<sup>43</sup>

It is clear, then, that the Sunday Respite and the Sunday Epistle have influenced each other; the Respite has added itself to the list of Benedictions of Sunday, and to the sanctions for the day, and the Letter has extended and defined more precisely the limits of the Sunday period, and consequently, of the duration of the release of souls from hell-torments. We must, therefore, distinguish between the two forms of the Respite: the earlier, wherein the Respite is but annual for a single day and night, that is from sunset to sunset at Easter, and the later, wherein the Respite is weekly and is defined, probably under the influence of the Sunday Epistle, as extending from the ninth hour of Saturday to the first hour of Monday, which, for Anglo-Saxon England, meant dawn.

This legend of the Respite united with two others: one, that the soul tarried after death for some time, partly immediately by the body, partly wandering about visiting the scenes of its past life, before it left for the Other-World,<sup>44</sup> and the other, that at the hour of death the soul

<sup>41</sup> See above, note 20.

<sup>42</sup> Homily XLIV, Napier, Wulfstan, pp. 215–226; on Pehtréd, see Pribsch, M.L.R., II, 149.

<sup>43</sup> Wulfstan, p. 211, 20–23.

<sup>44</sup> Batiouchkof, Romania, xx, 35–36. On this see Emil Freistedt, Altchristliche Totengedächtnistage und ihre Beziehung zum Jenseits Glauben und Totenkultes der Antike, Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen, xxiv, (Münster in Westf., 1928), pp. 52 ff., and 16 ff. Miss Dudley, The Egyptian Elements in the Legend of the Body and Soul (Baltimore, 1911), pp. 74 ff.

addressed its body.<sup>45</sup> It is the interaction of these three upon each other that engendered our legend of the return of the soul to its body, at stated intervals, for a period of communion with the body, wherein the wicked soul cursed, and the righteous soul blessed, the body in which it had lived, and which, though now in decay, is awaiting the resurrection, when the two shall be united and undergo final judgement together on the Last Day.<sup>46</sup>

Let us return to an examination of the Old English texts illustrating the second tradition, that of a periodic return of the soul to the body. Three texts preserve this matter: the Vercelli-Exeter Poem, and the two new addresses.

In the Vercelli poem, the sorrowful soul returns every seven nights (l.10) for three hundred years (l.12), but only during the night (l.66), as it must leave at cock-crow (l.68), when the holy men sing praises to the living God, to go back to the dwelling places of the ungodly, whence it came, and to which the body has destined it (l. 70).<sup>46a</sup> The return is weekly, ymbe seofon niht, but the particular day of the week is not specified. The same expression occurs in Blickling Homily iv, as bishops and masspriests are instructed, if they will serve God aright, to minister daily to God's people, and to sing mass at least once a week, embe seofon niht,<sup>47</sup> for all Christian folk, that is, for all those who have ever been born since the beginning of the world, if it be God's will that they should intercede for them. In this connection it is to be recalled that one of the reasons given by Our Lord for granting the Paschal Respite, is His recognition of the devotion of His servants on earth in offering the holy oblation for the living and the dead.<sup>48</sup> The return in the Vercelli poem is for one night at a time, since the soul must return in the early morning, and the impression is, the next morning. There is, furthermore, an end to this return: for only three hundred years does it take place, unless the end of the world shall have occurred before that time (ll. 12-14). The specific connection, then, with either Easter or Sunday, is gone, and all that is left is the legend of the return, once every seven nights, for a limited period.

In Junius it is not stated when or how often the return of the soul to the body occurs. The indications given are the following:

<sup>45</sup> See above, pp. 965-966.

<sup>46</sup> Dudley, op. cit., pp. 145-150, and J.E.G.Ph., viii, 251-253.

<sup>46a</sup> Krapp, The Vercelli Book, pp. 54-59.

<sup>47</sup> Richard Morris, The Blickling Homilies, E.E.T.S., lviii (London, 1880) p. 45, l. 31. The variant reading in MS. Junius 86, fol. 49r, is ymbe. vii. niht.

<sup>48</sup> James, Apocryphal New Testament, p. 548, and the passage quoted above, p. 968, from Redaction III in MS. Munich Latin 2625.

1. After this life the soul of every man must seek<sup>49</sup> its body again, and with these words it addresses it thus, and says. . . .

2. I return to thee in order that I may curse thee and declare thy unfaithfulness to thee.

3. The righteous soul greets the body after it has been brought forth from it; it [the soul] seeks him again, and then says to it thus:

4. I have come to thee that I may praise thee.

5. For thy deeds I am in the kingdom of heaven.

6. Wherefore, I shall come to thee frequently [gelomlice] with great faith.

It might be possible to explain most of these details as having reference to the experiences of the soul immediately after death, as it enjoys a period of limited freedom to go about where it will, to visit the scenes of its former life, and to tarry about its body, experiencing joy or sorrow, until it shall depart to the eternal habitation prepared for it. Against this is the general impression given by the piece that the soul has come from the Other-world to seek its body lying in the grave. Furthermore, the words, "I shall come to thee frequently [gelomlice]," indicate a return at frequent intervals. The precise details as to the times and circumstances do not seem to have been a matter of interest to the Junius redactor, who has disregarded them.

The preservation of the early tradition, that of the annual rather than of the weekly return of the soul to the body, is to be found in the Cambridge homily. There the association is with the Paschal Respite of the long Latin (Paris MS.) of the Apocalypse of Paul, rather than with the Sunday Respite of redactions III and IV. In Cambridge the sanction for the return of the souls is clearly the Resurrection of Christ and not the high worth of Sunday. That this is not the invention of the Old English translator, but was given him in his source, is clear from the Latin quotation<sup>50</sup> which he includes to flavor his sermon with:

And they [i.e., the souls of the wicked] have then there no rest, by day or by night, except at the time of Our Lord's resurrection, which we honor and hold in reverence each year [ymbe twelfmonð]. That is Easter Day, according as the blessed Augustine, who wrote this gospel, declared concerning it through God's grace. And he said this: "Dominice resurrectionis mane," inquit, "hora Dominus noster Iesus Christus resurrexit a mortuis, ille omnes anime iustorum uenit uisitare sepulchra sua." The souls which are in torment have indeed no other rest except on the Lord's resurrection. On the day when the Lord arose from the dead, then shall the soul of every man, both of the righteous and of the sinful, seek the burial place in which the body was laid.<sup>51</sup>

<sup>49</sup> MS. gesecegan, but see note 20.

<sup>50</sup> Cambridge has preserved another sentence from the Latin original, and that from the address of the righteous soul to its body; see above, pp. 963, ll. 14-15.

<sup>51</sup> MS. C. U. L. II. 1.33, p. 412, l. 17-p. 413, l. 5.

A notable feature of Cambridge is the order of the two addresses, that of the righteous soul being given first. This is contrary to the general tendency to throw the emphasis on the more lurid elements,<sup>52</sup> as we see, for instance, in the Vercelli poem and in Junius, where the episode of the sinful soul is given first. In the Exeter poem, in fact, the righteous soul disappears altogether,<sup>53</sup> as in the Worcester and Oxford fragments, from which it is likewise missing.<sup>54</sup> This order of Cambridge is also to be attributed to the Latin source, I believe, and not to the translator. The occasion for the introduction of the address legend is a consideration of the almost unmitigated torments of hell which await sinners, as the preceding section of the homily enumerates the pains of hell and the persons who will find their dwelling in them. From this the redactor passes to show that these pains are unrelieved except for a Respite at the season of the Resurrection. The attention has been focused on the sinful and their fate, and had the matter been handled skilfully, the redactor would have given prominence to the words of the sinful soul to body. Instead, he relates his legend faithfully as it comes to him in his source, giving first the words of the righteous soul, and then those of the sinner.

In Vercelli Homily iv, which belongs to the tradition of an address at the Last Judgement, this same order is shown as in Cambridge—the righteous soul first, and then the sinner. This can be accounted for, however, as resulting from the inclusion of the address material in the Last Judgement, the locus classicus for which (St. Matthew 25. 31–46) represents judgement as being passed first on the righteous and afterwards on the sinful.

It must be remembered that one of the sources for the address legend is that scene in the long version of the Apocalypse of Paul, in which the apostle witnesses two deaths, those of a just man and of a sinner,<sup>55</sup> and this before he is shown the Other-world. Furthermore, in the Other-world itself, the apostle is taken to heaven before he sees hell. In the short redactions, however, the death-scenes are lifted out of their original context, and are reset as episodes in the vision of hell. The vision of heaven is dropped, thus effecting a complete change of perspective. Attention is now centered on hell and on the fates of the souls after death. In redactions III and IV it is while St. Paul is in the pit of hell, and after he has seen the torments of the damned, that the two souls appear. Even then the account of the two deaths is reduced to the actual transit of the souls and to the reading of the lists of their deeds, as they

<sup>52</sup> See below, pp. 975–976.

<sup>53</sup> See below, p. 977.

<sup>54</sup> Richard Buchholz, "Die Fragmente der Redender Seele an den Leichnam in Zwei Handschriften zu Worcester und Oxford," Erlanger Beiträge zur Englischen Philologie, VI (Erlange, 1890).

<sup>55</sup> James, Apocryphal New Testament, pp. 531–534.

are being ferried to the Other-World. Their order is reversed, as the sinner appears first, and then the righteous. This alteration Batiouchkof attributes to this change in milieu,<sup>56</sup> and to the manner of their introduction. The sinful, of course, is to remain in hell, and it is fitting that a visit to hell should record the advent of wicked souls. If, however, the righteous are to be seen under these circumstances, it can only be in transit and from afar.

Furthermore the abbreviated versions are much later than the long version. In all probability the Old English legend of the body and soul had already formed and crystallized before the formation of our abbreviated redactions of the Apocalypse of Paul. It is the long rather than the short redaction, then, that was influential in this process. That this redaction was current in England, as late as the eleventh century, and certainly earlier, we know from its appearance in MS. Junius 85.<sup>57</sup> It is my belief that at least three features of the long version of the Apocalypse of Paul have shaped our legend of a periodic return of the souls to their bodies each Easter, as in the Cambridge homily: (1) the granting of the Paschal Respite, (2) the two death scenes, and (3) the order of the two deaths: the righteous first and then the sinner. However, because of the development and wide spread of the abbreviated redactions of the Apocalypse of Paul, wherein this order is reversed and the Respite became dominical and sharply defined (perhaps under the influence of the Sunday Epistle), it is quite probable that, in our legend, too, the periodic returns of the souls to their bodies became more frequent, and weekly instead of annual, and that the order of the addresses changed, with the greater emphasis falling on the sinful soul.

There is a difference in the Old English texts between the first tradition of the address, that of the separation of the soul from the body, and the second, of the periodic return of the soul to the body, in this respect: in the first, only the sinful soul is described as making an address, in the second both souls speak. As Miss Dudley has shown, the foundation<sup>58</sup> of the legend is the theme of the separation of the soul from the body, and in the earliest form of the legend, Batiouchkof's Nonatola Latin MS., both souls address their bodies, though in the later forms, Ad Frates in Eremito Sermo LXIX<sup>59</sup> and the two Old English visions, it is only the sinful soul. Evidently, as frequently happened, the emphasis shifted to the sinful soul, at the expense of the righteous, with the result that the latter was dropped out. In the Irish version a sense of symmetry and contrast has, indeed, introduced the death of the righteous

<sup>56</sup> Romania, xx, 23.

<sup>58</sup> Egyptian Elements, p. 149.

<sup>57</sup> Folios 3r-11v.

<sup>59</sup> See above, pp. 965-966.

soul, but in briefest fashion. Furthermore, it is not the soul who speaks, but the escorting angels.

In the legend of the return in the Old English poem, however, both souls speak. The Exeter text, it is true, contains only the address of the sinful soul. This ends with line 6 of folio 100r: the seventh line is blank, except that—terra, the remaining letters of the last word, modsnotterra, for which there was no room in line six, is run over at the end of line 7. With line 8 Deor's Lament begins. So far as the Exeter scribe was concerned, as is clear from the manuscript, the text is to stand as complete. Something has happened to the address of the righteous soul. That it existed, we know from Vercelli. Either it was missing in the source from which Exeter was copied, or it was deleted by the Exeter scribe, who in this case must have exercised an editorship which was in line with the tendency generally observable of shifting the emphasis to the more lurid elements. We have seen this in the Apocalypse of Paul, in which, in the later versions, the balance was changed and heaven was dropped, with the whole focus centered on hell. So, too, in the first tradition of the address of the soul to the body, that at the separation at the hour of death, the address of the righteous soul seems to have disappeared. Evidently the same tendency must have operated likewise in the case of the Exeter poem. It is possible, of course, that it had already gone from the source of the Exeter text, either through design, and in this case would be the result of an editorship on the part of an earlier scribe, or through accident.

It is clear from a comparison with Vercelli that the last word of the account of the sinful soul is missing in Exeter. The last sentence of the episode of the sinful soul in the two manuscripts reads as follows:

Vercelli:	þæt mæg æghwylcum men to gemynde, modsnotra gehwam. <sup>60</sup>
Exeter:	þæt mæg æghwylcum men to gemynde, modsnotterra. <sup>61</sup>

The second hemistich of the second line is in Exeter a D-type, in Vercelli and E-type. It is not at all impossible that Vercelli has the original reading. Modsnotra gehwam makes a good parallel to the æghwylcum men, and it gives this section of the poem a stronger ending than the tapering off of modsnotterra in Exeter. Modsnotterra looks like an effort to make the most of modsnotra, so that it can do duty by itself as the second hemistich of the line.

<sup>60</sup> Max Förster, Il Codice Vercellese (Rome, 1913) fol. 103r, ll. 19–20. Krapp, The Vercelli Book, p. 58, ll. 125–126.

<sup>61</sup> R. W. Chambers, Max Förster and Robin Flower, The Exeter Book of Old English Poetry (London, 1934), folio 100r, ll. 6–7. This folio is reproduced likewise in W. S. Mackie, The Exeter Book, Part II, EETS, cxcxv, (London, 1934) immediately after the preface.

It is possible to advance the theory that the transcript from which the Exeter poem was copied was defective, and that a folio containing the text of the address of the good soul was missing from it before the Exeter copy was made. This would imply that, in the source of Exeter, the page with the address of the sinful soul ended with modsnotra, the next to the last word of this section as in Vercelli,<sup>62</sup> or modsnottterra, the last word as in Exeter,<sup>63</sup> but that with the loss of the next folio there was carried away, naturally, beside the address of the righteous soul, the gehwam which, as in Vercelli, ends this section setting forth the episode of the sinful soul.

Though the absence of the gehwam in Exeter would in itself suggest that some lacuna occurred in the source of the Exeter poem, yet, since so short and simple a word is all that is missing, it is impossible to determine whether we are confronted with merely an accident to a manuscript or with editorial policy and a deliberate excision of material. That the address of the righteous soul is not an addition peculiar to Vercelli, in contrast to Exeter, which is without it, is shown, not only by its presence in Vercelli, a manuscript contemporary with, if not slightly earlier than Exeter, but also by our Cambridge text, with its evidence from the Latin source, and perhaps also by Vercelli Homily IV, in which, as I show elsewhere,<sup>64</sup> the righteous soul is given the prominence of first place.

My belief is that Cambridge represents the earlier tradition, in spite of the fact that it is the latest of our texts—full twelfth century. Though a late copy, as certain errors make clear, it belongs to the early stage of our legend, since it does not show the later influences found in Junius and the Vercelli poem. The return in Cambridge is still Paschal, as in the earlier Apocalypse of Paul, and not dominical, as in the abbreviated versions, and this in spite of the increased importance of Sunday observance as mirrored in the Sunday Epistle and in the change of the Paschal Respite to the Sunday Respite, which together effected a corresponding alteration in the address legend also, in representing the return to the body as hebdomedal instead of annual. The Vercelli poem, although representing the return as hebdomedal, fails to show the dominical association, since the Sunday sanction for the return of the soul is missing. We are informed simply that the soul must seek its body every seven nights. This is true of Junius, too, wherein all connection with any specific system of return is gone. The soul returns frequently [gelomlice], but whether yearly or weekly is not specified, nor is any sanction for the return given, either because of Easter, as in Cambridge, or because of the high worth of Sunday (plus the other sanctions, of course), as in the abbreviated redactions of the Apocalypse of Paul. Cambridge retains what I believe to be the original order of the addresses in the return legend—first the righteous, and then the sinner, as in the story of the two deaths in the full version of The Apocalypse of Paul. In Junius and the Vercelli poem, this order is reversed, perhaps under the influence of the abbreviated versions of the apocalypse. All three versions agree, however, in not having the later refinement of the precise definition of the period of Respite as from the ninth hour of Saturday to the first hour of Monday. In the Vercelli poem the period is apparently merely over night, while in Cambridge and Junius, no details are preserved of the duration of the return to the body.

<sup>62</sup> Cf. Förster, Il Codice Vercellese, fol. 103r. l. 19.

<sup>63</sup> The Exeter Book of Old English Poetry, fol. 100r. l. 6.

<sup>64</sup> See below, p. 980.

The third group of texts represents the time of the address as at the Last Judgement. This is a natural and inevitable development, particularly because of the great place the Doom held in Old English patristics. It is the great end of the world, the background against which all Christian thought is to be projected, and from which human conduct receives its meaning.<sup>65</sup> No wonder the believer was always admonished to keep before him the Other-world and the Day of Judgement.

It is only natural that, under the powerful orienting force of this idea, the setting of the address of the soul to its body should become affected. In the case of the Two Deaths, for instance, the theme of the Last Judgement managed to attract to itself, even though unskillfully included there, the story of the bringing forth of the soul and of the Three Utterances of the soul.<sup>66</sup> Two of our address pieces are actually set at the Last Judgement: Assmann Homily xrv,<sup>67</sup> and Vercelli Homily iv.<sup>68</sup> Between the two, however, there is a vast difference. In the Vercelli Homily the address material is reordered and worked into a new creation, so that an entirely novel presentation of the Judgement results from the process. The Assmann text, on the other hand, shows merely an arbitrary change of scene, with a minimum of art in the shift. The words are essentially those of Junius, though, as may be seen by a comparison of the two, very much reduced and formalized. The homily itself is a rambling sort of compilation, with an assortment of themes, most of them treated elsewhere in much fuller form. The last episode, that of the locking of

<sup>65</sup> F. C. Burkitt, Jewish and Christian Apocalypses, The Sweich Lectures, 1913 (London, 1914) p. 1, has beautifully illustrated the place of the Last Judgement from the decoration of the Sistine Chapel.

<sup>66</sup> See Willard, Two Apocrypha, pp. 38, 69-74.

<sup>67</sup> Assmann, Homilien und Heiligenleben, pp. 164 ff.

<sup>68</sup> Forster, Die Vercelli-Homilien, pp. 72 ff.

the gates of hell and the hurling of the key into hell,<sup>69</sup> appears in Vercelli Homily xv,<sup>70</sup> and in one of the marginal texts of MS. 41 of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.<sup>71</sup> The preceding episode is a fragment of the Ego te O homo, which occurs in Old English<sup>72</sup> in fuller form in the Christ III,<sup>73</sup> Vercelli Homily VIII,<sup>74</sup> MS. Hatton 114,<sup>75</sup> and the same marginal homily in MS. CCCC 41,<sup>76</sup> and so it goes. Each episode is somewhat shortened, and this is true of the address material. It too is reduced, and everything is dropped which is inappropriate to the scene of the Last Judgement. In Assmann, then, we have the mere introduction, by way of exemplum, of the address material made to do duty in a new milieu.

In Vercelli Homily IV the judgement is led up to by means of an extended meditation on man's state in this world, and the insignificance of what he may endure here in contrast to that in the next world. The state of man is serious as his soul stands in the presence of God before the throne of judgement on the Last Day. God has given us understanding and knowledge and will. We can, if we will, lay up for ourselves at that day eternal life by means of our penitence and alms. The homily then breaks out into an eloquent depiction of the scene of the judgement, as all creation is gathered before God the Judge. The hosts of heaven and of hell are likewise present, that they may hear the acknowledgment of the soul, how it will answer the accusations made against it at the assize, and how it will be judged according to its works. The Judge dramatically commands that the angels receive the righteous soul.<sup>77</sup> In the Vercelli Homily the angels declare that they behold the mansion prepared for it in the glory of the kingdom of Heaven, and that they will lead the soul to him [i.e., the body] whom it had loved before. Thereupon the soul exclaims in affection over its body, "I behold where

<sup>69</sup> Assmann, p. 169.

<sup>70</sup> Forster, Der Vercelli-Codex CXVII, p. 128

<sup>71</sup> P. 301; see William H. Hulme, "The Old English Gospel of Nicodemus," Mod. Phil., I, 1904-1905, 610-614.

<sup>72</sup> For the Latin, see Patr. Lat. XXXIX, col. 2207.

<sup>73</sup> Ll. 1379 ff; for the sources, see A. S. Cook, The Christ of Cynewulf, pp. 208-210.

<sup>74</sup> Förster, Die Vercelli-Homilien, pp. 153 ff., and Rudolph Willard, "Vercelli Homily VIII and the Christ," PMLA, XLII (1927), 314 ff.

<sup>75</sup> Fol. 109v ff. This homily I am preparing for publication.

<sup>76</sup> Pp. 299 ff.; see Hulme, op. cit.

<sup>77</sup> As the angels receive the soul, they praise it in almost the identical words of the receiving angels in the Junius version of the Three Utterances. Vercelli reads: Eadigu eart þu, sawl, forðan þu name on þe gode eardunge, Förster, Vercelli-Homilien, p. 84, ll. 135-136; Junius reads: Beatus quem elegisti: replebimur [Psalms 64 (65), 5-6]. Hie cweðað, 'Eadig eart þu, sawl: þu name gode eardunge in ðinum huse, and we nu gefyllað mid gode ðin huse . . .'; Willard, Two Apocrypha, p. 55 [Jm]. Junius would support the reading of Vercelli against that of Q; see Förster, Die Vercelli-Homilien, p. 84, note 73.

my body stands in the midst of this throng. Let me come to him. Be he never food for worms; may he never become vile putrefaction." The righteous soul bids the body rejoice in the Lord, praises the body for the performance of God's will while it was on earth, and then turns to the Lord and pleads with Him, reviewing the good deeds, virtues, and denials of the body during their life on earth.

As the soul pleads, the body begins to change hue, and to become increasingly more beautiful and glorious. The Judge beholds this, and remarks on this alteration as proof of the truth of the soul's declaration, and He then commands that the soul go back into its body to enjoy the rest eternal which they have both earned together. The body, after reunion with the soul, gains powers of speech for the first time since death, and the soul and body speak together as one individual, praising and glorifying God. In conclusion, the Judge passes final judgement on the complete man, body and soul together, in the Venite benedicti patris mei.

In the parallel episode, the wicked souls stand in fear and trembling, weeping and sighing as they come to judgement. The Judge in anger demands, "What do ye expect, that ye do not do your [good] works?"<sup>78</sup> The souls here stand abashed, because they had not wished to do any good deeds. A certain soul calls out to its body, and rebukes it, and reproaches it in a speech containing the true matter of the address of a wicked soul to its body.<sup>79</sup> The soul then turns to address death, reproaching it for having permitted its body to live so long and to attain so great damnation for them both. In a long speech addressed partly to death and partly to the body, the soul vituperatively enumerates the sins and iniquities of the body. The body stands silent, and undergoes a visible transformation from bad to worse parallel to that growth in beauty observed in the righteous soul. Then a devil cries out, claiming the soul in a manner similar to that in Vercelli Homily x,<sup>80</sup> Wulfstan Homily XLIX,<sup>81</sup> and in the bringing forth of the soul in the group represented by Ad Fratres in Eremo Sermo LXIX.<sup>82</sup> The devil pleads with the Judge not to deprive him of that which is his own, and to give him the soul. At length is heard the voice of the Judge, commanding the <sup>78</sup> This is reminiscent of the judgement of the sinful soul in the Apocalypse of Paul, in which the Judge greets the sinful soul thus: "Where is thy fruit which thou hast yielded, worthy of those good things which thou hast received?" Apocryphal New Testament, p. 533.

<sup>79</sup> It is akin to the farewell to the body in the legend of the bringing forth of the soul, especially to that in the Irish version in Atkinson, Passions and Homilies from Leabhar Breac, pp. 509-514.

<sup>80</sup> Folio 66v and 67r.

<sup>81</sup> Napier, Wulfstan, p. 254.

<sup>82</sup> See above, p. 960.

soul to return to its house, that is, to the body, and with the pronouncement of the Descedite maledicti, the scene is concluded.

This is, so far as I know, the most fully developed description of the actual judgement of the soul at the Last Day that we have in Old English. In the Christ there is a highly elaborated account of the preparations for the judgement, with the description of the end of the world and the gathering of the participants for the Great Assize. As in Vercelli Homily VIII, the central feature is the Ego te O homo,<sup>83</sup> the stirring rebuke of Our Lord to the sinners, as He reviews His mercies to man, and man's indifference and ingratitude. The point of view, however, is that of the Judge, once despised and rejected of sinners. We stand with Him, and look upon the great assembly after the separation has taken place, and as all await the final decree. In Vercelli Homily IV the center of interest is not the Judge but the judged, the individual soul standing before Him and giving an account of his deeds. In this respect the Vercelli Homily is unique. The action is more internal, more psychological, than in the Christ and Vercelli Homily VIII. It is on the joy or agony of the soul that the attention of the hearer or reader is centered, and the reunion of soul and body is depicted in moving fashion. But the judgement is self-judgement. Et se ipsam iudicavit, declares Redaction IV of the Apocalypse of Paul in another scene.<sup>84</sup> The words of the Judge, furthermore, are, as in the Apocalypse of Paul, merely sentences of acceptance or of condemnation, as He has listened, here to the confessions of the souls, in the apocalypse to the testimony of the guardian angel and the spirit of the man.<sup>85</sup>

The address of the soul to the body is, in whatever setting, an externalizing process, as the workings of the conscience guide the meditations and exclamations of the soul, and is, in short, the self-judgement of the soul. It belongs properly to the scene of death as the individual judgement is made and the destiny of the soul decided at this momentous hour. Its transference to a later moment, to the Paschal or dominical return of the soul to visit the body, is an elaboration and an extension through time of this joy or misery of the soul at death, and is a sample of his eternal state. Set in the Last Judgement, however, it makes a very moving account, which, nevertheless, if taken literally, is not without absurdity. As in the case of other dramatizations of the process of determining the destiny of souls, such as psychostasis, the fight of devils and angels for the soul, the reading of the books of deeds, the confronting of the accuser and the defence of the soul, if this must be done for each soul individually, the process becomes endless and confusing. This unsatisfactory state arose naturally enough from the conflict between the two different beliefs current with regard to the judgement of souls: (1) that of an individual judgement at the moment of death, as the soul leaves its body, and (2) that of a general judgement of all souls at the great assize on the Last Day. Implicit in this latter is the belief in the suspension of souls in an intermediate state, as they await their doom. It is the transfer of elements essentially appropriate to the first, that at the hour of death, by way of the legend of the periodic return of souls to their bodies for brief intervals, to the other, the Last, Judgement, that raises this difficulty. All these devices for ascertaining the future state of the soul originated in various efforts to externalize the belief concerning the fate of souls at death, and in different degrees of orthodoxy, and they formed a sort of treasury of beliefs concerning the judgement of souls, less in official dogma than in popular theology, upon which homilists could draw for illustrative material whereby to add vividness to their sermons. The Anglo-Saxon hearer of Vercelli Homily iv listened to what, in spite of its difficulties, is perhaps the most moving presentation of the Last Judgement, and the most effective address of the soul to its body, in Old English Literature.

<sup>83</sup> See above, p. 980.

<sup>84</sup> Brandes, Visio S. Pauli, p. 78, l. 19.

<sup>85</sup> James, Apocryphal New Testament, pp. 532-534.

RUDOLPH WILLARD

Yale University

THE DATE OF THE ENEAS

NO definite agreement concerning the probable date of the Eneas exists in the studies devoted to this mediæval romance. Its editor, M. Salverda de Grave, originally placed the Eneas at about 1150,<sup>1</sup> M. Faral believes it was composed about 1160,<sup>2</sup> and one of its most recent critics, Mr. F. Guyer, considers it somewhat anterior to the year 1174.<sup>3</sup> The last date can hardly be accepted, however, since the major part of Heinrich von Veldeke's translation of the Eneas into German was completed by 1175,<sup>4</sup> and it seems reasonable to assume that the poem's dissemination and translation would require more than one year.

The Brut provides a tangible basis for comparison, since the date usually assigned it (1155) is one of the least disputed in twelfth-century French literature.<sup>5</sup> I hope to show that the Eneas is probably anterior to the poem of Wace and that, if either poem is indebted to the other, it is the Brut which borrowed. M. Hoepffner, however, has recently attempted to establish the dependence of the Eneas upon the Brut,<sup>6</sup> if his conclusions be valid, then 1155 must be considered the terminus a quo rather than the terminus ad quem of the anonymous poem. M. Hoepffner believes that the author of the Eneas is indebted to the author of the Brut for some points in the adventures of Æneas and for certain literary themes;<sup>7</sup> and he bases his opinions upon what he considers parallel passages. An examination of these passages, however, has convinced me that some of them derive from Vergil's Æneid, that in some the similarity to lines in the Brut has been exaggerated, and that in some the direction of influence may, with equal plausibility, be reversed.

M. Hoepffner's first observation is that both Wace and the author of the Eneas avoid the "in medias res" beginning of the Æneid by giving a brief summary of the adventures of Æneas subsequent to the fall of Troy and previous to the storm off the shore of Carthage.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Eneas, Bibliotheca normannica, iv (1891), Intr., p. xxiv.

<sup>2</sup> Recherches sur les sources latines des contes et romans courtois du moyen âge (Paris, 1913), p. 410.

<sup>3</sup> "Chronology of Earliest French Romances," Mod. Phil. xxvi (1929), p. 277.

<sup>4</sup> Van Dam, J., Zur vorgeschichte des hofischen Epos (Bonn and Leipzig, 1923), p. 124.

<sup>5</sup> This is the date given in line 15299 of the poem. See le Roman de Brut, ed. Leroux de Lincy (Rouen, 1836-38).

<sup>6</sup> "L' 'Eneas' et Wace," Archivum romanicum, xv, 2 (1931), p. 248-269; xvi, 1 (1932), 162-166.

<sup>7</sup> Op. cit., xv, 249.

<sup>8</sup> The passages cited in this paper are taken from the Brut edited by Leroux de Lincy and the Eneas edited by Salverda de Grave for "Les Classiques français du moyen âge" (44, 62), i (1925), ii (1929).

Qant Griu orent Troie conquise	Quant Menelaus ot Troie asise,
Et escillié tot le pais	onc n'en torna tresqu'il l'ot prise,
Por la venjance de Pâris	gasta la terre et tot lo regne
Qui de Gresse ravi Hélaïne,	por la vanjance de sa fenne.
Dont Enéas, a quelque paine
De la grant ocise escapa	( Brut 10-15) (Eneas 1-4)

According to M. Hoepffner, Wace suggested this beginning to the author of the Eneas because the latter takes up the action at exactly the same point and because the construction and movement of the lines are alike.<sup>9</sup> But these passages present no verbal similarities except the names necessitated by the story. The beginning of the wanderings of Æneas coincides with the fall of Troy so that an allusion to the destruction of the city furnishes the logical starting point for an author not accepting the "in medias res" beginning of Vergil, a beginning which both authors—Wace probably for brevity, the other for clarity—were apparently trying to avoid. It is noteworthy, too, that the lines of the Brut are more specific than those of the Eneas; if the author of the latter were inspired by Wace, it is unlikely that he would have substituted general references for the more specific ones of his model.

With regard to the flight of Æneas, M. Hoepffner maintains<sup>10</sup> that lines 19-20 of the Brut, "que de prochains, que de maisnies, que d'avoir," gave rise to the following lines of the Eneas:

tote sa gent fist asenbler et ses tresors an fist porter;
 grant avoir et grant manantises
 et granz richeces an a prises (Eneas 49-52)

Possibly the resemblance here is close enough to suggest a direct borrowing by one of the authors. Should one consider the passage in the Eneas an amplification of the lines in the Brut or do the latter constitute a summary of the passage in the Eneas?

Both poets neglect to relate the circumstances attendant upon the disappearance of Creusa. Vergil undoubtedly elaborated these circumstances because he wished to justify in the minds of his contemporaries the subsequent conduct of his hero. One could hardly exalt as the founder of the great Roman nation a man who had carelessly and thoughtlessly become separated from his wife. The mediæval writer had no such scruples. Both the Brut and the Eneas state the situation baldly:

En la grant presse le ( sic ) perdi	qu'en la presse la deperdi;
( Brut 88)	( Eneas 1183)

<sup>9</sup> Ibid., pp. 249-250.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid., pp. 250-251.

M. Hoepffner asks if it is chance which led the poets to use such similar terms.<sup>11</sup> Given the same situation, it is difficult to see how they could have described it otherwise.

Again, M. Hoepffner finds<sup>12</sup> in the Brut a parallel for the description in the Eneas of the Trojans' long sea-voyage:

Par mer folia longement;	Puis avons molt soferet ahantz
Maint grant peril, maint grant tourment	par plusors mers plus de set anz;
Et maint travail li estut traire	granz tormentes et granz orages
Après lonc tans vint en Ytaire; . . .	nos ont botez a mainz rivages;
Enéas ot mult travillié	le mont avons avironé,
Molt ot siglé et molt nagié,	el Teivre somes arivé;
Mainte grant mer a trespasée
Et mainte terre avironée.
En Itaire est venus a rive . . .
La où li Toinres en mer chiet, ( Brut 21-35)	( Eneas 3187-3192)

Since there are no unusual verbal similarities in these passages, it seems more logical to believe that this description of the Eneas had its source not only in the seventh book of the Aeneid but in its famous first lines<sup>13</sup> which our author's method of beginning his poem had naturally led him to omit. M. Hoepffner believes that reference to the Tiber by both poets is especially significant and, in support of his conclusion, states that the Tiber does not appear in Vergil.<sup>14</sup> The passage quoted above from the Eneas is part of the speech of Ilioneus to King Latinus. The first lines, it is true, do not occur at this point in the seventh book of the Aeneid but the French poet paraphrased and transposed them from the opening lines of Vergil. While the Tiber is not mentioned at the beginning of the Aeneid, it is referred to in the seventh book and precisely in the speech of Ilioneus which at this point served as a general model for the author of the Eneas.<sup>15</sup> Furthermore, M. Hoepffner has omitted in the passage cited from Wace a line which modifies the meaning in the last verse of the citation and minimizes the possibility of its having given rise to the reference to the Tiber in the Eneas. The complete passage reads thus:

En Itaire est venus à rive
 En une terre plentéive
 La où li Toinres en mer ciet,
 Bien près d'iloc à Rome siet. (Brut 33-36)

<sup>11</sup> Ibid., p. 251, note 1.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid., p. 252.

<sup>13</sup> Aeneid, vii, 228; i, 1-3, 5.

<sup>14</sup> Op. cit., xv, 252, note 4.

<sup>15</sup> Aeneid, vii, 241-242: huc repetit iussisque ingentibus urget Apollo Tyrrhenum ad Thybrim et fontis vada sacra Numici.

M. Hoepffner sees further traces of the influence of Wace in the descriptions so characteristic of the Eneas. Let us consider, for example, his analysis of the storm at sea with which Vergil began his narrative. Although our critic admits that the author of the Eneas followed his classical model, he maintains<sup>16</sup> that there are certain features in the copy not to be found in the Latin source but rather in Wace's description of a tempest. It should be noted that this description of a tempest occurs at a point in the Brut (l. 2529 f.) not concerned with Æneas but with Gurlac, King of Denmark. These are the passages to which Hoepffner calls attention:<sup>17</sup>

(a) the ships tossed about by the waves:

Nef commencent à périllier,	les nes comencent a vaucler,
( Brut 2529)	( Eneas 190)

The two similar words here are common enough to be found anywhere. The descriptive verbs (and it is here that one would expect to find a striking similarity if Hoepffner's hypothesis were correct) express entirely different actions.

(b) a detailed enumeration of the damage suffered by the ships:

... Bort et kiévilles a froissier,	ronpent lor cordes, chieent voilles,
Rompent closture et bort froissent,	brisent et mast et gouvernail;
Voiles dépiècent et mast croissent.	( Brut 2530-2532) ( Eneas 202-203)

The lines of the Eneas seem to resemble those of Wace, but if the lines which immediately precede these had been cited, it would have been observed that the source of the passage need not be sought outside of Vergil. Compare:

insequitur clamorque virum stridorque rudentum.
eripiunt subito nubes caelumque diemque
Teucrorum ex oculis; ponto nox incubat atra
. . . . .
praesentemque viris intentant omnia mortem	( Æneid 1, 87-89, 91) et ciel et mer lor promet mort;

ne voient lune ne estoilles,
ronpent lor cordes, chieent voilles, brisent et mast et gouvernail; ( Eneas 200-203)

The comparison of these lines from the Eneas with those of Vergil shows at once that their author is reproducing, in reverse order, the description of his classical source. Similarly, if M. Hoepffner had cited the companion verse to line 249 of the Eneas, he could hardly have maintained that the latter owed something to line 2531 of the Brut—Rompent closture et bort froissent—since our author is here, as previously, giving a literal translation of the Aeneid:

<sup>16</sup> Op. cit., xv, 260.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid., pp. 261-262.

... laxis laterum compagibus omnes
accipiunt inimicum imbrem rimisque fatiscunt. (Aeneid I, 122-123)

ronpent chevilles et clotures, l'eve i antre par les jointures, (Eneas 249-250)

(c) the fear of the sailors:

Nus n'i osoit lever la teste . . .	Ne eschipse ne esturman
N'i a si hardi, n'ait paor.	de son droit cors nen ert certain . . .
	an avanture ont mis lor vie.
( Brut 2533, 2539)	( Eneas 205-209)

The verbal parallels are not close enough here to establish a relationship between these passages.<sup>18</sup>

(d) the scattering of the fleet:

Les nés furent tost départies,	par cele mer les esparpaille,
Et en pluisors tères fuies. ( Brut 2535-2536)	( Eneas 259)

Here the following line of Vergil—and not Wace—is evidently the source of our poet's inspiration:

disiectam Aeneae toto videt aequore classem (Aeneid I, 128)

(e) the precise duration of the tempest:

Cinc jors ont issi enduré	Ansi ont l'i fuitis de Troie
Al fort vent et al gros oré;	sofert trois jors, qu'il n'orent joie;
( Brut 2537-2538)	( Eneas 263-264)

Vergil, it is true, does not refer to the precise duration of the tempest. Nevertheless it hardly seems necessary to point out that the number of days differs in the two passages cited above and to suggest that the use of determinate numbers (if it needs comment here) is a stylistic device handed down to the early romances from the old epics.<sup>19</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Hoepffner believes that the phrase, "lever la teste," may have suggested to the author of the Eneas line 270: Dont leva Eneas la teste. Although Hoepffner does not refer to it, in each case "tempeste" rhymes with "teste." Since the context differs in these passages, the phrase may equally well have been suggested to the author of the Eneas by Vergil who thus describes Neptune's action during the tempest:

... et alto

prospiciens summa placidum caput extulit unda. (Aeneid I, 126-127)

<sup>19</sup> Biller, G., Etude sur le style des premiers romans français en vers (Göteborg, 1916), p. 91.

Hoepffner does not limit the influence of Wace on the Eneas to the Brut. He goes so far as to see in Wace's poem in honor of the Virgin a possible source for part of the description of the tempest.<sup>20</sup> It will be noted that the lines quoted from the Eneas are not consecutive; moreover, certain lines in the Aeneid<sup>21</sup> offer a more plausible model for this passage in the Eneas than the lines cited from la Vie de la Vierge.

According to M. Hoepffner,<sup>22</sup> the description of the hunt of Ascanius resembles that of the hunt of Brutus because the action pictured in the two poems is the same. That both young men take their stand near a tree while the father in one case and an attendant in the other send the prey towards them might easily be fortuitous, especially since the two passages present no striking verbal similarities:

Li pères al fil les acainst	anprés un bien grant fust se traist
Et li fils à un fus s'estraint	et uns damoisels l'i atraist.
( Brut 141-142)	( Eneas 3595-3596)
A un cerf traist qu'il avisa;	et il visa toz tens al grant, . . .
	il traist a lui . . .
( Brut 143)	( Eneas 3598-3600)

The poet could hardly have described the action differently and, accordingly, the style here should probably be attributed to the similarity of hunting scenes in general rather than to the direct influence of one poet upon the other.

The critic's suggestion<sup>23</sup> that our author's description of Carthage is

<sup>20</sup> Mut fu la mer tote esmée.	comeue est la mers formant;	(194)
Li venz vint à la nef devant	Li vanz aquialt les autres nes;	(257)
Rompent cordes, li très lor faut	ronpent lor cordes, chieent voilles,	(202)
Li plus sage po i saveient	il ne sevent quel part il torment,	(207)
Li tens cessa, li vens chaï,	li vanz failli, del tot cessa,	(266)
(Wace, la Vie de la Vierge , Tours, 1859, pp. 4-5, 8).	( Eneas , 194 f.).

<sup>21</sup> Compare the lines already quoted from the Aeneid (I, 87-89, 91) in connection with point (b). Additional details were available for our author in the lines with which Vergil continues his description: (Aeneid I, 84 f.)

incubere mari totumque a sedibus imis	( 84)
. . . Aquilone procella	(102)
velum adversa ferit . . .	(103)
tris Notus abreptas in saxa latentia torquet	(108)
. . . tris Eurus ab alto	(110)
in brevia et syrtis urget	(111)

<sup>22</sup> Op. cit., xv, 262.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., pp. 263-264.

Charlion dejuste Usques siet,
Un flum qui en Saverne ciet.

Sa cité avoit non Cartage, en Libe sist sor le rivage.

based upon the plan adopted by Wace in his description of Carlion does not seem tenable. The description in the Eneas is distinguished by a profusion of exotic detail unknown either to Wace or Vergil while the basic elements which M. Hoepffner maintains derive from Wace—(1) general description of the city and the means of access, (2) the principal monuments, (3) the inhabitants and their activities—are common to all three authors. Furthermore, the description in the Eneas of the activities of the inhabitants precedes the description of the monuments, as in Vergil—the reverse of the order adopted by Wace. One may question whether Wace really describes the activities of the inhabitants since he simply refers in speaking of the churches to their rich clergy and to the canons who were sufficiently versed in astronomy to aid Arthur with their predictions.

Perhaps M. Hoepffner's most interesting suggestion<sup>24</sup> is that the author's idea for Æneas' island combat was inspired by Wace's description of a similar combat of Arthur. M. Hoepffner says, for example, that the conditions are the same:

Al roi Artur a fors mandé	et manda li qu'a l'uisme jor,
Que il dui en l'ille venissent,	en un isle desoz la tor,
Et cors à cors si combatissent.	fust la bataille par aus dos . . .
Et cil d'aus qui l'autre oïroit	et qui veintra tot ait an fin.
Et qui vif vaincre le poroit,
La tère tote quite éust ( Brut 10259–10264)	( Eneas 7837–7841) and that the reasoning of the two heroes is similar:

Mius velt son cors metre en péril	an aventure me metrai:
Et en abandon de morir	mialz voil an bataille morir
Que plainement Paris guerpir.	que vis recroire ne foir.
( Brut 10255–10257)	( Eneas 9666–9668)

It must be noted, however, that almost two thousand lines elapse between these two passages of the Eneas, that the first passage records an allusion to an island combat of Æneas, a combat to which the author

---

Cil qui d'autre terre venoient	La mer l'i bat d'une partie,
Par cel eve venir pooient:	ja par de la n'iert asaille;
De l'une part ert li rivièr,	de l'autre part sunt li viver
De l'autre li forès plénier.	et li marais grant et plener
Plenté i avoit de pisson,	( Eneas 407–412)
Et grant plente de venisson. ( Brut 10467–10474)

Corripuere viam interea, qua semita monstrat.
iamque ascendebant collem, qui plurimus urbi imminet adversasque aspectat desuper arces. (Æneid, I, 418–420)

<sup>24</sup> Op. cit., xv, pp. 266–267..

never again refers, while the second passage is concerned with the actual combat between Turnus and Æneas, a combat which took place outside Laurentum (l.9672 f.). Consequently, with the disappearance of the island in the second passage the basis of comparison between these combats is withdrawn and any inferences regarding the similarity in the passages themselves may be disregarded. If the second passage quoted above concerning the actual combat owed something to the lines cited from the island combat in the Brut, if the author, at this point, were deriving his inspiration from Wace, then it is improbable that, with the text of Wace at hand, he would not have recalled the location originally designated for the combat between his heroes. Since he failed here to develop his original plan, the natural inference is that the author of the Eneas did not have recourse to the Brut. There still remains the early allusion to an island combat. M. Hoepffner mentions the island combats already made famous by Geoffrey and the Tristan legend.<sup>25</sup> Since it seems unlikely, in view of the contradiction in the Eneas, that the author could have been inspired by Wace, it is possible that the allusion in the Eneas is reminiscent of the combat in the Historia or the Tristan story.

It is true that in the Æneid the land offered to Æneas by Latinus is an inhabited land, while the author of the Eneas seems to have deliberately departed from his model to describe a country rich in natural resources as yet uncultivated. M. Hoepffner finds the source for this deviation from Vergil in the arrival of Pantaloim in Ireland;<sup>26</sup> he says: "tous les éléments de l'énumération de Wace reparaissent dans l'Eneas, enrichis et modifiés. Les 'bois' sont devenus des 'forêts grandes et giboyeuses,' les 'eaux' des 'rivières,' les 'montagnes' des 'côteaux de vignes'; aux 'plaines' sont substituées des 'prairies'." In other words, the original, if such it be, has so been changed that none of it remains, and one is justified in questioning whether the author of the Eneas really was acquainted with the work of Wace.

On two occasions<sup>27</sup> M. Hoepffner compares passages where similarity in rhyme apparently establishes a parallelism. The first of these passages is concerned with the account of Æneas' arrival in Lombardy which is compared to Brutus' arrival in his promised land, Britain:

<sup>25</sup> Ibid.-Historia, ch 155; Tristan of Thomas (ed. Bédier), II, 199-207.

<sup>26</sup> Op. cit., xvi, 163-165. Eneas 6573 f., Brut 3357 f. The rhyme riviere: pleniére in the Eneas has no counterpart in this particular passage of the Brut posited as the source of the Eneas. Hoepffner suggests (ibid., p. 165, note 1) that its presence here recalls Wace's use of the same rhyme in his description of Carlion (ll. 10471-72) and in his account of the establishment of the Bretons in Armorica (ll. 6052-53). It is difficult to accept one passage as the general source for the Eneas when recourse must be had to other passages in the Brut for specific detail.

<sup>27</sup> Op. cit., xvi, 162 and xv, 258.—In the second case (Brut 4411-4412, Eneas 4645-4646) the rhyme gloire: victoire occurs in lines where the context is not similar.

Et de la terre s'esloignièrent.
Tant al solel tant as estoiles,
Tant as avirons, tant as voiles
A Totenois en Destremue
Est tote la flote venus;
Ce est l'isle dont la deuesse
Lor fist en songe la promesse.

(Brut 1050-1056)

Eneas torne du rivage,
en haute mer s'empaint a naje;
il traient sus singles et voilez,
si laissent corre aus estoilles.
Et nuit et jor ont tant coru,
en Lombardie sont venu:
ce est la terre et le pais que Jupiter lor ot promis.

(Eneas 3021-3028)

In each case, it is true, the words "voiles" and "estoiles" terminate a line, but it should be noted that the lines differ in context. Besides, it is very doubtful whether the original text of the Eneas included the passage extending from l. 3021 to l. 3105 for it is absent from the two manuscripts which probably represent the best and oldest textual tradition.<sup>28</sup> M. Salverda de Grave believes<sup>29</sup> that this whole passage may be a later interpolation designed to make the resemblance between the Eneas and its classical model more apparent at this particular point. The opening lines of the passage certainly bear a closer resemblance to the beginning of the seventh book of the Aeneid than to the Brut.<sup>30</sup> In any case, one cannot base definitive conclusions upon a passage which does not indisputably represent the best manuscript tradition.

On the other hand, M. Hoepffner cites<sup>31</sup> another passage from the Eneas which undoubtedly recalls the Brut and for which the Aeneid provides no parallel:

Quant voit le rois que ne li valt,
Qu'il nes pot prandre par assalt,
Ne par nul engien que il face,
Trait soi en sus . . .

(Brut 337-340)

Quant Turnus voit que rien ne valt, ne nes pot prendre par asalt . .
O ce ne repot il rien faire,
il fet sa gent an sus retraire.

Eneas 5343-5344; 5355-5356)

The similarity in the context of the first two lines is corroborated by the similarity in rhyme. The effectiveness of this parallelism is lessened, however, when one observes that the four lines in the Eneas are not consecutive and that the action in the Brut has nothing whatever to do with the adventures of Æneas; the verbal resemblance may simply be fortuitous. Indeed, it is difficult to concede that the existence of several pairs of parallel rhymes in two poems respectively 10,156 and 15,300 lines long should be attributed to the dependence of one author on the other rather than to chance.

<sup>28</sup> Eneas (edition for "Les Classiques français du moyen âge"), II, 162.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid., I, vii, xiii.

<sup>30</sup> Aeneid, VII, 6-9, 144-145.

<sup>31</sup> Op. cit., xv, 266.

Even if one admitted that these rhymes might be indicative of some relationship between the poems, that admission would not establish the priority of either work. While the absence of pertinent documents prevents one from formulating any definitive conclusion regarding the date of the Eneas, certain considerations, as I have suggested above, point to 1155 as the terminus ad quem rather than the terminus a quo of this poem and make it likely that, if either author were the debtor in the few similar passages that may be posited, that debtor is Wace rather than the author of the Eneas.

Wace devotes about twenty-five lines (10-35) to the adventures of Æneas that preceded his arrival in Italy and about forty-five lines (36-80) to those that followed. The story of Dido is not mentioned, but a great amount of space—considering the brevity of Wace's whole account of Æneas—is given to the story of Lavinia, Æneas, and Turnus.

The Æneid, of course, ended with the death of Turnus. It was the author of the Eneas who amplified the account of Vergil, who seized upon the love element latent in the seventh book of the Æneid and made of it an interesting romance, terminated by the marriage and coronation of the hero and heroine. And, as M. Hoepffner admits,<sup>32</sup> this was a natural ending for a romance, an ending for which its author had no need to resort to Wace. True, but where did Wace get his idea for elaborating on Vergil? Not from his predecessors in the field of history. Both the Historia Brittonum and Geoffrey of Monmouth, Wace's immediate source, limit their summary of the last six books of the Æneid to a sentence or two.<sup>33</sup> Why would Wace have enlarged upon this particular situation if he had not known that his readers were already familiar with a more fully developed account of the love-tale of Lavinia, Æneas, and Turnus than that provided by Vergil? Had he been interested simply in exploiting any love element latent in the Latin poem, it is inconceivable that he would have omitted the Dido episode, and yet Dido is not even mentioned in passing. Although M. Hoepffner admits that it was unnecessary for the author of the Eneas to have consulted Wace for his initial idea, he maintains, curiously enough, that the similarities between the two accounts are sufficiently striking to warrant his conclusion that the Eneas was influenced by Wace. These lines on the crowning of Æneas and Lavinia, for example, seem to him parallel:

Dont ot Enéas la messine
Rois fu et ele fu roine

Eneas fu a roi levez . . .
et fu coronee Lavine:
rois fu d'Itaire et el raïne.

(Brut 63-64)

(Eneas 10105-10108)

<sup>32</sup> Ibid., pp. 253-254.

<sup>33</sup> Cf. Faral, la Légende arthurienne (Paris, 1929), III, 7, 74.

It is difficult to see how the poets could have presented the case differently and there is nothing in the rhymes to fortify the belief that either author wrote with a copy of the other's work at his side. The ending of the Eneas was a natural conclusion demanded by the romance, but romantic though his history may be according to our modern conceptions, it is questionable whether Wace would have felt impelled on his own initiative to provide such a relatively long account of this affair. Consequently, it appears preferable to see in the first lines of the Brut a summary—not a detailed reproduction or an imitation—of a love story which had been made popular by the author of the Eneas.

A further observation seems to substantiate this suggestion. For the author of the Eneas, the founder of Alba Longa was Æneas; for Wace, Ascanius. Both traditions were current in the twelfth century;<sup>34</sup> the Æneid itself was ambiguous on this point.<sup>35</sup> If, as M. Hoepffner maintains,<sup>36</sup> the author of the Eneas were following Wace, it is improbable that he would have chosen—either here or in the prophecy made by Anchises to Æneas (l. 2976)—a tradition other than that represented by Wace. If, on the other hand, Wace were simply prefixing his main history with a brief summary of a popular love story, there is absolutely no reason for believing that he would abandon the testimony of Geoffrey, his obvious source, to continue the tradition adopted by the author of the Eneas and which he may or may not have remembered.

There are also some minor details which seem to indicate that the Eneas may have been composed before 1155. Wace is one of our first professional writers. His contemporaries and immediate successors who wrote under the patronage of Henry II, Eleanor of Aquitaine, and her daughters, did not hesitate to acknowledge their work, whether it dealt with "la matière de Bretagne" (Marie de France, Chrétien de Troyes), Byzantine legends (Gautier d'Arras) or the legends of antiquity (Benoît de Sainte-Maure). If our poet had been writing in Normandy after 1155, it seems strange that he, unlike Wace, unlike Benoît de Sainte-Maure and the others, did not sign his work. The fact is that the marriage of Henry II to Eleanor of Aquitaine in 1154 rendered secure the patronage of Norman men of letters. In the decade immediately preceding 1155 their position had been less certain because Geoffrey of Anjou, who won the duchy of Normandy for his son Henry in 1144, retained his court in Anjou and visited Normandy only intermittently.<sup>37</sup> Consequently, writers before 1155 would be less encouraged to reveal their identity than writers after 1155. If the Thèbes and the Eneas were written before this

<sup>34</sup> Hoepffner, op. cit., xv, 255.

<sup>35</sup> Æneid, vi, 763 f., viii, 48.

<sup>36</sup> Op. cit., xv, 255–256.

<sup>37</sup> Haskins, C. H., Norman Institutions (Cambridge, 1918), pp. 131, 143.

date, it might explain why they are anonymous and the Troie signed.<sup>38</sup>

Although the Eneas would very likely appeal more strongly than the early chansons de geste to a courtly society, the conception of love here revealed is not entirely what one would expect of a poet writing in Normandy after 1155, that is, after the marriage of Henry II to Eleanor of Aquitaine and the introduction into the North of the courtly conceptions of love which had prevailed for some time in the South.

The whole idea of Æneas' abandoning Dido seems contrary to the spirit of l'amour courtois. The author of the Eneas need not, it is true, alter the main facts of the story which he found in the Æneid. Nevertheless, an author inspired by the courtly ideal of love might be expected to evidence some sympathy for the abandoned heroine. Our author, however, minimizes the sympathy which Vergil had felt for the unfortunate Dido, condemns her actions<sup>39</sup> and adds to the account of Vergil a rather unflattering epitaph<sup>40</sup> which one can scarcely consider reflective of a courtly society animated by Eleanor of Aquitaine.

Although the lines in which Æneas speaks of love as the impelling force in his life<sup>41</sup> seem to indicate a growing tendency toward the courtly conception of love, the dominating note of that love appears to be realistic rather than idealistic.<sup>42</sup> Furthermore, unlike the heroines usually associated with courtly love, Lavinia is the aggressor; she is the first to reveal her love by means of a missive delivered to Æneas one day as he approaches her tower.<sup>43</sup> When, in response to the message, Æneas looks up at the window where Lavinia is standing, she throws him a kiss.<sup>44</sup> The monologues in which the lovers describe their feelings suggest a purely Ovidian, rather than an idealistic, conception of love.<sup>45</sup>

If our author had been writing after the appearance of Wace's Brut or been inspired by Wace, it is probable that he would have united in some fashion, however slight, the traditions of antiquity with those of the Celtic world so recently appropriated by vernacular French literature. Our earliest extant romances posterior to the Brut all show some traces of Celtic tradition. A fairy figures in Benoît de Sainte-Maure's Troie,<sup>46</sup> Cligès, although it has a Byzantine background nevertheless introduces Arthur; the author who re-worked Albéric's Roman d'Alex-

<sup>38</sup> I accept Faral's demonstration of the relative chronology of Thèbes, Eneas, and Troie. (Recherches sur les sources latines des contes et romans courtois du moyen âge, pp. 169-187.)

<sup>39</sup> Eneas, 1593-1604.

<sup>40</sup> Ibid., 2139-2144.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid., 9051-9056, 9061-9064.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., 9039-9047.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid., 8767-8774, 8807-8811, 8863-8870.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid., 8876-8879

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., 8158-8170. For a detailed account of the influence of Ovid on the Lavinia episode, cf. Faral, Recherches sur les sources latines des contes et romans courtois du moyen âge, pp. 125 f.

<sup>46</sup> Roman de Troie, ed. L. Constans (1904), I, 434, ll. 8023 f.

andre and produced the decasyllabic version did not hesitate to give his hero "l'elme de Cornualle; Li reis Artus l'ot man jor en bataille."<sup>47</sup> If our poet had been inspired by Wace, it is difficult to believe that he, contrary to the majority of his contemporaries, would have avoided any allusion to the Celtic material Wace had probably popularized.

Furthermore, the author of the Eneas evidences no interest in the supernatural and he either very definitely eliminates from his model, the Aeneid, as much of it as is not essential to his narrative<sup>48</sup> or attributes to human causes what in the Latin poem had been the result of divine intervention.<sup>49</sup> To take but one example, the hero of the Aeneid makes his entrance into Carthage enveloped in a cloud (I, 439-440). In the Eneas he sends messengers who bring back to him a report of the Queen's reception (356 f., 641 f.). The author of the Eneas admits into his poem none of that marvelous element, that sense of mystery so peculiarly characteristic of "la matière de Bretagne." If he had written after 1155, it seems improbable that he would have refused to exploit this new spirit. While Wace also retains in his narrative (ll. 7719-7724) the dragons that are so inseparably a part of Arthurian legend, whereas the author of the Eneas preferred not to include in his poem Laocoön's struggle with the sea serpents.

One must admit, of course, the possibility that the Eneas was posterior to Wace and that its author entirely escaped his influence. Nevertheless when one considers that Wace devotes more space to a summary of the Aeneas-Lavinia-Turnus affair than his Latin models do, that anonymity was more common in the field of narrative poetry before the time of Wace than after, that our poet's conception of love is primarily an Ovidian and realistic one rather than the idealistic conception familiar to the wife of Henry II, that no allusion is made in the Eneas to Arthurian legend, introduced into the vernacular by 1155, and that there is no trace here, as in the narrative poetry posterior to 1155, of that peculiar supernatural element which we associate with Celtic rather than classical literature, it seems likely that the Eneas was composed before the Brut and that the approximate date of 1150 originally assigned the poem by Salverda de Grave is correct.

EDNA C. FREDRICK

Williamsport Dickinson Junior College

<sup>47</sup> Meyer, P., Alexandre le Grand dans la littérature française du moyen âge (Paris, 1886), I, 41, ll. 368-369.

<sup>48</sup> Eneas (Bibliotheca normannica), Intr., xxxiii.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid., pp. xxxiv, xxxix.

CHAUCER'S WRECHED ENGENDRING

SOME ten years ago I pointed out (MLN, xl, 282-284) that the poem, "An Holy Medytacion," first printed by Dr. MacCracken,<sup>1</sup> was based directly on a thirteenth-century Latin poem, "De Humana Miseria Tractatus."<sup>2</sup> The English poem opens with a lively description of Spring which irresistibly recalls the beginning of the General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales. No doubt Dr. MacCracken was impressed by the apparent reminiscences of Chaucer in this section of the poem, and it was very natural that these should have influenced him in assigning the "Holy Medytacion" to Lydgate. This Spring description, however, instead of being reminiscent of Chaucer, follows closely the phrases of its Latin original. Accordingly, the most plausible reason for assigning the poem to the monk of Bury at once disappears.

My former discussion of "An Holy Medytacion" was primarily devoted to questioning its right to be included in the Lydgate Canon. Among other objections to Lydgate's authorship I noted that this poem contains three instances of "antepenultimate rhyme of words in -oun." But in this matter I relied too confidently upon Dr. MacCracken's own rime-tests. Lydgate, he asserts, avoided such penultimate rimes as "Temptacioun: nacioun, derisioun: visioun, corréccioun: diléccioun, etc." [The last two are found in "An Holy Medytacion"]. "The -acioun rhyme," he adds, "comes into Lydgate's work rarely, and by accident in his latest poems (Secrees, Miracles of Edmund); the others never."<sup>3</sup> However, without making a complete examination of Lydgate's verse, I have noted sixty-seven instances of such excluded rimes,<sup>4</sup> while of

<sup>1</sup> Minor Poems of Lydgate, ed. H. N. MacCracken, EETS, I, 43-48.

<sup>2</sup> Ed. from MS. E. 2. 33 in the Library of Trinity Coll. Dublin by M. Esposito, Eng. Hist. Review, xxxii, 402-405.

<sup>3</sup> Minor Poems of Lydgate, I, vii, note 4.

<sup>4</sup> Troy Book:—entencioun: offencioun I, 747/8; suspeccioun: discrecioun I, 3079/80; discrecioun: suspeccioun I, 3531/2; discrecioun: oppressioun II, 1147/8; subieccioun: eleccioun III, 2333/4; illusiouns: conclusiouns III, 4947/8; disposicioun: opposicioun III, 5585/6; entencioun: dissencioun IV, 293/4; mencionioun: entencioun IV, 1713/4; illusioun: confusioun IV, 6939/40; devisioun: thavisionioun V, 3075/6; direccioun: inspeccioun V, 3535/6; inspeccioun: subieccioun Envoy 51/3. [13 cases]

Temple of Glas:—eleccioun: subieccion 342/4; offencioun: entencion 429/30; eleccioun: subieccioun 569/70; offencioun: entencioun 884/6; subieccioun: eleccioun 1075/6. [5 cases]

St. Albon and St. Amphabel:—confusion: collusion I, 828/30; affection: correction II, 1991/3; punysshon: remysshon III, 871/3; confusyon: illusion: abusyon III, 1368/70/1; occasyon: inuasion III, 1374/6; possession: profession: succession III, 1494/6/7. [6 cases]

Minor Poems, Vol. I:—subieccyoun: proteccyoun Benedic An. Mea 149/51; inspeccion: coreccion Exhort. to Priests 52/3; affeccioun: direccioun, perfeccion: perfeccion, affection:

the -ácioun rimes, which Dr. MacCracken admits in Lydgate's latest poems "rarely and by accident," I find 20 in Troy Book, 2 in Siege of Thebes, 1 in the Temple of Glas, 26 in Fall of Princes, 20 in S. Albon and S. Amphabel, 58 in Minor Poems, and 12 in S. Edmund and S. Fremund—a total of 139 instances. Nor would it appear from this list that these -ácioun rimes were specially characteristic of Lydgate's later work. I am still of the opinion that "An Holy Medytacion" was not composed by Lydgate, but I would no longer base an argument upon the occurrence of penultimate rimes.

Before entering upon the general question of the authorship of this poem I wish to call attention to a specially interesting passage treating of the joys of Heaven:

wher is mirthe, rest, and pees,	74
Dwelling with god and with his moder deer,
And with his seyntes shynynge ful cleer,
And also with þe hooly companye,
Of þ'aungelles, wheeche þat maken melodye
So delytable and in so goodely wyse
þat þer nys mannes tonge to souffyse,	80
þoughe þey alle were sette and put in oon
And hadde þe konnynges of þe, Omer, echoon,
To telle þe mirthe and loye is in þat place,—
And passing al, þe sight of Crystes face.	84

A reference to the cunning of Homer is hardly what one would expect correction Virtues of Mass 10/12, 426/8, 661/3; contricioun. remyscioun SS Kath Marg. & Mary Magd. 13/15; affeccioun: correccioun To S. Thomas 117/9; addycioun: contrycioun Leg. of S. Gyle 250/2; illusciouns: collusciouns Leg. of S. Marg. 389/90; affeccioun: resurreccioun S. Austin at Compt. 373/5; affeccioun. perfeccioun Fifteen Oecs 204/5; assensioun: mencion, assumpcion. presumpcion Ave Maria 49/51, 57/9; compleccioun: perfeccioun, confusioun. illusioun Testament 724/5, 795/7; mencyon: Inuencyon: pension: Ascencion Kalendare 121/3/4/5. [16 cases]

Minor Poems, Vol. II.—correction: inspeccion, cession: possessioun Isopes Fab. 46/7, 744/6; entencion: discencioun Ball. to Hen. VI 138/40. [3 cases]

S. Edmund and S. Fremund:—impressiouns: successiouns I, 390/2; pocessioun: successioun III, 865/6. [2 cases]

Fall of Princes:—possessioun: successioun I, 1742/3; conclusion: confusioun I, 2867/8, V, 1184/6; possessiouns: transgressiouns II, 3544/6; abusioun: conclusioun II, 4579/81; successioun: possessioun II, 2571/3, V, 3002/3; VIII, 2615/6; affeccioun: refeccioun: II, 1548/50; mencion: discencioun III, 1605/7; VIII, 331/3; subieccioun: proteccioun III, 3546/7; condiciouns: disposiciouns III, 4244/6; subieccioun: affeccioun IV, 1474/5; entencion: mencion IV, 3969/71; mocion: deuocioun V, 268/70; intrusioun: collusioun V, 2740/2; disposicioun: condicioun VI, 599/600; regiouns: legiouns VI, 1814/6, 3648/50; confecciouns: refecciouns VII, 902/4. [21 cases]

Siege of Thebes:—remyscioun: condicioun III, 3471/2. [1 case] in a description of the joys of Paradise; and on examining the manuscript, I found that the "O" in "Omer" is purely imaginary. Moreover, in this word the "r" is not entirely normal, and the manuscript shows evidence of a slight erasure at this point; Shirley seems originally to have written "of þe men." The rather elaborate rhetorical figure which underlies these lines recalls the well-known passage in Marlowe's Tamburlaine (V. ii) beginning

If all the pens that ever poets held
Had fed the feeling of their masters' thoughts.

While the resemblances are too vague to suggest any direct relationship, the similar pattern on which these passages are constructed may be due to a common root in literary tradition.

The existence of such a mediæval original appears to be established by the following passage, which occurs in a collection of religious tales and exempla compiled by a Franciscan in northern Italy and preserved in B.M. Additional MS. 27336, written in the early fifteenth century:<sup>5</sup>

(fol. 27<sup>b</sup>) Dicit quidam sapiens, scilicet Gamaliel, quod si firmamentum esset gamenum<sup>6</sup> & mare Incaustum,<sup>7</sup> & arundines & plume omnium auium essent penne, & omnes homines & mulieres scriptores, non possent describere vnum gaudium paradisi. Tanta delectatio est uidere deum quod si omnes pene Infernales esse possent in uno oculo & illo posset deus uideri non possent nocere ei.

The figurative representation of the feathers of all the birds as pens and all men and women as writers has something in common with Marlowe's "If all the pens that ever poets held." But in the main these Latin lines are much more closely related to the passage in "An Holy Medytacion." The theme in both is the joy of Paradise. And in both the crowning joy is the sight of God. ("Tanta delectatio est videre Deum," and "passing al the sight of Crystes face.") The sage who is here quoted is probably not the Gamaliel mentioned in the Book of Acts, for, according to the article by Professor Bacher in the Jewish Encyclopaedia, there were six patriarchs named Gamaliel as well as "others of the same name who lived in Palestine in the third and fourth centuries and who are reckoned among the Palestinian amoraim." In any event, the ascription of this

<sup>5</sup> Cf. Catal. of Romances in Brit. Mus., III, 647.

<sup>6</sup> I have not succeeded in finding this word in mediæval vocabularies, but in Baxter and Johnson's Mediæval Word List (Oxford, 1934) I note "gammula, (n. pl.) letters, writing, 13th c." The context would indicate that gamenum means parchment or other writing material.

<sup>7</sup> Ink; see Baxter and Johnson's Mediæval Word List, "**incaustum* 12th c., a 1408, incastum 1456, incoustra c. 1220 for encaustum, ink."

saying to Gamaliel would appear to carry it back to early rabbinical tradition.<sup>8</sup>

Let us now take up the problem of the authorship of "An Holy Medytacion," which in my previous paper was limited to the question whether it was or was not the work of Lydgate. In the present paper I wish to bring forward some new evidence which, I think, points unmistakably to the real author of the poem. In this inquiry we must proceed by examining first the substance of the thirteenth-century "De Miseria Humana Tractatus," on which it was based. Of this Latin text M. Esposito states: "In rhythm and substance it is an imitation of the celebrated Apocalypsis Goliæ." But the only suggestion which he offers as to the sources of his poem is: "Some reminiscences of the remarkable satire of Bernard de Morlas, De Contemptu Mundi,"<sup>9</sup> may also be traced." Apparently M. Esposito confined his investigation of sources to materials in verse, though it is singular that the very title of Bernard de Morlas's work did not lead him to examine also the world-famous "De Contemptu Mundi sive De Miseria Conditionis Humanae" by Pope Innocent III. The sub-title, it will be noted, is almost identical with that of the thirteenth-century poem. Had he turned to Pope Innocent's treatise he would have found, not vague "reminiscences," but the immediate source of his poem. Without taking space for a detailed comparison of the two documents, I select a few passages which will illustrate the dependence of the thirteenth-century Rhythmus upon Pope Innocent's De Contemptu Mundi.<sup>10</sup>

Lib. I, caput v. Quali cibo conceptus nutriatur in utero. Sed attende quo cibo conceptus nutriatur in utero. Profecto sanguine menstruo, qui cessat ex femina post conceptum, ut ex eo conceptus nutriatur in femina. Qui fertur esse tam detestabilis et immundus, ut ex ejus contactu fruges non germinant, arescant arbusta, moriantur herbae, amittant arbores fructus,* et si canes inde comederint in rabiem efferantur. †

Concepti fetus vitium seminis contrahunt, ita ut leprosi et elephantici ex hac corruptione nascentur.

Cap. VI. De imbecillitate infantis.

. . . Quidam enim tam deformes et prodigiosi nascuntur, ut non homines, sed abominaciones potius videantur, quibus forte melius fuisset provisum, si nun-

* Migne:fœtus.

† Migne:efferantur.

<sup>8</sup> An echo of this saying may perhaps be recognized in a folk-rime which still survives. More than fifty years ago in the state of Ohio I heard a jingle which began: "If all the sky were parchment/and all the sea were ink" . . .—And a well-known nursery-rime known to all folk-dancers runs: If all the world were paper, / and all the sea were ink, / and all the trees were bread and cheese, / what would we have to drink?

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Wright's ed., Anglo-Latin Satirical Poets, II (1872), 31, 35, 66.

<sup>10</sup> Migne, Patr. Lat., ccxvii, 701 ff.

quam prodissent ad visum, quoniam ut monstra monstrantur, et ostenduntur ostentui. Plerique vero diminuti membris, et sensibus corrupti nascuntur, amicorum tristia, parentum infamia, verecundia propinquorum. . . .

De Humana Miseria Tractatus

Quam sit conditio siue miseria	35
Humani generis uilis et uaria!
Plus quam uilissimus reuera dicitur
Homo, de spermate uili concipitur,
Sanguine menstruo conceptus alitur;
De quo, set pudor est, dicam quid scribitur.	40
Contactu menstruo flores non procreant,
Nec herbe semina fruges non germinant;
Amittunt arbores fructus nec pululant;
Ruunt in rabiem canes si comedant.*
Hoc in articulo puer † qui gingnitur	45
Aut lepram contrahit aut secus nascitur
Gibbosus, indecens, deformis, editur
Contractus corpore uel cito moritur.
Ecce materiam de qua conciperis!
Cibo quam nobili conceptus aleris!	50

Cap. vii. De dolore partus et ejulatu infantis.

Omnes nascimus ejulantes, ut nostram miseriam exprimamus. . . . Concepit ergo cum immunditia et fetore, parit cum tristitia et dolore, nutrit cum angustia et labore, custodit cum instantia et timore.

Ploras et eiulas statim cum nasceris,	51
Et mortis misere uiam ingrederis
Die quo nasceris; quid mirabilius
Non esse incipis dolens et anxius?
Quanto plus uixeris tanto deterius
Viuis, et corrui in uia deuius.	56

Cap. ix. Quem fructum homo producit.

O vilis conditionis humanae indignitas, o indigna uilitatis humanae conditio! Herbas et arbores investiga. Illae de se producant flores et frondes et fructus: et heu tu de te lendes et pediculos et lumbricos. Illae de se fundunt oleum, vinum, et balsamum, et tu de te sputum, urinam, et stercus: illae de se spirant suauitatem odoris, et tu de te reddis abominationem fetoris.

Attentis oculis homo considera	61
Quot mundi uanitas, quot caro misera
Diuersa nutriunt fetorum genera;
Te uilem reputes mox inter cetera.

* On v. 44 Esposito adds this note: "I have searched in vain for this tradition in a number of ancient and medieval medical writers." But cf. De Contemptu Mundi, cap. v.

† MS. pā.

Producunt arbores frondes et folia, 65
 Vinum et oleum et multa dulcia,
 Homo pediculos, lendes, et talia,
 Vrinam, uomitum, sputum et stercora. 68

In Book II Pope Innocent concerns himself with the prevalence in human affairs of injustice, fraud, and ambition; and the author of the Rhythmus, developing this theme, gives to the later portion of his poem a satirical turn which, as its editor has noted, is quite in the mode of the Apocalypsis Goliæ. In this section the abuses of the Roman curia are denounced in express terms, and at the conclusion England is mentioned by name. In this satirical trend, however, the poet obviously has turned away from Pope Innocent to other models.

Turning back now to "An Holy Medytacion," we note that the author instead of following this digression into satire, centers his poem upon þe mutabiltee

Of þis wretched worldes vanytee (ll. 109-110).

The following lines may be compared for language with the Rhythmus and for substance with the De Contemptu Mundi, as quoted above:

Trees bring foorþe, þou wost weel, as I gesse, 113
 Branch, leef, and floure, wyñ, oyle, and suche swettnesse,
 For þy behooue by goddes ordeynaunce,
 For þou him shuldest serve to plesaunce. 116
 Shewe foorþe þe fruyt, nowe, man þat comeþe of þee,
 Howe proufitable and fayre is it? let see:
 Of þee kemeþe dung, vryne, vomyt and spitting,
 Lysse, nyttes, flees, and suche filthy thing. 120
 If þat þy filthes I reherce shal,
 Men shal well wit þou art nought worth at al.
 O filthy man! contrarye of al clennesse,
 Vessel of dung, heep of rotunnesse, 124
 Vessel in whoome þe heete of leecherye
 Lurkiþe and abydeþe þer til þat þou dye!
 O wretched man! ful varyant and vnstable
 Is þy condicyoun, and right deceyvable, 128
 Right nowe þou art, nowe stintest þou to be,
 Wheþer euer þou fleest deeþe ay wol suwe þee.*

The same note is struck again a little further on, and here also the phrases of the Rhythmus are reproduced with but slight variation:

Considre eeke þis, and haue it in memorye, 159
 þat al þis wretched worldes loye and glorye,
 And mighte of kynges, and hir dignytee,

* Text of this and the following selections collated with the MS.

And ooþer lordes mightes, what soo þey bee, For alle hir castelles and hir toures hye And hir possessyouns, yit shal þey dye. Hir goode ne catel ne may hem not avaylle; Cruwel deepe of his pray wol not faylle.	164
Quid mundi gloria uel superfluitas, Regum potentia siue sublimitas, Quid turres diuitum siue cupiditas, Quid rerum copia? nonne sunt uanitas? O gentis simplicis mens male conscia Quid prodest homini nummorum copia Cum pulset ostium mors mordens fortia?	85   88  91

Indeed, "An Holy Medytacion" is a somewhat colorless title for this poem,<sup>11</sup> whose theme is better expressed by the "De Humana Miseria Tractatus" of the Latin verses or by the "De Miseria Conditionis Humanae" of Pope Innocent's sub-title. And at this point one recalls that Chaucer himself, among the titles of his works, names one, hitherto unidentified,

Of the Wretched Engending of Mankinde
As man may in pope Innocent y-finde
(L.G.W. Prol. G, 414-415)

"Of" in this statement, which exactly corresponds to the "De" in the Latin headings, is clearly part of the title, and is so printed by Tatlock.<sup>12</sup> The work which Chaucer here acknowledged has by reasonable inference been taken to be a direct translation from Pope Innocent, but Chaucer did not say this. He wrote "Of the Wretched Engending" as one may find it set forth by Pope Innocent.

Though the editor of the Rhythmus did not recognize that it was based upon Pope Innocent's treatise, Chaucer would not have failed to identify this as its source—at least when he wrote the G-Prologue. Indeed, the Tales of the Man of Law and the Pardoner afford positive testimony that at the time when these were composed Chaucer was directly acquainted with the text of De Contemptu Mundi. Assuming for the moment that Chaucer was the author of the English poem, it is quite possible that he may have translated the Latin Rhythmus before he read

<sup>11</sup> The running titles of the poem in the Trinity MS. are: "An holy seying" (p. 111), "An holy and deuoute Meditacōn" (pp. 112/113), "A deuoute Meditacōn for mans Salvacōn" (pp. 114/5), "A deuoute Meditacōn" (p. 116). The title was no doubt supplied by Shirley: note other similar titles in the Ashmole MS.: "A deuoute Invocacioun to oure Ladye" (fol. 64), "A pytous lamentacioun of oure ladye" (fol. 66). "A deuoute exortacioun," etc. (fol. 68<sup>vo</sup>), "Deuoute & vertuos wordes" (fol. 73).

<sup>12</sup> Devel. and Chron. of Chaucer's Works, p. 182, note.

Pope Innocent. In that case, however, when he included this poem in the list of his works, it would have been entirely natural for him to add the reference to Pope Innocent, on whose treatise the Rhythmus was directly based.

Scholars are divided in their opinion as to whether Chaucer was here referring to a poem or a prose work. Koeppe<sup>13</sup> and Skeat<sup>14</sup> conjecture that it was a poem in rime-royal from which Chaucer later incorporated material in the Tales of the Man of Law and the Pardoner. Tatlock remarks that "the manner in which the work is mentioned in the Legend certainly seems to imply that it was in prose" (loc. cit.). He refers undoubtedly to the preceding line in the L.G.W.: "He hath in prose translated Boece." This line, however, was not written at the same time, but some eight years earlier in the F-version of the Prologue. In revising his Prologue Chaucer may have inserted the additional title without necessarily intending the phrase "in prose" to apply to this added item.

As to the scope of Chaucer's "Wretched Engendring," Professor Tatlock expressed the opinion that Chaucer's translation included only the early part of the De Contemptu Mundi. "Chaucer's title," he remarks, "corresponds only to the first five chapters of the first of the pope's three books; they alone deal with conception and gestation, which, according to the pope, are very wretched indeed" (loc. cit.). This very discerning suggestion is borne out rather notably by the text of the poem which we are discussing, in which the observable resemblances to the De Contemptu Mundi do not extend beyond Chapter nine of Book I.

Readers may object that the extracts from "An Holy Medytacion" printed above are not in the usual Chaucerian vein, but in view of Chaucer's statement that he wrote "Of the Wretched Engendring of Mankinde" we are hardly justified in rejecting on this ground alone a poem which agrees so perfectly in theme and scope with the work mentioned in the Prologue of the L.G.W. Let us see, then, whether there is any internal or external evidence in support of his authorship.

"An Holy Medytacion" is preserved in two manuscripts, both of them in the hand of John Shirley, Trinity Coll. Camb. R. 3.20 (No. 600 in Dr. James's Catalogue) and Ashmole 59 in the Bodleian. The latter was written when Shirley was upwards of eighty years of age, and, as Miss Hammond has shown,<sup>15</sup> many of the pieces in it "are hasty, garbled, and scramblingly written." It is in every respect inferior to the Trinity manuscript and has no independent authority. Dr. MacCracken also, in printing this poem, gave the preference to the Trinity text.

<sup>13</sup> Archiv. f. d. Stud. d. neueren Sprache, LXXXIV, 405 ff.

<sup>14</sup> Oxford Chaucer, III, 307 and 407/8.

<sup>15</sup> Anglia, xxvii, 397.

In the Trinity manuscript "An Holy Medytacion" appears without the name of any author, but it immediately follows Chaucer's "Compleynthe of Anelida" (p. 106). After the "Medytacion" comes "A lytel tretis made by Thomas Occleve" [The Epistle of Cupid], and then come two more of Chaucer's minor poems, "The Balade of Fortune," and "Truth," though in both cases without ascription to him. Thus "An Holy Medytacion" stands in a group of five pieces of which the first, fourth, and fifth are known to be by Chaucer while only the third is certainly not his work. We may say, then, that the manuscript, though in no sense offering direct testimony in regard to the authorship of this poem, at least gives some plausibility to the suggestion that it was composed by Chaucer.

Neither the language nor the metre is inconsistent with this ascription, though in judging the inflectional forms and the accentuation one must make allowance for carelessness and unintelligence on the part of the scribes.<sup>16</sup> Even so, the text of these verses will bear comparison with that in many manuscripts of known Chaucerian pieces. As I have already stated, there are a few instances of "penultimate or ante-penultimate rhyme of words in -oun."<sup>17</sup> Such rimes, however, though infrequent, are to be found in genuine works of Chaucer. I have noted no fewer than eighteen instances of these, and it is likely that still others could be added to my list.<sup>18</sup> We should not be warranted, therefore, in excluding this poem from the Chaucerian canon solely on this ground.

Moreover, among the rimes appearing in this poem a considerable number are characteristically Chaucerian. Indeed, a large proportion of them are used by Chaucer not merely as rime-words but in rime-pairs. In order to exhibit the actual situation I give a full list of these, including rimes which are commonplaces (e.g. me:see) as well as those which are distinctly significant:

<sup>16</sup> The single occurrence of a bad rime, veer: eyr (vv. 5/6), is no doubt to be thus explained. As Professor Onions points out to me, eyr must be a scribal error for the adverb er ("previously," "hitherto"). This correction not only removes the faulty rime but improves the sense of the passage. "Wyntour" is evidently a substantive here as in v. 15.

<sup>17</sup> These are: mutacyoun: consolacyoun (19, 20), affeccion: correccion (41, 42), affeccyoun: dyleccyoun (143, 144).

<sup>18</sup> Antepenultimate rimes in Chaucer: conclusioun: confusioun rv, 257/8, xxxii, 23/25; conclusioun: illusioun F, 1263/4, G, 672/3; replecciouns: complecciouns B, 4113/4; complexions: reflexions HF, 21/2; proffessioun: possessioun D, 1925/6; discrecioun: possesioun F, 685/6; desperacioun: dampnacioun ABC, 21/23; salvacioun: dampnacioun ABC, 165/7; calcinacioun: albificacioun G, 804/5; citrinacioun: fermentacioun G, 816/7; demonstracion: ymaginacion HF, 727/8; significaciouns: tribulaciouns B, 4169/70; inclinacioun: constellacioun D, 615/6; dampnacioun: nacioun D, 1067/8; declynacion: exaltacion E, 2223/4; constellacioun: operacioun F, 129/30.

- 1- 2 rayn: fayn, = TC. III 655/6
 7- 8 gret: heet, = C. 37/8
 9- 10 mede: drede, = F. 723/4
 11- 12 greves: leves, = A. 1495/6
 15- 16 derknesse: cleernessee; cf. derknesse: brightnesse G. 384/5
 17- 18 be: parde, = B. 1977/8
 21- 22 ydelnesse: swettnesse; cf. ydelnesse: businesse L.G.W. 1722/3
 23- 24 me: see, = B. 1882/4
 25- 26 hert: atert, = BD. 1153/4, D. 967/8, and TC. V. 1343/4
 27- 28 hye: remedye, = B. 209/10
 29- 30 be: tree, = B. 4329/30
 31- 32 greene: bytweene, = A. 2859/60
 33- 34 crafttely: I, = G. 602/3
 37- 38 thought: nought, = B. 3616/7
 39- 40 anoon: goon, = F. 765/6
 43- 44 mynde: kynde, = A. 1401/2
 45- 46 vn-to: loo, = HF. 997/8
 47- 48 synne: Inne, = B. 3192/3
 49- 50 Iniquyte: me; cf. iniquitee: pitee: she B. 450/3
 51- 52 ewrought: ebrought, cf. broght: y-wroght PF. 121/3
 53- 54 devyse: in what wyse, = A. 1843/4
 55- 56 honeste: me, = LGW. 2700/1
 57- 58 birthe: mirthe, = D. 399/400
 59- 60 wayle: fayle, = E. 1182, 1212
 61- 62 lyf: stryff, = E. 1645/6
 63- 64 astert: hert, = A. 1595/6, LGW. 1802/3, 2338/9, and XXII. 13/14
 65- 66 sore: more, = A. 1115/6
 69- 70 alle: calle, = A. 2085/6, 4111/2, etc.
 73- 74 eendelese: pees; cf. doutelees: pees: recceles B. 226/9
 75- 76 moder deer: cleer, = B. 1844/5, etc.
 77- 78 companye: melodye, = A. 4167/8 and 2565/6
 79- 80 wyse: souffyse, = B. 1098/9, 3171/2, etc.
 83- 84 place: face, = A. 623/4, etc.
 85- 86 dignyte: bee, = B. 3360/1, etc.
 87- 88 syde: betyde, = E. 79/81, etc.
 89- 90 helle: iclle, = A. 1999/2000, 2227/8, etc.
 91- 92 blaake: makc, = A. 899/900, etc.
 93- 94 his: is, = F. 1165/6, D. 1105/6, etc.
 97- 98 cende: weende, = TC. V. 475/6, etc.
 99-100 freelte: be; cf. freelte: she D. 92/3, freelte: he E. 1159/60
 101-102 sweete: byheete, = TC. I. 538/9, etc.
 103-104 courtesye: guye, = E. 74/5
 111-112 prey: sey, = A. 3139/40, 3171/2
 113-114 gesse: swettnesse, = PF. 198/200.
 115-116 ordeynauce: plesaunce, = B. 762/3, etc.
 125-126 leecherye: dye, = D. 737/8, etc.
 127-128 vnstable: deceyvable, = E. 2057/8
 133-134 space: grace, = A. 87/8 et passim.
 141-142 rede: drede, = TC. I. 83/4 et passim.
 147-148 liknesse: goodnesse; cf. gladnesse: lyknesse A. 2841/2
 149-150 creature: dure, = A. 1359/60 et passim.
 151-152 posessyoun: adowne; cf. possession: down = A. 2241/2
 155-156 vnkynde: kynde, = PF. 358/60
 157-158 displeese: eese, = TC. I. 27/8, etc.
 159-160 memorye: glorie, = E. 2243/4, LGW. 2530/1
 161-162 dignyte: bee, = E. 470/2
 163-164 hye: dye, = Mars 270/1
 165-166 awaylle: faylle, = B. 1765/6
 167-168 abouwe: love, = A. 1599/600, 1671/2, etc.

Even more notable than this use of identical rime-words is the frequent occurrence in this poem of phrases which at once remind us of lines in Chaucer. "And swoote gan to smellen" (9) may be compared with "and swote smellen floures" (TC. I. 158); "warrished of hir drede" (10) resembles "warissshed of his wo" (F. 1162); "Al Ioye and mirthe þat may e-rekened bee" (86) has the same swing as Chaucer's "Of shap and al that myghte y-rekened be" (F. 427).

The lively description of the pursuit of Renard in the Nun's Priest's Tale,

And shouting of the men and wimmen eke

They yelleden as feendes don in helle (B. 4577-79).

is immediately suggested by the line,

And suche noyse and showing of feondes blaake (91)

Again, Chaucer's "whyle I have tyme and space" (A. 35) is practically identical with "whyles þou hast tyme and space" (133). Still more striking is the line creature / þat in þis world is whil þat it shal dure (150)

which closely parallels Chaucer's creature / That is or shal whyl that the world may dure

(A. 1360, cf. B. 1078).

Chaucer's terse "Lat see!" is familiar to every reader, though its frequency in his verse will probably surprise any one who notes the instances assembled in the Concordance. In twelve cases Chaucer begins the line with "Lat see" or "Lat see now." But in five other cases the phrase stands at the end of the line as in

"Yis," quod this Somnour, "pay anon, lat se" (D. 1598)
How I might best avaylen? now lat see (TC. II. 1430).

In the "Holy Medytacion" also it occurs at the end of the line:

Howe profitable and fayre is it? let see (118).

The author of the Latin rhythmus, pursuing the details of gestation in Innocent's treatise, inserts a phrase of apology:

De quo, set pudor est, dicam quid scribitur.

In his translation of the rhythmus, however, the English poet forbears at this point:

Of þi conceyving ne wol I not devyse,
Ne howe þou art efedde, ne in what wyse.

I wol eschuwe it for þyne honeste,
Wher-fore of þat þou getest nomore of me (53-6).

Can we possibly be mistaken in recognizing in these lines the technique of Chaucer? "Ye gete namore of me" is the phrase which he uses repeatedly at the close of a description or a discussion. With these words the Host concluded his doxology to Bacchus (H. 102). The magic horse in the Squire's Tale, Chaucer says,

Vanished, I noot in what manere,
Out of hir sighte; ye gete na-more of me (F. 343).

Arveragus and Dorigene, he tells us, lived happily ever after,

And she was to him trewe for evermore.
Of thise two folk ye gete of me namore (F. 1556).

And finally it is with this formula that the scene of May's visit to the bedside of Damian concludes:

This purs hath she inwith hir bosom hid,
And wente hir wey; ye gete namore of me (E. 1945).

How shall we explain this series of manifest resemblances to the work of Chaucer? We must either accept his authorship of this poem or we must regard it as a conscious piece of imitation. And to carry through a successful imitation of Chaucer's style while translating a Latin treatise "De Humana Miseria" would have been, one may well believe, an impossible tour de force. The only Chaucerian imitator whose name would occur to any one in this connection is Lydgate, but in my earlier paper I showed how little basis there is for assigning "An Holy Medytacion" to him. I am glad to have confirmation of my opinion in this matter from no less an authority than Dr. Henry Bergen, the editor of Lydgate's Troy Book and Fall of Princes. Referring to my attempt to set aside the ascription of this poem to Lydgate, Dr. Bergen expressed himself as follows:<sup>19</sup>

There is a wholly different feeling and rhythm in it from anything I know of by Lydgate—much earlier to my mind, much more like Chaucer—the measure (allowing for mistakes of the copyists) nearer Chaucer's. It seems to me that it would be no less difficult to prove that it isn't by Chaucer than that it is by Lydgate.

It was this suggestion of Dr. Bergen's, I may add, which impelled me to re-examine the poem. And his intuition as to its Chaucerian quality has, I think, been fully confirmed by the evidence here presented. At my invitation Dr. Bergen, after this paper was already in type, supplied the following statement supporting with more detail the opinion which he expressed ten years before:

<sup>19</sup> In a private letter under date May 24, 1925.

A re-reading of the "Wrecched Engendryng" has only strengthened my earlier opinion that it is not by Lydgate. There is hardly any writer of verse whose work is more easily recognizable by its mannerisms than his. No English poet that I can think of was so diffuse or had a more characteristic vocabulary and a larger stock of stereotyped phrases and rhyme-tags. In all the 180 lines of the "Wrecched Engendryng" there is hardly one distinctively Lydgate phrase: indeed, the only one in the entire 180 lines is "shortly for to telle" (90), and Lydgate was certainly not the only Middle English writer to use it.<sup>20</sup> "I reherce shal" (121) looks at first sight like a Lydgate cliché but is an integral part of the text, and moreover Lydgate would have used it in a different form: "as I reherce shal." On the other hand, such phrases as "parde" (18), "certain it wolde not be" (29) "singing ay betweene" (32), "craftely" (generally used in a different connotation by Lydgate, 33), "herbarowe inne" (48), "for byne honeste" (55), "getest nomore of me" (56), "as I gesse" (113), "let see" (118), "O filthy man" (123), "trust þou me" (154),<sup>21</sup> I should certainly associate with Chaucer rather than with Lydgate.

In spite of some metrical roughnesses (which may be in part due to a faulty text) the resemblances to Chaucer are so striking that I should be very reluctant to attribute it to anyone else. It may well have been written when he was quite young.

Having once recognized Chaucer's authorship of the poem, one need feel no hesitation in cancelling the unfortunate heading given to it by Shirley or some other early scribe and identifying it as the piece to which Chaucer himself gave the more descriptive title "Of the Wreched Engendring of Mankind." Scholars have felt some perplexity as to Chaucer's treatment of such a theme, but a perusal of the poem will give assurance that it is by no means of such a forbidding character as the title may have led us to assume. And in any case it is satisfactory to recover the text of one of the supposedly lost Chaucerian pieces.

In conclusion, it remains to consider briefly the introductory section of the poem which contains a Spring picture resembling somewhat the opening lines of the Canterbury Prologue. Though this is more Chaucerian in tone than the body of the poem, I have neglected it thus far in the present discussion for the reason that it is not properly a part of the De Contemptu Mundi tradition.

<sup>20</sup> Thus cf. Chaucer, "And forth he wente, shortly for to telle" (T. and C. V. 1826), "But as a marchaunt, shortly for to telle" (Cant. T. B. 1495), et passim.—C. B.

<sup>21</sup> The extreme frequency of Chaucer's use of this phrase will appear on referring to the Concordance under "Trust" and "Trusteth." I cite only examples in which the phrase is used parenthetically and at the end of the line: "truste me" (B. 3422), "trusteth me" (G. 229, 601, 889), "trust me wel" (D. 1556), "trusteth me right wel" (D. 1869), "trusteth wel" (H. F. I. 66).—C. B.

Even allowing for the fact that descriptions of Spring may be expected to show many common features, there is, I feel, a haunting Chaucerian quality in such lines as these:

After þe stormy tyme cesing þe rayn,
 Whane for þ'absence of colde þ'eorþe is fayn,
 And þe qwyck[e] thinges resceyue vygour,
 And trees bringen foorþe leef and flour, 4
 And by þe glad lusty sesoun of veer
 Alle þe thinges, which þat wyntour er<sup>22</sup>
 Consumed had by his coldes gret,
 Releued weren by þe sonnes heet, 8
 And swoote gan to smellen euery mede, þe briddes eeke, warissed of hir drede,
 With lusty hert singing in þeyre greves,
 Desporting hem amonge þe greene leues. 12
 . . . . .
 With greuous study annoyed was myn hert,
 Oute of þe which ne wist I howe t'astert,
 But to þe greues fast I can me hye,
 Wening þer to fynde remedye, 28
 But al for nought certain it wolde not be;
 For whane I hade sette me vnder a tree,
 What for þe floures and þe herbes greene,
 And noyse of briddes singing ay bytwene 32
 In hir wyse me thought craftely, þat suche a mirthe neuer noon herde I.

In order to show how closely Chaucer was here following his original, I quote the corresponding lines of the Latin Rhythmus:

1 Post tempus horridum	cessante pluuiā,
Quo terra frigoris	gaudet absentia
Vires recipiunt	queque nascentia,
4 Producent arbores	flores et folia,
Quicquid consumpserat	brume uoracitas
Totum restituit	ueris amenitas,
Per prata redolet	mira suauitas,
8 Virgulta uolucrum	replet garulitas.
. . . . .	. . . . .
18 Studentem temere	affixit tedium
Virgultum adii	sperans remedium
Ne sic quiescere	me sinit studium.
Nam cum sub arbore	sederem nimia
22 Herbe uiriditas,	florum presentia,

<sup>22</sup> See note 16, above.

Cantantes uolucres	in uoce uaria,
Accendunt animum	cordis ad studia.
Studendo mens mea	totum inuenitur
Ad spiritalia,	set sic deprimitur
27 Carnis illicbris	quod fere luditur.

This Springtide description, though it can no longer be regarded as an echo of the Canterbury Prologue, has nonetheless, a very definite interest for the student of Chaucer. For with our ascription of this poem to him the Spring picture, instead of being an echo, becomes an adumbration of the Canterbury prologue.<sup>23</sup>

It is quite possible, as I have already suggested, that Chaucer composed this poem before he came under the direct influence of De Contemptu Mundi. In that case there is nothing to prevent us from assigning it to a comparatively early period in his poetical development. There is a tradition that he translated the ABC at the request of Blanche Duchess of Lancaster "being a woman in her religion very devout," and the subject-matter of the "Wretched Engendring" would suggest that it may also have been composed in this early period. This is a shorter poem than any of the others which Chaucer mentions in his Prologue to the LGW, and very possibly Chaucer himself had disregarded it until his later reading of Pope Innocent's treatise brought it again to mind. His insertion of the "Wretched Engendring" for the first time in the later version of the Prologue to the LGW would thus be explained. But this must remain merely a matter for speculation. Our present information does not afford any secure basis for fixing the chronology of the poem. All that can be asserted with confidence is that his composition of the "Wretched Engendring" must have preceded the General Prologue to the Canterbury Tales.

CARLETON BROWN

New York University

<sup>23</sup> For an examination of the details in the Spring piece in the Canterbury prologue see Dr. Rosemond Tuve, Seasons and Monks: Studies in a Tradition of Middle English Poetry (Bryn Mawr, diss., 1933, pp. 52-58).

LXII

EARLY APPLICATION OF LATIN GRAMMAR TO ENGLISH

IN the past two years, partly to supplement in special fields the collections of the Middle English Dictionary, I have been searching the catalogues of manuscripts of English libraries for mediæval curiosities. Of these, early grammatical writings in English are not the least interesting. I have now four Latin grammatical pieces written in English in the fifteenth century: I, an anonymous grammar in St. John's College (Cambridge) MS. 163, f. 1<sup>a</sup>, printed below; II, another from Trinity College (Cambridge) MS. 0.5.4, f. 5<sup>a</sup>, printed in Essays and Studies in Eng. and Comp. Lit. in the series in Language and Literature, University of Michigan, XIII (1935), pp. 81-125; III, another in Douce MS. 103, f. 53<sup>a</sup>, printed below; and IV, a disquisition by a schoolmaster of Beccles (Suffolk), one John Drury, on the comparison of adjectives and adverbs in Cambridge Additional MS. 2830, f. 54<sup>a</sup>, printed in Speculum, IX (1934), 70-83. (I shall usually refer to them herein as I, II, III, and IV.)

All of them are modelled in whole or in part upon the Donet, the Ars Minor of Donatus. This standby of instruction in the Middle Ages treats briefly of the eight parts of speech: noun, pronoun, verb, adverb, participle, conjunction, preposition, and interjection. The treatises in St. John's MS. 163 and Douce MS. 103 are constructed on this framework. In broad outline they are like the accepted Latin text<sup>1</sup> of the Ars Minor, but differ from it markedly in detail. The grammar in Trinity College MS. 0.5.4 is more ambitious. Of its five sections, the third and principal one is devoted to the eight parts of speech and stands in the same relation to the Donet as the grammars of St. John's MS. 163 and Douce MS. 103. The first, second, fourth, and fifth sections respectively concern the four ways of beginning a sentence in Latin, the four accords in Latin grammar, the five figures of construction (prolepsis, syllepsis, zeugma, antithesis, and synthesis), and the governing of the cases. The treatise on comparison in Cambridge Additional MS. 2830 concerns itself with only one small division of the material in the Donet. All four of these Latin grammatical treatises in English have statements and illustrations in common not in the accepted text of the Ars Minor. There being no critical study of its Latin texts of English origin, I cannot state whether these variations and additions go back to a prototype in Latin established in England or to a prototype in English. The differences in detail among the four are, moreover, greater than the likenesses.

<sup>1</sup> Ed Keil, Grammatici Latini (Leipsic, 1857-80), IV, 355-366. It has a short appendix on accords added to the eight parts of speech.

The grammars are preserved in manuscripts of the fifteenth century. John Drury's work on comparison may be dated near the year 1432 since another piece of his in Cambridge Additional MS. 2830 is self-dated as of that year. The scribe Harding, like Drury, was a resident of Beccles in northeastern Suffolk. The grammar in Trinity College MS. 0.5.4 shows dialectal peculiarities of the locality of its manuscript (Battlefield near Shrewsbury) so strongly that I am inclined to date it before 1450 rather than after.<sup>2</sup> Documents and literary texts later than 1450 rarely are strongly dialectal. This manuscript is associated with the College of Battlefield by the presence in it of copies of deeds concerning that foundation.<sup>3</sup> St. John's College MS. 163 is in several hands, which Dr. James considers to be of the late fifteenth century.<sup>4</sup> Douce MS. 103 is a composite manuscript of the fifteenth century.

These Latin grammars have a good deal to say about the English language, especially I. And always in their treatment of English inflection and syntax, they explain them in terms of Latin inflection and syntax. They afford by far the earliest explicit evidence we have of the influence of Latin grammar on Englishmen's concepts of their own language, an influence so prominent in the philosophy and teaching of English grammar since the time of Bullokar.

I applies the names of seven of the eight parts of Latin speech to English: the noun (both adjective and substantive), pronoun, verb, adverb, participle, preposition, and interjection. It does not speak of English conjunctions. II applies to English the names of all the parts of speech except the preposition, and III speaks of English nouns (adjective and substantive), pronouns, verbs, and participles. IV applies the term, adjective, to English.<sup>5</sup> William Bullokar in his Bref Grammar for English (London, 1586), the first English grammar in English, finds the eight parts of speech of Latin grammar in his native tongue.<sup>6</sup>

In their accounts of the adjective, all four of the Latin grammars describe the positive, comparative, and superlative degrees as they are expressed in English.<sup>7</sup> I and II describe these degrees as expressed in the English adverb.<sup>8</sup>

I, II, and III recognize six Latin cases in the declension of the Eng-

<sup>2</sup> See Meech, op. cit., pp. 87-94.

<sup>3</sup> James, M. R., The Western Manuscripts in the Library of Trinity College, Cambridge, A Descriptive Catalogue (Cambridge, 1900-04), III, 301-308.

<sup>4</sup> James, M. R., A Descriptive Catalogue of the Manuscripts in the Library of St. John's College, Cambridge (Cambridge, 1913), pp. 194-197.

<sup>5</sup> I can only refer the reader to my four texts passim, for their treatments of the parts of speech in English.

<sup>6</sup> Palaestra, LII (1906), 339.

<sup>7</sup> I, p. 1019; II, Essays and Studies, XIII, 102; III, p. 1029; IV, Speculum, IX, 79.

<sup>8</sup> I, p. 1205; II, Essays and Studies, XIII, 113.

lish substantive: the nominative, genitive, dative, accusative, vocative, and ablative.<sup>9</sup> They show how to identify the nominative and accusative by word-order and meaning, and the vocative by meaning. When their compilers state, without reservations, that the nominative precedes the verb and that the accusative follows, they must be referring to English, although they do not say so, because English has this rigid word order (except in interrogative sentences) and Latin has not. They identify the genitive, dative, and accusative by the use of certain English prepositions before the substantive. They speak of prepositions as the "signs" of the genitive, dative, or accusative. The same assumption that the six Latin cases exist also in English, though not indicated there by inflection, appears in the early grammars of English. For example, Alexander Gill in his Logonomia Anglica (London, 1621) makes this statement:

Obserua primo: Omnia Nomina cuiuscunq; sunt Declinationis ad vnam formā variari: Dato videlicet nominatiuo, accusatiuo, vel vocatiuo vtriusuis numeri, caeteros casus suis signis internosci: vt

Singulariter	Nom. { Œe wil- { testis,	Pluraliter	Œe wilnesez testes,
	Accus. { nes { testem,
	Voc. ô wilnes ô testis,		ô wilnesez ô testes,
	Gen. of Œe wilnes testis,		of Œe wilnesez testium,
	Dat. tu Œe wilnes testi,		tu Œe wilnesez testibus,
	Abl. with Œe wilnes cū		with Œe wilnesez cū testib'. <sup>10</sup> teste.

The Grammatica Anglicana (Cambridge, 1594), ascribed to P. Greenwood, has a paragraph on prepositions as "signs" of the English genitive, dative, and ablative.<sup>11</sup>

I and III mention the singular and plural numbers in connection with English substantives.<sup>12</sup> These two also mention three persons in their remarks on the English personal pronouns.<sup>13</sup>

I, II, and III recognize five moods in the inflection of both English and Latin verbs: the indicative, imperative, optative, conjunctive, and infinitive.<sup>14</sup> Their primary criterion for recognizing these moods is that of meaning. The compilers of I, II, and III, though they do not say so, must be thinking of English when they emphasize meaning as a criterion. For in Latin the moods were recognizable formally, whereas in the

<sup>9</sup> I, pp. 1020-21; II, Essays and Studies, xiii, 105-106; III, p. 1029.

<sup>10</sup> Quellen und Forschungen, xc (1903), 54.

<sup>11</sup> P. G., Grammatica Anglicana Precipue Quatenus à Latina Differt, ad Vnicam P. Rami Methodum Concinnata (Cambridge, 1594), p. 32. I used rotographs of the British Museum's copy of this book loaned me by Professor C. C. Fries.

<sup>12</sup> I, p. 1020; III, p. 1028.

<sup>13</sup> I, p. 1022; III, p. 1030.

<sup>14</sup> I, pp. 1023-24; II, Essays and Studies, xiii, 110-111; III, p. 1031.

English of the compilers they were not. At the time these men lived, the infinitive, the first person singular and all persons of the plural indicative and subjunctive had lost their endings: the second and third persons of the present indicative kept distinctive endings but were often used in constructions which in Old English would have required the subjunctive. The false assumption is made that, because meanings expressed by inflected moods in Latin can also be expressed in English (even if by other ways than inflection), the Latin moods must exist in English as concepts.

In I and III an additional criterion for recognizing the optative in English is the occurrence of would, should, or mote joined to a verb. That is, a combination of would or should and a preterit form of another verb with its subject, or of mote and a present form of another verb with its subject, to express a wish seems to be regarded as a sort of compound optative. Should, would or mote are "signs" of the optative, substitutes for the endings of the Latin verb.

In I, II, and III an additional criterion for recognizing the infinitive is word-order. When one verb follows another without an intervening relative or conjunction, the former is in the infinitive mode. The grammarians are in this particular obviously referring to English, since in Latin an infinitive usually precedes the verb on which it depends. In I to is called the sign of the infinitive, that is, to plus the uninflected form of the verb is thought of as the infinitive, just as today.

Bullokar's remarks on the five English moods rather closely parallel the passages concerning them from the three fifteenth-century grammars:

There be five moods: the indicative, the imperative, the optative, the subjunctive, and the infinitive.

The indicative mood sheweth a reason true or false, as I love, or else asketh a question, as lovest thou?

The imperative biddeth or commandeth, as: Love thou, Love ye.

The optative or wishing mood wisheth or desireth and hath alway an adverb of wishing joined before his nominative case, as: Pray God I love, I pray God thou love, God grant he love. Also these, I would, Would, Would God, Would to God, O that, and O if be adverbs of wishing shewing the optative mood.

The subjunctive mood hath evermore a conjunction set before his nominative case, and dependeth upon another verb in the same sentence either going before or coming after it, as: The master will be angry, if we be idle; when we use diligence we learn.

The infinitive hath neither number, nor person, nor nominative case before it, and is known commonly by this sign or preposition to, which to is not expressed many times when there cometh an accusative case between the infinitive mood and the verb before going, as: Bid him come hither.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>15</sup> Bullokar, op. cit., Palaestra, LII (1906), 353-354. I have turned Bullokar's phonetic spelling into conventional spelling of today and modernized capitalization and punctuation.

I states that there are five tenses in English as in Latin, namely: the present, preterit imperfect, preterit perfect, preterit pluperfect, and future.<sup>16</sup> Again the primary criterion for recognition is meaning. But the preterit perfect tense in English is also to be recognized by the construction have with the past participle; the preterit pluperfect by the construction had with the past participle; and the future by the construction shall with the infinitive. II lists five "times" for the Latin and English verb which correspond exactly with the five tenses of I. It does not give them their Latin names.<sup>17</sup> III lists five "times" also, but does not expressly state that there are five times in the English verb.<sup>18</sup>

I states that there are three tenses in the Latin and English participle: the present, the preterit, and the future.<sup>19</sup> In English, it says, the present participle ends in ing, or and. It gives examples of English weak preterit participles. According to this authority, the English future participle active is the active infinitive introduced by the compound preposition for to; the future participle passive is the passive infinitive so introduced. II and III give three "times" for the Latin and English participle which correspond exactly with the tenses of I.<sup>20</sup> They do not give them the names of Latin grammar.

Finally, the active and passive voices in the English verb and participle are mentioned in I and III.<sup>21</sup>

We have ample evidence, then, in the four Latin grammars that borrowing of the concepts of Latin grammar into English was common in the fifteenth century, more than a hundred years before the earliest English grammars. The four suggest one way in which that borrowing began. Schoolmasters, instructing their pupils in Latin either orally or by the written word, equated Latin inflections and constructions with English ones to help the students with their Latin. In doing so, the schoolmasters and pupils came to regard them as belonging to the same formal categories and applied the names of Latin forms to English. That is, the application of the concepts of Latin grammar to our language may have begun as a means of helping English schoolboys to learn Latin.

As early as the fifteenth century, a very extensive grammatical vocabulary had been developed in English. I have gleaned from the two pieces printed below, eighty-nine English terms pertaining to grammar exclusively or pertaining to it in some senses. Sixty-one occur in both; twenty-three in the first only; and five (apposition, composition, plural,

<sup>16</sup> P. 1024

<sup>17</sup> Essays and Studies, XIII, 112.

<sup>18</sup> P. 1031.

<sup>19</sup> Pp. 1025-26.

<sup>20</sup> II, Essays and Studies, XIII, 115; III, pp. 1031-32.

<sup>21</sup> I, pp. 1023, 1026; III, pp. 1030, 1032.

plural, and time) in the second only. Most of them are Anglicized Latin terms; the rest are native words which are close translations of Latin ones. All are English in form and all occur in English contexts.

I add an alphabetical list of these terms in the grammars. Words, or special grammatical senses of words, not illustrated in the Oxford Dictionary before 1500 are marked with a single asterisk. In sixty-one instances (counting the substantival use of an adjective and its adjectival use as distinct instances), the Dictionary has no quotation before 1500. Words or senses which do not appear in the Dictionary at all are marked with a double asterisk. There are nine of these.

Ablative, adj., 1019, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; accord, sb.**; 1027, vb., 1021, accusative, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*; 1021, active, adj.*; 1023, 1030, and sb.*; 1023, 1030; adjective (noun), adj., 1019, 1028, and sb.*; 1027; adjective (verb), adj.**; 1021; adverb*, 1019, 1028; antecedent, sb., 1027; apposition, 1032; article*, 1019, 1028, case, 1019, 1028; casual (i.e., declined), adj.**; 1020, collective, adj.*; 1020; common (gender), adj.*; 1020, 1029; common (verb), adj.*; 1023, 1030; comparative, adj., 1019, 1028; comparison*, 1019, 1028; composition, 1032; compound, sb.*; 1022; conjugation*, 1023, 1030; conjunction, 1019, 1028; conjunctive, adj.*; 1023, 1031; construe, vb. intrans.*; 1019, 1030; dative, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; declension*, 1021; decline, 1019, 1028; deed (of the verb)**; 1020; defective (verb), adj.*; 1025; degree, 1019, 1028; deponent, adj.*; 1023, 1030; derivative (pronoun), sb.*; 1022, 1030; distributive (noun), adj.*; 1020, 1029; end (have ending)**; 1019, 1029; ending, sb.*; 1019, 1028; enormal, adj.**; 1024; epicene, adj.*; 1020, 1029; feminine, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; future, adj.*; 1024 and sb.*; 1026; gender (of nouns), 1020, 1029; genitive, adj., 1019, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; gerundive, sb., 1020; imperative, adj.*; 1023, 1031; indicative, adj.*; 1023, 1030; infinitive*, 1023, 1030; interjection*, 1019, 1028; interrogative, adj.*; 1022; long (vowel), adj., 1024, 1030; masculine, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; mood*, 1023, 1030; neuter (noun), adj., 1020, 1029; neuter (verb), adj.*; 1023, 1030; nominative, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*; 1021; normal (verb), adj.**; 1023<sup>22</sup>; noun, 1019, 1028; number, 1019, 1028; optative, adj.*; 1023, 1031; parts (of speech), 1019, 1028; partative (noun), adj.*; 1020, 1029; participle, 1019, 1028; passive, adj., 1023, 1030, and sb.*; 1023, 1030; perfect, adj.*; 1024; person*, 1022, 1029; pluperfect, adj.*; 1024; plural, adj., 1028; plural, adj.*; 1019; positive, adj., 1019, 1028; preposition, sb., 1019, 1028; present, adj., 1024; preter, adj.*; 1024; primitive (pronoun), sb.*; 1022, 1030; pronoun*, 1019, 1028; proper (noun), adj., 1020, 1030; reason (sentence), 1019; relative, sb., 1024, 1031; short (vowel), adj., 1024, 1031; sign of the infinitive**; 1024; singular, adj., 1020, 1028; substantive (noun), adj.*; 1019, 1028, and sb., 1027; substantive (verb), adj.*; 1020, 1029; superlative, adj., 1019, 1029; supine, sb.*; 1020, 1031; tense, 1023; time (tense)*; 1030; undeclined*, 1020, 1028; unperfect (tense or voice), adj.**; <sup>23</sup>

<sup>22</sup> The adjective in this sense is not recorded in the OD, but the substantive is, in 1530.

<sup>23</sup> Imperfect (imperfect tense), adj. is recorded in the OD. in 1530. It occurs in the grammatical treatise in Trinity College (Cambridge) MS. O.5.4, Essays and Studies, xiii, 116.

1024, 1032; verb, 1019, 1028, vocative, adj., 1020, 1029, and sb.*, 1021; and voice (of a verb), sb. 1023.

Sixty-one of these uses occur in both grammars

The grammatical treatise in the Trinity College (Cambridge) MS. 0.5.4 has seventy-five of the eighty-eight grammatical words or senses above and thirty-four besides, as follows:

absolute (ablative case absolute), adj.*; adversative, adj.*; antithesis*; appellative, adj.*; causal, adj.*; common (common noun), adj.*; compounded**<sup>24</sup>; conceive*; conception*; construction*; copulative, adj., 116; decompound, adj.* and sb.*; demonstrative, adj.* and sb.*; disjunctive, adj.*; evocation*; expletive, adj.*; figure (the quality in a word of being simple, compound, or decompound)**; figure (figure of speech), pp. 118, 126; gender (gender of verbs), p. 111<sup>25</sup>; govern*; imperfect, adj.*; impersonal, adj.*; infinitation*; intransition**<sup>26</sup>; negation*; oblique, adj.*; possessive, adj.* and sb.*; prolepsis*; rational (rational conjunction)*; relation**<sup>27</sup>, p. 98; syllipsis*; transition*; voice (voice of a case), p. 114**<sup>28</sup>; and zeugma*

With the exception of copulative and figure (of speech), all of these are wanting in the Oxford Dictionary before 1500. Page references will be found in the list of antedated words in my introduction to the Trinity grammar.<sup>24</sup> John Drury's little account of the comparison of Latin adjectives and adverbs has twenty-eight of the eighty-eight and three others: accidens,* p. 79, l. 1; syllable, p. 79, l. 22; and vowel, p. 80, l. 28.

At least forty-five of the one hundred and twenty-five terms employed in the four grammars appear in one or another of the following five nongrammatical writings: the prologue of the 1388 version of the Wycliffite Bible,<sup>25</sup> the fourth passus of the C-text (a1399) of Piers Plowman,<sup>26</sup> Trevisa's translation (1398) of Bartholomaeus' De Proprietatibus Rerum,<sup>27</sup> passim, a story in the Gesta Romanorum<sup>28</sup> (1440), and finally the Catholicon Anglicon<sup>29</sup> (1483), passim. Some of these forty-five and others appear scattering elsewhere in Middle English.

Our grammatical treatises thus show that schoolmasters and schoolboys of the fifteenth century had the common and some of the less common terms of Latin grammar as part of their English vocabulary. They had most of the terms which Bullokar used at the end of the next century in the first English grammar in English. A century before him, then, there

<sup>24</sup> Essays and Studies, XIII, 95-97.

<sup>25</sup> Ed. Forshall and Madden (Oxford, 1850), I, 57.

<sup>26</sup> Ed. Skeat (Oxford, 1886), pp. 91, 93.

<sup>27</sup> I have used the text of this in B.M. Addit. MS. 27944.

<sup>28</sup> Ed. Herrtage, EETSES, XXXIII (1879), 416-418.

<sup>29</sup> Ed. Herrtage, EETS, LXXV (1881).

existed not only the tendency to interpret native grammar in imitation of Latin but also a vocabulary quite adequate to express that interpretation. The evidence of the grammars is confirmed by other texts of their period and earlier.

(THE texts are my own transcriptions from rotographs of the manuscripts. I have modernized punctuation and capitalization. The paragraphing is mine I have indicated by apostrophes lines over final n and m, lines through ll and h, and flourishes of final r. Omitted letters are supplied in square brackets; letters and words crossed out by the scribe are enclosed in angular brackets. I have made no emendations. My thanks are due to my colleague, Dr. James F. Rettger, for help with occasional difficult readings.)

THE DONET IN ENGLISH FROM ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE MS 163

[f. 1<sup>a</sup>] How many partes ben þere of reson'? Viiij Qwech viij? Nown, pronoun, verbe, aduerbe, participyl, coniunccon, preposicon, and interieccyon'. How many be declyned wit case & how many wit-owte case? Thre be declyned wit case & on wit-owte case. Qweche thre be declyned wit case? Nown, pronoun, & participyl. And qwo wit-owte case? Al only verbe

Qwerby knowyst a nown? ffor althyng þat may be seen, herd, oþyr felt, or beryth þe name of a thyng is a nown. How many maneer of nownys ben þere? To. Qweche to? Noun substantyf & nown adiectyf. Qwerby knowe ge a noun substantyf? ffor he may stonde in a perfyth reson wit-owtyn helpe of anoþyr wurd, as: man, tre, or beest, & is declynyng in Latyn wit on artikyl or too at þe moost in o case, as: nominatiuo hic magister or nominatiuo hic & hec sacerdos. Qwerby knowyst a nown adiectyf? ffor he may not stonde alone in a perfyth reson wit-owtyn help of anoþyr wurd, as: qwyth, red, blak, and is declynyng in Latyn wit iij articulus or iij dyuerse endynggys in o case, as: nominatiuo hic & hec & hoc felix or nominatiuo bonus bona bonum. How many articulis ben þere? Iij. Qwech iij? Hic, hec, hoc. How many diuerse endynggys ben þere? Iij. Qwech iij? -Vs, -a, & -vm, or ellys -or, -a, & -vm. Qwat is a comparison? A lyknesse of thynggys þat may be mad more or lesse wit good sentence. How many degrees of comparison ben þere? Thre. Qwech iij? The posityf, þe comparatyf, & þe superlatyf. Qwerby knowyst þe posityf degre? ffor he is ground of al oþyr grees of comparison, as: fayir, fowl, & soch oþyr. Qwerby<sup>30</sup> knowyst þe comparatyf degre? ffor he passyth hys posityf wit þis aduerbe more or lesse & endyth in Englysch in r, as: fayrer, fowler, & soch oþyr. Qwerby knowyst þe superlatyf degre? ffor he passyth hys posityf wit þis aduerbe most or leest & endyth in Englysch in -est, as fayrest, fowlest, & soch oþyr. Wyt qwat case wele þe comparatyf degre construe? Wyt ablatyf case of bothe nowmberis wit-owtyn a preposicon, as: forcior illo vel forcior illis, saue if quam come betwyn þanne cu[m]ppelyth he lyke case. Wit qwat case wele þe superlatyf degre construe? Wit þe genityf case plurer, as dignissima creaturarum, or wit þe genityf si[n]guler of a nown collectyf. How many nown collectiuis be þer? It is schewyd be þe verse. Vnde versus:

<sup>30</sup> By in Qwerby is written above the line.

Sunt collectiua populus, gens, plebs, quoque turba.

How many genderys of nown ben þere? Vij. Qwech vij? The masculyn, þe femynyne, þe neutyr, þe comown of to, þe comown of thre, þe duby, & epycene Qwerby knowyst þe masculyn gendyr? ffor it is declyned wit hic (artikyl or to at þe most in o case), as. nominatiuo hic magister (nominatiuo hic & hec sacerdos). Qwerby knowyst þe femynyne gendyr? ffor it is declyned wit hec, as nominatiuo hec Musa. Qwerby knowyst þe neutyr gendyr? ffor it is declyned wit hoc, as nominatiuo, hoc scamnum. Qwerby knowyst þe comun [of] to gendyr? ffor it is declyned wit hic & hec, as. hic & hec sacerdos. Qwerby knowyst þe comun of thre gendyr? ffor it is declyned wit hic, hec, & hoc, as hic & hec & hoc felix. Qwerby knowyst þe duby gendyr? ffor [it] is declyned wit hic vel hec, as hic vel hec dies. How many nownys be þere of þis gendyr? It schew<sup>t</sup> be þe vers:

Margo, diesque, silex, finis, clunis, quoque, cortex
Hec veteres vere dubii generis posuere,
Singula sunt dubii sed sunt pluralia primi.

How many be declyned & how many be vn-declyned? Iiij be declyned & iij be vn-declyned. Qwech iij be declyned? Noun, pronoun, verbe, & participyl And qwech iij be vn-declyned? Aduerbe, coniunccon, preposicon, & interieccyon. (f. 1<sup>b</sup>) Qwerby knowyst þe epicene gendyr? ffor vndyr on artikyl be comprehendyd bothe male & femal, as: hic passer a sparow, hec aquila an egyl, hec muscela a wesyl, & hic miluus a puttok, And foure wurdys þat folwyn in þe verse þat sewyth be epicene gendyr:

Dama-que, pantera, grus, bubo sunt epicena.

How many nowmberys ben þere? To. Qwech to? Singuler & plurer. Qwerby knowyst singuler nowmbyr? ffor he spekyth but of o thyng, as man. Qwerby knowyst plurer nowmbyr (plurer nowmbyr)? ffor he spekyth of many thyngys, as men. How many casys be þere? Vj. Qwech vj? The nominatyf, þe genityf, þe datyf, þe accusatyf, þe vocatyf, & þe ablatyf. Qwerby knowyst þe nominatyf case? ffor he comth befor þe verbe & doth or sufferyth þe dede of þe verbe. Qwerby knowyst þe genityf case? ffor of aftyr a nown substantyf, verbe substantyf, nown partityf, nown distributyf, or a superlatyf degre is þe syne of genityf case. Qwerby knowyst datyf case? ffor to<sup>31</sup> be-for a casual wurd wit-owtyn a preposicon<sup>32</sup> is syne of datyf case. Qwerby knowyst accusatyf case? ffor he comth aftyr<sup>31a</sup> þe verbe, gerundyf, participyl, or suppyr þat betokenyth to do & sufferyth þe dede of þe verbe. And also alle þe wurdys in da preposiciones casus accusatiui serve to þe accusatyf case. Qwerby knowyst vocatyf case? ffor he betokenyth preying, bidding, or calling. Qwerby knowyst ablatyf case? ffor in, wit, for, fro, befor, & aftyr, & alle þe wurdys in da preposiciones casus ablatiui ar þe synes of ablatyf. And also of aftyr a propyr name, or a nown adiectyf, or a verbe adiectyf, gerundyf, participyl, or suppyñ is þe syne of ablatyf case. Vnde versus:

<sup>31</sup> To is written above the line.

<sup>31a</sup> After is written in the left margin.

Mobile, vel proprium, vel participans, quoque verbum,
Si sequitur sensus genitiui iungito sextum,
Cum reliquis sextum non iungas sed genitiuum.

How many declensions be þer? V. Qwech v? The furst, þe secunde, þe thrydde, þe fourt, þe fyfte. Qwerby knowyst þe secunde declension? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -i, þe datyf in -o, þe accusatyf in -vm. þe vocatyf schal be lyke þe nominatyf, saue qwan þe nominatyf endyth in -vs þe vocatyf most comunly schal endyn in -e, as nominatiuo hic dominus, vocatiuo o domine. (f. 2<sup>a</sup>) And qwanne þe nominatyf singuler of a propyr name endyth in -ius, þe vocatyf schal endyn in -j, as: nominatiuo hic Laurencius vocatiuo o Laurenci, Vincencius Vincenci, Gregorius Gregori, & filius makyth vocatiuo o filie vel fili. Also in a neutyr gendyr þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf schal acorde. þe ablatyf schal endyn in o, þe nominatyf & þe vocatyf plurer in -j, þe genityf in -horum, þe datyf & þe ablatyf in -is, þe accusatyf in -os.<sup>32</sup> & in a neutyr gendyr þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf schal endyn in -a. Qwerby knowyst þe furst declension of nown? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -e, þe datyf also, þe accusatyf in -am, þe vocatyf schal be lyke þe nominatyf (saue if þe nominatyf ende in -as þe vocatyf schal endyn in -a, as: nominatiuo hic Thomas vocatiuo O Thoma), þe ablatyf in -a, þe nominatyf & þe vocatyf plurer in -e, þe genityf in -arum, & datyf & þe ablatyf in -is, saue if þe feminyne be drawe out of þe masculyn, as domina is drawyn out of dominus. þanne schal þat feminyne make þe datyf & þe ablatyf plurer in -abus, as domina dominabus. And in a neutyr gendyr þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf acordyn. How many newtyr genderys be of þat declension [sic]? It is schewyd be þe vers þat folwyn:

Pascha, polenta, iota, szizannia, mammona, manna
Sunt neutri generis & declinacio prima.

Qwerby knowyst þe thrydde declension? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -is, þe datyf in -j, þe accusatyf in -em or in -im, þe vocatyf lyke þe nominatyf (and in a neutyr gendyr þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf acordyn), þe ablatyf in -e or in -j, þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf plurer in -es, þe genityf in -vm or in -ium, þe datyf in -bus, and in a neutyr gendyr þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf in -a, & þe ablatyf in -bus. Qwerby knowyst þe fourt declension? ffor þe nominatyf, genityf, & vocatyf singuler endyn in -vs, þe datyf in -vi, þe accusatyf in -vm, & þe ablatyf in -v, the nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf plurer in -vs, þe genityf in -vum, þe datyf & þe ablatyf in -bus. Qwerby knowyst þe fyft declension of nown? ffor þe genityf & datyf singuler endyn in -ei, þe accusatyf in -em, þe vocatyf lyke þe nominatyf, þe ablatyf in -e, þe nominatyf, þe accusatyf, & þe vocatyf plurer in -es, þe genityf in -erum, þe datyf & þe ablatyf in -ebus.<sup>33</sup>

<sup>32</sup> In os written in the left margin.

<sup>33</sup> The last five lines of fol. 2<sup>a</sup> and the first twenty-nine lines of fol. 2<sup>b</sup> are devoted to paradigms of musa, domina, Thomas, magister, dominus, Laurencius, scammum, sacerdos, felix, manus, and res. These are of slight interest and are omitted.

(f. 2<sup>b</sup>) Qwerby knowyst a pronoun? ffor he is set for a noun & signyfyith neer a [sic] moche as a noun & oþyr qwyle receyuyth certeyne person'. How many maneer pronounnys be þer? Xv. Qwech xv? Ego, tu, sui, ille, ipse, iste, hic, & is, meus, tuus, suus, noster & vester, nostras & vestras. How many of þeise be prymityuys & how many <de> deriuatiuys? Viij be prymityuys & vij be deriuatiuys. Qwech viij be prymityuys? Ego, tu, sui, ille, ipse, iste, hic & hijs. And qwy be þi [sic] prymityuys? ffor þei take here be-gynnyng of noon oþyr. Qwech be deriuatiuys? Meus, tuus, suus, noster & vester, nostras & vestras. And qwy be þei callyd deriuatiuys? ffor þei take here begynnyng of oþyr, as of me comth meus, of tu comth tuus, of sui comth suus [sic], of (f. 3<sup>a</sup>) nos comth noster & nostras, & of vos comth vester & vestras. How many of theyse haue vocatyf case & how many wantyn? fflowre haue vocatyf case & alle oþyr wantyn. Qwech iiij haue vocatyf case? Tu, meus, noster & nostras. Vnde versus:

Quatuor exceptis pronomina nulla vocabis,
Tu, meus, & noster nostras hec sola vocantur.

How many personys be þer? Thre. Qwech iiij? Þe furst, þe secunde, þe thrydde. Qwerby knowyst þe furst persone? ffor he spekyth of hym-self, as I & we. Qwerby knowyst þe secunde persone? ffor he spekyth to oþyr, as þu or ȝe. Qwerby knowyst þe thrydde persone? ffor he spekyth of oþyr, as he & þei. And euery noun & euery pronoun & euery participyl is þe thrydde persone, owtakyn I & we, þu & ȝe, & þe vocatyf case. Vnde versus

Terne persone generaliter omnis habetur,
Rectus set demas pronomina quatuor inde.

How many declensions of pronoun be there? Iiij. Qwech iiij? The furst þe secunde, þe thrydde, þe fourt. Qwerby knowyst þe furst declension of pronoun [sic]? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -j or in -is & þe datyf in -j. How many pronounnys hath he? Thre. Qwech iiij? Ego, tu, sui. Qwerby knowyst þe secunde declension of pronoun? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -ius or in -ius [sic] & þe datyf in -j or in -e. How many pronounnys hath he? V. Qwech v? Ille, ipse, iste, hic, & is, and viij nounnys wit here componys, qwech be vnus, vllus, totus, solus, alter, alius, quis, & uter. How many of theyse nounnys haue vocatyf case & how many wantyn? Thre haue vocatyf case, & alle oþyr wantyn. Qwech iiij be þo? Vnus, totus, & solus. Vnde versus:

Pone vocatiuos cum totus, solus, & vnus,
Sed non in reliquis quorum genitiuus in -ius.

Qwerby knowyst þe thrydde declension of pronoun? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -j, in -e, & in -j, & þe datyf in -o, & in -e, & in -o. How many pronounnys hath he? V. Qwech v? Meus, tuus, suus, noster, & vester. And note wel þat alle noun adiectiuys þat be declyned wit thre dyuerse endynggys be declyned aftyr þis declension. Qwerby knowyst þe fourt declension? ffor þe genityf case singuler endyth in -atis & þe datyf in -ati. How many pronounnys hath he? To. Qwech to? Nostras & vestras, and a noun interrogatyf qwech is cuias cuiatis. Qwat is cuias in Englysch? Of qwat folk? Qwat is cuium in Englysch? Of qwat thyng? Qwat is nostras in Englysch? A man or a woman of owre cuntre, and vestras is a man or a woman of your cuntre:

Cuias de gente cuium de re petit apte.<sup>34</sup>

(f. 3<sup>b</sup>) Qwerby knowyst a verbe? ffor it is declyned wit moodd & tens & persone & be-tokenyth to do or to suffyr or to be. How many maneer of verbys ben here? V. Qwech v? Verbe actyf, verbe passyf, verbe neutyr, verbe deponent, & verbe comowne. Qwerby knowyst a verbe actyf? ffor it endyth in -o & may take -r vp-on -o & make of hym a passyf, as amo put -r þer-to & þanne is amor. Qwerby knowyst a verbe passyf? ffor it endyth in -r & may do a-wey -r and turne a-gen in-to hys actyf. Qwerby knowyst a verbe neutyr? ffor he endyth in -o & may noon -r take vp-on -o nor make of hym no passyf. Qwerby knowyst a verbe neutyr passyf? ffor he endyth in -o lyk an actyf & hath þe Englysch of þe passyf, as fio, fis, factus sum, fieri, to be mad. Qwerby knowyst a verbe neutyr normal? ffor he folwyth no ryth rewle of coniugacyon'. And vndyrstonde þat a verbe neutyr qwech hath þe lettyr & þe significacyon of an actyf may haue a passyf voys in þe thrydde persone, as: þe weye is ronnyng, via curritur. Vnde versus:

Neutrum quod transit in rem sermone carentem

Ternam passiuam de se dat progredientem.

Qwerby knowyst a verbe deponent? ffor he endyth in -r lyke a passyf & hath þe Englysch on an actyf, as loquor, I speke, and in þe thrydde persone he may haue a passyf voys, as þe lond is eryid, terra aratur. Vnde versus:

Et deponencium passiuum dat documentum,

Sic sermo fatur, dicas vt campus aratur.

Qwerby knowyst a verbe comun? ffor it hath lettyr of þe passyf & Englysch bothe of þe actyf & of þe passyth [sic], as I kysse þe, osculor te, & I am kyssyd of the, & osculor a te. How many verbe comons be þer? As many as be conteyned in þe verse þat folwyn':

Largior, experior, veneror, moror, osculor, ortor,

Criminor, amplector tibi sunt communia, lector.

Si bene communeres, interpretor hospitor addes.

How mat [sic] þu knowyn qwan þi verbe be-tokenyth to do & qwan to suffyffyr [sic]? Qwan I haue ony of þeise vi Englysch wurdys: am, art, is, was, be, or were, joynd to a verbe, thanne it be-tokenyth to suffyr; and if noon of þo vj wurdys be joynd to þe verbe than it betokenyth to do. How many modys be þer? V. Qwech v? Indicatyf, inperatyf, octatyf [sic], coniunctyf, & infenityf. Qwerby knowyst indicatyf mood? ffor it schewyth tale soth or lees & betokenyth askyng or tellyng. Or qwanne j haue ony of theyse thre synes in my Latyn, sicut, dum, quando, þe verbe þat folwyth schal be indicatyf mood. Vnde versus:

<sup>34</sup> The paradigms of the Latin pronouns are given on fol. 4<sup>a</sup>-4<sup>b</sup>. Fol. 3<sup>b</sup>, on which the treatment of the verb begins, intervenes between the above treatment of the pronouns and their paradigms. At the bottom of fol. 3<sup>a</sup> is this note for the reader. "The nownys of þis part be in þe lef folwyng," and at the bottom of 3<sup>b</sup>: "Turne ouyr to þe next lef." I have omitted the paradigms.

Indicat vt quando sicut, dum, cetera plura.

Qwerby knowyst imperatyf mood? ffor it preyith, byddyth, or co- (f. 5<sup>a</sup>) mawndyth. Qwerby knowyst optatyf mood? ffor it welyth or desiryth, and þeyse Englysch wurdys joyned to a verbe: wold, schold, mote, or at my wylle, & þeyse Latyn wurdys afor a verbe: utinam, ne, quatinus, osi ar þe synes of optatyf mood. Vnde versus:

Wold, schold dic optatui; utinam, ne, quatinus, osi.

Qwerby knowyst coniunctyf mood? ffor he is joyned to anoyr verbe or anoyr verbe is joyned to hym. Or qwan ony of þe Latyn ⟨i⟩ wurdys þat folwyn in þe next come be-forn a verbe it schal be þe coniunctyf mood:

Si, quamuis, quamquam, tam, silicet, atque piusquam.

Antequam, an, donec, vt, postquam, siue, quousque,

Cum, nisi, quam, acsi, quo coniungunt tibi dico.

Qwerby knowyst infinityf mood? ffor qwanne to verbis come to-gedyr witowte a relatyf or a coniunccyon þe lattar schal be infinityf mood. Also þis lytel wurd to befor a verbe is syne of infinityf mood, as to loue, to rede. How many tens be þere? V. Qwech fyue? The present tens, þe pretyr tens vnperfyth, þe pretyr tens perfyth, þe ⟨per⟩ pretyr tens pluperfyth, & þe futur tens. Qwerby knowyst þe present tens? ffor he spekyth of tyme þat is now, as amo, I loue. Qwerby knowyst preter tens vnperfyth? ffor it spekyth of tyme vnperfythly passyd, as amabam, I louede. Qwerby knowyst þe pretyr tens perfyth? ffor it spekyth of tyme perfythly passyd & hath þis Englysch wurd haue, as amaui, I haue louyd. Qwerby knowyst þe pretyr tens pluperfyth? ffor it spekyth of tyme more þan perfythly passyd & hath þis Englysch wurd hadde, as amaueram, I had louyd. Qwerby knowyst þe future tens? ffor it spekyth of tyme þat is to come & hath þis Englysch wurd schal, as amabo, I schal louyn. How many nowmberys be þer of verbe? The singuler nowmbyr, as amo, amas, amat, and þe plurer, as amamus, -atis, -ant. How many personys be þer of verbe? Thre: the furst, as amo, amamus; þe secunde, as amas, amatis; & þe thrydde, as amat, amant. How many coniugacyons be þere? ffoure. Qwech iiij? Þe furst, þe secunde, þe thrydde, þe fourt. Qwerby knowyst þe furst coniugacyon? ffor it hath a long be-forn þe -re in þe infinityf actyf voys or in þe imperatyf mood passyf voys, as amare Qwerby knowyst þe secunde coniugacyon? ffor it hath e long afor þe -re in þe infinityf mood actyf voys or in þe imperatyf mood passyf voys, as docere. Qwerby knowyst þe thrydde coniugacyon? ffor it hath ⟨þe thrydde⟩ e schort befor þe -re in þe infinityf mood actyf voys or in þe imperatyf mood passyf voys, as legere. Qwerby knowyst þe fourt coniugacyon? ffor it hath j long be-forn þe -re in þe infinityf actyf voys or in þe imperatyf mood passyf voys, as audire. ffro þeise rewlys be owtakyn alle verbe neutyr enormalys for þei folow no ryth rewle of coniugacyon. Qwech be verbe neutyr enormalys? Pateet per versus:

(f. 5<sup>b</sup>) Sum, volo, fert, & edo sunt enormala credo.

And note wel þat alle þe componys of þeyse verbys fayle ryth rewle of coniugacyon saue too componys of edo qwech be excedo & comedo:

*Cum cunctis natis edo nata set excipiantur,
Excedo nam comedo regularia stare probantur.*

And how many componys haue sum es fui it is schewyd be þe versys folwyng:

*Sum neutri generis est & sua cuncta creata.
Quorum per metrum pateant tibi signata.
Adsum (sum presens), absum (dum cisto remotus),
Presum (preficio), sed possum (robore tutus),
Subsum (subcumbo multis), obsum (quia nocendo),
Insum (componens intus sum) dicere debes,
hijs quibus intersum (me presentem) bene pendo.
Quod restat super est iam non tibi plurima pando.*

Also fro þe rewle of coniugacyons be owtake many verbe defectiuis, as queso, I be-seche hath no more but quesumus; aue, heyl hath no more but aueto, auete, auetote; Salve, heyl hath no more but saluete, salueto, saluetote; vale, far-wel hath no more but ualete, -to, valetote; and memento, haue in mynde hath no more but mementote.<sup>35</sup> (f. 10<sup>b</sup>) And note wel for a rewle þat þe futur tens of indicatyf mood in þe thrydde & þe fourt coniugacyon' turnyth a into e in alle personys singuler & plurer saue in þe furst persone of þe singuler nowmbyr, as audiam, -es, -et, and in þe futur tens of þe oftatyf [sic] mood & þe present tens of coniunctyf mood he kepyth styлле a in alle personys, as audiam, -as, -at.

Qwerby knowyst an aduerbe? ffor he is cast to a verbe & fulfyllyth þe significacyon of þe verbe. How many degre of comparyson hath aduerbe? Iij: þe posityf, þe comparatyf, & þe superlatyf. How knowyst þe posityf degre of aduerbe? ffor he endyth in Englysch most comunly in -ly, as fayrly, goodly, swetely, & soche oþyr. How knowyst þe comparatyf degre? ffor he endyth in Englysch in -er<sup>35a</sup> or in -jr, as swetter, betyr. How knowyst þe superlatyf degre? ffor he endyth in Englysch in -est, as fayrest, fowlest, & soch othyr.

Qwerby knowyst a participyl? ffor he takyth part of nown, part of verbe, & part of bothe. Qwat takyth he of nown? Gendyr & case. Qwat of þe verbe? Tyme & significacyon. And quat of bothe? Nowmbyr & persone. How many tens be þer of participyl? Iij. Qwech iij? þe present tens, þe preter tens, and þe futur tens. Qwerby knowyst þe participyl of present tens? þe he endyth in Englysch in -yng or in -and, as redyng, louand, & in Latyn in -ens or in -ans as legends, amans. Qwerby knowyst þe participyl of pretyr tens? ffor al soch scort Englysch wurdys, loued, red, tawt, herd arn synes of þe preter tens of partici[pyl] & endyth in Latyn in -tus or in -sus, as lectus, visus. Qwerby knowyst (f. 11<sup>a</sup>) a participyl of þe futur tens? ffor if he be a participyl of þe actyf voys he hath þe Englysch of þe infenityf mood of þe actyf voys & endyth in Latyne in -rus, as lecturus, for to redyn. And if it be a participyl of þe passyf voys he hath þe Englysch of þe infenityf mood of þe passyf voys, as legendus, for to be red. How many participulys hath a verbe actyf? Too. Qwech ij? On of þe present tens endyng in -ens or in -ans, as legens, amans, and anoþyr of þe futur tens endyng in -rus, as lecturus, amaturus. How many participulys hath a verbe passyf? Too. Qwech ij? On of þe preter tens endyng in -tus or in -sus, as lectus, visus, and anoþyr of þe futur tens endyng in -dus, as legendus, videndus. How many participul' hath a verbe neutyr? Too. Qwech ij? On of þe present tens endyng in -ens or in -ans, as currens, stans, and anoþyr of þe futur endyng in -rus, as cursurus, staturus. How many participul' hath a verbe deponent? Thre. Qwech iij? On of þe present tens endyng in -ens or in -ans, as loquens auxiliars; a-noþyr of þe preter tens endyng in -tus or in -sus, as locutus, lapsus; and a participyl of þe futur tens endyng in -rus, as locuturus. How many participul' hath a verbe comun? Iiij. Qwech iij? On of þe present tens endyng in -ens or in -ans, as experiens, hortans; a-noþyr of þe preter tens endyng in -tus, as expertus; & too futurys, on endyng in -rus, as hortaturus, and anoþyr in -dus, as hortandus. How many endynggys be þer of participyl? Vj. Qweche vj? Too of þe present tens endyng in -ens & in -ans; too of preter tens endyng in -tus or in -sus; & too of þe futur endyng in -rus or in -dus. Vnde versus.

<sup>35</sup> Paradigms of amo, doceo, lego, audio, sum, possum, volo, nolo, malo, fero, edo, fio, with English equivalents, occupy fol. 5<sup>b</sup>, l. 20-10<sup>b</sup> l. 20.. These I omit.

<sup>35a</sup> He endyth in Englysch written in the left margin.

-Ens, -ans presentis semper dic temporis esse,

-Tus, -sus preteriti, -rus, -dus dic esse futuri.

-Ens, -ans, -rus & agunt, -tus, -sus, -dus paciuntur.<sup>36</sup>

(f. 11<sup>b</sup>) [Q]werby knowyst a coniunccyon? ffor it joyneth or disioyneth oþyr partys of reson & ordeynyth in hem perfyth sentence. Qwech be þo coniunccyons þat ioynyn? Alle þe wurdys þat be in da copulatiuas. And qwech be þo þat disioynyn? Alle þe wurdys in da disiunctiuas. Qwat partys of reson joyne þei or disoynne [sic]? Nownys, pronownys, verbys, & participulys. Qwan joyne þei or disioyne? Qwan ony coniunccyons of joynyng or disioynyng come be-twyn too nownys, or too pronownys, or too verbis, or too participulys, da copulatiuas, vt que & que, atque, at, ac, ast, da disiunccinas, vt aut, ve, vel, ne, nec, an, neque; da expletivas, vt quidem, equidem, saltem, videlicet, quam, quamuis, quoque, autem, porro, licet, tamen, siu, autem; da causales, vt si & si, eciam, si, siquidem, quoniam, quoniamquidem, quin, quineciam, quatinus, siu, seu, siue, niue, nam, namque, ni, nisi, ne, ne set, interea, quamobrem, presertim, item, itemque, ceterim, alioquin, preteria; da racionales vt ita, itaque, enim, etenim, vero, quia, quapropter, quum, quidem, quippe, nempe, ergo, ideo, igitur, silicet, videlicet, preteria, propterea, adcirco.

<sup>36</sup> At this point the scribe wrote the beginning words of the section of conjunctions by error and then crossed them out: "[Q]werby knowyst a coniunccyon? ffor it joyneth or disioyneth oþyr partys of reson & ordeynyth in hem perfyth sentence Qweche þe coniunccyons þat joynyn? Al þe wurdys þat be in das copulatiuas." Following this come paradigms of the participles amans, legens, lectus, lecturus, and legendus, which occupy fol. 11<sup>a</sup>. l. 30-fol. 11<sup>b</sup>. l. 4. I have omitted them.

[Q]werby knowyst a preposicyon? ffor he is set be-forn oþyr partys of reson & seruyth to certeyn case. To qwath case seruyth a preposicyon to? To þe accusatyf case, to þe ablatyf, or to boþin. Qweche preposicyons serue to þe accusatyf case? Alle þe wurdys in da preposicyones accusatiui<sup>37</sup> da preposiciones casus accusatiui: ad, aput, ante, aduersum, cis, citra, circum, circa, contra, erga, extra, inter, intra, infra, iuxta, ob, prope, propter, secundum, post, trans, vltra, preter,<sup>38</sup> supra, circiter, vsque, secus, penes; da preposiciones casus ablatiui. a, ab, abs, cum, coram, clam, de, e, ex, pro, pre, palam, sine, absque, tenus, da vtriusque casus preposiciones vt. in, sub, super, & subter.

[Q]werby knowyst an interieccyon? ffor it lyth a-mong oþyr partys of reson & betokenyth passyon of sowle wit an vnperfyth voyis & betokenyth joye, or sorow, or dred, or wunderyng, or indignacyon, as aha, alas, welawey, out, out, owgh, so howgh, & soch oþyr.

[H]ow many acordys ben þere of grameer? ffyue. Qwech v? The furst be-twyn þe nominatyf case & þe verbe, The secunde betwyn þe substantyf & þe adiectyf, þe thredde þe relatyf & þe antsedent [sic], þe fowrt be-twyn þe (re) superlatyf degre & þe genityf case folwyng, þe fyfte be þe nown partityf or þe nown distributyf & þe genityf case þat folw<sup>t</sup>. In how many a-corde þe nominatyf case & þe verbe? In too. In qwech too? In nowmbyr & persone. Vnde versus:

Vult in persona numero rectus similari.
Cum personali verbo sibi voce sequente
Non pones rectum sine verbo per precianum,
Nec personale verbum pones sine recto.

Qwech preposicyons serue to þe ablatyf case? Alle þe wurdys þat be in da preposiciones casus ablatiui. Qwech wurdys serue to bothe casys? Alle þe wurdys þat be in da vtriusque casus preposiciones Qwan wyl in serue to accusatyf case & quanne to þe ablatyf? Qwan in comth wit a to it wyl serue to be accusatyf case, & qwan in comth a-lone he wyl serue to þe ablatyf case. Vnde versus:

In campo curro bene dicis si sis in illo,
Si sis exterius in campum fit tibi cursus.
Into vult quartum sine to iugito sextum.<sup>39</sup>

(f. 12*) In how many schal þe substantyf & þe adiectyf acordyn? In thre. In qwech iij? In gendyr, nowmbyr, & case. Vnde versus:

Cum substantiuis tribus adiectiua locabis,
In casu, genere, numero debes retinere.

<sup>37</sup> Da perposicyones accusatiui was writteen by error and not excised.

<sup>38</sup> Preter written in the left margin.

<sup>39</sup> The fourth and sixth cases are referred to, i.e., the accusative and the ablative.

In how many schal þe relatyf & þe antecedent a-corde? In thre. In qwech thre? In gendyr, nowmbyr, & persone. Vnde versus:

*Antecedenti tribus hijs coniunge relatiuum,
Persona numero sit genus hijs quoque datum.*

In how many schal þe superlatyf degre & þe genityf case þat folwit acorde? In on. In qwech on? In gendyr. Vnde versus:

*Omne superlatiuum partitiue recitatum
Semper vult generi genituo sociari,
Vt pateat verum sic est deus optima rerum.
Ymmo superlatiuum propria vi quoniam locatur
Per genus hoc fixo precedenti famulatur.
Naso dat hoc verum quid agis dulcissime rerum.*

In how many schal þe nown partityf & þe genityf þat folwyt acorde? In on, In gendyr. Vnde versus

*Conformes genere dic cum casu genituo
Nunc partituum veh <iti> venit vna sororum.
Sic in gramatica dicas concordia quina*

THE DONET IN ENGLISH FROM DOUCE MS. 103

(f. 53<sup>a</sup>) How mony partyse of speche ben þer? Viiij. Wyche viij? Nowne, pronowne, verbe, aduerbe, partycypull', coniunccion, preposicion, and interieccion. How mony byth' declynd and how mony byn' vndeclynd? Iiij byn' declynd & iij byn' vndeclynd. Weche iij byn' declynd and wyche iij byn' vndeclynd? Nowne, pronowne, verbe, & partycypull' byn' declynd'; aduerbe, coniunccion, preposicio[n], & interieccion byn' vndeclynd. How mony byn' declynd with case & how mony with-owte case? Iij byn' declynd with case & j with-owte case. Wyche iij with case; wyche j with-owte case? Nowne, pronow[n]e, & partycypull' with case; verbe oyle<sup>40</sup> with-owte case.

How knowyst (a partycypull) a nowne? A nowne ys all' maner of thyng' þat y may see, fele, or hondyll', or beryth' þe name of a thyng',—þe name þer-of ys a now[n]e. How mony maner of nownys byn' there? Ij. Wyche ij? Nowne substantyfe & nowne adiectyfe. How knowyst a nowne substantyfe? For he ys y-declynd with j artycull' or ij at þe most. How knowyst a nowne adiectyfe? For he ys declynd with iij artyculys or with iij dyuerse yendyngys Wyche h<sup>41</sup> byn' þe artyculys? Hic, hec, & hoc. Wyche byn' þe iij dyuerse yndyngys? -vs, -a, & -vm, how<sup>42</sup> as bonus, bona, bonum for goode. How mony nomburs (h) byn' there? Ij. Wyche to? The synguler nombur & the plurell' now[m]bur. How knowyst the synglere nowmbur? For he spekyth' of on' thyng', (f. 53<sup>b</sup>) as mon' or beste. How knowyst the plurell' numburs? For he spekyth' of mony theyngys, as [men] or bestys. How mony degreys of compar[i]sons byn' there? Iij. Wyche iij? The posityff degre, the comparatyf degre,

<sup>40</sup> Oyle. May only have been intended here?

<sup>41</sup> H was written by error and not excised.

<sup>42</sup> How was written by error and not excised.

& the super[latyf] degree. How knowyst thow the posytyf degree? For he ys begynner & growndere of all' opyr degreys of comparsonys, & þey byn' formyd of hym & he ys not of them. How knowyst the comparatyf degre? For he endyth' yn -r, as fayryre, lyngyr, schortyre. How knowyst the super-[latyf] degre? For he endyth' (ys) yn' -ys, as: feyryste, lengyst, schortys[t]. How many persons byn' there? Iij. Wyche iij? I & we the fyrst person, þu & 3e the secund person. All' opur byn' þe iij person', excepte the vocatyf case. How knowyst the fyrste person'? For he spekyth' of hym-sylfe, as y or we. How knowyst the ij person'? For he spekyth' to a-opur, as þu or 3e. How knowyst the iij person'? For he spekyth' of a-opur, as he or they. How many gendrys byn' there? Vij. Wyche vij? Masculyn' gendur, femyn[yn] gendur, neutur gendur, & commyn' of two, commyn' [of] iij, dubyn' gendur, & ypsen' gendur. How knowyst masculyn' gendur? For he ys declyned with hic, as hic magister. The femyn[yn] with hec, as hec Musa. The neutur with hoc, as hoc scannum. The commyn' of two with hic & hec, as hic & hec sacerdos. The commen' of iij, with hic, hec, & hoc felix. The dubyn' gendur for he ys declyned with hic hec & vel conjuncion' be-twene as hic uel hec dies. (f. 54<sup>a</sup>) How knowyst the epcyn' gendur? For vndur oon' artycul' he comprehendyth' bothe male & female, as hic pascere, hec aquila. How many nowmburs byn' there? Ij. Wyche ij? Syngulere & plurell'. How knowyst þe synguler nowmbur. For he spekyth' but of on' thyng, as a mon' or beste. How knowyst þe pluler [sic] nowmbur? For he spekyth' of mo thyngys then of on', as men' or bestys. How many cases byn' the[re]? Vj. Wyche vj? Nominatyfe case, genetyfe case, the datyfe case, accusatyfe case, the vocatyfe case, & the ablatyfe case. How knowyst the nominatyfe case? For he cumyt afore the verbe & askyt thys questyon' who or wat. How knowyst the genetyfe case? For of aftur a nowne substantyfe, verbe substantyfe, nowne party[ty]fe, nowne dystributyfe, or a superlatyfe degre byn' the synes of the genetyfe case. How knowyst the datyfe case? For to be-fore a nowne or a pronowne wyttoty [sic] remewyng ys the senys [sic] of the datyfe case. How knowyst the accusatyfe case? For he cumyth' aftur the verbe & enseryth' to thys questyon' whom' or what. How knowyst the vocatyfe case? For he clepyth' or callyth' or spekyth' to. How knowyst the ablatyfe case? By my synes? Wyche byn' they? Yn' & wyth', throge, fro, & by & [þanne] aftur a comparatyf degre<sup>43</sup> ys the synes of the ablatyfe case. (f. 54<sup>b</sup>) How many declynsuns of now[n]ys? V. Wyche v? The furst, the ij, the iij, the iiij, the v. How knowyst the furst? For the genityfe case synguler endyth' yn -e & datyffe also. How knowyst the ij? For<sup>44</sup> þe genityfe synguler endyth' yn -j & datyfe & the ablatyfe yn' o. How knowyst the iij? For the genityfe case<sup>45</sup> synguler endyth' yn -ys, the datyfe yn -j. How knowyst the iiij? For the genityfe case synguler endyth' in -vs, the datyfe yn' -vj. How knowyst the v? For the genityfe case synguler endyth' yn' -ei & the datyfe also. How knowyst.<sup>46</sup> How many persuns byn there? Iii. Wyche iij? The furst, the ij, the iij. How knowyst the j persone? For he spekyth' of hym'-selfe as j or we. How knowyst the ij persone? For he spekyth' of a-nodur, as thou or se. How knowyst the iij persone? For he spekyth' of a-nodure, as he or they.

<sup>43</sup> De in degre is written above the line.

<sup>44</sup> Fer is written in the MS. with an o written directly above the e.

<sup>45</sup> Case is written above the line.

How knowyst a pronowne? For he ys a parte of speche declynynd with case þe wyche ys seyt for a propur name of a man' & resewyth' to hym' certey[n] personys. How many pronow[n]ys byn' there? Xv. Wyche xv? Ego, tu, sui, ille, ipse, hic & his,<sup>47</sup> meus, tuus, suus, noster & vester, nostras & vestras. How many byn' the primityfis & how many byn' the deruatwes? Vij byn' þe primitywes & vij (f. 55<sup>a</sup>) byn' deruatywes. Wyche vij byn' primitywes? Ego, tu, sui, ille, ipse, iste, hic, & js. Wych' vij byn' deruatywes? Meus, tuus, suus, noster & vester, nostras & vestras. How many declynsuns of pronownes byn' there? Iiiij. Wych' iij? The j, the ij, the iij, & the iij. How knowyst the j? For the genytyf case synguler endyth' yn -j or yn -ys, the datyfe yn -j. How many pronownes conteynyth the [j]? Iij. Wych' iij? Ego tu, sui. How knowyst the ij? For the genytyfe case synguler endyth' yn' -is or yn' -ius, the datyfe yn' -j or yn' -c. How knowyst the iij? For the genytyfy case synguler endyth' yn' -j or yn' -e & yn' -j & the datyfe yn -o or in -e or in -o. How many pronownes conteynyth he? V. Wych' v? Meus, tuus, suus, noster, vester. How knowyst iij? For the genytyfy case synguler endyth' in -atis & datife in' -ati. How many pronownes conteyneth he? Ij. Wych' ij? Nostras & vestras. & how many nownes? On'. Wych' on'? Cugeas<sup>48</sup> -ati.

How knowyst a verbe? For he ys a party of speche edecly[n]y[n]d with mode, tyme, & coniugacion', withowte case or arty[c]le be-tokynyng to do or suferyng' to be. How many maner of verbis byn there? V. Wych' v? Verbe actyfy, verbe passyfy, verbe neutur, verbe deponent, & verbe commyn'. (f. 55<sup>b</sup>) How knowyst a verbe actyfy? For he endyth' in -o & be- (toke) tokenyth' to do & may take -r a-pon' -o & make of hym' a passyfy, as amo amor. How knowyst a verbe passyfy? For he endyth' yn' -r & be-tokenyth' to suffure and may do a-way ys -r fro ys -o & turne a-(j)-yene in-to ys actyfy, as amor, amo. How knowyst a verbe neutur? For he endyth' in -o & may not take -r appon' -o ne constur with hys accusatyf case hominem aftur hym. How knowyst a verbe deponent? For he endyth' jn -r as a verbe passyfy & hath' the Englyssche of the actyfy. How knowyst a verbe comyn'? For he endyth' jn -r as a verbe passyfy & hath' the Englyssche of þe actyf & of the passyfy booth'. How knowyst<sup>49</sup> mony coniugacions byn' there? Iiiij. Wych' iij? The j, as amo, -as,<sup>50</sup> amor, -aris,<sup>51</sup> the ij as doceo, doces, doceor, -ris; the iij, as lego, -itis, legor, -ris; the iij, as audio, -dis, audior, -ris. How knowyst the j? For he hath' a long' be-fore the -re jn-fenitfy mode, a-fore the -ris indicatyf mode, as amare, vel amaris. How knowyst the ij? For he hath

<sup>46</sup> The scribe made a false start with How knowyst, but did not excise it.

<sup>47</sup> Has for is.

<sup>48</sup> Cugeas for cujas.

<sup>49</sup> Knowyst, of course, should not be here.

<sup>50</sup> As is written above the line.

<sup>51</sup> Aris is written above the line.

a e long' be-fore the -re jnfenityf mode, be-fore the -ris indicatyf mode, as docere vel -ris. How knowyst the iij? For he hath' a e schorte be-fore the -re indicatyf<sup>52</sup> mode, be-fore the -ris indicatyf m[o]de, as legere vel -ris. How knowyst the iiij? For he hath' a j long' (f. 56*) be-fore the<sup>53</sup> -re jnfynityf mode, be-fore the -ris indecatyf mode, as audire vel -ris. How mony modys byn' there? V. Wyche' v? Indicatyf mode, jmperatyf mode, optatyf mode, coniunctyf mode, & jnfenityf mode. How knowyst indicatyf mode? For he tellyt or sowyt [sic] & hath' no syne of no nothyre mode. How knowyst jmperatyf mode? For he byddyth or commawndyth'. How knowyst the optatyf mode? For he well' or desyryt, & by ys ij synys woldeor sculde. How knowyst the coniunctyf mode? By my synys. Wych' byn' they? Si, cum, licet, quamvis, quamqua[m], and othyre coniunctions moo wyll' haue coniunctyf mode aftur hym. How knowyst jnfenityf mode? For whan' ij verbis commyth to-gedur with-out a relatyf or a coniunccion' be-twene, the latur verbe schall' be the jnfenityf mode. How mony tymes byn there? V. Wych' v? The tyme þat ys noo, the tyme that ys nott fullich'e a-gonne & the tyme that ys agon', the tyme that [ys] more then' a-goon', and the tyme that ys to cum. How knowyst the tyme that ys no? For he be-tokynth' the tyme þat ys no, as amo, y loue. How knowyst the tyme þat ys not folych' a-gon'? For he be-tokynyt the tyme þat ys not fullych' a-gon, as am[a]bam, y louyd. How knowyst the tyme þat ys a-gon'? For he be-tokynynd [sic] the tyme þat ys a-gon', as amauy, y haue louyd. How knowyst the tyme þat ys to cum? For he be-tokynynd the tyme þat ys to cum, as amabo, I schal loue. (f. 56<sup>b</sup>) How knowyst an aduerbe? For he ys a party of spech' vndeclynynd, the wych' ys caste to a uerbe & makyth playne & fullfyllth' the syngnyfycacion' of the verbe.

How knowyst a partycypull? For he ys a party of spech' edclynynd' with case & takyth parte of a nowne, party of a verbe, & party of both' two. What takyth of a nowne? Gendur & case. What of a verbe? Tyme & syngnification'. What of both to? Nombur & fugur.<sup>54</sup> How mony maner partycypull' byn' there? Iiij. Wych' iiij? The partycypull' of the tyme þat ys now, the partycypull' of tyme þat ys <to cum> a-gon', the partycypull' of the<sup>55</sup> tyme þat ys to cum actyf, the partycypull' of the tyme þat ys to cum passyf. How knowyst the partycypull' of the tyme þat ys noo? For he endyth yn -yng' yn' Engglyssch', as louyng', techyng', redyng', heryng', & endyth yn -ens or yn -ans yn Latyn'. Where-of schall' he be for-mynd? Of the furst' person' synguler now[m]bur of the tyme þat ys nott fullych' a-gon, as amabam', change -bam to -n or [sic] s & make nominatiuo hic, hec, hoc amans. How knowyst the partycypull' of tyme<sup>56</sup> tyme þat ys gon'? For he be-gynnyth', be j- yn Englysse, as y-louyd, y-tau3th, y-radde, y-herde, & endyth yn -tus or yn -sus<sup>57</sup> yn <lar> Laten', as amatus, doctus, lectus, auditus. Where-of schall' he be formyd? Of the latur suppyne, as lectu, sett' ther to -s & make

<sup>52</sup> Indicatyf is an obvious error for infynityf.

<sup>53</sup> The is written above the line.

<sup>56</sup> Of the is written above the line.

<sup>57</sup> Yn sus is written above the line.

<sup>54</sup> Fugur, for figur.

<sup>56</sup> Of tyme is written above the line.

lectus -a -um. How knowyst the partycypull' of the tyme þat ys to cum actyf? For he be-gynnyth,<sup>58</sup> as to be<sup>59</sup> yn Englysse, as to loue, to (f. 57<sup>a</sup>) teche, & cetera, and endyth yn Laten yn -rus, as amaturus, docturus. Where-of schall' he be formyd? Of the latur suppyn', as lectu, set there-to -rus, & make lecturus. How knowyst the partycypull' þat ys to cum passyfe? For he be-gynnyth (with) to be yn' Englysse, as to be louyd, to be tazt<sup>60</sup> to be rad, to be harde, & schall'<sup>61</sup> endyth' yn -dus in Laten, as amandus, docendus, legendus, audiendus. Where-of schall' he be formyd? Of the genityf case synguler of the partycypull' of the [tyme] that ys nou, as legentis, change the -tis in-to -dus & make legendus -da -dum.

How knowyst a coniunccion'? For he ys a party of speche vndeclynynd the wych' cowpullyth or dyscowpulyth' all' othere partes of (se) speche yn' ordur.

How knowyst a preposicion'? For he ys a party of speche vndeclynynd the wych' ys set' be-fore or be<sup>62</sup> endyth yn a-pocycyon' or yn compocycyon', & odor wyle seruyth to accusatyf case & odor wyle to ablatyf case and odor wyle to both too.

How knowyst an interieccyon'? For (y) he ys a party of speke vndeclynynd the wych' schew<sup>t</sup> a monnys wyll' with a vnperfytt voyce, as wondur, drede, or merwell'.

SANFORD BROWN MEECH

University of Michigan

<sup>58</sup> Two letters of a word were written before be-gynnyth and the first letter illegible to me was crossed out. The second letter is e.

<sup>59</sup> To is required; not to be.

<sup>61</sup> Shall should be omitted.

<sup>60</sup> An illegible letter is added to tazt.

<sup>62</sup> Some error has spoiled the scense here

LXIII

INFLUENCE OF SUPERSTITION ON VOCABULARY: TWO RELATED EXAMPLES

(PREPARED FROM THE FILES OF THE EARLY MODERN ENGLISH DICTIONARY)<sup>1</sup>

Fly AND Bug

DURING the period covered by the Early Modern English Dictionary, witchcraft occupied the mind of the average man, and became the subject-matter of literature (dramatic, theological, philosophical, legal) to an extent probably not known in any other epoch. It is natural that such a predominating interest should have its effect on the vocabulary. There can now be described, with more detail than has hitherto been available, one instance in which the beliefs and practices of contemporary charlatans, pretending to supernatural connections, made an interesting development of meaning for a common word. This instance will be illustrated at length, for the sake of the analogies which it suggests as to possible starting points for studying other words. The discussion seems to indicate that elements in the problem go back to learned tradition and at the same time to primitive Teutonic folk-lore.

Fly.—The OD treats three transferred meanings of fly (sb.) under sense 5, without separating the quotations; of the latter (five in all) three refer to sense 5a “A familiar demon (from the notion that devils were accustomed to assume the form of flies).” The abbreviated form in which the citations were necessarily given does not make clear that all three refer to the familiar spirit said to have been employed by persons trafficking with the black art in order to bring luck or skill in games.

Four examples in our files would indicate that fly (sb., 5a) was established in the Elizabethan vocabulary. Two occur in reports of incidents from real life. The earlier is given in Reginald Scot’s Discoverie of Witchcraft (1584), where we are told that

... at Towne Malling in kent, one of Q. Maries iustices, upon the complaint of many wise men, and a few foolish boies, laid an archer by the heeles; bicause he shot so neere the white at buts. For he was informed and persuaded, that the poore man plaied with a flie, otherwise called a divell or familiar.<sup>2</sup>

Here the italicized phrase alone (as in OD) gives no hint that an actual incident was in question—localized, and dated before 1558. The date of the second falls before 1574, the year when Father Robert Parsons, S. J., left Balliol College.<sup>3</sup> In this reference, lately brought to light by Mr. L. S. Powell, Father Parsons stated, in regard to his quarrel with Adam Squier, the Master of Balliol, that it had arisen " . . . for certaine deceyts used to some contrey men of his in selling them dycing flies, and other like toyes."<sup>4</sup> Mr. Powell found that the same incident was referred to in a later letter of Parsons' brother,<sup>5</sup> from which it appears that the "countrymen" of Parsons in question lost all that they had when gambling with a "fly,"<sup>6</sup> given to them by Squier. Parsons made a stir about the matter at Oxford and Squier retained his mastership only because of his "great friends." The facts of Father Parsons' career are involved in much prejudice.<sup>7</sup> Some general corroboration may, however, be said to be given by the fact that Anthony à Wood refers to Squier (a Doctor of Divinity, 1576) as "a learned but fantastical Man," saying that he was the son-in-law of Bishop Aylmer of London, by whose favor he was made Archdeacon of Middlesex.<sup>8</sup> Aylmer is supposed to be the "Morrell" satirized by Spenser in the Shepherd's Calendar (July).<sup>9</sup> Altogether, the incident in question must have been a cause célèbre of the day, if, as seems likely, it is true in its essentials. Fresh currency must thus have been given to the use of fly as familiar spirit.

<sup>1</sup> To the making of this collection the University of Michigan, the General Education Board, the Rockefeller Foundation, the Oxford University Press, and the Philological Society of England have all contributed.

<sup>2</sup> Bk. III, c. xv., ed. Montague Summers (London, 1930), p. 37.

The general use of fly in the sense of demon and the claims of contemporary charlatans to provide such flies for use in games is further indicated by the literary references. As late as 1643, nearly a hundred years after the case of the archer of Malling, Cartwright, in his play The Ordinary (II, iv, 14 ff.), depicted a character who has, in the phrase cited by the OD, "a fly only to win good clothes."<sup>10</sup> The allusion is made clear by the preceding lines:

AND. He was as like our Master Shape as could be . . .
It was somebody in his clothes, I'm sure.

<sup>3</sup> DNB, s.v. Robert Parsons.

<sup>4</sup> A Briefe Apologie (1601), p. 91 (quoted here from the transcript of Mr. Powell). His research on the career of Father Parsons brought an enquiry to Professor Fries as to "dycing fly" (see LTLS June 27 and August 1, 1935).

<sup>5</sup> Foley, Henry, S. J., Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus (London, 1880), vi, 677 ff. Mr. Powell cites other editions in Andrews' Orthodox Journal, II, 123; and Catholic Record Society, II, (1906), 38 (ed. J. H. Pollen).

<sup>6</sup> This is misread as "fey" in all three editions, as Mr. Powell discovered.

<sup>7</sup> Vide the accounts of his leaving Balliol cited in the DNB (where judgment on the conflicting accounts is suspended).

<sup>8</sup> Athenæ Oxonienses (London, 1691), I, 740.

<sup>9</sup> Shepherd's Calendar, ed. W. L. Renwick (London, 1930), p. 201. I owe this fact to Professor Tilley, who also directed me to the discussion of the "dicing fly" in The Alchemist (not recognizable from the abbreviated citation in OD, s.v. fly).

<sup>10</sup> Hazlitt-Dodsley, Old English Plays, 4th ed. (London, 1875), XII, 249 (ex. edit., 1651).

MEAN. Some cunning cheater, upon my life, won
His cloak and suit too!

The most complete and clear account in literature of the use of the fly in the Elizabethan period is to be found in Jonson's Alchemist (1610).<sup>11</sup> A "fly" is sold to Dapper "for all games" (I, ii, 283 ff.), "a rifling flye: none o' your great familiars" (OD). Highly significant details regarding this fly are given when it is later delivered to Dapper (v, iv, 219 ff.). Dol Common (as Queen of the Fairies) gives it to him in a purse,<sup>12</sup> and tells him to feed it by letting it suck blood from his right wrist once a week. Here Jonson shows his grasp of the fundamental principles of witchcraft, for, as Professor Kittredge remarks: "This idea—that witches feed their familiars with their blood—is persistent in the later history of English witchcraft."<sup>13</sup> He cites an interesting case of 1510, where "iij. humble bees, or like humble bees," were kept and said to have been fed with his blood by a man on trial for witchcraft. "That an insect should serve as a witch's familiar is natural and proper," Professor Kittredge goes on. "Such creatures, therefore, occur in considerable variety among men, savage and civilized; but the fly and the bee are especially noteworthy in English tradition." He cites Thomas Nashe's gibe at the Anabaptists in 1594, that "inspiration was their ordinarie familiar, and buzd in their eares like a Bee in a boxe euerie hower what newes from heauen, hell, and the land of whipperginnie";<sup>14</sup> and he gives various references to the fly as the embodiment of the witches' familiar, in actual <sup>11</sup> I cite the edition of The Alchemist in Yale Studies, ed. C. M. Hathaway (New York, 1903). For a possible relation of Jonson's plot to the scandal of Squier's "fly," cf. a contemporary letter from a fellow of Christ Church which seems to describe (bitterly) a performance of the play as taking place at Oxford in the autumn of 1610. It is said to have been once hissed; see Hathaway, p. 246.

<sup>12</sup> Mr. Powell points out, in notes on this subject, sent for our use, that these lines show that "the buyer got something visible for his money—presumably something in the nature of our modern mascots." In this connection he cites The Knave of Clubs, by S. Rowlands, brought to his attention by Mr. Percy Simpson (who kindly looked up his as yet unpublished commentary on the Alchemist):

A craftier knaue then he (of late)	An artificall flie of silke,
Had got him on the hip,	(a devill with a pox)
Which should him a familier sprite,	For this my Gull giues twenty pound.
A devill in a box,	(Sig-D <sub>2</sub> v)

I cite the reprint of the edition of 1609 (Hunterian Club, 1872). Cf. also Thomas Heywood, The Hierarchie of the blessed Angells (London, 1635), p. 475: "These kindes of familiar Spirits are such as they include or keepe in Rings hallowed, in Viols, Boxes, and Caskets."

<sup>13</sup> Witchcraft in Old and New England (Cambridge, 1929), p. 179.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid., p. 180; Nashe, The Unfortunate Traveller (1594), Works, ed. McKerrow, R. B., (London, 1904), II, 233.

records of trials for witchcraft, or in the literature of the period.<sup>15</sup> In the same way, when John Cleveland writes his Bee Errant, a characteristic specimen of the poetic treatment of insects which followed Midsummer Night's Dream,<sup>16</sup> he casually cites the bee sucking blood on a lady's hand, under a name which can only be understood in the light of the preceding discussion: "It was decreed . . . The small familiar should be weaned."<sup>17</sup>

The persistence and general circulation of the idea of a fly being possibly a devil is also illustrated in the OD. under sense 6: "a. A 'printer's devil' (cf. 5a) . . . the Workmen do Jocosely call them Devils; and sometimes Spirits, and sometimes Flies";<sup>18</sup> and under sense 8: "a festival formerly observed by the Oxford cooks" of "fetching the fly" at Whitsuntide and "carrying the fly away" at Michaelmas (thus propitiating "the enemie the Flie" at the opening of the fly-season and at the end).<sup>19</sup>

Professor Kittredge remarks (p. 180), in citing the case of the archer of Malling: "Flies of this demonic nature are good old figures in Germanic lore. They were well known in Lappish, Finnish, and Norse sorcery." The last example found in our files for fly, sb., sense 5, may be explicitly attached to Germanic folk-lore. In 1705 John Beaumont wrote:

Petrus Claudius calls it [a magic dart] a Gan, which they send abroad; he likens it to a Flye, but says its some little Devil, of which the Finlanders in Norway, that excel most in this Art, keep great Numbers in a Leather Bag, and dispatch daily some of them abroad.<sup>20</sup>

In spite of the Germanic and related contribution to the development of the sense of fly as demon, a considerable and perhaps more consciously <sup>15</sup> See p. 499, n. 55. For many cases of an insect as familiar or as associated with bewitching, cf. the records of prosecutions in Suffolk, 1645 (Ewen, C. L'Estrange, Witch-Hunting and Witch Trials, [London, 1929], pp. 291 ff.). It is characteristic of the selective character of the quotations from the vast material for witchcraft, used by different authors, that Miss M. A. Murray, who offers as consecutive an account of familiars as any, gives no reference to insect forms for such. See The Witch-Cult in Western Europe (Oxford, 1921). All sorts of other small creatures are pictured amongst the "imps" of a witch in pictures from a manuscript of 1621 reproduced by Mr. Ewen (op. cit.). For insect-familiars see also Professor Notestein, History of Witchcraft in England, Amer. Hist. Assn. (1901), pp. 175, 263, etc.

<sup>16</sup> See Latham, M. W., The Elizabethan Fairies (New York, 1930), pp. 176 ff.

<sup>17</sup> Berdan, J. M., The Poems of John Cleveland, (New Haven, 1911), p. 65. The italics are mine. This poem was first printed 1651 (ibid., p. 201).

<sup>18</sup> Moxon, J., Mechanick Exercises (1683), ed. De Vinne, Theo. L., (1896), p. 373.

<sup>19</sup> Audrey, J., Remaines of Gentilisme . . . (1686-87), Folk-Lore Society (1881), p. 202, where the custom is derived from classical examples (v. infra). Sir E. K. Chambers interprets this ceremony otherwise in The English Folk-Play (Oxford, 1933), p. 37. The present discussion would surely confirm Audrey's own explanation.

<sup>20</sup> Treatise of Spirits (London, 1705), p. 273. For the association of sorcery with Lapland, v. OD, s.v. Lapland.

active influence came from ancient civilizations. The OD has noted under sense 5 the analogy of Latin musca and French mouche, but the transferred senses on record for these words apparently do not include that now under discussion.<sup>21</sup> Such a sense, however, is implied in various propitiatory rites of classical religion on record, and in the legend of Virgil's fly-talisman which kept flies out of Naples.<sup>22</sup>

In the Elizabethan period, amongst learned men at least, the classical connections of "the fly-lord" were well known. The pioneer English work on insects is the great "Theater of Insects" by Thomas Moufet (1553-1604), a very distinguished court-physician.<sup>23</sup> Moufet's manuscript (Sloane MS. 4014) was finished by 1590, though not printed till many years after his death.<sup>24</sup> This work illustrates the dependence of the ideas under discussion on classical and Hebraic tradition, among the learned of Ben Jonson's time. In the English version of 1658 we read:

Pliny . . . relates also how the Cyrenaicks were wont to worship Achor the god of Flies, that by his means they might be secured from being troubled with them. Pliny more truly might have read this name Acaron, or Ithechron, in stead of Achor, if he had heard of the Town Acaron where Bahalzebub, i.e. the god of Flies, that famous Idol used to be worshipped. Urspergeusis [sic] saith that the Devil

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Harper's Latin Dictionary, Littré, Dict. de la langue Fr.

<sup>22</sup> Vide Spargo, J. W., Virgil the Necromancer, Harvard Studies, (Cambridge, 1934), pp. 69-73, 345 (pointed out by Dr. Hull.) Mr. Montague Summers writes: ". . . when the demon, under whatsoever guise or name he might be adored, had received those divine honours he ever covets . . . he withdraws his emissaries the tormenting flies who are often his imps in the form of insects" (The Vampire [London, 1928], p. 199). An easy connection with such ideas can be made for the fact that the witch is accused of sending lice, caterpillars, etc.—Possibly Virgil's "fly-talisman" was imitated: Ducange quoted (s.v. musca) a reference from English sources to a "golden fly beautifully adorned with jewels." There were quantities of antique gems in England during the Middle Ages (for seals incorporating antique intaglios see Birch, W. de G., Catalogue of Seals in the Department of MSS., British Museum [London, 1887], passim, etc.). For the "visible fly" (demon), cf. supra, n. 12. Sir J. G. Frazer gives brilliant discussions of the propitiation of vermin in folk rites in England, and elsewhere, Pausanias's Description of Greece (London, 1898), III, 558-559; The Golden Bough, Spirits of the Corn and of the Wild (London, 1919), II, 274 ff.

<sup>23</sup> V.DNB, s.v. Moffett. He dedicated to his patroness, Sidney's sister, the Countess of Pembroke, his only English work, a poem on the silkworm (1599).

<sup>24</sup> Insectorum sive Minimorum Animalium Theatrum, olim ab Edoardo Wottono, Conrado Gesnero, Thomaque Pennio inchoatum, Tandem Tho. Movfeti Londonatis opera sumptibusque . . . perfectum, London, 1634. This work was quoted by the OD from the English translation by Dr. J. Rowland, affixed (under the name of "Moffet") to Topsell's Historie of foure-footed beastes, new edition, (London, 1658); but in a very few cases (none of those here cited) they used the English glosses found in the Latin edition of 1634. We wish to thank Professor Gaige of the University of Michigan for the use of his copy of the latter, and other aid. The glosses (all found in Sl. MS. 4014) allow us to carry back a large number of entomological names.

did very frequently appear in form of a Fly; whence it was that some of the Heathens called their familiar spirit Musca or Fly: perchance alluding to that of Plautus:

*Hic pol musca est mi pater,
Sive profanum, sive publicum, nil clam illum haberi potest:
Quin adsit hic ibi illico, & rem omnem tenet.*<sup>25</sup>

Here Moufet gives what appears to be an inaccurate quotation (perhaps from memory) of Plautus, Mercator, II, iii, 26–27,<sup>26</sup> where, however, musca is usually interpreted “inquisitive, prying person.”<sup>27</sup> It illustrates the prevalence of the notion of the fly as familiar spirit in Moufet’s day that he understands in that sense the allusion in Plautus.

With this passage from Moufet before us, we can better understand his later statement in which, disregarding all the cats, dogs, hares, etc., of contemporary witch-familiars, he declares flatly:

Hebraei denique muscam significare Bahalzebub dæmoniorum corphæum dixerunt, qui eadem diligentia utitur, & maleficiendo nunquam desistit: Qua forte de causa exorcistae & malefici omnes familiarem suum genium muscam faciunt, pessimi animalis corpore ad res longe pessimas utentes.<sup>28</sup>

There is no doubt that a factor contributing largely to the idea that devils took the form of flies was the use of Beelzebub in the Vulgate to render both the New Testament phrase “prince of demons” and the Hebrew name in 2 Kings 1, 2 meaning “fly-lord.”<sup>29</sup> Interpretations of Beelzebub as “fly-lord” are very frequent in seventeenth-century theological literature, and must have influenced Moufet, who shows himself at this point out of touch with contemporary witchcraft.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>25</sup> Theater of Insects, Bk. I, c. xii, p. 951. In the original, Moufet introduces the verses: “forte item ad illum allusit Plautus cum diceret” (p. 79).

<sup>26</sup> “. . . muscast meus pater, nil potest clam illum haberi, Inéc sacrum nec iam profanum quicquam est, quin ibi illico adsit” (Leo, F., Plauti Comædiæ [Berlin, 1895], I, 450)

<sup>27</sup> Harper’s Latin Dictionary, s.v. musca.

<sup>28</sup> Insectorum . . . theatrum, Bk. I, c. x, p. 56 (Rowland, p. 932). The italics are mine.

<sup>29</sup> For this confusion, see OD, s.v. Beelzebub. Cf. also Spargo, and Summers, loc. cit. The commentaries on Exodus VIII, 24 make clear that it was commonly taken for granted that the fly sucked blood, hence making an easy connection with the familiar spirit, who was fed from the veins of the witch. Cf. Bishop Symon, Patrick, (of Ely), Commentary upon the Historical Books of the Old Testament, 5th ed. (London, 1738), I, 206; Fuller, T., Wounded Conscience, 1647 (London, 1841), p. 282. Professor Bredvold points out an allusion in Swift’s Battle of the Books: the spider “swollen up to the first magnitude by the destruction of infinite numbers of flies,” when he felt his cobweb fall, feared “that Beelzebub, with all his legions, was come to revenge the death of many thousands of his subjects” See Nichols, J., Works of Jonathan Swift (New York, 1812), III, 211–212.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. supra, p. 11. The persistence of these ideas makes it possible that fly, sb. Sa may be the origin of fly, adj., as Professor Fries points out to me (see LTLS, loc. cit.).

Thus, for the learned of the time, at least, Hebraic tradition joined with classical to give the transferred sense of fly meaning demon, also found in native folk-lore. The connections of English and Continental witchcraft have been much debated, but it is clear that in England the learned, again, were influenced by necromancy on the Continent. It is therefore significant for our discussion to note a statement of John Wier (1515-88), a German writer on demonology much quoted by Reginald Scot, already cited (the author of one of the earliest and most important of English treatises on this subject).<sup>31</sup> Wier called Beelzebub the "emperor" in "Hades," who "is said to have founded the Order of the Fly; the only order of knighthood which appears to have existed among the demons!"<sup>32</sup>

Bug, sb.<sup>1</sup> and Bug, sb.<sup>2</sup>, sense 1.<sup>33</sup>—The OD treats two substantives under bug. Bug, sb.<sup>1</sup>, is defined: "An object of terror, usually an imaginary one; a bug-bear, hobgoblin, bogy, a scarecrow." Of sb.<sup>2</sup> (the insect), it is said: "Etymology unknown. Usually supposed to be a transferred sense of prec.; but this is merely a conjecture, without actual evidence, and it has not been shown how a word meaning 'object of terror, bogle,' became a generic name for beetles, grubs, etc." In the citations given under bug (sb.<sup>2</sup>), the earliest example is of 1622 (applied to the bedbug). Under sharnbug (q.v.) it is carried back to 1608.

In the preceding discussion, the quotations have been made at length in order to show the widespread notion of devils taking insect form at the time when bug the word for insect arose. Actually, it is found first in turdbug (a synonym for sharnbug) in 1577. At this time superstition might have made the transition between the two senses of bug, on the analogy of the similar transferred meaning of fly. However, in the two cases opposite courses were probably run under the same influence: the sense of fly as demon arose because familiar spirits were said to take the form of flies; in the case of bug, a word meaning a supernatural being apparently became attached to the insect. The transfer appears in literature at a moment when not only popular witchcraft and learned necromancy were both rampant, but when bug (sb.<sup>1</sup>) was a word immensely popular. The fashion for the original use of the word ran a very short course, and was dying before the end of the excitement over witchcraft.<sup>34</sup> It is a plausible conjecture that "When bug became current as the name of an insect, this sense fell into disuse." It "now survives only in the compound Bugbear."<sup>35</sup> Probably this development was partly due to the fact that Nature had introduced a fortuitous element into the history of the word, as will be described in a later note, treating bug (sb.<sup>2</sup>).

<sup>31</sup> Kittredge, op cit, p. 339 ff.

<sup>32</sup> Chambers, R., The Book of Days (Edinburgh, 1864), II, 722 (s.v. Dec. 20). From a German source Professor Stith Thompson cites the following: "Flies on the Ark. Noah tries to keep them out. Devil says that either the flies go in or he does. Noah chooses the lesser of two evils. Later the devil slips in nevertheless." See Motif-Index of Folk-Literature, I, 191, Indiana University Studies, vol. XIX (1932). Such legends give the background to the following statement regarding Martin Luther (pointed out by Professor E. S. McCartney): "The flies which lighted upon his body, the rats which kept him awake at night, he believed to be devils;" see White, A. D., A History of the Warfare of Science with Theology in Christendom (New York, 1896), II, 114. A supernatural association with flies may be indicated by the superstition "If you kill a fly or a blackbeetle, twenty flies or blackbeetles will come to the funeral"; see N. and Q., 5th Ser., x (1878), 205. It is said that among Greenock deep-sea fishermen it is lucky to have a fly fall into your glass (ibid., 1st Ser., XII, 488). Among theologians the notion of the fly as the follower of Beelzebub continued to be known. Mr. G. W. Noyes points out that J. H. Noyes humorously announced a campaign against flies in the Oneida Community as a "raid into the Dominions of Baal Zebub" (The Circular, Mount Tom, Wallingford, Ct., New Ser., Vol. I. Sept. 19, 1864).

<sup>33</sup> The separation of bug into two words (found in OD) is here retained for convenience.

In the OD, with the vast span of time to be covered, a graphic picture could hardly be given of the immense popularity of bug (sb.<sup>1</sup>) for a little more than a century, in the EMnE period. Before the editors were about sixty slips for bug, fourteen for scare-bug, seven for fray-bug. There are now, altogether, in the files of the EMnED nearly a hundred citations for bug meaning a supernatural being, ranging from 1529 to 1684. The three earlier examples will be discussed later: the OD cited ME examples of 1388 and c. 1440; from the Century Dictionary may be added one of the late fifteenth century (a variant reading in the Nun's Priest's Tale, l. 116). Of bug, meaning insect, there have been found only about twenty examples<sup>36</sup> before 1715. For this sense the OD printed all available slips: four, 1622, 1642, 1683, 1691, respectively, under bug; two, 1608 and 1668, under sharn-bug; one, 1698, under May-bug. Among the slips now added are three from Moufet's Latin entomological work (printed in 1634),<sup>37</sup> which go back to 1590, and one of 1577. These additions change the picture of the origin of bug applied to an insect: instead of being first attached, as the citations before the editors of OD suggested, to the bedbug (in modern times the bug in England), it is attached first to the <sup>34</sup> Only four examples are in the files for the period 1650–1700. When, in 1695, Settle revised Beaumont and Fletcher's Philaster, he substituted for "bugs" "'boasts,' conceiving that 'bugs' was here equivalent to 'bugs-words'." See Dyce, A., ed. Beaumont and Fletcher, Works (1843), I, 203, 217.

<sup>35</sup> Furness, H. H., The Winter's Tale, Variorum edition (Philadelphia, 1900), p. 125.

<sup>36</sup> Of these, some were compounds, cited by OD under the other element. The immensity of the materials collected for the OD made it possible for only a small portion to be accessible to the editors at once.

<sup>37</sup> Insectorum . . . theatrum; vide, n. 24. Of these, OD printed one s.v. dungbeetle.

dung-beetle. This is a fact of great assistance for tracing the sense-history of the word, even though, of course, we have no surety that bug was not also applied very early to a variety of insects: it so happens that the history of the nomenclature of the dung-beetle gives us hints as to the causes which may have made the transfer between the two meanings of bug. These causes might not have been so obvious, if another insect had been in question.

Our first recorded use of bug applied to an insect occurs in Harrison's Description of England (1577)<sup>38</sup> as follows: "Yet haue we beetles, horse-flies, turdbugs (called in Latine Scarabei)." In the second edition (1587) "or dorres" is added after "turdbugs."

Thus, Harrison defines turd-bug as Scarabeus, and at the other end of our EMnE period, he is supported by the citation given by the OD from John Ray (1691): "Bugge; Any insect of the Scarabæi kind. It is, I suppose a word of general use." Moreover, Harrison's definition is strikingly borne out by the citations of bug next in order. These are among the English glosses given by Moufet, who, in his Latin text, printed in 1634 (but finished by 1590), used bug, applied to the insect, three times; his first two examples are as follows: "Scarabeus . . . Angli Beetle vel bugg, Angli Boreales Clock vocant" (p. 147). "Pilularem alij Stercorarium vocant, atque fimarium, quia tum ex fimo & stercore nascitur, tum in illis lubentissime versatur . . . dicitur . . . Anglice, Dungbettle, sharnbugge" (p. 153).<sup>39</sup>

In the English translation of Moufet (1658) "Scarabæus" is translated "dung-hill beetle" (p. 1009), thus attaching both of Moufet's references cited above to the same insect. Many examples from our files would suggest that such was a common usage of his time, and that the creature was an insect very conspicuous in contemporary life: thus, we find in the English translation of Moufet of 1658: "Beetles [scarabæi] first breed from dung . . . everyone knows this sufficiently, unlesse they live where no dung is" (p. 1010). Here is probably an interesting Tudor development of meaning for beetle: the early vocabularies of English (OE and ME) use this word to render several Latin words, but never scarabæus, which they gloss variously (generally by a compound of shard, making explicit the reference to the dung-beetle).<sup>40</sup> Beetle is first

<sup>38</sup> Bk. III, Furnivall, F. J., Shakspeare's England, Pt. II, p. 38, New Shakspeare Soc., Ser. VI (1878) The OD noted the use of turd in ancient and modern Teutonic languages (including OE) in combination with a form of weevil, to mean dung-beetle; cf. infra.

<sup>39</sup> Also in SL MS. 4014, fols. 142, 146 (Bk. I, c. xxi).

<sup>40</sup> See OD, s.v. beetle: blattis (a. 800, a. 1000), mordiculus (c. 1000), buboscus (c. 1440), carembes (c. 1450); Wright-Wülcker, Vocabularies (London, 1884), II (v. index, s.v. scarabæus, scarabeus, scarabæus, scarabo). On the sources of the Latin words used in such glosses, identified with scarabo in a vocabulary of the fifteenth century.<sup>41</sup> The Tudor development of meaning for beetle appears in an alteration made in Trevisa's translation of Bartholomeus Anglicus, by which the phrase, "as sherne buds ben gendryd of careynes of horses," as copied (1495) in the edition of Wynkyn de Worde from the late fourteenth-century original,<sup>42</sup> is altered in the revision of Batman (1582) to: "as Beetles be [made] of Oxe dounge."<sup>43</sup>

Literary references over a wide range support the special use of beetle for dung-beetle in the EMnE period, as, in slips which may be quoted as follows: "1598 Jonson Ev. Man in His Hum. (II, ii) Men of thy condition feed on sloth As doth the beetle on the dung she breeds in"; "1635 Walton Compl. Angl. 54 The Dor, or Beetle (which you find under a Cow-turd)." The OD notes, for the EMnE period (s.v. scarab), a special connection with dung for beetle (sb.<sup>2</sup>); the definition of the latter under sense 2 describes a meaning doubtless also due to the influence of its special association with the dung-beetle: "In popular use applied especially to those of black colour and comparatively large size; hence many coleopterous insects of different appearance . . . are usually excluded, and other insects included under the name; among the latter are the Black-beetle or Cockroach." In the modern consciousness probably the latter has taken the place, and, in some quarters probably the superstitions, of what John Ray called (1691) "Dorr: the common great round-bodied black beetle."<sup>44</sup>

Many other slips bring out other points, of interest for the present discussion, made evident by the fact that bug (sb.<sup>2</sup>) seems to have been very early attached to the dung-beetle, as, for example: "1525 transl. Boke Secret. Albert. Magn. H. VI, v. Scarabeus, that is a flye with a blacke shell, that breadeth in coweshardes and is blacke, called a bitel"; "1530 Palsgr. 198/1 Bettle, a blacke flye"; "1552 Huloet, Bytel, flye with a blacke huske" (also, ed. 1572). In other words, we come back to the fly, for in early times this word was applied to "any winged insect" (OD, sense 1). Thus, the traditions attached to the fly (musca) might also be see Mayhew, A. L., Promptorium Parvulorum, EETS, Extra Ser., 102, pp. xvii ff. The wide range of names for the dung-beetle in our period is significant: cf. OD. s.v. scarabæus, scarabee, scarab, clock, dor, dung-beetle, shard-borne beetle, sharn-bud, sharn-bug and (supra) turd-bug. An American name is "tumble-bug" (v. OD).

---

<sup>41</sup> Wright-Wulcker, I, 609.

<sup>42</sup> From the reproduction made for the EMnED, sig. A<sup>8</sup> (Bk. xii, c. 4). In Wynkyn's edition "buds" appears as "birds". The relation of both words to bug will be discussed in a later note.

<sup>43</sup> From the reproduction made for the EMnED, fol. 178<sup>v</sup>.

<sup>44</sup> South and East Country Words, ed. Skeat, W. W., English Dialect Soc. (1874), p. 81.

extended to the dung-beetle, which was often, in Tudor usage, the beetle.<sup>45</sup>

The citations made also show that the beetle was a black insect, and the connection with bug (sb.<sup>1</sup>) would be facilitated as a result. For, the reading bug, as a variant for devil, cited from a Chaucer MS. in the Century Dictionary, as already noted, gives the form: "black bugs," which also appears (inter alia) in the citation from Sir Thomas More (1529) which opens the immense series of citations of bug (sb.<sup>1</sup>) in the EMnE period (see OD, s. v. bug). The term "black bug" will be discussed in a later note, but should here be mentioned, since it makes easy a further very significant implication of the use of bug, as attached to dung-beetle. Black is of course the color of necromancy, hence of Beelzebub and his cohorts. We are brought back to the associations of evil, and of corruption, which the black dung-beetle bred in, and the fly fed on. Altogether, it is not surprising that Beelzebub, the Prince of the Powers of Darkness, was not only the "fly-lord," but also "the dung-lord." As John Selden wrote (1636): "Baal Zebub Dominus sive Deus Musca seu Muscae . . . Beelzebub autem sonat, Jupiter, Belus, sive Dominus Stercoreus, aut Stercoris."<sup>46</sup> Thus, to the dung-beetle would be attached all the sinister traditions of the ancient world, as well as the nobler associations of the scarab, with which Mouffet shows himself perfectly familiar.<sup>47</sup> Ancient fertility rites doubtless lay behind these superstitions.

Evidently, however, there was the same mixture of primitive Teutonic tradition with classical, connected with the dung-beetle, which we found for the fly. For, in the nomenclature for the dung-beetle in Scandinavian languages, there is the same trace of an association with supernatural beings which we find in the English names, turdbug, sharnbug, as the following citations will show:

<sup>45</sup> Two slips may be compared here: "1579 Gosson Sch. Abuse (Arb.) 19. The Scarabe flies ouer many a sweete flower, and lightes in a cowshard"; "1580 Lyly Euphues (Arb.) 240. . . . The fly that shunneth the Rose, to light in a cowshard" (both authors echo an idea ascribed by Bartholomeus, in the passage just cited, to Isidore).

<sup>46</sup> De Diis Syris, Opera, 1726, II, c. vi, pp. 346-347 (pointed out to me by Dr. Hull); cf. also what is evidently a veiled reference to Beelzebub in Aldous Huxley's The Cicadas and Other Poems (New York, 1931), p. 37: ". . . the shitten Lord of Flies . . . the Learned Lord of Dung" (pointed out to me by Mrs. Constance Robertson). The dung-beetle's habit of flying at nightfall might also appear sinister: cf. OD, s. v. dor (sb.<sup>1</sup>), 2a, and the following: "1687 Dryden Hind & Panther l. 321. Such souls as shards produce, such beetle things As only buzz to heaven with ev'ning wings" (a citation which shows our special sense of beetle as still active).

<sup>47</sup> Mrs. H. M. Snyder points out the interesting studies of the insect by Fabre, collected in the volume The Sacred Beetle, transl. de Mattos, A. T. (New York, 1918) What may be modern survivals of the special association of bug with dung will be mentioned in a later note. Cf. supra, n. 32, for a modern superstition connecting flies with blackbeetles.

Torbist (roßkäfer, scarabæus stercorarius), ält. dän. torbis, zu schw. dial. bise „obmann, älterer würdiger mann“ (schw. tomtebisse „hofkobold“), schw. bjässe „mächtiger mann“ dial. auch „großer und fetter ochse, bär, teufel“; siehe basse und vgl. skarnbasse „mistkäfer“. Eine andere zusammensetzung liegt vor in schw. dial. torbuse „mistkäfer“: schw. buse „(schreck) gespenst, mächtiger mann, großer und starker kerl“, norw. dial. buse und busse = bause „großer und starker kerl, mächtiger mann“ (siehe baus) . . . <sup>48</sup>

Thus, in tracing the sense history belonging to Danish torbist, it is found that the first element is turd and the second a word which in Swedish cognates means “housegoblin,” “devil,” “spectre.” This would support the suggestion that turdbug and sharnbug contain as their second element, bug, the English word which has exactly those meanings. These facts seem to indicate that the superstition involved in the history of the names for the dungbeetle in several Teutonic languages goes back to prehistoric common Teutonic folk-lore.

Moufet’s third and last example of bug applied to an “insect” must be discussed in a later note; it is of great interest for the argument presented above. But a possible analogy, from non-Germanic sources, to the transfer of meaning of bug should here be mentioned; it might seem to show that the sense-history of bug, like that of fly, was rooted in general European influences. The OD notes, s.v. cococut: “The Portuguese and Spanish authors of the 16th c. agree in identifying the word with Pg. and Sp. coco ‘grinning face, grin, grimace,’ also ‘bugbear, scarecrow . . .’ the name being said to refer to the face-like appearance . . . Historical evidence favours the European origin of the name, for there is nothing similar in any of the languages of India, where the Portuguese first found the fruit; and indeed Barbosa, Barros, and Garcia . . . expressly say ‘we call these fruits quoquos’, ‘our people have given it the name of coco’, ‘that which we call coco’.”<sup>49</sup>

The word coco here in question can be carried back at least to 1517, when Gil Vicente makes a child use coco in referring to the devil.<sup>50</sup> It is also spelled coca, cuca, cuco, and is applied to "the figure of a serpent borne at the festival of Corpus Christi," otherwise tarasca (defined as "indicating the triumph of Christ over the devil"). But coco, cuco, are also applied to insects, grubs, caterpillars. It is usual to derive coco, the bugbear, from Greek κῆκος; the insect, from κόκκος.<sup>51</sup> Discussion of these etymologies will be welcome, as well as early citations of coco.

<sup>48</sup> Falk und Torp, Norwegisch-Dänisches Etymologisches Wörterbuch (Heidelberg, 1911), II (Germanische Bibliothek, IV, I), 1272–73.

<sup>49</sup> For primitive myth and ritual, in Melanesia, Indonesia, and Burma, arising from the “general resemblance of the coco-nut to the human head,” see The Mythology of All Races, Archaeological Institute of America (Boston, 1928), IX, 56, XII, 344 f. Possibly coco was suggested as a name for the nut by the first explorers from native superstition, if not native nomenclature.

<sup>50</sup> Auto da Barca do Purgatorio, Obras (Coimbra, 1907), I, 138, cited by J. Cornu, in a note on coco, giving also the very interesting similar use (1554) by Lazarillo de Tormes (to be later discussed). This was pointed out to me by Professor Bredvold in the English translation of 1586, where it is rendered “the bugge” (Percy Reprints, Oxford, No. vii, 1924, p. 8). For a valuable note carrying Cornu’s discussion further, see Michaëlis, Krit-

Almost until modern times, throughout the civilized world, it was taken for granted that spirits could change their forms, and it was believed that devils were constantly appearing in ordinary life in the shape of the creatures of ordinary life. Since insects passed through metamorphoses more visibly than other beings, the superstitions as to their embodying devils, which have been traced here, were only to be expected. It is with reference to these general principles that the etymology of English bug and Spanish-Portuguese coco should be considered: the two words can doubtless be studied best when taken together. The dictionaries of Spanish and Portuguese, used in England during the EMnE period, when the influence of those languages was most potent, at least make clear that coco, to the Englishman of that time, carried almost exactly the variety of meaning which he attached to his own word bug. Thus, in Minsheu's revision (1599) of Percivale's Spanish-English Dictionary we read: "coco, m. a woorme that eateth vines, a weeuill. Also a voice to skar children with, as we say, the bugbeare. Also a fruit growing in the Indians"; only the reference to the weevil is given by Percivale (1591). In the Portuguese-English Dictionary by "A.J.", published at the very end of the EMnE period (1701), we read: "Côco de fazer mêdo a mentnos: A sprite, goblin or bugbear . . . Côcos fazer: To feign visions, to affright people."

Percivale's application of coco to an insect almost exactly coincides in date with Mouflet's use of bug in entomology; no earlier use of coco in this sense has been cited (tho, in the absence of an OD for Spanish and Portuguese, we cannot be sure that none exists). It was natural that, as the ischer Jahresbericht über die Fortschritte der Romanischen Philologie, ed. K. Vollmöller, iv, Erlangen, 1, pp. 346-347, which concludes: "Es erübrigt Côco coca=Fratz Popanz in Texten vor 1497 nachzuweisen." Dr. Michaëlis here uses all the resources of Portuguese literature and scholarship. For Cornu's note see Romania, xi, 119.

---

<sup>51</sup> See Dictionary of the Spanish and English Languages, Velasquez, new edition, Gray E., and Iribas J. L. (New York, 1900); Pagés A. de, etc, Gran Diccionario de la Lengua Castellana (Barcelona, 1905) (from the Dictionary of the Spanish Academy, with citations, the pioneer Covarruvias, Tesoro de la lengua Castellana o Espanola (Madrid, 1674-73) (pointed out to me by Professor Wagner), etc. In both senses there are interesting derivatives of coco.—In Spanish, as in English (v. OD), cacodemon occurs, which might, conceivably, have influenced, or even originated, coco. Can the latter have been the influence responsible for the medieval forms of crocodile (q.v. OD) with coco?

Spaniards and Portuguese were the great explorers of the sixteenth century, their vocabulary was extended to English terms of natural history.<sup>62</sup>

HOPE EMILY ALLEN

Early Modern English Dictionary

ADDITIONAL NOTE.—It should be noted that modern Welsh, at least, applies bwg (possible source of bug) in both the senses of bug (cf. Spurrell's Welsh Dict., 4th ed.), probably borne also by AS grima, though the application to insects occurs only in a single Scriptural gloss hitherto interpreted doubtfully (cf. Bosworth-Toller, and Suppl.). Holthausen, s. v. grimenā, cites in this connection "ahd. 'hawi-grimmila' Heuschrecke," a similar insect-name. Furthermore, there is an equivalent OHG gloss, on which compare Grimm: "Schon dem namen und noch mehr dem begrif nach beruhen sich die elbe mit den geisterhaften, aus wiederholter verwandlung ihrer gestalt hervorgehenden schmetterlingen eine ahd. glosse (Graff 1, 243) sagt: brucus, locusta quae nondum volavit, quam vulgo albam vocant. der alp soll oft als schmetterling erscheinen und in den hexenprocessen heissen elbe bald die kriechenden raupen, bald die puppen, bald die entfliegenden insecten. auch die benennung der guten holden und der bosen dinger theilen sie mit den geistern selbst." Deutsche Mythologie, 4th edit., ed. Meyer E. H., [1875], I, c. 17, p. 382.) Grimm says later. "gleich dem riesen (s. 460) hat der teufel das vermogen sich gross oder klein zu machen . . . werden donnerschroter und mistkafer teuflisch genommen, so verburgt das ihre heidnische auffassung (s. nachtr.," (II, 834, c. 33). He remarks of the elfish beings sprung from the commerce of witches with the Devil: "die rathselhafte kafer und larvengestalt eignet sich ganz fur solche wesen" (c. 34, p. 898). When Linnæus finally fixed entomological nomenclature he attached to one metamorphosis the word larva, which had meant spirit, then the mask which represented the spirit; already in the EMnE period larva (q v. OD.) had been used in entomology in the general sense of disguise. There is significant continuity between modern larva, Swedish mask (worm), and larva as used in old dictionaries to render AS. grima and EMnE bug.

<sup>62</sup> The continuity of European custom may appear in the case of tarasca, cited as an equivalent for coco, etc. It has been described as "Figura de sierpe monstruosa, con una boca muy grande" (Gran Diccionario, where it is also cited, from Costa Rica and Chile, in the sense of "coca grande"). Cf. OD, s. v. bogle, for the boggle-bo in England (1678): "an ugly wide-mouthed picture carried around in Maygames," and Minsheu, s. v. tarasca (to be discussed later); also, Körting, Lat.-rom. Worterbuch (Paderborn, 1891), s. v. coco: "im Frz. bedeutet coco auch Gurgel, Schlund, ohne dass sich sagen liesse, wie diese Bedtg. sich entwickelt hat." The influence on vocabulary of the dramatic representations of demonology will be discussed later. Since Galicia, where pilgrims from all over Europe went on pilgrimage to St. James, is the district where the "Teufelsdrache der Maiprocession" (Michaelis) is called coca, etc., a widely spread influence from this representation is likely. The name tarasca is however derived (Gran Diccionario) from Tarascon, where the custom should also be investigated (cf. Littré, s. v. tarasque).

LXIV

SPENSER'S IRISH RIVER STORIES

IN his Reference Guide to Edmund Spenser (1923) Carpenter remarked (p. 101) that the "Spenserian place-names in Ireland have been but slightly studied." The statement still holds. Although materials for the study of Irish place-names have been made accessible, editors and critics since 1923 have persisted in keeping alive fictions and interpretations which are no longer tenable.

If it has been the purpose of A. C. Judson's recent monograph<sup>1</sup> to demonstrate the poet's thorough-going familiarity with the hills and rivers around Kilcolman Castle, the author has in general succeeded admirably. But one must take exception to his readiness to ascribe too much to the fertility of the poet's imagination: "Nothing perhaps shows more clearly his growing reconciliation with life in 'the salvage island' than the little stories he invented about the rivers flowing on or near his estate."<sup>2</sup> Certainly Spenser did not invent these stories about the Bregoge and the Mulla, or the Funcheon and the Behanagh; to maintain as much would be to deny Spenser's own assertion concerning their antiquity:

Heare then (quoth he) the tenor of my tale,
In sort as I it to that shepheard told:
No leasing new, nor Grandams fable stale,
But auncient truth confirm'd with credence old.<sup>3</sup>

Yet if Spenser had not specifically disclaimed "invention" in these lines, the stories would still bear a striking enough resemblance to local folk-traditions as well as legends in the Irish place-name collections preserved in both prose and verse,<sup>4</sup> to suggest that Spenser was not weaving his tales out of whole cloth. Indeed, the two works which Professor Judson states that he has read<sup>5</sup> are too full of Spenser's familiarity with Irish <sup>1</sup> Spenser and Southern Ireland (Bloomington, Indiana, 1933).—This study is based on a pilgrimage to the Spenser country in June, 1929. I was there in the same month, for somewhat the same purpose, but did not, to my regret, happen to meet Professor Judson.

<sup>2</sup> Op. cit., p. 16.

<sup>3</sup> Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, ll. 100–103.

<sup>4</sup> W. Stokes, "The Bodleian Dinnshenchas," Folk-Lore, III (1892), 467–516; "The Edinburgh Dinnshenchas," Folk-Lore, IV (1893), 471–497; "The Rennes Dinnshenchas," Revue Celtique, xv–xvi (1894–95); Edward Gwynn, "The Metrical Dinnshenchas," I–IV (Royal Irish Academy, Dublin, 1903–24).

<sup>5</sup> P. W. Joyce, "Spenser's Irish Rivers," Fraser's Magazine, xcvi (1878), 315–333, reprinted in The Wonders of Ireland (1911), pp. 72–114; Pauline Henley, Spenser in Ireland (Cork, 1928) —For a brief statement of Spenser's "declared interest in Irish poetry," as expressed in his View of the Present State of Ireland, see H. S. V. Jones, A Spenser Handbook, pp. 385–386.

folklore and topographical legend, gleaned either from his bardic tutor or from the natives about Kilcolman, to admit of the suggestion that he was indebted for his tales to his own fancy.

The first of the stories in question is told in Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, lines 92-155, the second in the Cantos of Mutabilitie, Canto vi, stanzas xxxviii-lv. Dr. Joyce explains plausibly enough Spenser's derivation of the name Mulla (for the Awbeg River) from Kilnemullah (more correctly, Cell na mullach), the old name for Buttevant. (Spenser himself gave the clue in line 113.) But he is less successful in accounting for "my old father Mole" and the Molanna: "these names, Mole, Mulla, Armulla, are all fictitious . . ." and later, having got the name Mulla, he used it ever after for the river, and loved it and multiplied it in every direction. Its first reproduction is in "Old Father Mole," the fanciful name of the range of hills already noticed, father of the nymph Mulla, who, following up, or rather reversing, the fiction, took her name from her gray old sire, as did also her sister nymph Molanna.<sup>6</sup>

This interpretation is taken over by Renwick<sup>7</sup> in his commentary: "Mole is then a back-formation from Mulla, perhaps with the Latin moles behind it" (1)

The name Mole, as a matter of fact, Spenser obtained in exactly the way he obtained his Mulla—from the second element in a compound place-name. In the Fourth Book of The Faerie Queene<sup>8</sup> Spenser lists among the Irish rivers "the three renowned Brethren," the Shure (an tSiúr), the Newre (an Fheóir), and the Barow (an Berbha),

Which that great gyant Blomius begot
Of the faire nimph Rheusa wandring there;
One day, as she to shunne the season whot
Under Slewblome in shady grove was got,
This gyant found her. . . .<sup>9</sup>

Blomius and Slewblome are the forms which Spenser chooses for the Irish legendary Blod (Blad) or Bladma, and the mountain named for him, Slíab Bladma,<sup>10</sup> now commonly spelled Slievebloom. But it was

<sup>6</sup> Joyce, op. cit., pp. 92, 96, 108.

<sup>7</sup> W. L. Renwick, Daphnaida and Other Poems, by Edmund Spenser (London, 1929), p. 183.

<sup>8</sup> Canto xi, stanzas xl-xliv.

<sup>9</sup> Spenser's story of Blomius is in keeping with the giant's reputation as suggested by the Dindshenchas of Slíab Bladma (Gwynn, Metrical Dindshenchas, II, 54, l. 22: Slíab Bladma co mbantolcaib, "Mountain of Blad with [i.e., known for] woman-assaults").

<sup>10</sup> On the approximate pronunciation of Bladma as "Blawma," see Joyce, p. 88. There are indications that a nominative form Bladma existed beside the common Blad, but they are not conclusive. There are at least two legendary Blads to whom the name of the mountain is ascribed.

obviously from the Anglicized form (Slievesmole)<sup>11</sup> of Slíab Smóil, another old name for these mountains, that Spenser, making a less correct partition of the word than in the case of Mulla, drew his Mole. The long-perpetuated theory that Mole is a "back-formation from Mulla" must be discarded. The name of Molanna may have been formed by Spenser, as Joyce proposed, from a combination of Mole and Behanna or Behanagh (Irish Bethachánach, "full of birches"), but it should be pointed out that if Spenser made the fifty-five mile journey by road from Kilcolman (via Lismore)<sup>12</sup> to Youghal, where Raleigh's house still stands, he would doubtless have been familiar with the name of the sixth-century abbey Molana (Irish Molanfhaidh).<sup>13</sup> As for Armulla, the last of the related names which Joyce considered fictitious, it is difficult to say where, in the absence of Spenser's own statement, the poet found his prefix Ar-. Miss Henley's explanation, "The first syllable he takes from Armoy, the Anglicised form then used to designate the barony of Fermoy,"<sup>14</sup> is by no means convincing; Armoy (Irish Airther maige) as the source of the prefix has even less to recommend it than Arlo<sup>15</sup> (Irish Etharlach; Glenn etharlaige,) better known to-day as the Vale, or Glen, of Aherlow—the Arlo which gave Spenser his name for Galteemore,

Of Arlo-hill (Who knowes not Arlo-hill?)
That is the highest head (in all mens sights)
Of my old father Mole. . . .<sup>16</sup>

The original of Spenser's Armulla would be established beyond a peradventure if we could find a clear-cut manuscript reference to Ard mullaig,<sup>17</sup> which would have developed into Armulla just as Ard macha

<sup>11</sup> See Miss Henley, op. cit., p. 85.—Her hybrid form Slieve Smól is indefensible and does not indicate clearly how Spenser arrived at "Mole." Nor is the identity of the Fenian Smól so completely lost as Miss Henley imagines, but this is too long a story to recount here.

<sup>12</sup> Whether or not Spenser followed this road to Youghal to sail for London with Raleigh in October, 1589, it is not at all improbable that he visited Youghal a number of times before he wrote Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, independently of Raleigh. It would be hard to prove that Spenser did not pass Molana in the autumn of 1581 with Grey on his progress from Lismore to Youghal.

<sup>13</sup> The extensive ruins of Molana Abbey stand close to the bank of the Blackwater, about five miles north of Youghal. The sight of them may well have recalled to Spenser the more familiar ruins of Ballybeg Abbey at Buttevant.

<sup>14</sup> Op. cit., p. 86.

<sup>15</sup> Mentioned by Miss Henley on the very next page (87).

<sup>16</sup> Faerie Queene, Bk. VII, Canto VI, stanza xxxvi.

<sup>17</sup> Mullaig is the genitive of Mullach, which means "summit" or "mountain top"; as Mullach Eireann is the name for the summit of Slievebloom, Spenser's "old father Mole" (see Dinneen's Dictionary, 1927, s.v. mullach), it would not be too much to hope to find an occurrence of Ard mullaig, which would mean "Height, or mountain-side, of Mulla," and would satisfy Spenser's location of it "under the foote of Mole":

becomes modern Armagh. Until such a place-name turns up, attempts to establish Spenser's source for Armulla can be only guesswork.

If the actual river stories which Spenser learned and used have come down to us,<sup>18</sup> it should be an easy matter to equate the Gaelic goddesses which take part in them with their classical counterparts.<sup>19</sup> It is no doubt the appearance of the names of Diana and Cynthia, and Faunus and Phoebus and Jove, which has led Professor Judson to assume that Spenser invented his tales. Indeed, how could Spenser possibly have explained or justified to Gabriel Harvey or Edward Kirke, or even to Lodowick Bryskett, the presence in his poems of the name of the Dagda in place of Jove or the outlandish Lugh Lamhfhada instead of Phoebus Apollo? By Edmund Spenser, late of Merchant Taylors School and Pembroke Hall,<sup>20</sup> the classical nomenclature only could be employed, even if Spenser's prejudice against the Irish cannot be said to have extended to their mythology or their poetry.

It is not necessary to demonstrate that the Irish legends which Spenser drew upon were uncontaminated by classical mythology. The country about Kilcolman teemed with traditions which still survive. In Spenser's time the region from the Hill of Allen (Almu) in Kildare to Loch Léin in Killarney, of which Spenser's Ballyhoura Hills and Galtee Mountains comprise the very heart and center, had become the traditional home of the epic which had grown up about the hero Finn mac Cumhaill.<sup>21</sup> It is only natural, then, that Spenser should have been more familiar with the Fenian, or Ossianic, cycle than with the Ulster, or Red Branch, cycle. The earlier Fenian tales show none of the classical accretion which begins apparently in the twelfth century and is found so marked, for example, in the later Duanaire Finn.<sup>22</sup> Even if Spenser knew an Irish tale un-

Mole hight that mountain gray
That walls the North side of Armulla dale.

(Colin Clouts Come Home Againe, ll. 57, 104-105)

For Mullach Eireann ábu as the motto of the O'Dunnes, cf. John O'Daly, Laoithe Fian-nuigheachta, Transactions Ossianic Society, iv (1856), 292, note 3. Mullach is of exceptionally frequent occurrence among place-names in the vicinity of Kilcolman.

<sup>18</sup> It would not be surprising to learn of their existence somewhere in the many Irish manuscripts still unpublished.

<sup>19</sup> The parallelism between the Celtic pantheon and the classical gods has long been recognized, cf. H. d'Arbois de Jubainville, Cours de Littérature Celtique, II (1884); J. A. MacCulloch, The Religion of the Ancient Celts (Edinburgh, 1911); Alexander MacBain, Celtic Mythology and Religion (New York, 1917).

<sup>20</sup> Spenser left Cambridge in 1576; he was visited by Raleigh at Kilcolman in 1589.

<sup>21</sup> On attempts like MacNeill's (Duanaire, Introd.) to trace the origin of the Fenian cycle, see Kuno Meyer, Fianuigeacht, Todd Lecture Series xvi (1910), pp. xiv-xvi.

<sup>22</sup> Ed. Eoin MacNeill, Irish Texts Society VII (London, 1908). See especially "The Sword of Oscar."

touched by foreign influences, as seems quite likely, the parallelism between classic and Fenian myth would still suggest itself: the story of Bregoge and Mulla would remind him of Ovid's tale of Alpheus and Arethusa,<sup>23</sup> and the story of Fanchin and Molanna could hardly help recalling the legend of Actaeon and Diana.<sup>24</sup>

It is just this resemblance between the two mythologies which makes it easy to explain, in part, Spenser's fondness for the Irish landscape and the topographical legends connected with it—almost the only feature of his Kilcolman existence designed to be congenial to a poet of his training and temperament. It is a resemblance which has been given surprisingly little attention.<sup>25</sup> A recent study of Gaelic deer-divinities,<sup>26</sup> however, will serve at once to help us identify the Irish goddess whose legends Spenser may have learned in one form or another, and to explain his readiness to substitute, out of deference to his English readers, the classical huntress Diana.

Finn, from whose fiana the Fenian cycle is named, was originally more than a hero: he was a god, whose ancestors were likewise immortals and whose chief pursuit was hunting.<sup>27</sup> Finn's son by Sadb—who was transformed into a deer by a rival goddess—was the famous Ossian, whose very name (Oss-ín) means "little deer."<sup>28</sup> Among the best-known Fenian tales in Spenser's time were apparently the Chases of Slieve Cullinn, Slieve Fuad, and Slievenaman (in southern Tipperary, about twenty-five miles east of Galteemore);<sup>29</sup> in the Duanaire Finn, for example, fifteen of the lays have to do with a Fenian chase. It is this stress upon hunting which could only lead Spenser to associate Finn and his compan-

<sup>23</sup> Ovid, Metam., v, 585-641.

<sup>24</sup> Ovid, Metam., III, 138-252.

<sup>25</sup> MacNeill (Duanaire, pp. xlv-xlvi) suggests some parallels, and then leaves "to experts the further investigation of the Fenian epic as related to mythology."

<sup>26</sup> J. G. McKay, "The Deer-Cult and the Deer-Goddess Cult of the Ancient Caledonians," Folk-Lore, XLIII (1932), 144-174. This article is quite as true for the mythology of Ireland as it is for that of Scotland. For the analogy with Diana, see especially p. 160. On the connection with the Fenian cycle see p. 151, as well as Miss Hull's questionable comment on that connection in Folk-Lore, XXXVIII (1927), 230. On the bones of gigantic deer found in Ireland, perhaps connected with the giant deer-goddess cult, see Wood-Martin, Elder Faiths of Ireland, I, 12-13, 62 ff.

<sup>27</sup> Duanaire, p. xlv.

<sup>28</sup> Meyer, Fianaigeacht, p. xviii, note 3.—The text of another version of Ossian's birth is printed by Meyer, op. cit., p. xxvi, from which I translate as follows:

... Blái Derg from the swift Banba, mother of Ossian the hardy:
Blái came in the form of a deer to the meeting of the brigands,
So that Ossian was born thereby, to Blái Derg in the form of a deer.

The unidentified Banba may refer to the Bannow, now the river Corrock, in Wexford.

<sup>29</sup> Published along with four other "Finnian Hunts," including the "Chase of Glenn-an-Smóil," by O'Daly, Trans. Ossianic Soc., VI (1858). Joyce has a translation of the first two in his Old Celtic Romances. On the Glenn-an-Smóil poem, see note 48 below.

ions with Phoebus and Diana, those divinities who assumed a prominent rôle in the curriculum of Richard Mulcaster, as Spenser's poetry amply shows. No wonder both classical divinities appear in Spenser's versions of the Irish river stories!

In the tale of the Fanchin and Molanna<sup>20</sup> the distinguishing traits of Spenser's "Diana" are her bathing in the Molanna and her resentment at the eavesdropping of the "foolish Faune," who cannot contain himself at the spring where, doffing her array,

She bath'd her lovely limbes, for Jove a likely pray . . .
The Goddess, all abashed with that noise,
In haste forth started from the guilty brooke;

the decision to punish the offender as Actaeon had been punished:

But most agreed, and did this sentence give,
Him in Deares skin to clad; and in that plight
To hunt him with their hounds, him selfe save how hee might;

and the further punishment of the "guilty" Molanna, whom they "whelm'd with stones."<sup>21</sup> The Irish goddess of ancient times who in each detail corresponds to Spenser's "Diana" is Aine,<sup>22</sup> a virgin<sup>23</sup> fertility and water goddess who until very recent times has been worshipped on the commanding height of Cnoc Aine, now Knockainey, barely ten miles north of the source of Spenser's own Bregoge.<sup>24</sup> In the North of Ireland and in Scotland Aine is better known as the Cailleach Bheara (Vera).<sup>25</sup> Spenser's treatment of the bathing scene recalls the resentment of Aine when, upon Ailill Aulom's attempt to violate her, she bit off his ear "so that she left neither flesh nor skin upon it."<sup>26</sup> Like the Northern Cailleach

<sup>20</sup> The quotations are from Mutabilite, Canto vi, stanzas xlv, xlvii, and l.

<sup>21</sup> Spenser perhaps saved Faunus from the classical fate of Actaeon in order to emphasize the more authentic detail from his Irish source of the stony chastening of Molanna.

<sup>22</sup> I propose this identification knowing that Grainne, daughter of Cormac and Isolt-like wife of Finn, has also been identified with Diana: see Folk-Lore, xvii, 441 ff.

<sup>23</sup> Westropp, Proceedings Royal Irish Acad., xxxiv, Sec. C, p. 50: "Aine was unmarried." See also E. Hull, Folk-Lore, xxxviii, 244: "Aine certainly had lunar traits in her legend."

<sup>24</sup> A thorough-going study of the archaeology and traditions of Knockainey has been made by Westropp, Proc. R. I. A., xxxiii-xxxiv, Sec. C. If the Midsummer rites still survived in the early years of the twentieth century, they must have been even more in evidence in Spenser's time.

<sup>25</sup> This is the "best-known legend" (Westropp, xxxiv, 52) concerning Ailill Aulom. See E. Hull, "Legends and Traditions of the Cailleach Bheara or Old Woman of Beare," Folk-Lore, xxxviii (1927), 225-254. On the Cailleach's connection with the Fenian cycle, see p. 230; also McKay, Folk-Lore, xliii (1932), 151, and note 26 above.

<sup>26</sup> Revue Celtique, xiii, 436; Silva Gadelica, ii, 438; Coir Anmann (Irische Texte, iii, 304-305), §41.

Aine is gigantic in stature; the Lebar Gabála calls her Aine ard, "tall Aine."<sup>37</sup> A late survival of the Ailill Aulom legend is to be seen in the popular belief concerning the Earl of Desmond who violated Aine (here a water goddess, who still "dwells on Cnoc Aine") after she had been bathing in the river Camoge, at the foot of Cnoc Aine.<sup>38</sup> Finally, that Spenser's account of the "whelming" of the Molanna with stones is appropriate to the goddess Aine is made clear by her status as a "stone-carrying woman."<sup>39</sup> Both Aine and the Cailleach Bheara are credited with the laying of the stone causeway over the Camoge at Knockainy.<sup>40</sup> The most remarkable engineering feat attributed to the Cailleach is the dropping of an apronful of stones at Slieve-na-Cailliahe (the Old Woman's Mountain), Loughcrew, County Meath.<sup>41</sup>

The Earl of Desmond story just referred to seems to be a survival not only of the Ailill Aulom tradition, but also of the legend of Aengus "Mac ind Oc" and Caer Ibormeith,<sup>42</sup> the scene of which is laid at Loch Béal Dracon at the "harp of Clíu" (oc cruitt Clíach)—in other words, at Spenser's very doorstep.<sup>43</sup> This legend offers an admirable instance of the universal Swan-maiden motif discussed by Hartland.<sup>44</sup> Clíu, the ancient name for the Spenser country, is explained in the Dindshenchas of

<sup>37</sup> Ed. R. A. S. Macalister and J. MacNeill (Dublin, 1916), p. 38. Cf. McKay, Folk-Lore, XLIII, 149: "one was so tall that, when wading across the Sound of Mull, the water reached only to her knee" See further Wood-Martin, Elder Fairs of Ireland, I, 360: "she was so tall that she could easily wade all the rivers and lakes of Ireland. . . . Some of the early Christian female saints seem also to have been fond of wading" On this adoption of a pagan legend see Hull, p. 226. "the pagan goddess reappears in later days as a Christian nun"

<sup>38</sup> The modern story (Revue Celtique, IV, 186-192) indicates the persistence of the old tradition and offers further parallels with Diana On Aine as a water goddess, see MacCulloch, op. cit., p. 70.

<sup>39</sup> Mrs. M. M. Banks, "Some Traditions of Stone-Carrying Women," Jubilee Congress of the Folk-Lore Society (1928), pp. 40-47.

<sup>40</sup> Banks, op. cit., p. 43, Hull, op. cit., 236, 247.

<sup>41</sup> See E. A. Conwell, Proc. R. I. A., LX (1867), 42, 356; E. A. Conwell, Discovery of the Tomb of Ollamh Fodla (Dublin, 1873), pp. 47-48.—I visited Slieve-na-Cailliahe with Dr. Mahr of the National Museum of Ireland and Dr. Hencken of Harvard University, in August, 1928; it was quite as attractive as Rhys pictured it after his visit in 1894 (Celtic Folklore, I, 393). The view is as commanding as that from Knockainey, but thanks to the neighboring lakes, much more majestic.

<sup>42</sup> Revue Celtique, III, 342-355; Thunneysen, Irische Helden- und Königsage, p. 302.

<sup>43</sup> Westropp (Proc. R. I. A., XXXIV, 156) rightly locates the district of Clíu "in southeast Limerick and along the Galtees to the Suir. . . . The mighty mountains bore his name, Crotta Clíach, which I venture to suggest are the two harp-like cooms, with stings and frames of stream gullies, seen on the flank above Aherlow." Dinneen (Keating's History of Ireland, Irish Texts Society ed., IV, 218) also makes Clíu roughly co-extensive with the Spenser country.

<sup>44</sup> E. S. Hartland, The Science of Fairy Tales (London, 1891), pp. 255-349.

Crotta Clíach (the Harps of Clíu),<sup>45</sup> which further accounts for the name of Loch Bél Draccon. Clíu, the supernatural harper of Smirdub son of Smól (the same Smól from whom Spenser derived his "old father Mole"), is in love with Báine, but their love is thwarted by Báine's father Bodb Derg, just as the love of Spenser's Bregoge and Mulla is thwarted by the lady's father Mole; finally, after Bodb keeps his daughter indoors for a year, she leaps out, in her grief, in the form of a dragon, and Clíu dies from fear at the sight of her. Thus is explained the name of the unidentified lake, Loch Bél Draccon.<sup>46</sup> Westropp cites another version:<sup>47</sup> "The Leabar Breac tells a nearly identical story . . . Clíu seeks Bodb's daughter at Síd Femen, till the water bursts up under his feet, and forms Loch Béal Séad, on the mountain. On this Coerabarboeth, swan-daughter of Ethal, and her fifty companions float; it is also 'Loc Crotta Clíach' and 'Loc Bél Dragan.' It is evidently some lake, still unidentified, on the Galtees. Rarely in Western Europe do we tread so closely in 'the footsteps of the dead old gods' as around Cenn Febrat and the Galtees."

Spenser's tale of the Bregoge and the Mulla, who elude "old father Mole,"<sup>48</sup> appears to offer another instance of the folk-tale motif of the Escaping Couple and the Pursuing Father, which occurs in Irish as

<sup>45</sup> Revue Celtique, xv, 440-441, Metr. Dinds., iii, 224-225, O'Grady, Silva Gadelica, ii, 477, 523.

<sup>46</sup> The striking resemblances between the legends of Clíu and the Earl of Desmond are not, I think, accidental. For Loch Gur, where the Earl dwells with Aine (who may well, like Báine, have taken the form of a serpent or dragon), is still inhabited by its serpent. Are not the two names, in fact, variants of the same name? Báine (Uáine, Bu-áine) might well be the Irish name for the "dead Aine." See Revue Celtique, iv, 185, 186, 192.—Strangely enough, Bodb Derg, who opposes Clíu's suit of his own daughter, helps Aengus to win Caerib. All three are síd legends: the síd (shee) of Aengus was the famous Brug na Bóinne or Brug meicc ind Oc (at Newgrange); the síd of Ailill was at Brug rig (Bruce, near Kilmolman); the síd of Bodb was named for him Síd Boidb, although the legend of Crotta Clíach is associated with Síd Femen, the mound on the Suir. See Hogan, Onomasticon Goedelicum. According to the Acallam na Scédrach 3350 (Irische Texte, iv, 1 Hefl), Bodb, like Aengus, was a son of the Dagda, the father of the Gaelic gods.

<sup>47</sup> Proc. R. I. A., xxxiv, Sec. C, p. 157. See also Joyce, Spenser's Irish Rivers, p. 106, for a summary of the story.

<sup>48</sup> If, as seems likely, Spenser knew the story of the "Chase of Glenn-an-Smóil" (cf. note 29 above), or Glennasmole, he would naturally have associated it with his "old father Mole." See Hogan, Onomasticon Goedelicum, p. 404; Trans. Oss. Soc., vi, p. 74, note, 120. It is possible that there were two distinct places named Glenn-an-Smóil. For indications of the popularity of the tale, see Seán O'Faoláin, "The Spurious Fenian Tale," Folk-Lore, xli (1930), 157, and Darrell Figgis's modernization, The Return of the Hero (publ. 1923), passim.—The "Chase of Glenn-an-Smóil," as it happens, is based largely on two themes: the chase of a woman (apparently a giantess) transformed into a deer, and the loathly hag or Wife of Bath motif, which O'Faoláin strangely fails to remark. See G. H. Maynardier, The Wife of Bath's Tale, pp. 34-37.

elsewhere, and is regularly associated with water.<sup>49</sup> Mole's punishment of "false Bregoge," by rolling "in great auenge" downe from his hill

Huge mightie stones, the which encomber might His passage, and his water-courses spill is hardly to be laid to a "Stone-carrying Woman," but parallels can be drawn again from the popular traditions associated with the neighborhood of Kilcolman. What were once lovely lakes and streams are now dry and rocky beds, like those of the Bregoge and the Camoge. Explanations of these vanished lakes and stony expanses<sup>50</sup> are numerous in the topographical lore of this region. From the extant stories concerning legend-haunted Belach Febrat (Spenser's Ballyhoura hills) and the Sléibe na Caillte (the Galtee Mountains), many analogues to Spenser's stories could be cited, but a few more from the Dindshenchas should suffice to show the prevalence of such topographical myths in sixteenth-century Ireland.

1. Tipra Sen-Garmna (Metr. Dinds., III, 242-253; Rev. Celt., xv, 446-448), connected with the Fenian cycle. Tale of a river which spreads (semais, line 113) into several streams, only one stream escaping, and vanishes into the ground (lines 103, 125); compare Spenser's Bregoge:

First into many parts his streame he shar'd,
That whilst the one was watcht, the other might Passe vnespide to meete her by the way;
And then besides, those little streames so broken
He vnderground so closely did conuay . . .

2. Sinann (Metr. Dinds., III, 286-297; Rev. Celt., xv, 456-457). The sacred Well of Condla (Tipra Chondlai) divides into seven streams; the water goddess Sinann, profaning it, is turned at the Lind Mná Feile (Pool of the Modest Woman; cf. Inber Féile, under the next entry) into the river Sinann (Shannon).<sup>51</sup>

<sup>49</sup> D. MacInnes and A. Nutt, Folk and Hero Tales from Argyllshire, p. 437.

<sup>50</sup> Ancient lake sites and streams shrunk in modern times are pointed out by Westropp, Proc. R. I. A., xxxiv, 61, note 3; 173. According to the Metrical Dindshenchas (Gwynn, iv, 258; also Lismore Lives, p. 244), Loch Cenn ("the Lake of Heads"), formerly a beautiful sheet of water known as Loch Silenn, got its name from the nine hundred heads lopped off in battle by Cairpre Crom and thrown into the lake, which thereupon became "all blood beneath and above" and has been dry ever since ("Loch Cenn! woe to him who rows along its shore!"). Loch Cenn has been located in Mag Femín, the home of Finn's wife Sadb, or as a "broad expansion of the Camoge river"; in either case, it is only a short distance from Kilcolman Castle—Since this paper was written, O'Rahilly (Hermathena, XLVIII, 208 ff.) has identified Loch Cenn in Mag Femín with the modern townland of Lough Kent, about fifteen miles east of Galteemore, Spenser's "Arlo-hill."

<sup>51</sup> Cf. Wood-Martin, op. cit., II, 30.

3. Loch Gile (Metr. Dinds., iv, 12; Rev. Celt., xvi, 145-147). Gile, like Fíal (Macalister-McNeill, Lebar Gabála, p. 260; Keating II, 92; Trans. Oss. Soc. v, 238-239), dies of shame when seen bathing in a pool. (Melusina motif?) Gile is to-day Loch Gill, Fíal becomes Inber Feile (the river Feale), which has its source in Tipra Sen-Garmna (1, above).

4. Snám Dá Én (Metr. Dinds., iv, 350-367). Deception of father (Ferdoman) by his daughter (Celg) and her lover (Conan the Dagda's son). Like Mole, Ferdoman discovers the ruse and slays Conan.

5. Loch Meilge (not printed in any Dindshenchas, but see Lebar Gabála, MS. 23. K. 32, R. I. A., p. 121). That Spenser knew the story of Loch Meilge is shown by his line "Sad Trowis that once his people overran", see Joyce, "Irish Rivers," p. 78.<sup>52</sup> In the Dindshenchas of Faffand (Metr. Dinds., II, 66; Rev. Celt., xv, 306), Aige co serc-ballaib ("of the love-spots," a Fenian touch<sup>53</sup>) undergoes two transformations: first into a deer,<sup>54</sup> whereupon she is slain by the hounds of the Fíanna of Meilge of Imlech (Emly, a few miles from Knockainey) and changed into a river (now unidentified, though called by the poet "deathless until the Judgment-Day").

6. Aided Duinn (Duanaire Finn, pp. 130-132). A late poem, but without question current in Spenser's time. Donn, turned into a deer by the jealous queen of Aed, is slain after a long chase by Finn and his Fíanna.

Even if Spenser's sources for his river stories are unwritten or no longer extant, there can be little doubt that he drew heavily on the topographical lore he picked up in Ireland. This is the only view which is consistent with his recognized knowledge of Irish legend.<sup>55</sup>

ROLAND M. SMITH

Wesleyan University

<sup>52</sup> The same lake-formation story is told of Loch Laiglinni (Macalister-MacNeill, Lebar Gabála, p. 56; Metr. Dinds., iv, 256, Rev. Celt., xvi, 164) and Loch Garman (Metr. Dinds., III, 174, Rev. Celt., xv, 428-431). The latter is another Finn story, with an interesting legend of the lake (Loch Garman, now Wexford Harbor) sprung after eight hundred years from the womb of his mother, the river Slane (Slaney), whom he overwhelms and drowns.

<sup>53</sup> The best-known "love-spots" are those of Diarmaid; see Trans. Oss. Soc., III, 50, note 2. See also Folk-Lore, xli, 155 ff.

<sup>54</sup> D. MacInnes and A. Nutt, Folk and Hero Tales from Argyllshire, p. 406.

<sup>55</sup> Cf. Miss Henley, op. cit., p. 112.

THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE ANONYMOUS LIFE OF MILTON

THE conviction of Miss Helen Darbishire, to which she has given expression in the Appendix to The Manuscript of Paradise Lost, Book I, and later in Early Lives of Milton (xvi-xxvii), that the anonymous Life of Milton<sup>1</sup> was the work of John Phillips, the poet's nephew, is so strong that, after having stated it and given her reasons therefore, she uses the suggested authorship as a certainty in the title she gives to the Life and elsewhere throughout the Early Lives of Milton. Her argument is two-fold:

1. In a manuscript of John Phillips's poem, "A Satyr against Hypocrites," is "a page and a half of Dedication signed by John Phillips.<sup>2</sup> This dedication "written in a formal Italian hand," she believes to be his. She also believes that certain marginal notes and textual corrections are in his hand. Comparing these specimens of what she believes to be John Phillips's handwriting with the handwriting of the anonymous Life, she "was struck at once by the similarity of the handwriting"<sup>3</sup> in the two manuscripts. Her conclusion is that the manuscript of the anonymous Life was written by the same hand which wrote the Dedication and the notes and corrections of "A Satyr against Hypocrites," and that the hand was that of John Phillips. Later she compared the handwriting of these two documents with that of the sonnets to Cyriack Skinner in the Cambridge manuscript, and concluded that Phillips penned these also.

2. Another fact came to light when she compared the documents. The Dedication, etc., to "A Satyr" has "the word thir spelt there eight times. The text of the poem is copied out in another hand and in it their is always spelt in the ordinary way."<sup>4</sup> In the marginal notes and corrections which she thinks are in Phillips's hand "the spelling thir occurs again."<sup>4</sup> This form is common in much of Milton's prose and in his longer poems, but she adds, "The Oxford Dictionary does not record the form. I looked for it in vain in manuscripts and books of the seventeenth century."<sup>4</sup> Moreover, the second of the sonnets to Cyriack Skinner has the spelling thir once and their, with the e elided, once.

Turning again to the anonymous Life, Miss Darbishire "was struck at once . . . by the pervasive presence of thir for their."<sup>5</sup> The presence of

<sup>1</sup> Bodl. MS. Wood D. 4.

<sup>2</sup> Bodl. MS. Rawl. Poet. 30.

<sup>3</sup> Early Lives of Milton (London: Constable & Co., 1932), xviii.

<sup>4</sup> The MS. of Paradise Lost, Book I, 73.

<sup>5</sup> The anonymous Life uses the form thir eleven times and their five times.

this peculiar spelling in the Dedication, etc., of "A Satyr" was to her "the clinching proof" that John Phillips wrote these parts of the manuscript. It also confirmed her in her belief that he was the amanuensis who copied the Cyriack Skinner sonnets. And the use of this form in the anonymous Life gave her the certainty that she was right in believing that John Phillips was the penman of all three. "My conclusion is," she writes, in summing up the discussion, "that John Phillips learnt to spell thir in his uncle's peculiar fashion, that he acted as his amanuensis at least once in later years, and that he wrote the anonymous Life."<sup>6</sup>

Miss Darbishire's conjecture is most interesting, but her argument does not carry conviction. She cannot, of course, prove that John Phillips wrote the parts of the manuscript of "A Satyr" which she ascribes to him. There is no other manuscript in his hand for comparison.<sup>7</sup> Her reason, therefore, for attributing the marginal and textual additions to him has no scientific basis. She says:

in one place the scribe has left a blank in the text, and into it this third hand has inserted the bars of music and accompanying words which satirize the Presbyterian manner of singing. Now Phillips alone would know exactly how he wished this to stand: naturally he would tell the scribe to leave a space and would write in the staves and words himself.

This may have been a natural thing for Phillips to do, but there is no evidence that he did it.

There is an interesting likeness in the handwriting of the three documents—vastly more, as she acknowledges, between the Cyriack Skinner sonnets and the anonymous Life than between the "Satyr" and the other two. But even Miss Darbishire is not convinced absolutely that the hands are identical. She says:

The general effect of the two hands (in the Satyr) is different. . . . In judging the handwritings we must remember that John Phillips was a young man of twenty-three when in 1654 he wrote the Satyr against Hypocrites, and that the anonymous Life was written, according to Malone, in 1686 or 1687. A man's hand may change much in thirty years.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>6</sup> Miss Darbishire seems for the most part to have won over her reviewers to an acceptance of her conclusions. Miss Rose Macaulay, however, in a signed review in the Spectator (London), CXLIX, 835, carefully guards her acquiescence: the proof is "pretty convincing"; "it looks very much as if the same hand had written" the three documents cited. B. A. Wright in MLR, XXVIII, 518-523, is much more critical and only accepts Miss Darbishire's judgment "for the present." The present writer's conclusions were arrived at before reading any of the reviews.

<sup>7</sup> Miss Darbishire says, there is only one in the Bodleian (E. L. of M., xvi). She must have searched in vain elsewhere.

<sup>8</sup> E. L. of M., XVIII, XIX. B. A. Wright above (op. cit., note 6) expresses an unsettling doubt as to the accuracy of Miss Darbishire's identification of the handwriting. "She ad-

She herself needed the "clinching proof" of the use of the Miltonic thir. She must have felt the uncertainty of the ifs in her reasoning. If the handwriting of the Dedication, etc., is the work of the same person that wrote the anonymous Life, and if John Phillips wrote the first, then her conclusion is valid. But she has not succeeded in establishing with certainty the fact in either case. No one can rightly be considered hypercritical who feels that on such slight evidence she was not justified in asserting that she had "discovered" that the author of the anonymous Life was "John Phillips, Milton's younger and scapegrace nephew."<sup>9</sup>

Miss Darbishire's study of the use of thir and their in Milton's prose and poetry is most thorough. Before I had read the Appendix to The Manuscript of Paradise Lost, Book I, I had made a similar study which tallies well with hers.<sup>10</sup> As neither she nor Professor Grierson have published their figures with any completeness, it may be of interest for me to include mine in an appendix. (See below.) All these studies show that while Milton used the spelling thir in the Cambridge Manuscript, it was not then his customary spelling. He used it only nine times and the form thire seventy-nine times. Professor Grierson says: "it was not until after 1642 that Milton changed it to thir, perhaps only when he began to print this form."<sup>11</sup> Miss Darbishire has discovered, as I did, one use in "Animadversions" (1641) and I have found also an instance in the pamphlet "On Reformation," printed earlier in the same year.<sup>12</sup> Professor Grierson further states that "up to 1645 he (Milton) allowed the printer to print 'their' apparently without demur."<sup>13</sup> The 1645 edition of the poems contains only one use of thir—in "The Passion"—and until the publication of the Martin Bucer pamphlet (1644) there were only the two above-mentioned instances of the printing of thir in the prose. But in this pamphlet their occurs twenty-five times and thir forty-five. The Areopagitica, published in the same year, has three uses of thir and ninety-eight of mits "that the handwriting of the sonnets is much more evidently like that of the anonymous Life than either is like the handwriting of the Dedication to the Satyr against Hypocrites!" So far as the two latter manuscripts are concerned this can be explained by a natural change in handwriting during the thirty years between the Satyr (1654) and the Life (1686), but the sonnets were composed about 1655 and the hand here might therefore be expected to resemble that of the Satyr rather than that of the Life. Miss Darbishire seeks to get over this difficulty by arguing in a circle—if her identification of all three hands is correct, then the sonnets were copied out 'clearly, it seems, for the edition of poems to be published in 1673.' But she omits to note that the second of them, with which she is particularly concerned, was withheld by Milton from publication in 1673. . . One regrets that she has not set out the facts quite clearly and fairly."<sup>9</sup> E. L. of M., xvi.

---

<sup>10</sup> Making use of the Columbia University edition of Milton's works in the original spelling.

<sup>11</sup> Grierson, The Poems of John Milton, Vol. II, LVI.

<sup>12</sup> See page 76, l. 24 of the Columbia University edition.

<sup>13</sup> Grierson, loc. cit.

their, but in Tetracordon, (1645), there are twenty-nine uses of thir, though their is still much more abundantly used, one hundred and twenty-three times. With Colasterion the balance goes strongly over to the other side, and it continues there with the exception of the Articles of Peace, till the last pamphlets, beginning with Of True Religion, when Milton apparently gave up the struggle with his printers. The 1673 edition of the Poems has their without exception. So from 1645 on until a short time before Milton's death thir is the prevailing form, with their also used, by no means, as Miss Darbishire asserts, always for emphasis.

Phillips became Milton's pupil shortly after the latter's return from the Continent in 1638. It is entirely possible that during the time he lived in Milton's home and studied under his direction he caught the trick of using the spelling thir. But that he is the only one who could have adopted this mannerism is certainly not proven.<sup>14</sup> Some amanuensis, or some other friend as intimately acquainted with Milton and his work, could easily have been attracted by Milton's spelling of the word and have adopted it. Whoever wrote the anonymous Life did not follow Milton's distinction between the use of the two forms. As has been said above (Note 5), the word occurs there sixteen times, eleven times as thir and five times as their. In not a single instance is the use of their necessarily emphatic. The author is evidently fonder of the form thir, but uses the two interchangeably.<sup>15</sup>

Neither the similarity of the handwritings nor the use of thir nor the two together is sufficient ground for the absolute conviction that John Phillips wrote the anonymous Life. Moreover, there are positive reasons against the suggested authorship, not absolute proof, because human nature is capable of strange inconsistencies, but stronger reasons against Miss Darbishire's contention than any she offers in its support. Though there exists no other manuscript of a work by John Phillips, there are a number of printed works from his pen. A study of these has revealed even to Miss Darbishire that Phillips had an "incurably gross mind."<sup>16</sup> She seeks to anticipate the objection, from this angle, to her conjecture by saying that "John Phillips' Life is yet to be written," that he "has been much reviled" by his biographers.<sup>17</sup> But that a mind "incurably gross"

<sup>14</sup> B. A. Wright pertinently asks. "Was this spelling adopted by only one of Milton's associates?"

<sup>15</sup> Neither does the writer of the anonymous Life use the device of doubling vowels for emphasis. He spells the pronoun he, for example, nine times as he, one hundred and five times as hee. He is fond of doubling both vowels and consonants—shee, bee, beeing, habitt, modell, farr, fit, hatt, sonn.

<sup>16</sup> E. L. of M, xxiii. Godwin (Lives of E. & J. Phillips, p. 112) is of the same opinion: John Phillips has "an unconquerable propensity to coarseness."

<sup>17</sup> Ibid., xxi.

could have written the anonymous Life, which has nothing in it to which Milton himself in his best moments could not fully subscribe, that has in it not a "gross" word or thought, is to me incredible.<sup>18</sup>

If John Phillips wrote the anonymous Life, he was certainly posing.<sup>19</sup> If he was posing, the Life is an insincere piece of work. Miss Darbishire's opinion is that if John Phillips wrote the work, its importance is greatly enhanced. But the contrary is true. He being what he was and the Life being what it is, every argument in favor of John Phillips's authorship is an argument against the validity of the Life and a lowering of its importance as a biographical source.

Much of Miss Darbishire's argument is based upon what in her judgment are probabilities. One may therefore be permitted to argue in similar fashion that, if John Phillips wrote a life of his uncle some time between 1674 and 1691, and if, near the close of that period, or just after it, not later than 1694,<sup>20</sup> his brother Edward wrote another life of the same person, Edward would naturally be acquainted with what his brother had written and would reveal in his own work something of that acquaintance. If Edward's biography was the earlier, though not published until 1694, John would probably have known something about it, unless there were complete estrangement between the brothers, and would have betrayed this knowledge in his own story. There is, however, not the slightest evidence that either Edward Phillips or the author of the anonymous Life knew of the other's work.

Miss Darbishire conjectures that Aubrey secured the Life from Phillips and "sent it in triumph to Wood . . . then Wood's statement may be strictly true that Aubrey got from Milton and from his relations after his death most of the account of his life and writings which he, Wood, was able to print."<sup>21</sup> She thus implies that both Aubrey and Wood knew the source from which the manuscript came. It is well known that Wood took a very hostile attitude toward John Phillips. Arguing again from probabilities, it is hardly reasonable that he would have been so complacent in his reception and use of material from such a source.

Inasmuch as Miss Darbishire takes exception<sup>22</sup> to the suggestions as to the authorship of the Life made by its first editor,<sup>23</sup> I may be allowed <sup>18</sup> Miss Darbishire, following Malone, thinks the anonymous Life was written in 1686 or 1687. John Phillips in 1685 wrote his "Ode on the Death of Charles II," which was full of royalist sycophancy and in 1687 his coarse version of Don Quixote.

<sup>19</sup> cf. E. L. of M., ibid., pp. 24, 25.

<sup>20</sup> The anonymous Life records the death of Milton (1674) and was used by Wood in his life of the poet, published 1691. Edward Phillips's life of his uncle was printed in 1694.

<sup>21</sup> E. L. of M., xx, xix.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., xx.

<sup>23</sup> The Earliest Life of Milton, edited by Edward S. Parsons, Eng. Hist. Rev. (1902).

a personal word. She says my conjectures are right in so far as they are negative, that the author was not an Oxford man nor a clergyman. She does not comment on the suggestion that "he was a well-educated though not altogether scholarly man, with good but not carefully practised literary ability." She objects to the suggestion that the biographer may have been a physician,<sup>24</sup> saying that "the details . . . of Milton's optical trouble . . . are such as might be familiar to the sufferer's lay friends,"<sup>22</sup> which is entirely possible. But the confident assumption with which she attributes the death-bed scene, as described in the Life, to John Phillips, saying, "John must have been present, Edward unexpectedly absent,"<sup>25</sup> has no evidence whatever to justify it. That scene might as reasonably be interpreted as the recollection of the poet's friend and intimate of many years, his physician, Dr. Paget.

She dismisses most cavalierly one other suggestion: "He was probably of Milton's generation, an older man than Anthony Wood. He writes as one who had passed through the civil struggles, in which he was evidently an Independent, though one of Milton's type." Her reply to this is a single sentence, an opinion without a reason: "Neither did I detect the marks which stamped him as an elderly man, of an age to be Milton's contemporary."<sup>26</sup> The careful reader must be the judge which of us is right on this point. Frequent reading of the Life during more than thirty years has left me of the same opinion still.

In conclusion, Miss Darbishire's argument and her facts and conjectures do not justify the certainty of her conviction that John Phillips wrote the anonymous Life of Milton. What she so often brings forward as certainties are at best only probabilities, and often only possibilities. On the other side, that such a high-minded bit of biography could have been the work of a man like John Phillips is too much for one who is not credulous of modern miracles to accept. I at least must wait until Miss Darbishire gives us the biography which she says is yet to be written. And as for the probabilities, there are as many against the theory of his authorship of the Life as she has been able to cite for it. My own judgment is that the suggestion of Dr. Paget's authorship, though it does not explain all the facts, is a better guess than Miss Darbishire's.

<sup>24</sup> Miss Darbishire says the first editor conjectured that the author was "probably a doctor." What the text actually says is, "Perhaps he was a physician." E. L. of M., ix, Eng. Hist. Rev. (Jan., 1902), 97.

<sup>25</sup> E. L. of M., xxi. Godwin's conjecture as to the funeral of Milton is an amusing contrast to Miss Darbishire's certainty as to the death-bed scene. "It is obvious to conjecture that Edward Philips, his nearest male relation, and afterwards the historian of his life, probably filled the place of chief mourner, in this last farewell to the ashes of his adored preceptor and uncle. John Philips, on the contrary, who, we shall have reason to think, as long as he existed, never relaxed in his unnatural animosity to Milton, did not, I trust, pollute the sad solemnity with his unhallowed presence." (Lives of E. & J. Philips, p. 157.)

<sup>26</sup> E. L. of M., xx, xxi.

EDWARD S. PARSONS

Marietta College

APPENDIX

THE OCCURRENCE OF THE SPELLINGS THEIR AND THIR IN MILTON'S POETRY AND PROSE<sup>27</sup>

In the Trinity College manuscript the word now spelled their occurs 96 times. It is in Milton's hand 88 times and spelled by him 79 times thire and 9 times thir. Amanuenses spell the word once thir, once their with the e later crossed out, four times their, and twice theire. Milton in these manuscript papers used only the forms thire and thir, but he used the first nearly nine times as often as thir.

The edition of 1645, containing five English sonnets and seventeen other English poems, has 83 uses of the word. These are all in the form their—except in the stanza viii of the Passion, where thir appears once.<sup>28</sup> The edition of 1673 includes the English poems of the first edition with "On the Death of a Fair Infant" and "At a Vacation Exercise" added, ten other sonnets, seventeen paraphrases of Psalms, and a translation of the Fifth Ode of Horace. In this group of added poems are 59 uses of their and none of thir. Thus in all the English poems of the 1673 edition there are 141 cases of the spelling their and none of thir.

Of the four sonnets not included in the editions of 1645 and 1673, xvii to Sir Henry Vane was printed in a life of Vane by G. Sikes which appeared in 1662. The other three, xv (Fairfax), xvi (Cromwell) and xxii (Cyriack, this three years day) were first printed in 1694 by Edward Phillips at the close of the Life of John Milton, prefixed to his Letters of State. In these four sonnets there are three uses of the word, once as their in xv, and twice as thir in xxii<sup>29</sup>—the sonnet cited by Miss Darbishire in her argument. There are then only three uses of this form in Milton's published work outside the major poems and the prose. Two of these appear in the Cambridge manuscript in the hand of an amanuensis, and were not in print until twenty years after Milton's death.

In the prose works are the following uses of the word:

	Their	Thir
1641 Of Reformation	180	1	1642 Reason of Church Govt.	182	0
1641 Of Prelatical Episc.	49	0	1642 Apology for Smeckymnnus	152	0
1641 Animadversions	119	1	1643 Doct. and Disc. of Divorce	116	0
			1644 Of Education	45	0

<sup>27</sup> This study was made possible by the Facsimile of the Trinity Manuscript of Milton's writings and the recent publication of the Columbia University Edition of Milton in the original spelling. The page references are to this edition. It has been carefully gone over several times. In the quest valuable assistance was given by Miss Pauline Frederick of the Marietta College Department of English.

<sup>28</sup> Miss Darbishire points this out. The Harvard Library copies confirm Miss Darbishire's statement. The edition of 1673 changes thir to their.

<sup>29</sup> In the first of the two cases in Sonnet xxii, as indicated above, the word was originally written their and later the e was elided.

	Their	Thir	1659 To Remove Hirelings	11	171
1644 Martin Bucer	25	45	1660 Brief Notes	1	18
1644 Areopagitica	98	3	1660 Letter to General Monk	0	17
1645 Tetrachordon	123	29	1660 Readie and Easie Way	6	140
1645 Colasterion	6	12	1669 Accedence	7	44
1648 Tenure of Kings and Mag	8	191	1670 History of Britain	42	714
1649 Eikonoklastes	50	419	1673 Of True Religion	50	0
1649 Letters to a Friend	2	19	1674 Letters Patents	11	0
1649 Articles of Peace	161	57	( Muscovia printed 1682
1659 Civil Power in Eccl Causes	10	32	after Milton's death)	88	0

If there were space, these figures could be analyzed and it could be shown how in very many cases the spelling persists in one form for a time and then suddenly changes to the other and changes back again. Here are two striking examples<sup>30</sup> Pages 65-95 of the Columbia University edition of Tetrachordon contain nothing but their (29 uses); pages 95-132 have 29 uses of thir and only 7 of their; and pages 135-232 have 33 uses of their and not a single thir. In Articles of Peace for the first seventy pages through p. 251, l. 7, only their occurs; on pp. 251-252 thir is used four times; from 253 to 259 inclusive their occurs 38 times and thir only 9 times; from 260 to the end (271) thir is found 47 times and their only 9 times. On p. 258 their occurs once and thir 4 times; on p. 259 their 10 times, thir not at all; on p. 260 thir 5 times and their once. Milton's own work begins on p. 242 of this pamphlet and continues to the end. In this section their is used 74 times and thir 56.

In all the prose works there are 1542 uses of their and 1913 of thir. Of the latter number 1133 are found in Eikonoklastes and the History of Britain.

The three works of Milton's last poetical period show similar variations. In Paradise Lost (including the Verse and Arguments) thir is almost exclusively used—607 uses to 16 of their.<sup>31</sup> Paradise Regained has a different proportion. The figures are as follows.

	Book I	Book II	Book III	Book IV	Total
Their	9	4	12	6	31
Thir	2	12	19	18	51

In Samson Agonistes, thir is used without change through line 176, then their is used three times in succession, after which thir comes back. From line 886 to 1215 their is used 10 times and thir ten times, then thir continues through the rest of the poem. In the whole poem thir is used 86 times and their 15. Thir appears also twice in the argument and once in the introduction.

<sup>30</sup> See also the occurrence of the spellings in Samson Agonistes. See below, p. 9.

<sup>31</sup> According to Miss Darbishire's figures in The Manuscript of P. L. Book I, their occurs in the First Edition of Book I, 39 times and thir 30 times. In the MS. their 5 times, thir 64.

DRYDEN'S DEDICATION FOR
THE MUSIC OF THE PROPHETESSE, 1691

THE manuscript Dedication for the music of Purcell's opera, The Prophetess, has curiously remained unprinted and apparently unobserved by the editors and biographers of Dryden since its first notice in a report of the Historical Manuscript Commission, 1881.<sup>1</sup> Its almost unique interest to any treatment of the poet's literary relations, his canon, and technique is barely indicated by a contemporary notation at the bottom of the second folio: "This Epistle is the handwriting of John Dryden Esq Poet Laureat to Ch: 2, and James 2. it was the first draught of an Epistle Dedicatory to some Opera's of Mr. Purcell, and writ at his Request & for his use." Of an accompanying manuscript, the original for an unsigned Advertisement to the printed score, it is added that: "The other is a letter from Jacob Tonson the Famous Bookseller in London."<sup>2</sup> Both pieces were published, though with extensive deletions in the case of the Dedication, in a folio volume of 1691. This work, whatever the authorship of its parts, with its Dedication and Advertisement, assumes therefore a new importance to bibliographers and students of the poet. The form of its title page is as follows:

THE/Vocal and Instrumental/MUSICK/OF THE/PROPHETESS,/OR THE /HISTORY/OF/DIOCLESIAN./COMPOSED/By Henry Purcell, Organist of Their MAJESTIES/Chappel, and of St. Peters Westminster./[Printer's ornament]/LONDON,/Printed by J. Heptinstall, for the Author, and are to be/Sold by John Carr, at his Shop in the Middle-/Temple Gate near Temple-Barr.
 MDCXCI./<sup>3</sup>

Despite the warrant of a contemporary, the question arises whether the manuscripts are to be accepted as those of the poet and publisher. In the case of Dryden, the answer seems clearly affirmative, after comparison with numerous examples of his handwriting. But may it not be mere assumption that he was the composer rather than the copyist of the Dedication, particularly since the appended signature is also in his hand? This, upon the face of it, would appear unreasonable. That Dryden should copy for future reference the critical judgments of Purcell, the musician, would seem strange enough; that these judgments, assumed to issue from Purcell, should so clearly be in the line of Dryden's thought and temperament, even to the extent of anticipating certain of his subsequent remarks, would mean the recasting of much of the biography of the poet's mind and enthroning of Purcell as a major prophet in criticism. As for the signature, that matter is easily disposed of. The manuscript Dedication, by comparison with its printed version, was more than a first draught. It was clearly printers copy—in which case the authenticity of a signature, particularly when guaranteed by Purcell himself, would be immaterial. As for the other manuscript, it will be observed that in the title page of the published work there is no reference to Tonson, nor indeed anywhere else in the volume. The score was printed, according to the statement, "for the author."

<sup>1</sup> Eighth Report, App. III, p. 8b, item 24.

<sup>2</sup> The manuscripts are now located in the British Museum, Stowe MSS. 755, fols 34-35.

<sup>3</sup> From two copies at Yale. A<sub>2</sub> and verso have the Dedication: "To his Grace Charles Duke of Somerset," &c. It is signed Henry Purcell.

What then was the part of Tonson? The publication, eight months before, of the play—or what may inexactly be termed the libretto—of The Prophetess involved both publisher and playwright. The interest of Dryden may be definitely proved by his composition of a prologue, which for political reasons was immediately suppressed after its first recital, May or June, 1690.<sup>4</sup> Tonson brought forth the play in quarto early in June. Doubtless it had been intended that the prologue should be a selling point, but apparently the Lord Chamberlain intervened. That the printing of the book came simultaneously with the censorship may be deduced from the fact that at least two copies are in existence with the prologue included.<sup>5</sup> From the others that have been examined there is a probable cancellation, judging by the abortive appearance of the Dramatis Personæ immediately after the title page and the absence of one whole folio before the beginning of Act I at the signature B. The printer seems to have been allowed no time in which to rearrange his set-up.

It is only natural to assume that Tonson's interest in The Prophetess should have lagged after so discouraging a reverse. Nor does there appear to be any solid argument to connect his name with the publication of its Vocal and Instrumental Musick. Whereas the handwriting of the Dedication is indubitably Dryden's, that assigned Tonson has on the contrary only the warrant of an early notation. Its authenticity is challenged by the statement upon the title page, "printed for the author"; the script itself bears little resemblance to his hand; and its text finally is badly garbled—to a degree surprising if it be associated with a fairly articulate publisher. One other piece of evidence fails equally to substantiate Ton-

<sup>4</sup> The play was advertised in The London Gazette, June 12–16, 1690. This would place its first production earlier than that commonly accepted, Nov. 17. Cf. Nicoll, Restoration Drama, p. 314, "Lord Chamberlain's Records." The earlier date makes it possible to identify The Prophetess as the "late Opera" mentioned in Dryden's Dedication to Amphitryon.

<sup>5</sup> In the libraries of Christ Church, Oxford, and of Mr. P. J. Dobell.

son's part in the venture. In The London Gazette of July 3-7, 1690, appeared the following advertisement:

The Vocal and Instrumental Musick, in the Opera, called, The Prophetess, Composed by Mr. Henry Purcell, is design'd to be printed by way of Subscriptions. Proposals may be seen at Mr. John Carr's Shop in the Middle-Temple-Gate, and at Mr. Henry Playford's Shop near the Inner-Temple Church, who are appointed to take subscriptions.

Another advertisement of publication, February 26—March 2, 1690/1 omits the name of Playford.<sup>6</sup> The strange delay is explained in the manuscript Advertisement:

I employed two several Printers; but one of them falling into some trouble, and the Volume swelling to a Bulk beyond my expectation, have been the Occasions of this Delay.

It all would seem a singular exhibit of ineptitude from so skilled a business man as Tonson. From beginning to end, however, his name nowhere appears.

Were one to hazard a conjecture, the manuscript Advertisement might better be assigned to Purcell. Such would be the testimony of its text. Therein, the writer remarks that "according to my Promise in the Proposals, I have been very carefull in the Examination of every Sheet, and hope the Whole will appear as Correct as any yet Extant." This statement would imply a degree of knowledge beyond Tonson's capacity in the proofreading of a musical score. It only remains to be noted that of the two copies in the Yale library the one "ex dono authoris" to J. Talbot contains Purcell's holographic corrections, according to his promise. Other similar copies are supposed to be in existence.<sup>7</sup>

The pertinence of this discussion of the so-called Tonson manuscript rests in its apparent disposal of the publisher as the one who led Dryden to write the Dedication. This would seem rather to have come from a friendship for Purcell, and to have been "writ at his request & for his use." But the friendship should perhaps be dated earlier than October, when Dryden is supposed to have turned from Grabut and delegated the Englishman to write the music for Amphitryon. The history of their relations involves the whole disputed matter of the authorship of The Prophetess.

Though the quarto of the latter is lacking any attribution upon the title page, it was categorically stated by Langbaine that Dryden contributed the changes and lyric additions that transformed Fletcher's romantic old play into an opera. On the other hand, Downes in his Roscius Anglicanus and Gildon in the continuation of Langbaine as definitely assigned the play to Betterton. Their testimony has the strong corroborative evidence of an unnoticed broadside in the Chetham library, entitled: "A New Song sung in the Prophetess . . . the words by Mr. Batterton."<sup>8</sup> While one may readily agree with Professor Saintsbury that there is nothing in the play that Betterton might not have written equally as well as Dryden, may not the actor in this instance have been the stalking horse for alterations in which the poet's part was that of hack?

<sup>6</sup> I am indebted for these references to the Gazette to Hazelwood's interleaved copy of Langbaine, Br. Mus. c 45. d 16

<sup>7</sup> Croce's Dictionary of Music, ed. Colles, iv, 288. The statement is a bit obscure.

Dryden had from the beginning evinced a singular interest in the production. First, we have his suppressed prologue. True, as the most prolific poet in the supply of these ephemeral introductions, he may merely have received the customary five or six guineas, without implication of further responsibility. There arises, however, his laudatory allusion to Purcell's part in The Prophetess, which reveals him as an attentive critic:

But what has been wanting on my Part, has been abundantly supplied by the Excellent Composition of Mr. Purcell; in whose Person we have at length found an English-man, equal with the best abroad At least my Opinion of him has been such, since his happy and judicious Performance in the late Opera; and the Experience I have had of him, in the setting my Three Songs for this Amphitryon.<sup>9</sup>

Here, perhaps, may be a distinction between impersonal observation and personal collaboration. But it need be no more conclusive than the omission of the author's name from the title page of The Prophetess. Certainly Dryden would have taken little pride in the mere hack work of modernization and transposition, nor in the lyrics, save for the famous one, "What shall I do to show how much I love her?"—a piece incidentally more admirable in its setting than in itself. The lyrics were not markedly better or worse, however, than much of the fanfare of his nearly contemporaneous opera, King Arthur. Opera at best in the seventeenth century was a species, as he pointed out, "principally designed for ear and eye." With The Prophetess remaining in its essentials the work of Fletcher, Dryden's own concern would have been largely monetary, as a sharer in the opera's profits. But the added fact of his supposed Dedication of its music for Purcell seems cumulative, and argues an interest from beginning to end. Until some more conclusive testimony is produced it may be advisable to accept as answer to the problem the manuscript notation in a copy of the play, once in the possession of Sir Edmund

<sup>8</sup> J. O. Hallwell, A Catalogue of Proclamations &c. Item 1873.

<sup>9</sup> "Epistle Dedicatory" to Amphitryon, dated Oct. 24, 1690. The date allows no question but that The Prophetess was the "late opera."

Gosse, that it was "By Mr. Dryden and Mr. Betterton,"<sup>10</sup> a collaboration in which perhaps the poet provided the finishing touches.

From this area of conjecture we come to certainties in identifying Dryden's hand and brain in the Dedication. Mature criticism as it is upon the subtle correspondencies of the sister arts of music, poetry, and painting, the Dedication, even did it lack a contemporary ascription of authorship, would be worthy of a place beside the best of Dryden's prose. For hardly another critic of his time could compose ex cathedra with the same felicitous inflection: certainly not Henry Purcell, who so far as we may discover nowhere else betrayed such nice discrimination of prose style or knowledge of the arts. The point, however, that calls for demonstration is not the obvious similarity of style, where the cadence may be its own proof, but the close parallelism of content to that of several of Dryden's better known prose treatises and poems. We have, as in no other place, a revelation here of the growth of his ideas, from their genesis on the manuscript before us to their final issuance in the printed form. If for nothing else the manuscript would be interesting as the only example of his holograph wherein he is shown in the actual process of composition; or, to express it differently, his other pieces were left uncorrected because in almost every case they were letters written with no view of publication. This is printer's copy, unique in its kind. But it has a further interest. Inasmuch as Dryden was here cloaked by anonymity he chose for once to utilize his ideas a second time in various acknowledged works, without fear of their being criticized for barrenness of invention. Thus they grow under our eyes; and we are afforded in our turn the rare glimpse of a poet's mind at work.

The manuscript itself displays a writer who struck off his ideas rapidly, even upon occasion deleting a word before he had finished the writing of it, and substituting synonyms in the flow of composition. Such we may take to be those words which are scratched and another written immediately after. Those that are inserted above may be assumed to have come when he reread his text. The manuscript reveals a writer so richly endowed that he could afford to strike out a particularly happy figure where either good sense or economy of expression dictated. To Dryden, as to most writers of his time, formal correctness of copy seemed to have counted for little. Capitalization and even spelling are almost whimsical, though the "pointing," with which he was more intimately concerned, is observed with a degree of care that shows scarcely any variation from that of the printed page. Finally it will be noted that most of his alterations, where not dictated by the sense, were determined by the niceties of his prose rhythm.

<sup>10</sup> Scott-Saintsbury, The Works of John Dryden, VIII, 10.

These various qualities may best be reproduced, short of actual photograph, by printing the scratched portions in another character from that of the main body. Thus Dryden's deletions are indicated below by the use of italics, and, with a few changes, what is left constitutes his final printed version in the folio of Purcell's music. The verbal variants of the latter have been indicated in the footnotes. For those changes made by Dryden in the extensive portions which afterwards he decided to omit altogether, the same procedure has been followed of printing in a different character, and hence they have been left unitalicized. The order of composition then may be conjecturally arrived at by first reading the text with the omission of all parentheses, and then re-reading for these insertions. Next followed the deletion of italicized passages, and finally the proof correction indicated in the footnotes.

YOUR Grace has been pleas'd, so particularly to favour the Composition of the Musique In Diocletian, that from thence I have this been incouaged to this presumption of dedicating not onely it, but (also) the unworthy Authour of it, to your protection. All arts and Sciences have had<sup>11</sup> their first encouragement from great persons; and owe their propagation and success to their favour (esteem): like some sort of fruit trees, which being of a tender constitution, and delicate in their nature, requirde the shadow of the Cedar to shield their Infancy, from Stormes (blites) and Tempests.<sup>12,13</sup> Musick and poetry have ever been acknowledgd Sisters, which walking hand in hand, support (& grace) each other: And As poetry is (illeg.) the harmony of words, so musick is that of notes: and as poetry is a rise above prose and oratory, so is Musick the exaltation of poetry. Both of them may excell apart, but sure they are most excellent when they are joind, because then, nothing is (then) wanting to either of their perfections: for then thus they appeare, like wit & beauty in the same person. Painting is, indeed, another sister, being like them, an Imitation of Nature: but I may venture to say she is a dun.b Lady, whose charmes are onely to the eye: a Mute actour upon the stage, who can neither be heard nor read there, nor read afterwards. Besides, that she is a single piece; to be seen onely in one place, at once: but the other two, can propagate their species; and as many printed (or written) cotypes as there are of a poem or a pie composition of Musick, in so many severall places (at the same time), the poem & the Musick, may be read, & practisd, and admir'd. Thus painting is a confin'd, & solitary Art, the other two are as it were in consort, & diffus'd through the world; partakeing somewhat of the Nature of the Divinity (Deity), which at once is in all places. This is not sayd in disparagement of that noble Art; but onely to give the due precedence, to the others, which are more noble; and which are of nearer kindred to the soule; have less of the matter, & more of the forme; less of the manuall operation, & more of the rationall spirituall part, in our humane nature. Yet let it allwayes be acknowledgd, that painting and Statuary can express both our actions & our passions: that if they neither speake nor move, they seem to do both: and if they impose on the eye, yet they deceive nobly: when they make shadows pass for substances, and even animate the brass & marble. But poetry and painting have arriv'd to their perfection in our own Country: Musick, is yet but (illeg.) in its Nonage: a prattling foreign forward child which rather gives hope of what it may be heerafter in England, than what it has produc'd already hetherto produc'd (when the Masters of it shall find more encouragement). Tis now learning Italian, which is its best Master; and studying somewhat (a little) of the French ayre, to give it somewhat more of gayety and fashion. Thus being farther<sup>14</sup> from the sun, we are of later growth, than our Neighbor Countreyes; and must be content, to shake off our barbarity by degrees; and leave the hedge notes of our homely Ancestours. The present age seemes already disposd to be refind: and to distinguish betwixt wild fancy, and a just, numerous composition. Thus (So) far, the Genius (and example) of your Grace, has already prevaild on them (us). Many of the Nobility and Gentry, have followd your Illustrious Example in this encouragement (protection)<sup>15</sup> of Musick. Nay even our Poets grow begin to grow ashamd, of their harshness & broken Numbers: and promise to file our uncouth Language, into smother words. For, by their pardon, I may be bold to tell them (say) that hetherto they have not enough considerd, the sweetness & Majesty of Sound: and that the little paines which they have employd on their ragged verses, has been the occasion of our great trouble labour & trouble in the composition of them. And therefore I will presume to tell them, once for all, that if they he who has not (naturally) a good eare, is not very (over) fit for his own trade, but is a very judgment and Flayle to ours. But I am too sensible of my own imperfections to expose the failings of other men, in an Art, which I pretend not to understand; at least not more than Nature teaches me, to abhorre the grateing of unharmonious sounds. Once more therefore I presume, to dedicate (offer) my selfe, & this present composition<sup>16</sup> (with all humility) to your Graces favour, & protection;<sup>17</sup> at least, till I can redeeme so meane a present by offering you one which may better deserve your acceptation. Be pleasd to pardon my Ambition, which had no other meanes to obtaine the honour of being made known to you, but onely this. The Toun, which has been so indulgent to my first endeavours in this kind, has encouragd my me to proceed in the same attempt, and Your Graces acceptance of (favour to) this trifle, will be a good omen (not onely) to the next success of the next, but (also) to all the future performances of

<sup>11</sup> Have receiv'd.<sup>12</sup> Blites and Storms.<sup>13</sup> Paragraph.

Your Graces most obedient & most Obliged Servant
Henry Purcell.

Even the signature of Purcell appears to be in the hand of Dryden.

One may conjecture as to what led the critic to strike out his elaborate argument upon the parallel of painting and the other two arts. Was it a limitation of space? Or, more plausibly, was it the thought that his ven-

<sup>14</sup> Thus being farther.

<sup>16</sup> this Composition.

<sup>15</sup> the Patronage.

<sup>17</sup> Grace's Protection.

triloquism could hardly escape discovery when issuing from the mouth of Purcell? Music the latter might pretend to know in its similarities to poetry, but not painting. The other deleted section concerning the musical qualities of poetry—with its gratuitous advice to the generation of bad poets—would have avoided censure only when propounded from the throne at Will's. Certainly it here came ill-timed from the composer. Whatever the cause, both portions by a nice economy were preserved until occasion more suitable should proffer itself.

It was not, however, the thrifty custom of Dryden, as that of Waller or Goldsmith, to treasure his very slightest words. With him the ideas were mulled over, until in due course they became parcel of his prose or poetry, changed in phrase or even contradictory of their original intention, but still recognizable. Thus, most immediately, one might suspect that he would have utilized the material of his first stricken portion for the well-known Parallel betwixt Poetry and Painting, 1695, the essay he prefixed to his translation of Fresnoy's De Arte Graphica. The suggestion for this latter work has been supposed, by Malone, to have come from the artists, Closterman and Kneller.<sup>18</sup> As Dryden remarked: "Many of our most skilful painters, and other artists, were pleased to recommend this author to me, as one who perfectly understood the rules of painting."<sup>19</sup> The translation was by his statement a two months' interruption of the Aeneid, while the Parallel was "begun and ended in twelve mornings."<sup>20</sup> Paraphrasing Lord Rochester he enquired of himself: "How the devil he could be so long about it?" But he probably had been about it much longer. As we have observed, the idea of such a Parallel had engaged Dryden's interest as early as 1691, which would suggest that the twelve mornings were the culmination of much study and discussion. Did the essay perhaps have its beginning when Dryden struck from his friend's Dedication that passage concerned with painting?

The one passage that seems particularly apposite in the Parallel is only so by contrast. Since now he was speaking in his own person, and, according to the new subject-matter, was more favorably disposed towards painting, he assumed as an advantage what in connection with music and from Purcell's viewpoint had appeared a weakness. In the Dedication we may notice his remark that painting "is a single piece; to be seen onely in one place, at once<sup>k</sup>. . . a confined and solitary Art." After some years of consideration, he thus reverses matters:

I must say this to the advantage of Painting, even above Tragedy, that what this last represents in the space of many hours, the former shews us in one moment. The action, the passion, and the manners of so many persons as are contained in a picture are to be discerned at once, in the twinkling of an eye; at least they would be so, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once, or the mind could digest them all at the same instant, or point of time.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>18</sup> Prose Works of John Dryden, I, i, 252.

<sup>19</sup> Essays of John Dryden, ed. Ker, II, 114.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid., pp. 117, 153.

Both passages are concerned with the several arts as imitations of nature, but in the latter the treatment is so much more extensive that it would be fruitless to search for parallels. The only additional point of interest here is that the subjects of time, space, and imitation seem generally to proceed hand in hand through Dryden's criticism.

A less obvious place of search proves in all respects more rewarding. Dryden's epistle To Sir Godfrey Kneller, 1694, might be considered as the substance of the Parallel versified and transmuted into poetry, or, to be curiously exact, the poetic body from which, reversing due order, he derived a prose treatise. And, incidentally, nowhere does he give finer demonstration of the difference between prose and poetry. Quite properly, in an epistle to Kneller, he takes a position favorable to painting. It is now the poet who practices the "confined and solitary art" and not as in the Dedication the painter. With poetic allowance the thought now points in the general direction of the Parallel:

But poets are confin'd in narr'wer space,
To speak the language of their native place:
The painter widely stretches his command;
Thy pencil speaks the tongue of ev'ry land.<sup>22</sup>

The Dedication, however, had discovered that "painting is a dumb Lady, whose charmes are onely to the eye: a Mute actour upon the stage, who can neither be heard there, nor read afterwards." The poet treasured the figure until by a turn of "wit" he could transform it into the substance of poetry:

Once I beheld the fairest of her kind:
(And still the sweet idea charms my mind:)
True, she was dumb; for Nature gaz'd so long.
Pleas'd with her work, that she forgot her tongue,
But, smiling, said: "She still shall gain the prize;
I only have transferr'd it to her eyes."
Such are thy pictures, Kneller: such thy skill,
That Nature seems obedient to thy will;
Comes out, and meets thy pencil in the draught;
Lives there, and wants but words to speak her thought.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid., p. 131.

<sup>22</sup> The Poetical Works of John Dryden, ed. Noyes, p. 415, ll. 124-127.

At least thy pictures look a voice; and we Imagine sounds, deceiv'd to that degree,
 We think 'tis somewhat more than just to see

So much for the charms that were "onely to the eye." By association the poet thence turned to the metaphysics of shadows:

Shadows are but privations of the light;
 Yet, when we walk, they shoot before the sight,
 With us approach, retire, arise, and fall;
 Nothing themselves, and yet expressing all.
 Such are thy pieces, imitating life
 So near, thy almost conquer'd in the strife;
 And from their animated canvas came,
 Demanding souls, and loosen'd from the frame.<sup>23</sup>

The more ancient matter of the prose Dedication in this case had anticipated the very words:

Yet let it allways be acknowledgd, that painting and Statuary can express both our actions & our passions: that if they neither speake nor move, they seem to do both: and if they impose on the eye, yet they deceive nobly: when they make shadows pass for substances, and even animate the brass & marble.

The task seemed to Dryden prometheian; and so, by time and association, the figure was thus transmuted:

Prometheus, were he here, would cast away
 His Adam, and refuse a soul to clay;
 And either would thy noble work inspire,
 Or think it warm enough without his fire.<sup>24</sup>

Whatever the advantages that Dryden, according to the circumstances of his writing, assigned the different arts, still they are "Sisters, which walking hand in hand, support and grace each other," though one of them, he ventures to say in the Dedication, is "a dumb Lady, whose charmes are onely to the eye." Such close relationship of the arts—a conception not so daring that it might not be duplicated from other writers—had appeared in Dryden's poetry at least so early as 1685. In the sub-title of his Ode to Mrs. Anne Killigrew, Dryden had noted that the subject of his poem was "Excellent in the Two Sister-Arts of Poesy and Painting." More specific is the character given to painting in the Ode itself, where it is said that:

all the large demains which the Dumb Sister sway'd,
 All bow'd beneath her government;<sup>25</sup>

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., ll. 1-21.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., ll. 22-25.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., p. 213, ll. 102-103.

an idea which recurred some nine years later in the address To Sir Godfrey Kneller. Doubtless many such analogies might be discovered in the course of Dryden's poetry and prose.

It remains only to account for the second of the two long passages deleted from the Dedication. Therein, speaking as the musician, who had been troubled to set their "ragged verses," Dryden had taken to task the race of contemporary poets for their slight consideration of "the sweetness and Majesty of Sound." To this theme Dryden frequently reverted, most closely, perhaps, by phrase and context in his Postscript to the translation of Virgil, 1697. Something at last he would do for the honor of his language and reputation of English poetry abroad:

Somewhat (give me leave to say) I have added to both of them in the choice of words, and harmony of numbers, which were wanting, especially the last, in all our poets, even in those who, being endued with genius, yet have not cultivated their mother-tongue with sufficient care; or, relying on the beauty of their thoughts, have judged the ornament of words, and sweetness of sound, unnecessary.<sup>26</sup>

With this we may end. It is an accurate postscript to the poet's revisions of his prose Dedication, where every word is chosen with an ear to both the sense and the sound; and the clue that explains his transposition of prose into poetry, where from long cultivation of his mother tongue he relies equally upon the beauty of his thought and the harmony of his numbers.

ROSWELL G. HAM

Yale University

<sup>26</sup> Ker, op. cit., II, 241.

LXVII

FORGED LETTERS OF LAURENCE STERNE

AS many have learned to their dismay, the materials upon which Sterne's biography is at present based offer problems of unusual complexity, problems that are due in part to the man's intricate and elusive nature and in part to his daughter and to his swarm of imitators. Sterne, it is evident, was too great a humorist ever to be quite honest either with his own or with future generations. He amused himself in his letters by deceiving his contemporaries and mystifying posterity. For many years now his devices have been familiar matter: he rewrote his letters with his eye upon the press; sometimes he made portions of a letter serve more than one correspondent; and, though lately we have known it, he readdressed a letter much after the manner of Pope in the expectation that the substituted name of Eliza Draper would make a better impression than that of an unidentified countess.

Nor have his daughter and his imitators exactly resolved the perplexities of biographers. Lydia, who in 1775 edited three volumes of her father's letters, was so irresponsible as to suggest to Wilkes that if he would write a few letters in imitation of Sterne's style she would insert them as genuine. By suppressing names of persons mentioned in the letters she made identification of some of them practically out of the question. To add to this confusion, which a discreet though foolish daughter purposely created, the forgers and imitators provided their own deceptions in the wake of the colossal popularity of Sterne's writings during the last years of the eighteenth century. A forged volume of Tristram Shandy appeared in 1760 and another in 1766. Four years later Sterne's acquaintance, Richard Griffith, gulled the public with his Posthumous Works of a late celebrated Genius, a book which Goethe believed genuine and which the credulous Alfred Hédouin actually translated in 1853.<sup>1</sup> It was not perhaps without a hope of profit that upwards of ninety imitations of Sterne were published between 1760 and 1800.

Although forgeries of Sterne's great novel no longer raise doubts as to their being forgeries, they are useful at least in suggesting that since Sterne's fiction was deemed profitable to imitate his letters too may have suffered the attention of the forger. One has, in fact, only to turn to the whole corpus of published letters purporting to be written by him to perceive that some of them did not meet with entire acceptance from critics even in the eighteenth century. To examine these doubtful letters, of which I distinguish forty-seven, is merely to discover reasons enough why they may not lightly be attributed to Sterne. If, then, they prove to be forgeries, the familiar biographies of Sterne have been partially vitiated by a reliance upon them. And yet, should they by any chance contain fragments of genuine information respecting Sterne or even writing by him, it would be unwise to dismiss them wholly. Clearly a means of determining the nature of each of the forty-seven letters in question is imperative. And since no manuscript authority is known to exist for these particular letters, the enquirer is thrust back upon familiar and alternative methods of detection.

<sup>1</sup> Harvey W. Thayer, Laurence Sterne in Germany (New York, 1905), pp. 74, 103-108.

The first of these methods consists in listening to an author's verbal rhythms and in judging the questioned document by means of the similarity or dissimilarity of rhythm. It consists ultimately in saying to oneself, "I do (or I don't) think this sounds like —." To be sure, Spedding has employed it with impressive results. But the method is more serviceable in determining the authorship of verse than of prose. There is Coleridge's superb folly to remember, when in demonstrating the Porter's speeches in Macbeth to be an interpolation "perhaps with Shakspeare's consent" he declared emphatically that with the exception of two sentences "of the rest not one syllable has the ever-present being of Shakspeare." The method has the weakness of rarely bringing combatants upon common ground. It is so much a matter of my ear versus thy ear. Hence in this study of forty-seven suspicious letters I do not rest my case upon observed differences of prose rhythm and, because they are only less tenuous, of content and reflected personality. I prefer to this method the more pedestrian one of parallel passages. These I have noted. I have considered them both frequently and skeptically. And I have always returned to my initial belief that the writer of the forty-seven letters among which these passages are to be found was not Sterne but his friend and imitator, William Combe, the author of the Tours of Dr. Syntax.

Early in his life Combe, as a smart young fellow about town, attached himself to the circle of Sterne's admirers. Born in Bristol about 1741, he had at an early age come up to London where he "learnt accounts at a School in Windmill Street."<sup>2</sup> At twelve he entered Eton, remained there three years,<sup>3</sup> and in 1756 dipped for a time into that obscurity which too frequently surrounds him. He is said by one biographer<sup>4</sup> to have attended Oxford in 1760 and by another<sup>5</sup> to have made a tour upon the Continent, after which in 1766 he entered the office of a solicitor in the Temple and was later called to the bar. Records to substantiate these remarks are forthcoming neither from Oxford nor from the Inns of Court.<sup>6</sup> But we are told that at this period in his life he "possessed some fortune, a graceful person, elegant manners, a taste for literature, and an extensive acquaintance,"<sup>7</sup> all of which blessings had been aided by the will of his benefactor, Alderman William Alexander, who died September 23, 1762, leaving him a fortune of £2000. This indeed was a smaller sum than Walpole<sup>8</sup> and Farington<sup>9</sup> thought he had received. In any event he moved liberally among young men of wealth. In their company he may have met Sterne, introduced by mutual acquaintances such as Sir James Macdonald, Lord Beauchamp, and John Constantine Phipps, all of whom had been his schoolfellows at Eton. The time of this meeting was probably the year 1765 when Combe subscribed to the third and fourth volumes of the Sermons of Mr. Yorick. The next year, in July, 1766, Sterne refers in a letter to his having left him his postchaise.<sup>10</sup> A month later, writing to Becket from Coxwold, he enquires: "Is Mr Combes in Town? If you see him, tell him to write to me."<sup>11</sup> Further indication of intimacy between them appears to lie in a letter Sterne presumably wrote to Combe in 1767.<sup>12</sup> Finally we have Crabbe Robinson's Diary:

<sup>2</sup> Joseph Farington, The Farington Diary (London, 1922-28), I, 114.

<sup>3</sup> R. A. Austen-Leigh, The Eton College Register 1753-1790 (Eton, 1921), p. 118.

<sup>4</sup> Ackermann's Repository of Arts, Aug. 1823, p. 87.

Of these connections, and of the adventures of his youth, he [Combe] was very fond of talking, and I used to enjoy the anecdotes he told me after dinner, until one day, when he had been very communicative, and I had sucked in all he related with greedy ear, Fraser said, laughing to Walter, "Robinson, you see, is quite a flat; he believes all old Combe says." . . . This, of course, was a sad interruption to my pleasure. I might otherwise have enriched these reminiscences with valuable facts about Sterne.<sup>13</sup>

If we may trust the purport of Ox 177, which Governor Cross believes addressed to this slippery scapegrace, the collapse of Combe's finances in 1767 obliged him to take refuge in France. For some years he occupied himself with the transient offices of an adventurer, and wandered, it is

<sup>5</sup> J. C. Hotten, ed., Dr. Syntax's Three Tours, by William Combe (London [1868]), p. viii

<sup>6</sup> Information from H. A. C. Sturgess, Librarian and Keeper of the Records, Middle Temple Library.

<sup>7</sup> Repository of Arts (London, 1823), 3rd Ser., II, 87.

<sup>8</sup> Letters of Horace Walpole, Supplement, II, 153.

<sup>9</sup> The Farington Diary, I, 114.

<sup>10</sup> Ox., pp. 281, 282, n. 9.

<sup>11</sup> Ox., p. 288.

<sup>12</sup> Ox., pp. 293-294.

<sup>13</sup> Henry Crabbe Robinson, Diary (London, 1869), I, 294. Robinson understood Combe to have been a man of fortune when young, to have travelled in Europe and even to have made a journey with Sterne (I, 293).

said, even into Wales.<sup>14</sup> It is not until 1775 that he is again seen, this time at Bristol as the author of a play, The Flattering Milliner; or a Modern Half-Hour. A year later, upon the occasion of his marriage,<sup>15</sup> he was living in London. He had now definitely adopted the profession of writing. At Bristol in 1775 he had prepared a sentimental excursion in the style of his hero Sterne and published it under the title The Philosopher in Bristol. At about the same time he appears to have concocted the series of Sterne's letters which along with a few genuine letters were published in 1775 (A). These he supplemented in 1779, at least according to his own declaration, with two small volumes bearing the title Letters supposed to have been written by Yorick and Eliza (B). Nine years later, in 1788, he evidently had the principal hand in the publication of Original Letters of the late Reverend Mr. Laurence Sterne (C). In 1784 he added to his list of imitations of Sterne his Original Love-Letters between A Lady of Quality and A Person of Inferior Station (OL), and in 1797 Fragments in the Manner of Sterne (Frag). Finally in 1803 he concluded his tawdry practice by inserting in the Pic Nic (D), a periodical he edited for the Pic Nic Society, three letters purporting to be by Sterne. Combe, we now know, was their author. That they may prove of invaluable assistance in our examination of the questioned documents is obvious.

Table of Abbreviations

Ox	Letters of Laurence Sterne , ed. L. P. Curtis, Oxford, 1935.	Mem Ox	Sterne's 'Memorandums.' Reprinted in Ox 146-148.
Let Bk Ox	Sterne's Letter Book , MS.: The Morgan Library. Reprinted in Ox .	TS	Works of Laurence Sterne . Oxford, 1926-27. The Life and Opinions of Tristram Shandy . Vols. I, II, III.
Med Ox	Letters of the late Rev. Mr. Laurence Sterne , ed. Lydia Sterne Medalle. 3 vols. London, 1775. Reprinted in Ox .	SJ	Id. , A Sentimental Journey .
JE Ox	Sterne's Journal to Eliza . MS.: Brit. Mus., Addit. MSS., 34527. Reprinted in Ox .	Serm	Id. , The Sermons of Mr. Yorick . Vols. I, II.
		A	Sterne's Letters to His Friends on Various Occasions . London, 1775.
YE Ox	Letters of Yorick to Eliza . London, 1775. Reprinted in Ox .	B	Laurence Sterne ( sic ), Second Journal to Eliza ,

<sup>14</sup> The Farington Diary, I, 169.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., VIII, 239 n.

	ed. M. R. B. Shaw. Frag	[William Combe], Frag-
	London, 1929.	ments in the Manner of
C	Original Letters of the late	Sterne London, 1797.
	Reverend Mr. Laurence	Let Mar
	Sterne . London: Logo-	[William Combe], Letters
	graphic Press, 1788.	to Marianne . London, 1823.
D	The Pic Nic , 2nd ed. Lon-	Rep
	don, 1806. Vol. II.	[William Combe], 'Letter
Phil Brist	[William Combe], The	to Rousseau,' Acker-
	Philosopher in Bristol .	mann's Repository of
	Bristol, 1775. Pts. I, II.	Arts . London, 1824.
		3rd Ser., III, 205-210.
OL	[William Combe], Orig-	Cross
	inal Love-Letters be-	Works of Laurence Sterne ,
	tween A Lady of Quality	ed. W. L. Cross. New
	and A Person of In-	York, 1904. Journal to
	ferior Station . London,	Eliza and Various Let-
	1784. Vols. I, II.	ters , p. 263.

A figure in boldface type indicates the number of a letter as it appears in the collection to which reference is made. Thus C 18. 99. 4 signifies Collection C, letter 18, p. 99, line 4. Roman numerals indicate particular volumes of a work.

Let us turn forthwith to the first of the important titles among these imitations and so-called forgeries.

A. Sterne's Letters to His Friends on Various Occasions.
London 1775.

This was the second collection of Sterne's letters to appear after his death. It was published 12 July, 1775.<sup>16</sup> Of the twelve letters which it contains I admit four as genuine. The remaining eight I consider forgeries by Combe.

Six of the eight letters that I have rejected Combe declared in the preface to B<sup>17</sup> to have written himself. It would be impertinent to suggest that he did not speak frankly:

At length a small volume, with the title of Letters by the late Mr. Sterne, was published in London, the originality of which was most positively asserted by the Editor in his Preface,<sup>18</sup> and, if I recollect aright, passed current, and not without applause, with the gentlemen who conduct the Reviews. — Of these Letters, the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth, were, I well knew, the offspring of that pen which wrote the contents of the following volumes. — They were written by way of experiment, and made their first appearance in a provincial newspaper; and passing on thro' the common channel of Magazines, Chronicles, Evening-Posts, Journals, &c. &c. &c. were collected together, and, being blended with a few of Mr. Sterne's genuine compositions, were published, with a solemn declaration in the preface, that they were all faithful transcripts of original letters in the possession of the Editor;—nay, I perceived, to my very great astonishment, that one of them had even found its way into Mrs. Medalle's late publication of her father's posthumous works.<sup>19</sup>

<sup>16</sup> London Chronicle, 11–13 July, 1775.

<sup>17</sup> B, pp. 161–162; Letters supposed, etc., i, ii–iii.

<sup>18</sup> A, p. ii.

But this disarming confession, which has the appearance of truth, has failed to give entire satisfaction. Some years ago Sterne's own copy of the ninth letter, to the composition of which Combe succinctly laid claim, turned up, addressed to Mrs. Vesey, in the Letter Book in the Morgan Library.<sup>20</sup> The discovery has led two writers,<sup>21</sup> both of whom were eager to detach B from the list of Combe's works and to bestow it upon Sterne, to reject the whole content of his confession. Such an act appears, perhaps, a trifle intemperate once we pause to consider how Combe in attributing to himself a letter Sterne had actually written might easily have erred not from design but from a hurried review of the false letters surrounding it. Indeed with the exception of the letter to Mrs. Vesey, and A 8 all the letters Combe attributed to himself contain so remarkable a series of parallels with Sterne's writings that the general truth of his assertion is virtually undeniable. Let us examine a few passages:

A 4.—This letter is an invitation from Sterne to a young friend to visit him at Coxwold. A portion of its phrases appear to be the stock in trade of the forger of C. Part derive from Sterne:

A 4. 16: Some tender-hearted damsel in distress would ever have been my object:—to wipe away the tears from off the cheek of such a friendless fair one.

SJ 51: in wiping them away from off the cheeks of the first and fairest of women, as I'm sitting with my handkerchief in my hand in silence the whole night besides her: SJ 144, 23–26; B 10, 8–10; 23, 9; 150, 9–11; C 3. 15, 3–10; 19. 107, 9–12; 36. 203, 16–204, 1; D 34, 15–17.

A 4. 16: I would go to Mecca—and for a friend—to the end of the world.

TS III, 53: Mecca . . . I would go a pilgrimage.

Med Ox 286, 16–17a: I would set out this hour upon a pilgrimage to Mecca for their sakes; Let Bk Ox 287, 17.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. A 5, 19–25; Med., II, 216–231.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. A 9. 44–48; Let. Bk. Ox., 137–138.

<sup>21</sup> B, v, xx.

A 4. 16: But wherefore do I think of arms and Dulcineas—when, alas, my spear is grown rusty, and is fit only to be hung in the old family hall, among pistols without cocks, and helmets that have lost their vizard.

A 4. 17: I fear I have little on my side but laughter and good spirits! these have stood me in great stead for twenty years past.

A 4. 15: I suppose this will overtake you at the Hot-wells, as you are walking a sentimental foot-pace beside some phthisical nymph of the fountain.

A 6—

A 6. 26: I have been much concerned at your overthrow; but our roads are ill contrived for the airy vehicles now in fashion. May it be the last fall you ever meet with in this world!—this reflection costs me a deep sigh—and I fear, my friend, you will get over it no cheaper.

A 6. 28: and all that charmed mankind, and delighted me, become a clod of the valley!

A 6. 28-9: Here, my Cordelia, I will weed clean thy grave—I will stretch myself upon it—I will wet it with tears—and the traveller shall not turn aside to observe me.

Let Bk Ox 294: Dulcinea . . . Ill enter the Lists with him and break a spear in your behalf; tho by the by, mine is half rusty, and should be hung up in the old family hall amongst Pistols without Cocks, and Helmets which have lost their Vizards; SJ 58, 25-7, B 23, 10-12; C 21. 119, 6-9; 25. 139, 12-15; 29. 163, 2-5, 33. 182, 7-9, 34. 189, 18-20.

TS III, 1: I swore it should be kept a-going at that rate these forty years, if it pleased but the fountain of life to bless me with health and good spirits; A 5. 24, 6-7; C 21. 119, 9-12.

(Cross 263: “commencing ‘Phthisical Nymph of the Fountain’.” Mrs. Draper to Mrs. James, 15 Apr., 1772.) C 8. 44, 2-3; 33. 183, 1-4; Phil Brist I, 37; OL II, 2, 18-19; D 26, 25-26.

Let Bk Ox 293: I first sympathize for the unkind greeting upon french ground which you met with by your overthrow—may it be the last shock you receive in this world!—this reflection, costs me a deep sigh—& alas! my friend! I dread it will let you go off no cheaper; C 4. 17, 1-7.

TS II, 245: and that warm heart of thine, with all its generous and open vessels, compressed into a clod of the valley! (cf. Job 21. 33); C 18. 100, 6-7; 20. 113, 18-19; Phil Brist I, 69; OL II, 19, 21-22; Let Mar 18.

Let Bk Ox 361, 10-11, 32-35: my Cordelia! and some kind-hearted Swain shall come and weed our graves, as I have weeded thine. . . . I can lie beside thy grave, and drop tears of tenderness upon the Turf w<sup>ch</sup> covers thee, and not one passenger turn his head aside to remark or envy me.

A 6. 29: excuse the wanderings of my pen; it governs me, I govern not it. TS II, 203: Ask my pen,—it governs me,—I govern not it.

A 7—
A 7. 31: I am still weak, and can hardly make myself heard across my table. TS III, 2: Eugenius could scarce hear me speak across the table; C 5. 22, 10–11, 27. 150, 13–14; 37. 206, 17–19.

A 7. 35: to put on my fool's cap, and jingle the bells. TS I, 95: my cap and bell.

A 7. 36–37: My pen is a leaden one, and it is with some difficulty I trail it on. JE Ox 329: if I have strength & Spirits to trail my pen down to the bottom of the page. Combe to Rousseau, Rep 207b My pen is so unaccustomed to the business, that it trails heavily along the paper; B 151, 24–26, C 30. 167, 4–6.

A 8.—Although I have found no parallels to this letter, the anecdote which it contains may, like B 24–26, 135–139, be modelled upon sections of SJ.

A 10—
A 10. 49: I am thus far on my way to Shandy-Hall;—two more stages and I shall be at the end of a tedious journey. Med Ox 346: I have got conveyed thus far . . . but press on to Barnby Moor to night, and if possible to York the next

A 11—
A 11. 61: She shall retire to some corner of the world. Ye Ox 318: in what corner of the world fancy points out to thee; Let Bk Ox 259.
Combe to Rousseau, Rep 205; corner of the world; C 5. 26, 8–9.

A 12—
A 12. 67. you and I were not cast in one mould. Let Bk Ox 122: the Wise heads I see on the continent are . . . cast in the same Moulds.

Such parallels may seem damning evidence of forgery; at least it would be surprising if more complete proof of Combe's hand were to be disclosed. But we should proceed cautiously. We should note that, although most of the sources are to be found in Sterne's novels, there appear to be a few which, so far as I am aware, are to be found only within the pages of the Letter Book and the Journal to Eliza. These manuscripts did not happen to be printed until the present century. How did Combe gain access to them? Or did he possess copies of the letters as Sterne had sent them through the post? Remembering Samuel Rogers's tale to the effect that Combe boasted it was with him, not with Sterne, that Eliza Draper was in love,<sup>22</sup> shall we conclude that she communicated to him manuscripts in her possession? The only known source for A 4. 15 would seem to warrant that supposition. But in 1775 Eliza Draper was in India.

There is another difficulty. A was published in July, 1775, three months before Lydia issued her important collection of Sterne's letters. Nevertheless A contains passages for which I can find sources only within Lydia's edition. As a result, I am obliged to conclude that Combe was acquainted with its contents before publication. At moments I will even suspect him of lending a finger to the rewriting of Med Ox 1. That conclusion is one alternative. The other is either to accept Sterne as the author of the entire contents of A (and perhaps of all but three of the suspected letters), which decision must collapse into absurdity, or to admit that the questioned documents in A are overpaintings, that Combe split up a letter or two in his possession and by copious additions eked out a profitable series. I myself cannot answer these questions and suppositions. I can only postulate the necessity for their existence.

A 5. The fire letter.

In his preface to B Combe said of this letter: "I perceived, to my very great astonishment, that one of them had even found its way into Mrs. Medalle's late publication of her father's posthumous works." Lydia printed it in vol. II, 126-131, addressing it to a certain Mrs. M——d——s and, no matter whether the letter is genuine or not, misdating it. In 1780 the editor of Sterne's Works, perhaps acquainted with Combe's declaration, omitted it from his collection of the letters.

Lydia's sanction of the letter is unimportant. She was not a scrupulous editor. We should accept it not upon her authority but upon the merits of its contents. These are precisely what most warn us against it. We note as parallels:

A 5. 19, 1-3.	TS II, 174, 4; III, 145, 1-2; C 16. 89, 19-90, 1; 28. 158, 1.
A 5. 20, 10-15.	Med Ox 256, 30; C 9. 46, 9-11.
A 5. 21, 1.	C 9. 47, 1; D 80, 4.
A 5. 21, 1-3.	C 9. 46, 18-19.
A 5. 21, 3-5.	C 9. 48, 9-12.
A 5. 21, 4-5.	JE Ox 336, 10-11; C 4. 19, 8-9; 28. 159, 7-8.

<sup>22</sup> Recollections of the Table-Talk of Samuel Rogers, ed. Dyce (New Southgate, 1887), p. 116.

- |                 |   |
|-----------------|---|
| A 5. 21, 8-12.  | C 9. 49, 5-11.  |
| A 5. 21, 12-13. | C 9. 48, 14-15.   |
| A 5. 21, 14-17. | C 9. 48, 16-19.   |
| A 5. 22, 3.     | SJ 13, 6-8; C 9. 49, 11-13.                                      |
| A 5. 22, 11-13. | Med Ox 234, 5-6.   |
| A 5. 23, 2-5.   | Med Ox 353, 14-15b, 90, 24; C 3. 14, 2, D 27, 1-4.               |
| A 5. 23, 10-12. | A 4. 14, 1-12; Med Ox 254, 6-14a; C 8. 43, 7-14; 21. 118, 16-18. |
| A 5. 23, 15.    | TS II, 111, 3-4; III, 1, 2; C 5. 23, 7.                          |
| A 5. 24, 4-11.  | TS III, 1, 8-10; III, 1-3; A 4. 17, 1-10; C 21. 119, 9-12.       |

It is apparent that Combe stole heavily from this letter when preparing C 9. We might in consequence argue that his use of it is proof of its authenticity. But if we examine the method Combe employed in developing the "nun theme,"<sup>23</sup> a suggestion for which he had found in Let Bk Ox 201, in view of the numerous parallels with TS which the letter contains together with borrowings from A 4., we are certainly justified in associating the reappearance of the "fire theme" with that of the nuns of Byland Abbey.

B. Letters supposed to have been written by Yorick and Eliza.

London, Printed for J. Bew, 1779, 2 vols. Reprinted as Sterne's Second Journal to Eliza, ed. M. R. B. Shaw,
London, 1929. References to B indicate the reprint.

The authorship of this work was quietly submitted by Combe's bookseller Bew in 1784 when at the end of the second volume of OL he advertised the book among others by Combe. Many years later Combe himself included it in a list of his writings: "Letters supposed to have passed between Sterne and Eliza. 2 vols."<sup>24</sup> Here then, we might argue, is a genuine imitation by Combe, one which, like the letters in Pic Nic, might serve to test the validity of C. But not many years ago these letters were reprinted under the title of Sterne's Second Journal to Eliza. The editor of the reprint, Miss M. R. B. Shaw, in the conviction that the authorship of these little volumes was pilfered by Combe, sketches in her introduction her reasons for restoring the work to Sterne. Possessing as she does a truly exquisite ear for prose rhythms, she declares that the work "contains no modulation, tonality or cadence foreign to Sterne"<sup>25</sup> and that its style "can bear comparison with Sterne's down to the smallest detail."<sup>26</sup> Hence, she maintains, Combe's stylistic deficiencies render impossible his authorship of "a work which, in characterization, composition, and style reveals a master in the art and craft of letters.

<sup>23</sup> See chart, p. 1093.    <sup>24</sup> Gent. Mag., May, 1852, p. 467.    <sup>25</sup> B, xix.    <sup>26</sup> B, xvi.

Here all is music, all is 'in tune with itself' . . . Its supreme art . . ."<sup>27</sup> And Miss Shaw proceeds to disclose her sensitive appreciation of the beauties of Sterne's English. But lest anyone cavil with her for resting her case solely upon perfection of style, she examines the literary allusions as well and finds them to be "precisely those that we should expect to find in an authentic work. All Sterne's favourite authors have been laid under contribution, either indirectly or by explicit reference to their works."<sup>28</sup> Unfortunately Miss Shaw neglects to tell us at what point Burton, Cervantes, and Locke exert their influence upon the text of B. No more does she explain why Milton, whose name appears, so I think, more often upon Combe's page than upon Sterne's, should be selected for discussion. No doubt this is small matter. But Miss Shaw, firm in her conviction that she is editing a work by the author of Tristram Shandy, has more cogent arguments. She has detected, for example, a resemblance between B and two passages in JE. Wherefore she concludes logically enough that the author of B based his work upon Sterne's journal. Still, is it not just possible that Miss Shaw has ignored certain structural similarities between B and YE Ox which, since it had been published in 1775, was available to Combe as a guide?<sup>29</sup> And was there not a patent forgery with the title Letters from Eliza to Yorick published the same year? This too might well have served the author of B while preparing Eliza's portion of his book. Indeed it is more plausible to weigh this possibility than to admit with Miss Shaw that Sterne himself was the author of her section. But Miss Shaw does not stop here. She thinks of Sterne quite rightly as a great and painstaking writer. In consequence, having observed the similarities between B and JE, she concludes that Sterne, growing dissatisfied with the æsthetic unity of the journal he wrote from his sick-bed, abandoned it for B which, she feels, is "in every way . . . the natural fulfilment of the first" journal.<sup>30</sup> She continues:

If this work is taken as his, then his other Works [by which is meant the Political Romance, Tristram Shandy, the Sentimental Journey, together with sermons and letters] fall into place as the gradual endeavour of an artist to achieve a more perfect expression of emotional experience, by a process of translation from the world of determined facts into that of the higher, freer, reality of art.<sup>31</sup>

<sup>27</sup> B, xv.<sup>28</sup> B, xxvii.

<sup>29</sup> In a review of B (Saturday Review of Literature, vi, 586), Governor Cross observed that the letters reveal "an intimate acquaintance with Sterne's works, with 'Tristram Shandy,' 'A Sentimental Journey,' his sermons, and his letters, which are frequently drawn upon for paraphrase and dilution. With the exception of the last letter, which purports to have been written while death is impending, all the rest, except for some anachronisms, keep close to the period covered by the ten letters from Yorick to Eliza." Cf. Henri Fluchère. "Laurence Sterne et William Combe," Revue Anglo-Américaine (av., 1931), pp. 313-328.

<sup>30</sup> B, xxxv.<sup>31</sup> B, xxxix.

Thus Sterne's perfect utterance becomes the Second Journal (B). It is, so the editor with pardonable emphasis avers:

the supreme apologia of Sterne's genius, the most penetrating and judicious study of his personality that has yet been written, and one that, by its organic connection with his Works, transcends the limits of an imitation.<sup>32</sup>

I shall not offer arguments against so large a statement. I shall simply confess my inability to recognize Laurence Sterne in the self-conscious exquisite whom Miss Shaw portrays. William Combe, on the other hand, appears to me to receive less consideration from Miss Shaw than his literary merit would seem to require. Assuredly he was not unintelligent. The myriad parallels noted below under C are in themselves a valid instance. And even B, which was never intended to be other than a series of letters supposed to have been written by Sterne and Mrs. Draper, is a meritorious, if now contested, imitation. Combe, let it be said, possessed the tricky skill Miss Shaw would deny him. His memory was keen, his familiarity with Sterne's life and writings most intimate, his sense of Sterne's rhythms adequate. What he lacked (his want of the faculty is apparent on every page of his imitations of Sterne) was his hero's gift of incisive thinking. Combe's cloudy trivialities are not the stuff of Sterne's prose.

But we must limit ourselves to a consideration of parallel passages. A glance at those noted between B and certain miscellaneous passages may prompt us to restore to Combe that which he declared he made.

a. B 11: I had breakfasted at a coffehouse, among pert, ignorant ensigns, and grey-haired letchers.

[? Derived from Hill's account of Sterne's jest at the expence of a captain in a York coffehouse; cf. London Chronicle 3-6 May, 1760, 434-435. Quoted by Cross, Life, 125-126.]

b. B 12: Do thy shipmates, Eliza, answer the expectation thou hadst formed of them? . . . I am . . . jealous of the young Son of Battle who accompanies thee. . . . I am really apprehensive that he will fall violently in love with thee. . . . On the same ship with Eliza for six whole months together!

YE Ox 314-315: I think you could act no otherwise than you did with the young soldier. . . . I think it . . . likely that he attaches himself to thee, Eliza . . . Five months with Eliza; and in the same room; and an amorous son of Mars besides!

c. B 13: I hope the pianoforte keeps in tune.

YE Ox 310: your piano fort  must be tuned.

<sup>32</sup> B, xxxviii.

d. B 20: I did not write merely to be read,—but to be studied.

e. B 23: I will furbish up my armour,—and sharpen my spear—and brighten my target,—and put a new vizor to my helmet, and be thy knight,—and sally forth, my fair Dulcinea, in defence of thy injured virtue.

f B 72: you may add this to the other Essays of an unfortunate Indian Lady.

g. B 150: the tears are now upon my cheek.—As I wipe them off,—I pray the Angel of Pity to stretch forth his hand,—and wipe thine away for ever!

h. B 16: I am resolved therefore, to have a few casts in plaister of Paris from the marble busts of me done by the celebrated Nollikens when I was at Rome; a couple of which I will order to be well glazed in imitation of marble.

i. B 43: I see the white cliffs of Albion lift their heads above the sea.

j. B 107: How did it happen that they had not a place in your Sentimental Journey?—But I recollect . . . that you have not yet, in your sentimental travels, reached Italy.<sup>34</sup>

Med Ox 90: I wrote not to be fed, but to be famous.

Let Bk Ox 291. I'll put off my Cassoc & turn Knight Errant for you, & say the kindest things of you to Dulcinea that Dulcinea ever heard. . . . I'll enter the Lists with him, and break a spear in your behalf; tho by the by, mine is half rusty, and should be hung up in the old family hall amongst Pistols!

YE Ox 320–321: I shall print your letters, as finished essays, “by an unfortunate Indian lady.”

TS II, 214: The accusing spirit which flew up to heaven's chancery with the oath, blush'd as he gave it in—and the recording angel as he wrote it down, dropped a tear upon the word, and blotted it out for ever.

Public Advertiser, 13 Feb., 1771, 1: “A Bust of the late Reverend Mr. Sterne.

. . . T. Becket, Bookseller in the Strand is ready to deliver to Subscribers a Bust of the above celebrated Genius, done from a Marble one which he sat to at Rome, executed by the famous Noliken. . . . The price in plain Plaister is One Guinea, or if done in Imitation of Marble, or bronzed, they will be Six Shillings more.”<sup>35</sup>

Letters of Eliza to Yorick, London 1775, 45 [a forgery]: I can no longer behold the white cliffs of thy native land.

Id. 17: I received your Sentimental Journey.<sup>36</sup>

<sup>33</sup> This advertisement, which seems to be the source for the corresponding passage in B, appeared in the Public Advertiser, it will be observed, three years after Sterne's death.

k. B 24n. Author's note: "This story has already appeared in a little local work, called the Philosopher in Bristol;—but although it may be found there,—yet as it was originally written for these volumes, it stands in its proper place."

Phil Brist. [By Combe.]

l. B 147: I love consistency in everything. . . . But of all the blunders of tasteless artists, or tasteless employers of them,—none can be so absurd as the introducing Grecian columns, etc., into Gothic buildings—I really lament the case of these fair daughters of ancient Art, when I see them in some of our Gothic cathedrals

[Combe], History of the University of Cambridge (London, 1815), II, 293: Of Gibbs's Senate House and its relation to King's College Chapel Combe wrote "Notwithstanding the acknowledged beauty of its elevation, yet 'when viewed in connection with King's College Chapel, it loses something of its magnificence by being placed in the vicinity of that celebrated structure.' Perhaps it may not be going too far to accuse the projectors both of the senate-house and the front of the public library, of a deficiency in just taste, evinced by their placing designs so totally incongruous in respect of architectural rules by the side of that venerable Gothic pile."

m B 27: When I am at Coxwold . . . I go to . . . the ruins of a Benedictine Monastery, about a mile and a half from my cottage . . . Many parts of the ruin are still entire, the refectory is almost perfect, and great part of the chapel has hitherto defied the power of time.

[Byland Abbey, built by monks of the Cistercian reform.] Cf. Gent. Mag., Aug., 1811, 108. the "habitable parts of this Monastery have disappeared, if we except some slight vestiges to the South of the Church." The writer of this article is at a loss to locate the foundations of the refectory.

n. B 50: I had seen Nature in every dress,—in the savage rudeness of the

OL II, 100: Browne,<sup>35</sup> whom I consider as the Claude Lorrain of garden-

<sup>34</sup> These parallel passages are supposedly written in the early spring of 1767. But SJ, to which both allude, was at this moment little more than a few notes and was not published until Feb., 1768. Miss Shaw justifies the anachronism on the grounds that "Sterne, it is well known, was in the habit of making modifications of this kind" (B, xxvii). It is difficult to reconcile this explanation with the appearance of the same "modification" in the forged Letters from Eliza to Yorick which was published four years before B.

uncultivated mountain, and exquisitely adorned by Taste and her disciple Brown.<sup>35</sup> ers . . . an improver of Nature with the implements of Nature.

Besides these suggestions of imposture and of Combe, there remains for consideration a group of phrases, to be found here and there among the letters of B, which afford quite as convincing proof of Combe's hand as any of the above parallels. The words chaunted (B 21) and chaunt (B 25) are uncharacteristic of Sterne. Suspicious likewise, because they recall a host of similar phrases appearing throughout the letters I believe Combe to have written, are such touchstones as "gouty world of its spleen" (B 133), "smooth thy pillow" (B 134), "vaticinated my destiny" (B 150), "that kind Being" (B 152) and a passage (B 148-150) devoted to Archbishops Sterne and Drummond. In my opinion these phrases are virtual proof of forgery. But I am well aware that to another they may not be such, since Sterne's own letters betray many occasions when he copied directly from himself. His letter to Lord Shelburne (Med Ox 196) is the most glaring illustration of his duplicity. Almost its entire contents are lifted from two passages in JE. Elsewhere his letters iterate a phrase or a series of sentences that he has already sent to other correspondents. Whence, it would seem, the occurrence of parallel passages in any collection of letters alleged to be his, far from furnishing proof of the presence of forgery, should on the contrary supply us with valid reasons for believing such letters genuine. But this argument is not based upon an intimate knowledge either of Sterne's habit of copying from himself or of the method employed by the writer of the questioned letters. Sterne copied from himself only upon occasion. In general, so far as is known, he relied upon fresh invention. But the writer of the letters under consideration, in order to simulate Sterne's style, was obliged to copy and recopy at almost every turn. This distinction, which is fundamental, is evident upon comparison of the parallels noted throughout my edition of Sterne's Letters with the bewildering number revealed in this study. In fine, throughout the entire series of Sterne's genuine letters, for the most part filled with accounts of his doings of which the doubtful letters are singularly innocent, the habit of repetition is at best infrequent, whereas among the latter a phrase is repeated until, as with Elaine's muttering, the ear wearies to hear it. And when Combe in established forgeries (D) is found using the tell tale phrase, there is only one conclusion to make, namely, that the phrase was part of his stock in trade and that letters, for the genuineness of which no authority exists, which contain it, are from his pen and from no other. For it is not so much his anachronisms that detect him as it is the manner in which he manufactured his forgeries and imitations of Sterne.

<sup>35</sup> This reference to the landscape gardener Lancelot Brown (1715-1783) is not especially characteristic of Sterne.

C. Original Letters of the late Reverend Mr. Laurence Sterne, London, Printed at the Logographic Press, 1788.

This collection of thirty-nine letters, from which I have accepted three as presumably genuine,<sup>36</sup> was published in April, 1788. Despite the statement on the title-page that the letters were "Hitherto unpublished," thirty had already appeared in the European Magazine between February, 1787, and January, 1788. No preface, attesting the authenticity of the collection, accompanied the volume. As a result the Critical Review<sup>37</sup> remained cautious:

The Letters are really excellent, and truly Shandean: they are such as Sterne might have written, or as he would not have disowned. From the internal evidence, there is no reason to doubt of their being genuine; but, if we compare them with the Letters published by Mrs. Medalle, they are so much superior, in point of correctness and elegance, that, if they are Sterne's, they must have been written by him with no common care. . . . On the whole, if they are not written by Sterne, they are superior to his real Letters.

The Analytical Review<sup>38</sup> denounced them: "We suppose very few, who peruse these letters, will hesitate a moment to pronounce them spurious, and, as such, will pass them over with contempt." In modern times the late Sir Sidney Lee rejected them,<sup>39</sup> but Mr. Lewis Melville and the late Mr. Sichel have quoted from them not infrequently. Governor Cross, who at one time was surprised that "this correspondence could ever have been regarded as genuine,"<sup>40</sup> has in later years come to believe that "most of them are in substance genuine beyond reasonable doubt."<sup>41</sup> The whole collection was reprinted in the Works of Laurence Sterne (Oxford 1926-27), Letters, 195-293.

External proof of Combe's authorship of C is not wanting. Besides confessing himself the writer of B, Combe laid claim to "letters in imitation of Mr. Sterne. 1 vol."<sup>42</sup> On first thought we are apt to identify this title with A until we note the association between Combe and the

<sup>36</sup> Ox, 126, 144, 147.

<sup>37</sup> June, 1788, pp. 439-440.

<sup>38</sup> July, 1788, p. 335.

<sup>39</sup> D.N.B., v.s. Sterne, LIV, 218a.

<sup>40</sup> Works of Laurence Sterne (New York, 1904), Letters and Miscellanies, i, xxviii.

<sup>41</sup> Life (New Haven, 1925), II, 278. In the last edition of Life (p. 611) he suggests that "several of them are in substance genuine."

<sup>42</sup> Three lists of Combe's acknowledged writings were printed by Robert Cole in Gent Mag., May, 1852, pp. 467-469. A fourth list Hotten compiled for his edition of Combe's Doctor Syntax's Three Tours (London, 1868), xxv, n. 3, XL-XLVIII.

printer of C which issued, we know, from the Logographic Press. In 1784 John Walter, later to be famous as the founder of The Times, had set up an office under Royal Letters Patent "for printing by words intire instead of single Letters,"<sup>43</sup> a process which he termed logography. Between 1784 and the year in which C appeared he printed forty books. Two years later, in 1790, he published Combe's continuation of Le Sage's Le Diable Boiteux, the Devil upon Two Sticks in England. Combe, we know, was Walter's associate at this time. In 1787 the first part of his edition of Anderson's History of Commerce issued from the Logographic Press and was followed two years later by a further example of his editing, Meares' Voyages to the North West Coast of America.<sup>44</sup> During this period he was doubtless a contributor to the columns of Walter's Universal Register.<sup>45</sup> And when in 1788 that paper changed its name to The Times, Combe remained in close relations with it, lending his hand and advice to Printing House Square until he was past seventy-five years of age.<sup>46</sup> It is thus by no mere coincidence that Walter should have chanced to print both his friend's continuation of a novel by Le Sage and what is apparently a forged edition of Sterne's letters. Internal evidence points to William Combe as the author of C. His association with Walter serves to buttress suspicion with something just short of proof.

C 1.—This letter (see Chart) is perhaps the most interesting example of Combe's method. It describes Sterne's visit to nuns whom he imagined to reside among the ruins of Byland Abbey, a Cistercian monument near Coxwold. No mention of such visits occurs in Sterne's published writings until April 16, 1767, when he alluded to the nuns in JE. A fuller reference, that which evidently served Combe as a source, appears in Lct Bk Ox 360–361. Acquainted with Sterne's fanciful revery, Combe, it seems, sketched his version in A 6, developed it four years later in B, and in 1787 published in a magazine a third variant which the next year he incorporated into C. A fourth version Combe forged for the Pic Nic (D) in 1803.

<sup>43</sup> London Chronicle, 22-4 Apr., 1784, p. 397. Cf. C. H. Timperley, Encyclopædia of Literary and Typographical Anecdote (London, 1842), p. 749; Macmillan's Magazine, Nov., 1878, 17–22; D.N.B., v.s. Walter, LIX, 248; History of the Times, I, 1785–1841 (London, 1935), pp. 3 ff.

<sup>44</sup> History of the Times, I, 13.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., I, 32

<sup>46</sup> Ibid., I, 133, 135.

C 1: Combe's use of the "nun theme," 1775-1803

1775 A	1779 B	1788 C	1803 D
I visited my abbey, as usual, every evening p. 28	To this place, after my coffee, unless prevented by inclement skies, I guide my daily steps p. 27	every day after coffee, I will take you to pay a visit to my nuns p. 2.	To this . . . spot, I take my walk every day after I have taken my coffee. p. 81.
		Have . . . patience, and I will tell you. p 2	have a little patience . . . to hear me out p. 80
		You must know then p 2	You must know then p. 80
	an afternoon pilgrimage I frequently make to the ruins of a Benedictine Monastery, about a mile and a half from my cottage p. 27.	on passing out of my back door, I very soon gain a path, which . . . brings me, in about twenty minutes to the ruins of a monastery p. 2.	about two miles behind my house, there is a fine ruin of a benedictine abbey. p. 80.
	'The pathway leads, by a gentle descent, thro' many beautiful enclosures and embowering thickets p. 27	after conducting me through several verdant meadows and shady thickets. p. 2.	A path, shaded by tall hedge-rows, through a succession of meadows pp. 80-81.
	I go to visit my nuns' p. 27.	This saunter of mine, when I take it, I call paying a visit to my nuns. p. 3.	This I call visiting my nuns p 81.
	These remains are situated on the banks of a clear gliding stream; on the opposite sidewhereof rises a bold ridge of hills, thick with wood—and finely varied by jutting rocks and broken precipices;—and these are so very abrupt, that they . . . encrease the solemnity of the place p. 27.	It is an awful spot—a rivulet flows by it, and a lofty bank, covered with wood, that rises abruptly on the opposite side, gives a gloom to the whole, and forbids the thoughts . . . from wandering from the place. p. 3.	It is by the side of a river, whose opposite bank rises in somewhat of a mountainous form; and where the craggs blend romantically with the wood that hangs about them. p. 81.

1775 A	1779 B	1788 C	1803 D
	then, perhaps, I lean over a neighbouring gate, and watch the gliding brook before me. p. 28.	So I lean, lackadaysically, over a gate, and look at the passing stream. p. 4.	Or sometimes I lean against a gate, and contemplate the arches p. 81.
far removed from the noise and bustle of a malicious world p. 28.	Here is it that I catch those sombre tints of sentiment which I sometimes give to the world—to humanize and rob it of its spleen p. 28.	and forgive the spleen, the gout, and the envy of a malicious world p. 4.	and then I return home to resume my pen, with the hope of doing some good to a gouty and splenetic world p. 81.
amid the mouldering arches of ancient greatness I take my solitary walk p. 28.		after having taken a stroll beneath mouldering arches, I summon the sisterhood. p. 4.	I . . . contemplate the arches p. 81.
	sometimes I sit me down upon a stone. p. 28 A few bunches of alders grow fantastically among the broken columns. p. 27.	and take the fairest among them, and sit down with her . . . beneath a bunch of alders. p. 4.	There I sit down upon the fragment of a pillar, beside a knot of alder trees. p. 81.

Parallels from Sterne are not wanting:

C 1. 1: running at the ring of pleasure.	TS III, 73: running at the ring of pleasure.
C 1. 4: I lean, lackadaysically.	SJ 64: in my lack-a-day-sical manner; C 16. 86, 19; 37. 205, 7.
C 1. 4: Fie, for shame! Tristram.	TS I, 54: Fy! Mr. Shandy ; D 80, 23.
C 1. 5: philosophers . . . in opposition to all their saws and see-saws.	Serm I, 222: see-saws of philosophy; C 2. 10, 19; 7. 37, 8–9; 20. 110, 13–14; 29. 160, 5.
C 1. 5. when he is pursuing some Dulcinea .	Med Ox 256: I myself must ever have some dulcinea in my head; Let Bk Ox 294, 10; B 23, 13; C 14. 74, 8; 29. 163, 3; 33. 183, 8.
C 1. 5: at the end of the chapter.	TS I, 22: to the very end of the chapter; D 26, 10.

- C 2. 7, 5. SJ 149, 1-2.
 C 2. 7, 17-20. TS I, Dedication, 7-8.
 C 2. 8, 5. TS II, 117, 1; ibid. III, 69, 15.
 C 2. 9, 6-7. C 26. 144, 16.
 C 2. 9, 16-17. SJ 109, 17; C 32. 175, 1-2.
 C 2. 10, 19. Serm I, 222, 7-8; C 1. 5, 5-6; C 7. 37, 8-9; 20. 110, 13-14; 29. 160, 5.
 C 2. 11, 1-3. TS II, 195, 9-14; C 20. 111, 11-13; 21. 116, 1-6; D 25, 25 to 26, 2.
 C 2. 11, 8. TS III, 50, 1.

Note the similarity of opinion between C 2. 8, 7-12 and example l on p. 1089. Compare C 2. 9, 13 with Rep., 3rd Ser., II, 89: Combe "was remarkably abstemious, drinking nothing but water."

- C* 3. 14, 2. Med Ox 353, 14-15b; 90, 24; A 5. 23, 2-4; D 27, 1-4.
C 3. 14, 9. Med Ox 353, 12-13b; C 18. 100, 15-16.
C 3. 14, 16-17. TS II, 89, 22.
C 3. 15, 3-10. SJ 51, 25-28; 144, 23-26; A 4. 16, 2-6. B 10, 8-10; 23, 9; 150, 9-11; C 19. 107, 9-12; 36. 203, 16 to 204, 1; D 34, 15-17.
C 3. 15, 13-14. TS III, 17, 8; B 134, 11; C 6. 31, 15-16; 19-107, 14-15.
C 4. 17, 1-7. Let Bk Ox 293, 3-7; A 6. 26, 1-8;
C 4. 18, 8. B 21, 26; 25, 5.
C 4. 18, 17. TS I, 31, 21-22; B 150, 7; C 18. 99, 10-11; 33. 184, 1.
C 4. 18, 19 to 19, 7. Let Bk Ox 294, 5-8; C 20. 109, 10 to 110, 11; 33. 184, 2-6.
C 4. 19, 8-9. JE Ox 336, 10; A 5. 21, 4-5; C 28. 159, 7-8.
C 4. 19, 12-13; 20, 7-11. Let Bk Ox 245, 3-4; C 18. 101, 14-15.
C 5. 22, 10-11. TS III, 2, 24-25; A 7. 31, 2-3; C 27. 150, 13-14; 37. 206, 17-19.
C 5. 23, 4. A 4. 15, 7; B 133, 22; C 18. 101, 3-5; 34. 191, 3-5; D 81, 24-25.
C 5. 23, 7. TS II, 111, 3-4; III, 1, 2; A 5. 23, 15.
C 5. 23, 8. C 18. 99, 4; 21. 119, 4; 27. 151, 4; 30. 167, 15-16; 39. 213, 6.
C 5. 23, 15. C 30. 166, 6.
C 5. 24, 4-6. TS III, 1, 1; 2, 21-23.
C 5. 24, 13-14. TS III, 2, 22-23.
C 5. 25, 9-10; 26, 2. Let Bk Ox 122, 8; C 22. 123, 10.
C 5. 26, 8-9. YE Ox 318, 17-18; Let Bk Ox 259, 12-13; Rep 205, 2b.

C 5. 27, 2-3.

Let Bk Ox 138, 17, A 47, 4; Let Bk Ox 245, 7.

The narrative on pp. 25-27 of C 5. has a parallel in B 148. Combe has evidently confused the Concio ad clerum which Sterne wrote for Dean Fountayne with one he never wrote for Archbishop Drummond. His source, if not recalled from Sterne himself, may have been Mem Ox 147, 11-17. Compare B 50, 13-19 with Mem Ox 146, 12-14b.

C 6. 31, 1-3.

Med Ox 237, 11.

C 6. 31, 5-9.

Med Ox 237, 1-3.

C 6. 31, 15-16.

TS III, 17, 8, B 134, 11, C 3. 15, 13-14, 19. 107, 14-15.

C 7. 35, 18-19.

C 20. 111, 14-16, 32. 179, 7-8.

C 7. 36, 11.

Med Ox 140, 23

C 7. 37, 8-9.

Serm I, 222, 7-8, C 1. 5, 5-6; C 2. 10, 19; 20. 110, 13-14; 29, 160, 5.

C 7. 37, 18-19.

Med Ox 140, 15-16; 277, 10; C 10. 51, 8; 19. 103, 10-11; 37. 205, 8.

This letter is supposedly written from Skelton Castle in September. Yet apart from this record there is none that shows Sterne at Skelton in September between 1760 and 1767. Combe was almost certainly acquainted with Hall-Stevenson; cf. Phil Brist, II, 60 and Ox 233, n. 3.

C 8.—See Ox 250-251. The concluding paragraph shows the following parallels:

C 8. 43, 7-14.

A 4. 14, 1-12, 5. 23, 10-12, C 21. 118, 16-18; Med Ox 251, 6-14a.

C 8. 43, 16.

TS I, 2, 4; C 27. 150, 16.

C 8. 43, 16-17.

TS III, 2-3; A 5. 24, 13; C 21. 118, 13-18; 24. 134, 14 to 135, 7; 39. 213, 4-10; D 179, 15 to 180, 3.

C 8. 44, 2-3.

Cross 263, 4-5, A 4. 15, 8-11; C 33. 183, 1-4; Phil Brist I, 37; OL II, 2, 18-19; D 26, 25-26.

C 9. 45, 1-4.

A 5. 19, 1-7.

C 9. 45, 9-10.

A 5. 20, 13-14.

C 9. 46, 8.

Med Ox 90, 24.

C 9. 46, 9-11.

Med Ox 256, 30-31; A 5. 20, 11-13.

C 9. 46, 18 to 47, 1.

A 5. 20, 15 to 21, 3; D 80, 4.

C 9. 48, 4.

Med Ox 2, 5.

C 9. 48, 14.

A 5. 21, 13.

C 9. 48, 16-19.

A 5. 21, 13 to 22, 2.

C 9. 49, 11-13.

SJ 13, 6-8; A 5. 22, 3.

C 9. 49, 18-19.

Med Ox 4, 37.

C 9. 50, 8-9.

C 17. 94, 18 to 95, 1.

C 10. 53, 6-11.

TS II, 128-132; Frag 23-24.

C 10. 54, 8.

Med Ox 140, 15-16; C 7. 37, 18-19;
19. 103, 10-11, 37. 205, 8.

C 10. 54, 13-15.

Med Ox 340, 17-18.C 10. 52, 4-8 is contradicted by Ox 437, n. 2.

Letter C 11. has no definite parallels. But for C 11. 59, 6 see C 12. 64-65 and its source in Med Ox 308. For probable errors in account of Sterne's relations with Garrick and Beard in 1760 see Ox 106, n. 1; 96. The last paragraph of the letter is certainly based upon genuine information. It relates how Sterne heard his parish clerk deliver a psalm of his own making anent the cattle plague.

Here's Jemmy How has lost a cow,
And so has Johnny Bland;
Therefore we'll put our trust in God,
And not in any other man.

In one of the Commonplace Books of the York antiquary, Thomas Beckwith, now preserved in York Minster Library, is a contemporary copy of this extraordinary psalm. The manuscript reads:

A Psalm composed by the Clark of Stillington & Sung by him at Divine Service on Sunday May 28th 1749.

Let us Sing to the Praise & Glory of God a Psalm of my Own Making.

O Lord we are fearfully Distrest
But Thou canst help us still,
Thou canst if thou wilt do thy best
Let Men say what they will.

For this Distemper are full sad
And Rages in our Town
It is enough to make one Mad.
The like was never Known.

There's old John Crow<sup>47</sup> & Richard Pen<sup>47</sup>

And likewise William Bland
With many more Substantial Men
Now Ruined out of Hand.

And we shall be quite undone
It is no Bout to Strive
And broke up every Mothers Son
As sure as we're Alive

No Christian Bull or Cow they say
But take it soon or Sine

And it is Tou to one I lay
Good God take care of mine.

For Lord thou know'st we are full poor
So help us for thou can
And we will put our Trust no more
In any Other Man.

The Doctors tho' they all have Spoke
Like Learned Gentlemen
And told us how the Intrails look
Of Cattle Dead & gone

Yeat they can nothing do at all
With all their Learning store
Then Come away thy self O Lord
And Vex us so no More.

But Come with help all in thy Hand
O Come without Delay
And Drive it forth out of the Land
For ever & for Aye.

Finis

<sup>47</sup> A William Bland and a George Crow were holding land at Sutton in 1755 (Fauconberg Rental). A Robert Bland of Stillington appears in the Parish Register in 1749 and subsequently. The implications of this psalm would have delighted A. W. N. Pugin.

- C 12. 64, 1-3. Med Ox 308, 7-8; C 11. 59, 6.
 C 12. 64, 8-9. TS II, 85, 27.
 C 12. 65, 3-10. Med Ox 308, 11-18.
 C 12. 67, 8. C 18. 96, 4.
 C 12. 67, 10-12. C 8. 43, 10-16.
 C 13. 71, 1-3. B 15, 19-25; TS, II, 85, 27.
 C 13. 72, 4-8. Let Bk Ox 294, 1-7.
 C 14. 74, 8. Let Bk Ox 294, 10; Med Ox 256, 8; A 4.
 16, 12, B 23, 13; C 1. 5, 9; 29. 163, 2-5;
 33. 183, 8.

C 14. 78, 7-8 is possibly an echo of Spenser, Prothalamion 11, 37-38. Sterne is supposedly writing from Scarborough, 29 August, 1765. In all likelihood he was at Coxwold. Blurred references to B—, A—, and Mr. F— may be imitation of Lydia's savage taste for discretion.

C 15. which treats of Sterne's efforts to supply his wife with money, in September, 1765, may have been concocted from Med Ox 228, 230-231, 238-239, 254, 260. Statements in the letter are not wrong unless we observe a discrepancy between C 15. 81, 1-9, wherein Sterne's credit with Becket is said to be low at the time of writing, and Med Ox 238-239, 254, 260.

- C 16. 86, 1-6. TS I, 85, 12-15.
 C 16. 86, 6-7. TS II, 48, 6-11.
 C 16. 86, 12. TS I, 234, 14.
 C 16. 86, 13-15. TS I, 82-83.
 C 16. 86, 19. SJ 64, 2-3; C 1. 4, 3; 37. 205, 7.
 C 16. 87, 14. TS I, 17, 12; C 25. 139, 14.
 C 16. 87, 19-20. B 150, 22; C 29. 163, 5-6; 31. 171, 18;
 39. 214, 5.
 C 16. 89, 6-9. Serm I, p. vii, 12-18.
 C 16. 89, 15-19. TS I, 85, 12-15.
 C 16. 89, 19 to 90, 1. TS II, 174, 4; III, 145, 1-2; A 5. 19,
 1-3; C 28. 158, 1.

Letter contains two misstatements. The Abuses of Conscience was not printed at the request of Sir Thomas Burnet (1694-1753), who was not present at the Summer Assizes at York in 1750 (cf. London Gazette, 10-13 Feb. 1749/50; id., 30 June-2 July 1750) but upon the invitation of Sir William Pennymann, High Sheriff of Yorks., and the Grand Jury. Furthermore Lady Fauconberg (C 16. 90, 9) had died 29 May, 1760, a few weeks before Sterne was installed at Coxwold. C 16. 88, 67 is recalled from Comus 634-5. Combe, not Sterne, be it noted, makes occasional reference to Milton.

- C 17. 91, 5. Med Ox 237, 1.
 C 17. 94, 18 to 95, 1. C 9. 50, 8-9.

Combe appears to have introduced (C 17. 94, 14-15) the names of Lady Mary Fitzgerald and her sister Lady Caroline Hervey. He was intimate with their family; Letters of Horace Walpole, ed. Toynbee, Supplement, II, 153.

- C 18. 96, 2. D 27, 9.
 C 18. 96, 4. C 12. 67, 8.
 C 18. 97, 10. Med Ox 394, 11; B 54, 16-22.
 C 18. 99, 4. C 5. 23, 8; 21. 119, 4; 27. 151, 4; 30. 167, 15-16; 39. 213, 6.
 C 18. 99, 6. TS III, 2, 24; C 27. 150, 13-14; 37. 206, 12-19.
 C 18. 99, 10-11. TS I, 31, 21-22; B 150, 7; C 4. 18, 17; 33. 184, 1.
 C 18. 99, 13-17. TS I, 32, 21-27.
 C 18. 100, 6-7. TS II, 245, 26; A 6. 28, 14-15; C 20, 113, 18-19; Phil Brist I, 69; OL II, 19. 21-22; Let Mar 18.
 C 18. 100, 9. TS III, 73, 2-3; C 1. 1, 5.
 C 18. 100, 10-11. D 80, 12.
 C 18. 100, 13-14. See chart, p. 1093.
 C 18. 100, 14. TS III, 190, 11.
 C 18. 100, 15-16. Med Ox 353, 12-13b; C 3. 14, 9.
 C 18. 101, 3-5. Med Ox 254, 13a; A 4. 15, 4-7; B 133, 22; C 5. 23, 4; 34. 191, 3-5; D 81, 24-25.
 C 18. 101, 15. Let Bk Ox 245, 3-4; C 4. 19, 12-13; 20, 7-11.
 C 19. 103, 1-6. Let Bk Ox 137-138; A 9. 44-48; C 37. 205-207; 39. 213, 17.
 C 19. 103, 10-11. Med Ox 140, 15-16; 277, 10; C 7. 37, 18-19; 10. 54, 8; 37. 205, 8.
 C 19. 105, 8-9. Med Ox 16, 3-4; 18, 11.
 C 19. 105, 14. B 76, 11.
 C 19. 107, 2-4. TS III, 190-191; SJ 144, 23.
 C 19. 107, 9-12. SJ 51, 25-28; 144, 23-26; A 4. 16, 2-6; B 10, 8-10; 23, 9; 150, 9-11; C 3. 15, 3-10; 36. 203, 16 to 204, 1; D 34, 15-17.
 C 19. 107, 14-15. TS III, 17, 8; B 134, 11; C 3. 15, 13-14; 6. 31, 15-16.
 C 19. 108, 8-9. Med Ox 256, 16-19; 279, 12-13a.
 C 20. 109, 4-9. Med Ox 396, 1a.
 C 20. 109, 10 to 110, 11. Let Bk Ox 294, 5-9; C 4. 18, 19 to 19, 7; 33. 184, 2-7.
 C 20. 110, 13-14. Serm I, 222, 7-8; C 1. 5, 5-6; 2. 10, 19; 7. 37, 8-9; 29. 160, 5.
 C 20. 111, 9. SJ 123, 8; C 32. 176, 10; 32. 178, 12.
 C 20. 111, 11-13. TS II, 195, 9-14; C 2. 11, 1-3; 21. 116, 1-6; D 25, 25 to 26, 2.

- C 20. 111, 14-16. C 7. 35, 18-19; 32. 179, 7-8.
 C 20. 112, 2. SJ 122, 22.
 C 20. 112, 9. Sern 1, 63, 20. (Merchant of Venice, V, 1, 85.)
 C 20. 113, 18-19. TS II, 245, 26; A 6, 28, 14-15; C 18.
 100, 6-7; Phil Brist I, 69, OL II, 19, 21-
 22; Let Mar 18.

Karl Friedrich Abel (1725-1787) admired Sterne. Sometimes in the company of friends he would catch up his viol da gamba and tell thereon the story of LeFever until he brought tears to the eyes of his listeners; cf. W. T. Whitley, Thomas Gainsborough (London, 1915), p. 366.

Letter C 21. written from Bond Street on Thursday, twenty-four hours after Sterne has reached town sometime after York Races. If genuine, C 21. belongs to Wednesday, 7 January, 1767. Internal evidence cannot support this conjecture. Parallels assist us in assigning the letter to Combe.

- C 21. 116, 1-6. TS II, 195, 9-14; C 2. 11, 1-3; 20.
 111, 11-13; D 25, 25 to 26, 2.
 C 21. 116, 10-15. TS I, 182, 11-24.
 C 21. 116, 15-18. TS II, 267, 4-6; D 26, 8.
 C 21. 117, 10-11. Let Bk Ox 293, 1.
 C 21. 117, 15. A 10. 50, 11.
 C 21. 118, 13-18. TS III, 2-3; A 5. 24, 10-13; C 8. 43,
 12-17; 24. 134, 14 to 135, 7; 39. 213,
 4-6; D 179, 15 to 180, 3.
 C 21. 118, 16-18. A 5. 24, 10 to 25, 1; C 8. 43, 16-17;
 24. 134, 14-18.
 C 21. 119, 4. C 5. 23, 8; 18. 99, 4; 27. 151, 4; 30.
 167, 15-16; 39. 213, 6.
 C 21. 119, 6-9. Let Bk Ox 294, 12-16; SJ 58, 25-27;
 A 4. 16, 12-16; B 23, 10-12; C 25. 139,
 12-15; 29. 163, 2-5; 33. 182, 7-9; 34,
 189, 18-20.
 C 21. 119, 9-12. TS III, 1, 9-10; A 4. 17, 4-9; 5. 24, 6-7.
 C 22. 121, 2. C 30. 167, 2-3.
 C 22. 123, 1. JE Ox 356, 24.
 C 22. 123, 5-18. B 16, 4-12; 148, 3 to 150, 4.
 C 22. 123, 10. Let Bk Ox 122, 8; C 5. 25, 9-10.

Contains information about portraits of Sterne by Reynolds and Gainsborough which I cannot reconcile with accepted details in his biography. Combe, as elsewhere, assumes that Nollekens is a celebrated sculptor. His fame in England did not begin until 1770. C 22. 124, 4-5: "Lord — is of a low, base, pimping nature." In a note to his portrait of Lord Beauchamp in the Diaboliad Combe remarks: "But a mean spirit . . . is a low, sneaking, base, fixed propensity to what is bad."

C 23.—See Ox 218–219.

C 24. 132, 1–8.

?Ox 164, 15–16.

C 24. 134, 9–13.

TS I, 78, 14–15; II, 178, 1–7.

C 24. 134, 14 to 135, 7.

TS III, 2–3; A 5. 24, 10 to 25, 1; C 8. 43, 16–17; 21. 118, 16–18; 39. 213, 4–10; D 179, 15 to 180, 3.

C 24. 134, 17.

TS III, 69, 10–11.

C 24. 135, 3.

TS I, Dedication, 5.

C 24. 135, 1–7.

D 179, 26–30.

C 24. 133, 4–10 is actually Molière's opinion of a doctor (cf. Le Gallois de Grimarest, La Vie de Molière, in Oeuvres de Monsieur de Molière, Paris 1710, I, 23). This work may have been known to Sterne. Scraps of a genuine letter seem to have been used in the forging.

C 25. 139, 12–15.

Let Bk Ox 294, 12–16; SJ 58, 25–27; A 4. 16, 12–16; B 23, 10–12; C 21. 119, 6–9; 29. 163, 2–5; 33. 182, 7–9; 34. 189, 18–20.

C 25. 139, 14.

TS I, 17, 12; C 16. 87, 14.

C 25. 139, 16–18.

B 23, 14–15; C 33. 183, 7.

C 25. 140, 6–8.

JE Ox 371, 26–27.

C 25. 140, 17.

TS I, 113, 13–14.

C 25. 141, 15–16.

YE Ox 317, 7; C 31. 174, 11–12; 36. 204, 15; 38. 211, 8.

C 26. 143, 4–6.

TS II, 110, 21.

C 26. 144, 11–13.

Med Ox 93, 13; 126, 8–9; A 1. 3, 11.

C 26. 144, 16.

C 2. 9, 6–7.

C 26. 145, 11–12.

TS I, 17–18.

Dated "Thursday Nov. 1." This conjunction fell in 1764 and, oddly enough, in 1787 when C 26 was published in the November issue of the European Magazine. Did Combe set down the date of the day on which he was composing this letter?

C 27. 150, 13–14.

TS III, 2, 24–25; A 7. 31, 2–3; C 5. 22, 10–11; 37. 206, 17–19.

C 27. 150, 16.

TS I, 2, 4; C 8. 43, 16.

C 27. 150, 17.

SJ 142, 19–21.

C 27. 151, 2–3.

TS III, 2–3.

C 27. 151, 4.

C 5. 23, 8; 18. 99, 4; 21. 119, 4; 30. 167, 15–16; 39. 213, 6.

C 27. 151, 6–7.

TS III, 191, 25–26; SJ 144, 7.

C 27. 151, 9–14.

SJ 128, 1–4.

C 27. 152, 3.

TS II, 212, 26; B 152, 14; C 28. 157, 8.

C 27. 152, 4–5.

TS III, 74, 23–24.

- C* 27. 152, 6-9. Serm I, 14, 13-14.
C 27. 152, 13-14. Serm I, 14, 4; B 26, 27.
C 27. 152, 17-18. TS I, 58, 4; III, 74, 12-13; SJ 57, 5 and 13.

Sterne is made to write from Dijon, 9 November, 1765. But he had reached Pont de Beauvoisin two days before! Cf. Ox 262.

- C* 28. 154, 3. SJ 8.
C 28. 155, 2-8. SJ 151, 5-10.
C 28. 156, 11-12. TS III, 73, 12-13.
C 28. 157, 8. TS II, 212, 26; B 152, 14; C 27. 152, 3.
C 28. 157, 12-13. SJ 145, 25-26.
C 28. 158, 1. TS II, 174, 4; III, 145, 1-2; A 5. 19,
 1-3; C 16. 89, 19 to 90, 1.
C 28. 159, 7-8. JE Ox 336, 10; A 5. 21, 4-5; C 4. 19, 8-9.

Dated from Lyons, 15 November [1765.] Sterne happened to be at Turin that day; cf. Ox 263.

- C* 29. 160, 5. Serm I, 222, 7-8; C 1. 5, 5-6; 2. 10, 19;
 7. 37, 8-9; 20. 110, 13-14.
C 29. 161, 1-3. Med Ox 414, 5-6a.
C 29. 163, 2-5. Let Bk Ox 294, 12-16; Med Ox 256, 8;
A 4. 16, 12; B 23, 13; C 21. 119, 6-9; 25.
 139, 12-15; 33. 182, 7-9; 33. 183, 8; 34.
 189, 18-20.
C 29. 163, 5-6. B 150, 22; C 16. 87, 19-20; 31. 171, 18;
 39. 214, 5.
C 29. 164, 14-15. A 4. 15, 2-3; B 14, 15-16.
C 30. 166, 6. C 5. 23, 15.
C 30. 166, 7-8. Med Ox 180, 18-20b; B 151, 8.
C 30. 167, 2-3. C 22. 121, 2.
C 30. 167, 4-6. JE Ox 329, 16-17; A 7. 36, 16 to 37, 1; B 151, 24-26; Rep 207, 10-13b.
C 30. 167, 15-16. C 5. 23, 8; 18. 99, 4; 21. 119, 4; 27.
 151, 4; 39. 213, 6.
C 30. 167, 17-18. Med Ox 419, 5.
C 31. 169, 1. TS III, 191, 15-16.
C 31. 171, 18. B 150, 22; C 16. 87, 19-20; 29. 163,
 5-6.
C 31. 171, 19. Serm I, 21, 30 to 22, 2 (Luke 16.3).
C 31. 173, 15 to 174, 9. Let Bk Ox 258-259.
C 31. 174, 11-12. YE Ox 317, 7; C 25. 141, 15-16; 36.
 204, 15; 38. 211, 8.

Letter written from Bond Street, 8 May [1767], a time when Sterne could hardly have composed in the manner of this letter (cf. Ox 338).

- C 32. 175, 1-2. SJ 109, 17; C 2. 9, 16-17.
 C 32. 176, 10. SJ 123, 8; C 20. 111, 9; 32. 178, 12.
 C 32. 177, 1-6. YE Ox 304-305.
 C 32. 178, 4-6. Med Ox 3, 37-38.
 C 32. 178, 12. SJ 123, 8; C 20. 111, 9; 32. 176, 10.
 C 32. 179, 7-8. C 7. 35, 18-19; 20. 111, 14-16.

C 32. 180, 16 is presumably a reference to the town house of Elizabeth Gunning (1734-90), wife of John Campbell, Marquis of Lorne and heir to the dukedom of Argyll, to which he succeeded in 1770.

- C 33. 182, 5. TS III, 188, 13.
 C 33. 182, 6. A 4. 15, 15-16.
 C 33. 182, 7-9. Let Bk Ox 294, 12-16; SJ 58, 25-27;
 A 4. 16, 12-16; B 23, 10-12; C 21. 119,
 6-9, 25. 139, 12-15; 29. 163, 2-5; 34.
 189, 18-20.
 C 33. 183, 1-4. Cross 263, 4-5; A 4. 15, 8-11; C 8.
 44, 2-3; Phil Brist I, 37; OL II, 2, 18-19;
D 26, 25-26.
 C 33. 183, 7. B 23, 14-15; C 25. 139, 16-18.
 C 33. 183, 8. Let Bk Ox 294, 10; Med Ox 256, 8; A 4.
 16, 12; B 23, 13; C 1. 5, 9; 14. 74, 8; 29.
 163, 3.
 C 33. 184, 1. TS I, 31, 21-22; B 150, 7; C 4. 18, 17;
 18. 99, 10-11.
 C 33. 184, 2-6. Let Bk Ox 294, 8; C 4. 18, 19 to 19, 7;
 20. 109, 10 to 110, 11.
 C 33. 185, 10-15. Med Ox 301, 3-11; 289, 7b; C 34,
 190, 4-5.

Dated from Coxwold, 19 August, 1766, the day following the opening of York Races. It is unlikely that Sterne was at Coxwold with no thought of the festivities at York in which he took a leading part. This date Combe used in D 178. Be it observed that Sterne at this moment was certainly ignorant of the fact that his wife and daughter were at Vacluse (cf. Ox 289b). C 33. 184, 18 to 185, 1 may be an allusion to Combe's term in "a French monastery"; cf. Thomas Campbell Life of Mrs. Siddons, London, 1834, I, 42n.

- C 34. 188, 9 to 189, 6. Serm I, 146, 15-23.
 C 34. 189, 18-20. Let Bk Ox 294, 12-16; SJ 58, 25-27;
 A 4. 16, 12-16; B 23, 10-12; C 21. 119,
 6-9; 25. 139, 12-15; 29. 163, 2-5; 33.
 182, 7-9.
 C 34. 190, 4-5. Med Ox 301, 3-11; 289, 7b; C 33. 185,
 10-15.
 C 34. 191, 3-5. Med Ox 254, 13a; A 4. 15, 6-7; B 133,
 22; C 5. 23, 4; 18. 101, 3-5; D 81, 24-25.

The themes of Vaucluse and the familiar invitation to Coxwold indicate forgery.

C 35. See Ox 254–255.

C 36. 203, 16 to 204, 1.

SJ 51, 25–28; 144, 23–26; A 4. 61, 2–6; B 10, 8–10; 23, 9; 150, 9–11; C 3. 15, 3–10; 19. 107, 9–12; D 34, 15–17.

C 36. 204, 15.

YE Ox 317, 7; C 25. 141, 15–16; 31. 174, 11–12, 38. 211, 8.

C 37. 205–207.

Let Bk Ox 137–138; A 9. 44–48, C 19. 103, 1–6; 39. 213, 17.

C 37. 205, 7.

SJ 64, 2–3; C 1. 3–4; 16. 86, 19.

C 37. 205, 1–8.

C 19. 103, 1–11; Med Ox 140, 16; 277, 10; C 7. 37, 18–19; 10. 54, 8.

C 37. 206, 9–12.

Med Ox 409, 18–21b.

C 37. 206, 12–19.

TS III, 2, 24–25; A 7. 31, 2–3; C 5. 22, 10–11; 18. 99, 6; 27. 150, 13–14.

On this letter see Critical Review, June, 1788, 442.

C 38. 209, 17–19.

TS II, 86, 4–6.

C 38. 211, 8.

YE Ox 317, 7; C 25. 141, 15–16; 31. 174, 11–12; 36. 204, 15.

C 38. 211, 10; Combe confessed to the writing of “Seventy-three sermons”; Gent. Mag. (May, 1852), 468.

C 39. 212, 4–6.

C 21. 118, 13–16.

C 39. 212, 7–8.

Med Ox 398, 20–21.

C 39. 212, 8 to 213, 1.

Med Ox 395, 5–13b.

C 39. 213, 6.

C 5. 23, 8; 18. 99, 4; 21. 119, 4; 27. 151, 4; 30. 167, 15–16.

C 39. 213, 4–10.

TS III, 2–3; A 5. 24, 10–13; C 8. 43, 12–17; 21. 118, 13–18; 24. 134, 14 to 135, 7; D 179, 15 to 180, 3.

C 39. 213, 17–18.

Let Bk Ox 138, 7, 21–24; C 19. 103, 1.

C 39. 214, 5.

B 150, 22; C 29. 163, 5–6; 31. 171, 18.

C 39. 216, 10–12.

A 6. 27, 14–15.

It is worth noting that both B and C close with the impending death of the supposed author.

D. The Pic Nic, 2nd Ed., London, 1806, II.

If Combe had concluded his disingenuous imitations of Sterne upon the publication of C, he would have made our investigation more treacherous than it is. But fortunately for us as for him there remained a public which, since it chose to cozen itself with pseudo-Shandean, Combe was willing to exploit. In 1797 he published anonymously his

Fragments in the Manner of Sterne. A copy in my collection of the first edition, addressed in Combe's hand to the actor Richard Wroughton "with the author's respects," should settle any question of authorship. The volume has not infrequently served me in identifying Combe's trickery in C.

But the last forgeries of Sterne of which Combe was guilty are the criminal's betrayal. There is no doubt about the author of the "original" letters of Laurence Sterne which appeared in the Pic Nic. A phrase once noticed there can with ease be traced backwards into C, back into B, into A, and sometimes into Sterne's own works. Such recurrent phrases are in the nature of peaching footsteps.

The Pic Nic Society, which under the leadership of Col. H. F. Greville had been founded in 1801, maintained an interest in drama similar to that of the Little Theatre movement to-day. To defend it against the jealous onslaught of the professional stage, Colonel Greville launched a periodical called the Pic Nic<sup>48</sup> and secured Combe as editor.<sup>49</sup> The first number appeared January 8, 1803. In after years Horace Smith, in an account of his brother James, who like him was a member of the editorial staff, took occasion to describe the editor's characteristic method of dispatching the paper.

If a column or two of the newspaper remained unsupplied at the last moment, an occurrence by no means unusual, Mr. Combe would sit down in the publisher's back room, and extemporize a letter from Sterne at Coxwold, a forgery so well executed that it never excited suspicion.<sup>50</sup>

The three fabrications to which Smith alludes appeared 19 February, 5 March, and 26 March, 1803.

- |                    |   |
|--------------------|---|
| D 25, 25 to 26, 2. | TS II, 195-196; C 2. 11, 1-3; 20. 111, 11-13; 21. 116, 1-6.   |
| D 26, 8.           | TS II, 267, 4-6; C 21. 116, 15-18.  |
| D 26, 10.          | TS I, 22, 2; C 1. 5, 18-19.   |
| D 26, 25-26.       | Cross 263, 4-5; A 4. 15, 8-11; C 8. 44, 2-3; 33. 183, 1-4; Phil Brist I, 37; OL II, 2, 18-19. |
| D 27, 1-4.         | Med Ox 353, 14-15b; 90, 24; C 3. 14, 2.  |
| D 27, 6-9.         | ? JE Ox 379, 1-10; 364, 38.  |
| D 27, 9.           | Ox 248, 11; C 2. 9, 5; 2. 11, 5; 3. 12, 1.   |
| D 27, 9.           | C 18. 96, 2.  |
| D 79, 11-12.       | ? JE Ox 346, 4-5c.   |
| D 80, 4.           | A 5. 21, 1; C 9. 47, 1.   |

<sup>48</sup> The Pic Nic, I, i-xvii, 1-6.

<sup>49</sup> The Farington Diary, II, 83.

<sup>50</sup> Horace Smith, Memoirs, Letters, and Comic Miscellanies in Prose and Verse of the late James Smith (London, 1840), I, 20 n.

- |                             |   |
|-----------------------------|---|
| D 80, 12.            | C 18. 100, 10-11.                                      |
| D 80, 20-21.         | C 16. 90, 9-10.  |
| D 80, 23.            | TS 1, 54, 16; C 1. 4, 16.                       |
| D 80, 28 to 81, 22.  | See Chart, pp. 1093.  |
| D 81, 24-25.         | A 4. 15, 6-7; B 133, 22; C 5. 23, 4; 18. |
|                             | 101, 3-5; 34. 191, 3-5.                                       |
| D 178, 2 to 179, 3.  | A 5. 19, 1-7; Med Ox 353, 1-2b.                 |
| D 179, 15 to 180, 3. | TS III, 2-3; A 5. 24, 10-12; C 8. 43,    |
|                             | 10-17; 21. 118, 13-18; 24. 134, 14 to                         |
|                             | 135, 7; 39. 213, 4-10.  |

D 180, 10-13 is quoted freely from the Prologue to Hall-Stevenson's Crazy Tales.

LEWIS P. CURTIS

Yale University

LXVIII

VOLTAIRE'S REACTION TO DIDEROT

IF we render to the word philosophy its true meaning of "love of wisdom," and inject into the word wisdom a few of the qualities suggested by the French word "sagesse," we shall find Voltaire and Diderot at the very heart of eighteenth-century philosophy. Since they were by no means wholly in agreement, a study of their personal and intellectual reactions should clarify many of the main issues and bring us a step nearer to an understanding of deism and materialism, of decadent classicism and renascent romanticism, and of the nobler eighteenth-century conceptions of reason and nature. This study will be centered around certain comments in Voltaire's hand in the margins of Diderot's works now in the Public Library of Leningrad.<sup>1</sup> Voltaire's reactions, however, are so often essentially personal that it will be necessary to consider the general relations between the two men. Certain letters of Diderot recently published have thrown new light on this rather unusual friendship, in which Voltaire appears the more tolerant and forbearing. An attempt will be made also to relate the essential ideas of the two philosophers to trends in modern thought.

In a letter to Palissot Voltaire said:

The philosophers are a small flock who must be kept from the slaughter. They have their failings like other men; they do not always write excellent works; but if they could all write against the common enemy, it would be a fine thing for the human race. The monsters called Jansenists and Molinists, after biting each other, are now joined in barking at the poor partisans of reason and humanity. These should at least protect one another from their fangs. . . . It is true that there are in Paris many charlatans in physics and in literature, but the political and theological charlatans are more dangerous and more hateful. The man in question [Diderot] is at least a philosopher; he is very learned and he has been persecuted.<sup>2</sup>

The very essence of Voltaire's attitude toward Diderot is expressed in these lines.

For Voltaire was above all a party man and in a very real sense the fighting leader of his party. Nowhere is this characteristic more manifest than in the contrast between his affection for Diderot and his hatred of Rousseau. His epithets against Rousseau have often been collected and repeated<sup>3</sup> but it has not so often been pointed out that they were inspired much less by diversity in thought than by questions of party loyalty.<sup>4</sup> Rousseau was first of all an apostate, a "Judas," a false brother—and many similarly unflattering titles were added unto him. Voltaire found it very difficult to forgive him for writing so many excellent pages in his Profession de foi du vicaire savoyard, which he himself re-edited and republished time and again. On the other hand, the picture of his undying loyalty to Diderot, in the face, be it said, of many a trial, has much more rarely been drawn. The history of this friendship can be given here only in its broad outlines.

<sup>1</sup> It gives me great pleasure here to express my appreciation of the courtesies rendered me during my stay in Russia in 1932 by both the Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries and members of the staff of the Public Library at Leningrad, as also my thanks to the Guggenheim Foundation for making my visit possible.

<sup>2</sup> XXXIX, 192.—References to the Moland edition of Voltaire's works will be thus indicated, by volume and page number alone. References to the Assézat-Tourneux edition of Diderot's works will be preceded by the word Œuvres. It will be noted that many of Diderot's letters to Voltaire have been included in the Moland volumes.

As far as can be learned, personal relations between the two men began in 1749 with an exchange of productions and of letters—the Lettres sur les aveugles for the Eléments de la philosophie de Newton, and an epistolary discussion of the religion of the blind. Voltaire considered Diderot's work ingenious and profound, and accepted the author into the company of philosophers by inviting him to a philosophic dinner.<sup>5</sup> Diderot in his reply kept the relations on a philosophical plane and failed even to acknowledge the dinner invitation. Twelve days later Voltaire was at Cirey with Mme du Châtelet. After that estimable lady's death, he was in Paris again from the middle of October, 1749, until the middle of June, 1750. But the two philosophers failed to meet until Voltaire's return to Paris in 1778 after an absence of nearly thirty years. Diderot seems to have been too busy, too careless, perhaps too proud to make the connection.

As Voltaire grew to know Diderot better, directly from a few of his books and from very rare letters, and indirectly through Diderot's many friends, d'Alembert, d'Argental, Mme d'Épinay, Damilaville, and Catherine the Great, a real affection was added to an already sincere admiration for his intellectual attainments. In 1774 Catherine wrote to Voltaire of Diderot: "C'est une tête extraordinaire que la sienne; la trempe de son cœur devrait être celle de tous les hommes";<sup>6</sup> and Voltaire

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Vallette, Jean-Jacques Rousseau genevois, p. 396, n. 2; E. H. Wright, The Meaning of Rousseau, p. 32.

<sup>4</sup> This opinion has been reached after an intensive study of Voltaire's correspondence. The evidence is cumulative, but references to a few of the more striking passages may be given: XLII, 150, 192 ("O comme nous aurions chéri ce fou, s'il n'avait pas été faux frère"), 236–238, 364; XLIII, 256, 263 ("Il n'a même été persécuté que pour des sentiments qui sont les miens"), 268, 286, 418, 425, 430, 438, 457, 530; XLIV, 83 ("L'infâme Jean-Jacques est le Judas de la confrérie"); XLV, 125, etc.

<sup>5</sup> XXXVII, 22–23.

<sup>6</sup> XLVIII, 551.

replied: "Je n'ai jamais eu la consolation de voir cet homme unique; il est la seconde personne de ce monde avec qui j'aurais voulu m'entretenir."<sup>7</sup>

In the course of this long friendship at a distance, Voltaire appears ever the more loyal, the more forgiving, the more just of the two. Once he has chosen Diderot as a "brother" and friend there is very little question of the sincerity of his esteem and affection. Diderot seems to have been unwilling to give himself wholly to the tie. In 1749, the year of their first exchange of letters, Voltaire—Diderot usually refers to him as "de Voltaire"—had a great reputation as a poet, but his character was being impugned, not to say maligned. Paris was full of the truths, anecdotes, and calumnies of the Voltariana. "Il serait à souhaiter," Diderot writes in his Neveu de Rameau, "que Voltaire eût encore la douceur de Duclos, l'ingénuité de l'Abbé Trublet, la droiture de l'abbé d'Olivet."<sup>8</sup> Many of Diderot's friends had belonged to salons as unfriendly to Voltaire as that of Mme de Tencin. Among his most intimate friends, Grimm and Naigeon were often unjustly hostile, while d'Holbach was temperamentally unable to comprehend Voltaire. D'Alembert, who might have cemented the friendship, was much more highly esteemed by Voltaire than by Diderot, and long served rather to keep the two men apart. More important still, Diderot was very jealous of his independence. He felt no desire to serve as acolyte to his celebrated fellow philosopher. On occasions even, in his effort to keep his judgment free, he was severely critical of Voltaire's works. Again, it seems evident that both men felt Diderot's superiority in metaphysics, Voltaire in all humility, yet maintaining his own position to the end, Diderot with that justifiable self-conceit of the man who knows more and knows he knows more. These attitudes are clearly shown in Voltaire's comments on Diderot's philosophical works, and in the latter's replies.

Desnoiresterres, in the long years of preparation for his excellent biography of Voltaire, noted and was himself affected by the great change in his subject's character after the unpleasantness at Frankfort, and especially after the establishment of the patriarch at Ferney. It is a striking coincidence that Voltaire increased mightily in dignity and humanity at the very time that he most bitterly opposed the orthodox religion of his day. (G. Desnoiresterres: Voltaire et la société au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, iv, 507-508.) Diderot was gradually won over by the love of justice and the humanitarianism of his contemporary. Although "Ma-homet is a sublime work," he wrote, "I would rather have rehabilitated the memory of Calas."<sup>9</sup> He is amazed at Voltaire's first efforts to give a public airing to the Calas affair, amazed that this genius, represented to him by Grimm and others as a petulant, jealous, self-centered old man, had a soul and human feelings that were revolted by injustice and that aspired to virtue. His exclamations end with that often-quoted phrase: "Quand il y auroit un Christ, je vous assure que Voltaire seroit sauvé."<sup>10</sup> But three days later he finds the petty jealousy displayed in Voltaire's Eloge de Crébillon unforgivable, and decides that the author is no better than second-rate in every genre.<sup>11</sup> A true friend would have understood and forgiven, or at least would not have allowed his momentary displeasure to result in such general depreciation. Diderot was capable, however, of rising to the heights of eulogy when the occasion required, when he had learned to know Voltaire better, and when he was bothered by the lack of sympathy and appreciation often shown to Voltaire by his friends Grimm and Naigeon. To the latter, who was outraged by one of the patriarch's habitual outbursts against his critics, he admits that Voltaire may often have been jealous, ungrateful, fawning, but to his own hurt alone. The other side must not be forgotten: for this octogenarian has held the whip over tyrants and fanatics, he has been the constant friend of humanity, he has avenged innocence in distress; he has introduced Locke and Newton to France, has attacked prejudice, preached freedom of thought, inspired a spirit of tolerance, sustained good taste against odds; he has done several praiseworthy things and written a multitude of excellent works. His name is honored in every country and will endure throughout the centuries. And Diderot, rather than jump on a man in the mire, would now magnanimously lend the helping hand and pull him out.<sup>12</sup> The eulogy is perhaps a little too reserved, admits a little too much, is a little too eloquent to indicate sympathetic affection. To Diderot, caught in the welter and confusion of Parisian small-talk, Voltaire was too great and too distant—a rarefied presence, a sort of great god Brioché with invisible strings, for whom he had no desire to serve as marionette.

<sup>7</sup> XLVIII, 558.

<sup>8</sup> Œuvres, v, 397.

<sup>9</sup> Œuvres, v, 426.

It was Voltaire, then, who, as leader of the party, was ever taking the initiative. If Diderot was interested in stressing the divergences in their thought, Voltaire was more concerned in emphasizing the fact that they were both partisans of the same true philosophy, of tolerance, enlightenment, and humanity. In his first letter, he says he has long esteemed Diderot and rejoices to see that he is against "stupid barbarians who condemn what they don't understand, and people of ill-will who join with imbeciles in proscribing enlightenment."<sup>13</sup> A few months later when

<sup>10</sup> Lettres à Sophie Volland (Paris, 1930), II, 117–118.

<sup>11</sup> Ibid., II, 121.

<sup>12</sup> This letter is dated 1777; it should be 1772. Voltaire was 78 years old at the time.

Œuvres, XX, 73.

<sup>13</sup> XXXVII, 22.

Diderot is imprisoned at Vincennes he writes against the persecutors of "poor Diderot" and induces Mme du Châtelet to intercede with her relative, the governor of the prison, for the purpose of making the imprisonment of "Socrates-Diderot" more bearable.

The Berlin sojourn and the subsequent period of wandering form an interruption of eight years in the relationship. His next intercession was with Palissot, in the letter quoted above. For every renewed attack of Palissot against Diderot, Voltaire rose to the latter's defense, and had his letters to Palissot published. Diderot calls Voltaire's epistolary commerce with Palissot shameful. It seems, however, that Voltaire maintained the balance of friendship in all loyalty, as he was able to do so well in his invaluable letters to those mortal enemies, d'Alembert and Mme du Deffand.

During the battles over the Encyclopédie Voltaire worked tirelessly to keep the little flock together. The period from 1757 to 1768 marks the height of personal relations between the two men. Diderot wrote letters only under the stress of necessity. Voltaire was dependent at first on d'Alembert, a regular and assiduous correspondent. His views were necessarily colored by those of this highly esteemed and loved friend. Mme d'Épinay, on her trip to Geneva, was astonished to find that Voltaire considered d'Alembert the real force of the enterprise and was happy to disillusion him in favor of Diderot.<sup>14</sup>

Acting throughout the critical years as the party whip, Voltaire first asked Diderot the names of his persecutors (Chaumeix, Berthier, Omer Joli de Fleury) that he might treat them according to their merits.<sup>15</sup> His efforts were especially directed toward keeping the party united. He believed it might be wise if all the workers abandoned the enterprise together until satisfaction should be obtained, but warns d'Alembert not to quit alone.<sup>16</sup> Then when it became impossible to keep d'Alembert in line, he is angry with Diderot for not joining him, and, to set the example, demands the return of his own articles. Diderot was very slow as usual in replying; he was much too preoccupied and independent to understand the niceties of social correspondence. Voltaire had also asked Diderot to return a note that he had too hastily written on the Cacouac affair, and the failure to receive it worked him up to one of his too habitual frenzies. He wrote repeatedly to d'Alembert and finally to d'Argental demanding that Diderot burn the letter in the latter's presence. Diderot resented this petulant display of mistrust, but finally wrote a very conciliatory and touching letter, in which he asked Vol-taire's aid in persuading d'Alembert to continue the work.<sup>17</sup> Never again does Voltaire appear to have suspected Diderot's essential honesty, goodness of heart, moral courage, and loyalty to the cause. In the letter, Diderot shows how chimerical is the idea of breaking with the French publishing houses and states his program: "Que faire donc? ce qui convient à des gens de courage: mépriser nos ennemis, les poursuivre et profiter, comme nous avons fait, de l'imbécillité de nos censeurs." The letter ends on a more personal note with a request for love and confidence: "Adieu, mon cher maître; portez-vous bien, aimez-moi toujours. Ne soyez plus fâché, et surtout ne me redemandez plus vos lettres: car je vous les renverrais, et n'oublierais jamais cette injure."<sup>18</sup>

<sup>14</sup> xxxix, 333. From Desnoiresterres, op. cit., v, 287, one would infer that this undated letter was written in March, 1758.

<sup>15</sup> xxxix, 364.

<sup>16</sup> xxxix, 386.

Voltaire was completely won over by this letter. Henceforth he appreciates especially Diderot's goodness of heart,<sup>19</sup> his human and emotional qualities. True, he writes time and again how sorry he is that "poor Diderot" is the slave of the book-dealers and at the mercy of bigots, that the Encyclopédie should degenerate, owing to stringent censorship, into a collection of puerile declamations, that the authors have not been able to form a society of brothers. Several months later, by midsummer of 1758, the letters between the two men are much more frequent. Voltaire pledges his continued support, is afraid that Diderot may not be able to use such uncompromising articles as "Histoire" and "Idolâtrie," is delighted when Diderot asks for all possible articles from his "cher maître," and on the eve of his departure for the Palatinate, sends best wishes for Diderot's glory and happiness, with vows of esteem and attachment. By November he virtually admits, in a letter to Diderot, that he had been wrong in following d'Alembert's advice and regrets that Diderot had not received better support.<sup>20</sup>

Palissot's Philosophes was an especially treacherous effort to combat the philosophical movement. It was not only an attack at a cruel moment on the authors of the Encyclopédie; it was an attempt to separate the leader from the flock. Voltaire was praised as highly as Diderot and his intimates were condemned. D'Alembert felt sure that Mme du Deffand was one of Palissot's protectors and instigators. There is some plausibility in the supposition, in spite of that lady's protesting reply to Voltaire's polite remonstrance. She, as well as Palissot, was interested in Voltaire's literary merits and in the now fading glories of the preceding age. She hated the encyclopedists and philosophers and would gladly have saved Voltaire for history and pure literature. The affair created an extremely embarrassing situation for the patriarch. He was obliged

<sup>17</sup> XXXIX, 401.

<sup>19</sup> XXXIX, 422.

<sup>18</sup> XXXIX, 402.

<sup>20</sup> XXXIX, 532, Cf. xli, 110

to state his position publicly, to reiterate his high esteem and affection for d'Alembert and Diderot, and to protest against Palissot's judgments. He wrote to the author:

Vous m'accablez de politesses, d'éloges, d'amitiés; mais vous me faites rougir, quand vous imprimez que je suis supérieur à ceux que vous attaquez. Je crois bien que je fais des vers mieux qu'eux, et même que j'en sais autant qu'eux en fait d'histoire; mais sur mon Dieu, sur mon âme, je suis à peine leur écolier dans tout le reste, tout vieux que je suis.<sup>21</sup>

This is interesting evidence that Voltaire was not always jealous of superior talent—not if his rivals were of his party and were named d'Alembert, Diderot, Buffon, Condorcet, Middleton, or Hume; nor is it possible to mistake the sincerity of his loyalty to his friends. The same loyal tone prevails in the letters to Mme du Deffand which were not written for immediate publication. The distance from Paris to Ferney, unkind rumors, and garbled accounts must be held responsible for Diderot's remark on the shameful nature of Voltaire's letters to Palissot.<sup>22</sup>

Voltaire's task of protecting the Encyclopedists was extremely delicate. It would not do to enrage the opposition to such a point that Diderot, "under its claw" at Paris, would be endangered. The latter felt quite often that that was the case and is seen alternately asking Voltaire for help and deploring the violence of his attacks against the common enemy. He failed to understand sometimes that Voltaire's outbursts of jealousy and irritability were often more party than personal matters. For Voltaire could forgive personal attack and applaud the works of other geniuses if the authors were or might be useful to his party in the struggle for tolerance. Diderot realized this in his better moments. Both in the heat and at the end of the long struggle, he thanked Voltaire for ever holding the whip over his enemies, and assured him that there was no man in the world whose life was more precious than his.<sup>23</sup>

For many years it was Voltaire's great ambition to have Diderot elected to the French Academy, first because it would be a mortal blow to the infamous persecutors of true philosophy, and secondly, because, as he wrote to Mme d'Épinay, no candidate was more worthy unless it be Spinoza.<sup>24</sup> So great was his enthusiasm that he even promised to come to Paris to register his vote for "Socrates," and thus defy "Anitus," in the person of Omer Joli de Fleury.<sup>25</sup> D'Alembert, recognizing the strength of the opposition, tried to discourage Voltaire, while Grimm and Mme

<sup>21</sup> XL, 433.

<sup>22</sup> Lettres à Sophie Volland, I, 268.

<sup>23</sup> XLI, 79-80; Œuvres, XX, 73.

<sup>24</sup> XL, 478.

<sup>25</sup> XL, 453. See Voltaire's Socrate.

d'Épinay knew that Diderot would never take the necessary steps and follow Voltaire's cynical suggestion of procedure: Diderot could deny that he wrote a certain metaphysical treatise, profess once again his catholicity, seduce and go to mass with some pious lady, and success would be certain.<sup>26</sup> Diderot's atheism was not common knowledge and Voltaire was anxious to show the world that the philosophers were good, patriotic, law-abiding citizens, who respected the deity.<sup>27</sup> Diderot's essential goodness was publicly esteemed. His election to the Academy would have been a tremendous victory for philosophy. Regardless of motives and methods of procedure, it is regrettable that this long-enduring dream of Voltaire's was never fulfilled.

A period of closer intimacy now ensued through the agency of Damilaville who, from 1760 until his death in 1768, served to bind the two men more closely together. The advantages obtained through his official position greatly decreased the dangers of sending letters and packages through the post. Diderot was willing to let this enthusiastic servant of philosophy send the news of Paris to Ferney, and Voltaire's letters to Damilaville were always to be shared with their mutual friend. During these years Voltaire's affection for the man Diderot is rapidly developing. A letter from the heart is announced, but is unfortunately missing from the record.<sup>28</sup> The letters to Damilaville reveal his esteem and affection: "Vous vous êtes lié avec M. Diderot, pour qui j'ai une estime égale à son mérite: la lumière qui éclaire son esprit échauffe son cœur."<sup>29</sup> In this most friendly and revealing correspondence, Diderot is at first "Pantophile-Diderot," but this is soon changed to the steadily recurring "Platon-Diderot" or, in time of danger, M. Tonpla. In spite of his often-repeated objections to Platonic philosophy, Voltaire recognized Plato's genius, and undoubtedly meant this title as a compliment—at least there was nothing equivocal about it as in the "Sémiramis" attached to Catherine II—yet it would seem that Lucrèce or Lucien would have been a much more fitting appellation.

Through Damilaville too, Diderot met Thieriot and rejoiced with him over the success of Tancrède, which Diderot praised for its pathos, secured through the use of pause and pantomime. He was prevailed upon to send his criticisms to Voltaire. Leaving aside for the present the more important critical ideas involved, it is noteworthy that Diderot desired still more pathos, more emotional feeling, and that Voltaire modified his play in accordance with Diderot's wishes.<sup>30</sup> While consenting, however, to make the father in Tancrède more pathetic and more touching,

<sup>26</sup> XI, 503-504.

<sup>27</sup> Letter to Stanislas; XI, 512.

<sup>28</sup> XI, 526.

<sup>29</sup> XII, 68.

<sup>30</sup> "Tâchez donc qu'Argire soit plus père," XII, 77; cf. XII, 99, 101, 109.

he could not possibly be expected to approve unreservedly of Diderot's Père de famille. His tremendous interest in the success of that play must be attributed then to his friendship for Diderot and to his desire to see him elected to the number of the Immortals: "Joue-t-on Tancrède?" he wrote to Thieriot early in 1761; "joue-t-on le Père de famille? O mon cher frère Diderot! je vous cède la place de tout mon cœur, et je voudrais vous couronner de lauriers."<sup>31</sup> On the same subject, to Damilaville he wrote: "Puissent toutes les bénédictions être répandues sur nos frères! Puisse la lumière éclairer tous les yeux, et l'humanité pénétrer tous les cœurs!"<sup>32</sup> and to the same: "Je prie Dieu pour le succès du Père de famille." This prayer to God eloquently shows to what extremes Voltaire would go in the interests of friendship. This time again his hopes were dashed; the Abbé Trublet, an enemy of the Encyclopédie, "who compiled and compiled and compiled,"<sup>33</sup> was elected. Voltaire wrote to Mme d'Epinay:

Si vous voyez M. Diderot, priez-le de faire nos compliments au cher abbé Trublet. J'aime à mettre ces deux noms ensemble. Les contrastes font toujours un plaisant effet, quoi que le monde en dise.<sup>34</sup>

Voltaire's part in the Calas affair served to warm Diderot's heart toward the enlightened despot of Ferney. An eloquent, impassioned paragraph in a letter to Voltaire reveals the ardor of his enthusiasm:

Ah grand frère, vous ne savez pas combien ces gueux qui, faisant sans cesse le mal, se sont imaginé qu'il était réservé à eux seuls de faire le bien, souffrent de vous voir l'ami des hommes, le père des orphelins, et le défenseur des opprimés. Continuez de faire de grands ouvrages et de bonnes œuvres, et qu'ils en crèvent de dépit. Adieu, sublime, honnête et cher antechrist.<sup>35</sup>

Diderot revealed himself here as a true brother. He carried out small commissions for Voltaire at Paris, and placed in safe and useful hands many copies of the Traité sur la tolérance: "Ils sont tous pour les bienveillants de l'homme et de la chose," he wrote to Damilaville; "Leur devise est aussi: Proscrivez l'infâme."<sup>36</sup>

In their choice and approval of methods the two philosophers were never in agreement. Diderot had little taste for what he called "de plates et fastidieuses rabâcheries sur Jésus-Christ et ses apôtres."<sup>37</sup> Voltaire based his appeal on history and the past, while Diderot, especially interested in the promising future of the natural sciences, was more sweeping and radical in his attack. Voltaire considered that metaphysical

<sup>31</sup> XLI, 163, 172.

<sup>32</sup> XLI, 215, 211.

<sup>33</sup> Thus satirized by Voltaire in Le pauvre diable, x, 107-108.

<sup>34</sup> XLI, 255.

<sup>35</sup> XLII, 253.

<sup>36</sup> Correspondance inédite, I, 276.

<sup>37</sup> Lettres à Sophie Volland, III, 176.

works were too little read and understood for propaganda purposes. He would have liked to win over d'Alembert and Diderot, and asks Diderot to persuade Helvétius to join him in his battle of tracts.<sup>38</sup> He formed the sublime project, in 1766, of retiring with these men and a printing press to Clèves under Frederick II's protection, far away from the barbarians who had persecuted and assassinated the Chevalier de la Barre. There, with freedom and unity of purpose, humanity might at last be enlightened and the face of things could be changed. Diderot should at least come to see the spot that he had selected for the untrammelled manufacture of enlightenment, for Voltaire often expressed his regrets that he might die without seeing his beloved confrère.<sup>39</sup>

The dreams of this philosophic castle at Clèves were not destined to fulfillment. Voltaire alone was enthusiastic, and perhaps he, too, had misjudged the immediate dangers of persecution as well as the ties that bound him to Ferney. After disappointments and in moments of pessimism, it was his habit to repeat the final word of Candide and to set about cultivating his garden.<sup>40</sup> Diderot wrote him another charming letter. Voltaire reread it time and again and his heart was alternately wrung and warmed. Diderot pleaded his family obligations, the deceptive tranquillity of everyday life in the streets of Paris, the innocence and obscurity of his own life. The letter ends most eloquently:

Illustre et tendre ami de l'humanité, je vous salue et vous embrasse. Il n'y a point d'homme un peu généreux qui ne pardonnât au fanatisme d'abrégér ses années, si elles pouvaient ajouter aux vôtres. Si nous ne concouons pas avec vous à écraser la bête, c'est que nous sommes sous sa griffe, et si, connaissant toute sa férocité, nous balançons à nous éloigner, c'est par des considérations dont le prestige est d'autant plus fort qu'on a l'âme plus honnête et plus sensible. Nos entours sont si doux, et c'est une perte si difficile à réparer!<sup>41</sup>

Diderot's naive honesty and simplicity completely won Voltaire's heart. In a more general way, it is very likely that Diderot was instrumental in the growth of "sensibilité," of that sympathetic love for men, which became more and more characteristic of Voltaire during the Ferney period. M. Thomas writes:

C'est Diderot qui a communiqué à tout son siècle l'amour spontané de l'humanité, le besoin de substituer à la notion abstraite de l'homme général, tel que l'ont peint La Rochefoucauld ou Racine, la réalité vivante de l'être de chair, émouvant dans sa faiblesse, admirable dans son universelle curiosité.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>38</sup> XLIII, 3.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. XLIII, 183.

<sup>39</sup> XLIV, 357, 358, 361, 366, 407, 429, 432.

<sup>41</sup> XLIV, 371.

<sup>42</sup> L'humanisme de Diderot, p. 76. Cf. P. Trahard: Les maîtres de la sensibilité française au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, Vol. II.

In the face of criticism too often prejudiced, it would be interesting to draw up the list of those persons upon whom Voltaire lavished his affections. Diderot would find his place there in the philosophic section along with Thieriot, d'Alembert, Marmontel, and Damilaville.

The friendship continued its even tenor during the final decade of Voltaire's life. He was delighted with the progress of the Encyclopédie, in spite of its faults, delighted with the honor paid Diderot by Catherine of Russia, and ever ready to pay tribute to "the immortal vanquisher of fanaticism."<sup>43</sup> True, he could not agree with the growing movement of atheistic materialism, and openly objected to Diderot's position in his Lettres de Memmius à Cicéron; but he forgives the atheists their dangerous metaphysics on account of their humanity, their love of tolerance, and hatred of fanaticism.<sup>44</sup> At the age of eighty-two, he addressed an affectionate letter to Diderot, in which, not foreseeing his final triumphant visit to Paris, he regretted that he must die without meeting him. After mentioning their former friend Damilaville, he continues:

Cet ami savait que nous n'étions pas si éloignés de compte, et qu'il n'eût fallu qu'une conversation pour nous entendre, mais on ne trouve pas partout des hommes avec qui on puisse parler. . . . Le peu que j'ai lu de vous me rend presque tous les autres livres insipides. En un mot, vos ouvrages et votre personne causent mes regrets<sup>45</sup>

In a fit of sickness, some years before, he wrote to Diderot that he was soon to see, presumably in the Elysian Fields, friend Damilaville, who likewise had denied intelligence in the universe, and that he would then know who was right. Disagreement, however, even on a question so important as this was no bar to friendship: "Il me niait l'intelligence, et nous étions bons amis."<sup>46</sup> And to Grimm he wrote: "Embrassez pour moi, je vous prie, frère Platon, quand même qu'il n'admettrait pas l'intelligence."<sup>47</sup>

This tolerant attitude contrasts rather strangely with Diderot's frequent rigidity. In 1749, as a deist, Diderot had said he was a believer in God but lived very comfortably with atheists.<sup>48</sup> Later, as an atheist, he found it very difficult to forgive Voltaire for remaining a deist. He is reported to have called Voltaire a "cagot," and certainly showed little tact, little respect for the sacred rites of friendship in pressing his point at inopportune moments. First he filled a whole letter with atheistic arguments for Damilaville while the latter was Voltaire's guest at Ferney. And it seems difficult to believe that he did not stress this same point, as we know he did the divergence in their appreciation of Shake-

<sup>43</sup> XLVI, 543.

<sup>44</sup> XLVI, 300.

<sup>45</sup> L, 150.

<sup>46</sup> XLVIII, 96.

<sup>47</sup> XLVII, 220.

<sup>48</sup> XXXVII, 25.

speare, when the two old warriors met at last in Paris.<sup>49</sup> There was no question here of sacrificing convictions to friendship—Voltaire did not do that even for his beloved Mme du Châtelet;<sup>50</sup> it was rather a case for friendly forbearance in discussing points at issue, for stressing the many points of sympathetic agreement. Diderot would hardly have been himself, however, if he had not taken this occasion, too, for the exercise of his exuberant eloquence, thereby offering Voltaire, who had been forced to adopt the rôle of listener, the occasion for one of his more famous bons mots: “Cet homme a de l’esprit assurément; mais la nature lui a refusé un talent et un talent essentiel: celui du dialogue.”<sup>51</sup>

It is reported<sup>52</sup> that after seeing Voltaire, Diderot likened him to an old fairy castle fallen in ruins but still inhabited by some old sorcerer. It would be unjust, however, to conclude a chapter on this friendship with such anecdotes alone, especially when we have an account written by Diderot which, in itself, forms an admirable summary of the preceding sketch of their personal relations:

J’ai pris la liberté de contredire de vive voix et par écrit M. de Voltaire, avec les égards que je devais aux années et à la supériorité de ce grand homme, mais aussi avec le ton de franchise qui me convenait, et cela sans l’offenser, sans en avoir entendu de réponses désobligeantes. Je me souviens qu’il se plaignait un jour avec amertume de la flétrissure que les magistrats imprimaient aux livres et aux personnes: “Mais, ajoutai-je, cette flétrissure qui vous afflige, est-ce que vous ne savez pas que le temps l’enlève, et la reverse sur le magistrat injuste? La cigue valut un temple au philosophe d’Athènes. . . .” Alors le vieillard m’enlaçant de ses bras, et me pressant contre sa poitrine, ajouta: “Vous avez raison, et voilà ce que j’attendais de vous. . . .” D’autres en ont éprouvé la même indulgence.<sup>53</sup>

The picture is almost too perfect to warrant comment. Diderot is proud to the end of his intellectual independence, his full-toned frankness in the very face of the great literary dictator. Voltaire, affectionate, too great to be affectionately loved in return, again takes the initiative, indulgently awaits the word he can heartily approve and presses to his breast the man who had bravely fought so many battles with him in the cause of humanity.

This rapid sketch of the personal relations between Diderot and Voltaire is a necessary introduction to the study of Voltaire’s appreciation of Diderot’s thought and comments on his works. It has already been apparent that in a general way he was of the number of Diderot’s con-

<sup>49</sup> Desnoiresterres, op. cit., VIII, 128.

<sup>50</sup> XXXVII, 515.

<sup>51</sup> Desnoiresterres, op. cit., VIII, 129.

<sup>52</sup> Correspondance secrète, v, 292.

<sup>53</sup> Œuvres, III, 394.

temporaries who knew, understood, and highly esteemed those works which the intrepid philosopher consented to reveal to his century. Many among them, Grimm, d'Alembert, d'Holbach, Mme d'Épinay, Naigeon, and others, knew, too, the works reserved for posterity. Voltaire was not one of this more intimate group. True, he offered to exchange manuscripts with Diderot, but these were articles for the Encyclopédie. There is no evidence that he had any knowledge whatsoever of such important works as the Neveu de Rameau, Jacques le Fataliste, or the Rêve de d'Alembert. Nor did he suspect the existence of a Sophie Volland. It was his acquaintance with a relatively small number of works, then, that led Voltaire to judge himself a mere pupil in matters concerning metaphysics and the natural sciences, to place Diderot in a position second only to Spinoza, to remark that he alone was capable of writing the history of philosophy, and, late in life, to write that his works made most other books seem insipid.<sup>54</sup> Voltaire had considerable difficulty in procuring Diderot's works, especially after the death of Damilaville. He admits in a letter to Diderot in 1776 that he hasn't succeeded in getting them all and that he has therefore read relatively little. The number now in his library, at Leningrad, is nevertheless considerable:

Pensées philosophiques. La Haye, 1746. In-12. [5-128].<sup>55</sup>

Mémoires sur différens sujets de mathématiques. Paris, 1748. In-8. [8-78.]

Lettres sur les aveugles. Londres, 1749. In-8. [5-152.]

Lettre de M. Diderot au R. P. Berthier (Contains "Ordre encyclopédique" and article "Art.") S.l., 1751. Petit in-8. [5-81.]

Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature. S.l., 1754. In-12, 206 pp. [5-129.]

Le Fils naturel. Amsterdam, 1757. [6-45.]

Ibid. Amsterdam, 1760. [11-151.]

[and d'Alembert] Encyclopédie. Paris, 1751-57. Vols. I-VII. In-folio. [5-258.]

Ibid. Neuchatel, 1765. Vols. IX-XVII. In-folio. [5-258.]

Recueil de planches. Paris, 1762-68. 6 vols. in-folio. [5-259.]

Supplément à l'Encyclopédie. Amsterdam, 1776-77. 4 vols. in-folio. [6-321.]

Suite du recueil de planches. Paris, 1777. In-folio. [5-260.]

Le Père de famille. Paris, 1770. [11-151.]

Œuvres philosophiques. Amsterdam, 1772. 6 vols. in-8. [11-219.]

Collection complète des œuvres phil., litt. et dramatiques. Londres, 1773. (Tome III only.) In-8. [11-220.]

Pensées philosophiques. Entretien d'un philosophe avec M<sup>de</sup> la Duchesse de x x x. Londres, 1777. In-8. [2-136.]

<sup>54</sup> XL, 433, 478; XLIV, 190; L, 150.

<sup>55</sup> The numbers in brackets are the case and volume numbers of Voltaire's books in the Public Library of Leningrad.

Essai sur les règnes de Claude et de Néron et sur les mœurs et les écrits de Sénèque.
Londres, 1782.<sup>56</sup> 2 vols in-12. [11-220 ]

It is an interesting fact that Voltaire's marginal comments in books written by his enemies are much more numerous than those on the pages of books of which he approved. The notes on the margins of Rousseau's works, recently collected and published in full by Professor George R. Havens,<sup>57</sup> are relatively numerous. The comments on philosophical and religious questions are likewise predominant. Volumes containing novels and plays are much more rarely annotated. Voltaire commented in the margins of two different copies of Diderot's Pensées philosophiques, once at some indeterminate date, and again, in a volume including the famous Entretien d'un philosophe avec Mde. la Duchesse de x x x, during the last year of his life. There are also page markers in the Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature revealing his interest in, but not his reactions to certain arguments of that important work. For Voltaire's other comments it has been necessary to search his correspondence as completely as possible, and various other works such as the Preface to les Scythes and the Lettres de Memmius à Cicéron. The light shed from this angle on the contrasts, compromises, and blendings of their opinions will clarify, it is hoped, the ideas of two men who were, and still are, potent factors in the making of the history of thought.

Diderot's Lettre sur les aveugles was the occasion of the first recorded contact. The epistolary discussion of this work served to bring out the principal disagreement in their metaphysics which was to endure to the end. Voltaire was nevertheless sincere in his admiration for the ingenuity and profundity of the treatise. He had already himself written of Saunderson in his Éléments de la philosophie de Newton and sent Diderot a new edition, in which the incident was described in more detail. He was especially pleased to note the scientific, experimental method employed, and to recognize Diderot as a worthy brother in philosophy. Voltaire's objections were centered on the least scientific part of the work, on Diderot's supposition that Saunderson denied a God because he was blind:

Mais je vous avoue que je ne suis point du tout de l'avis de Saunderson, qui nie un Dieu parce qu'il est né aveugle. Je me trompe peut-être, mais j'aurais, à sa place, reconnu un être très intelligent qui m'aurait donné tant de suppléments de la vue; et en apercevant par la pensée des rapports infinis dans toutes les choses, j'aurais soupçonné un ouvrier infiniment habile. Il est fort impertinent

<sup>56</sup> It is possible that Voltaire left a standing order for Diderot's works as they appeared, and that this volume, published after his death and the transfer of his library to St. Petersburg, was sent along and added to the collection.

<sup>57</sup> Voltaire's Marginalia on the Pages of Rousseau, (Columbus, Ohio, 1933).

de prétendre deviner ce qu'il est, et pourquoi il a fait tout ce qui existe; mais il me paraît bien hardi de nier qu'il est.<sup>58</sup>

Clogenson remarks that it was because of his constant and profound conviction of the existence of a God that Voltaire was called a "cagot" by Diderot.<sup>59</sup>

Diderot replied by saying that Saunderson's idea of God is not his own, perhaps because he himself sees: "Ces rapports qui nous frappent si vivement n'ont pas le même éclat pour un aveugle: il vit dans une obscurité perpétuelle, et cette obscurité doit ajouter beaucoup de force pour lui à ses raisons métaphysiques." He confesses that the darkness of night brings him doubts of the existence of God which are dissipated with the rising sun. To this subjective reason "à la Jean-Jacques," he adds others which he did not dare to attribute to Saunderson, on account of the persecuting barbarians and imbeciles mentioned in Voltaire's letter. As the result of these arguments on the inconceivability of interaction between matter and spirit, Saunderson would say that corporeal being is no less independent of spiritual being than spiritual being is of corporeal being; that they together compose the universe and that the universe is God; and Diderot cleverly turns Voltaire's argument against him: "Quelle force n'ajouterait point à ce raisonnement l'opinion qui vous est commune avec Locke: que la pensée pourrait bien être une modification de la matière!" He then comes directly to the heart of the question. To Voltaire's observation of the infinite relationship between things and the marvelous ordering of the universe, Saunderson would reply that these are merely subjective feelings that exist only in the mind, that man, like the ant and the worm, can find livable quarters in a world formed entirely by chance. Diderot then shows that the question is of no practical significance anyway. Although he believes in God he gets along very comfortably with atheists, who are enthusiastic about the good and the beautiful like other honorable people, and who are not deficient in moral conduct in spite of their belief in the theory of determinism. It is important not to mistake hemlock for parsley, but of no importance at all to believe or not to believe in God—an idea for philosophers to play with.

Voltaire's own use of the case of Saunderson had been to prove that it is impossible to be unhappy through the privation of a good of which one is totally ignorant,<sup>60</sup> and to show that sight angles in the eye do not give us judgments on distance and size except in conjunction with the other senses. His immediate reaction to Diderot's letter is not recorded. The contested point was, however, by no means dropped. Later discussions of those same ideas show that he recognized the force and approved of the method of Diderot's argument. He undoubtedly suspected that Diderot's own opinions were dangerously near those that the latter attributed to Saunderson. Damilaville told Voltaire that an hour's conversation together would have brought an essential agreement. Diderot could hardly have foreseen that Voltaire's long absence from Paris would put off that hour for nearly thirty years. During the intervening years both philosophers stuck to their guns, nor is there any record of submission on either side.

<sup>58</sup> XXXVII, 23.

<sup>59</sup> Ibid, n. 3.

<sup>60</sup> XXII, 469.

Eight years later, Voltaire had occasion to write to Diderot to thank him for his Fils naturel. It is an extremely skillful letter, in which Voltaire succeeds in praising the author without praising the play, and exhorts him, not to write another play, but to spread abroad as much as possible, in the Encyclopédie, the noble liberty of his soul: "L'ouvrage que vous m'avez envoyé, monsieur, ressemble à son auteur: il me paraît plein de vertus, de sensibilité et de philosophie. Je pense, comme vous, qu'il y aurait beaucoup à réformer au théâtre de Paris."<sup>61</sup>

This new bourgeois drama must have fallen upon Voltaire like a bolt from the blue, a portent of the approaching collapse of good taste, of the classical drama, and consequently of French superiority in one of the few fields that seemed to Voltaire to remain indisputably hers. The English were definitely superior in the halls of philosophy, in the seats of government and on the high seas, but good taste and the classical drama were France's notable heritage from the age of Louis XIV, and of these glories Voltaire was the recognized champion. In this struggle Diderot could be no comrade in arms. Let him stick, then, to his Encyclopédie.

It would be a mistake, however, to suppose that Voltaire was entirely conservative in his views on the drama.<sup>62</sup> He, too, as he insists, agrees with Diderot on the necessity of reforms. He does not say, however, that he agrees on the reforms suggested in the Entretiens sur le fils naturel. Some of his ideas were without doubt in conformity with Diderot's. In his letter of thanks he condemns the seating of frivolous noblemen on the wings of the stage, a reform which was accomplished two years later; and agrees that there should be no infamy attached to the presentation of virtuous sentiments. But Voltaire had had too much experience with audiences to hope for any sudden change in their attitude toward long-accepted technicalities and proprieties, nor would he probably have suggested any breaking down of the classical genres. These changes must be made gradually and the public must first be educated. Neither man was astute enough to see that no marked change was possible without a previous revolution in society.

<sup>61</sup> xxxix, 181.

<sup>62</sup> Cf. Chapter "Voltaire and Shakespeare" in E. Sonet, Voltaire et l'influence anglaise.

Voltaire returns to Diderot's dramatic theories in the prefaces to two plays, l'Écossaise and les Scythes. In the total absence of marginal comment in his two copies of le Fils naturel, we must depend on these for definite observations. L'Écossaise was hardly a serious play; here, then, was a chance to pay Diderot a few compliments without compromising drama in general. The play was written to avenge Diderot and his fellow-workers for the ill-treatment accorded them in Palissot's Philosophes; yet the man directly attacked was Fréron. It was an eminently personal play, for the justification of which Voltaire happily thought of Diderot's Entretiens. That illustrious scholar and genius remarks very judiciously, he writes, that it is time to consider the representation on the stage not of characters but of the conditions and professions of men.<sup>68</sup> Libelous criticism is a trade, and thus, with Diderot's help, the rôle of "Fréron" is brought within the pale of serious dramatic theory. The compliments paid to Diderot are sincere, but the rest is a bit of high fooling.

Many other parts of Diderot's suggestions were entirely unacceptable to Voltaire, such as the domestic tragedy in prose and the emphasis on pantomime and tableaux. That we have no record of Voltaire's reaction to many of these innovations indicates remarkable restraint and loyalty. Voltaire had himself sought in his plays to increase action and to stress the element of pathos. But Diderot had gone too far and inevitably aligned himself with the admirers of Shakespeare. That Voltaire was well aware of the connection is evident from the Preface to les Scythes. He is ready to admit the greatness of Garrick in his Shakespearian rôles, and the power of his appeal to the eyes, but this magical perfection in the actor tends to cover up the faults in the author:

Cette magie a été fortement recommandée il y a quelques années par un philosophe qui, à l'exemple d'Aristote, a su joindre aux sciences abstraites, la connaissance du cœur humain, et l'intelligence du théâtre. Il a été en tout de l'avis de l'auteur de Sémiramis, qui a toujours voulu qu'on animât la scène par un plus grand appareil, par plus de pittoresque, par des mouvements plus passionnés qu'elle ne semblait en comporter auparavant. Ce philosophe sensible a même proposé des choses que l'auteur de Sémiramis, d'Oreste, et de Tancrède n'oserait jamais hasarder. . . . Ce n'est que par degrés qu'on peut accoutumer notre théâtre à ce grand pathétique. . . . Souvenons-nous toujours qu'il ne faut pas pousser le terrible jusqu'à l'horrible. . . . Gardons-nous surtout de chercher dans un grand appareil, et dans un vain jeu de théâtre, un supplément à l'intérêt et à l'éloquence. Il vaut cent fois mieux, sans doute, savoir faire parler ses acteurs que de se borner à les faire agir. Nous ne pouvons trop répéter que quatre beaux vers de sentiment valent mieux que quarante belles attitudes. Malheur à qui croirait plaire par des pantomimes avec des solécismes ou avec des vers froids et durs, pires que toutes les fautes contre la langue! Il n'est rien de beau en aucun genre que ce qui soutient l'examen de l'homme de goût.

<sup>68</sup> v, 410. Cf. Diderot, Œuvres, VII, 150.

L'appareil, l'action, le pittoresque, font un grand effet sans doute, mais ne mettons jamais le bizarre et le gigantesque à la place de la nature, et le forcé à la place du simple; que le décorateur ne l'emporte point sur l'auteur, car alors, au lieu de tragédies, on aurait la rareté, la curiosité.<sup>64</sup>

If this passage is a eulogy of Diderot as Voltaire claimed, it is also just as much a warning against Diderot's alarming tendencies, against what Diderot did not quite dare to advise, but would have advised if he had dared. Voltaire was plainly worried about Diderot's reception of the "eulogy," especially when he received no word about it. Many times in his correspondence he asks for information and says that he expected mention of the homage he paid Diderot in the Preface to les Scythes.<sup>65</sup>

Diderot had nevertheless expressed some novelties with which Voltaire was in hearty agreement. His boldness may well have inspired in Voltaire the increased action and the spectacles of Olympie. Voltaire sent his account of the representation at Tournay to the "brothers" at Paris, with a special word for Diderot. Olympie is thus seen to have been a genuine effort at compromise; Voltaire would expand a bit if Diderot would show more restraint:

Je prie mon cher frère de dire au frère Platon que ce qu'il appelle pantomime je l'ai toujours appelé action. Je n'aime point le terme de pantomime pour la tragédie. J'ai toujours songé, autant que je l'ai pu, à rendre les scènes tragiques pittoresques. Elles le sont dans Mahomet, dans Mérope, dans l'Orphelin de la Chine, surtout dans Tancrède. Mais ici toute la pièce est un tableau continu. Aussi a-t-elle fait le plus prodigieux effet. Mérope n'en approche pas quant à l'appareil et à l'action; et cette action est toujours nécessaire, elle est toujours annoncée par les acteurs mêmes. Je voudrais qu'on perfectionnât ce genre, qui est le seul tragique: car les conversations sont à la glace, et les conversations amoureuses sont à l'eau rose.<sup>66</sup>

In the account above mentioned, Voltaire had stressed the great emotional effect of his play:

Les larmes ont coulé pendant toute la pièce. Les larmes viennent du cœur. Trois cent personnes, de tout rang et de tout âge, ne s'attendrissent pas, à moins que la nature ne s'en mêle; mais pour produire cet effet, il fallait des acteurs et de l'action: tout a été tableau, tout a été animé.<sup>67</sup>

<sup>64</sup> VI, 269-270.

<sup>66</sup> XLII, 85.

<sup>65</sup> Cf. XLV, 139.

<sup>67</sup> XLII, 73-74.

A heightening of the appeal to the emotions increased by a heightening of the appeal to the eyes, these are no new ideas to Voltaire. Diderot's rôle was to encourage him to greater activity and daring on these lines.

While it is apparent that Diderot's dramatic theories induced Voltaire to attempt a compromise with a view to holding the younger and bolder man in line with good taste, his actual productions could not hope to win over the dean of letters, le Père de famille no more than le Fils naturel. Voltaire received the Père de famille from Diderot in 1758. This edition is not now in his library, and the edition of 1770 is unannotated. The correspondence must again give us our information. Voltaire wrote a very polite and warm, but very carefully worded letter thanking him:

Je vous remercie du fond de mon cœur, monsieur, de votre attention et de votre nouvel ouvrage. Il y a des choses tendres, vertueuses, et d'un goût nouveau, comme dans tout ce que vous faites, mais permettez-moi de vous dire que je suis affligé de vous voir faire des pièces de théâtre qu'on ne met point au théâtre. . . .<sup>68</sup>

Nothing could be more noncommittal than these sentences. The last remark is not a dig, however. We have seen how ardently Voltaire desired the representation and acceptance by the public of this play. A franker criticism appears in a letter a month later to Mme du Deffand. A certain amount of caution must be used in accepting this testimony, for this blind old lady was very influential in keeping Voltaire to the good old traditions and appreciated and praised above all his literary conservatism. She hated the philosophers and Voltaire undoubtedly shaded his ideas to please her, in passages such as the following:

Vous êtes-vous fait lire le Père de famille? Cela n'est-il pas bien comique? Par ma foi, notre siècle est un pauvre siècle auprès de celui de Louis XIV; mille raisonneurs, et pas un seul homme de génie; plus de grâce, plus de gaieté; la disette d'hommes de tout genre fait pitié. La France subsistera; mais sa gloire, mais son bonheur, son ancienne supériorité . . . qu'est-ce que tout cela deviendra?<sup>69</sup>

Voltaire sensed in Diderot's play a certain heaviness and lack of grace which has been the experience of many a reader since. His friendship and esteem for Diderot prevented, however, a frank expression of his literary judgment. This attitude is evident in a passage from a letter to Palissot: "Sans jamais avoir vu M. Diderot, sans trouver le Père de famille plaisant, j'ai toujours respecté ses profondes connaissances; et, à la tête de ce Père de famille, il y a une épître à Mme la princesse de Nassau qui m'a paru le chef-d'œuvre de l'éloquence et le triomphe de l'humanité."<sup>70</sup>

<sup>68</sup> xxxix, 532.

<sup>69</sup> xxxix, 563-564.

<sup>70</sup> xl, 410-411.

Another expression in Voltaire's letter to Diderot is noteworthy: the element of novelty apparent in all of the latter's works. Voltaire's enthusiasm for Diderot and the enthusiasm of the philosophic clan in general can be explained by the new vistas that Diderot opened up in what appeared to be more and more a closed philosophical system.<sup>71</sup> The essential differences between the two men in regard to the theater resolve themselves into relative degrees of courage and common sense. Diderot displayed the greater courage and his ideas were destined for the future. Voltaire realized in a more practical way the difficulties involved in breaking with the past; and his plays were the more successful.

Voltaire's judgments on the Encyclopédie were as varying as was the value of the articles and the talents of the authors of that stupendous undertaking. He had, of course, nothing but the highest praise for the utility of the work as a whole,<sup>72</sup> and for the tremendous energy and courage displayed by Diderot in his labors as editor. Even so, it was difficult for him to visualize the difficulties that beset the worthy editor and he chides him time and again for the inclusion of weak, compromising articles and puerile declamations. In a letter to Mme d'Épinay, in 1760, he speaks of "pauvre Diderot, qui a trouvé le secret de renverser le plus bel édifice du monde pour y avoir mis une douzaine de pierres mal taillées, qui ne s'accordent pas avec le reste du bâtiment."<sup>73</sup>

In a more particular way, Voltaire was indignant over Diderot's praise of Rousseau in the article "Encyclopédie," beginning with the words: "Oh Rousseau, mon cher et digne ami . . .,"<sup>74</sup> and regretted that Diderot had been so busily occupied with the editing that the Chevalier de Jaucourt had had to write three-quarters of the articles; not that he failed to appreciate the latter's work, but he preferred more from Diderot. To Panckoucke, who wanted to republish and modify the work, he writes, in 1769: "L'enthousiasme y nuit encore plus, et les exclamations à la Jean-Jacques sont d'un prodigieux ridicule."<sup>75</sup> He recommended on occasions Diderot's articles "Hobbisme" and "Instinct," but on the whole, judging from a few remarks like the above and also from his relative silence, he did not himself approve the enthusiastic style which Diderot shared, beyond a doubt, with his contemporary, Rousseau.<sup>76</sup>

To d'Alembert, he wrote: "Il n'y a que vous qui écrivez toujours bien, et Diderot parfois."<sup>77</sup> It was d'Alembert who, in the eighteenth century, most nearly approached Voltaire's ideal of prose style, the Lettres provinciales of Pascal. Once more Voltaire looks to the past for his model,

<sup>71</sup> Cf. Jean Thomas, L'Humanisme de Diderot, pp. 64-65.

<sup>72</sup> XL, 410.

<sup>73</sup> XL, 417.

<sup>74</sup> Cf. XLIV, 51, 492.

<sup>75</sup> XLVI, 258; cf. XLVI, 479.

<sup>76</sup> XLIII, 484.

<sup>77</sup> XL, 437.

while Diderot points ahead to both the romantic and realistic schools of the following century.<sup>78</sup>

The theater and the novel were merely diversions in the lives of these men. True philosophy, the philosophy of enlightenment, the scientific method applied to all human interests, was their major concern, inevitably affecting their diversions. Here they saw more nearly eye to eye. "Si Dieu avait permis," Voltaire wrote to Damilaville, "que frère Platon, vous et moi eussions vécu ensemble, nous n'aurions pas été inutiles au monde." But the brothers in philosophy were dispersed and did not act together, and Voltaire loses heart: "Il faudra donc finir, comme Candide, par cultiver son jardin."<sup>79</sup> Slight differences of opinion concerning methods of attack, slight differences in conclusions, become magnified partly because of the physical distance that separated them and partly because these were the major concerns of their lives. It is entirely natural that Diderot's philosophical thoughts should command especially Voltaire's attention and that the philosophical works should alone inspire marginal comment.

It is impossible to determine how much time elapsed between the first skirmish over the Lettres sur les aveugles and Voltaire's first comments on the Pensées philosophiques. The correspondence helps here but little. The most probable supposition is that Voltaire turned to this book in 1760 when he was trying to prove, against the Preface of Palissot's Philosophes, that the latter had misrepresented Diderot in attributing to him ideas of La Mettrie. It was at this time that he sent for, and received, Diderot's Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature.<sup>80</sup> The earlier work must have given Voltaire some degree of comfort, for Diderot, after many arguments in favor of materialism, professed himself a deist, and even a Christian deist with a Catholic profession of faith.

Like Voltaire in his Traité de métaphysique (1734), Diderot presents, in the Pensées philosophiques, the arguments both for and against atheism. Voltaire's early comments, in the 1746 edition, are confined to sections XXI and XXIII, dealing with this subject. In the sections immediately preceding, Diderot has exposed the following arguments: the supposition of an inconceivable God does not help us conceive how movement could engender the universe; even if the marvels that shine in the physical order reveal some intelligence, the disorders which reign in the moral order annihilate all Providence; the existence of evil shows in God either powerlessness or ill-will, etc.; and such arguments cannot be met by mere invective. Voltaire has no comment on these passages.

<sup>78</sup> Cf. Francis Birrell, "Things Diderot could do," Criterion, XII (July, 1933), 632 ff.

<sup>79</sup> XLIII, 183.

<sup>80</sup> XI, 413, 424, 435, 438; XII, 227, 240.

He had similarly given the atheist his due in his then as yet unpublished Traité de métaphysique. Many of these problems he believed incapable of solution. Considering the narrow limits of human reason, was it not, however, more "reasonable" to believe in Intelligence? He would likewise heartily agree with Diderot that Descartes and Malebranche, metaphysicians, had not been able to answer atheism or materialism. It was left for the experimental scientists, Newton, Muschenbrock, Hartzoeker, Nieuwentyt, to give satisfactory proofs of the existence of a sovereign Intelligence and to show that the world was not a God but a machine. It was those same scientists, and not Descartes, who had given to Voltaire satisfactory proofs of the existence of an Intelligence and of the immutable laws of the universe. Diderot uses the argument to show that whereas the subtleties of ontology make skeptics, those who reveal the secrets of nature form true deists.

"Pensée XXI" discusses the essential problem of whether the ordering of the universe shows purposeful creation, or whether it is merely the result of blind chance, of fortuitous throws of the dice. Diderot is here answering a common argument against atheism:

J'ouvre les cahiers d'un professeur célèbre, et je lis: "Athées, je vous accorde que le mouvement est essentiel à la matière; qu'en concluez-vous? . . . que le monde résulte du jet fortuit des atomes? J'aimerais autant que vous me disiez que l'Iliade d'Homère, ou la Hémiade de Voltaire est un résultat de jets fortuits de caractères." Je me garderai bien de faire ce raisonnement à un athée. cette comparaison lui donnerait beau jeu. Selon les lois de l'analyse des sorts, me dirait-il, je ne dois point être surpris qu'une chose arrive lorsqu'elle est possible, et que la difficulté de l'événement est compensée par la quantité de jets. Il y a tel nombre de coups dans lesquels je gagerais, avec avantage, d'amener cent mille six à la fois avec cent mille dés . . . la possibilité d'engendrier fortuitement l'univers est très petite, mais . . . la quantité des jets est infinie, c'est-à-dire que la difficulté de l'événement est plus que suffisamment compensée par la multitude des jets.<sup>81</sup>

It is clear that Voltaire is presented here with the ever troublesome argument that the marvelous order and infinite interrelations which he attributed to intelligent and purposeful creation, might be merely the result of the workings of the laws of chance, that life might be regarded as "a negligible accident in a by-product of the cosmic process."<sup>82</sup> His long note on this passage is headed "Paralogisme," a charge that Diderot is begging the question.

Vous supposez l'existence de ces dés—il est clair que rafle de six doit arriver; mais la question est, s'il y aura des dés: point de dés, point d'arrangement, point d'ordre, sans intelligence . <sup>83</sup> du sable pendant une éternité, il n'y aura jamais que du sable. Certainement ce sable ne produira pas des perroquets des hommes des singes. Tout ouvrage prouve un ouvrier.

<sup>81</sup> Diderot, Œuvres, I, 135-136, Pensées philosophiques (1746), pp. 40-44.

<sup>82</sup> Cf. Dampier-Whetham, A History of Science, p. 483.

It is apparent that Voltaire's conception of nature is essentially static, for he has in no way comprehended the significance of the argument that motion is essential to matter, with him, motion is still something—a shaking here perhaps—which is added to matter, visualized as sand. Even less did he conceive of countless centuries of slow biological evolution, a conception which, in Diderot's mind, was gradually breaking down the barriers between inanimate, animate, and intelligent beings; or as Voltaire put it, between sand, parrots, and men. Allowing for a free interpretation of the word "day," he was not far from the belief that God created the laws that govern the universe in six days, gave it a tap to set them in motion, and has been resting ever since.<sup>84</sup>

Voltaire's denial here of the existence of the dice would agree with his repeated refusal to apply the laws of chance to the universe. A very frequent note in the margins of the books he read is: "Laisse-là ton hasard; c'est un mot vide de sens."<sup>85</sup> Chance was merely a name for an unknown or undiscovered cause. In a universe where he saw so many evidences of intelligent design, he was assured of the existence of a supreme Intelligence. "I shall always be convinced," he wrote, "that a watch proves a watchmaker, and the universe proves a God."<sup>86</sup> Even Spinoza admitted an Intelligence, he pointed out, and Plato, too, in spite of the fact that the rest of his thought was sublime dreaming.

A more probable interpretation is, however, that he was indicating here the fact that the existence of the dice, or atoms, was merely supposed, and was supposed only as the result of intelligible logical relations. He opposed the over-simplified theory of Descartes no less than that of Lucretius, who was so "completely ignorant of physics." He felt that Descartes had been very rash in saying, "Give me matter and movement and I will make a world"; for if it were proved that movement was essential to matter, this statement played directly into the hands of the materialists.<sup>87</sup> It was Newton's laws of gravitation that gave him a reasonable belief in the existence of an intelligent God, and led him to stress the mathematical rather than the physical basis of the universe. In Les Adorateurs, he writes:

Dieu n'a pas abandonné la matière à des atomes qui ont eu sans cesse un mouvement de déclinaison, ainsi que l'a chanté Lucrèce. . . . Cet Etre suprême n'a

<sup>83</sup> Torn page.

<sup>84</sup> Cf. Kingsley Martin, French Liberal Thought in the 18th Century, p. 126.

<sup>85</sup> Cf. xxxi, 140. A comment on Nieuwentyt's Existence de Dieu.

<sup>86</sup> Cf. xxxi, 194

<sup>87</sup> x, 169, n. 3.

pas pris des cubes, des petits dés pour en former la terre, les planètes, la lumière, la matière magnétique, comme l'a imaginé le chimérique Descartes dans son roman appelé Philosophie. Mais il a voulu que les parties de la matière s'attirassent réciproquement en raison directe de leurs masses, et en raison inverse du carré de leurs distances, il a ordonné que le centre de notre petit monde fût dans le soleil, et que toutes nos planètes tournassent autour de lui, de façon que les cubes de leurs distances seraient toujours comme les carrés de leurs révolutions.<sup>88</sup>

In other words, it is not matter, represented as cubes, dice, or atoms, but mathematical and logical relations that give man an intelligible view of the universe. And in the continuation of the passage, Voltaire is seen rapt in mystic adoration of the laws of gravitation and of their Creator, the mover of the heavenly bodies.

His inability to comprehend or refusal to consider the proposition that movement is essential to matter is shown in a second marginal note on the part of Diderot's argument quoted above dealing with that subject: "Le mouvement essentiel à la matière n'est qu'une supposition. Et il n'est pas permis de fonder un système sur une hypothèse dont on ne peut avoir aucune preuve."<sup>89</sup>

Voltaire is here perfectly recognizable in his rôle of destroyer of systems. He was usually successful in the fields of theology and metaphysics, but not so successful in matters of physics, geology, or biology. To many, the theory that motion was essential to matter had been satisfactorily substantiated by experimental evidence. Among other discussions of the question, Voltaire, in 1768, read Toland's Lettres à Sérène<sup>90</sup> in which Toland seems to have made his point against Spinoza. Whether Voltaire chose not to understand the argument, or simply did not understand it, his comment was extremely evasive and trivial. Diderot's materialistic atheism was again not a system, as Voltaire charged; he admitted its hypothetical character, but stuck to the hypothesis on account of its scientific fecundity and because the hypothesis of the existence of God was not only scientifically, metaphysically, and ethically sterile, but served rather to becloud all issues to which it was applied.

A third comment is found on the following continuation of Diderot's argument:

Donc, si quelque chose doit répugner à la raison, c'est la supposition que, la matière s'étant mue de toute éternité, et qu'y ayant peut-être dans la somme infinie des combinaisons possibles un nombre infini d'arrangements admirables, il ne soit rencontré aucun de ces arrangements admirables dans la multitude infinie de ceux qu'elle a pris successivement. Donc l'esprit doit être plus étonné de la durée hypothétique du chaos que de la naissance réelle de l'univers.<sup>91</sup>

<sup>88</sup> xxviii, 310-311.

<sup>89</sup> Œuvres, I, 136; 1746 ed., p. 42.

<sup>90</sup> N. L. Torrey, Voltaire and the English Deists, p. 16. <sup>91</sup> Œuvres, I, 136; 1746 ed., p. 44.

The comment refers especially to the words, which Voltaire has starred, "un nombre infini d'arrangements admirables." On the margin, he wrote: "Il n'y a aucun, parce qu'il faut un dessein et que la matière brute ne peut avoir de dessein. Spinoza admet la pensée avec la matière, il admet des desseins."

"Ah! but M. de Voltaire!," we can imagine Diderot saying, "Who is it that has told us time and again that matter is a great mystery, that we can never be sure of its properties, that for all we know God may have granted it design? And is it not strange to be seen here clinging desperately to a weakness in Spinoza's physics to make your point against atheism, when you yourself so often have accused Spinoza of that very heresy?"

The argument of the existence of a deity from intelligent design has seemed much less satisfactory since the theory of evolution was introduced into biological science. Although Diderot never directly expressed this theory, his comprehension of it was entirely sufficient to meet his metaphysical needs. And while Voltaire was struck by the universal uniformity and constancy of physical law, Diderot was amazed by the evidence of trial and error and by the monsters and misfits that were so prevalent in the biological world: the fundamental clash between the classical and the romantic points of view was evident in science and philosophy long before the new literary theories were developed.

Modern philosophers would not accept Voltaire's anthropomorphic argument as valid proof of the existence of God or of intelligent purpose. Yet Voltaire, the rationalist, found a basic flaw in the suppositions of the more empirical Diderot. "Mechanism as a formulation of the laws of masses in motion," writes Professor Morris Cohen, "is a basic branch of physics, but not an adequate account of the whole of it." He agrees with Voltaire in maintaining that not formless matter, nor blind sensation, but mathematical and logical relations form the intelligible substance of things.<sup>92</sup> To Diderot, the real mystery was not the manner of creation, which, given matter and its properties, might some day be explained by science, but the basic problem of existence. Within the limits of the laws which govern the universe, he saw that chance might well have produced Voltaire's much-admired patterns and designs. As Paul Valéry has remarked, "la vie a quelque chose d'un accident . . . qui s'est fait des lois." Here again Diderot was blazing a trail for nineteenth-century science, while Voltaire was stressing certain fundamentals in reason and nature which it would have done well to keep in view.

Voltaire reread and annotated the Pensées philosophiques in the edition of 1777, the year before his death. Here his comment on Diderot's fortuitous throws of the dice<sup>93</sup> is more brief: "Dans quelque moment que vous vous y preniez il y a toujours l'infini contre un, que l'univers ne se formera pas tout seul." Voltaire is suggesting here, half facetiously, as may be judged by other expressions of the same idea,<sup>94</sup> that there is only one chance in a "million" that chance formed the universe. The expert d'Alembert did not relish his friend's display of mathematics, and the editors of the Kehl edition have pointed out that the force of the argument is lost if it is granted that motion is essential to matter.<sup>95</sup>

<sup>92</sup> Reason and Nature, p. 230.

Voltaire was now well aware that Diderot had long since passed from the deistic stand of the Pensées philosophiques to a working hypothesis of atheistic materialism. In a letter only recently published by M. Babelon, Diderot wrote to Damilaville while the latter was with Voltaire at Ferney, reiterating his arguments in favor of abandoning the deistic position. He asks Damilaville to remind Voltaire of his fable of the misanthropist who, brooding in a cave and seeking vengeance, came forth shouting "God! God!," thus bestowing on men an idea for which they would sacrifice their lives and yet about which they could never agree. As a result, men have since hated and killed each other for religious beliefs. Diderot would remind Voltaire also that there is a distinction between suppositions. A supposition that explains all phenomena would be considered true, whereas a supposition that can be applied to no metaphysical, physical, political, or moral question without obscuring it should therefore be considered false. The idea of a supreme being is all very well for such noble beings as Trajan, Marcus Aurelius, or Cato, but Voltaire's knowledge of history should prove to him that for the rest of mankind such an idea has been, is, and ever will be nefarious.<sup>96</sup>

The most direct and complete answer to these ideas appears in Voltaire's Lettres de Memmius à Cicéron (1772), in which Diderot's arguments are voiced by Strato. Voltaire begins by pardoning the atheistic group their rashness, but asks pardon in turn for his weakness in believing in the existence of God. He again denies the very conception of chance, which he says is merely the effect of an unknown cause. He then attacks Strato's principal argument:

Il disait que la nature seule, par ses combinaisons, produit des animaux pensants. Je l'arrête là, et je lui demande quelle preuve il en a Il me répond que c'est son système, son hypothèse, que cette idée en vaut bien une autre. Mais moi, je lui dis: Je ne veux point d'hypothèse, je veux des preuves. . . . Je ne sais pas si, dans la suite des temps, il se trouvera quelqu'un d'assez fou pour assurer que la matière, sans penser, produit d'elle-même des milliards d'êtres qui pensent.

<sup>93</sup> Oeuvres, I, 136; 1777 ed., p. 39.

<sup>94</sup> Cf. XL, 105.

<sup>95</sup> XXXVIII, 445, n. 1.

<sup>96</sup> Correspondance inédite, I, 278-279.

Je lui soutiendrai que, suivant ce beau système, la matière pourrait produire un Dieu sage, puissant et bon.<sup>97</sup>

Voltaire is here, as in his early comments on Diderot, forgetting, or regretting, some of the wisdom he had acquired from the wise Locke, that matter might after all possess the faculty of thought, and that the limits of the human mind often preclude the proofs of some of the most vexing metaphysical problems. Diderot was presenting his hypothesis as the more fruitful in scientific and moral investigation; it was also for practical reasons that Voltaire was clinging to his. He felt the philosophers would be much more at liberty to enlighten mankind if they were not suspected of atheism, a theory which was commonly, if not philosophically, held to destroy all moral sanctions. His search for the truth was more definitely limited by utilitarianism than Diderot's; he could conceive of no service rendered to mankind through the spread of atheism.<sup>98</sup> He was much more loath, too, to admit that his own position was not certitude, but an hypothesis. It was for this reason that Diderot called him "cagot" and "esprit faible."

In the end, Voltaire laughs indulgently with Cicero at the follies of the atheistic reasoning. After all, a single year of civil war does more harm to the world than all the atheists together could do throughout eternity. The Letters from Memmius conclude with Voltaire's doubts of the existence of the soul, his acceptance of determinism, and a reiteration of his life-long profession that moral precepts are universal and are engraved in the hearts of all men.

It has been observed that a deist is a man who has not lived long enough to become an atheist. Length of life was patently not Voltaire's difficulty. Two factors stand out in his opposition to the rising tide of atheism: first, he was intellectually incapable of understanding the scientific advances of his century and hence unable to perceive the weakness of his proofs—his mind had early embraced Locke and Newton, to his great glory, but his development in the sciences stopped at that point; secondly, his utilitarian pragmatism, his humanism, led him to suspect that the spreading of atheism would aid in no way the happiness of mankind. Diderot thought it would in the long run, if true. For the aging Voltaire the course seems too long and the outcome too uncertain to merit consideration in contrast with the approaching victory over religious fanaticism and persecution. Diderot, with his eye fixed on posterity, was sure that the future would justify his gropings toward the principles of evolution, and the consequent objections to a belief in an intelligent purpose and a benevolent universe.

<sup>97</sup> XXVIII, 444.

<sup>98</sup> XLVI, 106.

Professor Cohen has neatly contrasted the two points of view. The application of the following remarks to Voltaire and Diderot can readily be made:

Perhaps it is the social admiration for the prudent and law-abiding citizen which makes us cling to the old naively rationalistic and anthropomorphic doctrine that nature does nothing in vain. But it is also possible to see in animate nature a wild profusion of aimless growth surging like the storms and volcanic eruptions of the inorganic realm. In any case the almost inconceivable over-production and terrifically lavish destruction of life make it impossible to identify the processes of animate nature exclusively with purposive adaptations to prolong the life of the individual organism.<sup>99</sup>

Nor is the problem simplified, he concludes, if we consider the race rather than the individual.

Voltaire's belief in God was largely a mystical adoration of the maker and mover of the heavens. His error was in attempting to demonstrate his intuitive perception by logical reason. His controversy with Diderot reveals him as much more a disciple of Descartes than he would have liked to admit. In physics, he saw that Newton had made many necessary corrections in Descartes' theories; but he continued to maintain the latter's naive theory that motion was something added to matter in the process of creation, in spite of the arguments of Leibnitz and Toland to the contrary. He seemed often to have regretted his acceptance of Locke's contributions to the anti-Descartes movement. His moral law engraved by God in the hearts of all men was not so far removed from what Descartes meant by innate ideas.<sup>100</sup> And it has been noted how Diderot used against him his repetition of Locke's idea that God might have bestowed upon matter the faculty of thought. This idea, in fact, fits in much more logically with Diderot's hypothesis of continuous creation and slow evolution over millions of years, and with his suspicions that "l'animalité avait de toute éternité ses éléments particuliers épars et confondus dans la masse de la matière."<sup>101</sup>

J. B. Needham, in his recent book entitled Man a Machine, agrees with la Mettrie and Diderot that the materialistic hypothesis is alone scientifically fruitful, but that it invalidates in no way religious belief or speculative philosophy. Voltaire, who was a determinist, confessed to Mme du Deffand his feeling of the mechanical nature of man.<sup>102</sup> The human mind might be a machine and the Aeneid might have been me-

<sup>99</sup> Morris R. Cohen, Reason and Nature, p. 267.

<sup>100</sup> Cf. Morris Cohen, op. cit., p. 138: "It is curious that the empiricist philosophy which began with Locke's rather near-sighted arguments against innate ideas ends with instincts that serve all the purposes of innate ideas. . . ."

<sup>101</sup> Oeuvres, II, 58.

<sup>102</sup> XLIII, 167.

chanically produced, but he was so impressed with the complications of the machine<sup>103</sup> that he could see little advantage in considering it as such. Even today philosophy is holding its own against the much-heralded advances of laboratory psychology and behaviorism; and men are hardly satisfied with an interpretation of the Aeneid as the result of mere fortuitous throws of the dice.

Diderot's "Pensée xxiii" is a continuation of the argument between the deist and the atheist. Voltaire's comments are revealing, with their indication that if Voltaire attempted to persuade the public of his belief in immortality he would in no way defend it between friends or in the intimacy of his library. Diderot wrote: "Le Déiste assure l'existence d'un Dieu, l'immortalité de l'âme et ses suites. . . ."<sup>104</sup> In the 1754 edition, Voltaire scratched on the margin of the page: "Beaucoup de déistes n'admettent point l'immortalité de l'âme." And in the 1777 edition, he corrected Diderot's idea as follows: "Non, le déiste croit en dieu et ne croit pas pour cela l'âme immortelle. Voiez les saduceens." During this last year of his life the patriarch has weakened not at all in his disbelief in immortality and its concomitants, reward and punishment. Stripped of the belief in the divine sanction of morality, there is little left, in fact, of Voltaire's deistic faith except the attitude of mystical adoration in his relation to God.<sup>105</sup>

Voltaire's objections to Diderot's hypothesis that nature by her own combinations, produces thinking animals, have already introduced us in some measure to the Pensées sur l'interprétation de la nature. Aroused by Palissot's falsification of the theories of the Encyclopedists in the Preface to Les Philosophes in attributing to them ideas gleaned from La Mettrie, Voltaire asked Thieriot to send him that work along with La Mettrie's La Vie heureuse.<sup>106</sup> Thieriot was lazy as usual and it was only after a long wait and through the agency of Damilaville that Voltaire finally received a copy.<sup>107</sup> "Je vais le lire," he writes in reply (19 mars, 1761), "et je suis sûr que je trouverai cent traits de lumière dans cet abîme." That is, unfortunately, the final mention of the work in Voltaire's correspondence. In the copy in his library at Leningrad there are, moreover, no marginal notes, but only four markers or "sinets" which reveal merely Voltaire's interest, and in no way his reactions.

The first sign of interest is shown at a passage defining experimental philosophy as distinguished from rational philosophy. In a sense, the distinction might well serve to illustrate the contrast in the fundamental principles of the two men. In religion and in ethics at least, Voltaire

<sup>103</sup> XL, 104-105.

<sup>104</sup> Œuvres, I, 137; 1746 ed., p. 46; 1777 ed., p. 41.

<sup>105</sup> The evidence of Voltaire's mysticism will be the basis of a critical study, now in preparation.

<sup>106</sup> XL, 413, 424, 435, 438.

<sup>107</sup> XLII, 227, 240.

stopped at the rational principle of natural law, while Diderot attempted to found his ethics on the biological grounds of identity of organization and saw in religion only an obfuscation of scientific experimentation.

La philosophie expérimentale ne sçait ni ce qui lui viendra ni ce qui ne lui viendra pas de son travail; mais elle travaille sans relâche Au contraire la philosophie rationnelle pèse les possibilités, prononce et s'arrête tout court. Elle dit hardiment, on ne peut décomposer la lumière; la philosophie expérimentale l'écoute, et se tait devant elle pendant des siècles entiers, puis tout à coup elle montre le prisme, et dit, la lumière se décompose.<sup>108</sup>

Voltaire again shows interest in Diderot's scientifically bold hypothesis concerning the mysteries of human generation and embryonic development.<sup>109</sup> Voltaire, who himself often wrote on the same subject, either concludes that it is an insolvable mystery concerning which many conflicting theories have been presented by such philosophers as Harvey, Maupertuis, and Bonnet—Diderot is never mentioned in this regard—or has his little joke at the expense of Needham's eels spontaneously produced in barley water, or of Father Sanchez's naïve "conception" of conception. Here again, as in the case of fossils, Voltaire was a little too ready to ridicule scientific discoveries. His reasons for doing so were not scientific but utilitarian; the theory of fossils was being used to prove the story of the universal deluge, thus supporting the Scriptures, which in turn supported the persecuting Christians of his day; and the eels appeared to verify the chance and spontaneous appearance of life in the universe, without recourse to a purposeful, intelligent creator.<sup>110</sup>

Another marker indicates a forceful paragraph on the relative obscurity of the great masters. After giving due consideration to affectation, of which even the great Newton was guilty, Diderot explains how the speculative philosopher, in his ascent from perception through abstraction to generalization, may mount so high that he finds himself alone on his mountain with only the spectacle of his intellectual ideas in view, covering like clouds the sensuous world beneath.<sup>111</sup> The contrasting metaphors are instructive: Diderot drags his metaphysics up a mountain, while Voltaire is ever searching for his in a dark abyss.

A fourth and final marker shows Voltaire's interest in Diderot's quotation from Linnaeus to the effect that, by following the principles of natural history in the process of classification, man is a quadruped in no way distinguishable from the monkey.<sup>112</sup> Diderot is interested in the case

<sup>108</sup> Œuvres, II, 20–21; 1754 ed., pp. 54–55.

<sup>109</sup> Œuvres, II, 25; 1754 ed., pp. 73v–74.

<sup>110</sup> Cf. xxv, 153–158; xxi, 335–360; xxx, 508 ff.

<sup>111</sup> Œuvres, II, 38–39; 1754 ed., pp. 106–107.

<sup>112</sup> Œuvres, II, 44; 1754 ed., pp. 132–133.

as a problem of methodology. Voltaire has left us only the bare indication of curiosity; he was far from sharing Diderot's speculative interest in the future discoveries in natural history through experimental science; in spite of his rhetorical comparisons of men to insects crawling on an atom of mud, he was essentially a humanist and took for granted the classical conception of man's position in the universe.

Voltaire's annotations in the 1746 edition of the Pensées philosophiques had been inspired solely by the conflict between deism and atheism. His more numerous comments in the 1777 edition reveal a very different interest, a return to the fifty-year old controversy over the Pensées of Pascal. It was the publication of Condorcet's Éloge et Pensées de Pascal, in 1776, that renewed Voltaire's interest and led to his Dernières remarques, which Condorcet published in 1778.<sup>113</sup> This time we know that the marginal comments must have been written in 1777, or very early in 1778, during the final and eighty-third to eighty-fourth year of his life. To this edition was also added the Entretien d'un philosophe avec Mde. la Duchesse de x r x, one of Diderot's most famous dialogues, published at this date under the name of Thomas Crudeli. This, too, has its quota of marginal comment.

The didactic, personal tone of the introductory remark of the Pensées philosophiques had displeased Palissot. Voltaire also had his suggestion. Diderot had written:

J'écris de Dieu, je compte sur peu de lecteurs, et n'aspire qu'à quelques suffrages. Si ces Pensées ne plaisent à personne, elles pourront n'être que mauvaises; mais je les tiens pour détestables, si elles plaisent à tout le monde.<sup>114</sup>

Voltaire commented as follows: "Pourquoi? il fallait dire si elles ne revoltent personne." In this "déclamation à la Jean-Jacques," Voltaire suggests here merely a more symmetrical, perhaps more logical conclusion to Diderot's hypothesis.

The subject of Diderot's "Pensée 1" is the passions, the source of man's pleasures as well as his pains: "On croirait faire injure à la raison, si l'on disait un mot en faveur de ses rivales; cependant il n'y a que les passions, et les grandes passions, qui puissent élever l'âme aux grandes choses."<sup>115</sup> Voltaire, in his comment, remembers an old figure of speech found in Fontenelle's Dialogues des morts<sup>116</sup> which he had often used himself:<sup>117</sup> "Les passions sont les vents qui font aller le vaisseau et qui le submergent." The two men are in essential agreement. This idea of the passions was common and general in eighteenth-century thought.

<sup>113</sup> Cf. Avertissement de Beuchot; xxxi, 1-2.

<sup>114</sup> Oeuvres, I, 127; 1777 éd., p. 3.

<sup>115</sup> Oeuvres, I, 127; 1777 éd., p. 5

<sup>116</sup> Ed. de Paris (1757), I, 109. The metaphor later found its way into Pope's Essay on Man.

<sup>117</sup> Cf. Zadig: xxi. 88.

Diderot sings the praises of strong passions in "Pensée III":

Les passions amorties dégradent les hommes extraordinaires. La contrainte anéantit la grandeur et l'énergie de la nature. Voyez cet arbre; c'est au luxe de ses branches que vous devez la fraîcheur et l'étendue de ses ombres. vous en jouirez jusqu'à ce que l'hiver vienne le dépouiller de sa chevelure. Plus d'excellence en poésie, en peinture, en musique, lorsque la superstition aura fait sur le tempérament l'ouvrage de la vieillesse.<sup>118</sup>

Voltaire's comment shows that he would check in some measure the flight of this typically romantic paragraph: "Il faut de l'enthousiasme dans les grandes occasions; sagesse partout ailleurs." Many of his own best works resulted from highly emotional states: hatred of domineering injustice, as in the case of the Diatribes du docteur Akakia; hatred of religious persecution in the Essai sur la tolérance; pity for the lot of mankind, and indignation for easy optimism in the Poème sur le désastre de Lisbonne and Candide.<sup>119</sup> Though he often had cause to regret his own frequent excitability, he is, nevertheless, known rather as the common sense philosopher. In his comment on Diderot's paragraph, he passed over the arresting idea of the effect of superstition on the artistic temperament, an idea which would provoke much more attention today.

Diderot's defense of strong passions is continued in "Pensée IV":

Ce serait donc un bonheur, me dira-t-on, d'avoir des passions fortes. Oui, sans doute, si toutes sont à l'unisson. Établissez entre elles une juste harmonie, et n'en appréhendez point de désordres. Si l'espérance est balancée par la crainte, le point d'honneur par l'amour de la vie, le penchant au plaisir par l'intérêt de la santé, vous ne verrez ni libertins, ni téméraires, ni lâches.<sup>120</sup>

Voltaire's comment shows his fear of the tendency of this argument: "Alors ce balancement est sagesse; il exclut l'enthousiasme." He is quite worried to note that Diderot is an enthusiast. His own control of the passions was "reason," not an entirely scientific entity, but alloyed with much "wisdom" and intuitive "common sense." He suggests, too, that Diderot's attempt to rehabilitate the passions is mere word-play, a question ultimately of terminology.

When it comes to the utility of the passions, however, Voltaire is in agreement with Diderot's "Pensée V":

C'est le comble de la folie, que de se proposer la ruine des passions. Le beau projet que celui d'un dévot qui se tourmente comme un forcené, pour ne rien désirer, ne rien aimer, ne rien sentir, et qui finirait par devenir un vrai monstre s'il réussissait!<sup>121</sup>

<sup>118</sup> Œuvres, I, 128; 1777 ed., p. 7.

<sup>119</sup> Cf. Desnoiresterres, Voltaire et la société au XVIII<sup>e</sup> siècle, v, 128-129.

<sup>120</sup> Œuvres, I, 128; 1777 ed., p. 7.

<sup>121</sup> Œuvres, I, 128; 1777 ed., p. 9.

Voltaire's comment is purely corroborative and illustrative: "C'est à quoy les jansénistes firent aspirer Pascal. Il en devint fou, et il en mourut." Diderot is leading up more slowly to his attack on the Jansenists, which will be fully expressed in "Pensée xiv." The next step in the argument, in "Pensée vi," is that acts of perfection must be capable of generalization. Diderot uses the argument against the manner of living of ascetics and hermits. Everyone should have the right to imitate Pacôme: Cependant, il ferait beau voir une province entière, effrayée des dangers de la société, se disperser dans les forêts; ses habitants vivre en bêtes farouches pour se sanctifier; mille colonnes élevés sur les ruines de toutes affections sociales, un nouveau peuple de stylites se dépouiller, par religion, des sentiments de la nature, cesser d'être hommes, et faire les statues pour être vrais chrétiens.<sup>122</sup>

Voltaire's comment is again corroborative: "C'est l'aventure de certains bracman pitagoriciens terapeutes, premiers moines." He was of course in hearty agreement with this indirect attack on monastic life.

In "Pensée ix," Diderot finds it impossible to desire the existence of a God who is often pictured in anger, wreaking vengeance, and choosing only a limited number to be saved:

L'on serait assez tranquille en ce monde, si l'on était assez bien assuré que l'on n'a rien à craindre dans l'autre: la pensée qu'il n'y a point de Dieu n'a jamais effrayé personne, mais bien celle qu'il y en a un tel que celui qu'on me peint.<sup>123</sup>

Voltaire adds in the margin: "Et qu'on a toujours peint eternas quoniam penas in morte timendum. Lucrèce." He had expressed the same idea repeatedly in his works, beginning with the early Épître à Uranie. But now, late in life, he pretends to believe that the argument would be more effective if it were shown that the idea of an avenging God is a very ancient and universal error and that Christianity merely took it over from the pagans and the Brahmins.

Diderot observes, in "Pensée xi," many temperamental differences among the devout:

La piété suivrait-elle aussi la loi de ce maudit tempérament? Hélas! comment en disconvenir? Son influence ne se remarque que trop sensiblement dans le même dévot: il voit, selon qu'il est affecté, un Dieu vengeur ou miséricordieux, les enfers ou les cieux ouverts; il tremble de frayeur ou il brûle d'amour; c'est une fièvre qui a ses accès froids et chauds.<sup>124</sup>

Voltaire is again afraid to follow Diderot's stressing of the temperament and the emotions. "Cet homme est un malade," is his comment.

<sup>122</sup> Œuvres, I, 128-129; 1777 ed., p. 11. This thought so typically a part of Diderot's moral philosophy was first published in 1746. Rousseau, a decade later, as he set out for his hermitage, was indeed egotistic to take as a personal insult a mild and brief repetition of the same idea.

<sup>123</sup> Œuvres, I, 130; 1777 ed., p. 13.

<sup>124</sup> Œuvres, I, 130, 1777 ed., p. 15.

In "Pensée xiv," Diderot's argument has reached its climax. His Pensées philosophiques is an "anti-Pascal" no less direct than Voltaire's addition to his Lettres philosophiques. The Jansenist opposition to the Encyclopédie is readily understood when we read such passages as—

Pascal avait de la droiture; mais il était peureux et crédule. Éléphant écrivain, et raisonneur profond, il eût sans doute éclairé l'univers, si la Providence ne l'eût abandonné à des gens qui sacrifiaient ses talents à leurs haines.<sup>125</sup>

Voltaire had already agreed with Diderot on Pascal in advance, in his comment on "Pensée v." Here he makes a very understandable and characteristic correction. In the phrase "Éléphant écrivain," he has crossed out "éléphant" and substituted "vigoureux." It has been noted that Voltaire had very high regard for Pascal's vigorous style. "Éléphant" might do for Fontenelle, but never for the Pascal who penned that great model of French prose, Les Lettres provinciales.<sup>126</sup>

With the main principles of Diderot's Entretien d'un philosophe avec M<sup>de</sup> la Duchesse de x x x, Voltaire could not fail to be in accord. Diderot believes that intolerance is inseparable from religion, that the destruction of religion would be one terrible prejudice the less, that it is indifferent whether we be Christians or pagans—except that as pagans we might be a bit more gay. The philosopher Crudeli-Diderot teases his noble and devout interlocutrice by showing her the discrepancy between her conduct and the Christian principles which she professes. He asks a noble lady the following questions:

N'est-il pas écrit dans l'Évangile que celui qui a convoité la femme de son prochain, a commis l'adultère dans son cœur? . . . Et l'adultère commis dans le cœur ne damne-t-il pas aussi sûrement que l'adultère le mieux conditionné?

La Duchesse: Elle vous répondit qu'oui?<sup>127</sup>

Voltaire will not allow Diderot his argument ad hominem nor the quotation from the New Testament which is contrary to the accepted code of Christian ethics: "Elle avait tort," he wrote. "La vraie vertu est de vaincre ses désirs."

Diderot is attempting to convict devout women of inconsistency in tempting and thus damning their friends by following the prevailing mode of low-cut gowns:

Elle me répondit que c'était une chose d'usage: comme si rien n'était plus d'usage que de s'appeler Chrétien, et de ne l'être pas; qu'il ne fallait pas se vêtir ridiculement, comme s'il y avait quelque comparaison à faire entre un misérable petit ridicule, sa damnation éternelle et celle de son prochain.<sup>128</sup>

<sup>125</sup> Œuvres, I, 131; 1777 ed., p. 17.

<sup>126</sup> Cf. XL, 171.

<sup>127</sup> Œuvres, II, 515; 1777 ed., p. 143.

<sup>128</sup> Œuvres, II, 515-516; 1777 ed., p. 145.

Diderot is perfectly justified in using Bayle's argument of the discrepancy between moral conduct and religious principle, and in singling out, in his gracious dialogue, an example that would especially impress his feminine listener. It is indeed surprising to discover Voltaire so literal-minded and carping in his comment: "Il est trop ridicule de supposer une damnation éternelle pour avoir montré un peu de tétou. J'aimerais autant damner une biche dans le temps de rut."

At a later point in the dialogue, Crudeli asks:

Et qu'est-ce que Dieu?

La Duchesse: Un esprit.

Crudeli. Si un esprit fait de la matière, pourquoi de la matière ne ferait-elle pas un esprit?<sup>129</sup>

Voltaire has starred the first "esprit" and written in the margin: "Un être quelqu'il soit, très intelligent et très puissant, mais je ne sçais positivement, ce qu'est esprit et matière." He maintains his skepticism rather too seriously against the Duchess, who admitted at the beginning that she had no head for philosophy. Likewise when the lady admits that animals have souls,<sup>130</sup> Voltaire replies in the margin: "Vous ne devez point assurer que les bêtes aient une âme; nous et elles, nous avons des idées, des facultés; c'est la seule chose dont nous soions surs." He is afraid that the Duchess will make the debate too simple for Diderot and will fall too easy a prey to his dialectic snares.

The latter proceeds to tell the story reported by Bouguer, one of La Condamine's companions, of the resurrection of the dried and smoked serpent of Peru; and then another of the Lithuanian Jesuit Bohola who left at his death the money to cover the expenses of his beatification and also authentic memoirs for the confirmation of his virtues.<sup>131</sup> Opposite the "mémoires authentiques," Voltaire has written: "Il faut mettre le conte de ce boho-là avec celui du serpent de Pérou." Really, the good Duchess must not be too gullible!

Voltaire's final note is on Diderot's famous apologue of the young Mexican who skeptically refused to believe in the existence of a country across the seas governed by some fabulous old man. He fell asleep on a raft and was carried across the Atlantic where he was immediately confronted with the sovereign. The old man forgave him readily for his skepticism on the grounds that it was all in good faith, but began immediately to question him on the wayward conduct of his past life, for which, instead of being sentenced to eternal punishment, he is also granted pardon. Crudeli asks if the Duke would not have done as much for any of his wayward children. His interlocutrice admits that he would, but says her husband and the old man are two different persons. Crudeli immediately presses his advantage and asks if she means that her husband is better, more forgiving, than the old man. The Duchess replies: "Dieu m'en garde! Je veux dire que, si ma justice n'est pas celle de M. le Duc, la justice de M. le Duc pourrait bien n'être pas celle du vieillard."<sup>132</sup> Voltaire has often voiced this same idea of the guiltlessness of disinterested skepticism. But here he opens up an old question of method of attack: "Tout cela serait bon, si les cretiens avaient inventé l'enfer. Mais comme c'est une folie imaginée il y a des milliers de siècles par les bracmanes il fallait faire voir à la Duchesse que les cretiens ne sont que des plagiaires. C'est la meilleure méthode." Voltaire regretted to the end that he had not been able to associate d'Alembert, Diderot, and Helvétius with him in the writing and publishing of tracts such as the Testament de Jean Meslier and the Sermon des cinquante. Diderot was interested in no specific attack against Christianity; long held in restraint by family considerations and preoccupied with metaphysics, he went more profoundly to the basis of religious sanctions in general. His Pensées philosophiques not only represent his abandonment of Christianity for deism, but also clearly presage his speedy conversion to atheism. Voltaire's program, in contrast to Diderot's, is indicated in a letter to Helvétius, in 1763:

<sup>129</sup> Œuvres, II, 520; 1777 ed., p. 159.

<sup>130</sup> Œuvres, loc. cit.; 1777 ed., loc. cit.

<sup>131</sup> Œuvres, II, 520, 522; 1777 ed., p. 165.

Il paraît convenable de n'écrire que des choses simples, courtes, intelligibles aux esprits les plus grossiers; que le vrai seul, et non l'envie de briller, caractérise ces ouvrages; qu'ils confondent le mensonge et la superstition, et qu'ils apprennent aux hommes à être justes et tolérants. Il est à souhaiter qu'on ne se jette point dans la métaphysique, que peu de personnes entendent, et qui fournit toujours des armes aux ennemis. Il est à la fois plus sûr et plus agréable de jeter du ridicule et de l'horreur sur les disputes théologiques, de faire sentir aux hommes combien la morale est belle et les dogmes impertinents, et de pouvoir éclairer à la fois le chancelier et le cordonnier. On n'est parvenu, en Angleterre, à déraciner la superstition que par cette voie.<sup>133</sup>

Voltaire's method was indeed much more effective in the enlightenment of the shoemaker as well as the chancellor. As a result, his body was refused Christian burial in Paris and was smuggled out of the city, while Diderot, a few years later, was quietly laid to rest in the chapel of the Virgin under the flagstones of the Church of St. Roch.

<sup>132</sup> Œuvres, II, 526, 527; 1777 ed., p. 179.

<sup>133</sup> XLII, 514. The heading given this letter in Grimm's Correspondance (1<sup>er</sup> août, 1763) is much more descriptive. Épître aux fidèles, par le grand apôtre des Délices. The letter has been variously assigned. In Caussy, Inventaire des Manuscrits, (1913), p. 88, it is erroneously given as a fragment of a letter from Diderot to Voltaire.

When Voltaire arrived in Paris in 1778, it was not only his clothes and his wig that were out of date. He was fighting a losing battle to save the old classicism, he was defending the polished plays of Corneille and Racine against the vogue of the barbarous Shakespeare, he was upholding the principles and methods of the English deism of the first half of the century, and he was still cherishing the principles of physics and metaphysics that he had incorporated into his Éléments de la philosophie de Newton in 1738. Diderot's printed works were comparatively little known, his true opinions even less. Voltaire could hardly have suspected that the future lay, for better or for worse, with his voluble, argumentative, enthusiastic, metaphysical friend whom he then was meeting for the first time. If we grant, however, the righteousness of Voltaire's struggle for tolerance, we cannot help but admire his single-mindedness and dogged persistency, and we can join the crowds in the streets of Paris yelling "l'homme à Calas" as the patriarch is carried by on the shoulders of the people, leaving Diderot for the moment free to prepare his manuscripts for posterity.

NORMAN L. TORREY

Swarthmore College

ZUM BEGRIFF DES JUNGEN GOETHE

ALLENTHALBEN begnügt man sich noch mit dem Begriff vom Jungen Goethe, wie ihn Ludwig Tieck<sup>1</sup> faszte, der diesen nur bis auf den Vorweimarer Goethe angewandt wissen wollte. Ihm folgte Max Morris,<sup>2</sup> dessen kritische Stoffsammlung mit dem Reisetagebuch Goethes vom 30. Oktober 1775 abschlieszt. So halt auch Karl Alt<sup>3</sup> an der Auffassung Tiecks fest. Das glanzend geschriebene synthetische Werkchen von Karl Viëtor<sup>4</sup> greift ebenfalls über Goethes letzte Frankfurter Tage nicht hinaus. Korff<sup>5</sup> schlieszt den Jungen Goethe, ohne sichere Daten zu geben, mit dem Urfaust ab. Selbst Gundolf<sup>6</sup> macht kaum eine Ausnahme, doch unterscheidet er scharfer zwischen einem Frühweimarer und dem mit der Rückkehr aus Italien wirklich gereiften Goethe. Das trefflichste Beispiel bietet jedoch Eugen Wolffs Untersuchung über die geschichtliche Entwicklung junggoethescher Gedichte, die mit Anfang November 1775 abschlieszt, allerdings schon 1907 erschien. Aber noch Hermann Baumgart in seinem Werk Goethes lyrische Dichtung in ihrer Entwicklung und Bedeutung, Band I, S. 186 f. (Heidelberg, 1931) halt die nachfrankfurter Jahre "zur entscheidenden Epoche" von Goethes Leben, in denen sich "die bleibende Richtung seines Lebens" gebildet habe. Und so könnte man die Liste bewährter Forscher weiter verfolgen, ohne dasz sich das herkömmliche Bild nennenswert ändern wurde.<sup>6a</sup>

Gewiss muss man sich vor der Auffassung hüten, als ob diese Zeitsetzungen wörtlich zu nehmen seien. Die genannten Forscher folgten sicherlich einer mehr praktischen als inneren Notwendigkeit. Gleichwohl dürfte es sich verlohnen, an gewissen Beispielen zu zeigen, wie allmählich der Uebergang tatsächlich war. Die organische Entfaltung all dessen, was von vornherein in Goethe lag, wird dabei um so kräftiger in Er-

<sup>1</sup> Vergl. Hans Rohl, "Die ältere Romantik und die Kunst des jungen Goethe". Forschungen zur neueren Literatur-Geschichte, xxxvi (1919), 161.

<sup>2</sup> Der junge Goethe (Leipzig, 1909).

<sup>3</sup> Goethes Werke, Goldene Klassiker Bibliothek, I, S. 35.

<sup>4</sup> Der Junge Goethe (Leipzig, 1930).

<sup>5</sup> Geist der Goethezeit, Band I (Leipzig, 1923).

<sup>6</sup> Goethe (Berlin, 1916) S. 235 f.; 243.

<sup>6a</sup> Erst nach Abschluss meiner Arbeit erschien das ausgezeichnete Buch von Hans Keipert, Die Wandlungen Goethescher Gedichte zum klassischen Stil: Die Umarbeitungen zur Gesamtausgabe 1789 (Jena, 1933). Keipert bemerkt, dasz schon "im Anfang der Weimarer Jahre . . . sich im Dichter die Kraftgeniestimmungen zu klären" begonnen hatten (S.3), betont aber dann ausdrücklich, "dasz dieser Umschwung nicht plötzlich vollzogen ist, dasz er sich vielmehr aus einer langsamen inneren Entwicklung des Dichters ergab, deren Spuren mindestens bis in die letzte Frankfurter Zeit zurückzuverfolgen sind."

scheinung treten. So drängt sich die Frage auf, welcherlei Ereignisse und welcherart Lebens- oder Denkinhalte die Zeit des Jungen Goethe begrenzen? Welche Inhalte sind überhaupt als junggoethisch zu betrachten? Dabei ist wohl zu beachten, dasz es sich in einer solchen Untersuchung immer nur um die Stellungnahme, das Verhältnis zu den Dingen handeln kann.

Vier Hauptstoffgebiete sollen im folgenden aus dem Gesichtskreis der Goetheschen Erfahrungswelt herangezogen werden: die Landschaft, Volk und Volksdichtung, die Liebe zum anderen Geschlecht und endlich die Kunst. Dasz diese vier Gebiete im Leben des jüngeren Goethe eine ganz besondere Rolle gespielt haben, ist zu bekannt, um langer bei einer Begründung dieser Auswahl zu verweilen; sie schlieszen jedoch weder andere Gebiete aus noch sind die hier bevorzugten an sich junggoethisch zu nennen. Nur Goethes spezifische Einstellung zu diesen Inhalten kann dazu dienen, ihn selber von unserem, auch nur zeitlich bedingten Standpunkte "jung," "gereift" oder "alt" zu bezeichnen. Laszt sich anderseits eine durchgreifende Veränderung in der Goetheschen Anschauungsweise und einem dementsprechenden Verhalten des Dichters im Laufe der Jahre eindeutig verfolgen, so mag man mit Recht die abgelösten Ideen und aufgegebenen Gewohnheiten als junggoethisch ansehen. In unserem Falle werden wir uns darum an jene wichtigen Tatsachen halten müssen, die einen einwandfreien Gesinnungswechsel in Goethe entweder anbahnen oder endgültig vollziehen. Ob solcher dabei vor oder nach der Ankunft des Dichters in Weimar eintritt, wird von entscheidender Bedeutung sein.

Betreffs des Landschaftsgefühls stellen wir folgendes fest. Goethes neues Naturgefühl ist bereits im Juni 1770 völlig erwacht;<sup>7</sup> also ehe Herder in Straszburg auftaucht. Von Mitte 1770 an bis Ende 1776 bezeichnet er eine Gegend romantisch,<sup>8</sup> wenn sie ihn besonders stimmungsvoll anmutet oder er in anderen das Gefühl einer solchen wachrufen will.

<sup>7</sup> Siehe Goethes Briefentwurf: Saarbruck, 27. Juni 1770. — Die Einwirkung des Bildungserlebnisses Rousseau, die hier und im folgenden vorausgesetzt ist, gehört im engern Sinne nicht zu unserm Thema.

<sup>8</sup> In dem Bruchstück des Romans Arianne an Wetty, Spätherbst 1770, in welchem Goethe Leipziger Liebeswirren "mit Gedanken zu durchdringen" sucht, "die ihm durch Herder aufgegangen waren" (Morris, Der junge Goethe, VI, 152 ff.), handelt es sich zwar nicht um eine (romantische) Landschaft, wohl aber nennt der Dichter das kleine "Stubgen, das so oft der Zeuge unsrer seeligen Trunckenheit war," eine "liebe romantische Hole"—eine Metapher, der Natur entnommen. Doch siehe Erwin und Elmire, worin Bernardo u.a. sagt: "... alles, was wir von romantischen Gegenden geträumt haben, halt dieses Plätzchen in einem" (Morris, V, 51). Vergl. auch: Werther, Brief vom 10. Sept. 1771; Goethes Reisebericht an den Herzog v. 23.-26. Dez. 1775; Lila, Bühnenanweisung zum zweiten Aufzug.

Während die Landschaft in "Willkommen und Abschied" wundervoll poetisch gesehen—aber doch mehr gesehen als hingebend empfunden wird, ist das Verhältnis zu ihr im "Mailed" rein individuell-lyrischer Art. Im "Ganymed" wird dem Dichter die Frühlingsflur zur Gottheit, der er sich anbetend entgegenwirft. Und im Werther steigert und übersteigert sich Goethes Naturbegeisterung zu unerhörten Spannungen und Entspannungen. Werthers Gemut ist so im Banne der landschaftlichen Umgebung, dasz die jeweilige Gegend und Jahreszeit über sein seelisches Befinden verfügt. Landschaft wirkt hier schicksalbestimmend.<sup>8a</sup> Hinwendung zur Natur und rückwirkender Einflusz dieser ausseren Gegebenheit auf die innere Verfassung des Menschen erreicht somit im Werther die denkbar höchste Stufe einer Entwicklung, die bereits mit Kleist, Haller und Brockes begonnen hatte—wenn deren Verse auch weniger Stimmungsgedichte als poetisierende Beschreibungen waren. Neues ereignet sich erst auf der ersten Schweizerreise. Eine auffallige Freude am Wirklichen, Allgemeinen und Wissenschaftlichen macht sich in Goethe bemerkbar: er beobachtet die Welt zum ersten Male ohne Gefühlsbeimischung.

In Weimar setzt er seine romantischen Streifereien, die er seit Strassburg gewohnt war, fort. Burschen- und Wanderlust will sich in der Landschaft tummeln und austoben. Weder Stadt noch fürstlicher Hof sind solch ungebundener Betätigung günstig. Aber Ende Juni 1776 zieht den jungen Besucher die Landschaft mehr ihrer Stille und Reinheit<sup>9</sup> wegen an. Eine gedämpfte<sup>10</sup> Lebensstimmung kehrt von nun an immer wieder, bis sie ihm auf der zweiten Schweizerreise zur groszen ruhigen Empfindung wird. Stimmungsbezeichnungen wie schöne Ruhe, reines Gefühl, Stille (Seele, Beschränkung, ewiges Gesetz) treten in den Vordergrund. Um 1779 kennzeichnen erhabenes Gefühl, Ehrfurcht und verhaltene Bewunderung über die Grösze der Schöpfung des Dichters Verhältnis zu ihr. Man darf darum hier von dem Abschlusz einer Entwicklung sprechen, wobei keineswegs vergessen ist, dasz über diesen Zeitpunkt hinaus noch gewisse Rückfälle zu verzeichnen sind. Selbst auf der italienischen Reise drückt Goethe noch einmal unverhohlenes Gefallen an einem englischen Garten aus.<sup>11</sup> Von solchen Ausnahmefällen

<sup>8a</sup> Vergl. Beitzl, Goethes Bild der Landschaft (Berlin, 1929) S.34. Beitzl beschränkt sich auf die Prosawerke Goethes. Sein Hauptverdienst ist, gezeigt zu haben, dass Goethes Auge nicht plastisch sondern zeichnerisch gesehen.

<sup>9</sup> An Frau v. Stein, 29. Juni 1776.

<sup>10</sup> Tagebuch v. 8. Okt. 1777; 30. Nov. 1777.

<sup>11</sup> Man lese Goethes Reisebericht v. 22. Febr. 1787, worin er sich sichtlich freut über die wahre Wildnis der verdorrten, umgestürzten, verfaulten Bäume, Straucher, Kräuter und wuchernden Ranken im Parke des Prinzen di Chigi.

abgesehen, oder richtiger gesagt: trotz solcher Einzelercheinungen lässt sich vom Sommer 1776 ab die neue Richtung in aufsteigender Linie verfolgen. Goethes Verhältnis zur Natur bleibt gefühlvoll, verliert aber das Ueberschwengliche des Sturms und Drangs. Ein fast religiöses, weihevoll gefühltes reift in ihm heran.

Goethes Liebe zum Volk und zur Volksdichtung fällt ganz mit Herders Auftreten in Straszburg zusammen. Das eifrige Sammeln von Volksliedern und -balladen, die eigenen Versuche der Nachdichtung volksmässiger Dichtung, ferner der grösste Teil des Götz sind Früchte des Umgangs mit dem groszen Anreger in Straszburg. Das gilt eigentlich von allen anderen in diesem Zusammenhang zu erwähnenden Einzeldichtern wie Homer, Ossian und selbst Shakespeare, deren Werke ihm so gut Naturdichtung sind wie die schlichten Vergeschichten der elsassischen Landbevölkerung. Homer und Ossian bilden den Lesestoff Werthers. Dabei besteht stets ein innerer Zusammenhang zwischen dem seelischen Zustande Werthers und seiner jeweiligen Wahl eines Buches. So liest er Homer,<sup>12</sup> wenn er selbst heiter und ruhig ist, und gegen Ende des Romans Ossian,<sup>13</sup> weil dessen traurig klagende Stimmung seinem eigenen inneren Chaos mehr entspricht. Am wohlsten fühlt er sich beim einfachen Volke<sup>14</sup> und besonders Kindern.<sup>15</sup> Von Hofleuten hat er wie schon Götz seine eigene Meinung. Götz<sup>16</sup> tritt für den Bauer ein, wenn er anderseits auch den Aufständigen die bittersten Wahrheiten sagt. Werther<sup>17</sup> schätzt die Arbeit des Kartoffel- und Getreidebauers höher als die eigene und die der Adeligen. Hochnäsigkeit der Bürgerlichen<sup>18</sup> haszt er noch mehr als den Dünkel des Adels. Goethe selbst gesteht nach der Abfassung des Werther, dasz "das gemeine Volk . . . die besten Menschen sind."<sup>19</sup> In der Claudine von Villa Bella wird programmatisch erklärt, dasz der Bauer<sup>20</sup> der Mensch und volksmässige<sup>21</sup> Dichtung die Dichtung schlechthin ist. In der ästhetischen Schrift Nach Falconet und über Falconet lobt er an Rembrandt besonders, dasz dieser seine Mutter Gottes mit dem Kinde als niederländische Bäuerin<sup>22</sup> dargestellt hat. In Erwin und Elmire<sup>23</sup> und selbst in der aristokratisch angehauchten Stella<sup>24</sup> wird die Gelegenheit nicht versäumt, Lobenswertes über Kinder geringen Standes zu sagen. Und was die Volksszenen im Egmont angeht, so sind auch sie wahrscheinlich noch in Frankfurt entstanden.

<sup>12</sup> 13. u. 26. Mai 1771; 21. June 1771; 28. Aug. 1771; 15. März 1772.

<sup>13</sup> 12. Okt. 1772.

<sup>15</sup> 15. Mai 1771; 29. Juni 1771.

<sup>17</sup> 24. Dez. 1771.

<sup>19</sup> Tagebuchartiger Brief an Schonborn, 1. Juni- 4. Juli 1775.

<sup>20</sup> Morris, v, 165.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., v, 348.

<sup>14</sup> 20. Okt. 1771; 15. u. 17. Mai 1771.

<sup>16</sup> Morris, II, 218, 247 ff., 253; III, 245.

<sup>18</sup> 24. Dez. 1771.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid., v, 160.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., v, 41.

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., v, 90; 73 f., 79, 89.

Die Einfachheit und Natürlichkeit der Landbevölkerung<sup>25</sup> fällt Goethe noch im Herbst und Winter 1775 auf. In den Briefen aus der Schweiz stehen dann allerdings schon recht abfällige Bemerkungen über die Behausungen der Bergbewohner.<sup>26</sup> Anerkennendes findet er fast gar nicht — eine Erscheinung, die sich hier bei Goethe zum ersten Male zeigt. Leider ist die Zeit der Abfassung der Briefe nicht ganz sicher gestellt.

Erst vom Frühjahr 1776 ab liegen ähnliche, doch zeitlich gesicherte Zeugnisse vor, die sich schnell einander folgend vermehren. Gelegentlich wird zwar noch ein anerkennendes Wort<sup>27</sup> geauszeit, meist aber spricht Goethe nur kühl beamtenmässig,<sup>28</sup> wenn nicht sogar verachtlich,<sup>29</sup> von armen Leuten, Bergleuten, Leinewebern und Tagelöhnern. Seit Februar 1777 scheint der Dichter der Auszenwelt müde geworden zu sein. Er schlieszt sich nach Möglichkeit von ihr ab. Ende März ist ihm der Werther<sup>30</sup> fremd geworden. Im September desselben Jahres verschmaht der nunmehrige Hofmann zwar den nächtlichen Umgang mit Bauernmädels nicht, aber die derbe Sinnlichkeit des wusten Treibens entbehrt jeder Schätzung<sup>31</sup> seinerseits. Im folgenden Winter macht er sich allein auf den Weg zum Harz. Februar und März 1778 bringen erneut Zeugnisse einer zunehmenden Abschlieszung<sup>32</sup> gegen alle äuszere Ablenkung. Diesmal flieht der Dichter nicht nur die auszerhische Bevölkerung, sondern zieht sich vom herzoglichen Hofleben selbst zurück. Weder naturgewachsene Schönheit inmitten des gewöhnlichen Volkes noch dessen derbsinnliche Volksdichtung kann ihn mehr begeistern. Die modern europäische Hofluft<sup>33</sup> schlägt nicht mehr bei ihm an. Sie und alles ihn bisher Aufregende hat seinen alten Reiz eingebüszet. Des Dichters Geist ist entrückt an den Hof eines mythischen Königs Altgriechenlands Dorthin, wo der Herrscher des Landes Hoherpriester des Volkes und Anwalt der unsterblichen Götter ist. Und so heiszt es denn endlich in

<sup>25</sup> An Lavater, 21. Dez. 1775. Vergl. Brief an Karl August, 23. Dez. 1775.

<sup>26</sup> Erste Abtlg. dritter Abschnitt; Zweite Abtlg., Schlusssatz in Eintragung unter "Sion, den 8. November, Leuk, gegen 10 Uhr." <sup>27</sup> An Karl August, Kochberg 1776.

<sup>28</sup> An Karl August, 4. Mai 1776; an Gustgen, 20. Mai 1776; vergl. Brief v. 24. Mai 1776, worin Goethe über einen grossen Brand Mitteilung macht, ohne die armen Geschädigten auch nur mit einem Worte zu erwähnen. <sup>29</sup> An Herder, 5. Juni 1776.

<sup>30</sup> An Frau von Stein, 28. März 1777, vergl. die formliche Verdammung des Romans im fünften Aufzug des Triumphs der Empfindsamkeit.

<sup>31</sup> Undatierter Brief an Frau von Stein, etwa vor 13. Sept. 1777; vergl. Brief v. 13. Sept. 1777. <sup>32</sup> Tgbch. v. 12. Febr. 1778; an Frau von Stein, 2. März 1778.

<sup>33</sup> An Kestner, 28. Sept. 1777, Tgbch. v. 31. Aug. 1778; an Frau von Stein, 4. März 1779; an Knebel, 5. März 1779, an den Herzog heiszt es in einem Briefe vom 14. März desselben Jahres aus dem Dornburger Schloszen, dasz er (Goethe) gern nach Weimar gekommen sei, doch sei ihm vor der Zerstreung bange gewesen.

der Tagebucheinzeichnung vom 28. März 1779 ganz kurz und doch so vielsagend: "Iphigenie geendet."

Merkwürdigerweise hält während dieser Entwicklung zur Antike hin Goethes hohe Achtung vor dem Handwerkerstande an. An Hans Sachs interessierte ihn noch nicht zum wenigsten, dasz dieser Volksdichter ein regelrechter Schuhmacher war. Die Briefe aus der Schweiz loben sogar den Handwerkerstand,<sup>34</sup> und zwar gerade wegen seiner fest begrenzten Aufgaben und Pflichten. 1782 ist es der Tod des Weimarer Bühnenschrainers, der dem Dichter den herrlichen Epilog "Auf Miedings Tod" eingibt.

Über Goethe und die Liebe ist folgendes zu sagen. Alle seine Liebeserfahrungen sind typisch romantisch, d.h. gefühlsselig und gefühlsbestimmt, schwankend, herzerreizend. Das sogenannte Sesenheimer Idyll ist idyllisch im Anfang, tragisch im Ausgang — auch ohne die volle Auswirkung, welche Ballade und Drama des Sturms und Drangs aufzeigen. Aber Goethe selbst ist von nun ab ein immerwährendes Opfer verfehlter Neigungen. Diese Herzenserlebnisse verfolgen ihn ohne Unterlass auch künstlerisch: sie drängen den Dichter zu literarischer Beichte. Die Weislingen, Werther, Clavigo, Erwin, Fernando, Wilhelm (Die Geschwister) leiden an dem einen Grundübel egotistischer Gefühlschwelgerei, verbunden mit einer unglaublich unmännlichen Willensschwäche. Sie sind alle miteinander schwache, schwankende, hangende, bangende Helden; Stimmungsmenschen, leicht erregbar, leicht (ver-)führbar. Weislingen, Clavigo, Werther gehen an ihrer eigenen Unseligkeit zugrunde. Letzterem vermag man allenfalls mildernde Umstände zuzubilligen, da seine bürgerliche Herkunft sowohl wie hohe Geistesbildung nur Anlaß zu Verdrieszlichkeiten gab. Auch Egmont ist hier zu erwähnen, unbeschadet aller "Dämonie." Seine wahnwitzige Vertrauensseligkeit wird nicht zuletzt — wenn auch unbewusst — durch Klärchens restlose Hingabe an ihn und sein Vergessensuchen in ihrem Besitz gestärkt. Erotische Genüsse sind nicht dazu angetan, die Sinne eines Feldherrn und politischen Führers zu schärfen. Sie machen ihn naturnotwendig schwach, nachlässig, stumpf, arglos, schläfrig. (Julius Cäsar mag eine Ausnahme gewesen sein.) Ein echter Stürmer in der Liebe, ein Mensch und Mann voll Lebensdurst und Lebenskraft ist nur der "tolle Kopf" mit "jungem Herzen" Crugantino. Dieser adelige Stromer lebt und liebt sorglos in den Tag hinein, liebt und lebt, wann, wo und wie sich die Gelegenheit dazu bietet. An ihm gemessen, ist selbst der ruhelose Faust kein rassereiner Stürmer. Zu viel Gedankenschwere hängt ihm an. Zur ungemischten Freude am Leben gelangt er nicht. Dazu ist er zu unselbständig, zu vielseitig, zu wechsellvoll, zu kompliziert.

<sup>34</sup> Erste Abteilung; vergl. Tgbch. v. 14. Juli 1779; an Kraft, 9. Sept. 1779.

Goethe selber, der Schöpfer dieser Gestalten, bedarf der "Mädgen"<sup>35</sup> nicht weniger als der daraus entstehenden Herzbubel. Weder kann er noch will er auf Liebe verzichten.<sup>36</sup> Zwar schlieszt der Wanderer im gleichnamigen dramatischen Gedichte mit dem Wunsche, einmal solch mütterliches Weib sein eigen zu heissen, wie es hier Gegenstand seiner Bewunderung gewesen, aber zur Beurteilung Goethes darf man nicht übersehen, dass dieser Zug in dem kleinen Werkchen auf unmittelbare literarische Anregung<sup>37</sup> zurückgeht. Immerhin mag man anerkennen, dass solch hehre Mütterlichkeit dem jungen Dichter wohlzutun schien. Erst in den letzten Frankfurter Monaten, inmitten ärgster Liebeswirren, äussert Goethe den leicht verständlichen Wunsch nach eigenem häuslichen Glück,<sup>38</sup> was jedoch den Umständen entsprechend nur ein Ausweg sein konnte, weil er Entspannung und Ruhe und Wohlbefindensein verhiesz.

In Weimar endlich fällt Goethe erneut und zutiefst seiner unerfüllten Liebessehnsucht zum Opfer. Dieses neue Verhältnis trägt jedoch von Anfang an den Stempel der Hoffnungslosigkeit und des schwer zu verwindenden Verzichtes an sich. Der Dichter bettelt<sup>39</sup> formlich um jedes Zeichen von Gunst. In seiner Hilflosigkeit denkt er wieder an sein erprobtes letztes Mittel der Flucht, in diesem Falle: der Abreise und Rückkehr nach Frankfurt,<sup>40</sup> doch bleibt er, sich ins Unvermeidliche<sup>41</sup> fügend. Anfang Februar 1776 äussert er erneut das Verlangen nach dem ruhigen Hafen der Ehe.<sup>42</sup> Er ist des "Herzteilens überdrüssig," schreibt er wenige Monate später an die geliebte Frau.<sup>43</sup> In dem Einakter Die

<sup>35</sup> Vergl. die Briefe aus dem Sommer 1774 nebst den Lili-Liedern.

<sup>36</sup> In einem Briefkonzept vom 27. Juni 1770 aus Saarbrücken (an Katharina Fabricius?) lesen wir unter anderem die bezeichnenden Worte: "Wir sind wie Kinder auf dem Schaukelpferde immer in Bewegung, immer in Arbeit, und nimmer vom Fleck. Das ist das wahre Bild eines Liebhabers. Wie traurig wird die Liebe, wenn man so scheniert ist, und doch können Verliebte nicht leben, ohne sich zu schenieren." An Kestner schreibt Goethe am 11. Dez. 1772: "Und ich binn frey, und liebebedürftig. . . Da binn ich wieder in Frfurt, gehe mit neuen Plans um und Grillen, das ich alles nicht tuhn wurde hätt ich ein Mädgen." Vergl. Briefe an Johanna Fahlmer, Strassburg, 24. u. 26. Mai 1775; an Frau von Stein vom August 1776 an, ferner das Gedicht "Rettung" (1773?) und im "Concerto Dramatico" die Verse "Sonne kann nicht ohne Schein/Mensch nicht ohne liebe seyn" (Morris, III, 79).

<sup>37</sup> Morris, VI, 188 ff.; vergl. Brief an Kestner vom 15. Sept. 1773.

<sup>38</sup> "Dem Hafen häuslicher Glückseligkeit, und festem Füsse in wahren Leid u. Freud wähnt ich vor kurzen naher zu kommen, bin aber auf leidige Weise wieder in's weite Meer geworfen." An Herder, 12. Mai 1775.

<sup>39</sup> Vergl. die Briefe an Frau von Stein vom Januar 1776 an.

<sup>40</sup> An Frau von Stein, 29. Januar 1776.

<sup>41</sup> An Frau von Stein, 2. Mai 1776.

<sup>42</sup> An Bürger, 2. Febr. 1776. Dagegen schreibt Goethe am 20. Mai 1776 an sein "Gutgen," dass "rechte Weiber" Männer überhaupt nicht lieben sollten, da sie es nicht verdienen.

<sup>43</sup> An Frau von Stein, 16. Juli 1776; vergl. Brief v. 25. März 1776.

Geschwister erahnen wir des Dichters eigene Nöte und Bedrängnisse. Er musz jedoch wie sein Thoas von der Erfüllung seines sehnlichsten Wunsches abstehen. Die Briefe vom November 1779 an Knebel und Frau von Stein gewähren uns den unmittelbarsten Einblick in das empfängliche, weiche Gemüt Goethes, des nun Dreissigjährigen: er ist ein im tiefsten Wesen einsamer, liebeleidender Mensch. Nur seine vielseitigen, anderweitigen Interessen gestatten ihm trotzdem Welt und Leben auch froh zu genießen. Wahr bleibt immerhin sein Geständnis an Frau von Stein: "Die Liebe giebt mir alles, und wo die nicht ist, dresch ich Stroh."<sup>44</sup>

Kommen wir zur letzten Frage: Was ist Goethes Stellung zur Kunst? Ganz allgemein gesprochen, steht Goethes Kunstschaffen im Zeichen des Gefühlserlebnisses.<sup>45</sup> Das Kunstwerk (das echte) entsteht organisch wie jedes andere Naturgebilde.<sup>46</sup> Die Ideen kommen angeflogen oder steigen aus den Urtiefen der Seele (dem modernen Unterbewusstsein!) gleich anfänglich dunklen Ahnungen allmählich an die Oberfläche des Bewusstseins.<sup>47</sup> Sie keimen und entfalten sich wie eine Pflanze. Oder ein erleuchtender Geist überrascht den Künstler ganz unvorbereitet, und unter solchem Druck ergieszt sich die bis dahin latente Kraft dammbruchartig und ungewollt zu einem Kunstwerke.<sup>48</sup> So plötzlich wie dieser Schaffensrausch losbricht, ebenso hemmungslos tobt er sich auch aus. Das so zustandegекommene Werk ist sich selbst Vorbild und Regel. Der so schaffende Künstler ist dem Halbgott<sup>49</sup> vergleichbar. "Ein volles ganz von Einer Empfindung volles Herz"<sup>50</sup> ist das Staubecken, aus dem der dichterische Strom voll Schaffensfreude und Rausch hervorstürzt. Aus der Richtung und Stärke dieses Gefühlsergusses ergibt sich dementsprechend die äuszere Form des Kunstwerkes ganz von selbst. Gehalt und Gestalt werden von innen heraus bestimmt. "Gedanck und Empfindung" bilden "den Ausdruck."<sup>51</sup> Sie bilden naturgemäsz ein Ganzes. Mehr als das, es ist "der Geist, der alles schön macht," die Idee, das Lebendige, das Organische. Gehalt geht über Gestalt.<sup>52</sup>

Diese Ästhetik des jungen Frankfurter Rechtsanwalts zeigt 1773 eine leichte Schwenkung. Es reizt ihn als Dramatiker, den Beweis zu liefern, <sup>44</sup> An Frau von Stein, 22. Juli 1776.

<sup>45</sup> Briefkonzept an Hetzler den Jüngeren, 14. Juli 1770; vergl. Wagnerszene im Urfaust.

<sup>46</sup> Morris, v, 262 f.; vergl. Kant, Kritik der Urteilskraft, Paragr. 46; Eucken, Geistige Strömungen der Gegenwart (1904), 127 ff.; Walzel, Deutsche Romantik (1923), I, 15; Gundolf, Goethe (1916), 461; Korff, Geist der Goethezeit, I (1923), 132 f.

<sup>47</sup> An Herder, Frankfurt, Ende 1771; u. etwa 10. Juli 1772.

<sup>48</sup> Morris, vi, 220 ff.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid., III, 107 unten.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid., II, 174 oben.

<sup>51</sup> An Herder, etwa 10. Juli 1772.

<sup>52</sup> Morris, II, 32 f.; Briefkonzept an Hetzler den Jüngeren v. 14. Juli 1770; an Friederike Oeser, 8. April 1769; Morris, II, 51 f., 140, 305 ff.; III, 101 ff.; v, 262 f.

dasz er auch nach schulmässigen Vorschriften<sup>53</sup> zu schreiben vermag. Im Sommer 1774 lobt er jedoch überschwenglich die radikal eingestellte Gelehrten-Republic Klopstocks,<sup>54</sup> weil sie den ästhetischen Anschauungen der Stürmer und Dränger das Wort redet. Trotzdem hat er sich gleichzeitig nicht der Einsicht verschlieszen können, dasz "Zusammenwerfen der Regeln . . . keine Ungebundenheit"<sup>55</sup> gibt. Nichtsdestoweniger schmeichelt ihm der Gedanke der angeblichen Verworrenheit im Aufbau des neuen Dramas. Jenen kalten<sup>56</sup> Stücken, die sich in Metrum und Manier an die französische Hofbühne halten, zieht er es auf jeden Fall vor. Wahrheit und Wirklichkeit sollen in der Literatur vorherrschen und nicht Politesse. Durchempfindung — nicht Anempfindung — der Charaktere verleiht der dramatischen Dichtung den Wert des künstlerisch Bedeutsamen, nicht der äuszere Zierat. Die "innere Form" begreift "alle Formen" in sich.<sup>57</sup> Formale Ästhetiker sind ihm überhaupt (noch) zuwider.

Im Sommer 1775 reizt den Stürmer wieder der himmelanstrebende Turm des Straszburger Münsters zur höchsten Bewunderung<sup>58</sup> hin, und man möchte daraufhin wieder eine neue literarische Explosion von ihm erwarten. Aber zur grössten Überraschung schreibt er, und trotzdem es ihm "toll und wunderlich"<sup>59</sup> zumute ist, seine ersten Hexameter.<sup>60</sup> Damit nicht genug, bemüht er sich, eine Landschaft objektiv, das heiszt, mit wissenschaftlich nüchternen Worten zu zeichnen.<sup>61</sup> Tatsächlich verlegt hier Goethe zum ersten Male nicht mehr seine Gefühlen in die Dinge, sondern registriert nur, was die Linse seines Auges wirklich gewahrt. Im Spätherbst desselben Jahres—ob noch in Frankfurt oder bereits in Weimar, verbleibt ein Geheimnis, schwer zu enthüllen—überraschen ferner die letzten Sätze des Falconet-Aufsatzes, worin er auf die von der Natur dem Künstler gesetzte Stileinschränkung<sup>62</sup> aufmerksam macht. 1776 folgt "Hans Sachsens poetische Sendung," die neben alten Sturm-und-Drang-Elementen manche beachtenswerte Annäherung an den Geist des Klassizismus verrät. Schon die Beschreibung des jungen Weibes darin erinnert an die kommende romantisch-idealisierte Gestaltung der griechischen Frau als eine der vielen schönen Verirrungen, die von den Dichtern sowohl wie von den Philosophen des deutschen Klassizismus in gleich schuldiger Weise liebevoll gepflegt wurden. Um dieselbe Zeit beginnt Goethe die Proserpina zu dichten, die aber noch Bruchstück bleibt. Wichtig ist dabei, dasz die Gestalt der Proserpina nicht im Sinne der Lieblingshelden aus früheren Jahren wie etwa Cäsar und

<sup>53</sup> An Kestner, 15. Sept. 1773 (gegen Ende des langen Briefes).

<sup>54</sup> An Schonborn, 10. Juni 1774.

<sup>55-57</sup> Morris, v, 344.

<sup>58</sup> Morris, v, 261 ff.

<sup>59</sup> An Johanna Fahlmer, 24. u. 26. Mai 1775.

<sup>60</sup> Morris, v, 259.

<sup>61</sup> Ibid., v, 260.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid., v, 350.

Prometheus konzipiert ist. Auch hat sie nichts von der Dämonie einer Adelheid an sich. Im Gegenteil! Proserpina entstammt nicht nur dem Namen nach aus einer nie gewesenen glorreichen Vorwelt, sie ist tatsächlich die Vorbotin eines Lebensgefühls, das unseren groszen Lebenskünstlern einen würdigen Ersatz verlieh für den irdischen Pessimismus der Theisten sowohl wie für den selbstgenügsamen Optimismus der Deisten<sup>63</sup> im achtzehnten Jahrhundert. Das Orakel erscheint sogar in der gebändigten Form des Distichons. Die Welt des Hades und antiken Fatalismus geben dem Ganzen den Unterton. Im Laufe der nächstfolgenden Jahre entwickelt sich aus diesem Geiste heraus das erste in sich geschlossene, im Stoff antike Drama Goethes: die Iphigenie, die Ende März 1779 vollendet (in der Prosafassung) vorliegt.

Fassen wir die vorigen an sich schon knappen Ausführungen noch kürzer zusammen, so lässt sich folgendes sagen: Goethes Landschaftsgefühl fängt an sich zu ändern während der ersten Schweizerreise vom Mai bis Juli 1775; ein Jahr später hat es sich durchgreifend geändert. Rückfälle unterlaufen zwar, aber bei der zweiten Schweizerreise 1779 zeigt sich kein Mischgefühl mehr. Entscheidend ist der Juni 1776.

Goethes Vorliebe für das gewöhnliche Volk und dessen dichterische Erzeugnisse erblaszt bereits im Frühjahr 1776—wenn nicht schon etwas früher, soweit die Abfassung des ersten Teiles der Zweiten Schweizerreise in Frage kommt. Wirklich volksmässige Dichtung beschäftigt den Frühweimarer Goethe überhaupt nicht mehr. Was im Egmont davon vorhanden ist, geht sehr wahrscheinlich noch auf die letzte Frankfurter Zeit zurück.

Des Dichters menschlichste Eigenschaft, sein immer junges, liebeleidendes Herz, verliert er nie. Ruhiges Besitzen und Genieszen bleibt ihm vor der Reise nach Italien versagt. Ungestillte Sehnsucht ist der Grundton seines Wesens. Doch bringt der Februar 1776 eine herbe Note des Entsagens und demütigen Verzichtens, das ihn auch in den folgenden Jahren nicht verlässt.

Die ästhetischen Anschauungen Goethes ändern sich eher als alles andere. Wie er offensichtlich bereits im Februar 1769 Herders Geist in sich aufgenommen, wie er bald der anerkannte Führer aller Stürmer und Dränger geworden, so ist er auch jetzt der erste, der sich wieder auf Mässigung besinnt. Goethes erster Besuch in der Schweiz ist entschieden als Markstein anzusetzen. "Hans Sachsens poetische Sendung" (1776) und das Proserpina-Fragment (1776–77) sind weitere Meilensteine. Das Frühjahr 1779 setzt den Schlussstein mit der Iphigenie.

<sup>63</sup> Eine religions-philosophische und -psychologische Betrachtung der Goetheschen Weltanschauung ist in dieser Arbeit nicht beabsichtigt, so sehr solche in den Rahmen des Gesamtbildes hineingehörte.

Will man nach dem Vorhergehenden den Begriff des jungen Goethe nach einer bestimmten Altersgrenze umreißen, so kann das nicht ohne Vergewaltigung von mehr oder weniger wichtigen Einzelheiten seines Lebens geschehen. Es musz auch betont werden, dasz die Veränderungen, die sich bald nach der Übersiedlung nach Weimar in ihm zeigen, unbedingt in seinem Wesen begründet lagen. Es lassen sich sogar gewichtige Gründe ins Feld führen, die dafür zeugen, dasz Weimar mit all seinem Drum und Dran nur mittelbar auf die Gestaltung des heranreifenden Mannes und Dichters von entscheidendem Einflusz gewesen ist. Auf Grund des beigebrachten Materials liegt die innere Berechtigung zur oberen Begrenzung der Goetheschen Jugend bereits in den seelischen Erfahrungen der Sommerreise<sup>64</sup> in die Schweiz (1775), taucht doch hier erstmalig leidenschaftslose Wiedergabe des Sinnlich-Wahrgenommenen und ein griechisches Metrum auf. Wirklich grundlegende Veränderungen im Menschen und Künstler Goethe ereignen sich zwischen Juni 1775 und Juni 1776. Der Februar des Jahres 1776 ist dabei besonders kennzeichnend. Will man die Grenze des ersten groszen Lebensabschnittes von Deutschlands weisestem Dichter höher hinausrücken, so kann man bis Ende Juli 1779 gehen. Denn erst kurz vor Vollendung des dreissigsten Lebensjahres gibt sich der Geheime Legationsrat Johann Wolfgang Goethe wahrhaft mannhafte Rechenschaft über sein vergangenes Leben und wird sich bewusst, welch fernerer Weg er zu gehen hat. Aber es dauert noch ein paar Jahre, bis ihm die Spannung zwischen Künstler- und Beamtentum unertraglich wird, er sich plötzlich losreiszt und seiner freien menschlichen und künstlerischen Selbstentfaltung zu leben vermag.

THEODORE SCHREIBER

Alma College

<sup>64</sup> Unter dem 20. Sept. 1935 zeigt der Verlag Friedr. Vieweg und Sohn A. G., Braunschweig, ein neues Buch an, betitelt: Jahr der Wandlung, Goethes Schicksalswende 1775 von Franz Servaes. In der Voranzeige heiszt es: "Franz Servaes erlebt das für Goethe so schicksalhafte Jahr 1775, die grosze Leidenschaft für Lili, den Abschied vom Sturm und Drang." Auf diese Beweisführung darf man gespannt sein. Unsere eigenen diesbezüglichen Beobachtungen, teilweise jetzt hier im Druck erschienen, gehen auf Untersuchungen im literarischen Seminar von Professor A. R. Hohlfeld (Wisconsin) im Jahre 1929 zurück.

GOETHE IN AMERICAN PERIODICALS 1860-1900

THE study of the reception and the rejection of Goethe in America has attracted many investigators and has yielded a wealth of factual and significant material—the gist of which has recently been set forth in comprehensive perspective by Camillo von Klenze.<sup>1</sup> However, the well has not been exhausted.<sup>2</sup> So far the history of what may be called the integration of Goethean literature and thought in America has been told largely in terms of individual leadership. To be sure, in the first half of the nineteenth century, perhaps up to the appearance of Taylor's Faust (1870), the attitude of a few score outstanding personages tells the better part of the story of Goethe in America. But as time advances the leadership of individuals becomes more and more involved in a complexity of forces, an expansion of fields, and a ramification and crossing of lines of influence and tradition.<sup>3</sup> Toward the close of the century the material—in the American popular magazines, for instance—presents such endlessly involved cross-considerations and such masses of detail that it would seem as if nothing short of the much overstrained statistical method could lead to any desirable perspicuity.

Inasmuch as noteworthy evaluations may be expressed in very few words and by way of incidental comment, the entire body of pertinent references to the literature, personality, and philosophy of Goethe, including casual comment, in American journalism when "isolated" and considered as a unit should yield a block of authoritative information indispensable to a competent appreciation of the depth to which Goethean literature and thought have influenced American civilization. An index to the references touching Goethe in American periodical literature is now in preparation. The period 1860-1900 has been completed.<sup>4</sup> This index shows that there are in the last four decades of the nineteenth century no less than 113 magazine sets, representing 2364 volumes, in and among which there are slightly over 2900 items touching Goethe. There is a substantial body of original and translated citations from the works of Goethe; there are more than 400 book notices and reviews concerning some 180 works by or about the poet; there are approximately 150 informative and critical treatises ranging from two to 77 columns in length and at least as many noteworthy shorter articles; and finally, a mass of cursory, and if taken singly perhaps negligible comment—often in otherwise extraneous matter—that in its entirety however is not without considerable significance.

<sup>1</sup> Klenze, Camillo von, "Das amerikanische Goethebild," Mitteilungen, Deutsche Akademie (München, 1933)

<sup>2</sup> There is for example in American journalism a vast body of scattered material touching Goethe still awaiting a methodical survey and categorization.

<sup>3</sup> In the first quarter of the century there are the Stael-influenced, Göttingen-trained scholars, Ticknor, Everett, and Bancroft, over against the hostile older Unitarians and Congregationalists such as William Ware and Andrews Norton; then there appear the progressively appreciative Transcendentalists, Emerson, Longfellow, and Margaret Fuller and the younger Unitarians and Concord "philosophers," Clarke, Parker, Hedge, Sanborn, and associates. In Haertel's list (Haertel, M. H., German Literature in American Magazines 1846-1880, Univ. Wisconsin, Bul. No. 263, 1908) of promulgators of German literature and of Goethean admirers and critics, the New England group is still conspicuously prominent. There are a number of Unitarian pastors and college presidents of the caliber of Peabody of Harvard and Carter of Williams College, but to the Peabodys, the Carters, the Lowells, and the Algernons, come the Seareses, the Evanses, the Rosengartens, and the Boyesens from Ireland, Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Norway, adding to the momentum of changing conceptions proceeding from the more or less traditionally homogeneous New England the impact of heterogeneous forces.

In the purely quantitative elements in this material there may be noted some rather striking phenomena. For example, the total number of references touching Goethe in some connection or other rises steadily with minor fluctuations from 292 in the sixties to 1027 in the nineties, an increase of more than 250 per cent, while the increase in the total number of magazine sets containing references is less than 150 per cent.<sup>5</sup>

Of interest is the fact that in Magazines of the first rank in quality such as the Nation, the Atlantic Monthly, the Literary World, and the Critic,<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Gruening, John Paul von, Goethe in American Periodicals from 1860 to 1900. Ph.D. Thesis, Wisconsin, 1931, to be published. The year 1860, a somewhat arbitrarily chosen terminus a quo, was suggested by the circumstance of its having served other investigators as a period-limiting date, for example: Simmons, Lucretia Van Tuyl, Goethe's Lyric Poems in English Translation Prior to 1860, Univ. Wisconsin, Studies in Lang. and Lit. (1919); Hinz, Stella M., Goethe's Lyric Poems in English Translation after 1860, Univ. Wisconsin, Studies in Lang. and Lit. (1928); Nicolai, Martha, German Literature in British Magazines 1836-1860, in preparation. The year 1899 marking the sesqui-centennial anniversary of the birth of the poet and turn of the century seemed to be a convenient if not an organic terminating point of a period sufficiently long to furnish some perspective.

<sup>5</sup> In every decade there are magazines that cease publication while others come into being; many are rather short-lived. Thus there are in issuance of the periodicals considered here (not counting a dozen academic journals that indeed touch our subject) the following number of sets: in 1860, 17 sets, in 1870, 32 sets; in 1880, 29 sets; in 1890, 38 sets; in 1900, 41 sets. Only six appear continuously throughout our period. They are: the Atlantic Monthly, the Eclectic Magazine, Harper's (Magazine and Weekly), the Living Age, and the North American Review.

<sup>6</sup> The Nation has 330 references, 56 in the first decade of its existence, 1865-75, and 130 in the eighties; the Atlantic has 167, there are 33 in the sixties and 45 in the eighties; the Literary World, founded in 1872, has 29 in the eight years before 1880 and 99 in the next decade; and the Critic, founded in 1881, has 273 before the close of the century. The average number of references per year volume for the entire period and for all the volumes actually having references is less than three.

there is also a conspicuously and in most cases, at least up to 1890, an increasingly large number of references, while in journals manifesting the most incredible hostility toward and ignorance of Goethe and things German in general, the relative number is invariably low. The best British-American journals such as the Living Age, Literature, the Review of Reviews, and the Eclectic Magazine all have a strikingly large number of references, many of them in the form of major articles.<sup>7</sup>

There is to be noted furthermore an unusually high frequency in the reviewing and noticing of translations of Goethe's literary works and of Goethe biographies in the last three decades.<sup>8</sup>

A rather telling distribution is revealed in the count of references in bona fide American magazines according to the individual literary works to which they refer. Faust is far in the lead of all others with respect to number of citations, reviews of editions—especially translations, and general comment touching the play, having as many as 442. Meister follows with 131; then Lyric Poetry with 77; Werther has 70; Goetz, 58; Hermann und Dorothea, 45; Iphigenia, 38; Tasso, 34; Wahlverwandschaften, 34; Dichtung u. Wahrheit, 21; Egmont, 17; Reineke Fuchs, 13; while other works have fewer references.<sup>9</sup>

Turning now from the extent to the content of the material, we may ask: What characteristics, if any, typify the comment as a whole? Are there revealed any qualities that are distinctly American? What is the predominating critical attitude? To be sure, the general question how American criticism of Goethe will harmonize or contrast with the European view, raised by Louis J. Swinburn in the New Englander, XLV, <sup>7</sup> The Living Age has 237 in 40 years; Literature, 16 in three years, 1897-99; the Review of Reviews, 80 in nine years, 1891-99; and the Eclectic, 186 in 40 years.

<sup>8</sup> Morgan, B. Q., A Bibliography of German Literature in English Translation, Univ. Wisconsin (1922), shows that the English translations of Goethe number twenty in the decade ending at 1800, rising almost steadily in number to 148 in the decade 1880-90, followed by a drop to 66 in the nineties. In the last three decades there appear 21 editions of Taylor's Faust; in 1889 Hayward's prose translation had reached its eleventh, Martin's and Swanwick's each their ninth, and Brooks' its fifteenth edition, to mention only some of the most important ones. Anster's "distorted" translation that in five decades, after 1835, had seen only four new editions, burst forth in 12 new editions in the decade ending 1885. Among the biographies reviewed are editions of Lewes, Calvert, Bernays, Grimm, Boyesen, Düntzer, Prem, Heinemann, Bielschowsky, and Ehrlich.

<sup>9</sup> These figures are based on a normalized rather than a mechanical count to obviate any misleading accretions because of mere formal repetitions. Although they may be subject to some revision, owing to occasional difficulties in interpreting a "unit" reference, the ratio is probably essentially correct. Articles in the technically scholarly journals, to be interpreted as pure isolated contributions addressed to specialists, are omitted in this connection regardless of their intrinsic value, on the ground that they cannot be considered as any reflex or component of popular American journalism.

648-659, in 1886, still awaits a determinative answer and will continue to do so until there shall have been completed careful surveys of the American and foreign journalistic and literary fields together with a detailed correlation of results, an undertaking perhaps of major proportions in itself. Unquestionably American opinion is at times derivative, but it is not unlikely that the final verdict will be that it is quite as often, if not in the main, decidedly independent. In the material at hand there is abundant evidence, for example, of such intangibles as an inertia of fixed notions, a momentum of revolutionary forces, and a gradual change of taste proceeding as well, if not largely, from sources indigenous as from influences abroad. Despite some outbursts of stupidity and proof of lingering bias, the criticism is on the whole creditable and when considered over longer periods of time remarkably self-corrective. There is, to be sure, a greater propensity toward objectives pragmatic, social, and moral, than toward considerations purely aesthetic and cultural. Apparently inaccessible are those Goethean ideas that may not be reconciled with the dogmatic nineteenth-century American conception of democracy. Interesting, moreover, is the fact that from the first and throughout our period American criticism is constantly alive to the tremendous cogency of the personality of Goethe. Although this circumstance leads indeed to many unfortunate misapprehensions and amusing blunders, it also proves in a way a certain soundness of American critical instinct, sensing as it did consistently that the life and the works of the great German are indeed inseparable.

Of the persistence of fixed notions there is perhaps no better illustration than the close-up view afforded by a set or two of typical reactions to the life and thought of Goethe as we see them in the sweep of certain currents. Citing the writer in the Atlantic Monthly XL, 494 (1877), who maintains that "the legitimate product" of Goethe's example and teaching is beheld by contemporary Germany in that "art-iconoclast and moral monster, Richard Wagner," von Klenze concludes, "Dieser calvinistische Zelot stand wahrscheinlich im Jahre 1877 schon ziemlich vereinsamt da."<sup>10</sup> However, the zealot is not without goodly company even to the end of the century. In 1879 the Catholic World xxix, 111, rejoices that Taylor did not write a biography of Goethe "because the sooner the world forgets that passionless and scientific advocate of lust the better"; it is "profoundly grateful that American literature has escaped the infamy of such a book as Lewes' Life of Goethe." In the American Church Review (Episcopal) J. I. Mombert, who indeed ranks Faust with Hamlet, not only voices agreement with Menzel, but announces anew that though Goethe's intellect was "colossal," his "heart was nil" and his "morals . . . were bad," and that Schiller is preferred as a poet "because he was the better man." The italics are his xxxviii (1882), 251. A fairly reliable index should be found in the cross-section of opinions one may read in the cluster of reviews of Sanborn's edition of thirteen lectures on Goethe delivered at the Concord School of Philosophy in July 1885.<sup>11</sup> There is praise and there are strictures; however in most instances reviewers are careful to suggest that faults of genius must not be glossed over, that there are "sins of life," "defects of mind," evidences of "notorious unfaithfulness," and "egoism" not to be condoned.<sup>12</sup> Indeed two magazines, the Critic and the Literary World, strike a somewhat different if not more favorable note indicative of a shifting of emphasis (supported in part by British opinion) from the much condemned episodic life of the poet to the yet unfathomed true personality behind the works.<sup>13</sup> But this point of view is by no means general in 1886. Almost another decade must elapse before it can be said to have become more widely established. In 1888 the Literary World (xix, 291) quotes Florence Traill, indeed not with approval, who says, "What we learn of his (Goethe's) life . . . disgusts us forever with the man and all that he had to do or say." In the following year a coup de grâce is attempted by Mary E. Nutting, who, in a twenty-three-page article on "The Over-Estimation of Goethe" in the Andover Review (Congregational) (xii, 36 ff.) condemns both his literature and his life, deploring the broken hearts and poisoned lives of his making. Even in the Open Court, iii, 1976 and iii, iii, (opposite 2050) in 1889, Susan B. Channing opposing Calvin Thomas voices indignation over Goethe's common-law marriage and his "excesses." In Poet Lore, vii, (1895) 383, Margaret Fuller is once more commended for pointing out not only the "marvellous genius" but also the "disappointing limitations of Goethe," and in the Cosmopolitan, xxiv, (1897) 172, Emma H. Nason is sad to record the fact (in an article enhanced by a beautiful and excellently reproduced collection of Kaulbach's illustrations) that the greatest of the German poets loved "most unworthily of them all."

<sup>10</sup> Loc. cit., p. 201.

<sup>11</sup> Sanborn, F. B., The Life and Genius of Goethe (Boston, 1886).

<sup>12</sup> A reviewer in Harper's, lxxiii, 153, says characteristically: "we have liked Mrs. Howe (Julia Ward, lecturing on Goethe's Women) almost the best . . . she does not blink the fact that whatever Goethe's ideal women were, his treatment of real women was not ideal." Compare also Catholic World, xliii, 128; American, lxi, 300; Chautauquan, vi, 546; and Literary News, vii, 102.

<sup>13</sup> The Literary World, xvii, (1886), 129, finds fault with the fanatical eulogizing of Goethe in his own land, notes a distressing lack of real criticism in Sanborn's volume, and cites Matthew Arnold to the effect that the letters, journals, and conversations reveal the truly significant Goethe. The Critic, viii (1886), 115, calls the lectures superficial, explaining that Goethe's genius lies in the breadth of his interests and culture and in the fact that he touches human nature at all points.

It may be of interest to note that the majority of these animadversions proceed from women and from the religious journals. It should be added, however, with respect to contributions from women, that there are also noteworthy, understanding appreciations, for example, those of Ellen M. Mitchell, Western, II (1876) 347; Grace C. Bibb, ibid. II, 265; Caroline Lachland, Journal of Speculative Philosophy, XVI (1882) 320, and Gertrude Garrigues, ibid., XVII (1883) 383, then there are the constructive services of the translators such as Anna C. Brackett and Ellen Frothingham and of the editors such as Charlotte Porter and Helen A. Clarke of Poet-Lore. Moreover it must be said that the Christian Examiner and the Christian Union are on the whole friendly; that the Princeton Review (Presbyterian) though not deeply interested in Goethe is not hostile in the references it has; that the Baptist Quarterly though dissatisfied with Goethe's religion does not assail his personal life; that the Unitarian Review judges Goethe the greatest of modern poets though not a "blameless liver"; and that both the Catholic World and the Andover Review become more understanding in time.<sup>14</sup>

A rising wave of popular interest in things Goethean reaches its crest about 1890. A great many things with a distinct appeal to the journalist were happening, and Goethe was unquestionably "good copy." There were, following upon the death in 1885 of Goethe's last descendant: the dedication to the public of the Goethe houses; the opening of the Goethe archives and the calling to Weimar of some of the best Goethe scholars, the sensational discovery of the unpublished manuscripts; the preparation of the Weimar edition; the founding of the Goethe-societies, and the erecting of Goethe monuments in many European and American cities. There appear in the magazines numerous items on the disposition of Goethe paintings and Goethe libraries; popular journals join the procession with sundry Goethe "features" including illustrations, even the American Journal of Numismatics does its part by printing a list of all the medals of Goethe (Critic, XII, 74)! On the stage, notably in the large cities, there are the productions of the dramas of Goethe, chief among which are the long runs of the versions of Faust,<sup>15</sup> including the opera.

<sup>14</sup> The Catholic World, that in 1883 (XXXVI, 770), had accused Goethe of leading his countrymen "and multitudes of mankind . . . to befoul whatever was decent among men and profane whatever was sacred before God" in a serial article on the study of modern religion, by William Berry, in 1889, not only makes a serious and creditable if dissenting approach to Goethean religious concepts, but concludes with the statement that there is represented in Goethe's concept of the Religion of Sorrow a height from which mankind will never descend (I, 72-80). In the Andover Review, XV (1891), 583 ff., Hamilton Wright Mabie understandingly estimates the greatness of Goethe, and Julia H. Gulliver (XVI, 133), in a thirteen-page generally appreciative treatise on the value of Goethe's thought of God, pleads for an ear to his "great and noble utterances" despite any blemishes of his character.

Then there is to be noted also a converging of activities in certain geographical centers such as Concord, Chautauqua, St. Louis, Chicago, San Francisco, and the university towns. It would lead too far to trace the development in each of these and other centers here. Suffice it to emphasize simply the services of the St. Louis group of cultural leaders. Their intellectual ancestry can be traced on the one hand to what may be called the philosophical thought of New England embodied best in Emerson and on the other to that of cultivated German immigrants, especially the circles represented by Carl Schurz. Two magazines, the Western (1875-81), and the Journal of Speculative Philosophy (1867-88), appearing in St. Louis and serving as the organs of the leading idealists, give considerable space to the literature and thought of Goethe. A catalogue of the names important in this connection would have to include those of W. T. Harris, Anna C. Brackett, D. J. Snider, F. L. Soldan, J. K. Hosmer, J. A. Chase, Thomas Davidson, and others.

Then there is the not unimportant fact that soon after the Civil War there begins a period of great mobility among men of letters. Numerous journalists, lecturers, and educators—serving as guiding spirits in Goethean study and popularization move freely from place to place, not only as traveling lecturers of the Concord and Chautauqua summer schools, but as residents capable of a vital leadership for longer spaces of time in each of a number of different communities. Their significance might well be considered on the one hand geographically according to the office, classroom, or pulpit they occupy, and on the other hand journalistically according to the publications through which they exert their influence. Indeed, there are factors of personal origin, inclination, and traditional bias to be taken into careful consideration.<sup>16</sup> And at this point the study of forces and movements would have to yield once more to the further study of individuals, an undertaking beyond our purposes here.

<sup>15</sup> During the presentation by Irving and Terry of Will's version at the Lyceum Theater, London booksellers are reported to have sold 100,000 copies of Faust (Public Opinion, 1 [1886], 339). The production was subsequently brought to Broadway. For the history of the Bayle-Bernard, and Haas versions with Lewis Morrison as Mephistopheles who "delighted" packed houses for twenty seasons, within a circuit of 5000 miles including large cities and small towns, see Raschen, J. F. L., "Lewis Morrison's Production of Goethe's Faust," Germanic Review, iv (1929), 107.

<sup>16</sup> Thus W. T. Harris, purposeful Goethe student and editor of the J. Spec. Philos., and later U. S. Commissioner of Education, belongs indeed to St. Louis, to New England, and to the nation; James MacAlister, Scotch immigrant, and enthusiastic Goethe lecturer,—is to be identified with the Wisconsin normal school system, the school superintendencies of Milwaukee and Philadelphia, and the Drexel institute; Josiah Royce, forceful champion Precisely to what extent the universities, the platform lecturers, and the periodical journalism of the late eighties and the early nineties may have been responsible for the fact is perhaps indeterminable, but certain it is that after 1890 there is a fairly rapid decline of interest in the episodic life of the poet, not accompanied, however, by any corresponding drop of interest in Goethean literary work, for there is evidence at every hand that Goethe is being read. This circumstance is reflected not only in the appearance of new editions and translations, and in the academic study of Goethe that is being cultivated, but also in the fact that there is forming a new wave of interest that is to reach its crest about 1910 and that would hardly be thinkable if the apparent ebb about 1890 had meant any serious decrease of deeper interest.

The principal effects that seem to have been exerted on American civilization by the personality and the literature of Goethe as reflected in the magazines of the last four decades of the nineteenth century, may in conclusion be enumerated perhaps as follows:

1. A substantial, if in certain respects definitely limited, influence upon the movements tending to liberalize Puritanical thought in its successive stages of Congregationalism, Unitarianism, Transcendentalism, and the subsequent conceptions of social and humanitarian idealism. Liberal philosophical and religious thought, from Emerson to Josiah Royce from Theodore Parker to Lyman Abbott, is unquestionably indebted as well to the deeper spirituality and the poetic imagination especially of Goethe's Faust, his philosophic poetry, and prose wisdom, as to that Goethean attitude to life that had sustained a none-too-optimistic but essentially unshaken personal faith in, and reverence for, the purposeful dependableness of nature.

2. A contribution to American pedagogy, both through the medium of such educators as Harris, Brackett, Soldan, MacAlister, and many others of their stamp, and through such organs as Barnard's American Journal of Education that presented a translation of the educational theories of the Goethe-saturated Karl von Raumer, VIII, (1860), 123-154, and gave frequent if not liberal space for the presentation of Goethean ideas and quotations. Although sometimes qualified by editorial comment, there are to be found: the ideas formulated in the Wanderjahre, XXIII, (1872) 9-16; quotations from Goethe on the teaching of drawing, x 62, on memory, rhythm, grace, and spontaneity, x, 199; 225, on the of Goethean idealism is of California and of Harvard; Calvin Thomas of Michigan contributes to the rather elementary Chautauquan, to the semi-scholarly Nation, to the Montistic Open Court, and to other journals; Bayard Taylor, of South-German and Quaker descent is to be vanously classified, as journalist, as traveler, as diplomat, as poet of note, and as foremost translator of Faust.

---

ethical import of teaching singing, VIII, 648, on the need for understanding the child, VIII, 619, etc.

3. The substance of much of the rich material used in our institutional cultivation of classical idealism. The story of the school texts of Iphigenie, Hermann und Dorothea, Dichtung und Wahrheit, Egmont, Tasso, and Faust proves an ever-increasing concern on the part of American students with the Goethean ideal of aesthetic perfection.

4. A perceptible if not exactly determinable influence on American literary production and taste, in that men of an unbribable type of mind from Hawthorne<sup>17</sup> to Whitman<sup>18</sup> have ever received positive inspiration from Goethe, and in that such works as Meister, the Elective Affinities, and again Faust, that had met with a decidedly critical reception, gradually came to provoke wide discussion and serious reading.<sup>19</sup> The bearing of these works upon a change of literary taste in America is not to be lost sight of when explaining our schooling for the more serious American literature of today.

5. An unformulated but nevertheless workable body of philosophical conceptions traceable to considerable socio-religious occupation especially with the ethical and cultural thought of Goethe. To be sure, the leaders of the platform and cult movements were at times one-sided and superficial, not excepting W. T. Harris and Paul Carus, but the ventures were on the whole no doubt constructive. An example of a great synthetic attempt is the article by Joseph A. Chase in the Western, VII, (1881) 509, explaining that Goethe furnishes us with a complete "rationale of the process of aesthetic culture"; that he represents a school in art and literature opposed to force or power; that his philosophy is "alike removed from positivism whose criterion of excellence is utility and from traditional judgment founded on convention"; that his harmonious culture possesses the true ethical spirit in its insistence on the economy of all energies, and that he therefore "transcends the domain of practical life . . . and in his capacity of aristic thinker becomes the high priest of humanity."

6. An altogether immeasurable and priceless contribution to the growth of aesthetic refinement: through the many lyrics and ballads that so enduringly beguiled translators or inspired melodies, such as Heidenröslein, Erlkönig, Wanderers Nachtlied, Über allen Gipfeln, the songs of the Harper, Mignon, and Gretchen as words and as music in numerous notable compositions; through the wealth of pictorial interpretations of Goethe to be seen in the art of Delacroix, Faber, Gregory, Kaulbach, Kolbe, Konewka, von Kreling, Retzsch, Rietschel, Rauch, Stieler, Tischbein, Trippel, and through the dramatic offerings of Nielson, Terry, and Irving, not to mention Morrison and the opera Faust. That the finer lure of this body of Goethean art offered an escape if not a partial corrective in the period that witnessed a progressive vulgarization of public taste with the rise of yellow journalism is a circumstance certainly worth taking some cognizance of.

<sup>17</sup> Julian Hawthorne names Goethe among the giants that had tempered his father. Century, x (1886), 83.

<sup>18</sup> Compare v. Klenze, loc. cit., p. 203.

<sup>19</sup> John Burroughs sees in the "modern movement" a movement of individualism "which Goethe did more to forward than any other man," Century Mag, xiv (1888), 185.

Thus the picture suggested by the material at hand, despite all negative elements, reveals Goethe as the most imposing figure in German literature, as one of the greatest in world literature, and as a force comprising a distinct world of thought fertile in American civilization. That his permanent place of eminence is more and more taken for granted is shown by the frequent linking of his name, as if it were axiomatic, with those of the very greatest of all times. Again and again, especially toward the close of the century, appears the formula—Homer, Dante, Shakespeare, Goethe, reflecting better than encomiums the high character of the reception and appreciation of Goethe in American journalism toward the close of the nineteenth century.

JOHN PAUL VON GRUENINGEN

University of Wisconsin

L'OMBRE DE MADAME BOVARY

L'AUTOBUS de Rouen à Beauvais s'arrêta dans une longue plainte de freins fatigués, et les deux voyageurs qu'il transportait ouvrirent à grand peine sa porte étroite et piquée de rouille.

—Pour aller à Ry, madame? demanda le plus vieux à une paysanne en tablier bleu qui, dans l'ombre d'une porte entre-bâillée, épiait les arrivants.

La porte se referma prestement, comme celle du Paradis au nez d'un mécréant; interloqués, les deux hommes se regardèrent et ne purent tenir leur sérieux.

—C'est plus qu'une réponse laconique, s'égaya le plus jeune.

—Et pis que visage de bois, ajouta l'autre.

L'autobus était reparti dans un battement de vitres trop lâches dans leurs glissières de tôle. L'Hirondelle, la diligence jaune qui tant de jeudis emporta la romanesque Madame Bovary vers ses rendez-vous d'amour, ne pouvait rouler à plus grand tapage avec ses "fers lâches qui battaient la terre."<sup>1</sup>

Sur la route bitumée, amollie par un furieux soleil d'août,<sup>2</sup> machinalement les deux compagnons prirent la même direction que l'autobus. Ils firent bien, car à un jet de pierre de l'arrêt, au bout du village de Martainville désert comme une église à l'heure du bal, le svelte poteau indicateur d'une croisée de chemins annonçait, en menus caractères: Ry, 3 km 570.

Cette route de Ry, étroite et raboteuse sous son épaisse poussière, piquait vers la gauche dans une campagne assez plate, mouchetée de moyettes de blé et des oasis que les boqueteaux et les récoltes d'automne formaient dans la blondeur des moissons.

Malgré le soleil, nos pèlerins, un professeur et un étudiant, marchaient d'un pas de chasseur à pied sur les bas côtés herbeux. Que faire sur le chemin de Ry à moins que l'on n'y parle de Madame Bovary? Ils détaillaient donc la tragique histoire d'Emma qui, née paysanne avec une âme de citadine, vite déçue par un mariage qui pourtant avait été d'amour, installée dans ce village de Ry où ils se rendaient, tenta la vie des amoureuses de romans conventionnels jusqu'au jour où, déjà empoisonnée de chimères, jeune et belle encore mais affolée de dettes et abandonnée de ses égoïstes amants, elle ne vit plus de salut que dans l'arsenic.

Au bout d'une demi-heure les piétons atteignirent un calvaire érigé à gauche de la route: 1857, disait l'inscription.

<sup>1</sup> Madame Bovary (Conard, 1921), p. 107.

<sup>2</sup> Ce pèlerinage à Ry date du début d'août 1932.

—La véritable Madame Bovary n'a pas connu ce calvaire puisqu'elle s'est empoisonnée en 1848, commenta le professeur. Passons; il n'a d'ailleurs aucune originalité.

Dès le calvaire le chemin descend en pente raide. Au premier coude on découvre le village de Ry dont les maisons de pierre relevée de brique s'alignent, comme au garde à vous, le long de sa Grande Rue large et propre. Ce village, "on l'aperçoit de loin, tout couché en long sur la rive (de la Rieule), comme un gardeur de vaches qui fait la sieste au bord de l'eau."<sup>3</sup>

De la côte de Martainville où le calvaire est planté, on ne distingue pas la rivière cachée à gauche par les maisons à un étage qu'embrasse l'accolade des grands peupliers sous lesquels elle sinue. De molles collines enserrent le bourg de toutes parts; elles sont capitonnées de cultures et de bois plus touffus et sombres à l'est; c'est la forêt d'Argueil où Emma et Rodolphe aimaient à faire des promenades à cheval et où, certaine après-midi d'octobre, la brûlante amazone, renversant "son cou blanc . . . , défaillante, tout en pleurs, avec un long frémissement et se cachant la figure, . . . s'abandonna."<sup>4</sup>

Comme au temps de Flaubert les premières maisons du village se dressent en retrait de la route, derrière des grilles, des haies, des jardins et des cours; certaines sont encore traversées de lambourdes noires, mais, sur les toits, l'ardoise a remplacé le chaume épais qui leur faisait "comme des bonnets de fourrure rabattus sur des yeux."<sup>5</sup>

—Y a-t-il moyen de se loger à Ry pour la nuit? demanda le professeur au maréchal-ferrant dont la forge est toujours installée près de la boutique du charron, derrière une barricade de charrettes "qui empiètent sur la route."<sup>6</sup>

—Je vous croës 'qu'on peut se loger à Ry! Vous n'avez que l'embarras du choëx; y a troës auberges dans le pays, mais je vous recommande la première sur votre droëte, l'Hôtel de la Rose Blanche. Le patron Feuquères vous soëgnera aux petits oëgnons.

Trois auberges! La Rose Blanche, l'Hôtel de France et l'Hôtel de Rouen, dont les propriétaires, au fond, ne s'aiment probablement pas mieux que Madame Veuve Lefrançois du Lion d'Or ne portait dans son cœur ce gueux de Tellier du Café Français.

On poussa bientôt la porte vitrée de la Rose Blanche. Un vieillard trapu, barbe carrée, belle tête à la Saint-Saëns, émergea de son comptoir

<sup>3</sup> M. B., 97. Le nombre renvoie à la page de ce roman dans l'édition Conard.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid., 233.

<sup>5</sup> et <sup>6</sup> Ibid., 97.

<sup>7</sup> Comme dans l'Oise et dans l'Aisne, mais pourtant plus discrètement, les paysans de Ry prononcent oë pour oi.

et, s'essuyant les mains à son tablier bleu à bavette, s'empresse à la rencontre de ses clients.

—Deux chambres pour la nuit, et le vivre? mais parfaitement, messieurs; quinze francs chacune et douze francs pour le souper dont vous me direz des nouvelles! Ça vous va?

—Entendu; mais parons d'abord au plus pressé. Débouchez-nous donc un cruchon de cidre de Normandie, patron.

M. Feuquères remonta bientôt de sa cave avec une champenoise gainée de toiles d'araignée.

—C'est un joli village que le vôtre, propre, pittoresque . . . , célèbre aussi, avança le professeur.

—Il y en a de plus mal. Il faut bien qu'il soit riant pour mériter son nom de Ry. Célèbre? Assez, et à cause de Gustave Flaubert. Il vient pas mal de curieux ici. Si Madame Bovary avait eu tout l'argent qu'elle a fait gagner au pays elle ne se serait pas détruite, la pauvre!

—Alors, c'est bien vrai que Madame Bovary a existé? interrogea l'étudiant dans le français vieillot et charmant de la Province de Québec.

—Si elle a existé! comme vous et moi, monsieur! repartit l'hôtelier avec conviction. Il n'y a rien de plus vrai que la Madame Bovary de Gustave Flaubert; c'est de la vie, ça! un livre pris dans le vif, dans le saignant de la vie. Vous voulez connaître l'état civil d'Emma? Madame Bovary, de son vrai nom Adeline Couturier, ou plus couramment Delphine, est née en 1821, la même année que Flaubert, à la Rue-Saint-Pierre, près de Blainville-Crevon, à une bonne lieue d'ici en remontant la vallée du Crevon, notre rivière. En 1839,<sup>8</sup> à dix-huit ans, elle a épousé Eugène Delamare qui en avait vingt-huit, pratiquait la médecine à Ry et était veuf depuis un an.<sup>9</sup> Delphine avait perdu sa mère six mois avant d'épouser le médecin, et son père exploitait alors la ferme du Vieux-Château, les Bertaux dans le livre.—En 1842 elle eut une fille, Alice-Delphine; en 1848, l'année de la révolution, elle s'empoisonna; elle avait vingt-sept ans. Un peu moins de deux ans après son mari la rejoignait au cimetière.

—Il est probable qu'il n'existe plus personne qui ait connu Delphine Couturier?

—Certes, il faudrait être centenaire ou presque, pour cela. Flaubert a écrit que Yonville-l'Abbaye,—c'est-à-dire Ry,—comptait quelques nonagénaires,<sup>10</sup> de son temps; il n'y en a plus aujourd'hui. On vit trop fort à notre époque, on fait trop d'excès, on ressemble trop à Rodolphe, le premier amant d'Emma.

<sup>8</sup> 1843, écrit dans son Gustave Flaubert (Paris; de Brouwer, 1933), p. 349.—M. René Duménil, le critique qui connaît le mieux Flaubert et Maupassant.

<sup>9</sup> Les états civils de Ry, Blainville et Rouen sont en contradiction pour ces dates. Il serait oiseux de les discuter ici.

<sup>10</sup> M. B., 111.

—Une double tragédie contée par un maître écrivain dans un livre qui a eu les honneurs du Tribunal correctionnel de Paris a évidemment fait tourner bien des langues, dit le professeur, et si vous avez passé votre jeunesse dans le pays vous vous rappelez sans doute les réflexions des contemporains du drame à ce sujet?

—Pas plus loin que celles de mes parents, par exemple. Je suis né en 1858, à la tête de la vallée où mon père occupait une ferme pas bien loin de celle du père Couturier. Je ne me rappelle pas m'être fort intéressé à l'histoire, quand j'étais galopin; j'avais d'autres chats à fouetter, mais il y a une cinquantaine d'années on a construit une nouvelle ligne de chemin de fer Rouen-Amiens, passant par Morgny, à six kilomètres d'ici. J'ai été choisi comme messenger, et pendant longtemps j'ai fait le service des voyageurs Ry-Morgny, avec ma voiture qui était connue sous le nom de la Gondole. C'était une guimbarde dans le genre de l'Hirondelle d'Hivert. Ce que j'en ai apporté des messieurs et des dames qui tout le long du chemin me posaient des tas de questions sur Homais, Rodolphe, Léon, Charles Bovary, Emma Bovary de son vrai nom Delphine Couturier, femme du docteur Delamare, des gens que je ne connaissais ni d'Eve ni d'Adam! Au début j'en restais bête comme une tourte et je ne savais répondre que je n'en savais rien. Un jour j'ai demandé à mon père s'il se souvenait de Delphine Couturier 'Delphine? Je crois bien! m'a répondu mon père; on a été jeunes ensemble. Ah, c'en était une danseuse, celle-là! Oui-da, elle aimait bien le plaisir, elle était fort belle et toujours bien pomponnée. Elle en a eu des malheurs à Ry, la pauvre femme!

—Et vous-même n'avez-vous jamais rencontré certains des personnages qui, paraît-il, ont servi de modèles à Flaubert pour Rodolphe, Léon . . . ?

—Mais si. Plusieurs fois j'ai apporté et reconduit Léon Dupuis, l'ancien clerc, le second bon ami d'Emma. C'était Maître Stanislas-Narcisse Bottet, s'il vous plaît, notaire à Formerie, sur la ligne d'Amiens, à la limite de la Seine-Inférieure et de l'Oise. Ici on l'appelait Monsieur Louis. Il venait de temps en temps faire visite à un neveu qu'il avait à Ry. C'était un petit vieux soigné et bien agréable. Je ne me rappelle pas avoir parlé de l'affaire Delamare avec lui. Il est mort en pleine rue, à Beauvais.

—C'est peut-être ce qui a donné à Flaubert l'idée de faire mourir le père de Charles Bovary sur le seuil d'un café,<sup>11</sup> fit remarquer le professeur. Ne dit-on pas aussi que Rodolphe Boulanger, le châtelain de la Huchette, s'est fait sauter la cervelle à Paris, en plein boulevard, à son retour du Canada où ses rêves de fortune l'avaient mené et puis quitté?

<sup>11</sup> M. B., 346.

—C'est bien cela, monsieur, répondit l'hôtelier. Rodolphe c'était de son vrai nom Louis Campion, le beau Campion, un bourreau des cœurs, un noceur s'il en fut, un viveur, comme on dit; il perdit sa fortune à courir les femmes et les maisons de jeu. Il s'est suicidé quatre ans après Emma.

—Et Homais, le prince des pharmaciens, plus célèbre de beaucoup que le Bézuquet de Tartarin de Tarascon, Homais le progressiste phraseur et à l'esprit vide comme ses verres à ventouse?

—Il s'appelait Guillaume Jouanne; il avait cinquante-deux ans quand il céda sa pharmacie à son fils Adolphe; c'était en 1848, l'année même de la mort de Madame Bovary. Je ne l'ai pas connu car il s'est aussitôt retiré à Rouen où il est mort en 1881, un an après Flaubert. C'était, paraît-il, un bien brave homme, pas du tout l'arriviste, l'esprit fort et l'orateur pompier que le roman nous présente. Celui-ci, le rouge, l'écrivassier, l'anticlérical, celui que les gens de mon âge se rappellent bien, celui que Flaubert a le mieux connu, c'est Adolphe, le fils et successeur de Guillaume. Il a été conseiller municipal et longtemps adjoint au maire.

—C'est le Napoléon du livre alors, le frère de Franklin, d'Irma et d'Athalie, Napoléon Homais qui lors de la visite à la filature de lin s'est précipité "dans un tas de chaux pour peindre ses souliers en blanc?"<sup>12</sup> s'enquit le professeur.

—C'est bien notre homme, monsieur. Je l'ai toujours connu vif comme cette chaux-là. C'était un exalté; il a même fait des sourires aux socialistes et accueilli Millerand comme un frère quand il est venu faire une conférence à Ry il y a une quarantaine d'années. Comme Millerand il a tourné casaque vers la fin de sa carrière. Il est mort à Ry en 1895; il avait soixante-seize ans.

—Georgette Leblanc, la première Mme Mæterlinck, a écrit un petit livre, Au Pays de Madame Bovary,<sup>13</sup> où elle rapporte les propos des vieilles gens sur Emma. Sa première visite date de 1908. L'épicier de la place avait été enfant de chœur le jour de l'enterrement; celui-ci avait porté à Monsieur Campion les lettres de la "luronne qui aimait le plaisir";<sup>14</sup> celle-là se rappelait bien Madame Delamare qui ne faisait jamais rien de ses dix doigts et qui se promenait souvent dans son jardin "avec son peignoir de nansouk et son ombrelle bleu pâle qui faisait ressortir ses bandeaux, noirs comme l'aile du corbeau";<sup>15</sup> telle autre affirmait que Delphine avait eu aussi pour amant le frère de Léon et qu'avant de s'empoisonner elle avait essayé d'empoisonner son mari. Toutes les comères s'entendaient encore, après soixante ans, pour charger la mémoire

<sup>12</sup> M. B., 141.

<sup>13</sup> Leblanc, Georgette, Un pèlerinage au pays de Madame Bovary (Paris; Sansot, 1913).

<sup>14</sup> Ibid., p. 42.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., p. 46.

de la malheureuse, intoxiquée de littérature fausse, d'ennui et d'adultère. La seule à l'excuser était son ancienne servante, Augustine Ménage, la Félicité du roman, une aimable petite vieille alerte encore malgré ses quatre-vingt-cinq ans. Elle s'était retirée à trois lieues de Ry, à Saint-Germain-des-Essours où elle est morte en 1913.

— Cette Augustine Ménage n'a guère été plus de six mois au service de Madame Bovary, et cela à l'époque du mariage,<sup>16</sup> rectifia vivement le vieil hôtelier. Je vais vous étonner, car c'est une chose peu connue, mais la véritable Félicité ne fut ni plus ni moins que la femme du père Rouault, alias Couturier. Elle était la camarade d'enfance de Fifi, ainsi qu'elle appelait Delphine. Elle était pauvre; Couturier la prit à son service après la mort de sa femme, six mois avant le mariage de Delphine; elle devint sa maîtresse, puis il l'épousa, sur les instances du curé qui les pressait de régulariser leur situation, car elle était enceinte. La véritable Félicité fut donc la belle-mère d'Emma, mais une belle-mère comme il y en a peu, aimable, gaie et dévouée. Elle lui rendait visite chaque fois qu'elle venait au marché de Ry; elle restait parfois plusieurs jours avec elle et lui faisait son ménage et sa lessive. Il est possible qu'après la mort de Madame Delamare elle ait emporté "tout ce qui restait de la garde-robe,"<sup>17</sup> mais elle n'a pas décampé du pays, enlevée par Théodore, le domestique du notaire; elle est tout simplement, comme d'habitude, rentrée chez son vieux mari à la ferme du Vieux-Château.

— Mme Georgette Leblanc relate, d'après Augustine Ménage, que pendant un bal donné dans le verger du père Couturier, Delphine s'était mise à pleurer en s'apercevant qu'elle avait cassé le verre de sa montre. Pour la consoler et la faire rire tous ses galants auraient cassé le verre de leur montre, itou.<sup>18</sup> Qu'est-ce que vous dites de cette attention, Monsieur Feuquères?

— C'est gentil, trop joli pour être vrai. Est-ce qu'un paysan, même amoureux à lier, un paysan normand, et cauchois surtout, gâche son bien aussi facilement que ça, voyons?

— Et croyez-vous, toujours d'après Mme Georgette Leblanc, qu'Augustine aurait dit de la voix de Delphine qu' "elle était si douce qu'on aurait voulu ramasser tous les mots qu'elle disait?"<sup>19</sup>

— Je connais bien Mme Leblanc; c'est une payse, s'exclama le vieillard dans un bon rire. Elle est venue bien des fois à la Rose Blanche <sup>16</sup> "Six mois avant le suicide," écrit M. Léo Larguier qui lui aussi a recueilli les confidences de M. Feuquères Nouvelles Littéraires, 29 juillet 1933.

<sup>17</sup> M. B., 471.

<sup>18</sup> itou, aussi; mot encore fort employé par les paysans normands, picards et artésiens.

<sup>19</sup> Un pèlerinage . . . , p. 64.

manger de la confiture de groseilles, mais ce n'est pas la mère Augustine qui aurait trouvé une phrase comme ça toute seule. N'empêche que, d'après mon père, Delphine était bonne, intelligente et bien faite. D'ailleurs tous les Couturier étaient beaux. J'ai bien connu le frère et la sœur de Delphine. La sœur était une jolie blonde, demoiselle de magasin Rue Grand-Pont à Rouen; quand elle se mettait à la porte de la boutique, pour prendre le frais, bien des hommes se retournaient pour la regarder, tant elle était belle fille et se tenait bien. Elle s'est mariée avec un receveur des postes qui a pris sa retraite à La Bouille, sur la Seine, en aval de Rouen. Le frère s'appelait Ulysse; il avait des idées de grandeur. Pas étonnant qu'il fût un des hommes les mieux habillés du pays puisqu'il était marchand de nouveautés,<sup>20</sup> comme Lheureux, de son vrai nom Rey, surnommé l'Auvergnat.

L'horloge de l'église toute proche sonna trois coups, trois notes d'une grande douceur qui vibrèrent longtemps dans l'air tiède et léger de cette fin d'après-midi. Si moelleuses qu'elles fussent, le pesant aubergiste sursauta.

—Sept heures moins le quart, messieurs! Comme le temps passe vite quand on parle de Madame Bovary! Je me sauve préparer le dîner. C'est moi le cordon bleu, aujourd'hui; vous voyez, j'ai le tablier; ma bonne est depuis ce matin en pèlerinage à Sainte Thérèse de Lisieux; elle ne rentrera que par l'autobus de neuf heures. Je vais tâcher que vous ne perdiez pas au change. Le repas sera prêt dans une demi-heure.

* * *

En guise d'apéritif nos pèlerins firent un tour rapide du village et s'arrêtèrent au débit de tabacs-librairie, à démêler d'un fouillis de cartes postales la trentaine de vues qui formaient la collection Bovary.

—Vous vendez le roman? s'informa l'étudiant. J'en voudrais bien un exemplaire.

—Je regrette, monsieur, répondit la débitante. Je ne tiens pas ce livre-là. On me l'a souvent demandé, pourtant, mais il paraît que ce n'est pas facile de se le procurer, parce qu'il y a là-dedans des choses que les gens comme il faut ne doivent quasiment pas lire.

—Et vous l'avez lu? demanda le professeur.

—Ma foi non, et je n'en ai pas envie.

Après une telle réponse il n'y avait plus qu'à aller s'instruire autre part. Vraiment, la conversation du papa Feuquères était plus attachante. Si on allait l'interroger de nouveau? D'ailleurs c'était l'heure du dîner.

<sup>20</sup> M. B., 42, 468. Dans le roman, Rouault perd son fils avant sa fille.

—Ah, messieurs, claironna le brave homme en faisant passer les deux bovarystes dans la grande cuisine où flamboyait une batterie de cuivre, puis dans la salle à manger, plus petite, “sans me vanter vous allez faire un dîner moins copieux, certes, que celui de la noce d’Emma, où les convives restèrent à table de midi à la nuit, mais un dîner comme il n’y en aura pas de meilleur à Ry, ce soir.”

Et de fait, la soupe aux poireaux, l’omelette fines herbes, le filet garni de haricots-beurre, la salade, le fromage de Neufchâtel et les confitures, —ces confitures dont raffole Mme Georgette Leblanc,—composèrent un menu dont la digne conclusion devait être un café arrosé de calvados.

—Alors, vous voulez un jonquin, là-dessus? s’enquit le maître queux.

—Un jonquin? Qu’est-ce que c’est que ça? Une canne de jonc, pour faire concurrence à Alfred de Vigny?

—Mais non, c’est ce que vous venez de commander, un gloria, une bistouille, un café baptisé de goutte, et vous avez bien raison car “un café sans goutte c’est un café de jean-foutre,” comme disent les Normands.

Après avoir servi les jonquins le patron s’attabla près de ses clients, trinquait avec eux et leur montra un registre où il avait inscrit “l’état civil” des principaux personnages du roman; il contenait aussi des coupures et feuilles de journaux et revues sur Madame Bovary signées Dubosc,<sup>21</sup> Delamare, et Dr. Brunon,<sup>22</sup> un article du Monde Illustré du 10 décembre 1921, de vieilles cartes postales du pays, la reproduction d’un diplôme de bon cultivateur décerné le 1<sup>er</sup> juillet 1855 au père de Delphine, et surtout il y avait deux photos jaunies, encore bien nettes cependant; l’une représentait un coin du vieux cimetière de Ry avant que les monuments eussent été enlevés, l’autre une pierre triangulaire où se lisait clairement cette inscription disposée comme suit:

ICI REPOSE
LE CORPS
DE DELPHINE
COUTURIER
ÉPOUSE DE M<sup>r</sup>
DELAMARE
MÉDECIN. DÉCÉDÉE
LE 8 MARS 1848
PRIEZ DIEU
POUR LE REPOS DE SON ÂME

Le sommet arrondi du triangle était ébréché et sa base était frangée d’un fouillis de branches cassées.

<sup>21</sup> Journal de Rouen, 6 juillet 1918 et 3 mai 1922.

<sup>22</sup> La Normandie Médicale, 1<sup>er</sup> décembre 1907 et 15 avril 1910.

—C'est moi<sup>23</sup> qui ai pris cette dernière photo, il y a une quarantaine d'années, expliqua M. Feuquères. J'en ai donné une épreuve au Musée Flaubert à Croisset; elle est accrochée au fond du pavillon, dans le coin à gauche. On<sup>24</sup> a écrit que le Dr. Delamare avait fait graver sur le monument de sa deuxième femme: "Elle fut bonne épouse et bonne mère." C'est mentir comme une épitaphe. Vous voyez bien que ce n'est pas tout à fait ça. C'est un vieux qui m'a fait voir cette pierre un jour que je la cherchais le long du mur de l'église. Le vieux était enfant de chœur quand on a enterré Mme Delamare et il m'a raconté comment ça s'est passé. C'était un samedi après le marché. La fosse était trop courte pour le cercueil, de sorte que la morte a été enterrée la tête beaucoup plus haute que les pieds.

—Le même incident pénible s'est produit lors de la mise en terre de Caroline, la sœur de Flaubert, rappela le professeur. "La fosse était trop étroite, le cercueil n'a pas pu y entrer,"<sup>25</sup> a-t-il écrit à Maxime du Camp. A propos de l'ensevelissement d'Emma on lit que, la bière étant trop large, il avait fallu boucher les interstices avec la laine d'un matelas.<sup>26</sup> Flaubert ne nous a fait grâce d'aucun détail macabre, même pas des vomissements de la morte. . . ! Et à quel endroit du vieux cimetière Delphine est-elle enterrée?

—Exactement entre le mur de soutènement qui borde la grimpette du nouveau cimetière, et l'entrée d'un magnifique porche ouvert, en bois sculpté et noirci; pour être encore plus précis, elle repose entre les deux obus qui marquent aujourd'hui les deux coins les plus élevés du monument aux morts de la Grande Guerre. Il n'y a plus une seule croix, plus un seul tertre dans le cimetière; tout a été enlevé et le sol nivelé et semé d'herbe. La pierre n'était pas sur la tombe de Delphine quand le vieux me l'a montrée, mais sur celle de la première Mme Delamare, la veuve Dubuc qui, en réalité, était veuve d'un cultivateur et non pas d'un huissier de Dieppe comme nous le lisons dans le roman. Les deux femmes, la vieille qui de son vivant était "laide, sèche comme un cotret, et bourgeonnée comme un printemps,"<sup>27</sup> et la jeune qui avait de si jolis yeux noirs, ont d'ailleurs été enterrées côte à côte dans la concession à perpétuité que Delamare avait achetée. Dans le roman Flaubert fait mourir la vieille à Tostes où Bovary s'est installé d'abord; en réalité il n'a exercé la médecine qu'à Ry. La pierre avait 1 m., 30 de haut, si cela peut vous intéresser.

<sup>23</sup> M. Deshays lui aussi photographia cette pierre qu'il trouva renversée, après le transfert du cimetière.

<sup>24</sup> Par exemple Mme. Georgette Leblanc, Un pèlerinage . . . p. 50.

<sup>25</sup> Correspondance de Flaubert, édition Conard, t. 1, 197, 23 ou 24 mars 1846.

<sup>26</sup> M. B. 461.

<sup>27</sup> M. B., 13.

—Elle a disparu, n'est-ce pas?

—Oui, en 87,<sup>28</sup> au cours de travaux qu'on faisait alors autour de l'église; on ne l'a jamais revue depuis.

—Peut-être a-t-elle été recouverte par les terrassiers.

—Ça se peut bien; en faisant des fouilles dans l'ancien cimetière on la retrouverait peut-être; mais il vaut mieux laisser les morts dormir en paix.

—N'y avait-il donc plus personne de la famille Delamare ou Couturier qui eût pu s'occuper de faire entretenir les tombes, et même de faire relever les corps pour les transporter dans le nouveau cimetière, comme cela se fait parfois en pareil cas? Berthe, la fille d'Emma, par exemple? Au fait, qu'est-elle devenue?

—Pour ne pas sortir de la note triste Flaubert a écrit, à la fin du livre, que pour gagner sa vie Berthe dut travailler dans une filature de coton. La réalité est moins sombre. La petite fut recueillie par une tante de sa mère; elle reçut une excellente éducation et, coïncidence, cette petite voisine d'Homais épousa un pharmacien qui s'établit à Rouen près de l'église Saint-Patrice.<sup>29</sup> Elle-même laissa une fille.

—Ainsi Flaubert a changé bien des détails de l'histoire, dit l'étudiant, et c'est plutôt un roman qu'il a écrit.

—Dame oui, et c'est tout naturel. Quand on raconte une histoire toute chaude encore, comme celle-là, et surtout une histoire pénible, il faut bien travestir un peu les lieux, les faits, les gens, sous peine de passer pour une mauvaise langue et un vilain monsieur. Ainsi Yonville-l'Abbaye est à huit lieues de Rouen, tandis que Ry n'en est qu'à cinq. Notre rivière ne sépare pas deux régions de physionomie distincte, herbage à gauche, labour à droite;<sup>30</sup> le terroir est plus mêlé que ça. Cette rivière, Flaubert l'a placée à l'entrée du bourg quand on vient de Rouen, alors qu'elle passe à l'autre bout de la Grande Rue; de même, dans le roman, l'église est séparée du cimetière par une campagne où seigles et colzas verdoyaient lors de l'enterrement d'Emma; à Ry, en 1848, le cimetière touchait à l'église. Les descriptions de l'église et du cimetière sont à peu près exactes, à part le porche qui a été oublié, et la terre rouge "rejetée sur les bords" de la tombe d'Emma<sup>31</sup> et qui, vous le verrez, est marneuse. Flaubert a décrit un comice à Ry; jamais il n'y

<sup>28</sup> En 1868, affirme Mme. Leblanc, Un pèlerinage . . . , p. 49:

"Les racontars s'exaspèrent, la famille s'inquiète et vingt ans après, à la faveur de la nuit, on viendra saisir au cimetière l'humble pierre qui couvre sa tombe." La pierre disparut après 1896, écrit M. Gossez, moins catégorique. Mercur de France, 16 juillet 1911.

<sup>29</sup> Mme. Leblanc se rappelle que, petite fille, elle entraît quelquefois dans la pharmacie où Berthe, dame timide aux mains longues et fines, se tenait derrière le comptoir. Un pèlerinage . . . , 7.

<sup>30</sup> M. B., 95.

<sup>31</sup> Ibid., 466.

a eu de ces concours agricoles ici; ils se tenaient tous les neuf ans à Darnétal, notre chef-lieu de canton.

—En effet, dans une lettre à Louise Colet,<sup>32</sup> Flaubert, toujours bougon quand il s'agit des occupations des bourgeois, raconte que pour faire une description plus exacte du comice il a passé tout un dimanche à Darnétal où se tenait, comme il dit, "une de ces ineptes cérémonies rustiques," spécifia le professeur.

—Je reconnais bien là l'ours blond de Croisset. . . . Je dois vous dire aussi que l'Hirondelle du père Hivert n'arrivait pas à Rouen par la côte de Bois-Guillaume, mais par ce même Darnétal. Hivert ne détélait pas à l'Hôtel de la Croix Rouge, Place Beauvoisine, mais plus bas, dans la partie Est de Rouen, au 103 Rue Saint-Hilaire, à l'Image Saint François. Oui, Flaubert a pris de grandes libertés avec la carte de Rouen et de la région; pour se rendre de la Huchette à Rouen, Rodolphe passe par Buchy, c'est-à-dire qu'il tourne le dos à sa destination,<sup>33</sup> pour Emma qui, après le départ de Rodolphe, est prise d'une fièvre cérébrale, le docteur Bovary envoie chercher de la glace à Neufchâtel, à trente-cinq kilomètres, alors que Rouen, mieux achalandé, n'est qu'à vingt-deux kilomètres de Ry; pour aller de Blainville-Crevon à Ry le père Rouault, qui est pourtant pressé, prend le chemin des écoliers par Maromme; mais tous ces coups de pouce à la vérité ont été voulus; ces lignes artificielles sont des positions de repli que Flaubert se ménageait pour le cas où on l'eût attaqué en diffamation.

—On n'a pourtant pas eu de peine à reconnaître Ry en Yonville-l'Abbaye.

—Cela saute aux yeux pour qui connaît bien la région de Rouen. Un bourg entre la route d'Abbeville et celle de Beauvais, au fond d'une vallée, c'est Ry; une petite rivière qui se jette dans l'Andelle après avoir fait tourner trois moulins vers son embouchure,<sup>34</sup> —il y en a deux à Ry, — c'est le Crevon, la Rieule du livre. Notez que nous avons, pas loin d'ici, une rivière qui s'appelle la Rieule. Une rue principale longue d'une portée de fusil, un maréchal et un charron à l'entrée,<sup>35</sup> une église au bout de la place, un cimetière à gauche de la Grande Rue, des halles, c'est encore Ry.

—D'ailleurs il y a Ry dans Bovary, interrompit l'étudiant en riant; Bovary c'est le bos, le bœuf de Ry; votre Charles Bovary n'était-il pas un butor, lourd et bête comme un bœuf?

Le professeur se récria, dit que le nom a été inspiré par celui de

<sup>32</sup> 18 juillet 1852. Correspondance, II, 466.

<sup>33</sup> M. B., 287.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid., 95.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid., 97. L'édition Conard, de Madame Bovary, donne un plan rudimentaire d'Yonville-l'Abbaye tracé par Flaubert, p. 499.

Bouvaret, hôtelier de Flaubert au Caire en 1849; l'aubergiste s'esclaffa et poursuivit:

—Et surtout les circonstances sont identiques. La tragique histoire du docteur Delamare de Ry, et de sa femme, en 1848-1849, époque à laquelle Flaubert, dégoûté du lyrisme de son Saint Antoine, se décida à composer un roman terre à terre et vécu, est exactement celle des Bovary. Une femme de docteur ne s'empoisonne pas tous les jours dans la région de Rouen, et son mari ne la suit pas toujours de si près. La mère de Flaubert se rendait bien compte qu'il n'avait pas assez arrangé l'histoire et que tous les Rouennais la reconnaîtraient et en feraient des gorges chaudes. 'Gustave, lui disait-elle, ce n'est pas bien ce que tu as fait là; tu es célibataire, mon garçon, et tu ne comprends pas ce qui peut se passer dans un ménage; tu peux te marier; il pourrait t'arriver les mêmes malheurs; qui sait? Qu'est-ce que tu dirais si quelqu'un décrivait minutieusement les tristes côtés de ton histoire comme tu as fait de celle de ce pauvre Delamare qui a été l'élève de ton père à l'Hôtel-Dieu?'

—Bien sûr, Flaubert jurait ses grands dieux que la Bovary, comme il disait, c'était lui, que ce n'était pas un roman à clés, qu'il avait plus d'ambition qu'un photographe, qu'un faiseur de personnalités, que le propre de l'artiste vraiment digne de ce nom est d'être impersonnel, impassible, de créer des types généraux, universels, n'empêche que Ry et le fait divers de 1848 forment la charpente du livre, invisible seulement pour ceux qui à dessein ferment les yeux, ajouta le professeur. A Louis Bouilhet qui le premier lui avait suggéré d'écrire l'histoire de Delamare il écrivait: "J'espère que la fin (qui dans la réalité a été la plus remplie) ne soit, dans mon livre, étriquée. . . ." <sup>36</sup> Ce témoignage si clair de l'auteur lui-même prouve assez que si le bourg de Ry doit sa célébrité à Flaubert ce n'est qu'un échange de bons procédés; la dette première de Flaubert envers Ry est évidente.

—Flaubert venait-il souvent à Ry? s'enquit l'étudiant?

—Souvent? non, répondit l'intarissable hôtelier, car il aimait trop sa pipe, ses pantoufles et son coin de feu de Croisset; les seuls sports qu'il aimait étaient la natation et le canotage qu'il n'y a guère moyen de pratiquer ici. La marche lui était antipathique. De temps en temps il prenait l'Hirondelle et venait passer une journée ou deux à Ry avec Louis Bouilhet. Il ne manquait pas d'aller voir Delamare et Jouanne qu'il connaissait par son père. On l'appelait Monsieur Gustave, ou le fils Flaubert, dans la région, car le grand Flaubert c'était le père, Achille-Cléophas, chirurgien en chef de l'Hôtel-Dieu de Rouen, l'original du docteur Larivière que les gens de Ry appelaient dans les cas graves. Bouilhet et Flaubert couchaient à l'Hôtel de Rouen et parfois au château du Catillon où je les ai vus une fois en compagnie d'Elisée Reclus et de Michelet.

<sup>36</sup> 10 mai 1855, Vol. III.

—Ry a-t-il beaucoup changé depuis que vous le connaissez?

—Guère; cependant la mairie avait deux étages; il n'en reste plus qu'un, et c'est assez pour les flaubertistes puisque Rodolphe et Emma ont commencé leur flirt au premier, dans la salle des délibérations, pendant le discours du conseiller de préfecture.<sup>37</sup> Les halles, couvertes de tuiles et reposant sur une vingtaine de poteaux<sup>38</sup> comme ceux de l'Hôtel de France, en face d'ici, ont été démolies et remplacées par le marché couvert qui est derrière la mairie et fait corps avec elle. L'auberge du Lion d'Or, où les Bovary sont descendus le soir de leur arrivée,<sup>39</sup> a été rasée par ordre du comité d'hygiène; l'Hôtel de Rouen en occupe l'emplacement. Même la maison où Emma est morte a été en partie reconstruite.

—A votre avis, pourquoi Bovary s'est-il empoisonné lui aussi? Aimait-il tant sa femme? Dans le roman il reste aveuglément épris d'elle jusqu'au bout.

—Les vieilles gens m'ont affirmé qu'il ne s'occupait pas beaucoup d'elle; il lui préférerait son cheval et ses roses dont il avait de beaux spécimens. Je crois plutôt qu'il s'est fait périr par amour-propre, par dépit; il était devenu la risée du pays, il n'avait plus de clients, c'était la misère. Aigri, désespéré, il a pris un poison lent qui l'a fait devenir maigre comme un sac à os. En 1848 il était conseiller municipal, avec le messager Thérain-Hivert, sur la liste républicaine, car c'était un franc-maçon, un sans-culotte, au contraire d'Homais, Jouanne I, qui, dans la réalité, tenait pour l'église et le roi, le goupillon et la fleur de lis. . . .

Le père Feuquères s'interrompt et prête l'oreille; on entendit le roulement d'une grosse auto sur le bitume de la route.

—C'est l'autobus qui me rapporte ma bonne, dit-il en fermant son registre et en se levant brusquement; excusez-moi, il faut que j'aille l'aider à descendre et à porter ses paquets. J'ai été content de répondre à vos questions, messieurs, mais si vous écrivez dans les journaux ne me faites pas dire, comme certains, que j'ai raconté que Mme Bovary avait eu deux filles qui étaient parties en Amérique, et que, pour décider son père à la marier, elle avait simulé une grossesse en se mettant des serviettes sur le ventre. Ça c'est des histoires de brigands, conclut l'érudit hôtelier en riant dans sa barbe blanche et carrée.

* * *

<sup>37</sup> M. B., 196.

<sup>38</sup> M. B., 99.

<sup>39</sup> M. B., 109.

Le lendemain matin les voyageurs explorèrent le village plus en détail. Il n'est que de traverser la rue pour se trouver à la mairie dont le rez-de-chaussée, à la porte et aux fenêtres en plein cintre, est occupé par un magasin de machines agricoles. Aucune trace du péristyle de trois colonnes ioniques dont Flaubert l'a décorée,<sup>40</sup> elle héberge aussi une salle de classe et, entre ses piliers de bois, couve un petit marché. Plus en arrière, de l'autre côté de la rue, au pied d'une colline, se dresse le presbytère, grande bâtisse de brique dont le pignon porte la date de 1742 et une grande inscription, AVFINBAM, que le professeur avoua ne pas comprendre. L'allée qui mène à l'église monte entre deux murs de moellons; celui de droite est couronné d'une haie de fusain; les sapins et les buis de la cure fleurissent bon dans la fraîcheur du matin.

L'église de Ry ressemble à deux hautes maisons entrées l'une dans l'autre, disposées en croix et dominées par l'éteignoir effilé du clocher couvert d'ardoises, vierge du drapeau tricolore en fer blanc que l'imagination de Flaubert y a placé.<sup>41</sup> Une petite porte est percée dans le pignon qui borde l'allée; on y accède par sept marches que les pas des fidèles ont creusées profondément en leur milieu. C'est peut-être sur ce perron qu'Emma aborda le curé Bournisien<sup>42</sup> dont elle eût souhaité que l'esprit fût aussi fin que le corps était athlétique; n'aurait-il pu plier quatre Homais sur son genou?<sup>43</sup>

Les deux nefs de l'église sont basses, blanchies à la chaux et leurs voûtes sont soutenues par de grosses poutres brunes. Propre, ornée avec simplicité, elle impressionna les pèlerins plus vivement que bien des églises plus riches et monumentales. Ils se recueillirent devant l'autel, à gauche de la vieille chaire, à l'endroit où, couverte d'un "drap noir semé de larmes blanches," la bière d'Emma reposa "entre quatre rangs de cierges."<sup>44</sup> Charles et le père Rouault étaient assis dans cette stalle du chœur, sous cette statue de Saint Pierre, près de ces deux hautes croix accrochées dans un coin, et les trois chantres passaient continuellement devant eux en psalmodiant.

Le serpent soufflait à pleine poitrine. M. Bournisien, en grand appareil, chantait d'une voix aiguë; il saluait le tabernacle, élevait les mains, étendait les bras. Lestiboudois circulait dans l'église avec sa latte de balleine. . . . On chantait, on s'agenouillait, on se relevait, cela n'en finissait pas.<sup>45</sup>

La longueur du service augmentait les souffrances du pauvre Charles et il souhaitait qu'on en finît au plus vite.

Assis sur un des bancs d'œuvre "rangés en travers de la muraille,"<sup>46</sup>

<sup>40</sup> M. B., 99.

<sup>41</sup> M. B., 100.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., 155.

<sup>43</sup> Ibid., 105.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid., 464.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., 464.

<sup>46</sup> M. B., 98.

rugueux et garnis de gros champignons de bois pour les chapeaux des hommes, les deux voyageurs avaient l'impression d'assister au service funèbre de la pécheresse que, malgré lui, Flaubert a rendue sympathique et dont il a perpétué le charme. Ils refirent le tour de l'autre nef; leurs pas sonnaient sur le carrelage craquelé aussi clairement que la jambe de bois d'Hippolyte le pied-bot lorsque, pendant la messe d'enterrement il s'avança "dans les bas-côtés." Honteux du bruit qu'ils faisaient ils se hâtèrent de sortir et, longeant une petite merveille de porche Renaissance en bois, frangé de dragons et de rinceaux, bordé de fines colonnes et de piliers ciselés surmontés de statuettes de rudes saints, ils allèrent droit au petit monument aux morts de la guerre. Au dire de l'hôtelier c'était sous le milieu du côté droit que reposait Emma.

—Oui, c'est bien là, confirma un vieux paysan qui, la houe et le râteau sur l'épaule, allait désherber les tombes des siens, dans le cimetière crayeux planté trois cents mètres plus haut.

Ainsi Emma était là, presque sous leurs pieds, la tête probablement tournée vers le village, et beaucoup plus haute que les pieds, Emma, la femme adultère à qui le Christ eût pardonné comme il pardonna à celle que les scribes et les Pharisiens lui amenèrent sur le Mont des Oliviers. Ils reculèrent comme s'ils eussent marché sur elle.

Ils se trouvaient dans l'ancien cimetière qui, épaulé d'un mur, forme un glacis herbeux devant le grand pignon ocre de l'église. Ils cherchèrent, mais en vain, un de ces sapins qui abritaient la tombe d'Emma,<sup>47</sup> et une de ces dalles qui pavaient le cimetière et sur lesquelles les enfants du catéchisme ne se gênaient pas pour jouer aux billes.<sup>48</sup>

Le vieillard les invita à l'accompagner. Il leur désigna, à droite de la mairie, la maison du notaire, parée de glycines et, en face du monument aux morts, un long bâtiment rectiligne de bois et de brique, la ferme où la petite Berthe avait été en nourrice.

—Pourtant la maison était petite et basse<sup>49</sup> et celle-ci a un étage, objecta le professeur.

—La maison a été agrandie, comme beaucoup d'autres depuis quatre-vingts ans.

La pluie qui n'avait cessé de tomber au cours des deux semaines précédentes avait fait jaillir des tombes un fouillis de vigoureuses herbes folles au spectacle desquelles le vieillard se lamenta. Pourtant il retrouva sa sérénité pour montrer, de son râteau, le chemin que Mme Bovary suivait dans ses escapades matinales à la Huchette.

—Voyez-vous, elle traversait la Grande Rue, prenait une ruelle qui la menait derrière les maisons;—cette route plate qui part de la Grande

<sup>47</sup> Ibid., 469.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid., 154

<sup>49</sup> M. B., 127.

Rue et file à gauche vers Blainville-Crevon n'existait pas, alors—; elle traversait ces vergées de belle prairie que vous apercevez entre les arbres, derrière la haie du cimetière.

—Est-ce la prairie où Flaubert a placé les comices et dressé la tente du banquet, la prairie où le percepteur et capitaine des pompiers, Binet, s'embusquait dans un tonneau, parmi les herbes, à l'affût des canards sauvages et où, un matin, il surprit Emma qui rentrait de son rendez-vous à la Huchette?<sup>50</sup> demanda le professeur.

—C'est bien ça. Flaubert a copié notre paysage, à part quelques détails qu'il a ajoutés ou déformés pour dépister les curieux, la planche aux vaches, par exemple; il ne faut pas traverser la rivière pour se rendre à la Huchette. Donc Emma prenait à gauche derrière la haie, rattrapait, à la maison de la nourrice, le raidillon que nous avons grimpé, se défilait dans une creuse le long du chemin de Martainville, montait à gauche sur le plateau et coupait à travers champs jusqu'à la Huchette.

—Elle avait peur des bœufs, rappela le professeur, elle avait encore plus peur des gens et épiait chaque lucarne du village d'où on pouvait l'apercevoir.<sup>51</sup>

—Mâtin, vous connaissez le livre mieux que moi, mais avouez que je connais le pays mieux que vous! Tenez, encore une chose qui peut vous intéresser; voyez-vous, tout là-bas en face de nous, dans le faubourg, sur la route de Saint-Aignan, ce groupe de masures? la plus haute est celle qu'habita sur ses vieux jours le père Hivert, de son vrai nom Thérain, le messager de l'Hirondelle. En réalité il était le mari de celle que Flaubert appelle Mme Veuve Lefrançois, la tenancière du Lion d'Or; je l'ai bien connu; c'était un loustic; il portait un collier de barbe; il est mort en 1905; sa femme aussi est morte très vieille.

Pendant que le vieillard, à vigoureux coups de houe, abattait les graminées qui menaçaient de recouvrir le caveau de sa famille, nos amis circulèrent le long des rangées de tombes, essayant de découvrir les noms des prototypes du roman, Couturier, Delamare, Jouanne, Thérain, Rey; cette fois encore leurs recherches furent vaines; les monuments, pour la plupart faits de pierre trop tendre, s'écaillaient et ne présentaient que des inscriptions frustes et moussues. La plus vieille date d'inhumation qu'ils relevèrent était 1884; elle était suivie de la formule: "Bons parents."

—C'est un peu l'habitude, par ici, de mettre une inscription comme celle-là sous le nom des défunts, précisa le paysan.

—Voilà qui explique l'inscription que Mme Georgette Leblanc a prêtée à la pierre de Mme Bovary, "bonne épouse et bonne mère,"<sup>52</sup> pensa le professeur.

<sup>50</sup> Ibid., 229

<sup>51</sup> M. B., 228.

<sup>52</sup> Un pèlerinage . . ., 50.

Nos deux voyageurs dévalèrent le chemin caillouteux du cimetière et se retrouvèrent bientôt dans la Grande Rue.

Voici à gauche l'Hôtel de Rouen, l'auberge du Lion d'Or du roman; c'est une grande maison quelconque à un étage et à porte charretière; son nom, imprimé en grosses lettres noires, ne peut certes rivaliser de pittoresque avec le vieux lion d'or à frisure de caniche qui servait d'enseigne à l'auberge du roman.<sup>53</sup> L'hôtel s'anime encore du vol de ces pigeons blancs qui "venaient tremper leurs pattes roses et leurs ailes blanches"<sup>54</sup> dans les gouttières de la maison d'Homais.

Mais où est donc cette maison d'Homais? Est-ce, en face, cette pharmacie A. FURON qui étale son nom en grosses lettres dorées sur toute la largeur de la façade? "Et l'enseigne, qui tient toute la largeur de la boutique, porte en lettres d'or: Homais, pharmacien."<sup>55</sup>

—Oui, dit l'apothicaire en servant à nos amis une boîte de bonbons réglisse, je suis le successeur de Monsieur Homais, alias Jouanne, et je n'envie pas sa gloire qui, pour le ridicule, est comparable à celle de Joseph Prudhomme. Le matériel du Dr. Jouanne? Il a été dispersé, à l'exception de ce comptoir semi-circulaire. Je dois vous dire aussi que la pharmacie Jouanne ne se trouvait pas ici, mais plus près de la place, dans ce qui est aujourd'hui la mercerie de Mme Lecomte. Ma pharmacie occupe une partie de l'ancienne maison de Madame Bovary. Emma est morte dans la chambre dont vous pouvez voir la fenêtre au-dessus de la grande porte verte.

On sortit pour contempler cette maison d'Emma qui semblait la plus pimpante de Ry avec ses volets blancs, ses nombreuses et grandes fenêtres et ses rangées verticales de briques alternant avec des rectangles de crépi grisâtre. Dans le roman la plus belle maison du pays est celle du notaire, mais Homais affirme que celle des Delamare est quand même une des plus confortables du pays. Elle était blanche et avait quatre jalousies vertes.<sup>56</sup> Le second étage était occupé par un grenier et une mansarde où Emma lut cette lettre impitoyable dans laquelle Rodolphe le poltron lui annonçait la fin de leur liaison. . . . Alors elle s'appuya contre l'embrasure de la mansarde et se pencha pour se laisser tomber sur les cailloux du trottoir.

Le rayon lumineux qui montait d'en bas directement, tirait vers l'abîme le poids de son corps. Il lui semblait que le sol de la place, oscillant, s'élevait le long des murs, et que le plancher s'inclinait par le bout, à la manière d'un vaisseau qui tangué. Elle se tenait tout au bord, presque suspendue, entourée d'un grand espace. Le bleu du ciel l'envahissait, l'air circulait dans sa tête creuse, elle n'avait qu'à céder, qu'à se laisser prendre. . . .

<sup>53</sup> M. B., 100.<sup>54</sup> Ibid., 150.<sup>55</sup> Ibid., 99.<sup>56</sup> Ibid., 166.

—Ma femme! ma femme! cria Charles.

Elle s'arrêta.<sup>57</sup>

Oui, voilà cette mansarde d'où l'abandonnée, victime de ses peu intéressants amants plus que de son imagination faussée, a voulu se laisser tomber.

—Vous voulez voir Madame Bovary, messieurs? cria un homme entre deux âges qui venait de surgir de la demeure voisine dont l'extérieur est identique à celui de la maison d'Emma.

—Et comment donc! Nous sommes venus à Ry pour ça.

On suivit l'aimable guide sous une porte-cochère aux pavés mal plantés, puis dans un confortable salon bourgeois dont le plus bel ornement était une superbe comtoise dont le propriétaire, un fonctionnaire retraité, fit remarquer, sur le cadran, la fleur de lis en bronze, à demi limée pendant la Révolution par crainte des sans-culottes.

—Voici Madame Bovary, dit le rentier en sortant d'un placard un grand portrait encadré représentant une jolie blonde en buste.

—Je croyais qu'elle était brune, brune aux yeux noirs, protesta le pédagogue.

—Qui sait? L'un dit blanc, l'autre dit noir. Maxime du Camp, l'ami de jeunesse de Flaubert, rapporte qu'elle avait les cheveux d'un jaune terne et les yeux de couleur indécise,<sup>58</sup> et ce portrait est plus près du type normand. Tous les commentateurs de Madame Bovary se contredisent. Les gens de Ry boursoufflent les racontars de leurs grands-pères et grands-mères qui ont mélangé leurs souvenirs propres et pas toujours exacts aux détails fournis par le livre. L'histoire de Madame Bovary est devenue un roman-feuilleton ici, et pour étonner les touristes chacun se creuse la cervelle pour y ajouter un détail énhaurme, comme disait l'ermite de Croisset. Entre nous Flaubert était trop Normand pour donner la réalité toute crue, trop artiste pour ne pas vouloir créer sur le plan d'une humanité générale; au fond, il n'y a que le livre qui compte.

—Dites-moi, y a-t-il encore des Madame Bovary à Ry?

—Bien sûr qu'il y en a encore, mais chut, il ne faut pas le dire! Quel est l'endroit qui n'en a pas? Madame Bovary, telle que l'a peinte Flaubert, est si vraie que nous la reconnaissons partout, brune ici, blonde là; la couleur n'y fait rien, pas plus que le rang social. Madame Bovary s'ennuie auprès d'un mari trop quotidien; elle s'exalte à la lecture des romans, et aujourd'hui au spectacle des films d'amour; elle veut les vivre, elle pêche et se repent tous les jours. Elle ne finit pas toujours aussi lamentablement qu'Emma, et c'est tant mieux. Et nous, nous sommes un peu, ou nous avons été, les Rodolphe ou les Léon, ou les Charles Bovary; tant pis si nous sommes les Charles Bovary!

<sup>57</sup> M. B., 285.

<sup>58</sup> Maxime du Camp, Souvenirs littéraires (Hachette, Paris: 1882-1883), I, xii.

On quitta l'indulgent philosophe, non sans avoir jeté un coup d'œil dans le jardin, étroit et bordé de hauts murs de brique, où l'on voit encore une tonnelle qui, dit-on, est celle des rendez-vous. Dans le livre le jardin se termine par une terrasse et un perron conduisant au bord de l'eau. Une planche aux vaches servait de pont; quand cette planche était levée Emma suivait les murs qui longeaient la rivière; la berge était glissante.<sup>59</sup> La rivière ne passe pas au bout de ce jardin, derrière la pharmacie Furon, mais derrière ceux des maisons qui se dressent de l'autre côté de la rue.

On chemina jusqu'au bout de la Grande Rue. A gauche, contiguë à l'Hôtel de Rouen, s'élève une vieille maison de brique qui abritait l'étude de Maître Guillaumin. Plus loin deux médecins voisinent. Delamare aussi avait un concurrent, le cousin de Jules Levallois,<sup>60</sup> l'un des secrétaires de Sainte-Beuve.

La route tourne à gauche et se rétrécit brusquement; deux parapets de pierre annoncent une rivière. Large de trois à quatre mètres, profond d'autant de pieds, le Crevon coule limpide et silencieux sur un lit de cailloux au-dessus desquels frissonnent de longs rubans d'herbe.

—Y a-t-il de la truite<sup>61</sup> dans cette rivière? demanda le professeur à un garçonnet assis sur un des parapets.

—Un petit peu. Y en a qui en attrapent de temps en temps.

Une rangée d'ormes borde la route, à droite, et semble faire une garde d'honneur à un tilleul protégé par une grille rehaussée d'une inscription:

ARBRE DE LA MUTUALITÉ, PLANTÉ EN COMMÉMORATION DU CINQUANTENAIRE DE LA SOCIÉTÉ DE SECOURS MUTUELS
FONDÉE EN 1856 PAR LE DOCTEUR JOUANNE

Ce Jouanne était Napoléon, le fils d'Homais, qui déjà avant la mort de Charles Bovary aidait son père au laboratoire.<sup>62</sup>

La route monte et tourne encore. On la suivit jusqu'à mi-pente pour avoir une autre vue d'ensemble du bourg, puis on redescendit jusqu'au carrefour voisin de la maison des Bovary. On fit quelques centaines de mètres à droite et à gauche. A droite s'amorce la route de Blainville-Crevon dont la construction, disent certains, fit jeter bas le premier logis des Delamare. Ceux-ci ont occupé deux maisons à Ry; c'est peut-être ce qui a donné à Flaubert l'idée de les faire déménager de Tostes à Yonville.

<sup>59</sup> M. B., 227.

<sup>60</sup> Jules Levallois, Milieu de siècle: Mémoires d'un critique (Paris: Librairie illustrée, 1896), I.

<sup>61</sup> M. B., 95.

<sup>62</sup> Ibid., 477.

La route de Blainville mène bien vite à la prairie que traversait Emma, mais la Huchette est vers la gauche. Pourquoi l'amante prenait-elle le plus long? De l'autre côté la lisière du village est trop exposée aux regards et Emma, grimpant sur le plateau, derrière la gendarmerie actuelle, eût été vue, immanquablement.

On repassa par la Rose Blanche où l'on prit congé du savant hôtelier, et gaillardement on attaqua la côte de Martainville en direction de la Huchette. A gauche une sente rocailleuse monte entre une haie d'aubépine et des taillis de noisetiers, prunelliers, ronces, saules et maigres chênes. On s'y engagea, non sans avoir reconnu, à droite de la route, le ravin embroussaillé que le vieillard du cimetière avait signalé.

—C'est ici qu'Emma traversait la route, dit l'étudiant.

Emma! Lui aussi parlait d'elle maintenant comme d'une vieille et chère connaissance; il était pris par la grande pitié de l'histoire trop vraie qui tous les jours finit et recommence dans le monde.

Quelques centaines de mètres de montée entre un boqueteau et une prairie plantée de pommiers, et l'on déboucha sur un plateau où la moisson battait son plein. Le chemin de terre descend vers une route empierrée qui méandre par la campagne onduleuse. On n'y entendit pas le cri des grillons dans les avoines,<sup>63</sup> pas plus qu'on n'aperçut de joncs marins sur la colline.<sup>64</sup>

Au bout d'un kilomètre on atteignit quelques fermes flanquées de profonds trous d'eau, puis un château; il semblait offrir quelque ressemblance avec "l'impassible" demeure de Rodolphe; on s'informa; c'était plus loin encore.

—Elle en avait du courage, cette pauvre Emma, pour faire tout ce chemin à pied! Elle devait être épuisée en arrivant à la Huchette, dit l'étudiant en s'épongeant le front.

—Oui, surtout quand "elle prenait à travers des champs en labour, où elle s'enfonçait," mais de même qu'il a rapproché de la place les maisons de Bovary, de Homais et de Mme Lefrançois, Flaubert a raccourci la distance d'Yonville à la Huchette, et c'était son droit de romancier.

Voici la grand route de Beauvais. Des électriciens, juchés sur un pylône, désignèrent la Huchette aux marcheurs. On la découvre parfaitement à gauche de la route, par une large trouée que barre une grille basse. Des rangées de grands marronniers, tilleuls, ormes, acacias, lui forment de trois côtés un écran impénétrable à la vue.

"Emma arriva à la cour d'honneur que bordait un double rang de tilleuls touffus."<sup>65</sup> Le roman est ici très près de la réalité. La maison est

<sup>64</sup> Ibid., 426.

<sup>65</sup> M. B., 426.

de brique égayée de pierres blanches aux coins, et de roses qui font des guirlandes aux fenêtres du rez-de-chaussée. Pas de rideaux jaunes, mais deux girouettes sur le toit.<sup>66</sup> La façade est riante et le château n'a dû paraître impassible à Emma que parce qu'elle s'y était vu refuser tout secours.<sup>67</sup>

Une grande pelouse où broutaient deux chèvres s'étend devant la Huchette; à droite, par les interstices des arbres, nos curieux devinèrent une vieille baraque en planches; c'était le pavillon des rendez-vous; le beau Campion y abritait ses amours; le propriétaire actuel, un ancien notaire, y abrite ses poules.

Le professeur évoqua la dernière visite d'Emma à la Huchette; harcelée par Lheureux à qui elle avait acheté des étoffes à crédit, elle était venue demander à son amant de lui prêter trois mille francs.<sup>68</sup>

Les voyageurs emportaient le souvenir inoubliable du décor provincial où, par la magie d'un maître écrivain délibérément impassible, l'histoire banale et tragique d'une pauvre femme, qui valait mieux que son milieu, éclate de pitié et prend force de symbole, celui de l'humanité que la souffrance rend chère malgré ses fautes.

L'ombre de Madame Bovary est aujourd'hui plus vivante à Ry que ne l'a jamais été la jolie et volage Mme Delamare; elle plane aussi par tous pays; bien plus que dans "cent villages de France" Emma a des sœurs qui "vivent, souffrent et pleurent" sous tous les cieux.

D'un fait divers, de personnalités, Flaubert qui s'est tant fait violence pour rester impersonnel, a créé des types éternels, types sans puissance ni beauté mais pleinement vrais. Admironons son génie, admironons le fleuve, mais rendons aussi hommage à la source, au "coin de la création" qui, vu à travers le tempérament de Flaubert, a produit l'œuvre d'art.

Malgré les racontars et le désaccord des commentateurs, les lignes et la couleur<sup>69</sup> de Ry s'harmonisent dans leur ensemble à celles du roman. Une visite à ce pittoresque village de Ry, normand par excellence, donne au chef-d'œuvre gris de Flaubert une fraîcheur nouvelle, fait du couple si mal assorti des Bovary, de Homais, le solennel imbécile, des fantoches que sont les amants, du curé balourd, et même de tous les personnages épisodiques si vrais dans leur médiocrité, des êtres de chair et d'os que l'on ne peut oublier, et c'est indissolublement qu'une telle visite incorpore le roman à la vie, source de l'art.

FRANÇOIS DENŒU

Dartmouth College

<sup>66</sup> Ibid., 227.

<sup>67</sup> Ibid., 431.

<sup>68</sup> M. B., 431.

<sup>69</sup> Magistralement détaillée ici même par M. Jean Canu: La "couleur normande" de Madame Bovary, PMLA, XLVIII, 1 (March, 1933), 167-208.

A SOURCE FOR BALZAC'S DETERMINISM

IN any explanation of the sources for the doctrine of physical determinism, as expressed in modern French literature, the book of Jean-Philibert Dessaignes (1762-1832), Etudes de l'homme moral, fondées sur les rapports de ses facultés avec son organisation,<sup>1</sup> deserves a place. This is because its author was the teacher of Honoré de Balzac at the Collège de Vendôme, and because Balzac later became one of the chief creators of the doctrine in question.

It will be recalled that Balzac, perhaps first among French realists, rejected the romanticist conception of man and nature as bound together by a sort of pantheistic identity of substance,<sup>2</sup> substituting for it the newer and more scientific notion of a humanity whose physical and mental qualities were largely the result of environmental influences. Following this idea, he conceived it necessary to present as a background for all serious character delineations the milieu in which his characters grew and lived, weaving a web of minute detail into the description of important personages regarding the region, town, street, house, and even room inhabited by them. The idea of physical determinism, therefore, was of capital importance for the style and general literary workmanship of the Comédie humaine. From Balzac, the notion spread among realists and naturalists, achieving perhaps its most perfect expression in such a work as Flaubert's Un Cœur Simple, where the smell of the soil, the sights and sounds of country life, seem so incorporated in the physical form and toddling mentality of a primitive character that personage and background blend into one indistinguishable mass. And Flaubert's formula has since been zealously copied by non-French literatures, especially in America, becoming one of the clichés.

It is apparent, then, that this idea—even though received and interpreted by many authors with a literalness and finality, a will to assimilate man to the inanimate and sub-human, that goes far beyond the soberer dictates of recent science<sup>3</sup>—has played an important rôle in modern literary history, and that the work of Jean-Philibert Dessaignes, which throws light upon its origin, is of more than passing interest.

<sup>1</sup> (Paris: Typographie Delalain Frères, 1881).

<sup>2</sup> For an unusually penetrating treatment of this aspect of romantic thought, see Helmut Rehder, Die Philosophie der unendlichen Landschaft! Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der romanischen Weltanschauung (Halle: Max Niemeyer, 1932).

<sup>3</sup> It seems evident that the possibilisme of Vidal de la Blache, Brunhes, and other human geographers furnishes a more plausible explanation of man's relation to his physical environment than the theories put forth in the second half of the nineteenth century by biologists, whose interest and knowledge were largely limited to the subhuman.

Balzac refers as follows to the philosophy taught at Vendôme by M. Dessaignes, in the dedication of his novelette Gobseck (1840) to the historian Baron Barchou de Penhoën, one of his former classmates:

Parmi tous les élèves de Vendôme, nous sommes, je crois, les seuls qui se soient retrouvés au milieu de la carrière des lettres, nous qui cultivions déjà la philosophie à l'âge où nous ne devions cultiver que le De Viris!

This philosophy lived with him during his years of literary apprenticeship and mature authorship, occasionally finding direct expression in his works.<sup>4</sup> Evidently the memory of its creator's personality also lingered long in memory, and justly so, because M. Philibert Dessaignes was a man of singular depth and insight.

It was he who with his brother-in-law, Lazare François Mareschal, founded (1795) a pensionnat in parts of the abandoned buildings of the former college of the Oratoriens at Vendôme that Revolutionary laws against teaching congregations had suppressed.<sup>5</sup> This institution, popularly known as the Collège de Vendôme, though without governmental designation as such until 1848, continued under the direction of its founders for thirty years. M. Dessaignes gave instruction in philosophy, as he had previously done under the Oratoriens, though adding classes in other subjects. He began the composition of Etudes de l'homme moral in 1818, only five years after Balzac left the college, and did not finish it until shortly before his death in 1832. Its actual publication was delayed by unusual circumstances till 1881. We have no reason to believe that it does not contain essentially the same ideas that the young Honoré received while a student.

<sup>4</sup> Note, for instance, the connection of Dessaignes' theory that "les phénomènes jusqu' alors attribués à divers fluides impondérables: mouvement, chaleur, lumière, électricité, magnétisme ne sont que des manifestations diverses d'un même fluide éthéré, animé de mouvements différents" and the dying words of Louis Lambert to Mlle Villenoix: "Ici bas tout est le produit d'une substance éthéré, base commune de plusieurs phénomènes connus sous les noms impropres d'électricité, chaleur, lumière. fluides galvaniques, magnétiques, etc." These purely physical and chemical aspects of Dessaignes' doctrines, in their relationship to Balzac, are treated by A. Coriveaud in two tiny articles, one in la Revue Scientifique (Feb. 6, 1886) and the other in la Chronique Médicale (Dec. 1, 1902). Neither touches the general subject of physical determinism.

<sup>5</sup> Details from a pamphlet by Dr. A. Ribemont-Dessaignes (grandson by adoption of J.-P. Dessaignes) entitled Deux Grands Savants Vendômois, Jean-Philibert et Victor Dessaignes (Vendôme: à l'Imprimerie Launey et Fils, 1930), most graciously made available to me by its author. In answer to my queries whether another member of the faculty may not have instructed Balzac in philosophy, the Proviseur du Collège de Vendôme wrote as follows, July 7, 1927: "Rien ne permet de supposer qu'il y ait eu à cette époque au Collège de Vendôme un autre professeur de philosophie, et il n'est pas vraisemblable que J. Ph. Dessaignes ait abandonné à un autre un enseignement qu'il avait à cœur de donner lui-même."

In the preface to his work, M. Dessaignes discusses the reason why the philosophy of his day has fallen into disrepute, finding it due to the self-imposed separation of that discipline from the physical sciences, that could explain for it the origin of mental action. This isolationist tendency has resulted in the creation of various . . .

. . . systèmes absurdes qu'elle (philosophy) a successivement enfantés, lorsque s'étant persuadé que la pensée se produisait en nous sans l'intervention des organes, elle a voulu s'isoler des sciences physiques et proclamer son indépendance sous le nom fastueux de métaphysique.<sup>6</sup>

As a teacher of the subject, he realizes the darkness into which it has long been plunged, from the preference of philosophers for their own subjective imaginations and suppositions instead of experience and observation. Indeed, if they consult experience at all, it is to endow nature with their own inductions and to picture man as they wish him to be rather than as he is,<sup>7</sup> a criticism that extends, in some degree, even to Locke and Condillac, despite their undisputed greatness.<sup>8</sup> Orthodox thinkers likewise are pushed on by an imprudent zeal for the interests of religion and the desire to free the soul from all dependence on a physical organism into the acceptance of Bonald's dictum that man is "une intelligence servie par des organes." Of this idea M. Dessaignes remarks: "Cette idée est grande: elle élève l'homme, elle flatte son amour propre; mais elle n'est pas conforme à la réalité."<sup>9</sup>

This state of affairs has led the author of the Études morales to the following conclusion concerning his own course of action:

J'ai donc senti que si je voulais obtenir quelques nouveaux aperçus dans cette branche intéressante de nos connaissances, je devais en même temps étudier avec soin l'organisme du physique de notre être, les mouvements propres ou réfléchis des organes, leurs fonctions respectives et l'action modifiante des causes externes sur eux.<sup>10</sup>

This has led him to associate with philosophy the study of the physical sciences, especially as revealed in the research of savants such as Cabanis, Cuvier, Magendie and Broussais—all favorites of Balzac and repeatedly mentioned in the Comédie humaine. The result of his studies is the conclusion that thought and will, the immaterial aspects of man's mental life, are the effects of organic action. He says:

Tous les phénomènes, instinctifs ou intellectuels qu'on observe en nous, sont dus au jeu de l'appareil nerveux comme en étant la cause déterminante. Si l'on

<sup>6</sup> P. viii.

<sup>7</sup> P. xv.

<sup>8</sup> P. xvi.

<sup>9</sup> P. xii, xiii.

<sup>10</sup> P. xv.

veut obtenir des connaissances positives sur l'homme moral, il faut donc en étudier les facultés dans l'organe qui en est la source.<sup>11</sup>

Starting from this point of view, he develops with infinite patience, in three thick volumes, the influence of individual human organs on the formation of intellectual qualities, as well as the relationships of the latter among themselves. Chapters on "The Influence of Climate on the Passions," "Diet and the Passions," and "Physical Causes that Produce the Varieties Observable in Human Imagination" are scattered along the way. The effect of environment on man's organism and the continuation of its molding force through the physical structure into the realm of mind both receive consideration.

M. Dessaignes praises Cabanis for reaching the same conclusions: Nous devons à Cabanis d'avoir, le premier, mis en évidence les rapports intimes des phénomènes intellectuels avec les procédés de l'organisation, assigné dans les viscères l'origine de nos goûts et de nos penchants, la cause impulsive de nos passions, et ouvert à l'idéologie une nouvelle source d'idées.<sup>12</sup>

These declarations make it easy to understand how Balzac, a pupil of their author, should later write in a letter to Mme d'Abrantès:

Maintenant, raisonnant en thèse générale, je vous dirai que nous ne nous donnons pas nos caractères, nous les subissons en naissant, de la conformation bizarre de nos organes.<sup>13</sup>

Likewise we see why he should have constantly observed the effect of climate, atmosphere, and altitude on human individuals and races, and published the results of his investigations concerning diet as it molds minds and bodies in a series of monographs such as la Physiologie gastronomique, Nouvelle Théorie du déjeuner and Traité des excitants modernes, boldly declaring, "The baker is the father of thought" and "A nation's fate depends on the food it consumes."<sup>14</sup> Nor does it surprise us to find him quoting the following in his Physiologie de l'employé:

Villagers have no nerves, as people say, but they are unconsciously impressionable, and undergo, without noticing it, the action of atmospheric circumstances and exterior factors. Identified, in a way, with the nature in the midst of which they live, they are penetrated insensibly by the ideas and sentiments it awakens in them and reproduce these in their actions and on their physiognomy, according to their individual organization and character.<sup>15</sup>

Thus in theory, as well as in artistic practice, Balzac follows the general lines laid down by his early teacher.

Still, it would be unfair to call J-P. Dessaignes a determinist pure and simple, for he believed firmly that the immaterial element in the human mentality exercised quite as much influence on the physical

<sup>11</sup> P. viii.

<sup>12</sup> P. xix

<sup>13</sup> Correspondance générale, letter xxx.

<sup>14</sup> Traité des excitants modernes, section 3.

<sup>15</sup> Ch. V. Balzac, C. Lévy ed., xxi, 327.

organism as it received from it. He simply conceived the two factors, mind and matter, as being in a state of mutual dependence,<sup>16</sup> saying, "Si l'on veut définir l'homme, il est donc plus juste de dire que c'est une intelligence assujettie à des organes et servie par des organes."<sup>17</sup> Moreover, being himself an Oratorien, he naturally intended no affront to religion, and protested vividly against those who claimed that systems of thinking like his own degrade man and confuse him with unthinking matter by showing that the human spirit requires the aid of organs for the production of its thought. Degradation, he argued, comes only by lowering a thing below its natural condition, which his theory does not do. Nobody can deny that the soul's dependence on physicality is the very condition of its present existence. Therefore we must conclude that the bodily organism has been created by the Supreme Author of life as an aid to the soul. This being so, it is impossible to believe that matter, coming from the hand of God, could be a degrading influence.<sup>18</sup>

Here again Balzac follows him, for nowhere in the Comédie humaine do we find an air-tight system of physical determinism that leaves the spiritual elements in life completely out of consideration. The French novelist recognized freely that the human mind both acts upon and reacts toward the material elements around it; indeed, most of his studies in the relationship of mental qualities in his characters to the furniture in their rooms, the clothing they wear and the houses inhabited by them imply a projection of the human mentality into surrounding material objects. Not only that, Balzac consciously created spiritualized characters such as Louis Lambert and Sôraphita, in whom the flame of the soul burns at its brightest and to whom materiality is largely in subjection.

It is not until considerably later in the history of French letters that doctrinaires such as Hippolyte Taine constructed uncompromisingly coherent systems of determinism and fiction writers contemporary with them limited their character studies to human types so childishly simple in mentality, so close to the soil and intellectually so non-resistant to the primal sap of emotion flowing through them, that Zola could truthfully say of the creatures in one of his earlier works:

I have chosen personages dominated to the highest degree by their nerves and blood, with no freedom of choice, drawn toward each act of their lives by the fateful urge of their flesh. The soul, I recognize, is absolutely lacking in them, since I have willed it so.<sup>19</sup>

Dessaignes and Balzac, then, represent merely the first workers in the construction of a theory destined to go far and develop broadly.

G. M. FESS

University of Missouri

<sup>16</sup> P. xi, xii

<sup>17</sup> P. xiii.

<sup>18</sup> P. xxxv, xxxvi.

<sup>19</sup> Preface to Thérèse Raquin.

LOUIS-XAVIER DE RICARD, POET OF PROGRESS

IN the course of his essay on Paul Verlaine, Anatole France, in speaking of the early Parnassians, makes the very shrewd observation:

Nous avons, je ne sais trop pourquoi, la prétention d'être impassibles. Le grand philosophe de l'école, M. Xavier de Ricard, soutenait avec ardeur que l'art doit être de glace et nous ne nous apercevions même point que ce doctrinaire de l'impassibilité n'écrivait pas un vers qui ne fût l'expression violente de ses passions politiques, sociales ou religieuses.<sup>1</sup>

It will be the purpose of the present study to verify this statement on the basis of evidence furnished by Ricard's poetry as well as by his life, and to suggest, by way of conclusion, the necessity of a re-definition of Parnassianism.

Louis-Xavier de Ricard was, together with Catulle Mendès, co-editor of the first Parnasse contemporain, published by Alphonse Lemerre in 1866, at which time the salon of his mother, la marquise de Ricard, was one of the principal meeting-places of the group which was soon to be dubbed "les Parnassiens." In 1866, Ricard was twenty-three years old and had already made a place for himself in the world of literary journalism in Paris. Three years before, he had founded, with the help of Adolphe Racot and several other Latin Quarter friends, a periodical bearing the name, rather significant in connection with the aim of this study, of la Revue du Progrès. This review became one of the organs of the Socialists and the positivistic scientists of the Paris of that day, but it was short-lived, as Mgr. Dupanloup had it prosecuted on the charge of atheism and Ricard had to submit to a three-month imprisonment and the payment of a fine of two hundred francs. Not long afterwards he was presented to Lemerre, who agreed to undertake the publication of a periodical for the encouragement of literature and the arts to be known as l'Art, which was the immediate predecessor of le Parnasse contemporain.<sup>2</sup> "C'est l'Art," claims Ricard's biographer, Fernand Clerget, "qui formula la doctrine parnassienne et leur gagna l'épithète d'impassibles,"<sup>3</sup> a claim which is highly debatable since it is becoming increasingly evident that it is unsafe to speak of a "doctrine parnassienne" and because other explanations have been offered as to why the Parnassians had been previously known as "les Impassibles."<sup>4</sup> Be that as it may, l'Art, too, enjoyed only a brief existence and soon made way for the periodical from which the three recueils de vers nouveaux styled le Parnasse contemporain took their name.

<sup>1</sup> La Vie littéraire (Paris: Calmann-Lévy, n.d.) III, 311.

<sup>2</sup> Vide Catulle Mendès. la Légende du Parnasse contemporain (Brussels, 1884), p. 239.

<sup>3</sup> Louis-Xavier de Ricard, Editions de la Revue littéraire de Paris et de Champagne (Reims, 1906), p. 25.

Ricard, then, had, as a journalist, been sufficiently militant in the cause of "progress" to be forced to endure imprisonment for its sake—hardly an evidence of "impassibilité." This fact is brought out much more forcibly by a study of his literary career, which reveals him as a very vocal crusader for a great variety of ideas which in the middle of the nineteenth century were undoubtedly held to be radical. If we are to trust Clerget, he had, at the age of fourteen, composed an anti-Crusades poem, a "longue tétralogie en vers" called les Albigeois.<sup>5</sup> Ricard's first printed verse was a highly juvenile sixteen-page plquette entitled A Mlle Léontine Huguet le premier janvier 1860.<sup>6</sup> As epigraph to this poem, the sixteen-year-old versifier selected two lines from Hugo:

Le mortel qu'un Dieu même anime
Marche à l'avenir, plein d'ardeur.<sup>7</sup>

The poem, a rhapsodic ode in ten parts with variation of verse-form in the successive sections, is addressed to one Mme Huguet de Lorient, who, in 1857 and again in 1858, had published a slender and worthless collection of "poésies, contes, légendes, nouvelles, récits historiques" under the title of l'Ermite de Passy: Œuvre littéraire.<sup>8</sup> Ricard goes so far as to compare this seeress with Plato, to call her "le guide nouveau" and to predict that:

... la main du Seigneur
... va, guidant au but ton esprit immortel,
Te faire asseoir enfin entre Sand et Staël.<sup>9</sup>

He apostrophizes her:

Hâte vers le progrès l'esprit humain trop lent,
Les yeux sur l'avenir, dédaigne le présent.
...
... O toi, de ton génie
Lance les traits brûlants contre la tyrannie.<sup>10</sup>

Two years after the appearance of this "péché de jeunesse," Ricard published his first volume, containing selections in both verse and prose, les Chants de l'aube,<sup>11</sup> the "aube" being the dawn of the new era of en-

<sup>4</sup> Vide Mendès, op. cit., pp. 7-8, and the present writer's Parnassus in France, pp. 66-67.

<sup>5</sup> Op. cit., p. 5. Two "fragments" of this poem were published in les Chants de l'aube.
<sup>6</sup> (Paris: Jouaust, 1860).

<sup>7</sup> Italics inserted.

<sup>8</sup> Passy, chez l'auteur.

<sup>9</sup> A. Mlle. Léontine Huguet, p. 7.

<sup>10</sup> Ibid., pp. 12-13.

<sup>11</sup> (Paris: Poulet-Malassis, 1862).

lightenment which the young poet so hopefully foresaw.<sup>12</sup> The volume was dedicated "aux jeunes filles" and, in a prose "préface dédicatoire," Ricard declared that the time had come for man to cease worshipping false gods and to substitute therefor the worship of humanity. "La tendance de la littérature moderne est, croyons-nous, essentiellement moraliste et libérale,"<sup>13</sup> a statement which, coming from a future organizer of the Parnassian group, deserves to be noted. In a lengthy poem in nine "motifs" called "A M. le comte Alfred de Vigny," who is styled "l'un des plus hauts fronts qui dominent notre âge,"<sup>14</sup> Ricard voices the Hugolian conception of the apostleship of the poet and the Vignyesque idea of the martyrdom of the sage. "Le poète," we read, "c'est l'Idéal fait homme,"<sup>15</sup> and the poem is a long hymn in praise of "l'Amour et la Liberté," with anathemas heaped upon the heads of the materialists and Epicureans of the day. The remaining poems in the volume are insistently didactic and overloaded with capital-letter abstractions such as la Conscience, la Liberté, l'Espérance, la Divinité, la Justice, and so on. Though he still believes in a somewhat metaphysical God, Ricard's real gods at this time are Love, Reason, and Nature; "l'Amour" he describes as "seul bon et seul vrai Dieu";<sup>16</sup> "la Foi, l'Amour, la Poésie" are "les seuls bonheurs, les seules vérités."<sup>17</sup> He speaks frequently of "la sainte Trinité—Dieu, l'Amour, la Liberté,"<sup>18</sup> and the last of these is lauded in these terms:

Liberté, Liberté, religion nouvelle
Du genre humain entier que l'avenir appelle,
Liberté, seule foi qui triomphe aujourd'hui!<sup>19</sup>

He thinks of himself as the "prêtre" of and the "lutteur" for "la Liberté."<sup>20</sup> Though he emphatically declares: "Je crois en toi, Seigneur,"<sup>21</sup> Ricard is really a pantheist;<sup>22</sup> the old world is crumbling, carrying in its wake "les codes, les autels, les prêtres et les rois!"<sup>23</sup> Many of the poems have epigraphs from Népomucène Lemerrier, of whose importance Ricard had a very exaggerated notion. He apparently considered himself the disciple of Lemerrier and Barbier as a satirist; he was the champion of poets and poetry, an ardent feminist and the enemy of bigotry. The two "Fragments extraits d'un poème inédit et intitulé: les Albigeois," with an epigraph from Agrippa d'Aubigné, are an attack on "cette foule

<sup>12</sup> Les Chants de l'aube, p. 273.

<sup>14</sup> Ibid., p. 49.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., p. 176.

<sup>16</sup> Ibid., p. 187.

<sup>20</sup> Ibid., p. 197.

<sup>13</sup> Ibid., p. 32.

<sup>15</sup> Ibid., p. 53.

<sup>17</sup> Ibid., p. 179.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid., p. 196.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid., p. 228.

<sup>22</sup> Vide the somewhat Leconte-de-Lisle poem, "le Panthéisme."

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., p. 273.

de brigands qu'on appelle des Croisés."<sup>24</sup> In a lengthy prose "Conclusion" to his volume, Ricard salutes Leconte de Lisle, "que je n'ai pas l'honneur de connaître,"<sup>25</sup> as a poet of genius; and a note on this "Conclusion" ends with the words: "la Poésie est l'art universel, l'art divin."

The most important of Ricard's works is a collection of poems entitled Ciel, rue et foyer,<sup>26</sup> which enjoyed the honor of being the first of numerous volumes of verse from the pens of Parnassian poets to be brought out by Alphonse Lemerre. Several of the poems in Ciel, rue et foyer had first appeared in la Revue du Progrès, and the entire volume is animated by the worship of liberty, humanity, and progress which had characterized Ricard's earlier work. The place of Népomucène Lemerrier, who had been the presiding deity of les Chants de l'aube, is here taken by Quinet and Michelet, and the poetic influence of Hugo, Vigny and Leconte de Lisle is very marked. A prefatory sonnet, written in 1864, refers to:

Ces vers nouveaux, écrits pendant l'aurore
De cette ère naissante, . . .<sup>27</sup>

and, in a "dédicace" styled "Ouverture," Ricard renounces God and the gods to whom the poets had hitherto looked for inspiration in favor of liberty and progress, in short, of man. The volume is divided into four "books," entitled successively: "l'Art et l'histoire," "les Lutttes," "l'Amour," and "les Dieux." The first book opens with a poem "A Edgar Quinet," in which the great historian is extolled as the herald of a new era. Then follows "les Deux pôles," a very Leconte-de-Lisle effort in praise of both past and future, of the serenity of Brahma and the impassibility of the Sphinx, with the names of Hindu deities strewn about in profusion; the poet is adjured:

Assieds-toi fortement dans ta sérénité,<sup>28</sup>

Marche d'un pied tranquille entre ce double pôle:
Dédaigne le présent qui murmure en fuyant.<sup>29</sup>

In a lengthy free ode entitled "Aphrodité Anadyomené," in which the names of the gods are written in the orthography characteristic of Leconte de Lisle and which ends with a Banvillesque hymn to Aphrodite, man is acclaimed as the ruling force of the universe:

L'homme est le dieu qui crée incessamment;
. . . l'homme est Dieu.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., p. 372.

<sup>25</sup> Ibid., p. 399.

<sup>26</sup> (Lemerre, Paris: 1866).

<sup>27</sup> Ciel, rue et foyer, p. 1.

<sup>28</sup> Ibid., p. 10.

<sup>29</sup> Ibid., p. 16.—Italics inserted. These same three words had already been used in Mlle. Léontine Huguet.

<sup>30</sup> Ibid., pp. 18 and 19.

A sonnet, dated 1864 and extolling the "poème sculpté" that is the Venus de Milo, concludes:

Poète, garde ainsi ton âme intacte et fière:
Que ton esprit, vêtu d'impassibilité,
Marche à travers la vie au but qu'il a tenté.<sup>31</sup>

A nine-part ode styled "le Combat" is an imaginative account of the victory of Liberty over the forces of darkness and evil; while "Au bord d'une fenêtre" is a meditation upon the ills of society, in the course of which we are told: "Les autels sont détruits et les Dieux ont vécu."<sup>32</sup>

The second book of Ciel, rue et foyer begins with a glowing verse-tribute to Victor Hugo, and such poems as "l'Esprit" and "la Liberté" continue the paean to that liberty in which man is free of tyrannies and prejudices. In "Aspiration indéfinie," Ricard speaks of himself as the "Juif errant du Progrès"<sup>33</sup> and as "l'homme moderne" driven by a restless search for truth: "Par la foi au progrès mon âme est fécondée."<sup>33</sup> Thought will sound the depths of knowledge, science will roll back the mists of ignorance, and the poet will be supported in his quest by his love of poetry. "L'Endormi" is an attack on those who refuse to engage in the struggle for the advancement of humanity:

. . . les flots du Progrès incessant,
Montant, montant toujours, le noîront en passant.<sup>34</sup>

One of the most important compositions in the volume is "le Poète," dedicated to Laurent-Pichat and reprinted from la Revue du Progrès for October, 1863. To the objection that the poets of the day were too far removed from life:

Et sans cesse tournant les yeux vers le passé, Habillent leur néant d'un chaos insensé,<sup>35</sup> and that poetry no longer has meaning for the traveler who

Au progrès éternel monte à travers l'orage,<sup>35</sup>

Ricard replies by distinguishing rhymesters from poets:<sup>36</sup>

Le vrai poète est fier; et, fils de la tempête,
Il va toujours devant, tient toujours haut sa tête,
Et, mécontent toujours du présent malvenu,
Du sommet idéal il plonge en l'inconnu
Comme un aigle, toujours volant de cime en cime,
En étoile de flamme, il brille sur l'abîme.
Il conduit, il éclaire; il trouve les chemins

<sup>31</sup> Ibid., p. 27.—Italics inserted. Note, in connection with this poem, the oft-quoted line of Verlaine: "Est-elle ou non en marbre, la Vénus de Milo."

<sup>32</sup> Ibid., p. 53.

<sup>33</sup> Ibid., pp. 79, 81.

<sup>34</sup> Ibid., p. 83.

<sup>35</sup> Ibid., p. 95.

<sup>36</sup> Ibid., pp. 96-97.—Italics inserted.

Où devront pas à pas le suivre les humains,
 Des suprêmes hauteurs de son vol solitaire
 Il verse ses clartés et ses chants sur la terre,
 Le poète est un œil qui contemple les choses
 Il décrit les effets sans remonter aux causes.
*Ce n'est pas un Musset dont le vague regard
 N'aperçoit les objets qu'à travers un brouillard,
 Et ne sait pas vêtir d'une forme précise
 Les pâles visions de son âme indécise*

Genuine poets are "conduits par le Progrès," animated by the desire to know Nature and Truth and to break the altars of all the old gods:

. . . L'idéal impossible
 Déployait sur ton front [that of the poet] l'azur inaccessible
 Vous chantiez écoutés des astres radieux
 L'humanité féconde et le néant des dieux.

This poem, highly significant as a statement of what was to prove the attitude of many of the Parnassians, is followed by what might be called a pendant-piece; it is given no title and bears citation at length:

J'admire, dédaigneux des vagues mélodies
 Qu'entonnent nos rimeurs sinistres ou plaintifs,
 L'épanouissement des vastes épopées
 Balançant leur parfum dans les vents primitifs.
 . . . . .
 Mais quand je redescends vers notre crépuscule
 Plein de gémissements mornes et violents,
 Trouvant l'homme pervers, honteux et ridicule,
 Dans l'immense avenir je m'engouffre à pas lents,
 Et sur le long chemin de la Cité nouvelle
 Pour marquer où passa mon pied de voyageur,
 Je dresse quelque strophe, austère et solennelle,
Comme un sphinx de granit immuable et rêveur.<sup>37</sup>

The naïveté of much of this poetry reaches a climax in "la Pensée," a hymn to Thought, "l'idée éternelle," "l'idée immaculée," in which the solemn declaration is made: "Les mensonges sont morts."<sup>38</sup>

The third "livre" of Ciel, rue et foyer opens with a poem "A Theophile Gautier," to whom the entire "book" is dedicated. Ricard here declares:

Pour marier le moderne à l'antique
 J'ai calqué mes dessins.<sup>39</sup>

He reveals the fact that he possesses, in his "musée artistique," two busts, one of Gautier and the other of his own mistress, and the following poems are devoted to the celebration of the beauty of his loved one in tones that are not entirely "impassible." The poet, however, though he places implicit trust in the loyalty of his mistress, is prepared to accept stoically the loss of her love:

<sup>37</sup> Ibid., p. 100.—Italics inserted.

<sup>38</sup> Ibid., p. 105.

<sup>39</sup> Ibid., p. 108.

Au-dessus des douleurs dont la foule l'assaille,
Mon âme inaccessible habite ma fierté.<sup>40</sup>

Echoing Vigny in such expressions as "impassible Espérance" and "Nature impitoyable,"<sup>40</sup> he concludes that, if he does lose his mistress, he will conceal his wound so carefully "que personne du moins ne le verra saigner."<sup>40</sup> Probably because of Ricard's striving after intellectuality, the poems of this group are not very réussis; a footnote to one of them, "les Papillons," tells us that they are printed here only as specimens of a collection to be published under the title of Poèmes de la femme; this volume was never published and presumably never finished. That Ricard was an experimenter in prosodic moulds is illustrated by "Vers pentadécasyllabiques," written in 1865 and dedicated to Adolphe Racot; this rather fluid form, the fifteen-syllable verse divided into three equal parts, he claims to have invented. The "impassible" note is resumed in "Sérénité," in which the poet, stricken with ennui, is left cold by the peacefulness of a scene he describes:

Car je souffre en silence une morne torture
A vivre dans des temps désenchantés et vieux.<sup>41</sup>

Nature is "impassible et sereine," hence:

C'est pourquoi, sans amour et sans haine inutile,
Je subirai la vie ainsi qu'il sied aux forts;
Je serai calme et fier, comme l'arbre immobile
Qui, sous les yeux changeants, croît et vit sans efforts.<sup>41</sup>

The last book of the volume is dedicated to Michelet and begins with a poem lauding him as the champion of liberty and humanity and as the enemy of clericalism. In "Recueillement," inscribed "à Elle," and dated November, 1864, Ricard asserts that, in the midst of his struggle in behalf of mankind, he is strengthened by the love of a woman—

Et mon âme, inflexible et ferme mais sereine,
Attend, o Liberté, ta victoire prochaine.
Que le passé s'éveille et revienne aux combats;
Cet athlète est poussif; il ne vous vaincra pas.
La Révolution, tutrice maternelle,
Nous a pris sous sa garde et tend sur nous son aile;
Et, fière de sa foi, debout la Liberté
Entr'ouvre l'avenir devant l'Humanité.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>40</sup> Ibid., "la Volonté," p. 124.

<sup>41</sup> Ibid., p. 141.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., pp. 150-151.

"Le Crépuscule des dieux" is a free ode, fittingly dedicated to Sully Prudhomme; it describes the downfall of the gods in favor of Nature and Humanity. The second of its six parts, "les Larmes de Jésus," flatly asseverates:

Tous les dieux ont perdu leur puissance sublime,
Et la divinité s'effeuille dans l'abîme;
Et, secouant ses reins, la forte Humanité
Laboure éperdument les champs de Liberté.

. . . . .
Le soleil du Progrès féconde les épis.<sup>43</sup>

It might be remarked, in passing, that his frequent rhyming of "Liberté" with "Humanité" and constant harping on "le Progrès" are evident marks of technical weakness and paucity of subject-matter in Ricard. On the other hand, flagrant contradictions in his train of reasoning stamp him as even less competent a philosopher than he was a poet. In a poem called "les Formes," he makes the admission that the arts have been overthrown by the "vulgus," which has exiled the

. . . divin chœur des Formes
Parce qu'il entonnait avec sérénité
L'hymne de l'idéal et de la Liberté.<sup>44</sup>

Now, if the death of gods and of tyrants does not result in the liberation of the masses, "cui bono?" And if the liberation of the masses means the banishment of the arts, where is the vaunted Progress on which Ricard so incessantly insists? It should be remembered, too, that Ricard, while exhorting man to rid himself of superstition and of purely surface ritual, urges him not to ignore the past but to know it and thus himself. In "le Règne de la femme," he foretells the approach of the reign of woman and the subsequent expulsion of the gods and of evil, and he naïvely exclaims: "Et ce sera sublime!"<sup>45</sup> The volume of Ciel, rue et foyer is brought virtually to a close by the poet's declaration of his determination to cling to the arduous paths of art:

Fuyant les lents sentiers, que couvre l'ombre lourde,
Moi! je veux conquérir la future clarté:
Que m'importe, o Progrès! que la foule soit sourde
A la voix de la Forme et de la Liberté.<sup>46</sup>

Whatever may be the artistic shortcomings of Ciel, rue et foyer, it has been amply demonstrated that the volume, as Clerget styles it, is a "profession of foi."<sup>47</sup> This "faith" is positivistic, and is compounded

<sup>43</sup> Ibid., p. 169.

<sup>44</sup> Ibid., p. 184.

<sup>45</sup> Ibid., p. 182.

<sup>46</sup> Ibid., p. 190.

<sup>47</sup> Op. cit., p. 24.—Clerget goes on to characterize Ricard's poetry as "vaillante et surtout sincère" and the poet himself as "un homme."

of a hatred of formal religions and an almost mystical belief in progress and revolution, in the emancipation of woman, in love, and in humanity and in art. Above all, this "faith" is militant and anything but "impassible," despite the poet's reiterated application of that epithet to himself. Ricard was not afraid to face the constituted authorities in his fight for what he considered the good cause. During the last years of the Second Empire, he was a Republican-Socialist and a regular contributor to radical periodicals. An ardent "félibre" since the appearance of Mistral's Mireio in 1859, he became president of the Fédération régionaliste française and wrote stories and novels based on the history of the Languedoc. Although the 1869 Parnasse contemporain contains two poems by him and that of 1876 one, his poetic strivings may be said to have terminated with Ciel, rue et foyer.

Ricard, thus, until his death in 1911, was a militant democrat and humanitarian, yet not merely a Parnassian but one of the organizers of the group and co-editor of the first Parnasse contemporain. How are these facts to be reconciled? In his little volume on le Parnasse,<sup>48</sup> M. André Thérive lays down the axiom: "Est considéré comme parnassien tout essai de poésie impersonnelle ou décorative au dix-neuvième siècle" and he rejects the work of Sully Prudhomme with the corollary that "il n'y a plus de poésie morale, il n'y a plus de poésie psychologique, il n'y a plus de poésie instructive ou explicative."<sup>49</sup> But Ricard's poetry is never wholly impersonal and rarely pictorial, it is sometimes erotic, and it is often moralistic and instructive. It would seem preposterous to argue that Ricard, who was, as Clerget exaggeratedly puts it, after Leconte de Lisle and Banville, "le principal fondateur du Parnasse et comme poète et surtout comme homme d'action,"<sup>50</sup> was not a Parnassian; it would, indeed, seem that the time has come for a careful re-definition of the term Parnassian. Such a re-definition can be achieved only through a study of the poetry of all the members, at least, of the original Parnassian group, if not of all the contributors to the three recueils of the Parnasse contemporain. The tendency to make Parnassianism almost wholly synonymous with Leconte de Lisle, which has hitherto held sway, should make way for a larger appreciation of the work of the entire group, minor poets as well as major. And Ricard's "progress" poetry, artistically deficient though it undoubtedly is, must be given due consideration in any such revaluation.

AARON SCHAFFER

The University of Texas

<sup>48</sup> Les Œuvres représentatives (Paris, 1929), p. 40.

<sup>49</sup> Ibid., p. 129.

<sup>50</sup> Op. cit., p. 26.—Catulle Mendès deserves to be placed with if not ahead of Ricard.

DIE HERKUNFT DER PALATALISIERUNG UND MOUILLIERUNG DES L-LAUTES IN DEUTSCHEN DIALEKTEN<sup>1</sup>

DAS Gebiet der Sprachforschung des letzten Jahrhunderts hat, allgemein gesprochen, sein Bestes darin geleistet, Spracherscheinungen in ihrem Zusammenhange zu erkennen und in ihrer Regelmässigkeit darzustellen. Parallel dazu lief allerdings eine vorsichtiger gehaltene Bewegung, welche die gefundenen Erscheinungen auf die Frage des "Warum" hin zu prüfen und auf Grund ihrer inneren Notwendigkeit darzustellen sich bemühte. So kam es, dass schon seit den Zeiten eines Zeuss, Bopp und Grimm ernste Versuche von Deutungen wichtiger Lautgesetze gemacht wurden, die sich allerdings über den Radius eines "wohl" und "vielleicht" selten hinausbewegen konnten. Zu Ende des vergangenen Jahrhunderts mehrten sich auch jene Theorien, die wohlbekannte Lautgesetze, wie Umlaut, Ablaut und Lautverschiebung nach ihrer inneren Notwendigkeit zu erklären versuchten. Bei dem Emporkommen so vieler neuer Hilfswissenschaften ist es nur natürlich, dass wir bald ein "Sich Jagen" von Theorien beobachten können, was manchen Gelehrten vorsichtig, vielleicht auch skeptisch stimmte und damit von der Lösung der schönsten und schwierigsten Frage "Warum ändern sich Laute?" ferne hielt. Um so mehr muss man es dem Mut, vielleicht Opfermut einzelner Männer danken, trotzdem Lösungsmöglichkeiten angedeutet zu haben, die doch wenigstens die Forschung wach und rege erhielten.

Immer wieder werden neue Felder und Möglichkeiten durch neue Wissenschaften, wie Psychologie, Prähistorie, Paläographie, Volkskunde usw. erschlossen. Letzten Endes kann sogar eine alte, längst als abgetan betrachtete Theorie wieder ans Tageslicht gezogen werden. Noch immer besteht der Grundsatz, dass eine Theorie solange besteht, bis sie durch eine wahrscheinlichere entkräftigt wird. Von einem Dogma in der Wissenschaft können wir nicht sprechen. Es gibt sogar unwahrscheinliche Theorien, die nicht widerlegt werden können.<sup>2</sup> Erst der Zukunft kann es vorbehalten sein, sich ein Schlussurteil über ein so heikles Gebiet, wie das des Lautwandels, zu bilden. Und doch würde sich die gegenwärtige

<sup>1</sup> Über Vorgang, Zwischenstufen und landschaftliche Verbreitung dieser Erscheinung siehe C. Selmer, "Palatalization and i-Vocalization of l in Present German Dialects," Germ. Review, VIII, 124-136.

<sup>2</sup> Eine solche ist z.B. Paul Passys Theorie, das Fehlen des p im Keltischen aus dem Tragen von Lippenringen zu erklären, was die Aussprache dieses Lautes unmöglich gemacht habe.

Sprachforschung nicht selbst gerecht werden, wollte sie sich durch zwar treffende, aber lieblose Schlagwörter, wie "Germanomanie" und "Keltomanie" abschrecken lassen, ihre Ergebnisse rücksichtslos nur dort zu suchen, wo wissenschaftliche Ehrlichkeit ihr gebietet, sie zu suchen. Aus der Fülle zahlreicher Theorien muss sich doch endlich etwas Positives, allgemein Gultiges herauschälen lassen. So soll auch dieser Beitrag nur ein Versuch sein, eine bisher in deutschen Dialekten wenig beobachtete Erscheinung zu untersuchen und auf ihre Herkunft hin zu prüfen

2. Auf dem Gebiet der Vokalisierung des l-Lautes zu u<sup>3</sup> oder i haben wir es, vom phonetischen Standpunkt aus betrachtet, eigentlich mit keinem radikalen, eine fundamentale Verschiedenheit zeitigenden Lautwandel zu tun. Denn, so aussergewöhnlich auch diese Erscheinung in ihrer Verwandlung von l zu u, bzw. i auf den ersten Blick anmuten mag, so wird sie uns doch durch untereinander verwandte, bindende Zwischenstufen (l > l̃ > l̃<sup>e</sup> > u und l > l̃ > j̃ > i<sup>4</sup>) natürlich erscheinen. Wenn wir die Hauptmerkmale der letzteren Erscheinung genauer betrachten, ergibt sich ungefähr folgendes:

Im Gegensatz zu einem alveolaren, "bühnendeutschen" l-Laut kann man in gewissen Dialekten, wie dem Bayrisch-Österreichischen, Wallischen, Lausitzischen und in Teilen des Thüringischen und Fränkischen eine zur Palatalisierung und i-Vokalisierung<sup>5</sup> führende Tendenz feststellen, für die bis jetzt noch keine Erklärung abgegeben wurde. Die Entwicklung zum reinen Vokal wird durch Zwischenstufen bewerkstelligt (z.B. balđ > bal̃đ > baĵĭđ > baid). Zur reinen Vokalisierung in grösserem Stile hat sich diese Erscheinung nur im Bayrisch-Österreichischen, weniger weit in Teilen des Thüringischen und im Wallischen entwickelt; nur in Zwischenstufen ist sie im Lausitzischen und Fränkischen bemerkbar. Auf dem mit unserer Erscheinung parallel laufenden Gebiete der u-Vokalisierung haben wir es gleicherweise mit Zwischenstufen zu tun. Doch muss diese in ihrer Tendenz zur Verdunklung des l-Lautes als germanisch bezeichnet werden. Urkunden des 13. Jahrhunderts enthalten bereits zahlreiche Beispiele der u-Schreibung,<sup>6</sup> und in die holländische Sprache ist diese schon früh eingedrungen. Bei der i-Vokalisierung jedoch liegen die Verhältnisse nicht so klar.

<sup>3</sup> Über Vorgang, Zwischenstufen, landschaftliche Verbreitung und Herkunft dieser Erscheinung siehe C. Selmer, "Velarization and u-Vocalization of l in German Dialects," PMLA XLVIII, 220-244.

<sup>4</sup> Der Zirkumflex deutet Palatalisierung an.

<sup>5</sup> Ich vermeide absichtlich den Ausdruck i-Epenthese, da einerseits die Ansichten über die Wirkungsweise und Zwischenstufen derselben sich in zwar kleinen, für diese Arbeit aber bedeutenden Merkmalen unterscheiden und da andererseits meinen Schlüssen durch die Annahme eines postkonsonantischen i beengende Schranken gezogen wären. Der Ausdruck Palatalisierung oder Mouillierung scheint mir eindeutiger zu sein.

<sup>6</sup> Vergl. C. Selmer, op. cit., pp. 241, 242.

3. Wir haben es hier mit Dialekten und Mundarten zu tun, die erst in der jüngsten Zeit einem eingehenden Studium unterworfen werden, da sie ein neues, fast unbearbeitetes Feld der Sprachwissenschaft darstellen. Es steht fest, dass es schon immer Dialekte gab<sup>7</sup> und dass diese älter sind als unsere Schriftsprache.<sup>8</sup> Die i-Vokalisierung konnte, ungleich der u-Vokalisierung, in keine der jetzt existierenden Schriftsprachen eindringen, da sie in den in Betracht kommenden Gegenden nicht gebraucht wurde. Sie konnte auch unmöglich das am Ende der Pergamentperiode sich bildende Neuhochdeutsch beeinflussen,<sup>9</sup> da sie in den ausschlaggebenden Faktoren eben nicht vorhanden war, weder in der Sprache Luthers noch in der der Kanzleien. Selbst wenn sie vorhanden gewesen wäre, wäre sie, da nur den ungebildeten Volksschichten eigen, nicht geschrieben worden. Auch noch gegenwärtig werden stark dialektisch klingende Aussprache und Form merklich von der verallgemeinernden Schriftsprache verdrängt, wenn auch gewisse Merkmale der Artikulation und besonders der Intonation nie verschwinden werden. Selbst der alte Wortschatz muss leiden, wenn uralte Wörter<sup>10</sup> als "geschert" und bäuerlich und deshalb verachtungswürdig gelten. Ausserdem wurden von Schreibern, selbst von Dialektschreibern der Gegenwart, die Laute von Dialekten nicht immer in ihrer richtigen Färbung schriftlich wiedergegeben. Wenn schon das Englische in Amerika stark verschiedene Färbung aufweist (Norden: Süden), wenn selbst die Sprache der Gebildeten eine stärkere quantitative und eine feine qualitative Veränderung, z.B. im Verkehr des Lehrers mit seinesgleichen, Schülern, Freunden,

<sup>7</sup> Beweise, dass es mhd. Mundarten gab, bringt A. Socin, Schriftsprache und Dialekte im Dt. nach Zeugn. alter und neuer Zeit (Heilbronn, 1888), p. 116.

<sup>8</sup> A. Pfalz, "Grundsätzliches zur dt. Mundartenforschung," Germ. Forschungen, Festschrift (1925), p. 223: "Dass eine ununterbrochene lebendige Sprachtradition unsere heutigen Mundarten mit einer in unserer Heimat wirklich in alt- und mittelhochdt. Zeit gesprochenen Sprache verbindet, ist unleugbar."

<sup>9</sup> Der Codex Germanicus Monacensis, fol. 107<sup>v</sup> vom Jahre 1435 weist folgende merkwürdige Form auf: des heliff vns. . . . Solche Beispiele liessen sich wohl vermehren, doch ist nur ein verschwindend kleiner Teil des Sprachschatzes der ausgehenden Pergamentperiode herausgegeben.

<sup>10</sup> Man denke z. B. im bayrischen Dialekt an das jetzt aussterbende pfoat für Hemd, worüber Hirt (Etym. der nhd. Sprache [1921], p. 227) sagt: "In alte Zeit geht zurück das got. paida, mhd. pfeit 'Gewand,' wovon bayr.—öst. pfeidler (entlehnt aus gr. paidon)." Oder man denke an die Namen für die Wochentage, von denen E. Kranzmayer (Die Namen der Wochentage in den Maa. von Bayern und Ost [Wien, 1929], p. 72) sagt: "Unsere Wochentagsnamen gehen auf eine ältere Stufe des Vulgarlateins und Vulgargriechischen zurück als die modernen röm. und griech. Namen selbst." So z. B. wird das seltener werdende "Ergetag" für Dienstag schon von Berthold von Regensburg (1250) gebraucht. Auch die ältesten mhd. Benediktinerregeln weisen diese und sogar noch ältere Formen auf. (Cf. C. Selmer, "MHG Transl. of the Reg. S. Benedicti," The eight Oldest Versions, The Mediaeval Acad. of America [Cambridge, Mass., 1933], pp. 141, 143, 180, 218, 220, 293, 296.)

Arbeitern, oder Kindern, zutagetreten lässt, um wieviel mehr muss dann im individuelleren Mittelalter der Dialekt vorgeherrscht haben, zur Zeit einer starken Unbelesenheit, als noch keine sprachverallgemeinernde Schule Bildung vermittelte. Selbst in unserer ganz verallgemeinernden Schriftsprache der Gegenwart, vermittelt durch Schule und Fremdenverkehr, ist es bei Gebildeten, die korrekt nach der "Buhnensprache" sprechen, nicht schwer, sie landschaftlich zu bestimmen. Keinem Zweifel unterliegt es ferner, dass seltener werdende Dialektformen, wie z.B. im Bayrischen die Dualformen<sup>11</sup> oder die alten Konjunktive der schwachen Konjugation auf -at(e)<sup>12</sup> sehr alt sind. Von früh gesprochenen Dialekten berichtet uns auch Hugo von Trimberg.<sup>13</sup> Hätte man damals phonetisch-dialektisch schreiben wollen, so hätte sich ganz von selbst die Schwierigkeit ergeben, gewisse Laute wie z.B. unser l nach Klang und Artikulationsstelle als stimmhaften oder stimmlosen, dentalen, alveolaren, palatalen, semivelaren oder velaren Laut schriftlich wiederzugeben.<sup>14</sup> Wir können also von einem mittelalterlichen Schreiber unmöglich verlangen, dass er uns—falls in diesen vokalisierenden Dialekten überhaupt geschrieben wurde, was im Wallischen und Lausitzischen nur in sehr beschränktem Masse der Fall gewesen sein kann—in unserem Falle ein palatales, palatalisiertes oder vokalisiertes l phonetisch bezeichnete.<sup>15</sup> Wenn wir uns schon streiten, wie die Sprache Schillers, Goethes und Wielands klang, um wieviel weniger wissen wir von der Sprache Luthers oder Walthers von der Vogelweide. Denn der Laut vergeht, nur das Schriftbild besteht. Wir erwarten von einem mittelalterlichen Schreiber auch nicht, dass er uns seine Werke in derjenigen Sprache hinterlässt, die damals als unfein betrachtet wurde, also in der Sprache der Ungebildeten und Bauern, bei denen aber gerade die uns interessierende Erscheinung, vielleicht in einem Zwischenstadium oder schon vokalisiert,<sup>16</sup> zutage

<sup>11</sup> Z.B. z̄s (ihr), z̄nk (euch).

<sup>12</sup> Z. B. chundat=got. **kunþidēdi*.

<sup>13</sup> Vers 22253 ff. (Ausg. Ehrismann, p. 220): Swer tiutsche wil eben tihten, / Der muoz sin herze rihlen / Uf manigerleie spräche: / Swer wēnt daz die von Ache / Reden als die Franken, / Dem suln die miuse danken. / Swāben ir worter spallent, / Die Franken ein teil sie vallent, / Die Beier si zezzerrent, / Die Düringe si uf sperrent, / Die Saksen si bezuckent, / Die Rīnlūte si verdruckent, / Die Weterēiber si wūrgent, etc.

<sup>14</sup> Man denke an das bayrische Schibboleth "Laibltheig" (loawidoag), dessen Aussprache durch Norddeutsche stets grosse Heiterkeit auslöst. Ebenso ist es, wenn ein Süddeutscher sich bemüht, das bekannte sächsische "Mein Gudester" auszusprechen.

<sup>15</sup> Auch im Englischen finden wir nur einen einzigen l-Laut geschrieben, obwohl wir dort ein alveolares l (wie in land) und ein semi-velares (wie in hall) erkennen können. Nur in den sogenannten "funny pictures" findet man gelegentlich die korrekte Schreibung des fast völlig vokalisiertes Lautes (he-u-p für help). Ob das von Daniel Jones zum allgemeinen Gebrauche empfohlene dentale l in allen Stellungen von den breiten Volksmassen diesseits und jenseits der Atlantik je beachtet werden wird, ist mehr als fraglich.

<sup>16</sup> In dieser Hinsicht sagt auch J. Schatz, Altbair. Gram. (1907), p. 90: "Aus den Schrei-

trat. Die Sprache der unteren Schichten wurde damals im Mittelalter ebenso sehr verachtet und vernachlässigt, wie sie jetzt erforscht und geachtet wird. Wir wissen fernerhin durch die neueste Forschung, dass früher mehrere Sprachschichten nebeneinander existierten, wie z.B. die vielumstrittene Schriftsprache, Umgangssprache, Herrensprache, Bauernsprache usw. Auf welche der als weniger fein angesehenen Sprachen die Palatalisierung und Vokalisierung zurückgeht, lässt sich nicht feststellen, um so weniger, als weder Sprache noch Erscheinung geschrieben wurden. Wir wissen auch von Hartmann von Aue, dass er grobe, "dörperliche" Ausdrücke vermied. In der Gegenwart werden palatalisierte oder vokalisierte Ausdrücke auch nur mehr von Volksstämmen und Volksschichten benutzt, die nicht als stark neuerungssüchtig angesehen werden, wie von den bayrischen Bauern und den in den Bergen eingeschlossenen Bewohnern von Wallis. Um so eher dürfen wir deshalb ein hohes Alter für unsere Erscheinung annehmen. Erfreulicherweise stehen uns auch Belege zur Verfügung, die sich aus der frühen, deutschen Kolonialzeit her ergeben. Es ist eine anerkannte Tatsache,<sup>17</sup> dass die Siebenbürger Sachsen, die im 12. Jahrhundert aus rheinischen Gegenden auswanderten, heutzutage dieselbe mouillierende Erscheinung aufweisen wie die Franken im Rheinland. Diese muss also schon im 12. Jahrhundert in ihrer jetzigen oder in einer verwandten Form vorhanden gewesen sein.<sup>18</sup> Auch die Dialekte anderer, z.B. von Bayern aus besiedelter Kolonien und Sprachinseln dürften davon Zeugnis geben, obwohl sie geographisch nicht so weit geschieden sind wie die obengenannten Dialekte und an eine spätere Übernahme unter Umständen gedacht werden konnte.

4. Es dürfte mit nicht unbedeutenden Schwierigkeiten verbunden sein, die der Vokalisierung zugrundeliegende Ursache zu ergründen. Die Mouillierung<sup>19</sup> ist natürlich nur das Endresultat einer aus mehreren Stadien bestehenden Bewegung, auch Palatalisierung genannt, die durch immer stärkere Annäherung der l-Artikulation an den Gaumen in das Gebiet des i-Lautes hinüberleitet. Unsere erste Aufgabe wird es deshalb sein zu untersuchen, ob eine solche Tendenz als germanisch angesprochen werden kann.

Es lässt sich kein Beweis erbringen, dass Palatalisierung als eine natürliche, in der Natur und somit in der Lautentwicklung der deutschen Bungen im Altbairischen kann man nicht erkennen, ob im Mittelbairischen die heutige Spaltung der l-Laute schon in altbairischer Zeit vorhanden war."

<sup>17</sup> Vgl. dazu R. Huss, Vergleich. Lautlehre des Siebenburg. Moselfrk. Rip. mit den moselfrz. und wallon. Maa. Diss. (1908), p. 45, und O. Behaghel, Gesch. der dt. Sprache (1928), p. 171. Ferner A. Scheiner, "Die Ma. der burzenl. Sachsen," Dt. Dialektgeogr., xviii, 80.

<sup>18</sup> Vgl. O. Weise, "Zur Palatal im Fränkischen," ZfdMaa, 1910, p. 372.

<sup>19</sup> Nach O. Bremer sind mouillierte Laute solche, bei denen sich die Zunge in grösserer Längsausdehnung dem Munddache anschmiegt als bei den gewöhnlichen.

Stämme liegende Erscheinung zu betrachten ist. Wäre sie das, müsste sie uns als ein besonderes Kennzeichen in den deutschen Dialekten oft entgegentreten. Das ist aber nicht der Fall. Wir haben zwar ein verwandtes Gebiet, das des Umlauts, in dem die Vokale unter gewissen Bedingungen hohergehoben werden. Es ist jedoch eine umstrittene Frage, ob man den Umlaut wie auch die Konsonantenverschiebung als eine ausschliesslich germanische Tendenz betrachten darf.

Zunächst spricht die Mischungslehre gegen eine rein germanische Tendenz dieser Erscheinung. Alle Laute eines Wortes stehen in einem Zusammenhange. Sie fliessen ineinander, erleichtern oder erschweren einander die Artikulation. Wir können hauptsächlich zwei einander entgegengesetzte Arten der Lautverbindung beobachten, fortschreitende und vollkommene Mischung.<sup>20</sup> Die erstere erlaubt das Einsetzen eines Lautes erst dann, wenn der vorhergehende Laut bereits in seiner Artikulation vollendet ist. Keine Zwischenstufe erleichtert den Übergang. Diese fortschreitende Mischung gilt besonders als dem Deutschen eigen.<sup>21</sup> Die letztere erfolgt dann, wenn sich der nachfolgende Laut bereits beim Artikulieren des vorausgehenden Lautes bemerkbar macht. Die Mischung tritt also dann ein, wenn der betreffende Laut eingesetzt wird und nicht erst dann, wenn er aufhört zu klingen. Diese Art Mischung ist nichtgermanischen Sprachen eigen.<sup>22</sup> Unter Anwendung eines l-haltigen Beispiels ergäbe sich fol. Unterschied in der Aussprache des Wortes ali:

- a. Fortschreitende Mischung: a-l-i, wobei, wie im Deutschen, ein alveolares l gesprochen wird.
- b. Vollkommene Mischung: a-li-i, wobei die Aussprache des i vorausgenommen wird und das l deshalb in seinem alveolaren Charakter beeinträchtigt wird. In diesem Falle hätten wir also bereits die Grundlage für das Palatalisieren.

Bei der vollkommenen Mischung sehen wir also die bei unserer Erscheinung entstehenden Zwischenstufen,<sup>23</sup> wie ĭ und jĭ. Die sich dabei ergebenden Formen wären nun:

<sup>20</sup> Vgl. Paul, Grdr. der Germ. Phil., E. Sievers, Sprachgesch., I, "Phonetik," p. 301.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid.: "Diese ist im Deutschen sehr gewöhnlich, z.B. bei Konsonanten, die zwischen Vokalen von konträrer Artikulation (z.B. velaren und palatalen) stehen."

<sup>22</sup> Ibid.: "Diese Weise ist z.B. in den slavischen Sprachen sehr verbreitet. . . . Übrigens verhalten sich die verschiedenen Sprachen in Beziehung auf die Palatalisierung verschieden. Die modernen germanischen Sprachen kennen ausgeprägte Palatalisierung nur in verhältnismässig seltenen Fällen, während sie in den slavischen Sprachen in weitestem Umfange herrscht. Dass ihr Gebiet im Germanischen früher ausgedehnter gewesen ist, lehrt z.B. der Umlaut, der nur durch vorausgehende Palatalisierung zu erklären ist."

<sup>23</sup> Vgl. C. Selmer, "Palatalization," etc., p. 125.

1. āli, bei Palatalisierung, wobei das l-Element, allerdings nicht das alveolare, sondern das palatale, gewahrt bleibt.
2. a<sup>h</sup>ji (aj<sup>h</sup>li), wobei das aufstrebende i-Element das l schon zur Hälfte verdrängt hat.
3. aji, bei Vokalisierung, wobei das l-Element zugunsten des i vollständig verdrängt wurde und reine Vokalisierung eingesetzt hat.

Da unsere Erscheinung also, wie gezeigt, auf vollkommener Mischung beruht und nicht, wie beim Deutschen zu erwarten wäre, auf fortschreitender, müssen wir eine rein germanische Tendenz<sup>24</sup> verneinen. Sie weist auf nichtgermanischen Ursprung hin.

Ferner widerspricht Palatalisierung einer rein germanischen Tendenz, da sie eine Erweichung der Artikulation darstellt. Die allgemeine phonetische Tendenz des Germanischen zielt jedoch auf eine Erstarkung der Artikulation hin.<sup>25</sup>

Auch die germanische phonetische Basis ist einer Erscheinung wie der unsrigen abhold. Denn die anerkannte Tendenz des Germanischen neigt zu Extremen und schärfster Muskellanspannung.<sup>26</sup> Besonders wenn wir die Verwandtschaft des späteren Stadiums der Palatalisierung (j mit frikativer Beigabe) mit den Rillenlauten ins Auge fassen, werden wir uns wiederum des Ungermanischen in unserer Erscheinung bewusst. Denn Rillenlaute stellen ein Charakteristikum nichtgermanischer Dialekte dar.<sup>27</sup> Dazu kommt, dass unsere Erscheinung nur in jetzigen oder

<sup>24</sup> Es wäre in diesem Zusammenhange sehr verlockend zu behaupten, dass die den Mischungen zugrundeliegende Ursache auf psychologischem Gebiete zu suchen sei, dass also die Germanen ihre Laute langsam und bedachtig verbanden, dass dagegen Völker wie die Slaven und Romanen mit ihrem ungeduldigeren Temperament sich keine Zeit dazu liessen und die Artikulation von Lauten in der Aussprache vorausnahmen. Diese Theorie, die dieselben Gefahren in sich birgt wie die "Tragheitstheorie," wurde auf einem weniger soliden und bedeutend subjektiveren Boden stehen.

<sup>25</sup> E. Prokosch, Sounds and History of the German Language (1916), p. 125: "It is difficult to prove in detail just where the Celtic and Slavic influences are to be sought. There is one fact, however, that greatly alleviates the difficulty of the task, namely the fact that the Germanic phonetic tendencies happen to be diametrically opposite to both the Celtic and Slavic tendencies, the former going in the direction of strengthened, both of the latter, in the direction of weakened articulation. Therefore, wherever we find evidences of weakening tendencies in the Germanic dialects or in the German standard language, there is at least a considerable probability of foreign influence." Ausserdem p. 111: "Phonologically, the Pre-Germanic language is characterized by the predominance of a remarkably uniform tendency prevailing in Indo-European times and gradually disappearing thru race mixture. . . . However, it was only during that indefinite period that we call the "Germanic time" and only among the German people, that these tendencies were followed consistently and completely."

<sup>26</sup> Idem, "Die Stabilität des Germ. Konsonantensystems," Idg. Forsch., xxxiii, 377.

<sup>27</sup> Idem, Sounds and History, etc., p. 128: "The fact that rill formation is absolutely not in keeping with the general habits of Germanic articulation, but is a very common früheren Grenzdialekten vorkommt, also in Dialekten, die durch ihre exzentrische Lage in ihrer Aussprache im Laufe der letzten Jahrhunderte von deutschen Inlandsdialekten hatten beeinflusst werden können. Wenn also der Anstoss zu unserer Bewegung nicht vom Deutschen gekommen ist und gekommen sein kann, dann muss er irgendwoher von aussen stammen.

5. Seit dem Entstehen der vergleichenden Sprachwissenschaft beschäftigen sich bedeutende Gelehrte mit der Frage eines fremden Einflusses auf die deutsche, bzw. germanische Sprache. Besonders in den letzten Jahrzehnten haben sich die einen solchen Einfluss bejahenden Theorien in einer Weise gemehrt, dass man sich nicht wunderte, auch bedeutende Skeptiker auftauchen zu sehen, die einer Überschätzung fremden Einflusses, besonders des Keltischen, Einhalt zu bieten versuchten.<sup>28</sup> Doch gibt es immerhin zahlreiche Beispiele fremden Einflusses, die von der gesamten Gelehrtenwelt ohne weiteres angenommen werden. Besonders auf dem Gebiete des quantitativen Einflusses auf den deutschen Wortschatz sehen wir in sehr vielen Beispielen unverkennbar fremden Einfluss vorliegen.<sup>29</sup> Wir haben zweifelsohne keltische, romanische, slavische und andere Bestandteile im germanischen und deutschen Wortschatze, die nur durch frühere Berührung mit fremdem Sprachgute zu erklären sind. Weniger verarbeitet ist das Gebiet fremden Einflusses in qualitativer Hinsicht. Es scheint hier noch vieles zu geben, was erst durch die Verbindung mit anderen Wissenschaften, wie Geschichte und Prähistorie, gelöst werden wird. Der qualitative Einfluss hat schon früh die Sprachpsychologen interessiert. An ihn glaubt besonders W. Wundt,<sup>30</sup> wenn er von einer Vermischung grösseren Stils eines nichtgermanischen Stammes mit einem germanischen Stamme spricht. Der sprachlich unterliegende fremde Teil nimmt dabei die Grammatik und den Wortschatz des obernden Teiles an, überträgt aber seine Spracheigentümlichkeiten auf phenomenon in the Romance languages that originated in Celtic soil, . . . leads to the suspicion that the transition . . . was due to Celtic influence.”

---

<sup>28</sup> Zu ihnen gehört besonders Gustav Neckel (Germanen und Kelten, 1929) der sich bemüht die Germanen-Kelten Frage in zweifelhaften Fällen immer in deutschfreundlichem Sinne zu lösen. Der dem Keltentum von ihm zugestandene Einfluss ist nicht bedeutend. Es dürfte deshalb sicher nicht als radikal erscheinen, wenn sich dieser Aufsatz des öfteren gerade deswegen auf diese wenigen, aber dafür als gesichert zu betrachtenden Zugeständnisse stützt. Daher auch die öfteren Zitate aus Neckel in den folgenden Seiten. Ein Leichtes wäre es natürlich, den fremden Ursprung unserer Erscheinung auf Grund der Forschungen von Gelehrten wie S. Feist, H. Schuchardt, F. Kauffmann, A. Meillet und H. Hirt nachzuweisen, die stärkere Vermischung und stärkeren fremden Einfluss annehmen.

<sup>29</sup> Beispiele dafür finden sich konservativ zusammengetragen in Rudolf Much, Di. Stammeskunde (Wien, 1920).

<sup>30</sup> W. Wundt, Volkerpsychologie (Leipzig, 1916), I, 405, 495, 660 u. a.

die neuangenommene Sprache.<sup>31</sup> Dieser Einfluss muss sich also qualitativ, d.h. in der Aussprache der neuen Wörter bemerkbar machen. Es werden somit alte zugrundeliegende Sprechenden auf die neuerworbene Sprache übertragen und dadurch die neuen Laute auf Grund der alten Sprachgewohnheit umgeändert. Wenn wir nun den Grund der Palatalisierung und Vokalisierung, den wir ja nicht aus dem Germanischen ableiten können, mittels einer Sprachvermischung erklären wollen, müssen wir zunächst zeigen, dass in denjenigen Dialekten, in denen sie jetzt noch existiert, eine Verschmelzung stattgefunden hat und dass das fremde, absorbierte Element in der Richtung unserer Erscheinung zu wirken fähig war,<sup>32</sup> was allerdings wegen des Zurückgehens in die graue Vorzeit und der Knappheit brauchbaren Materials beträchtliche Schwierigkeiten bietet.

6. Bei der Vermischung der obengenannten deutschen Stämme vor und zur Zeit der Völkerwanderung können nur drei grössere Völkergruppen in Betracht kommen, die wir auf diese Möglichkeit hin prüfen müssen.

A. Slavischer Einfluss.—Es ist nur Weniges und Unsicheres, was wir aus einer vorchristlichen Vermischung von Slaven und Germanen wissen, besonders was sich aus Flussnamen (Weichsel) und Spuren der germanischen Lautverschiebung erschliessen lässt. Eine etwas stärkere Vermischung deutscher Stämme mit slavischen ergibt sich im späteren Mittelalter, die allerdings in ihren Einzelheiten noch stark im Dunkel liegt. Doch fand diese Vermischung eher auf niederdeutschem und mitteldeutschem Gebiete (einschliesslich Nordbayerns) statt, weniger auf oberdeutschem. Wir werden also auf diese Frage beim Lausitzischen und Thüringischen zurückkommen müssen. Das Rheinfränkische und Wallische scheiden, da ja eine Vermengung in grösserem Stile erforderlich ist, von vorneherein aus. Auch das Bayrische muss hier ausscheiden. Es ist ja eine Tatsache, dass besonders in Nordbayern eine Vermischung mit slavi-

<sup>31</sup> Ein modernes Beispiel dieses Vorganges sehen wir beim (sud)deutschen Immigrantentum in Amerika, der seine Sprechereigentümlichkeiten, z.B. die stimmlosen Medien, auf das Englische überträgt. Nur haben wir es hier natürlich mit einer Minorität zu tun. Immerhin ist es unausbleiblich, dass sich das amerikanische Englisch wegen der Völkervermischung anders auszuwirken bestrebt wie das britische Englisch. Von einem verwandten Beispiel spricht Rud. Lenz (Zs. f. rom. Phil., 1893, p. 308), wenn er sagt: "Das chilenische Spanisch ist wesentlich Spanisch mit araukanischen Lauten." Dazu bemerkt W. Streitberg (Germ.-Rom. Monatsschrift, I (1909), 4): "Diese Erscheinung erklärt sich daraus, dass in Chile ein starker Prozentsatz von Spaniern eingewandert ist; infolgedessen haben die Eingebornen ihre Sprache aufgegeben, ihre Artikulationsgewohnheit, ihr Lautsystem aber haben sie beibehalten."

<sup>32</sup> Unter dieser Bedingung würde auch G. Neckel (op. cit., p. 51) das Vordringen der germ. Lautverschiebung aus dem sprachlich gemischten Süden Deutschlands zugeben, wenn er sagt: "Überzeugend wäre dies, wenn das Keltische die phonetische Bedingung erfüllte."

schen Elementen stattgefunden hat,<sup>33</sup> aber ein slavischer Einfluss kommt hier schon deshalb nicht in Frage, da sich in Nordbayern unsere Erscheinung nur in ganz geringem Masse zeigt. Der vokalisierende Mittelpunkt liegt südlich der Donau. Auch käme das Tschechische schon deshalb nicht in Betracht, weil es die Mouillierung des l nicht (mehr) kennt. Man könnte eher von einer Beeinflussung des Tschechischen durch das Deutsche sprechen, wenn man an den Umlaut und das sogenannte mittlere "deutsche l" denkt.<sup>34</sup> An eine Vermischung in früher Zeit im böhmischen Talkessel mit den Markomannen-Bayern ist wiederum nicht zu denken, da diese schon um 500 A.D. abzogen, um von andern germanischen Stämmen dort abgelöst zu werden. Erst als auch diese abgezogen waren, stand das Land den bedeutend später nachrückenden Slaven offen.<sup>35</sup>

B. Romanischer Einfluss.—Dieser Einfluss könnte weniger im Lausitzischen und Thüringischen, eher im Wallischen, Fränkischen und Bayrischen stattgefunden haben. Und doch wissen wir, besonders im letzteren Falle, nichts von einer Vermischung in grosserem Stile. Denn die wenigen Soldaten, die nach Zurückziehung der römischen Garnisonen in Bayern verblieben, konnten unmöglich diese Erscheinung bewirken. Es fragt sich ausserdem, in welcher starkem Masse das Lateinische fähig gewesen wäre, unsere Erscheinung hervorzurufen. Es unterschied zwischen zwei l-Lauten, dem sonus tenuis oder exilis im Wortanlaut und in der Gruppe ll, und dem sonus plenus oder pinguis zwischen Vokalen. Im Altfranzösischen begegnen wir in der Verbindung -li- bereits der Palatalisierung, z.B. Lat. salire > afrz. saillir (worauf im Neufrz. volle Vokalisierung und Verschleifung über die Spirans y stattfand). Dafür haben wir in manchen Gegenden des romanischen Gebietes Vokalisierung in den Gruppen pl, cl, fl am Wortanfang, die aber ihrerseits wiederum im Deutschen in dieser Stellung überhaupt nicht vorhanden ist. Man konnte schon bei der auf einer germanischen Tendenz beruhenden u-Vokalisierung sehen, dass diese Anfangsgruppen bedeutenden Widerstand hervorriefen.<sup>36</sup> Es scheint, dass die der fremden Erscheinung

<sup>33</sup> So sollen die Narisker nach A. Vierling, "Die slav. Ansiedlungen in Baiern," Beitr. zur Anthropol. und Urgesch. Bayerns, xiv (1902), 190, einen Einfluss auf die Bajuvarier ausgeübt haben.

<sup>34</sup> Vgl. F. Miklosich, Vergl. Lautlehre der slav. Sprachen, p. 502: "Aber das Czechische hat in den meisten Teilen seines Gebietes nur das mittlere, deutsche l: das Slovak. scheidet l und ḷ." Das Eindringen des deutschen l-Lautes verlegt M. in die Zeit Hussens; als Beispiele gibt er: lyko > liko, tobolka > tobolka.

<sup>35</sup> Vgl. I. Schránil, Slav. Grundriss der Vorgesch. Böhmens und Mährens (1928), p. 273: "Um die Wende des 6. und 7. Jahrh. findet also in den böhmischen Ländern die germanische Kolonisation ihren Abschluss."

<sup>36</sup> Vgl. C. Selmer, Velarization, etc., pp. 222, 223.

sich entgegenstimmende stärkere Tendenz des Germanischen, die Anfangslaute mit ziemlicher Vehemenz<sup>37</sup> einzuführen, ein Stimmloswerden des l-Lautes verursachte (z.B. in dem Worte "Platz" ist das l stimmlos), was natürlich eine Vokalisierung unmöglich machte.<sup>38</sup> Doch ist es immerhin merkwürdig, dass z.B. im Bayrischen die Mouillierung viel weiter entwickelt ist, als im Romanischen. Auch der Gedanke, dass in vielen hier zuständigen romanischen Sprachen in phonetischer Hinsicht an eine keltische Beimischung zu denken ist,<sup>39</sup> wird uns die Endlösung nicht im Romanischen suchen lassen.

C. Keltischer Einfluss.—Vermischung mit keltischen Stämmen ist durchaus möglich und auch wahrscheinlich. Gerade die Verwandtschaft des Keltischen mit den übrigen Sprachen, besonders dem Germanischen ist mehr in Einzelheiten untersucht worden, wobei sich gegenüber den andern idg. Dialekten eine merkwürdige Übereinstimmung, besonders im Wortschatze feststellen liess.<sup>40</sup> Man hat auf Grund der vielen Bestrebungen sogar von einer erneuten "Keltomanie" gesprochen, die viele unerklärliche Phänomene auf keltischen Einfluss zurückführen wollte. Der etwas lieblos klingende Name hat doch nur den Zweck, Forscher in ihren Zusammenhangsbeziehungen vorsichtig sein zu lassen, ohne jedoch die auf ernster Forscherarbeit beruhenden und diese Frage bejahenden Thesen als unwissenschaftlich bezeichnen zu wollen. Männer wie Kluge, Feist, Hirt und Much glaubten deshalb auch auf Grund ihrer diesbezüglichen Forschungen Keltisch und Germanisch einander bedeutend näher bringen zu können. Dass ein quantitativer keltischer Einfluss im Germanischen vorliegt, wird von niemandem bezweifelt. Er kann daher kommen, dass die Kelten in der vorchristlichen Periode den Germanen gegenüber die kulturell Gebenden, vielleicht auch die politisch Herrschenden waren. Hierher gehört natürlich die beträchtliche Menge von Lehnwörtern im

<sup>37</sup> Vgl. E. Prokosch, Sounds and History, etc., p. 49: "The muscles of the tongue are, in general, inclined to be tense, a fact which largely prevents the rill formation so common in Romance and Slavic tongues. The energetic expiration makes the language rather averse to a distinct voicing of consonants."

<sup>38</sup> Dieser Gedanke legt die Vermutung nahe, dass sich in denjenigen romanischen Dialekten, in denen diese Anfangsgruppen unverändert sind, wegen einer stärkeren Vehemenz in der Einführung des Wortanlautes eine dem Germanischen mindestens ähnliche Tendenz zeigt. Auffallend ist im Französischen z.B. blanc, clair, fleur gegenüber Italienischem bianco, chiaro, fiore. Sollte man in der Isle de France an eine stärkere Vermischung mit Germanen, bzw. Westfranken und hiemit an germanischen Einfluss zu denken haben? Über germ. Einfluss siehe auch U. T. Holmes and E. Vaughn, "Germanic Influence on Old French Syntax," Language, ix, 162-170.

<sup>39</sup> Über die auffallende Ähnlichkeit zwischen Gallisch und Lateinisch und qualitativen Einfluss im Lautstande berichtet unter anderen E. W. Windisch, Gall. Gram., I, 392.

<sup>40</sup> Betreffs der jüngsten Zusammenstellung auf Grund von Walde-Pokornys Vgl. Wb. der idg. Spr. siehe Geo S. Lane, "The Germano-Celtic Vocabulary," Lang., ix, 244-264.

Sprachschatze, sodann die keltischen Fluss-, Gebirgs- und Ortsnamen, welche gerade in Süddeutschland die germanischen Bezeichnungen beträchtlich an Zahl übertreffen. Auch G. Neckel, der zweifelhafte Fälle immer in germanenfreundlichem Sinne zu lösen bestrebt ist, macht hier bedeutende Zugeständnisse. Was uns jedoch besonders interessieren muss, ist die Frage, ob das Keltische in qualitativer Hinsicht überhaupt fähig war, eine andere Sprache zu beeinflussen. Zeigte das Keltische Mouillierung oder eine ähnliche Erscheinung? Erst spät fliessen die Quellen, die bei dieser Frage eine Antwort zu geben versprechen. Gerade deswegen ist auch das Altkeltische nicht so völlig durchforscht und steht nicht auf so sicheren Grundlagen wie die germanischen Dialekte. Dass wir erst mit einer der Zukunft vorbehaltenen Bereicherung der altkeltischen, bzw. keltoromanischen Studien einer endgültigen Lösung qualitativen Einflusses näher treten können, soll uns hier nicht entmutigen. Die Untersuchung des Keltischen wird uns schon deshalb interessieren, weil sich gerade für unseren Fall folgende Vorbedingungen für einen Einfluss feststellen lassen:

Zunächst sind es die keltischen Entsprechungen des l-Lautes, die uns mit ihrem al und il<sup>41</sup> aus der Sphäre des germanischen ul<sup>42</sup> weit wegführen. Ähnlich wie bei der Mouillierung zeigt sich also hier eine Vorliebe für die helle i-Färbung.<sup>43</sup> Es ist ganz undenkbar, dass die dunklen u-Entsprechungen des Germanischen in engerer Beziehung zur i-Vokalisierung stehen könnten als die keltischen i-Entsprechungen. Eine Vorliebe für die i-Färbung zeigt sich im Keltischen auch darin, dass z.B. im Altirischen beim Zusammentreffen von Konsonanten von verschiedener Färbung immer das mouillierende (i-)Timbre siegt.

Auffallend ist ferner, dass die Mouillierung auch im Keltischen eine nicht unbeträchtliche Rolle spielt und spielte. Pedersen berichtet, dass vom Anfang der Überlieferung bis heute im Irischen die mouillierten, d.h. an die Mundstellung eines i oder e angenäherte Aussprache der Konsonanten eine grosse Rolle spielte. Aus den zahlreichen Beispiele von Umlaut und Epenthese gehe aber hervor, dass die Mouillierung in einer älteren Periode im Brittanischen eine wichtige Rolle gespielt haben müsse.<sup>44</sup> Somit ist also in diesem Falle eine Möglichkeit der Beein-

<sup>41</sup> Vgl. H. Pedersen, Vergleich. Lautlehre der kelt. Sprachen (1909), p. 43: "Im Kelt. ist bei idg g, l das i-Timbre durchgeführt.

<sup>42</sup> Siehe K. Brugmann, Grundriss der vergl. Gram. der idg Sprachen, I, 299.

<sup>43</sup> In dieser Hinsicht sagt H. Pedersen, op. cit., p. 144: "In den keltischen Sprachen ist das i-Timbre durchgedrungen, aber es gibt Überbleibsel des alten u-Timbre in den alten keltischen Sprachen, Falle, in denen wir statt li lu haben." Das i-Timbre ist also weit überwiegend Sollte das u-Timbre gar fremden Einfluss darstellen?

<sup>44</sup> Op. cit., p. 336.

flussung gegeben. Beispiele für Mouillierung im Irischen, Brittanischen, Bretonischen und Cornischen lassen sich in Menge erbringen.<sup>45</sup> Dabei müssen wir uns aber immer vergegenwärtigen, dass gerade keine Unterschiede von Palatalisierung und Mouillierung, also auch unsere Zwischenstufen, schriftlich mindestens unvollkommen, wenn überhaupt, ausgedrückt wurden.<sup>46</sup> Leider können wir auch, so sehr es erwünscht wäre, die im Keltischen vorhandenen lateinischen Fremd- und Lehnwörter<sup>47</sup> für unsere Arbeit nicht heranziehen. Mit Recht meint Pedersen, dass es bei der engen Verwandtschaft mit dem Lateinischen und den frühen Berührungen des Gallischen mit dem Lateinischen meist zweifelhaft sein muss, ob man es mit einer Entlehnung aus dem Lateinischen oder mit einem echten keltischen Wort oder nur einem sprachlich verwandten oder mit einem Grundwort für ein lateinisches zu tun hat. Auch muss man daran denken, dass ältere Entlehnungen später durch gelehrten Einfluss dem lateinischen Original ähnlicher gemacht wurden.

Ferner sehen wir, dass die Laute l, n, t, d in grossem Umfange palatalisiert und mouilliert werden, dass also gerade unsere Erscheinung im Keltischen vorhanden war. Das Hauptmittel zur Bezeichnung der Mouillierung im Altirischen ist ein i, um den affizierten Konsonanten zu bezeichnen.<sup>48</sup> Auch Umlaut, ein der Epenthese und Mouillierung verwandter Vorgang, tritt uns in zahlreichen Abarten entgegen.<sup>49</sup>

Fernerhin wissen wir, dass es z.B. im Irischen eine Vierheit von l-Lauten gab,<sup>50</sup> nämlich L, l, Ĺ, ĺ, also auch ein stark und ein schwächer mouilliertes l. Dieses Vorhandensein von mouillierten Lauten spricht unbedingt für eine Tendenz zum Mouillieren. Es ist dieselbe, die wir auch in den anfangs erwähnten deutschen Dialekten beobachten können, wenn auch in veränderter Fassung.

Dass eine Beeinflussung germanischer Laute durch Nichtgermanen im Bereich der Möglichkeit liegt gibt auch Neckel<sup>51</sup> zu, wenn er sagt: "Vielleicht sind die Zäpfchen-r und die stimmlosen Medien (Süddeutschland) Erbstücke aus der vorgermanischen Zeit Süddeutschlands. Aber dann sind sie auf dem Wege der Doppelsprachigkeit von den Germanen übernommen und in den Kinderstuben fortgepflanzt worden. . . . Möglich ist ferner, dass der erste Anstoss zur germanischen Lautver-

<sup>45</sup> Für die Bezeichnung und die zahlreichen Lautgesetze der Mouillierung (nomina abstracta, gen. sg. der a-Stämme etc.), op. cit., pp. 345, 469, 372 ff.

<sup>46</sup> Vgl. Julius Pokorny, Altir. Gram. (1925), p. 9: "Die lenierte Aussprache wird nur bei t, c, p bezeichnet, seit 840 auch bei s."

<sup>47</sup> Pedersen, op. cit., p. 190.

<sup>48</sup> Op. cit., p. 341.

<sup>49</sup> Op. cit., p. 356. Über die Lenition der Verschlusslaute siehe Julius Pokorny, op. cit., p. 81.

<sup>50</sup> Op. cit., p. 145; handelt auch von den Gesetzen, unter denen l mouilliert wird.

<sup>51</sup> Op. cit., p. 51.

schiebung in Süddeutschland geschah." Wenn wir also als Bedingung für fremden Einfluss in dem Hervorbringen der Mouillierung Doppelsprachigkeit annehmen dürfen, muss uns daran gelegen sein, eine geschichtliche Vermischung der die Mouillierung aufweisenden Volksstämme mit nichtgermanischen Stämmen zu beweisen. Dass ein Volk, das eine fremde Sprache annimmt, die Artikulation notwendig verändern muss, bedarf keines Beweises.<sup>52</sup> Je verschiedener die Sprachen, desto gewaltiger muss die Wirkung sein. Eine Vermischung fand in der grauen Vorzeit überall dort statt, wo die nach Süddeutschland vorrückenden Germanen auf keltische oder romanische Bevölkerung stiessen. Wo dies der Fall war, haben wir es mit Überbleibseln der letzteren und deshalb mit Mischbevölkerung zu tun. Es hat sogar keltische Sprachinseln in Süddeutschland bis tief in unsere Zeitrechnungsperiode herein gegeben.<sup>53</sup> Als Beispiel gilt auch das Fortleben des Mainnamens in seiner keltischen Form mit oi. Während im Norden Deutschlands germanische Flussnamen in der Mehrzahl sind, findet man in den südlichen Gegenden ein Vorwiegen allophyler und keltischer Namen, wie Neckar, Kocher, Isar, Ilz, Laber, Loisach, Naab, Tauber, Vils, Würm etc.<sup>54</sup> Ebenso ist es mit Gebirgsnamen wie Alpen, Taunus, Haardt und Spessart. Wenn auch die "Hall"-Orte (Hallein, Hallstadt, Halle, Reichenhall etc.) für uns wenig dienstbar sind, muss man doch wenigstens bei den "Walch"-Orten (wie See-, Strass-, Traun-, -stadt, -see und vielen mehr) an eine Vermischung mit Kelten oder Keltoromanen denken.<sup>55</sup> Der vor der Lautverschiebung entlehnte Name "Walchen" wurde eben wie "Alemannen" bei den Franzosen und "Sachsen" bei den Finnen, als pars pro toto für die Kelten gebraucht.<sup>56</sup> Selbst wenn die Walchen (nach Neckel) nur germanische Rückwanderer waren,<sup>57</sup> müssen sie durch ihre jahrhundertlange Verbundenheit mit den Galliern stark gallisiert gewesen sein, weshalb sie ja auch von den Germanen als "Fremdlinge" bezeichnet wurden. Wir

<sup>52</sup> Vgl. G. Neckel, op. cit., p. 129.

<sup>53</sup> Op cit, p. 25. Natürlich darf man hier nicht an die bis ins 15. Jahrhundert in österreich. und bayr. Klöstern lebenden Irländer denken. (Vgl. D. I. Binchy, "Irish Benedictines in Mediaeval Germany," Studies, An Irish Quart. Review, xviii, 194.)

<sup>54</sup> Vgl. R. Much, op. cit., p. 42.

<sup>55</sup> Von geringer Bedeutung nur können natürlich keltogermanische Namen sein, wie z B. Boiocalus, wenn auch zugegeben werden muss, dass die Überzahl keltischer Übernahmen gegenüber den romanischen der späteren Zeit eher an keltische Vermischung und ehemalige Überlegenheit denken lässt. (Vgl. E. T. Karsten, op. cit., p. 198.)

<sup>56</sup> Altnordisch Valir bezeichnet die Bewohner Nordfrankreichs.

<sup>57</sup> Nach Caesar die "Volcae Tectosages," die aus Gallien nach Germanien zogen. "Itaque ea, quae fertilissima sunt Germaniae loca circa Hercyniam silvam. . . . Volcae Tectosages occupaverunt atque ibi consederunt. Quae gens ad hoc tempus iis sedibus sese continet." (B.G. 6, 24.)

finden diese Bezeichnung auch bei Notker<sup>58</sup> und im Angelsächsischen.<sup>59</sup>

D. Keltoromanischer Einfluss.—Die Frage, ob keltischer oder romanischer oder keltoromanischer Einfluss vorliegt, ist schon deshalb nicht leicht zu lösen, weil Keltisch und Lateinisch einerseits seit früher Zeit nahe verwandt sind<sup>60</sup> und andererseits mit einer Verschmelzung zur Zeit des Anfangs der christlichen Zeitrechnung zu rechnen ist.<sup>61</sup> Wir wissen, dass gerade in dieser Periode eine Romanisierung der Kelten auf breiterer Grundlage erfolgte, die sich besonders in qualitativer Hinsicht auswirken musste. Über die Art der Vermengung und ihre sprachlichen Folgen sind wir jedoch vom romanischen Standpunkt aus nicht genügend unterrichtet. Wie oben vermerkt, zeigt aber das Lateinische selbst keine nennenswerte Anlage zum Mouillieren. Auch die romanischen Hauptsprachen weisen Mouillierung nur in den Verbindungen il oder li und zu einem ganz geringen Teil in den Kombinationen pl, cl, fl, auf. Im Keltischen zeigt sich dagegen eine Unmasse solcher Erscheinungen (siehe oben), so dass sie sogar ein Charakteristikum darstellen. Die Mouillierung könnte also niemals vom Lateinischen auf das Keltische übergegangen sein. Es liegt hier eher der Gedanke nahe, dass sie vom Keltischen vermittels Vermischung auf das Lateinische übertragen wurde, wenigstens in denjenigen romanischen Dialekten, die eine starke keltische Vermischung aufweisen. Natürlich können wir hier, ebensowenig wie in deutschen Dialekten, keine geschriebenen oder phonetisch angedeuteten Beweise der Palatalisierung verlangen, am allerwenigsten im Anfangsstadium dieser sich lang hinziehenden Entwicklung. Man denke hier auch an die Fälle der Nichtbezeichnung des Umlauts im Germanischen und Deutschen. Somit ist es bei unserer Frage nach der Herkunft der Mouillierung genauer, von keltoromanischem als von romanischem Einfluss zu sprechen, wo immer wir einen solchen feststellen sollten. Als weiterer Hinweis auf das Keltoromanische muss es betrachtet werden, wenn ein deutscher Dialekt dieselbe Erscheinung aufweist wie der benachbarte romanische (keltoromanische) Dialekt, worauf im Wallischen

<sup>58</sup> Er spricht von keltischen Ketzern und keltischen Knechten (walaha de stabulo), siehe P. Piper (ed.), II, 248.

<sup>59</sup> Z.B. swearte wealas und wonfeax weala.

<sup>60</sup> Vgl. H. Pedersen, op. cit., p. 1: "Deponens und Passiv, b-Futurum und andere Tempusbildungen und zahlreiche etymologische Einzeltatsachen bestätigen die genaue Zusammengehörigkeit der beiden Sprachzweige, die in Wirklichkeit nur einen, allerdings früh geteilten Doppelzweig bilden." Diese enge Verwandtschaft, die sich merkwürdiger Weise im Wortschatz am wenigsten nachweisen lässt, wurde von Marstrander angezweifelt. (Siehe "De l'unité italo-celtique," Norsk Tidsskrift for Sprogvidenskap, III, 241 ff.).

<sup>61</sup> Vgl. auch F. Kluge, Urgermanisch, p. 4: "Mit dem Keltischen bestehen schon charakteristischere Übereinstimmungen . . . , aber sie beruhen zum Teil auf der wohl nicht zu beanstandenden Tatsache, dass das Latein, das seinerseits mit dem Keltischen nahe verwandt ist, auch als nächster Verwandter des Germanischen zu halten ist."

und Fränkischen hingewiesen werden soll. Auch ein anderer Gedanke wird uns die Bevorzugung keltischen Einflusses gegenüber dem lateinischen glaubwürdiger machen, nämlich der, dass es sich beim lateinischen Einfluss auf das Deutsche nur um eine meist durch Handel und Verkehr hervorgerufene, äussere Berührung handelt, bei keltischer früher Vermischung aber um ein intimes Zusammenleben. Die Berührung der Germanen mit den Kelten<sup>62</sup> fällt ja auch schon viele Jahrhunderte vor Christus, während die mit den Romanen hauptsächlich in die nachchristlichen Jahrhunderte zu verlegen ist. Wertvollen Hinweis auf diese frühe Berührung mit dem Keltischen liefern uns die keltischen Lehnwörter, die der germanischen Lautverschiebung unterliegen.

E. Das Substrat.—Von einiger Bedeutsamkeit ist auch die Frage des Substrates. Wenn man mit den Verfechtern der Substrattheorie an eine Beeinflussung des Germanischen durch eine Urbevölkerung glaubt, könnte auch in dieser Hinsicht Einfluss angenommen werden. Wir konnten hier bezüglich Süddeutschlands, nämlich des Bayrischen und Wallischen, an das Rätische denken, das aber mit seinem Volkselement und seiner Herkunft noch in Dunkel gehüllt ist.<sup>63</sup> Da ferner unsere Erscheinung ja auch im Fränkischen vorkommt, kann man unmöglich hier solchen Einfluss vermuten. Ausserdem müsste dann eine alpine, allophyle Urrasse auch in den übrigen (alemannischen) Dialekten die gleiche oder wenigstens eine ähnliche Erscheinung hervorgerufen haben, was jedoch nicht der Fall ist.<sup>64</sup>

F. Rassenuntersuchungen.—Keine Lösung unserer Frage ist ferner von Untersuchungen über die Rassen zu erwarten. Die Virchowsche Schulkinderuntersuchung<sup>65</sup> stellt fest, dass der sogenannte reine Germanentyp (blond) in Norddeutschland in bedeutend höherem Prozentsatz vorzufinden ist als z.B. in Bayern. Daraufhin war man geneigt auf eine stärkere ungermanische Vermischung in Süddeutschland zu schliessen. Diese Untersuchungen bestätigen höchstens die Ansicht, dass der Süden Deutschlands stark gemischt ist.

7. Unsere letzte Aufgabe muss es nun sein, die Möglichkeit einer Ver-

<sup>62</sup> Diesbezüglich sagt auch O. Behaghel, Gesch. der dt. Sprache (1928), p. 9: "Ein keltischer Einfluss muss eher vor die Zeit des Sonderdaseins des Deutschen fallen."

<sup>63</sup> Die Räterforschung hat sich seit den Zeiten ihres Begründers L. Steub über Paulis, Stolzens und A. Waldes Illyrtheorie und über Ribezzos "herodotische Legende" zur gegenwertigen Theorie Paretis und P. Kretschmers von einer pelasgo-etruskoiden Unterschicht entwickelt.

<sup>64</sup> Wir haben auch Berichte über Alpengermanen, die sich in der Schweiz aufgehalten haben sollen: die Gaesaten und ihre Teilstämme, wie die Seduni, Dalitermi, Tulingi-Tylangii und Calucones, deren zeitliches Erscheinen jedoch unsicher ist (vielleicht 500 vor Chr.). Vgl. E. T. Karsten, op. cit., p. 82.

<sup>65</sup> Über den Prozentsatz der Vermischung vgl. G. Neckel, op. cit., p. 63.

mischung der oben genannten deutschen Dialekte mit fremden Volksstämmen, wie den Slaven, Kelten und Romanen geschichtlich zu untersuchen. Zuverlässige Quellen aus früher Zeit fließen spärlich und es wird in vielen Fällen der zukünftigen Geschichtsforschung vorbehalten sein, zu Endergebnissen auch in dieser Hinsicht zu gelangen. Doch ergibt sich mit dem Wenigen, das herangezogen werden kann, ein in unserem Sinne sprechendes, überzeugendes Bild.

A. Das Bayrisch-Österreichische<sup>66</sup>

Kurz vor dem Beginn der christlichen Zeitrechnung<sup>67</sup> drangen die Markomannen, ein suebischer Volksstamm in den von den keltischen Boiern besiedelten böhmischen Talkessel ein und besetzten Teile des jetzigen Böhmens. Obwohl wir keine schriftlichen Beweise haben und solche auch nicht wohl erwarten können, ist doch (mit Neckel<sup>68</sup>) anzunehmen, dass es dabei zu einer Vermengung mit zurückgebliebenen Boiern kam.<sup>69</sup> Ein anderer Punkt bestärkt uns noch in dieser Annahme, nämlich der, dass die eingewanderten siegreichen Markomannen ihren Namen aufgaben und als Boier in das von ihnen benannte Bayern auswanderten. Aber auch die keltischen Boier verschwinden<sup>70</sup> seit dieser Zeit aus der Geschichte. An eine schon früher, also vor der böhmischen Einwanderung stattgefundene Vereinigung ist, wenn sie auch nicht im Bereich der Unmöglichkeit liegt, kaum zu denken, da die Markomannen als einer der letzten Stämme am südlichen Punkte der germanischen Vorrückungslinie eindringen.<sup>71</sup> Seit dem 6. Jahrhundert nach Christus nun sind die Bayern in ihren jetzigen Wohnsitzen zwischen Lech und Enns südlich der Donau nachzuweisen.<sup>72</sup> In ihren neuen Wohnsitzen stiessen

<sup>66</sup> Über Beispiele, Grad und Verbreitung der Pal. und Vok. vgl. C. Selmer, "Palatalization," etc., pp. 126 ff. <sup>67</sup> Vgl. Reallex. der Vorgeschichte (Berlin, 1926), iv, 280, 281.

<sup>68</sup> Op. cit., p. 25: "Eine Vermischung fand überall dort statt, wo die vorrückenden Germanen auf keltisch redende Bewohner stiessen. Überall, wo dies der Fall war, haben wir mit Überbleibseln der letzteren und insofern mit Mischbevölkerung zu rechnen."

<sup>69</sup> Umsomehr ist damit zu rechnen, da nach Karsten (p. 96) die Kelten Böhmen erst nach Christi Geburt verliessen.

<sup>70</sup> Mit "Boii" werden zwei keltische Stämme bezeichnet, die in früherer Zeit ein Stamm gewesen sein müssen. Ein Teil sass in Oberitalien, der andere in Böhmen, wohin sie 400 vor Chr. gekommen sein sollen. Nach ihrer Auswanderung gingen sie über die Donau, kämpften mit den Tauriskern, schlossen sich den Helvetiern an und wurden endlich (nach Strabo) von dem Dakierkönig Boerebistas vernichtend geschlagen. Doch sollen sich nach dem Zeugnis von Inschriften Reste von ihnen bis in die römische Zeit erhalten haben. (Siehe R. Much, in J. Hoops' Reallex. d. germ. Altertumskd., p. 303.) Für die Annahme des Namens "Boii" durch die Markomannen klinge ein längeres Zusammenleben in Böhmen nach Karsten gegenüber Muchs Anschauung überzeugender.

<sup>71</sup> Das Nebeneinandervorkommen der markomannischen Brandgräber und keltischen Skelettbestattungen dürfte in dieser Hinsicht nicht ganz bedeutungslos sein.

<sup>72</sup> Wir finden in der Lex Baiuvariorum eine sonderbare Oberschicht der Fagana, Huosi, sie jedoch auf eine romanischsprechende Bevölkerung, die man wohl als Keltoromanen<sup>73</sup> betrachten muss. Es waren Vindeliker, Noriker (und Räter), die unter römischer Herrschaft, unter der sie mehrere Jahrhunderte standen, vollständig romanisiert worden waren.<sup>74</sup> Langsam erfolgte die Germanisierung dieser Völkerschaften, die fast bis zum Jahre 1000 nach Christus dauerte. Wir haben noch um diese Zeit romanischsprechende Dörfer und Höfe im südlichen Bayern und jetzigen Tirol.<sup>75</sup> Wie weit wir es mit Fremdlingen, also Walchen zu tun haben, ist hier nicht von Wichtigkeit, da diese entweder reine Kelten, Keltoromanen oder (nach Neckel) gallisierte Germanen vorstellen. Nach dem vorher Gesagten müsste also entweder durch rein keltische oder keltoromanische Vermischung der Grund zu einer Sprachvermischung gelegt worden sein, die, da das Keltische fähig war in unserm Sinne zu wirken, Palatalisierung hervorrief und somit die Richtung zur endgültigen i-Vokalisierung andeutete. Dass die Bewegung eher dem keltischen als dem lateinischen Element zuzuschreiben ist, dürfte auch daraus hervorgehen, dass von allen deutschen Dialekten gerade im Bayrischen diese Bewegung mit Ausnahme vom Anlaut überall durchgegriffen hat.<sup>76</sup> Sie konnte sich in der Folgezeit in der geschützten Winkelstellung des Bayrischen zwischen mitteldeutscher Gebirgsschwelle, Böhmerwald und Alpen, ungestört entwickeln.

B. Das Wallische

In den alemannischen Dialekten zeigt sich keine Neigung zur i-Vokalisierung. Eine Ausnahme begegnet uns nur in Oberwallis, wenn auch nur in beschränkter Form. Hier wissen wir ebenfalls, dass die deutsche Einwanderung auf eine romanisierte Bevölkerung stiess.<sup>77</sup> Über die genauere Zusammensetzung dieser romanisierten Bevölkerung

---

Drozza, Annion und Hahilinga, deren Herkunft und Herrschaftsgebiete noch nicht erklärt sind. Ein sprachlicher Einfluss kann sehr wohl von dieser (keltogermanischen?) Herrenschicht ausgegangen sein. Nach neuesten Ansichten soll gerade diese Oberschicht das bayr. Element darstellen, während der Rest der Bevölkerung Alemannen gewesen seien.

<sup>73</sup> Interessant sind die Stempel der römischen Töpfer, die man in Westerndorf bei Rosenheim fand, die neben römischen Namen auch noch keltische Namen vorweisen. Vgl. S. Riezler, Geschichte Baierns, I, 43, Anm.

<sup>74</sup> S. Riezler, op. cit., I, 43, 15.

<sup>75</sup> Vgl. O. Behaghel, Gesch. der dt. Sprache (1928), p. 112. Man denke auch an diejenigen Ortsnamen, die nicht an der ahd. Lautverschiebung teilnahmen, wie Parlenkirchen (Par-tanum).

<sup>76</sup> Die phonetische Bedingung, die G. Neckel (p. 15) für das Vordringen der Lautverschiebung aus dem sprachlich gemischten Süden nach Norden verlangt, ist in unserem Falle im Keltischen viel klarer gegeben als im Romanischen.

<sup>77</sup> Darüber berichtet O. Behaghel, op. cit., p. 105: "Im Oberwallis, das bis dahin durchaus eine romanisierte Bevölkerung aufwies, erfolgte etwa im 9. Jahrh. die dt. Besiedlung, die wohl vom Haslital im Berner Oberland ausging."

sind wir nicht unterrichtet. Möglicherweise war hier eine keltoromanische Vermischung eingetreten; denn die Schweiz war früher von Kelten bewohnt.<sup>78</sup> Die Anschauung, dass im Oberwallis und in dem westlich der Aar gelegenen Teil des Kantons Bern burgundische Bestandteile in Bevölkerung und Sprache zu finden seien, birgt einige Wahrscheinlichkeit in sich, kann aber für unsere Untersuchung nicht von Bedeutung sein.<sup>79</sup> Die Art der Mouillierung lässt uns hier sofort an romanischen oder keltoromanischen Einfluss denken, denn im Wallischen haben wir, wie im Romanischen, nur die Gruppe il und li mouilliert. Als sprachlich interessante Parallelen liegen hier romanische Dialekte der südwestlichen Schweiz vor, z. B. von Neuenburg, Lignièrès und Landeron, wo man dieselbe Erscheinung feststellen kann, nämlich die Mouillierung der Gruppe il und li, in folgenden Beispielen:<sup>80</sup> lundi = delyou; lire = yier; valoir = voye; vouloir = voya.

Die germanische Tendenz der Velarisierung des l-Lautes zeigt sich im Wallischen ebenfalls, oft in demselben Worte,<sup>81</sup> z.B. Sgl. Esel = esu, und Pl. *esila = esja.

C. Das Thüringische

Im Thüringischen tritt uns die Palatalisierung nur in ein paar Beispielen in kleinen Teilen Thüringens entgegen. Es konnte wohl sein, dass die Aussprache z.B. des Wortes "spelzen" als "speizen" oder "speißen" nicht von allen Forschern gehört wurde. Entweder dürfen wir hoffen, dass zukünftige Forschungsarbeiten durch genauere Aufzeichnung ein grösseres Verbreitungsgebiet feststellen, oder es sind nur mehr wenige, klägliche Reste davon erhalten. Ein Verschwinden wäre durchaus nicht zu verwundern, wenn man im Gegensatz zum Bayrischen an die ungeschützte Lage dieses Dialektes im Herzen Deutschlands denkt. Wie leicht können die umliegenden, unsere Erscheinung nicht aufweisenden Dialekte diese Erscheinung im Laufe der Jahrhunderte verdrängt haben. Auch die Vorgeschichte des thüringischen Stammes liegt noch so sehr im Dunkel, dass wir keinen direkten Beweis für eine Sprachvermischung finden können. Das wenige, was wir wissen, ist folgendes: Die Thüringer-Hermunduren waren, wie die Markomannen-Bayern, ein suebischer

<sup>78</sup> Vgl. T. E. Karsten, op. cit., p. 17: "Ein dritter altkeltischer Volksname, der der Helvetier, hängt mit der oben angeführten altkeltischen Bezeichnung zusammen. Dieser Volksstamm wohnte früher im südwestlichen Deutschland und hat manche Spur in den Ortsnamen dieser Gebiete hinterlassen. Aber schon im 2. Jahrh. vor Chr. hatten die Helvetier diese Gegenden verlassen, denn Caesar erwähnt ihrer schon als Bewohner der Schweiz."

<sup>79</sup> Vgl. O. Behaghel, op. cit., p. 102.

<sup>80</sup> A. Häffelin, Die rom. Mundarten der südwestl. Schweiz (1873), p. 16.

<sup>81</sup> Siehe K. Bohnenberger, "Die Mundart der deutschen Walliser im Heimattal und den Aussenorten," Beitr. zur Schweizerdt. Gram., III (1913), 155.

Volksstamm, der nach Beginn der christlichen Zeitrechnung in Böhmen einwanderte.<sup>82</sup> Immerhin wäre die Möglichkeit einer Vermischung mit den keltischen Boiern gegeben, da sie nach R. Much<sup>83</sup> zur Zeit der Kimbern noch im herkynischen Walde ansässig waren. Ferner wurden<sup>84</sup> heimatlos umherirrende Schwärme der Hermunduren vom römischen Legaten Ahenobarbus im Jahre 1 nach Chr. im ehemaligen Boierland angesiedelt. Wieweit sich die Thüringer vor und nach dieser Zeit mit nichtgermanischen Teilen vermengten, ist nicht sicher festzustellen.<sup>85</sup> Da die Bayern erst um 500 n. Chr. aus Böhmen auszogen, könnte man leicht an ein Nebeneinanderwohnen, vielleicht sogar Zusammenleben denken.<sup>86</sup> Die Thüringer machten sodann den Langobarden Platz.<sup>87</sup> Bei der Besetzung ihrer jetzigen Wohnsitze wird man wegen mangelnder Grundlagen trotz der zahlreichen keltischen Bergnamen,<sup>88</sup> wie Finne, Taunus, Sudeten und Hercynia Silva kaum an eine Vermischung mit Kelten denken dürfen. Näher liegt der Gedanke an eine Vermischung mit slavischen Elementen. Wir wissen auch, dass in diesen Gegenden ehemals Slaven<sup>89</sup> wohnten. Auch wäre das Slavische auf Grund seines Lautstandes (weiches l) und seiner Erweichungstendenzen durchaus in der Lage, in dieser Hinsicht eine Beeinflussung auszuüben.<sup>90</sup> Doch wissen wir wiederum zu wenig von der Art und der Zeit der Vermischung (vielleicht gab es nur versprengte, kleine slavische Vorposten), um die

<sup>82</sup> Auch prahistorisch wird der Wohnsitz der Hermunduren im jetzigen Böhmen um Christi Geburt in neuester Zeit von Leonhard Franz in den Forschungen und Fortschritten bestätigt. Schon Tacitus berichtet in seiner Germania, dass die Elbe im Gebiete der Hermunduren entspringt. Vgl. auch J. Schráníl, op. cit., p. 272: "Nach der archäologischen Seite finden wir hier eine Reihe Fibeltypen aus der 2. Hälfte des 5. Jahrh., die auf eine Verbindung mit dem Westen, mit der thüringer Kulturgruppe hinweisen, und die auch L. Liederle zu dem sehr wahrscheinlichen Schluss geführt haben, dass in diesen Grabern historische Thüringer zu finden seien."

<sup>83</sup> J. Hoops, Reallex. d. germ. Altertumskd., p. 303.

<sup>84</sup> Reallex. d. Vorgeschichte, IV (1926), 280.

<sup>85</sup> Nach Karsten (op. cit., p. 18) erstreckten die Kelten ihre Wanderungen bis zu den Flusstälern der Weser und Elbe.

<sup>86</sup> Manche Gelehrte nennen alle aus **Baiahaima* hervorkommenden Völkerschaften, wie Bayern, Thüringer, Heruler, Rugier etc. mit einem Sammelnamen "Bayern."

<sup>87</sup> Wiederum ist es merkwürdig, dass die Langobarden, die seit 508 in Italien sesshaft sind, l-Vokalisierung gehabt haben sollen, weshalb K. Hentrich auf den Gedanken kam, dass Erscheinungen wie atio (<atio) in Oberitalien auf langobard. Einfluss zurückzuführen seien (was von Meyer-Lübke bestritten wird).

<sup>88</sup> Vgl. darüber Karsten (op. cit., p. 92). Man konnte hier auch an die Walen-Orte denken, die noch in Thüringen vorhanden sind. Siehe O. Behaghel, op. cit., p. 113.

<sup>89</sup> Vgl. R. Schottin, Die Slaven in Thüringen, Bautzen, 1884; E. E. Fritze, Slav. Vorposten im Herzen Mitteleuropas, Meiningen, 1906, und L. Gerbing, Die ehem. Verbreitung der Slaven in Südwestthüringen, Mitt. der Geogr. Ges. in Jena, XXX (1912), 1.

<sup>90</sup> Vgl. F. Miklosich, op. cit., pp. 202, 203.

Herkunft unserer Erscheinung darauf zu basieren. Ausserdem finden wir ja diese nur in einem geringen Teile Thuringens und nicht auch im benachbarten Sachsen und Franken. Dazu kommt, dass schon in früher Zeit eine andere germanische Einwanderung erfolgte, wie z. B. die fränkische,<sup>91</sup> sogar anglische, friesische und dänische.<sup>92</sup> In Ermangelung genauer Vorarbeiten über das bei der Siedelung vorherrschende Element müssen wir es vorläufig dahin gestellt sein lassen, unsere dort nur in ein paar Beispielen auftretende Erscheinung auf keltischen, slavischen oder fränkischen Einfluss zurückzuführen.

D. Das Lausitzische

Die Besiedelung der Lausitz ist ebenfalls sehr uneinheitlich. Dort haben wir die Vermischung einer ursprünglich slavischen Bevölkerung mit deutschen Ansiedlern, wobei die letzteren die Oberschicht bildeten. Unsere Erscheinung ist dort auch nicht zur höchsten Stufe, der Vokalisierung, entwickelt. Sie bewegt sich eher in den Zwischenstufen î und jî. Die deutschen Einwanderer konnten vielleicht selbst diese Erscheinung mitgebracht haben. Die erste Einwanderung in die Lausitz fand schon zur Zeit Heinrichs I. und Ottos des Grossen<sup>93</sup> statt. Sie wurde im 13. Jahrhundert unter den Przemyslidenfürsten bedeutend verstärkt. Da wir über diese uneinheitliche deutsche Besiedelung nur unvollkommen unterrichtet sind und nichts über ihre Dialekte und Sprech Tendenzen wissen, können wir uns kein Urteil über ihre sprachliche Beeinflussung bilden. Mehr wissen wir über Art und Sprache der dortigen slavischen Bevölkerung. Wir haben es hier mit den Lausitzer Wenden zu tun. Der Name Oberlausitz tritt erst um die Mitte des 13. Jahrhunderts auf und wird erst im 16. Jahrhundert verallgemeinert.<sup>94</sup> Sie wurden auch Serben, Sorben, Wenden und Milziener genannt und kamen schon vom 9. Jahrhundert an unter deutsche Herrschaft.<sup>95</sup> Im 13. Jahrhundert trennte sich das Niedersorbische vom Obersorbischen.<sup>96</sup> Als Unterschied in den beiden Dialekten gilt die Darstellung der Erweichung (Jotierung).<sup>97</sup> Sprachlich war dieser slavische Dialekt sehr wohl in der Lage, einen Einfluss in der Mouillierung auszuüben, denn wir finden hier eine Erweichung des l-

<sup>91</sup> Vgl. J. Müller, "Frankenkolonisationen auf dem Eichsfeld," Forsch. zur sächs. und thür. Gesch., 1912-1913.

<sup>92</sup> Vgl. K. Hentrich, Die Besiedelung des thür. Eichsfeldes auf Grund der Ortsnamen und der Mundart, Duderstadt, 1919. Idem, Die Herkunft des velaren l im Westthüringischen, ZfdMaa., 1919, p. 72.

<sup>93</sup> Vgl. O. Behagel, op. cit., p. 121.

<sup>94</sup> Vgl. H. Knothe, "Zur Gesch. der Germanisierung in der Oberlausitz," Archiv für die sächs. Geschichte, N.F., II, 236.

<sup>95</sup> Vgl. J. P. Jordan, Gram. der wend. serb. Sprache in der Oberlausitz (Prag, 1841), p. 1.

<sup>96</sup> Vgl. G. Schwela, Vergl. Gram. der ober- und niedersorb. Sprache (Bautzen, 1926), p. 6.

<sup>97</sup> Ibid., p. 6, und G. Schwela, op. cit., p. 15.

Lautes. Wir finden sogar Beispiele, in denen sich ein ursprünglich hartes l (l̥) in ein weiches verwandelt,<sup>98</sup> das mehr oder minder deutlich wie lj klingt.<sup>99</sup> Wie im Keltischen haben wir im Altkirchenslavischen bei idg. l die helle Entsprechung li und il anzusetzen,<sup>100</sup> wie ja auch bei den sonantischen Nasalen i plus n für ɲ.<sup>101</sup> Es ist deshalb kein Zweifel, dass wir auch bei der Erweichung im dortigen deutschen Dialekt als Beeinflussung das Slavische, bzw. Wendische zugrunde legen müssen.

E. Das Frankische

In grösseren Teilen des fränkischen Dialekts zeigt sich ebenfalls unsere Erscheinung, wenn auch nicht die höchste Stufe, die der Vokalisierung, erreicht wurde. Die Beispiele mehren sich der wallonischen Grenze zu und nehmen in der Richtung gegen den Rhein ab.<sup>102</sup> Auch in diesen Gegenden finden wir, sogar am rechten Rheinufer, viele keltische Flussbenennungen, wie Lippe, Ruhr, Sieg, Lahn. Auch Ortsnamen wie Bonn und Mainz sollen keltischen Ursprungs sein.<sup>103</sup> Die Möglichkeit einer Vermischung der Franken mit Keltoromanen liegt auch hier vor, da die Franken um 450 auf dem linken Rheinufer Fuss fassten und in romanisiertes Gebiet eindrangen.<sup>104</sup> So kam es, dass noch bis ins 10. Jahrhundert hinein sich innerhalb des germanisierten Gebietes beträchtliche Reste einer keltoromanischen Bevölkerung erhielten, namentlich im Gebiete der unteren Mosel, der Eifel, im Hunsrück und in der Ortenau.<sup>105</sup> Dass die Palatalisierung des l dort schon in frühen Zeiten auftrat, wissen wir daher, dass auch die aus den fränkisch-rheinischen Gebieten ausgewanderten Siebenbürger Sachsen dieselbe Erscheinung noch aufweisen und diese somit schon zur Zeit ihrer Auswanderung im 12. Jahrhundert in irgend einer Form kannten.<sup>106</sup> Da wir es also auch hier infolge der Mischbevölkerung mit Sprachvermischung zu tun haben, muss die Palatalisie-

<sup>98</sup> Vgl. E. Muka, Wb. der Niederwend. Spr. und ihrer Dial. (Prag, 1926), p. 767 und J. P. Jordan, op. cit., p. 30.

<sup>99</sup> Vgl. D. Pfuhl, Lausitzisch-Wendisches Wb. (Budissin 1866): „l ist stets weich. Es klang früher wie lj (so noch jetzt in anderen slavischen Dialekten), daher man auch khwalja, ljaw etc. statt des jetzigen khwala, law schrieb.“ Vgl. auch E. Muka, op. cit., p. 798: „l (altsl. lj, poln. und čech. l) . . . klingt in den meisten Gegenden des N. L. mehr oder minder deutlich wie lj (weiches, palatalisiertes l).“

<sup>100</sup> Vgl. K. Brugmann, op. cit., p. 229.

<sup>101</sup> Idem, p. 206.

<sup>102</sup> Vgl. R. Huss, Vergleich. Lautlehre des Siebenburg. Moselfrk. Ripuarischen mit den moselfranz. und wall. Mundarten (1908), p. 45.

<sup>103</sup> Das Stromgebiet des Oberrheins war ursprünglich von Kelten besetzt, vgl. T. E. Karsten, op. cit., p. 92.

<sup>104</sup> Vgl. O. Behaghel, op. cit., p. 101.

<sup>105</sup> Idem, p. 104.

<sup>106</sup> Siehe R. Huss, „Die Besiedelung des Sachsenlandes in Siebenbürgen,“ ZfdMaa., 1923, p. 258. Auch A. Scheiner, „Die Mundart der Burzenlander Sachsen,“ Dt. Dialektgeogr., xviii, 80. Ferner O. Behaghel, op. cit., pp. 171, 120.

rung keltoromanischer Einfluss sein.<sup>107</sup> Es gibt im Fränkischen ja auch noch andere Erscheinungen, die auf keltoromanischen Einfluss zurückzuführen sein sollen, so z.B. der diesen Dialekten eigene Dreiton und Satzakkzent.<sup>108</sup> Interessant dürfte es ferner sein, dass in den benachbarten romanischen Dialekten sich dieselbe Erscheinung wie im Fränkischen zeigt. Für uns ist dies ganz natürlich, da ja die Wallonen wegen ihrer Abstammung keltische Eigentümlichkeiten zeigen müssen.<sup>109</sup> Auffallend sind folgende Beispiele, die unsere Annahme bestätigen: Wallon. džay < gallicam (Walnuss); Moselfrz. fiyo < filiolum (Söhnchen). Sogar die Kombinationen pl, cl, fl werden vokalisiert: pyer < placere (Trençey)<sup>110</sup>; kyos < colca (Meurtte); byā < blancus (Meurtte). Eine andere, dem Deutschen und Romanischen gemeinsam eigentümliche Erscheinung dieser Nachbargebiete sind die von alten e- und o-Lauten abgeleiteten Diphthonge.<sup>111</sup> Wir haben somit auch im Fränkischen bei Palatalisierung und Mouillierung an keltoromanischen Einfluss zu denken.

CARL SELMER

Hunter College

<sup>107</sup> Dazu sagt O. Weise, "Zu den Palatalisierungserscheinungen im Fränkischen," ZfdMaa., 1910, p. 372: "Da die Siebenbürger schon im 12. Jahrhundert von der Mosel und deren Nachbarländern in ihre östliche Heimat ausgewandert sind, so muss die Palatalisierung, sofern sie romanischen Ursprungs ist, mindestens bis in diese Zeit zurückgehen." Huss (op. cit.) spricht auch von einer Rivalisierung von Palatalisierung und Velarisierung. Er erkennt zwar richtig, dass die erstere nicht deutschen Ursprungs sein kann, schiebt ihr Erscheinen aber dem Französischen zu, was wegen unseres bayrischen Gegenstückes nicht richtig sein kann. Auch seine Behauptung, dass auf Palatalisierung immer Velarisierung folgen müsse, ist zu bezweifeln; denn die Palatalisierung ist eben ein fremder Eindringling, während die Velarisierung germanischer Natur ist. Wenn er die Palatalisierung zur Velarisierung ihre Zuflucht nehmen lässt, bedeutet das doch nichts anderes, als dass die deutsche Tendenz die fremde verdrängt.

<sup>108</sup> Vgl. darüber A. Scheiner, Arch. des Vereins für siebenburg. Landeskunde, xxxiv, 398.

<sup>109</sup> Über den keltogermanischen Namen "Wallonen," siehe T. E. Karsten, op. cit., p. 17. Ferner Th. Frings, "Die rhein. Akzentuierung," Dt. Dial. Geogr., xiv, 87: "Frankische Mundarten geraten unter roman. oder keltorom. Einfluss. Der fremde Akzent greift zuerst die Sprache an, in zweiter Reihe zersetzt der gall. Akzent das Sprachmaterial, . . . endlich verschiebt der fremde Akzent auch die kurzen Stammvokale." Der alte keltische expiratorische Akzent soll jetzt noch in fränkischen Dialekten fühlbar sein.

<sup>110</sup> Dass im benachbarten romanischen Gebiet die Mouillierung durch Erfassung der Anlautskombination weiter fortgeschritten ist als im Fränkischen, hat seinen Grund darin, dass sie sich eben im Keltoromanischen ungehinderter entwickeln konnte als in der Widerstand bietenden deutschen Sprache. Mouillierung in dieser Anlautsgruppe tritt in keinem deutschen Dialekte, selbst nicht im Bayrischen auf.

<sup>111</sup> Vergl. Meyer-Lübke, Hist. Gram. der Frz. Sprache (1908), p. 56: "Sollte es endlich ein Zufall sein, dass im Nordfranz. wie im nördlichen Rheinischen die gemeingerm., bezw. die altfränk. a-, e-, o-Laute verändert, die i-, u-Laute jedoch bis heute unverändert geblieben sind?"

A CHARACTERISTIC OF RIME

IT HAS long been suspected that melody plays a more important part in the structure of a poem than the broken and irregular contours of verbal pitch-patterns would seem to indicate. The fact that the voice almost never settles for more than one-twentieth of a second on one pitch, the constant and rapid movements of the melody of speech, the impossibility of representing a verbal melody in musical notation—all have tended to obscure the relation of melody to rhythmical structure. It has been observed, however, that poetic melodies tend to arrange themselves roughly in patterns which coincide with the line or the phrase, and that these patterns are often repetitive. It has also been noticed that the comma-rise and period-fall tend to emphasize the rhythm and to prepare a sort of cadence for the end of a poetic passage. To these functions of melody in verse form may now be added a third: riming words tend to be pronounced on the same pitch.

During the course of the objective study of verse being conducted at the University of Iowa under the sponsorship of the American Council of Learned Societies, a minute analysis has been made of a reading which all impartial judges considered one of the best they had ever heard. The poem was Herrick's "To Dianeme"—"Sweet, be not proud of those two eyes, etc." The reader was a nationally known poet who has for a long time been connected with a university and who has a deep knowledge and appreciation of Herrick's poetry. His reading was admirable; there was complete agreement as to that. A phonograph record of the reading was made, and the record was minutely studied by means of the various electrical measuring devices in the Iowa laboratories<sup>1</sup> to determine the precise relations of melody, time, and intensity to the rhythm of the poem—to see "what happens" when a poem is read. Among the many interesting things observable when the physical evidence was brought together was the fact that each pair of riming words was pronounced on approximately the same pitch. "Eyes" and "skies" were in the neighborhood of A-sharp; "see" and "free" near C-sharp, etc. The table below gives the mean frequency of each riming word.<sup>2</sup> The table is in frequencies service, the author of several books of verse, and a graduate of Cambridge. He read "To Dianeme" twice, at an interval of about one hour. The mean frequencies of his rimes are given in the following table:

<sup>1</sup> The instruments used were the oscillograph, the phoneloscope (equipped with electrical pick-up and amplifier), the high-speed output-level recorder, and the strobophotographic camera. The readers were seated before a microphone and asked to read the poem as well as they could. They were given no idea of the purpose of the experiment.

<sup>2</sup> It is perhaps unnecessary to explain that the characteristic of a sound which enables the ear to place it in a musical scale is the number of vibrations per second of the sound wave. The faster the vibration, the higher the pitch.

	first	second		first	second
eyes	230	240	wear	240	225
skies	225	238	ear	245	228
see	235	250	stone	220	215
free	235	250	gone	210	205
hair	250	222
air	254	225

Not only were the correspondences of frequencies fully as marked in the reading of the young graduate of Cambridge as they had been in the reading of the American poet, but the patterns were in many cases similar. "Stone" and "gone" were glides; "wear" and "ear" had the same double humps; "see" and "free" had a wavy motion downward.

That evidence appeared to indicate that the characteristic of rimes was not individual to the one reader. The question then remained: is the characteristic individual to Herrick's poem? In order to test this, a young man who graduated from the University of Mississippi, and has for some time been writing and studying, was asked to read the first thirteen lines of Coleridge's "Christabel." Herrick's poem is fairly regular in its tetrameter couplets; "Christabel," written nearly two centuries later, is more irregular in its rime-scheme and is considerably more irregular in the syllabic arrangement of its metre. Yet, these were the mean frequencies of the riming words:

clock	160	rich	220	hour	167
cock	177	bitch	217	shower	167
cock	177
		rock	158	loud	162
whoo	167	clock	160	shroud	162
crew	158

In order to make a further test, a young woman who had graduated from the Oregon State College, and had since done a considerable amount of work in dramatics, was asked to read three stanzas of Tennyson's In Memoriam (Section cvi). The stanzas from In Memoriam separate the rimes by two lines, abba. These were the mean frequencies:

sky	340	new	400	mind	360
light	342	snow	357	more	360
night	346	go	342	poor	360
die	345	true	395	kind	368

Out of all these readings the greatest difference in the mean frequencies of any pair of rimes was seventeen vibrations, which in that range was a little over one half tone, while the average difference was only five vibrations.<sup>4</sup>

What may we make of this evidence? Here we have four readers, from England to Oregon, none of whom heard any of the others read. We have three poems, covering more than two centuries of English literature and greatly different in form and style. The same characteristic of riming words was observed in every reading of every poem. The evidence is certainly a fair sampling, and the results are enough to indicate a tendency. We need now to study five thousand good readings. In matters such as this, in which the proof must be inductive, it is well to let the evidence, as it accumulates, write the law. But we may say, by way of summary, that there has been observed in good reading of verse a tendency to set off riming words by similar intonations.

The implications of this tendency are so many and so important that full consideration must await further evidence. Let me merely indicate a few. This information indicates the contribution of melody to rime and another of its contributions to rhythm. Rime "rings the bell" for rhythm. The Physical Basis of Rime, according to Henry Lanz, in the book of that name, is, as far as melody goes, a sort of cadence of the characteristic frequencies (the central harmonic compositions) of the vowels, but—he explains—"the melody contained in the vowels has nothing in common with the so-called 'intonation,' change of the fundamental of our voice as we speak."<sup>5</sup> Verrier, Scripture, Morris,<sup>6</sup> and others have found patterns of intonation which have a tendency to duplicate each others' form and hence, by implication, to return toward the same point. If, now, it is shown that good reading habitually sets off rimes by identical, or nearly identical intonations, as well as by characteristic frequencies of overtones, the nature of poetic melody will be better understood. If it is known that each melodic phrase has a definite goal, it will be easier to study the variations around that goal, and it may even be possible to work out a crude theory of keys and tonal relationship for verse to correspond to the elaborate one we have for music. All in all, the tendency points convincingly to the close analogy of music and verse. Investigation is leading us more and more to see the truth of Samuel Johnson's statement that all versification is the "joining of music with reason."

<sup>4</sup> Another interesting feature of the frequencies observed was that in about three-fourths of the cases the riming sound passed through or very near submultiples of the characteristic frequency of the vowel. The characteristic frequency is explained by Dayton C. Miller (The Science of Musical Sound, 1916) as the "characteristic region of resonance which remains the same for all voices." It is this that is supposed to give the vowel its peculiar quality. It has nothing to do with the fundamental pitch of the sound—only with the quality of the sound. Professor Miller's results were rechecked and restated by I. B. Crandall, "The Sounds of Speech," Bell System Technical Journal (1925), pp. 25 ff., and by M. H. Liddell, The Physical Characteristics of Speech Sounds, published by Purdue University (1924–27).—The characteristic and its related frequencies are those on which the vowel may be pronounced most easily and most effectively. Does the tendency of the voice to seek this frequency mean that the good reader unconsciously seeks the convenient key, the natural frequency of the vowel he wishes to emphasize?

<sup>5</sup> Op. cit., p. 25.

<sup>6</sup> Verrier, Essai sur les Principes de la Métrique Anglaise. Scripture, Grundzüge der Englische Verswissenschaft (Marburg, 1929), which sums up his monumental researches into English verse. Morris, The Orchestration of the Metrical Line, (Ann Arbor, 1923). From

WILBUR LANG SCHRAMM

University of Iowa

---

Mr. Morris' tables of pitches, it is possible to quote the following mean frequencies for riming words:

swing	120	140	lie	138	141 (134)	203
thing	123	177	rye	133	129	210
blue	133	130	sky			218
do	120	127

Mr. Morris, unfortunately, does not describe his readers nor does he indicate the precise nature of the melodic pattern.

ACTS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

I. Under date of February 5, 1935, the Advisory Committee asked for a vote by the Executive Council to fill the vacancies on the five Standing Committees due to arise on July 1. As a result of the ballot vote the following persons were elected as members of the Standing Committees for the term ending July 1, 1940.

Editorial Committee, H. W. Nordmeyer, Univ. of Michigan
Monograph Series, J. H. Hanford, Western Reserve Univ
Revolving Fund Series, Henning Larsen, Univ. of Iowa
Rotograph Fund, W. L. Bullock, Univ. of Chicago
Program Committee, Ernst Feise, The Johns Hopkins Univ.

II. At the same time authorization was given to President Searles' proposal to dedicate the 1935 volume of PMLA to Professor Carleton Brown, and to include in it his photograph, a bibliography of his writings and a record of his services to the Association. The first Vice-President was not informed—by vote of the Advisory Committee.

III. Under date of March 26 the Secretary transmitted to the Council recommendations made by the Committee on Research Activities:

1. The following books are recommended for application to the American Council of Learned Societies in aid of publication:

I (arranged alphabetically)

Keniston, Hayward: The Syntax of Castilian Prose: Sixteenth Century $2100
(Banta)

Lancaster, H. Carrington: History of French Dramatic Literature in the Seventeenth Century (not for publication by the Association) $1000

Ia (different in kind)

Malone, Kemp: Widsith (for joint publication by the Association and Methuen) $375

II (less distinguished)

Jackson, George Pullen: Early American Spiritual Folk-Songs $1200

Raysor, Thomas M. (ed.) Coleridge's Miscellaneous Criticism £410

Parsons, Coleman T.: Scott and the Supernatural $700

Clement, Nemours Honoré. Romanticism: France $2500

2. It is recommended that books so subsidized for publication by the Modern Language Association form a new unnumbered series. The provisional title Research Committee Publications is suggested.

3. It is recommended that S. H. Monk's "Theories of the Sublime in the Eighteenth Century," for which the American Council of Learned Societies has granted a subsidy, be published by the Modern Language Association and not (as originally provided) elsewhere. The profits from sales will revert to the Association.

4. It is recommended that the American Council of Learned Societies be requested to endeavor to provide some means for aiding publication of bibliographies and indices. Six meritorious works of this nature have been submitted.

5. It is recommended that publication of the Arthurian Bibliography II be aided from the income of our Research Fund. This was done for the Arthurian Bibliography I. The expense to the Association should not exceed $100, and may be much less.

The Council approved Recommendations 1, 3, and 5, but not 4. Under 2 the Council approved the series, but not the name. Under 1 pursuant to a further recommendation of the Committee it added, between Jackson and Raysor, Alfred Harbage's Cavalier Drama.

IV. Under date of April 29 the Advisory Committee asked for a vote by the Council on the following topics. The results of the vote are listed under each topic.

1. Nominations to the Council

T. Moody Campbell, Northwestern University	German
Frank W. Chandler, University of Cincinnati	English
George R. Coffman, University of North Carolina	English
Joseph E. Gillet, Bryn Mawr College	Romance
W. W. Lawrence, Columbia University	English
Casimir D. Zdanowicz, University of Wisconsin	Romance

2. Invitations for the 1936 meeting

A joint invitation from the College of William and Mary and the University of Richmond was accepted.

3. Appointment of three committees, as follows.

(a) Committee for Publicity

(To handle reports of meetings with such other occasions for publicity as may arise. The proposal is for a committee of three members distributed geographically, to be appointed by the President in consultation with the Secretary, one to retire each year; and of two local members each year to be similarly chosen from nominations made by the Local Committee.)

(b) Committee on Requirement of Courses in Education for Teachers in High Schools

(Proposed by Professor G. H. Gerould to combat present apparently excessive requirements. To be appointed by the President and report to the Council.)

(c) Committee on Public Service Personnel

(To cooperate with other associations in investigating possibilities of creating a career service in public employment,—a movement initiated by the Commission of Inquiry on Public Service Personnel, L. D. Coffman, Chairman. To be appointed by the President and to report to the Council.)

Appointment of these committees was approved.

4. Appointment of a Co-Chairman of the Rotograph Committee (vice W. L. Bullock resigned).

Norman L. Torrey of Swarthmore College was appointed.

5. A name for the new unnumbered series.

The name "General Series" was approved.

V. Under date of May 22 the Secretary transmitted to the Council a request from the Chairman of the Supervisory Committee of the New Variorum Shakespeare for the following actions:

1. "That they vote their thanks to the American Philosophical Society for its kind and continued help.
2. That they empower the Secretary of the Association, in conjunction with the editor and Supervisory Committee of the Furness Variorum, to apply to one of the educational foundations for funds to publish the first part of Henry IV and other volumes as prepared."

These actions were approved by the Council.

VI. Under date of October 7 the Advisory Committee asked for a vote of the Council on the following topics.

1. That Professor Charles H. Grandgent, who is wintering in Tennessee, be especially invited to be present at Cincinnati
2. That the South Atlantic Modern Language Association be invited to meet with us in 1936 at the College of William and Mary and the University of Richmond
3. That an estimate of the cost of publishing the "PMLA Index, Vols. I-L" be presented in the Treasurer's budget for 1936
4. That the date (July 1) of expiration of the term of members of the Standing Committees be made to apply to the Publicity Committee and the Supervisory Committee of the New Variorum Shakespeare.
5. That the Association ratifies the following amendment to the Constitution of the American Council of Learned Societies, adopted at its meeting February 1, 1935.

"To add to Article 3 the following paragraph:

"(d) Any member of a constituent society not otherwise a member of the Corporation who may be elected to a constitutional office of the Council, but such ex-officio membership shall be only for the duration of the term of office."

These actions were approved by the Council.

PERCY W. LONG, Secretary

Rotographs of Manuscripts and Rare Printed Books

The following additions have been made to the Short Title List, published in the Supplement of Volume XLIX of the PMLA.

Users of our rotographs are requested by the Library of Congress to send to the European library of origin a copy of anything which they have printed from or concerning them, marked "material from or concerning MS.—."

Forms to be filled out by those who desire to make requests or suggestions for the procuring of new rotographs, may be obtained by applying to the chairman of the Committee on Selection, Professor Norman L. Torrey, Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa.

301. Brit Mus, 8008 a 4: Andres Davila y Heredia, Tienda de anteojos políticos, Valencia, 1673. (119 sheets)
302. Vienna, Nazionalbibl., MS Cod lat. 9970 Boccalini, Ragguagli di Parnaso, in Span. trans (122 sheets)
303. Vienna, Nazionalbibl., MS. Cod. lat. 10514: Boccalini, Pietra del Paragone Politico, in Span. trans. (202 sheets)
304. London, Univ. Coll Lib., MS. Germ. 12· A middle high German translation of the Benedictine Rule of the 14th century, fols 1-104. (98 sheets)
305. Milan, Bibl. Ambrosiana, MS. H. I. inf. 5: Tasso, Aminta, fols. 212-258. (94 sheets)
306. Brit. Mus., MS Royal 19. c. ii. Frère Lorens, La Somme des Vices et des Vertus, fols. 1-107. (107 sheets)
307. Cambridge, University Lib. MS. Gg IV. 27. Chaucer, ABC, Lenvoy de Chaucer à Scogan, Truth, Troilus and Cresside, and three other poems, fols. 5-126. (115 sheets)
308. Oxford, Bodleian, MS. Eng. Poet. d. 9: William Forrest, The Notable History of the Most Chaiste Innocent Ioseph, fols. 4-158. (155 sheets)
309. A. Cambridge Univ. Lib., MS. Dd. X, 30 Robert Davenport, Survey of the Sciences. (25 sheets)
B. Welbeck Abbey Lib., Duke of Portland MS.: Robert Davenport, A Valient Martyr. (9 sheets)
310. London, College of Arms, MS. Arundel XXII· Seege of Troye; O.E. trans. of Geoffrey of Monmouth's History by "Maister Gnaor"; fols. 1-82 (82 sheets)
311. Florence, Bibl. Laurenziana, MS. Doni ed Acquisti 325: Boccaccio, Teseide, fols. 1-141, 2 vol. (282 sheets)
312. Brit Mus., Sloane MS. 2499: Juliana of Norwich, Revelations of Divine Love, fols. 1-57. (57 sheets)
313. Brussels, Bibl. Royale, MS fr. 14864-65· Chroniques de Nicaise Ladam, 4 vol., fols. 1-383. (762 sheets)
314. Cambridge, Trinity Coll., MS. 0.9.34: Thomas, or Eustache, of Kent, Le Roman de toute Chevalerie. (45 sheets)
315. Paris, Bibl. Nat., MS. ang. 40: Juliana of Norwich, Revelations of Devine Love, fols. 1-174. (174 sheets)
316. Brit. Mus., MS. Add. 37790: Juliana of Norwich, Revelations of Divine Love (and various Eng trans. of theological works), fols. 1-237. (119 sheets)
317. Suffolk, Helmingham Hall, Tollemache MS.: John Trevisa, trans. of Bartholomaeus Anglicus, De Proprietatibus Rerum, fols 9-340 (664 sheets) 2 vol.
318. Paris, Bibl. Nat.: Rondeaux au nombre de troys cent cinquante, Paris, 1527(?), 114 pp. (57 sheets)
319. Paris, Bibl. Nat., MS. Nouv. Acq. fr. 6368: Jean du Pin, Roman de Mandeveie, 240 pp. (240 sheets) 2 vol.
320. Brit Mus, Sloane MS. 3705: Juliana of Norwich, Revelations of Divine Love, fols. 1-142. (142 sheets)
321. Moritzburg, Schlossbibl., MS. Quart 117: Rondeaux d'Amour, fols. 1-136. (271 sheets)
322. Paris, Bibl. de l'Arsenal. Charles Sorel, Cleagenor et Doristée, s l, 1621. (232 sheets)

M.L.A. ADDITIONAL ROTOGRAPHS

Under the extension of our rotophograph service to other constituent societies of the American Council of Learned Societies 12 items have been added. Those presumably of interest to members of the association are:

- Add 1. Gilbert de Thornton, Summa London, Lincoln's Inn Lib , MS IIale 135.
- Add. 5. St. Jerome, Lives of the Hermit Saints 2 vol.
 Paris, Bibl. Nat., MSS. lat 12596, nouv acq. lat 2178 vol. 1.
 Rime, Bibl. Vallicellian, MSS. Tomes 22, 17 vol. 1.
 Milan, Bibl. Ambrosiana, MSS lat. D 525, I 61. vol. 2
 Monte Cassina Lib., MS lat. 463. vol. 2.
 Florence, Med. Laur. Plut., 19 Cod. lat. 16. vol 2.
- Add. 6. St. Jerome, Malchus, Hilarion.
 Paris, Bibl. Nat., MSS gr. 1605, 1598, 1514, 1501A, 1540.
- Add. 7. Reginald of Canterbury, Poems.
 Oxford, Bodleian Lib., MSS Laud. Misc. 40, 500; MS. Digby 65.
 Oxford, Merton Coll., MS. 241.
 Brit. Mus., MS. Cotton Vesp. E. III.
 Munich, Bayerische Staatsbibl., MS. 18580.
- Add. 9. Geoffrey of Monmouth, 8 vol.
 Cambridge, Corpus Christi, MS. 292 vol. 1.
 Cambridge, Trinity Coll., MSS. 770, 744 vols 2-3.
 Cambridge, Univ. Lib., MSS. 1814, 2096. vols 4-5.
 Oxford, Bodleian Lib., Rawl. MS. B 168. vol. 6.
 Aberystwyth, Nat Lib., MSS. Peniarth 42, 43 vols. 7-8.
 (Vol. 1 contains also Historia Turpin Remensis.)
- Add. 11. Thomas Watson: Sophoclis Antigone, London, 1581; Amyntas, London, 1585.
 British Museum, printed books.
- Add. 12. Peter of Poitiers, Allegoria 3 vol.
 Cambridge, Pembroke Coll., MS. 96. . . . vol. 1.
 Trier, Seminarbibl , MS. 90. . . . vol. 2.
 Paris, Bibl. Mazarine, MS 1005 vol. 3.

FELLOWSHIPS FOR STUDY IN BELGIUM

American men or women members of the faculty of an American college, university, or research institute who intend to continue academic teaching or research may apply, before December 15, for a 1936 fellowship of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, even if expecting sabbatical leave or leave of absence. Tenure, usually 4 to 12 months; stipend, $120 monthly and travelling expenses (supplement for dependents); requisites, specific reason for work in Belgium and specific benefits to the fellow's future career. Forms and information are obtainable from the Secretary, C. R. B. Educational Foundation, Inc., 420 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.

MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION BOOKS

(Published in 1935)

A discount of 10 per cent from the list price will be allowed to libraries on any of the books in these Series, and 33 $\frac{1}{3}$  per cent to members of the Association on any of the Monographs.

MONOGRAPH SERIES

V. THE REAL WAR OF THE THEATERS: SHAKESPEARE'S FELLOWS IN RIVALRY WITH THE ADMIRAL'S MEN, 1594-1603. By Robert Boies Sharpe (viii+260 pp.). Price $2.50.

The first chronological survey of the theatrical events of Queen Elizabeth's last decade, treating season by season the relations of stage and public happenings, especially with reference to the court factions. It clarifies the policies and specialties of the companies together with their influence on the literary as well as the stage qualities of the extant dramas of Shakespeare and his contemporaries during this period.

VI. PETER IDLEY'S Instructions to his son. By Charlotte D'Evelyn. (vii+240 pp.). $2.50.

This study establishes the identity of Peter Idley as an Oxfordshire gentleman, neighbor of the Stonors and office-holder in the court of Henry VI, and against the background of his public and private life, interprets his Instructions to his Son as a typical expression of fifteenth-century culture. The text of the Instructions is printed for the first time in full with variant MS readings and linear references to the Handlyng Synne.

GENERAL SERIES

(Books recommended by the Committee on Research Activities with approval of the Executive Council. Published under aid from a grant made by the American Council of Learned Societies.)

THE SUBLIME: A STUDY OF CRITICAL THEORIES IN XVIII-CENTURY ENGLAND. By Samuel Holt Monk. (vii+275 pp.). Price $2.50.

The chief English theories of the sublime between 1674 and 1800, with particular reference to changing tastes. Concepts of sublimity are shown to have been focal points for ideas and emotions that were inimical to neo-classic standards and that became dominant among romantic poets and critics. Later chapters are devoted to (1) critical theories of painting and (2) emergence of a taste for terror evoked by grandeur in external nature.

VOLKSSPRACHE UND WORTSCHATZ DES BADISCHEN FRANKENLANDES, DARGESTELLT AUF GRUND DER MUNDART VON OBERSCHEFFLENZ. By Edwin Carl Roedder (vi+568 pp.). Price $5.00. [Now in proof.]

This book, of the Marburg school, combines the various aspects of research into regional and local utterance—sounds, forms, syntax, style, vocabulary, historical development, geographical influences—on the basis of a specific rural dialect. Its rich collection of texts, vocabulary, and phonetic transcriptions covers this dialect, with which thirteen other dialects are compared. It provides a pattern for dialect research.

THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA:
100 Washington Square East, New York, N.Y.

Please send me the books indicated by check marks:

- ☐ R. B. Sharpe, The Real War of the Theaters: Shakespeare's Fellows in Rivalry with the Admiral's Men, 1594-1603. Price, $2.50.
- ☐ Charlotte D'Evelyn, Peter Idley's "Instructions to his Son." Price, $2.50.
- ☐ S. H. Monk, The Sublime: A Study of Critical Theories in Eighteenth-Century England. Price, $2.50.
- ☐ E. C. Roedder, Volkssprache und Wortschatz des badischen Frankenlandes, dargestellt auf Grund der Mundart von Oberschefflenz. Price, $5.00.

REGULATIONS OF THE ASSOCIATION

ADOPTED BY THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

28 DECEMBER 1930

Arrearages in Membership Dues:

If members are in arrears for dues for the preceding calendar year their copies of PMLA will not be mailed to them until these dues have been paid. Members whose dues continue unpaid for two years shall be dropped from the printed List of Members.

Papers for the Program of the Annual Meeting:

Members of the Association may offer papers to be read either at the General Sessions, at the Departmental Sections, or at meetings of the Discussion Groups. The titles of papers proposed for General Sessions or for the Departmental Sections should, in all cases, be accompanied by synopses (not to exceed 60 words) to be printed in the program.

Papers for the General Sessions should be submitted to the Secretary of the Association for consideration by the Program Committee; papers for the Departmental Sections may be sent to the Secretary or directly to the officers of the Sections as announced in the June PMLA. The titles of papers for the Discussion Groups should be submitted to officers of the Group concerned.

The latest date at which proposals for the program can be received is October 31, but notice well in advance of this date is highly desirable as programs are often made up before that date.

Manuscripts Submitted for Publication in PMLA:

Members have the privilege of submitting papers for publication in PMLA, whether these have been previously presented at the Annual Meeting or not. Manuscripts should be addressed to the Editor of PMLA, to be referred to the Editorial Committee. No paper shall be accepted for publication which has not been approved by the Editorial Committee.

Contributors shall be allowed seventy-five cents per galley for author's corrections, but charges in excess of this allowance shall be paid by the contributor.

Fifty reprints with covers (or twenty-five in the case of communications in the "Comment and Criticism" Department) will be supplied to contributors gratis. A larger number will be furnished if desired, provided that notice is given by the time corrected page proof is returned. The cost of these extra reprints will be determined on the basis of the actual charges made by the printers.

---

Books:

Members may submit manuscripts of books for publication in the Monograph Series, Revolving Book Fund Series, and General Series. Inquiries should be addressed to the Secretary.

PMLA

PUBLICATIONS OF
THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

Issued Quarterly

VOLUME L

SUPPLEMENT

1935

AMERICAN BIBLIOGRAPHY FOR 1935

IN THE interest of completeness, it is hoped that authors may be willing to send to the compiler of the appropriate section off-prints of articles and notice of pertinent books and monographs. The addresses of the editors are:

GENERAL: Archer Taylor, Univ. of Chicago, and Arthur P. Coleman, Columbia Univ.

ENGLISH: Albert C. Baugh, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

AMERICAN: Gregory Paine, University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.

FRENCH: H. Carrington Lancaster, The Johns Hopkins University, Baltimore, Md.

ITALIAN: J. E. Shaw, 75 Walmer Road, Toronto, Canada.

SPANISH: Edwin B. Williams, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

GERMANIC: H. W. Nordmeyer, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

The year of publication is 1935 unless otherwise noted. Italics indicate book titles, quotation marks, articles. Periodicals are referred to by the following abbreviations:

ABC	American Book Collector	LTLS	(London) Times Literary Suppl.
AJP	American Journal of Philology	MA	Medium Aevum
AmLit	American Literature	MFDU	Monatshefte für d. Unterricht
AnglB	Beiblatt zur Anglia	MLJ	Modern Language Journal
APS	Acta Philologica Scandinavica	MLN	Modern Language Notes
Archiv	Archiv für das Stud. der neueren Sprachen und Literaturen	MLR	Modern Language Review
AS	American Speech	MP	Modern Philology
BHi	Bulletin Hispanique	N&amp;Q	Notes and Queries
ELH	Jour. of Eng. Literary History	OC	Open Court
Est	Englische Studien	PMLA	Pubs. Mod. Lang. Ass'n. of Am.
FQ	French Quarterly	PQ	Philological Quarterly
FR	French Review	RES	Review of English Studies
GQ	German Quarterly	RFE	Revista de Filología Española
GR	Germanic Review	RHL	Revue d'Histoire Lit. de la France
Hisph	Hispania	RLC	Revue de Littérature Comparée
HR	Hispanic Review	RR	Romanic Review
Ital	Italica	SAB	Shakespeare Assoc. Bulletin
JAFLL	Jour. of American Folk-Lore	SP	Studies in Philology
JEGP	Jour. of Eng. and Germ. Philol.	SS	Scandinavian Studies and Notes
Lang	Language	ZRP	Zeitschrift für Rom. Philologie

GENERAL

BY ARCHER TAYLOR AND COLLABORATING SPECIALISTS

Æsthetics and Literary Criticism. Cooper, Lane. Evolution and Repentance: Mixed Essays and Addresses on Aristotle, Plato, and Dante, with Papers on Arnold and Wordsworth. Ithaca, N. Y.

Jockers, Ernst. See GERMANIC, Section II, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Oliver, R. P. "Recent Interpretations of the Renaissance." Ital, XII. 130-135.

Pound, Ezra. Make It New. New Haven, Conn.

Schramm, W. L. See ENGLISH, Section II.

Stoll, E. E. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Shakespeare.

Wenger, C. N. "An Introduction to the Æsthetics of Literary Portraiture" PMLA, L. 615-629.

Wolff, M. J. "Die Wahrscheinlichkeit des Kunstwerks." PMLA, L. 323-334.

Woodhouse, A. S. P. "Puritanism and Liberty." University of Toronto Quarterly, IV. 395-404.

Bibliographical. Modern Language Notes: General Index of Volumes I-L, compiled by E. P. Kuhl, R. A. Parker, and H. H. Shapiro, edited by H. H. Shapiro. Baltimore.

Cox, Edward Godfrey. A Reference Guide to the Literature of Travel. (Univ. of Washington Publ. in Lang. and Lit., Vol. IX.) Seattle, Wash.

Nicholas, M. W. and Kinnaird, L. B. A Bibliography of Articles in 'Nosotros,' General Literary Criticism (Exclusive of Hispanic American Literature). N. Y.

— See SPANISH, Section VI, Bibliography.

Linguistics. Black, John W. "The Quality of a Spoken Vowel." [Univ. of Iowa] Programs Announcing Candidates for Higher Degrees . . . 1935, no pagination (abstract of diss.).

Blancké, W. W. General Principles of Languages. Boston.

Bloomfield, Leonard. See ENGLISH, Section I.

Graff, W. L. "Remarks on the Phoneme." AS, X. 83-87.

Gray, J. Stanley. "A Behavioristic Interpretation of Language." Quar. Jour. of Speech, XXI. 36-43; 168-177.

Ketcham, A. V. "The Probability of a Word-Atom Hypothesis." Quarterly Journal of Speech, XXI. 157-168.

Leopold, W. F. See ENGLISH, Section I.

Place, E. B. "Some Observations on the So-Called Plural of Majesty or Plural of Reverence." University of Colorado Studies, XXII. 307-311.

Routh, James. "Do Women Writers Use More Words per Idea than Men?" JEGP, XXXIV. 238-242.

Scott, H. F., Carr, W. L., and Wilkinson, G. T. Language and Its Growth: an Introduction to the History of Language. Chicago.

A revision and enlargement of The Development of Language, published by Scott and Carr in 1921.

Swadesh, Morris. "The Vowels of Chicago English." Lang, xi. 148-151.
Criticism of Bloomfield's treatment in his Language.

———"Twaddell on Defining the Phoneme." Lang, xi. 148-151.

Twaddell, W. F. On Defining the Phoneme (Language Monographs, xvi).
Baltimore, Md.

Wiley, Norman L. "Indogermanic-Nahuatl." Univ. of Michigan Publications: Lang. and Lit., xiii. 127-150.

Zipf, G. W. The Psycho-Biology of Language: An Introduction to Dynamic Philology. Boston.

Romance Linguistics. Anderson, Frederick. A Primer of Romance Philology.
Palo Alto, Calif. 1934.

Kent, R. G. "Again the Initial Syllable." Lang, xi. 151-152.

Rice, C. C. "Romance Etymologies." Lang, xi. 238-241.

Tuttle, E. H. "A West Romance Sound-Law." RR, xxvi. 31-33.

Experimental Phonetics. (Contributed by Wilbur L. Schramm.)

Anon. "Variations in Pitch of the Voice." Science, lxxx. 7.

Bartholomew, W. T. "A Physical Definition of 'Good Voice-Quality' in the Male Voice." Journal of the Acoustical Society, vi. 25-33.

A study of the singing voice, interesting in its implications regarding the speaking voice.

Bloch, Bernard. "Broad Transcription of General American." Mattre Phonétique, 3<sup>me</sup> sér. xlix. 7-10.

Felderman, L. "Practical Applications of Voice Dynamics." Laryngoscope, xliv. 902-919.

Flemming, E. G. "Pleasant Voice." Quarterly Journal of Speech, xx. 194-199.

Fletcher, Harvey. "Loudness and Pitch." Bell Laboratories Record, xiii.
130-155.

The physics v. the psychology of the problem.

———"Newer Concepts of the Pitch, the Loudness, and the Timbre of Musical Tones." Journal of the Franklin Institute, vii. 102-110.

Holmes, F. L. D. "Resonance." Quarterly Journal of Speech, xxi. 216-224.

Howells, T. H. and Schoolland, J. B. "An Experimental Study of Speech Perception." Journal of General Psychology, xi. 337-347.

Finds low correlation between auditory acuity and speech perception.

Hudgins, C. V. and Stetson, R. H. "Voicing of Consonants by Depression of the Larynx." Archives Néerlandaises de Phonétique Expérimentale, xi. 1-28.

Jones, A. T. "Organ Pipes and Vowel Quality." Journal of the Acoustical Society, vi. 282-283.

Joos, M. "Stressed Vowels plus [r] in General American." Mattre Phonétique, 3<sup>me</sup> sér. xlviii. 93-97.

Lindsley, C. F. "The Psycho-physical Determinants of Voice Quality."
Speech Monographs, i, i, 79-116.

Study of vocal resonance by means of "as many approaches as possible."

Mills, John. Signals and Speech in Electrical Communication. New York, 1934.

Oliver, T. E. The Modern Language Teacher's Handbook. Boston.

Parmenter, C. E. and Norman, Hilda. "Suggestions for the Use of Phonograph Records in the Teaching of Italian." Ital, xii. 1-6.

A frequency plot of Italian reading.

Richtmeyer, F. K. "Advances in Physics during 1934." Review of Scientific Instruments, vi. 1-3.

Schramm, Wilbur L. Approaches to a Science of English Verse. Iowa City, Iowa.

Experimental electro-acoustical study of the nature of English verse. Chapters on approaches, the syllable, accent, stress, melody, rime, rhythm, the metrical foot, artistic deviation from regularity. Tables, charts, illustrations, and a bibliography of objective studies of verse.

——— "The Melodies of Verse." Science, lxxxii. 61-62.

——— "The Next Major Problem of Experimental Phonetics."

——— See ENGLISH, Section II.

Archives Néerlandaises de Phonétique Experimentale, xi. 133-136.

Bridging the gap between acoustical measurements and psychological perceptions.

——— "What is a Syllable?" The Scientific Monthly, xl. 552-555.

Scripture, E. W. "Experimental Phonetics and Ancient Greek Verse." Nature, cxxxvi. 340-341.

——— "Failure of Fourier Analysis Applied to Vowel Vibrations." Nature, cxxxvi. 223.

——— "Film Tracks of English Vowels." Journal of the Acoustical Society, vi. 169-172.

——— "Phonemes." Nature, cxxxvi. 261-262.

——— "Puff and Profile Theory of the Vowels." Nature, cxxxvi. 435-436.

——— "Registration of Speech Sounds." Journal of the Acoustical Society, vii. 139-141.

The oscillogram of choo reveals speech movements.

Shohara, H. "The Genesis of the Articulatory Movements of Speech." Quarterly Journal of Speech, xxi. 343-348.

Stevens, S. S. "Attributes of Tones." Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, xx. 457-459.

——— "The Localization of Pitch Perceptions on the Basilar Membrane." Journal of General Psychology, xiii. 296-313.

——— "The Relation of Pitch and Intensity." Journal of the Acoustical Society, vi. 150-154.

——— "Tonal Density." Journal of Experimental Psychology, xvii. 585-592.

——— "The Volume and Density of Tones." American Journal of Psychology, xlvi. 397-408.

Travis, L. E., Bender, W. R., and Buchanan, A. R. "Research Contributions to Vowel Theory." Speech Monographs, i, i, 65-71.

Both harmonic and inharmonic theories may be correct.

Treviño, S. N. "Bibliography of Phonetics." American Speech, x. 71-74, 150-152, 227-231, 308-311.

Annotated bibliography, chiefly for 1934.

Vidon-Varney, Jeanne. "Phonétique." French Review, viii. 389-402.
Columbia's method of recording on aluminum.

Voelker, C. H. "A New Sound Count for Logopedists." Annals of Otology, Rhinology, and Laryngology, xlv. 260-263.

——— "Technique for a Phonetic Frequency Distribution Count in Formal American Speech." Archives Néerlandaises de Phonétique Expérimentale, xi. 69-72.

Wedell, C. H. "The Nature of the Absolute Judgment of Pitch." Journal of Experimental Psychology, xvii. 485-503.

Medieval Latin Language and Literature. Cornog, W. H. (transl.) Anticlaudian: Prologue, Argument, and Nine Books, with Introduction and Notes. Philadelphia, Pa.

Coveney, D. K. "Notes on an Unpublished Uncial Fragment of the Seventh Century." Speculum, x. 41-46.
Capitula to St. Mark.

Desmarais, M. M. S. Albert le Grand, Docteur de la Médiation Mariale (Publications de l'Institut d'Etudes Médiévales d'Ottawa, iv). Ottawa.

Diller, A. "Scipio Tettius' 'Index librorum nondum editorum.'" AJP, lvi. 14-27.

Erhardt-Siebold, E. "Aldhelm's Chrismal." Speculum, x. 276-281.

Hammer, J. "Note on John of Garland and Reginald of Canterbury." PQ, xiv. 363-364.

Johnson, R. P. "Notes on some Manuscripts of the 'Mappae Claviculae.'" Speculum, x. 72-81.

Jones, L. W. "Two Salzburg Manuscripts and the Influence of Tours." Speculum, x. 288-291.

Keenan, Sister M. E. The Life and Times of St. Augustine as Revealed in his Letters. Washington, D. C.

Martin, Gladys. "Transposition of Verses in the 'Pervigilium Veneris.'" Classical Philology, xxx. 255-259.

Mierow, C. C. "Otto of Freising: a Medieval Historian at Work." PQ, xiv. 344-362.

Moore, P. S. "The Authorship of the 'Allegoriae super Vetus et Novum Testamentum.'" New Scholasticism, ix. 209-225.

Niver, Charles. "A Twelfth-Century Sacramentary." Speculum, x. 333-337.

Ogle, M. B. "A Mediaeval Tale of a Gallus." Transactions of the American Philological Society, lxv. 70-79.

Phelan, G. B. (transl.). St. Thomas Aquinas: On the Governance of Rulers (De Regimine Principum). Toronto.

Rand, E. K. "Spirit and Plan of the 'Pervigilium Veneris.'" Transactions of the American Philological Society, lxv. 1-12.

Richardson, E. C. Materials for a Life of Jacopo da Voragine. N. Y.

Silk, E. T. Saeculi noni auctoris in Boetii 'Consolationem Philosophiae' Commentarius (Papers and Monographs of the American Academy, ix). Rome.

Thompson, S. H. "The 'Preconia Frederici II' of Quilichinus of Spoleto." Speculum, x. 386-343.

Medieval Literature (General and comparative.). Albrecht, O. E. Four Latin Plays of St. Nicholas. Philadelphia, Pa.

Barja, Cesar. "On the Eight-hundredth Anniversary of Maimonides." Modern Language Forum, xx. 49-70.

Caplan, H. Mediaeval Artes Praedicandi (Cornell Studies in Classical Philology, viii). Ithaca, N. Y.

Coomaraswamy, A. K. "Mediaeval Aesthetic, I." Art Bulletin, xvii. 31-47.

Cooper, Lanc. Aristotle, Galileo, and the Tower of Pisa. Ithaca, N. Y.

Epstein, Isidore. "Judah Halevi as Philosopher." Jewish Quarterly Review, xxv. 201-225.

Finkelstein, Louis. "Maimonides and the Tannaitic Midrashim." Jewish Quarterly Review, xxv. 469-517.

Gottheil, R. "Fragments of a Short Medical Vocabulary from the Cairo Genizah." Jewish Quarterly Review, xxvi. 7-27.

Krappe, A. H. "Mediaeval Literature and the Comparative Method." Speculum, x. 270-276.

Kurtz, L. P. The Dance of Death and the Macabre Spirit in European Literature. N. Y., 1934.

Lucks, H. A. "Natura naturans—natura naturata." New Scholasticism, ix. 1-24.

McKeehan, I. P. "Contemporary Life in two Twelfth-Century Saints' Legends." University of Colorado Studies, xxii. 289-305.

Marshak, R. "Maimonides: a Reappraisal." Spanish Review, ii. 31-36.

Marx, Alexander (ed.) "Texts by and about Maimonides." Jewish Quarterly Review, xxv. 371-428.

Morais, Sabato. "A Letter by Maimonides to the Jews of South Arabia entitled 'The Inspired Hope.'" Jewish Quarterly Review, xxv. 330-369.

Ogilvy, J. D. A. See ENGLISH, Section v.

Patch, H. R. "Necessity in Boethius and the Neoplatonists." Speculum, x. 393-404.

Pflaum, H. "A Strange Crusader's Song." Speculum, x. 337-339.

Sharp, D. E. "Further Philosophical Doctrines of Kilwardby." New Scholasticism, ix. 39-55.

Tenny, M. F. "Tacitus through the Centuries to the Age of Printing." University of Colorado Studies, xxii. 341-363.

Wolfson, H. A. "The Internal Senses in Latin, Arabic, and Hebrew Philosophic Texts." Harvard Theological Review, xxviii. 69-133.

——— "Maimonides on the Internal Senses." Jewish Quarterly Review, xxv. 441-467.

Zeitlin, Solomon. Maimonides: a Biography. N. Y.

Arthurian Cycle. (With the collaboration of John J. Parry.)

Brooks, Philip. "Notes on Rare Books." N. Y. Times Book Review, Apr. 14, 1935, p. 23.

Sale of the library of John B. Stetson, Jr.

- Edmunds, A. J. "A Buddhist Grail." N&Q, CLXVIII (Mar. 23). 205.
- "Alfred Nutt on the Buddhist Holy Grail." Ibid. (Apr. 13). 262.
- Faust, G. P. Sir Degare, a Study of the Texts and Narrative Structure. Princeton, N. J.
- Fowler, Earle B. Spenser and the System of Courtly Love. Louisville, Ky., 1934.
- Gerould, G. H. "Arthurian Romance and the Date of the Relief at Modena." Speculum, x. 355-376.
- Gray, L. H. "The Origin of the Name Glastonbury." Speculum, x. 46-53.
- Hammer, Jacob. "A Commentary on the 'Prophetia Merlini' (Geoffrey of Monmouth's 'Historia Regum Britanniae,' Book VII)." Speculum, x. 1-30.
- Hooper, A. G. "The Lambeth Palace MS of the 'Awntyrs off Arthure.'" Leeds Studies in English and Kindred Langs. III (1934). 37-43.
- Krappe, A. H. "L'Enserrement de Merlin." Romania, LX (1934). 79-85.
- "Ueber die Sagen von der Geschwisterehe im Mittelalter." Archiv, Vol. xc.
- Michels, R. J. "Deux traces du 'Chevalier de la Charette' observées dans l'Amadis de Gaula." BHi, XXXVIII. 478-480.
- Michie, Sarah. "Celtic Myth and Spenserian Romance." Univ. of Virginia Abstracts of Diss., pp. 11-13.
- Nitze, W. A. "Un Ex-Libris Médiéval." Mélanges . . . offerts à Paul Lammonier (Paris), pp. 51-57.
- Brian Fitzalan (fl. 1282-1303) owned MS. Hatton 82 of the Perlesvaus.
- Parkinson, R. H. "Lady du Lake." N&Q, CLXVIII. 260-261.
- Schlauch, Margaret. "Saints Tryphina and Hirlanda." Speculum, x. 161-162.
- Swanson, A. B. A Study of the 1516 and the 1523 Editions of the 'Perlesvaus.' University of Chicago Diss. Austin, Tex. 1934.
- Vignerat, L. A. "Chrétien de Troyes Rediscovered." MP, XXXII. 341-342.
- Weinberg, B. "The Magic Chessboard in the 'Perlesvaus': an Example of Medieval Literary Borrowing." PMLA, L. 25-35.
- Celtic Languages and Literatures. Hull, Vernam. "The Invasion of Nemed." MP, XXXIII. 119-123.
- (ed.) Hessens Irisches Lexicon. Fasciculus 2. Halle.
- Smith, R. M. "The Cach Formulas in the Irish Laws." Zeitschrift für celtische Philologie, XX. 262-277.
- See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Spenser.
- Folk-lore. Ashton, J. W. "Jack-a-Kent; the evolution of a folk figure." JAFLL, XLVII (1934). 362-368.
- Bond, Donald F. "The Law and Lawyers in English Proverbs." Journal of the American Bar Association, XXI. 724-727.
- Botkin, B. A. "Folk-Say and Space: Genesis and Exodus." Southwest Review, XX. 321-335.
- Burris, E. E. "The Place of the Dog in Superstition as Revealed in Latin Literature." Classical Philology, XXX. 32-42.

Cary, M. B., Jr. "Mademoiselle from Armentières." JAF, XLVII (1934). 369-376.

Collitz, Hermann. "Konig Yima und Saturn." Oriental Studies in Honour of Dastwji Saheb Curseltji Erachji Pavry, pp. 86-108.

Crum, R. H. "More Strange Islands." Classical Weekly, XXVIII. 179-180.

Dorado, C. M. "Popular Customs in the Valencian Region." Spanish Review, II. 89-93.

Gresham, F. B. "The Jew's Daughter: an Example of Ballad Variation." JAF, XLVII (1934). 358-361.

Hadas, Moses. "Utopian Sources in Herodotus." Classical Philology, XXX. 113-122.

Hewitt, J. W. "The Image in the Sand." Classical Philology, XXX. 16-22.

Kaufman, D. B. "Parallels." Classical Weekly, XXIX. 3. Manus manum lavat.

Knapp, C. "Experientia docet." Classical Weekly, XXIX. 1.

Kolodin, Irving. "Folk Songs—Variations on a Theme." Theatre Arts Monthly, XIX. 129-136.

Korson, George. "Anthracite Miners as Bards and Minstrels." American Speech, X. 260-268.

Krappe, A. H. See SPANISH, Section II.

———"Studies on the 'Seven Sages of Rome,' XI, 'Inclusa.'" Archivum Romanicum, XIX. 213-226.

Mahr, August C. See GERMANIC, Germans in America.

Memming, G. H. R. See GERMANIC, Recent and Contemporary Literature, s.v. Miscellaneous.

McCartney, E. S. "Wayfaring Signs." Classical Philology, XXX. 97-112.

Rotunda, D. P. See SPANISH, Section III.

Seeleman, R. "Folkloric Elements in Valle-Inclán." HR, III. 103-118.

Smyser, H. M. and Stroup, T. B. "Analogues to the Mak Story." JAF, XLVII (1934). 378-381.

Thompson, Stith. Motif-Index of Folk-Literature: a Classification of Narrative Elements in Folk-Tales, Ballads, Myths, Fables, Mediaeval Romances, Exempla, Fabliaux, Jest-Books, and Local Legends. IV, J: The Wise and the Foolish; K: Deceptions (Indiana University Studies, XX=FF Communications, CIX). Bloomington, Indiana, and Helsinki.

East European. (With the collaboration of Arthur P. Coleman.)

Coleman, Arthur P. Marya, A Tale of Ukraine, translated from the Polish of Antoni Malczewski, with M. M. Coleman. Schenectady.

———"The Cultural Emergence of Sub-Carpathian Ruthenia," Books Abroad, IX, No. 3. 256-260.

———"Slavonic Studies in the U. S.," Baltic Countries, Torun, Poland, I, No. 1. 94-97.

———"Polish Studies in American Universities," The New American (Chicago), II, No. 9. 3 and 6.

———"A Brief Survey of Ukrainian Literature," The Ukrainian Weekly, Jersey City, N. J., III, Nos. 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, p. 2 of each issue.

Deptula, Szymon St. "Some Peculiarities of Milwaukee English and Polish," The Cavalier (Milwaukee), May, 1935, and reprinted in Kuryer Polski (Milwaukee), May 27-29.

——— "Modern Polish Literature" Kuryer Polski, May 27-29.

——— "The Finest Historical Novel in Polish Literature," Kuryer Polski, Nov. 4-5, 1935, and reprinted in Nowy Świat, N. Y., Dec. 1 and 8.

——— "Moralność pani Dulskiej" (by Zapolska), Kuryer Polski, Dec. 11-12.

Kirkconnell, Watson, "A Polish Miscellany," Slavonic Review, xiv, No. 40, 1-10, July.

——— "Fiction and Drama: A Brief Essay on the Ukrainian Writings of Dmytro Sollandy and Alexis Wm. Luhowy," Novy Shlyakh, Saskatoon, Canada, vi, No. 35, Aug. 27.

——— "A Ukrainian Expressionist," Novy Shlyakh, vi, No. 40, Oct. 1.

——— "Ukrainian Poetry," New Magazine, Regina, Canada, i, No. 7, Oct.

——— "Scholarship in Szeged," Kanadai Magyar Ujsag, Winnipeg, Canada, xii, No. 2, Jan. 4.

——— "Hungary's Linguistic Isolation," Hungarian Quarterly, Budapest, i, No. 1, Dec.

——— "Come, Holy Spirit," translation from Hungarian of Sandor Sik, Western Baptist, Edmonton, Canada, xxviii, No. 9, Dec.

——— Ukrainian and Hungarian Sections in Canadian Overtones. Columbia Press, Winnipeg.

Manning, Clarence A. Introduction to The Daina, An Anthology of Lithuanian and Latvian Folk-Songs. Uriah Katzenelenbogen. Chicago: Lithuanian News Publ. Co., pp. v and vi.

——— "Slavonic Studies in the U. S." MLJ, xix. 425-432.

——— "The Christian Attitude of Dostoevsky," Russian Orihodox Journal, Vol. ix, pp. 8, 20.

Noyes, George R. (Transl.) Cankar, I. Slovene Idylls. Slavonic Review, April, 1935, xiii. 494-506 (with A. J. Klančar).

——— (transl.) Kasprowicz, J. "My Soul has fallen in Love." The New American (Chicago), August, 1935, p. 1 (with D. Durst).

——— Mickiewicz, Adam. "Poems." Slavonic Review, April, xiii. 481-493 (with M. B. Peacock).

——— Mickiewicz, Adam. "Sonnets." Ibid., July, xiv. 11, 12 (with B. C. Woodbury).

Prince, John D. "Slavonic Loan Material in Hungarian," Proceedings Amer. Philosophical Soc., lxxv. 591-603.

Senn, Alfred. "Die athematischen Verba in Mikalojus Dauksza's Schriften," Studi Baltici, ed. by Prof. Giacomo Devoto, iv. 86-122 (publ. by the Istituto per l'Europa Orientale, Rome, Italy).

——— "Zu den litauischen Zahlwörten für 11-19." Studi Baltici, v.

Simmons, Ernest J. See ENGLISH, Section III.

ENGLISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

BY ALBERT C. BAUGH

I. LINGUISTICS

Allen, Don C. "A Note on Sixteenth Century Vernacular English." Lang, xi. 17-19.

Significant spellings from the Nomenclator (1567) of Junius.

Allen, Hope Emily. "Influence of Superstition on Vocabulary: Two Related Examples (Prepared from the Files of the Early Modern English Dictionary)."
PMLA, L. 1033-1046.

——— "Early Modern English Dictionary." LTLS, May 23, 1935, p. 331.

——— "English 'curds' or 'fresh cheese' and the Wood-louse." N&Q, CLXIX. 9-10.

——— "The Lamb and the Flag." N&Q, CLXVIII. 334.

——— "Superstitions attached to the black-beetle, lobster, wood-louse." N&Q, CLXVIII. 460.

Altrocchi, R. Deceptive Cognates: Italian-English and English-Italian. Chicago.

Anderson, George K. "Some Irregular Uses of the Instrumental Case in Old English." PMLA, L. 946-956.

Anderson, Marjorie, and Williams, Blanche C. Old English Handbook. Boston.

Barnouw, A. J. "How English Was Taught in Jan van Hout's Leyden." English Studies, xvii. 1-7.

Baugh, Albert C. A History of the English Language. New York.
[Exceptional in its full treatment of Modern (including American) English and its new material on OF loan-words.—Ed.]

——— "The Chronology of French Loan-Words in English." MLN, L. 90-93.

Bloomfield, Leonard. "The Stressed Vowels of American English." Lang, xi. 97-116.

"The article possesses a more general interest as an example of the technique of analyzing phonemically the structure of a dialect." (Preliminary extract)

Brown, Huntington. "The Modern Development of Middle-English -ly, -lie in Rhyme." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 43-45.

Bullock, R. D., Jr. "The Cream of the Jest." N&Q, CLXIX. 115.

Burkhart, Russell S. "The Syntax of Place in Old English Prose." Univ. of Pittsburgh . . . Abstracts of Theses, xi. 63-70.

Craigie, Sir William A. A Dictionary of the Older Scottish Tongue from the Twelfth Century to the End of the Sixteenth. Part v, Chamberlane-Commove. Chicago.

——— "The English of the Nomenclator." Lang, xi. 242-243.
Comment on D. C. Allen's paper (Lang, xi. 1).

Curme, George O. Parts of Speech and Accidence (volume II of Curme and Kurath's A Grammar of the English Language). N. Y.

Dike, Edwin B. "Obsolete English Words: Some Recent Views." JEGP, xxxiv. 351-365.

Emeneau, M. B. "The Dialect of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia." Lang, xi, 140-147.

Forster, M. "Altenglisch stōr, ein altirisches Lehnwort." ESL, lxx. 49-54.

Gibson, Martha J. "Survival of Old English eax, æx." AS, x. 155-156.

Still found instead of axle in scattered sections of this country and in records of the colonial period.

Grube, F. W. "Meat Foods of the Anglo-Saxons." JEGP, xxxiv. 511-529.

Haessler, Luise. "Old English bebeodan and forbeodan." Lang, xi. 211-215. Variations in meaning and use.

——— See GERMANIC, German.

Holmes, F. Lincoln D. See GENERAL, Experimental Phonetics.

Hulbert, James R. Bright's Anglo-Saxon Reader, Revised and Enlarged. N. Y.

Kennedy, Arthur G. Current English. Boston.

A comprehensive and sensible book described in the sub-title as "a study of present-day usages and tendencies, including pronunciation, spelling, grammatical practice, word-coining, and the shifting of meanings."

Knott, Thomas A. "How the Dictionary Determines What Pronunciations to Use." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 1-10.

Knowlton, E. C. "Begging the Question—A Variety." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 762-764.

A select list of words such as efficiency, mid-Victorian, Puritan, commonly used with a prejudice or at least an implicit assumption.

Krumpelmann, John T. "Hoodlum." MLN, L. 93-95.

The word hoodlum first recorded c. 1870 in San Francisco is similar in meaning to the Bavarian hodalum, hudalum, etc.

Leopold, W. F. "Form or Function as the Basis of Grammar?" JEGP, xxxiv. 414-431.

A criticism of Jespersen's approach and a defense of function as the proper basis of grammar.

Magoun, Francis P., Jr. "Territorial, Place-, and River-Names in the Old-English Chronicle, A-Text (Parker MS)," Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 69-111.

Malone, Kemp. "Some Linguistic Studies of 1933 and 1934." MLN, L. 515-534.

——— "Herlekin and Herlewin." English Studies, xvii. 141-144.

Marckwardt, Albert H. "Origin and Extension of the Voiceless Preterit and the Past Participle Inflections of the English Irregular Weak Verb Conjugation." Essays and Studies in English and Comparative Literature by Members of the English Department of the University of Michigan (Univ. of Michigan Publications, Lang. & Lit., xiii), pp. 150-328.

——— "'Flair,' A Recent Semantic Development." AS, x. 104-106.

Meritt, Herbert. "An OE. Gloss: Ober eliman. innannorum." MLN, L. 77-82.

Mezger, Fritz. "Ae. fleard n. = aisl. flárád n. - ae. reord < **rered*?" Archiv, CLXVII. 66-67.

——— "Ae. tintreg(a) < **tind-ireg(a)*?" Archiv, CLXVII. 252-253.

Miller, Edmund E. "American and English Translations of The Oppermanns." AS, x. 180-183.

Moore, Samuel, Meech, Sanford B., and Whitehall, Harold. "Middle English Dialect Characteristics and Dialect Boundaries. Preliminary Report of an Investigation Based Exclusively on Localized Texts and Documents." Essays and Studies in English and Comparative Literature by Members of the English Department of the University of Michigan (Univ. of Michigan Publications, Lang. and Lit., XIII), pp. 1-60.

The most valuable study yet published of the geographical extent of the principal dialect criteria in later Middle English. Three maps present the results of the study graphically.

Purcell, J. M. "Victorian and Arride." MLN, L. 328.

Read, A. W. "Amphi-Atlantic English." English Studies, xvii. 161-178.

A collection of utterances from both sides of the Atlantic on the English language, chiefly from the eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries.

Russell, I. Willis. "The Dangling Participle: Illustrations of Linguistic Change." AS, x. 113-118.

Shohara, Hide. "The Genesis of the Articulatory Movements of Speech." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 343-348.

Steadman, J. M., Jr. "A Study of Verbal Taboos." AS, x. 93-103.

"The characteristics of verbal taboos: (1) coarse, obscene words, (2) words of an unpleasant suggestion, and (3) innocent words that have become contaminated."

Thomas, Russell. "The Use of the Superlative Degree for the Comparative." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 821-829.

Watson, George. "The Designation of an Atmospheric Phenomenon. JEGP, xxxiv. 565-566.

Various designations for "heat waves" in the English dialects.

West, Robert. "Speech and Hearing." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 178-188.

Whitehall, Harold. "The Background of the Verb bask." PQ, xiv. 229-236.

——— "Scatcliffe: A Place-name Derivation." Essays and Studies in English and Comparative Literature by Members of the English Department of the University of Michigan (Univ. of Michigan Publications, Lang. & Lit., XIII), pp. 73-79.

Suggests a connection with ON. skeiþ, allied to shed in watershed.

——— "Some Fifteenth-century Spellings from the Nottingham Records." Essays and Studies in English and Comparative Literature by Members of the English Department of the University of Michigan (Univ. of Michigan Publications, Lang. & Lit., XIII), pp. 61-71.

Spellings throwing some light on the diphthongization of i and u in the Great Vowel Shift. The evidence is interpreted as indicating a pronunciation [ei] and [ɔ].

Williamson, Arleigh B. "Two Years' Experience with Recording Equipment." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 195-216.

II. VERSIFICATION

Schramm, Wilbur L. "A Characteristic of Rime." PMLA, L. 1223-1227.

Wallerstein, Ruth C. "The Development of the Rhetoric and Metre of the Heroic Couplet, especially in 1625-1645." PMLA, L. 166-209.

See Section VIII, s.v. Milton, Diekhoff.

III. GENERAL

Abbott, Wilbur C. Adventures in Reputation. Cambridge, Mass. Includes inter alia essays on Macaulay, Chesterfield, and Hume.

Blair, Walter, and Chandler, W. K. Approaches to Poetry. N. Y.

Brooks, Cleanth, Jr. "Three Revolutions in Poetry." Southern Rev., I. 151-163; 328-338; 568-583.

I. Metaphor and the Tradition; II. Wit and Seriousness; III. Metaphysical Poetry and the Ivory Tower.

Brown, Huntington. "The Classical Tradition in English Literature: A Bibliography." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., XVIII. 7-46.

Brown, Karl and Haskell, Daniel C. The Shorthand Collection in the New York Public Library: A Catalogue of Books, Periodicals, and Manuscripts Brought Together by the National Shorthand Reporters' Association and the Library. N. Y.

Brown, Ivor. "The Pendulum of Taste." Atl. Mo., CLVI. 165-169.

Case, Arthur E. A Bibliography of English Poetical Miscellanies, 1521-1750. Oxford.

In addition to the bibliographical entry there are brief indications of content, modern editions, and the location of copies.

Crane, Ronald S. "History versus Criticism in the University Study of Literature." Eng. Jour., College ed., XXIV. 645-667.

Definition of the scope and aim of literary history and of literary criticism with an opinion on their proper spheres in college and university work.

Dunne, G. W. E. "Concerning the Literary Principle." Cath. World, CXLII. 306-315.

Durling, Dwight L. Georgic Tradition in English Poetry. N. Y. (Columbia Univ. Studies in Eng. and Compar. Lit., No. 121.)

Graham, Bessie. Famous Literary Prizes and Their Winners. Revised and Enlarged by Jessie H. Murray. N. Y.

Guerard, Albert. Literature and Society. Boston. ✓

Hadzsits, George D. Lucretius and His Influence. New York. (Our Debt to Greece and Rome, No. 12.)

Hess, M. Whitcomb. "The Relation between Music and Poetry." Personalist, xv (1934). 140-147.

Hicks, Granville. "Literature and Revolution." Eng. Jour., XXIV. 219-239.

Hornbeak, Katherine G. The Complete Letter-Writer in English, 1568-1800. Northampton, Mass., 1934. (Smith Coll. Studies in Mod. Languages, Vol. xv, Nos. 3-4.)

Hunt, Everett L. "The Social Interpretation of Literature." Eng. Jour., XXIV. 214-219.

Hutton, James. The Greek Anthology in Italy to the Year 1800. Ithaca. (Cornell Studies in English, XXIII).

Preliminary to a study of the Greek Anthology in England.

Jockers, Ernst. "Philosophie und Literaturwissenschaft." GR, x. 73-97; 166-186.

Kirk, Clare M. "The Marxist Dogma in Literature." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 209–213.

Laistner, M. L. W. "The Christian Attitude to Pagan Literature." History, n.s. xix. 49–54.

Leacock, Stephen B. Humor, Its Theory and Technique, with Examples and Samples. N. Y.

Lovejoy, Arthur O. and Boas, George. Primitivism and Related Ideas in Antiquity. (A Documentary History of Primitivism and Related Ideas, v. i). Baltimore.

Major, John C. The Role of Personal Memoirs in English Biography and Novel. Philadelphia. (Univ. of Penna. diss.)

Malone, Kemp. "A Bibliography of the Writings of Carleton Brown," PMLA, l. v–viii.

Mason, John E. Gentlefolk in the Making: Studies in the History of English Courtesy Literature and Related Topics from 1531 to 1774. Philadelphia. (Univ. of Penna. diss.).

Millett, Fred B. "Literary Prize Winners." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 269–282. Contains lists of awards from the beginning of each prize.

Moore, Ulric. "Illusion in the Theatre." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 26–36.

Myers, Henry A. "The Analysis of Laughter." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 452–463.

Nordell, Oscar. "Concerning English Translations from the Swedish Poem Friithiof's Saga: A Critique." SS, xiii (1934). 53–66.

Osgood, Charles G. The Voice of England: A History of English Literature. N. Y.

Ransom, John C. "The Psychologist Looks at Poetry." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 575–592.

On the criticism of I. A. Richards.

——— "The Cathartic Principle." Amer. Rev., v. 287–300.

——— "The Minetic Principle." Amer. Rev., v. 536–551.

——— "The Tense of Poetry." Southern Rev., i. 221–238.

Read, Herbert. "Art and the Revolutionary Attitude." Southern Rev., i. 239–252.

Routh, James. "Do Women Writers Use More Words than Men?" JEGP, xxxiv. 238–242.

Rudé, Jack L. "Poetic Justice: A Study of the Problem of Human Conduct in Tragedy from Aeschylus to Shakespeare." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 330–332.

Simmons, Ernest J. English Literature and Culture in Russia (1553–1840). Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in Compar. Lit., Vol. xii.)

Stark, Lewis M. "English Literature as Reflected in Bookplate Design." Franklin Lectures, August, pp. 1–104. (Univ. of New Hampshire M.A. thesis.)

Warren, Austin. "My Public." Amer. Rev., vi. 95–105.

A critique of Guérard, as above.

Weiss, Harry B. See AMERICAN, Section II.

Wenger, Christian N. See GENERAL, Æsthetics.

Willard, James F. Progress of Medieval Studies in the United States of America and Canada: Bulletin No. 12. Boulder, Colorado.

[Wilson, Carroll A.] First Appearance in Print of Some Four Hundred Familiar Quotations. Exhibited at the Olin Memorial Library, Wesleyan University . . . [Middletown, Conn.]

Wolff, Max J. See GENERAL, Æsthetics.

IV. THEMES, FORMS, CHARACTER TYPES

Ashton, J. W. See GENERAL, Folk-Lore.

Elkins, Kimball C. "Utopias." Harvard Library Notes, No. 25. pp. 46-50.
Description of a collection of 420 volumes recently acquired.

Essays in Dramatic Literature: The Parrott Presentation Volume, ed. Hardin Craig. Princeton.

The contributions to this volume are separately listed.

Gerould, Katharine F. "An Essay on Essays." No. Am. Rev., CCXL. 409-420.

Hollingsworth, Keith. "In the First Person." Eng. Jour., XXIV. 801-807.

Krappe, Alexander H. "Studies on the Seven Sages of Rome." Archivum Romanicum, XIX. 213-226.

Kurtz, Leonard P. The Dance of Death and the Macabre Spirit in European Literature. New York, [1934]. (Columbia Univ. diss.)

Linn, James W. and Taylor, Houghton W. A Foreword to Fiction. N. Y.

Millett, Fred B. and Bentley, Gerald E. The Art of the Drama. N. Y.

Parks, Edd W. and Beatty, Richmond C. (edd.). The English Drama: An Anthology, 900-1642. N. Y.

Shaw, Marian (ed.). Essay and General Literature Index, 1934 Supplement. An Index to Three Thousand, Three Hundred and Forty-one Essays and Articles in One Hundred and Eighty-eight Volumes of Collections of Essays and Miscellaneous Works. N. Y., 1934. The same, 1935 Supplement. N. Y.

Stebbins, Henry M. "The Soldier in the English Novel." [Univ. of Pittsburgh] Abstracts of Dissertations. x (1934). 314-317.

Thompson, Stith. See GENERAL, Folk-Lore.

Vexler, Julius. "The Essence of Comedy." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 292-310.

Withington, Robert. "The Continuity of Dramatic Development." SAB, x. 73-81.

V. OLD ENGLISH LITERATURE

Miscellaneous. Bartlett, Adeline C. The Larger Rhetorical Patterns in Anglo-Saxon Poetry. N. Y. (Columbia Univ. Studies in Eng. and Compar. Lit., No. 122).

Henel, Heinrich. "Planetenglaube in Ælfrics Zeit." Anglia, LVIII (1934). 292-317.

——— "Altenglischer Mönchsaberglaube." ESL, LXIX. 329-349.

Malone, Kemp. "Healfdene." ESL, LXX. 74-76.

Ogilvy, J. D. A. "Anglo-Latin Scholarship, 597-780." Univ. of Colorado Studies, XXII. 327-340.

Willard, Rudolph. Two Apocrypha in Old English Homilies. Leipzig. (Beiträge zur englischen Philologie, Heft xxx).

A study of two legends, the transit of the soul through the seven heavens and the three utterances of the soul as found in two unpublished homilies.

Bede. Willard, Rudolph. "The Venerable Bede: 725-1935." Amer. Church Mo., xxxvii. 266-280.

Beowulf. Cassidy, F. G. "Suggested Repunctuation of a Passage in Beowulf." MLN, L. 88-89.

DuBois, Arthur E. "Beowulf, 489-490." MLN, L. 89-90.

——— "Beowulf, 1107 and 2577: Hoards, Swords, and Shields." ESt, LXIX. 321-328.

Eliason, Norman E. "Wulfhlið (Beowulf, l. 1358)." JEGP, xxxiv. 20-23.
On the association of wolves with cliffs as suggesting the compound.

Herben, Stephen J., Jr. "Heorot." PMLA, L. 933-945.
Identifies the site with a hilltop farm noted on a map of 1780 with the unusual names Stor Hiort and Lille Hiort.

Traver, Hope. "Beowulf 648-649 Once More." Archiv, CLXVII. 253-256.

Body and Soul. Willard, Rudolph. "The Address of the Soul to the Body." PMLA, L. 957-983.

Prints with commentary passages from two homilies (or parts of one homily) from MSS. Junius 85 and Cambridge Univ. Library II 1. 33.

Chronicle. See Section I, s.v. Magoun.

Computus. Henel, Heinrich. Studien zum altenglischen Computus. Leipzig, 1934. (Beiträge zur englischen Philologie, 26.)

Franks Casket. Souers, Philip W. "The Top of the Franks Casket." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvi. 163-179.

A survey of previous interpretations preparatory to a full study of the casket.

——— "The Franks Casket: Left Side." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 199-209.

Vercelli Book. Herben, Stephen J., Jr. "The Vercelli Book: A New Hypothesis." Speculum, x. 91-94.

Suggests that the MS was taken to the Council of Vercelli by Ulf, the Norman bishop of Dorchester appointed by Edward the Confessor, and was possibly used as a bribe when Ulf was threatened with ecclesiastical discipline.

Widsith. Malone, Kemp. "Alliteration in Widsith." ELH, II. 291-293.

VI. MIDDLE ENGLISH LITERATURE

Miscellaneous. Arrowood, Chas. F. "Sir John Fortescue on the Education of Rulers." Speculum, x. 404-410.

Brentano, Sister Mary Theresa. Relationship of the Latin Facetus Literature to the Medieval English Courtesy Poems. Lawrence. (Bull. of the Univ. of Kansas: Humanistic Studies, Vol. v, No. 2.)

Bressie, Ramona. "The Leicester Abbey Catalogue." LTLS, Oct. 24, p. 671.
Identifications of medieval MSS from the library of the Abbey of St. Mary de Pratis at Leicester.

Flynn, Vincent. "Englishmen in Rome, 1450-1510." LTLS, Sept. 12, p. 565.
Calls attention to a MS recording the names of Englishmen in Rome, including Lily the grammarian, Bainbridge, Colet, etc.

Hooper, A. G. See GENERAL, Arthurian Cycle.

Karpinski, L. C. and Stanbach, C. W. "An Anglo-Norman Algorism of the Fourteenth Century." Isis, xxiii, 121-152.

Lenhart, John M. Pre-Reformation Printed Books: A Study in Statistical and Applied Bibliography. Washington, D. C. (Franciscan Studies, No. 14).

McKeehan, Irene P. "Contemporary Life in Two Twelfth-Century Saints' Legends." Univ. of Colorado Studies, xxii, 289-305.

Meech, Sanford B. "An Early Treatise in English Concerning Latin Grammar." Essays and Studies in English and Comparative Literature by Members of the English Department of the University of Michigan (Univ. of Michigan Publications, Lang. & Lit., xiii), pp. 81-125.

——— "Early Application of Latin Grammar to English." PMLA, L, 1012-1032.

Prints four fifteenth-century treatises on Latin Grammar in English.

——— "Three Musical Treatises in English from a Fifteenth-Century Manuscript." Speculum, x, 235-269.

Painter, Sidney. "The Ideas of Chivalry." Johns Hopkins Alumni Mag., xxiii, 218-232.

Slover, Clark H. "Glastonbury Abbey and the Fusing of English Literary Culture." Speculum, x, 147-160.

Evidence of Glastonbury's relations with Irish, Welsh, and other cultural currents and the possibility of her influence through the transfer of Glastonbury monks to other centers.

Smith, Sister Mary F. Wisdom and Personification of Wisdom Occurring in Middle English Literature before 1500. Washington, D. C. (Catholic Univ. of Amer. diss.)

Tatlock, J. S. P. "Early English in the Universities." Eng. Jour., College Ed., xxiv, 555-564.

Thompson, Daniel V. "Medieval Parchment-making." Library, n.s. xvi, 113-117.

Wells, John E. Sixth Supplement to a Manual of the Writings in Middle English, 1050-1400: Additions and Modifications to July, 1935. New Haven.

Ancren Riwe. Allen, Hope E. "The Tortington Chartulary." LTLS, Feb. 14, 1935, p. 92.

Seeks information about a lost chartulary for light it would throw on Deorman of London, whose three daughters, with the consent of their brother Ordgar, gave London land to Westminster Abbey in return for "plenam . . . ejusdem ecclesie societatem" and whom she now believes identical with the Emma, Christina, and Gunhilda to whom the abbot of Westminster gave the hermitage of Kilburn, circa 1134 and for whom she holds the Ancren Riwe was originally written.

——— "The Three Daughters of Deorman." PMLA, L, 899-902.

Further discussion of the facts noted in the preceding entry.

Whiting, B. J. "Proverbs in the Ancren Riwe and the Recluse." MLR, xxx, 502-505.

Ballad. Elmquist, Karl E. "Robin Hood: Bibliography." N&Q, clxviii, 369.

Gresham, Foster B. "The Jew's Daughter: An Example of Ballad Variation." JAF, xlvii (1934), 358-361.

Hustvedt, Sigurd B. "Grundtvig's Index B of English and Scottish Ballads." PMLA, L. 595-605.

Carol. Greene, Richard L. The Early English Carols. Oxford.

Castle of Perseverance. Withington, Robert. "The Castle of Perseverance, line 695." PQ, xiv. 270.

Caxton. See below, s.v. Rivers, Earl of.

Chaucer. Aiken, Pauline. "Vincent of Beauvais and Dame Pertalote's Knowledge of Medicine." Speculum, x. 281-287.

Finds all of Chaucer's ideas of physic in the Nun's Priest's Tale in Vincent of Beauvais.

Atkinson, Dorothy F. "Chaucer Allusions." N&Q, CLXIX. 116; 205.

—— "References to Chaucer." N&Q, CLXVIII. 313.

Braddy, Haldeen. "The Historical Background of the Parlement of Foules." RES, xi. 204-209.

Answers Professor Manly's criticism. Manly replies, pp. 209-213.

—— "The Two Petros in the Monkes Tale." PMLA, L. 69-80.

Suggests that Chaucer got his information about Pedro of Castile from his friend Sir Guichard d'Angle (died 1380). Establishes the source of Chaucer's account of Pierre of Cyprus as Machaut's Prise d'Alexandrie (c. 1369). Concludes that the Monk's Tale should be dated in the neighborhood of 1374 or 1375.

—— "Sir Peter and the Envoy to Bukton." PQ, xiv. 368-370.

Bronson, Bertrand H. In Appreciation of Chaucer's Parlement of Foules. Berkeley, Calif. (Univ. of Calif. Pub. in English, Vol. III, No. 5, pp. 193-224.)

Brown, Carleton (ed.). Chaucer: The Pardoner's Tale. Oxford.

The introduction suggests that the tale was transferred from the Parson, that the exemplum originally intended was one illustrating the sins of the tavern, that the story of the three rioters was substituted when the tale was given to the Pardoner, and that the quest for death, which is peculiar to Chaucer's version of the exemplum, owes something to the legend of the Wandering Jew.

—— "Chaucer's Wretched Engendring." PMLA, L. 997-1011.

Advances arresting reasons for identifying the poem printed by MacCracken (Minor Poems of Lydgate, I. 43-48) under the title "An Holy Meditacion" with Chaucer's lost work. The source is shown to be the De Contemptu Mundi of Innocent III.

Camden, Carroll, Jr. "The Physiognomy of Thopas." RES, xi. 326-330.

"It is the purpose of this paper to attempt to show that Chaucer also conceived of his knight as a very effeminate creature who conformed to the physiognomical conception of the timid and cowardly man, and that he thus burlesqued the typical knightly hero."

Chappell, Louis W. "Another 'Canterbury Tale'." MLN, L. 87-88.

An allusion in Col. William Byrd's account of the dividing line between Virginia and North Carolina.

Coffman, George R. "A Note on the Miller's Prologue." MLN, L. 311-312.

Crow, Martin M. "Corrections in the Paris Manuscript of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, xv. 5-18.

Gerould, Gordon H. (ed.) The Prologue and Four Canterbury Tales. N. Y.

Harrison, Benjamin S. "The Rhetorical Inconsistency of Chaucer's Franklin." SP, xxxii. 55-61.

Harvey, S. W. "Chaucer's Debt to Sacrobosco." JEGP, xxxiv. 34-38.

The extent to which Messahala's treatise accounts for Chaucer's Astrolabe has been over-stated. He filled in considerably from Sacrobosco's De Sphaera and in a way that indicates the same independence of mind that he showed in his verse appropriations.

Krauss, Russell. "John Heyron of Newton Plecy, Somerset." Speculum, x. 187-189.

Correction and comment on Manly's note, Speculum, ix. 86

Lawrence, William W. "Satire in Sir Thopas." PMLA, L. 81-91.

Attacks the theories of Miss Winstanley and Professor Manly that Sir Thopas was written as a satire on the Flemings.

Linthicum, M. Channing. "Faldyng and Modlee." JEGP, xxxiv. 39-41.

Notes on the character of these two cloths.

Loomis, Laure H. "Chaucer's 'Jewes wek' and Guy of Warwick." PQ, xiv. 371-373.

Lyons, Clifford P. "The Marriage Debate in the Canterbury Tales." ELH, II. 252-262.

Calls attention to the absence of any indication in the links pointing to an intention on Chaucer's part to make dramatic use of a debate on marriage.

Martin, Willard E., Jr. A Chaucer Bibliography, 1925-1933. Durham, N. C.

Patch, Howard R. "Precious Stones in The House of Fame." MLN, L. 312-317.

Plimpton, George A. The Education of Chaucer Illustrated from the School-books in Use in his Time. London and N. Y.

Pratt, Robert A. "Chaucer and Boccaccio." LTLS, Feb. 28, 1935, p. 124.

Ross, Woodburn O. "Another Analogue to The Prioresses Tale." MLN, L. 307-310.

An analogue from Bromyard's Summa Predicantium which combines characteristics of all three types (A, B, and C) distinguished by Brown.

Severs, J. Burke. "The Source of Chaucer's Melibeus." PMLA, L. 92-99.

Over 150 passages demonstrate Chaucer's dependence upon a text of the OF Mélibée represented by B.N. MS 1165 rather than Le Menagier de Paris.

Stevenson, Hazel A. "A Possible Relation Between Chaucer's Long Lease and the Date of his Birth." MLN, L. 318-322.

A somewhat fanciful suggestion that since the rent of the Westminster house was 53s. and Chaucer may have been 53 at the time, he fixed on 53 years for the duration of the lease.

Tatlock, J. S. P. "The Canterbury Tales in 1400." PMLA, L. 100-139.

Considers the various questions involved in visualizing the physical form in which Chaucer left the Canterbury Tales at his death, stresses the importance of the desire of commercial producers of MSS to avoid as many signs of incompleteness as they could, favors the use exclusively of internal evidence in determining the order of the tales, denies any significance to the evidence of the MSS on this point, and returns to the arrangement of the groups proposed by Furnivall. Appended is an extensive "Note on the Hengwrt MS."

——— "The Date of the Troilus: and Minor Chauceriana." MLN, L. 277-296.

Argues against a late date for Troilus, opposing Root's planetary evidence. Considers the friar in the Summoner's Tale a Carmelite and Chaucer's friar not particularized.

Thompson, C. R. "A Note on Nicholas Chaucer." PQ, xiv. 275-278.

Train, Lilla. "Chaucer's Ladyes Foure and Twenty." MLN, L. 85-87.

A parallel from Walter Map to the passage in the Wife of Bath's Tale.

Wager, Willis J. "The So-Called Prologue to the Knigh's Tale." MLN, L. 296-307.

Considers lines 875-892 a late interpolation and that "the tempest at hir hoom-comynge" is not a reference to Queen Anne's arrival in England.

Walcutt, Charles C. "The Pronoun of Address in Troilus and Criseyde." PQ, xiv. 282-287.

Weatherly, Edward H. "A Note on Chaucer's Pardoner's Prologue." MLN, L. 310-311.

Whitford, Harold C. "A New Document concerning Robert Chaucer." PQ, xiv. 278-282.

Young, Karl. "A Note on Chaucer's Friar." MLN, L. 83-85.

Cites a record of 1321 from the register of the Bishop of Bath and Wells in which a vicar who had had two children by a certain young woman was compelled to pay six marks as an aid in securing for her an appropriate marriage.

Degare, Sir. Faust, George P. Sir Degare: A Study of the Texts and Narrative Structure. Princeton. (Princeton Studies in English No. 11.)

Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers. See below, s.v. Rivers, Earl of.

Everyman. Eliason, Norman E. "'I take my cap in my lappe . . .'" PQ, xiv. 271-274.

Firumbras. O'Sullivan, Mary I. Firumbras and Otuel and Roland. London. (EETS, No. 198.)

The texts of the Fillingham MS.

Gower. Daniels, R. Balfour. "Rhetoric in Gower's To King Henry the Fourth in Praise of Peace." SP, xxxii. 62-73.

Halsam. South, Helen P. "'The Question of Halsam'." PMLA, L. 362-371. Proposes to identify the author of the verses beginning "The worlde so wide, thaire so remuable" with a John Halsam, armiger, who was several times a member of parliament between 1351 and 1372.

Idley, Peter. D'Evelyn, Charlotte (ed.). Peter Idley's Instructions to His Son. N. Y. (MLA Monograph Series, vi.)

Katherine Group. Bethurum, Dorothy. "The Connection of the Katherine Group with Old English Prose." JEGP, xxxiv. 553-564.

Distinguishes between the style of the three saints' legends and that of the Ancren Riwele, Sawles Warde, and Hali Meidenhad, and traces the former to the influence of Ælfric's Saints Lives.

Kempe, Margery. Meech, Sanford B. "Margery Kempe." LTLS, June 20, 1935, p. 399.

Lydgate. Bergen, Henry (ed.). Lydgate's Troy Book, A.D. 1412-1420. Part iv. Bibliographical Introduction, Extracts from Guido delle Colonne's Historia Troiana, Notes, Glossary and Index to Lydgate's Text. London. (EETS, Ex.S. CXXVI.)

Lyric. Malone, Kemp. "Notes on Middle English Lyrics." ELH, II. 58-65. Textual notes on certain lyrics in Carleton Brown's English Lyrics of the XIIIth Century.

Thompson, S. Harrison. "The Date of the Early English Translation of the Candet nudatum pectus." MA, iv. 100-105.

Evidence dating the lyric early in the thirteenth century.

Malory. Stewart, George R., Jr. "English Geography in Malory's Morte D'Arthur." MLR, xxx. 204-209.

Ormulum. Hinckley, Henry B. "The Riddle of the Ormulum." PQ, xiv. 193-216.

Argues, mainly on paleographic and linguistic grounds, for a date before 1150, or even before 1140, and looks favorably upon the connection, proposed many years ago, with Carlisle.

Otuel. See above, s v. Firumbras.

Piers Plowman. Cargill, Oscar. "The Langland Myth." PMLA, L. 36-56.

Connects the note that Stacy de Rokayle was the father of William Langland in the Dublin MS with the "mansed prest of þe march in yrlonde" (B xx 220-221) and proposes to identify the priest with Walter de Brugge, parson of St. Patrick's Trim, in Ireland, and prebendary of Houthe in the cathedral of St. Patrick, Dublin. Brugge bequeathed a copy of Piers Plowman in his will. The poet's scorn of illegitimacy is an objection to considering him an illegitimate son of Stacy de Rokayle. If a son of Stacy de Rokayle wrote the poem he was possibly not Langland. The author treats Langland as a myth and tries to account for the growth of such a myth. The paper concludes with an investigation of the Rokayle family and a selection from many hundred records relating to this family, particularly forty-three entries concerning William Rokayle in the fourteenth century sufficient "to lead to speculation."

Haselden, R. B., and Schulz, H. C. "Note on the Inscription in HM. 128." Huntington Library Bull., No. 8, pp. 26-27.

Evidence that the inscription "Robert or william langland made pers ploughman" was written after the rebinding of the MS about 1540. Fair reason exists for thinking that it may have been written by William Sparke. The present "Note" is appended to a report by R. W. Chambers on "The Manuscripts of Piers Plowman in the Huntington Library, and Their Value for Fixing the Text of the Poem" (pp. 1-25).

Kellogg, Eleanor H. "Bishop Brunton and the Fable of the Rats." PMLA, L. 57-68.

Study of the MS of Brunton's collection of sermons makes it possible to fix the date of delivery of the "rat" sermon as May 18, 1376, a terminus a quo for the allusion in the B-text of Piers Plowman.

Rivers, Earl of. Buhler, Curt F. "The Dictes and Sayings of the Philosophers." Library, 4th Ser., xv (1934). 316-329.

Evidence that the supposed second edition of Caxton is the first, and the first is the second.

Sir Gawain and the Green Knight. Savage, Henry. "A Note on Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, l. 1700." MA, rv. 199-202.

Towneley Plays. Frampton, Mendal G. "The Date of the Flourishing of the 'Wakefield Master'." PMLA, L. 631-660.

On the basis of allusions to costume dates the later stages of the Wakefield cycle in the early part of the reign of Henry VI and confirms this date by evidence of the economic growth of Wakefield.

Smyser, H. M. "Analogues to the Mak Story." JAF, XLVII (1934). 378-380. A Spanish analogue and one from the Congressional Record.

Stroup, Thos. B. "Analogues to the Mak Story." JAF, XLVII (1934). 380- A folk-tale from North Carolina, making more certain the folk origin of the story in Towneley.

Trusler, Margaret. "Some Textual Notes Based on Examination of the Towneley Manuscript." PQ, xiv. 301-306.

Withington, Robert. "‘Water Fastand’." MLN, L. 95-96.

Wyclif. Reeves, Wm. P. "A Second MS of Wyclif's De Dominio Civili." MLN, L. 96-98.

York Plays. Mills, Anna J. "The York Bakers' Play of the Last Supper." MLR, xxx. 145-158.

Records from the Bakers' accounts (1543-80) preserved in a British Museum manuscript

VII. RENAISSANCE AND ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE

Miscellaneous. Ball, Lewis F. Studies in the Structure of the Minor English Renaissance Epics. Baltimore, 1934. (Johns Hopkins diss.)

Baroway, Israel. "The Hebrew Hexameter: A Study in Renaissance Sources and Interpretation." ELH, II. 66-91.

Campbell, Lily B. "The Christian Muse." Huntington Library Bull., No. 8, pp. 29-70.

Notes as one aspect of the Renaissance the effort to exalt Christian poetry over pagan and secular literature and traces the influence of Du Bartas's Urania on Sidney, Spenser, and others. The development here recorded is necessary to an understanding of Milton as Urania's poet.

Craig, Hardin, and Patrick, David. "Recent Literature of the English Renaissance." SP, xxxii. 259-409.

Green, Zaidee E. "Theophrastus and Hall: A Correction." PMLA, L. 902-903.

Hinton, Edward M. Ireland through Tudor Eyes. Philadelphia. (Univ. of Penna. diss.)

Judge, Cyril B. Specimens of Sixteenth-Century English Handwriting. Cambridge, Mass.

Kahl, George M. "Robert Tofte's Annotations in The Blazon of Jealousie." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 47-67.

Kirk, Rudolf. "Jane Bell: Printer at the East End of Christ-Church." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 443-454.

Richter, Traugott L. "Anti-feminism in English Literature from 1500 to 1660." Summaries of Ph.D. Dissertations . . . Northwestern Univ., II (1934). 20-26.

Schelling, Felix E. "Shakespeare Books in the Library of the Furness Memorial." Univ. of Penna. Library Chronicle, III. 33-41.

Wagner, Bernard M. "New Songs of the Reign of Henry VIII." MLN, L. 452-455.

Watson, Sara R. "An Elizabethan Tournament." PMLA, L. 920-922.

Remnants of an Elizabethan masque spoken at a Queen's Day Tournament sometime after 1590.

Weitzmann, Francis W. "Notes on the Elizabethan Elegie." PMLA, L. 435-443.

White, Harold O. Plagiarism and Imitation during the English Renaissance: A Study in Critical Distinctions. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, Vol. XII.)

Williams, F. B., Jr. "Corrections to The Short-Title Catalogue." LTLS, Sept. 12, 1935, p. 565.

Wilson, Elkin C. "The Idealization of Queen Elizabeth in the Poetry of her Age." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 346-349.

Wright, Louis B. Middle-Class Culture in Elizabethan England. Chapel Hill, N. C. (Huntington Library Publications.)

Arden of Feversham. Grubb, Marion. "A Brace of Villains." MLN, L. 168-169.

Bale. Harris, Jesse W. The Life and Works of John Bale, 1495-1563. Urbana. (Univ. of Illinois abstract of diss.)

Beaumont and Fletcher. McKeitham, D. M. "Bullen's Beaumont and Fletcher." LTLS, Feb. 7, 1935, p. 76.

Chapman. Bartlett, Phyllis. "Chapman's Revisions in His Iliads." ELH, II. 92-119.

A study of Chapman's method of translation as revealed by his revisions.

Craig, Hardin. "Ethics in the Jacobean Drama: The Case of Chapman." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 25-46.

Kennedy, Charles W. "Political Theory in the Plays of George Chapman." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 73-86.

Kreider, Paul V. Elizabethan Comic Character Conventions as Revealed in the Comedies of George Chapman. Ann Arbor. (Univ. of Michigan Pub.: Lang. and Lit., Vol. xvii.)

Christmas Prince, The. Harbage, Alfred. "The Authorship of The Christmas Prince." MLN, L. 501-505.

Identifies a MS in Folger Shakespeare Library as part of The Christmas Prince. This MS bears on its title-page the statement "made bye Mr. John Sansburye." Other evidence connects Sansbury with The Christmas Prince.

Churchyard. Chester, Allan G. "Thomas Churchyard's Pension." PMLA, L. 902.

An unnoted grant (1597) by Queen Elizabeth of 20d. a day for life.

Coverdale. Camerson, Kenneth W. "Coverdale's Bible of 1535 and the Theory of Translation." Living Church, xciii. 323-326.

Goodspeed, Edgar J. "Miles Coverdale and the English Bible." Publisher's Weekly, cxxviii. 805-808.

Dekker. Spencer, Hazelton. "The Undated Quarto of 1 Honest Whore." Library, n.s. vi. 241-242.

Deloney. Rollins, Hyder E. "Thomas Deloney's Euphuistic Learning and The Forest." PMLA, L. 679-686.

Deloney's heavy indebtedness to Thomas Fortescue's The Forest or Collection of Histories (1571) for much of his apparent learning.

Drama. Bowers, Fredson T. "A History of Elizabethan Revengeful Tragedy." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 304-308.

Bowers, R. H. "Notes on the 'Parnassus' Plays." N&Q, clxviii. 368.

Browner, James P. The Warres of Cyrus, A Tragedy edited with an introduction and notes. Urbana. (Univ. of Illinois abstract of diss.)

Dawson, Giles E. "An Early List of Elizabethan Plays." Library, n.s. 445-456. A MS commonplace book by Henry Oxinden, now in the Folger Library, with a list of plays in his possession ca. 1663-65.

Gilbert, Allan H. "Logic in the Elizabethan Drama." SP, xxxii. 527-545.

Harbage, Alfred E. "Elizabethan and Seventeenth-Century Play Manuscripts." PMLA, L. 687-699.

A list of more than 200 plays in MS.

Hewett-Thayer, Harvey W. See GERMANIC, Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Century.

McCabe, William H. "Fatum Vortigerni." LTLS, Aug. 15, 1935, p. 513.

The author of this Latin play is shown to be Thomas Carleton.

Sharpe, Robert B. The Real War of the Theatres: Shakespeare's Fellows in Rivalry with the Admiral's Men, 1594-1603: Repertories, Devices, and Types. Boston. (MLA Monograph Series, v.)

——— "Title-page Mottoes in the Poetomachia." SP, xxxii. 210-220.

Small, Samuel A. "The Influence of Seneca." SAB, x. 137-150.

Thomas, Sidney. "Wolsey and French Farces." LTLS, Dec. 7, 1935, p. 838.

Vandiver, E. P., Jr. "The Elizabethan Dramatic Parasite." SP, xxxii. 411-427.

Wagner, Bernard M. "A Lost Volume of Plays." LTLS, July 11, p. 448.

——— "A Licence by Sir George Buc." N&Q, clxix. 97-98.

Walker, Andrew J. "Popular Songs and Broadside Ballads in the English Drama, 1559-1642." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 341-343.

Drayton. Noyes, Russell. "Drayton's Literary Vogue since 1631." Bloomington, Ind. (Indiana Univ. Studies, No. 107.)

Dyer. Sargent, Ralph M. At the Court of Queen Elizabeth: The Life and Lyrics of Sir Edward Dyer. London and N. Y.

Wagner, Bernard M. "New Poems by Sir Edward Dyer." RES, xi. 466-471. Three unpublished poems (not in Sargent) from an Elizabethan miscellany (Harl. MS 7392).

England's Helicon. Rollins, Hyder E. (ed.). England's Helicon, 1600, 1614. 2v., Cambridge, Mass.

Famous Victories. Wells, William S. "The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth: A Critical Edition." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., x. 46-48.

Fletcher. Maxwell, Baldwin. "The Woman's Prize, or The Tamer Tamed." MP, xxxii. 353-363.

Disposes of the topical allusions on which the play has been dated ca. 1604 and argues on the basis of other allusions for a date early in 1611.

——— "The Date of Fletcher's The Night-walker." MLN, L. 487-493.

Ford. Sensabaugh, George F. "John Ford—An Historical and Interpretative Study: With Special Reference to Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy and to the Court of Henrietta Maria." Univ. of No. Carolina Record: Research in Progress, No. 292 (Oct., 1934), pp. 51-52.

Greene. Jenkins, Harold. "On the Authenticity of Greene's Groatsworth of Wit and The Repentance of Robert Greene." RES, xi. 28-41.

Endeavors to refute the arguments of C. E. Sanders (PMLA, XLVIII).

Grim the Collier of Croyden. Thompson, D. W. "Belphegor in Grim the Collier and Riche's Farewell." MLN, L. 99-102.

The play is indebted to Machiavelli directly, not through Riche.

Harington, Sir John. Hughey, Ruth. "The Harington Manuscript at Arundel Castle and Related Documents." Library, n.s. xv. 388-444.

Records the discovery of an important miscellany of sixteenth-century verse which has been lost track of since the end of the eighteenth century. It contains 324 poems, about a third of which have never been printed. Incidentally it contains the earliest evidence for Sidney's having written his sonnets to "Y<sup>e</sup> Lady Ritch."

Harvey. Purcell, J. M. "Gabriel Harvey's Vocabulary." LTLS, May 23, 1935, p. 331.

Holinshed. See below, s.v. Shakespeare, Hotson.

Jonson. Allen, Hope E. "'Dicing fly' and The Alchemist." LTLS, June 27, 1935, p. 416; Aug. 1, 1935, p. 489.

Chester, Allan G. "Thomas Walkley and the 1640 Works of Ben Jonson." LTLS, March 14, 1935, p. 160.

Johnston, George B. "Notes on Ben Jonson." LTLS, Feb. 14, 1935, p. 92.

Noyes, Robert G. Ben Jonson on the English Stage, 1660-1776. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, xvii.)

TenHoor, G. J. See GERMANIC, Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Century.

Kyd. Baker, Howard. "Ghosts and Guides: Kyd's Spanish Tragedy and the Medieval Tragedy." MP, xxxiii. 27-35.

Holds "that the Ghost of Andrea and Revenge are adaptations of stock characters in the medieval metrical 'tragedies,'" rather than borrowings from Seneca.

Grubb, Marion. "Kyd's Borrowing from Garnier's Bradamante." MLN, l. 169.

Lodge. Jones, Deborah C. "Sources of the Natural History in the Literary Works of Thomas Lodge." Radcliffe College . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1931-1934, pp. 68-70.

Tenney, Edward A. Thomas Lodge. Ithaca. (Cornell Studies in English, xxvi.)

Marlowe. Eccles, Mark. "Marlowe in Kentish Tradition." N&Q, clxix. 20-22; 39-41; 58-61; 134-135.

Tilley, M. P. and Ray, James K. "Proverbs and Proverbial Allusions in Marlowe." MLN, l. 347-355.

Williams, F. B., Jr. "Ingram Frizer." LTLS, Aug. 15, 1935, p. 513.

Marriage of Wit and Wisdom. Tilley, Morris P. "Notes on The Marriage of Wit and Wisdom." SAB, x. 45-57; 89-94.

Marston. Stoll, Elmer E. "The Date of The Malcontent: A Rejoinder." RES, xi. 42-50.

Massinger. Ball, Robert H. "Sir Giles Mompesson and Sir Giles Overreach." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 277-287.

McIlwraith, A. K. "The Printer's Copy for The City-Madam." MLN, l. 173-174.

Medwall. Jones, Claude E. "Notes on Fulgens and Lucrez." MLN, l. 508-509.

Melbancke, Brian. Rollins, Hyder E. "Notes on the Sources of Melbancke's Philotimus." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 177-198.

Adds many additional instances to those he has already published of Melbancke's amazing appropriations.

Middleton. Christian, Mildred G. "Middleton's Acquaintance with the Merrie Conceited Jests of George Peele." PMLA, L. 753-760.

Moore, John P. "The Contemporary Significance of Middleton's Game at Chesse." PMLA, L. 761-768.

Illuminating comment on the play, suggesting the identification of characters, disproving Middleton's authorship of the introductory poem, and interpreting the allegory.

Wagner, Bernard M. "'A Middleton Forgery.'" PQ, xiv. 287-288.

The manuscript note in A Game of Chesse, thought by some to be a forgery, is found in two manuscript miscellanies of the second quarter of the seventeenth century.

More. Delany, Selden P. "Saint Thomas More." Cath. World, cxli. 187-194.

Mulcaster. Baskerville, C. R. "Richard Mulcaster." LTLS, Aug. 15, p. 513.

Nashe. Allen, Don C. "The Anatomie of Absurditie: A Study in Literary Apprenticeship." SP, xxxii. 170-176.

Shows especially Nashe's indebtedness to Textor's Officina.

Peele. Sampley, A. M. "Peele's Descensus Astraeae and Marlowe's Edward II." MLN, L. 506.

Patericke, Simon. Brittin, Norman A. "Discours contre Machiavel." LTLS, Feb. 21, 1935, p. 108.

Raleigh. Reed, Newman T. "The Philosophical Background of Sir Walter Raleigh's History of the World." Summaries of Ph.D. Dissertations . . . Northwestern Univ., II (1934). 14-19.

Redford, John. Tannenbaum, Samuel A. "Editorial Notes on Wit and Science." PQ, xiv. 307-326.

Revenger's Tragedy. Lockert, Lacy. "The Greatest of Elizabethan Melodramas." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 103-126.

Rogers, Thomas. Williams, Franklin B., Jr. "Thomas Rogers of Bryanston and Leicester's Ghost." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 343-346.

———. "Leicester's Ghost." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 271-285.

Libels about Leicester worked up in a long narrative poem, ca. 1504, by Thomas Rogers of Bryanston.

Shakespeare. Anon. "Ghost Technique in Shakspeare." SAB, x. 157-162.

Allen, Don C. "Hotspur's Earthquake." MLN, L. 171-172.

Begg, Edleen. "Shakespeare's Debt to Hall and to Holinshed in Richard III." SP, xxxii. 189-196.

Boughner, Daniel C. "Don Armado as a Gallant." Revue Anglo-Américaine, xiii. 18-28.

Brown, Beatrice D. "Exemplum Materials Underlying Macbeth." PMLA, L. 700-714.

Suggestions particularly for the appearance of the ghost of Banquo at the feast and for Lady Macbeth's efforts to remove the imagined blood stains from her hands.

Baker, Joseph E. "The Philosophy of Hamlet." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 455-470.

Baldwin, T. W. "A Note upon William Shakespeare's Use of Pliny." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 157-182.

Shakespeare's use of Pliny was not extensive. In some instances he appears to have consulted the original. There is no certain case in which he can be shown to have used the translation of Philemon Holland.

Bartlett, Henrietta C. "First Editions of Shakespeare's Quartos." Library, n.s. xvi. 166-172.

A revised list of present owners of all known copies.

Batchelder, Merritt C. "The Elizabethan Elements in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida." [Univ. of Iowa] Programs Announcing Candidates for Higher Degrees . . . , no pagination. (abstract of diss.)

Broaders, E. K. "Polonius." Univ. of Toronto Quar., iv. 337-355.

Brooke, Tucker, Cunliffe, John W., and MacCracken, Henry N. (edd.). Shakespeare's Principal Plays. 3rd ed., N. Y.

Burke, Kenneth. "Antony on Behalf of the Play." Southern Rev., i. 308-319.

Campbell, Oscar J. "Jaques." Huntington Library Bull., No. 8, pp. 71-102. Opposes Stoll's interpretation of Jaques, considers the various kinds of melancholy recognized in Shakespeare's time, and holds that the essential element in Jaques' melancholy is satire. "The appearance of Jaques . . . signalizes Shakespeare's first participation in the satiric movement, which after 1599 began to capture English comedy."

Clarkson, Paul S. "Mr. W. H.?" Sat. Rev. of Lit., May 4, 1935, p. 13; cf. May 25, 1935, p. 9.

Conroy, Joseph P. "Shakespeare's Difficulty in Opening Hamlet." Catholic World, cxlii. 192-196.

Cummings, Hubertis. "For Shakespeare's Hamlet." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 87-102.

Curry, Walter C. "Macbeth's Changing Character." JEGP, xxiv. 311-338.

Doran, Madeleine. "The Quarto of King Lear and Bright's Shorthand." MP, xxxiii. 139-157.

Opposes the view (J. Q. Adams in MP, xxx. 135-163) that the First Quarto of King Lear is based on notes taken down in Timothy Bright's shorthand characters.

Draper, John W. "Hamlet's Schoolfellows." Est, lxix. 350-366.

——— "Lord Chamberlain Polonius." Shakespeare-Jahrbuch, lxxxi. 78-93.

——— "Shakespeare's Italianate Courtier, Osric." RLC, xv. 289-297.

——— "Usury in The Merchant of Venice." MP, xxxiii. 37-47.

——— "Ophelia and Laertes." PQ, xiv. 38-53.

Eidson, John O. "A Senecan Parallel in Hamlet." SAB, x. 105.

Elson, John J. "The Non-Shakespearian Richard II and Shakespeare's Henry IV, Part I." SP, xxxii. 177-188.

Suggests that Shakespeare derived some suggestions for the character of Falstaff from that of the Chief Justice in the old play.

Everett, A. L. "A Note on Shakespeare's Henry VI." SAB, x. 106-108.

Fink, Z. S. "Jaques and the Malcontent Traveler." PQ, xiv. 237-252.

Characteristics of the Italianate Englishman in the figure of Jaques.

Galway, Margaret. "Flyting in Shakespeare's Comedies." SAB, x. 183-191.

Gaw, Allison. "Is Shakespeare's Much Ado A Revised Earlier Play?" PMLA, l. 715-738.

Argues against the assumption of an earlier play.

Hastings, William T. "A Stern'st Goodnight To Shakspeare?" Amer. Scholar, iv. 223-231.

A survey of some recent Shakespearian scholarship

——— "Notes on All's Well That Ends Well." SAB, x. 232-244.

Henderson, W. B. Drayton. "Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida Yet Deeper in Its Tradition." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 127-156.

Emphasizes Lydgate's share among the sources of the play.

Hotson, Leslie. "Shakespeare's of Stratford, a Holinshed Link: Discoveries from a Lawsuit." The Times (London), July 6, 1935, pp. 13-14.

Reports the discovery of two hitherto unknown John Shakespeare's of Stratford. The first is a "John Shakespeare of Stratford upon Avon, yeoman" recorded under the date of Easter, 1533, nineteen years before the first mention of Shakespeare's father. The second is a John Shakespeare mentioned in a lawsuit of 1561 as then of Stratford. He was one of five sons of Christopher Shakespeare of Packwood, a small village not far from Stratford. The manor of Packwood was under the lordship of Thomas Burdett, to whom Ralph Holinshed was steward. In another new document, in a Chancery suit, bearing the signature of Holinshed, the chronicler testifies that for many years he had come to Packwood to preside over the manor court for his master. Hotson suggests the possibility of a friendship between Shakespeare and Holinshed at the time the latter was working on his great book.

Hubbell, G. S. "What Shakespeare Meant" [Phoenix and the Turtle] Sat. Rev. of Lit., Sept. 21, 1935, p. 9.

Hubler, Edward. "The Verse Lining of the First Quarto of King Lear." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 421-441.

Opposes the view that Q 1 is based on a shorthand reporting.

Hunt, Theodore B. "The Scenes as Shakespeare Saw Them." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 205-212.

Discusses the interpretation of lobby and house in Hamlet.

Hutcherson, Dudley. "The Forged Quartos." LTLS, Jan. 3, 1935, p. 9.

Jane-Mansfield, Cecil. "Mr. W. H." Sat. Rev. of Lit., June 1, 1935, p. 9.

Keck, Wendell M. "Accounting for Irregularities in Cloton." SAB, x. 67-72.

Kelcy, Alfred. "Notes on Hamlet." SAB, x. 167-173.

King, Lucille. "2 and 3 Henry VI—Which Holinshed?" PMLA, L. 745-752. Evidence that Hall and the 1587 Holinshed were the source, not the edition of 1577.

Knight, G. Wilson. Shakespeare and Tolstoy. N.p., 1934 (English Assoc. Pamphlet No. 88.)

Kreider, P. V. "Genial Literary Satire in the Forest of Arden." SAB, x. 212-231.

Law, Robert A. "Almost Damn'd in a Fair Wife." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, xv. 19-21.

McManaway, James G. "Richard III on the Stage." LTLS, June 27, p. 416.

Martin, Burns. "A Midsummer Night's Dream." LTLS, Jan. 24, 1935, p. 48.

Murphy, G. H. "Shakespeare and the Ordinary Man." Dalhousie Rev., xv. 161-173.

Page, Nadine. "Beatrice: 'My Lady Disdain'." MLN, L. 494-499.

——— "The Public Repudiation of Hero." PMLA, L. 739-744.

Undertakes to justify the behavior of Claudio and Hero in the light of Elizabethan views of women and marriage.

Patrick, David L. "Textual History of Shakespeare's Richard III." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., x, 43-45.

Paul, Henry M., and Dawson, Giles E. "Shakespeare Bibliography." LTLS, Feb. 28, 1935, p. 124.

Announces as in preparation a bibliography of all editions.

Purcell, J. M. "The Date of 1 Henry IV." N&Q, CLXVIII, 383-384.

Raysor, Thomas M. "The Aesthetic Significance of Shakespeare's Handling of Time." SP, xxxii, 197-209.

Shaaber, M. A. "The Furness Variorum Shakespeare." Proc. Amer. Philos. Soc., LXXV, 281-285.

The status of the project and progress towards its completion.

Sisson, Charles A. "A Textual Study of Shakespeare's Richard II." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., ix (1934), 55-58.

Small, George W. "Shakspeare's Stage." SAB, x, 31-35.

Smalley, Donald A. "The Date of Othello." LTLS, Oct. 10, 1935, p. 631.

Smith, Robert M. "The Folger Folios." LTLS, March 7, 1935, p. 143.

——— "An Interesting First Folio." SAB, x, 58-59.

Another copy unrecorded in Lee's Census.

——— "Fly-specks and Folios." Colophon, n.s. i, 25-32.

Sorenson, Fred. "The Masque of the Muscovites' in Love's Labour's Lost." MLN, L, 499-501.

Sprague, Arthur C. Shakespeare and the Audience: A Study in the Technique of Exposition. Cambridge, Mass.

Stewart, George R., Jr. "'Three and fifty upon poor old Jack' (A Note on Henry IV, Part, I, II, iv)." PQ, xiv, 274-275.

Stoll, Elmer E. Hamlet the Man. N. p. (English Assoc. Pamphlet, No. 91.)

——— "Ædipus and Othello: Corneille, Rymer and Voltaire." Revue Anglo-Américaine, xii, 385-400.

——— "Art and Artifice in The Iliad: or The Poetical Treatment of Character in Homer and Shakespeare." ELH, ii, 294-321; Johns Hopkins Alumni Mag., xxiv, 13-43.

Sturgiss, Marie H. "Shakspeare's Miranda." SAB, x, 36-44.

Tannenbaum, Samuel A. "Shakespeare and His Contemporaries in the Literature of 1934: A Classified Bibliography." SAB, x, 3-30; 95-105.

——— "The Inception of Othello's Jealousy." SAB, x, 178-179.

Taylor, Marion A. "How Falstaff Brought Holinshed Up To Date." SAB, x, 118-136.

Thaler, Alwin. "Shakspeare and Spenser." SAB, x, 192-211.

Walley, Harold R. "Shakespeare's Portrayal of Shylock." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 213-242.

Dramatic rather than racial considerations were dominant in Shakespeare's conception of the character.

Watt, Homer A., Holzknecht, Karl, and Ross, Raymond. Outlines of Shakespeare's Plays. N. Y.

Young, Karl. "The Interpretation of a Passage in Hamlet [x, ii, 184-189]." MLR, xxx, 348-353.

See Section IX, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Sidney, Banks, Theodore H. "Sidney's Astrophel and Stella Reconsidered." PMLA, L. 403-412.

Argues that the sequence is a conventional series of Petrarchan love sonnets without autobiographical significance.

Goldman, Marcus S. Sir Philip Sidney and the Arcadia. Urbana, 1934. (Univ. of Illinois Studies in Lang. and Lit., xvii, Nos. 1-2.)

Hudson, Hoyt H. "Penelope Devereux as Sidney's Stella." Huntington Library Bull., No. 7, pp. 89-129.

Gathers the earliest allusions to Sidney and Lady Rich which can be interpreted as evidence for the identification.

Myrick, K. O. Sir Philip Sidney as a Literary Craftsman. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, No. xiv.)

——— "Sir Philip Sidney: The Elizabethan Courtier as Critic and Literary Artist." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 327-330.

Purcell, James M. "Sidney's Astrophel and Stella and Greville's Cælica." PMLA, L. 413-422.

Parallels in thought between the sonnets of the two sequences, sometimes quite close.

Tatlock, J. S. P. "Bernardo Tasso and Sidney." Ital, xii. 74-80.

Evidence that the Apology for Poetry chiefly reflects Sidney's reading while in Italy.

Skelton, Salter, F. M. "New Light on Skelton." LTLS, Jan. 17, 1935, p. 33.

Southwell, Mangam, Charles R. "Robert Southwell and the Council of Trent." Revue Anglo-Américaine, xii. 481-492.

Spenser, Bennett, Josephine W. "Spenser's Fowre Hymnes: Addenda." SP, xxxii. 131-157.

Botting, Roland B. "The Composition of the Shepherd's Calendar." PMLA, L. 423-434.

Argues that the work was made up in part of poems of earlier date somewhat hurriedly revised and supplemented.

Bradner, Leicester. "Latin Translations of Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar." MP, xxxiii. 21-26.

Cain, H. Edward. "Spenser's 'shield of faith'." SAB, x. 163-166.

Fowler, Earle B.—See GENERAL, Arthurian Cycle.

Freyd, Bernard. "Spenser or Anthony Munday?—A Note on the Axiochus." PMLA, L. 903-908.

Attacks the attribution to Spenser. Professor Padelford replies (pp. 908-913).

Green, Zaidee E. "Observations on the Epic Similes in The Faerie Queene." PQ, xiv. 217-228.

Heffner, Ray. "The Printing of John Hughes' Edition of Spenser, 1715." MLN, L. 151-153.

Greenlaw, Edwin, Osgood, Charles G., and Padelford, Frederick M. (edd.). The Works of Edmund Spenser: A Variorum Edition [Vol. iv]. Baltimore. The Faerie Queene, Book Four, ed. Ray Heffner.

Hintz, Howard W. "The Elizabethan Entertainment and The Faerie Queene." PQ, xiv. 83-90.

Hughes, Merritt Y. "Spenser's Palmer." ELH, ii. 151-164.

Jenkins, Raymond. "News out of Munster, A Document in Spenser's Hand." SP, xxxii. 125-130.

Knowlton, E. C. "Spenser and Nature." JEGP, xxxiv. 366-376.

Koller, Kathrine. "Identifications in Colin Clout's Come Home Again." MLN, L. 155-158.

Kuersteiner, Agnes D. "E. K. is Spenser." PMLA, L. 140-155.

Answers the arguments of Herford and those who agree with him that E K. is not a mask for Spenser himself.

Lemmi, Charles W. "Symbolism in Faerie Queene, II. 12." MLN, L. 161-165.

——— "The Serpent and the Eagle in Spenser and Shelley." MLN, L. 165-168.

——— "Astery's Transformation in Muioptomos." PMLA, L. 913-914.

The suggestion seems to come from Statius

Lotspeich, Henry G. "Spenser's Virgils Gnat and Its Latin Original." ELH, II. 235-241.

Carries Emerson's study a little further by seeking to identify the edition of Virgil used by Spenser.

——— "Spenser's Urania." MLN, L. 141-146.

Neill, Kerby. "The Faerie Queene and the Mary Stuart Controversy." ELH, II. 192-214.

Surveys the controversy over Mary Stuart and interprets the treatment of Duessa in Books IV and V of the Faerie Queene against the background of this literature.

Padelford, Frederick M., and Osgood, Charles G. "The Variorum Spenser." RES, XI. 81.

Purcell, J. M. "The Date of Spenser's Mutabilitie Cantos." PMLA, L. 914-917.

Applies the tests of color-word frequency and references to light and shade and finds the evidence points to an early date, a conclusion which conflicts with other stylistic evidence.

Schulze, Ivan L. "Elizabethan Chivalry and the Faerie Queene's Annual Feast." MLN, L. 158-161.

Smith, Charles G. Spenser's Theory of Friendship: English Literary History. Baltimore.

——— "Sententious Theory in Spenser's Legend of Friendship." ELH, II. 165-191.

——— "Spenser's Theory of Friendship: An Elizabethan Commonplace." SP, xxxii. 158-169.

Smith, Roland M. "Una and Duessa." PMLA, L. 917-919.

Evidence for the Irish origin of the name Duessa.

——— "Spenser's Irish River Stories." PMLA, L. 1047-1056.

Stirling, Brents. "Two Notes on the Philosophy of Mutabilitie." MLN, L. 154-155.

Strathmann, Ernest A. "Lady Carey and Spenser." ELH, II. 33-57.

Fuller information about Lady Carey as a person and a literary patron, with marked contraction of her relations with Spenser.

Thrall, William F. "The Faerie Queene, 'First Part'—in Variorum." SP, xxxii. 245-258.

Tuве, Rosamond. "Spenser and The Zodiack of Life." JEGP, xxxiv. 1-19. Evidence of Spenser's indebtedness to Barnabe Googe's translation of Palingenius.

Wurtsbaugh, Jewell. "Digby's Criticism of Spenser." RES, xi. 192-195.

——— "Thomas Edwards and the Editorship of the Faerie Queene." MLN, L. 146-151.

See above, s.v. Shakespeare, Thaler; below, s.v. Young, John.

Tourneur. Oliphant, E. H. C. "Tourneur and Mr. T. S. Eliot." SP, xxxii. 546-552.

Defends his views concerning the authorship of The Revenger's Tragedy.

Wilson. Nahm, Milton C. (ed.). John Wilson's The Cheats, edited from the MS in the Library of Worcester College, Oxford. Oxford.

Wood. Wine, Celesta. "Nathaniel Wood's Conflict of Conscience." PMLA, L. 661-678.

Dates the play shortly after 1570 and traces its sources, especially in A Notable and Marvellous Epistle.

Young, John. Judson, Alexander C. A Biographical Sketch of John Young, Bishop of Rochester, with Emphasis on His Relations with Edmund Spenser. Bloomington. (Indiana Univ. Studies, No. 103.)

VIII. SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

Miscellaneous. Abers, Jacob H. "Scientific Rationalism in the Seventeenth Century: A Study of Bacon and His Successors." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., ix (1934). 45-48.

Aubin, Robert A. "Saint-Amant as 'Preromantic.'" MLN, L. 456-457.

Identifies the source of the anonymous poem "Of Solitude" published in the 1716 edition of the Dryden-Tonson miscellany.

Boyce, Benjamin. "A Restoration 'Improvement' of Thomas Dekker." MLN, L. 460-461.

Day, Cyrus L., and Murrie, Eleanore B. "17th Century Song Books." LTLS, Aug. 1, 1935, p. 489.

Mayo, Thomas F. Epicurus in England, 1650-1725. Dallas, 1934.

Mullett, Charles F. "The Historian and the Use of Pamphlets." Library Qu., v. 301-322.

Nicolson, Marjorie. "The Telescope and Imagination." MP, xxxii. 233-260.

The first of a series of articles. The discoveries of Kepler and Galileo are sketched and their reception in Italy is traced in this paper.

——— "The 'New Astronomy' and English Literary Imagination." SP, xxxii. 428-462.

Traces the new interest particularly to the publication in 1610 of Galileo's Siderius Nuncius and notes its effect especially on Donne.

——— The Microscope and English Imagination. Northampton, Mass. (Smith College Studies in Mod. Languages, Vol. xvi. No. 4.)

See below, s.v. Milton, Nicolson.

Sharp, Robert L. "Observations on Metaphysical Imagery." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 464-478.

Stone, Wilbur M. "The Holy Bible in Verse, 1698." Proc. Amer. Antiq. Soc., XLIV. 154-158.

Ustick, W. Lee, and Hudson, Hoyt H. "Wit, 'Mixt Wit,' and the Bee in Amber." Huntington Library Bull., No. 8, pp. 103-130.

A consideration of seventeenth-century conceptions of wit, the elements against which Dryden, Pope, and Addison revolted, with a reprint of a poem by William Dingley, Upon a Bee Entomb'd in Amber (1694), considered as an extreme example of these elements.

Webster, C. M. "The Satiric Background of the Attack on the Puritans in Swift's A Tale of a Tub." PMLA, L. 210-223.

A bibliography, with brief annotations, of non-dramatic satires on Puritans from 1621 to 1700.

Williamson, George. "Mutability, Decay, and Seventeenth Century Melancholy." ELH, II. 121-150.

Bacon. See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Abers.

Banks, John. Blair, Thomas M. H. "John Banks." LTLS, Dec. 14, p. 859.

Baron, Robert. Slagle, Kenneth C. "Robert Baron, Cavalier Poet." N&Q, CLXIX. 254-256.

Bellon, Peter. Anderson, Paul B. "Buckingham's Chemist." LTLS, Oct. 3, 1935, p. 612.

Bible. Muir, Laurence. "The Influence of the Rolle and Wyclifite Psalters upon the Psalter of the Authorised Version." MLR, xxx. 302-310.

Braithwaite, Richard. Haviland, Thomas P. "The Heroic Panthalia." Univ. of Penna. Library Chronicle, III. 14-15.

Brome. Brooks, John L. "Alexander Brome: His Life and Works." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 311-313.

Browne. Chalmers, Gordon K. "Hieroglyphs and Sir Thomas Browne." Va. Quar. Rev., XI. 547-560.

Bunyan. Gibson, Daniel, Jr. "On the Genesis of Pilgrim's Progress." MP, XXXII. 365-382.

Notes the occurrence of many conceptions later embodied in the Pilgrim's Progress in earlier writings of Bunyan's, notably in the tract called The Heavenly Footman.

Cary, Lady Elizabeth. Stauffer, Donald A. "A Deep and Sad Passion." Parrott Presentation Volume, 289-314.

Suggests that Lady Cary was the author of the History of Edward II published in 1680 and attributed to Henry Cary.

Congreve. Hodges, John C. "On the Date of Congreve's Birth." MP, XXXIII. 83-85.

Justifies the date 1670 and defends Congreve against the charge of misrepresenting his age and birthplace.

Crashaw. Wallerstein, Ruth C. Richard Crashaw: A Study in Style and Poetic Development. Madison. (Univ. of Wisconsin Studies in Lang. and Lit., No. 37.)

Warren, Austin. "Richard Crashaw, 'Catechist and Curate'." MP, XXXII. 261-269.

New facts from the records of Peterhouse and from diocesan archives.

— "Crashaw's Apologie." LTLS, Nov. 16, 1935, p. 746.

Davenant. Harbage, Alfred. Sir William Davenant, Poet Venturer, 1606-1668. Philadelphia.

A biographical and critical study with much new material.

Dingley, Wm. See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Ustick.

Donne, Alexander, Henry. "John Donne, Poet and Divine." Queen's Quar., XLII, 471-481.

Umbach, Herbert H. The Easter Sermons of John Donne. An Edition with Introduction, Commentary, Textual Notes, and Bibliography. [Ithaca, N. Y.], 1934. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Wasilifsky, Adolph M. John Donne the Rhetor: A Study of the Tropes and Figures in the St. Paul Sermons. Ithaca. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Dorset, Charles Sackville, Earl of. Harris, Brice. "Dorset's Poem, 'On the Young Statesman'." LTLS, April 4, 1935, pp. 227-228.

Drama. Croissant, DeWitt C. "Early Sentimental Comedy." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 47-71.

Rosenfeld, Sybil. "The Restoration Stage in Newspapers and Journal, 1660-1700." MLR, xxx, 445-459.

Dryden. Allen, Ned B. The Sources of John Dryden's Comedies. Ann Arbor. (Univ. of Michigan Pub.: Lang. and Lit., Vol. xvi.)

Fletcher, Edward G. "A Dryden Anecdote." MLN, L, 366.

Ham, Roswell G. "Dryden's Dedication for The Music of the Prophetesse, 1691." PMLA, L, 1065-1075.

———. "Dryden as Historiographer-Royal: The Authorship of His Majesties Declaration Defended, 1681." RES, xi, 284-298.

Attempts to discover the nature of Dryden's duties and offers interesting evidence, external and internal, for his authorship of the tract mentioned.

Havens, P. S. "Dryden's 'Tagged' Version of Paradise Lost." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 383-397.

Nettleton, George H. "Author's Changes in Dryden's Conquest of Granada, Part I." MLN, L, 360-364.

Parsons, Coleman O. "Dryden's Letter of Attorney." MLN, L, 364-365.

Perkinson, Richard H. "Lady du Lake." N&Q, CLXVIII, 260-261.

Ward, Charles E. "Massinger and Dryden." ELH, II, 263-266.

Dryden's indebtedness to Massinger in Tyrannic Love.

Evelyn. Bowman, Francis E. "Studies in the Life of John Evelyn (1620-1706)." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 308-311.

See below, s.v. Pepys.

Hakewill, George. Williamson, George. "Hakewill and the Arthurian Legend." MLN, L, 462-463.

Lee. VanLennep, William B. "Nathaniel Lee: A Study of his Life and Works." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 337-341.

Stroup, Thos. B. "The Princess of Cleve and Sentimental Comedy." RES, xi, 200-203.

Notes that the elements of sentimentality peculiar to the comedy of the late seventeenth century and the early eighteenth are to be found in Lee's tragedy.

Milton. Brill, Mary C. Milton and Ovid. Ithaca. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Clark, William S. "Milton and the Villa Diodati." RES, xi, 51-57.

Milton could not have stayed at the Villa Diodati, since it did not come into existence until a half century after his death.

- Diekhoff, John S. "Terminal Pause in Milton's Verse." SP, xxxii. 235-239.
- Dwosrky, Besa R. "Milton and the Rabbinical Bible." LTLS, April 25, p. 272.
- Fletcher, Edward G. "Defoe on Milton." MLN, I. 31-32.
- French, J. Milton. "An Action against Milton." LTLS, Dec. 21, 1935, p. 879.
- "The Miltonic Epitaph on Mazarin." N&Q, clxviii. 445.
- "Milton as a Historian." PMLA, I. 469-479.
- Gray, F. Campbell. "Milton's Counterpoint: Classicism and Romanticism in the Poetry of John Milton." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 134-145.
- Harrison, Thomas P., Jr. "The Latin Pastorals of Milton and Castiglione." PMLA, I. 480-493.
- Parallels between the Epitaphium Damonis and the pastoral elegy, Alcon.
- "A Note on Lycidas, 91." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, xv. 22.
- Haviland, Thomas P. "Milton for the Young." Univ. of Penna. Library Chronicle, iii. 46-48.
- Eliza W. Bradburn's The Story of Paradise Lost for Children (1828).
- Howard, Leon. "Early American Copies of Milton." Huntington Library Bull., No. 7, pp. 169-179.
- Hughes, Merritt Y. (ed.). Paradise Lost. Garden City, N. Y.
- Kelley, Maurice. "Milton and the Third Person of the Trinity." SP, xxxii. 221-234.
- "Milton's Debt to Wolleb's Companion Theologiae Christianae." PMLA, I. 156-165.
- Indicates that Milton's theology is largely derivative.
- "Milton's De Doctrina Christiana." LTLS, Feb. 21, 1935, p. 108.
- Kirkland, Edwin C. "A Collection and Explanation of the Folklore in Milton's English Poems." Summaries of Ph.D. Dissertations . . . Northwestern Univ., ii (1934). 5-11.
- M[abbott], T. O. "Contemporary Evidence for Royal Favour to Milton." N&Q, clxix. 221.
- Nicolson, Marjorie. "Milton and the Telescope." ELH, ii. 1-32.
- Parker, William R. "The Kommos of Milton's Samson Agonistes." SP, xxxii. 240-244.
- "Symmetry in Milton's Samson Agonistes." MLN, I. 355-360.
- "The Greek Spirit in Milton's Samson Agonistes." Essays and Studies, xx. 21-44.
- "The Trinity Manuscript and Milton's Plans for a Tragedy." JEGP, xxxiv. 225-232.
- "Some Problems in the Chronology of Milton's Early Poems." RES, xi. 276-283.
- "On Milton's Early Literary Program." MP, xxxiii. 49-53.
- Denies the validity of the interpretation usually placed upon the passage in The Reason of Church Government
- Parsons, Edward S. "The Anonymous Life of Milton." PMLA, I. 1057-1064.
- Questions Miss Darbishire's attribution to John Phillips. An appendix discusses Milton's spellings of their and thir.

Patterson, Frank A. and others (edd.). The Works of John Milton. Vol. XI: A Fuller Institution of the Art of Logic, edited and translated by Allan H. Gilbert. N. Y.

Thompson, Elbert N. S. "Milton's Prose Style." PQ, XIV. 1-15.

Timberlake, P. W. "Milton and Euripides." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 315-340.

Whiting, George W. "Milton a Jesuit." N&Q, CLXVIII. 150-151.

——— "Milton and That 'learned English writer'." LTLS, Jan. 10, p. 21.

——— "Milton and the Postscript." MLR, XXX. 506-508.

The Postscript to An Answer to a Booke Entitled An Humble Remonstrance (1641) is not by Milton.

——— "Milton's Reply to Lord Digby." RES, XI. 430-438.

Shows by parallels in the argument that Milton's Of Reformation Touching Church Discipline is directed specifically at Digby's speech in Parliament.

——— "The Sources of Eikonoklastes: A Resurvey." SP, XXXII. 74-102.

New parallels, particularly with Thomas May's History of the Parliament of England.

——— "Milton's Prelatical Pamphlets." LTLS, Sept. 5, 1935, p. 552.

Williamson, George. "Milton and the Mortalist Heresy." SP, XXXII. 553-579.

Woodhouse, A. S. P. "Milton, Puritanism, and Liberty." Univ. of Toronto Quar., IV. 483-513.

——— "Milton and His Age." Univ. of Toronto Quar., V. 130-139.

See Section VII, s.v. Miscellaneous, Campbell; GERMANIC, Modern Scandinavian Literature, s.v. Beck.

Mountfort. Borgman, Albert S. The Life and Death of William Mountfort. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, Vol. xv.)

Newton. Northrop, F. S. C. "Newton and the Modern Age." Sat. Rev. of Lit., XI. 453-454.

MacPike, Eugene F. "Sir Isaac Newton in American Libraries." N&Q, CLXVIII. 394; CLXIX. 391-392.

Payne. Thorp, Willard. "Henry Nevil Payne, Dramatist and Jacobite Conspirator." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 347-381.

Pepys. Kirk, Rudolf. Mr. Pepys upon the State of Christ-Hospital. Phila. Facsimile of Pepys' six papers with a full introduction.

Marburg, Clare. Mr. Pepys and Mr. Evelyn. Phila.

Appendices contain unpublished letters and two finding lists of correspondence between the two men.

Quarles. Haight, Gordon S. "Francis Quarles in Ireland." LTLS, Oct. 17, 1935, p. 652.

——— "The Sources of Quarles's Emblems." Library, n.s. XVI. 188-209.

——— "Francis Quarles." LTLS, April 11, 1935, p. 244.

Suckling. Williamson, George. "An Attribution to Suckling." MLN, L. 463-464.

Wither. Anderson, Paul B. "George Wither and the 'Regalia'." PQ, XIV. 366-368.

Wright, James. See Section IX, s.v. Miscellaneous, Aubin.

Wycherley. Allen, Robert J. "Two Wycherley Letters." LTLS, April 18, 1935, p. 257.

IX. EIGHTEENTH CENTURY

Miscellaneous. Aubin, Robert A. "Three Notes on 'Graveyard' Poetry." SP, xxxii. 103-109.

On James Wright's The Ruins (written 1668), The Relief (1754) attributed to Henry Jones and Night, published in 1867 by George Gilfillan.

———"Some Augustan Gothicists." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 15-25.

Early appreciation of the Gothic, prior to the 1740's

Babcock, R. W. "The Idea of Taste in the Eighteenth Century." PMLA, l. 922-926.

Comment on Hooker's article (PMLA, xlix. 577-592).

Bond, Donald F. "'Distrust' of Imagination in English Neo-classicism." PQ, xiv. 54-69.

Bredvold, Louis I. "English Literature, 1660-1800: A Current Bibliography." PQ, xiv. 142-180.

Deane, Cecil V. Aspects of Eighteenth Century Nature Poetry. Oxford.

Ewen, Frederic. Bibliography of Eighteenth Century English Literature. N. Y.

Frantz, R. W. The English Traveller and the Movement of Ideas, 1660-1732. Lincoln, Neb., 1934 (Univ. [of Nebraska] Studies, Vols. xxxii-xxxiii.)

Green, F. C. Minuet: A Critical Survey of French and English Literary Ideas in the Eighteenth Century. N. Y.

Jones, Joseph J. "British Literary Men's Opinion about America, 1750-1832." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., ix (1934). 49-51.

Lovett, David. "Shakespeare as a Poet of Realism in the Eighteenth Century." ELH, ii. 267-289.

McClelland, John. "The Course of Realism in the English Novel from Addison and Steele through Sir Walter Scott." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., ix (1934). 52-54.

Monk, Samuel H. The Sublime: A Study of Critical Theories in XVIII-Century England. N. Y. (MLA General Series.)

Moore, Cecil A. (ed.). English Poetry of the Eighteenth Century. N. Y.

Morgan, William T. A Bibliography of British History (1700-1715), with Special Reference to the Reign of Queen Anne. Vol. i, 1700-1707. Bloomington, Ind., 1934.

Nitchie, Elizabeth. "Longinus and the Theory of Poetic Imitation in Seventeenth and Eighteenth Century England." SP, xxxii. 580-597.

Nolte, Fred O. See GERMANIC, Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Century, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Schilling, Bernard N. "Voltaire and England." LTLS, Nov. 16, 1935, p. 746.

Thorpe, Clarence D. "Two Augustans Cross the Alps: Dennis and Addison on Mountain Scenery." SP, xxxii. 463-482.

Evidence of the appreciation of the beauty in mountains before Shaftesbury.

Wells, Mitchell P. "Some Notes on the Early Eighteenth-Century Pantomime." SP, xxxii. 598-607.

Whelan, Sister M. Kevin. Enthusiasm in English Poetry of the Eighteenth Century (1700–1774). Washington, D. C. (Catholic Univ. of Amer. diss.)

Williamson, George. "The Rhetorical Pattern of Neo-classical Wit." MP, xxxiii. 55–81.

Finds in Puttenham certain metrical and rhetorical notions which find their fulfillment in the neo-classical couplet.

Addison. Graham, Walter. "Letters of Joseph Addison." N&Q, clxix. 314; LTLS, Oct. 17, 1935, p. 652.

See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Thorpe.

Arbuthnot. Beattie, Lester M. John Arbuthnot, Mathematician and Satirist. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, Vol. xvi.)

Berington, Simon. Ellison, Lee M. "Gaudetio di Lucca: A Forgotten Utopia." PMLA, L. 494–509.

Blackmore, Sir Richard. Newton, Theodore F. M. "Blackmore's Eliza." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 113–123.

Evidence that the poem attracted some attention, contrary to Dr. Johnson's statement that it dropped "dead-born from the press."

Blake. Schaupp, Roscoe F. "Blake's 'Correction' of Milton in Poem and Picture." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctors' Dissertations, No. 15, pp. 171–180.

Schorer, Mark. "William Blake and the Cosmic Nadir." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 210–221.

Brown, Thomas. Boyce, Benjamin. "Two Debts for Tom Brown, with Credit from Joseph Addison." PQ, xiv. 263–269.

Burke. Buehler, Reginald G. "Burke and Rousseau." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 313–314.

Drew, Helen L. "The Date of Burke's Sublime and Beautiful." MLN, L. 29–31.

Cites the advertisements of April, 1757, fixing the date of publication.

Burnaby, Charles. See GERMANIC Section, s.v. Lessing, Kies, Paul P.

Burney, Sophia. Mendenhall, John C. "Sophia Burney MSS." Univ. of Penna. Library Chronicle, III. 9–13.

MSS by the niece of Fanny Burney, now in the Singer collection at the Univ. of Penna.

Burns. Fitzhugh, Robert T. Robert Burns as Seen by His Contemporaries: A Sourcebook of Fact and Opinion. Ithaca. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

———"The Paradox of Burns' Character." SP, xxxii. 110–119.

New documentary evidence on Burns's behavior while living in Dumfries.

Snyder, Franklyn B. "Burns and the Smuggler Rosamond." PMLA, L. 510–521.

The story of the incident based on documents formerly belonging to Scott, including two sheets in Burns's handwriting.

Campbell, George. Hall, Alta B. George Campbell's Philosophy of Rhetoric, Book I: A Critical Edition. Ithaca, 1934. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Carey, Henry. Noyes, Robert G. "The Contemporary Reception of Sally in Our Alley." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xviii. 165–175.

Cave, Edward. Carlson, C. Lennart. "Edward Cave, Founder of the Gentleman's Magazine." N&Q, clxix. 136.

Chatterton. See below, s.v. Percy.

Chesterfield. Bond, Richmond P (ed.). Chesterfield: Letters and Other Pieces. Garden City, N. Y.

Gulick, Sidney L., Jr. "A Chesterfield Bibliography to 1800." Papers of the Bibl. Soc. of Amer., xxix. 1-114.

See Section III, s.v. Abbott.

Cibber. Vincent, Howard P. "Two Letters of Colley Cibber." N&Q, CLXVIII. 3-4.

Cleland, John. Thompson, Ralph. "Deathless Lady." Colophon, n.s. i. 207-220. Traces the career of Memoirs of Fanny Hill.

Coleman. Page, Eugene R. George Colman the Elder, Essayist, Dramatist, and Theatrical Manager, 1732-1794. N. Y. (Columbia Univ. Studies in Eng. and Comp. Lit., No 120)

Dampier. Bonner, Willard H. Captain William Dampier, Buccaneer-Author. Some Account of a Modest Buccaneer and of English Travel Literature in the Early Eighteenth Century. Stanford Univ., Calif. [1934].

Davenant, Charles. Wiley, A. N. "The Poussin Doctor." MLN, L. 506-508.

Dennis. See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Thorpe.

Dodsley. Hill, Charles J. "Applause for Dodsley's Cleone." PQ, xiv. 181-184.

Defoe. Burch, Charles E. "The English Reputation of Daniel Defoe." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctors' Dissertations, No. 13 (1934), pp. 17-26.

Moore, John R. Daniel Defoe and Modern Economic Theory. Bloomington, Ind., [1935 for] 1934 (Indiana Univ. Studies, Vol. xxi, Study No. 104.)

Secord, Arthur W. (ed.). Daniel Defoe: A Journal of the Plague Year and Other Pieces. Garden City, N. Y.

Drama. Green, Clarence C. "The Neo-Classic Theory of Tragedy in England during the Eighteenth Century." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 318-319.

Morgan, Stewart S. "Social Problems in the Drama of the Last Quarter of the Eighteenth Century." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctors' Dissertations, No. 13 (1934), pp. 141-149.

Pratt, John M. "Discovery and Solution of the Bibliographical Problem in the Two English Versions of Deschamps's Cato of Utica." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 137-140.

Sale, William M., Jr. "The First Dramatic Version of Pamela." Yale Univ. Library Gazette, ix. 83-88.

Smith, Dane F. "Plays about the Theatre in England from The Rehearsal in 1671 to the Licensing Act in 1737." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 193-, pp. 335-337.

Fielding. Jensen, Gerard E. "A Fielding Discovery." Yale Univ. Library Gazette, x. 23-32.

Evidence for Fielding's authorship of An Attempt towards a Natural History of the Hanover Rat (1744).

Seymour, Mabel. "Fielding's History of the Forty-five."

Concerned with Fielding's indebtedness to the London Gazette and with the later fortunes of the pamphlet.

Free Briton. Carlson, C. Lennart. "The Free Briton; or, The Opinion of the People, and F. Walsingham's Free Briton." N&Q, CLXIX. 166-168.

Goldsmith. Friedman, Arthur. "Goldsmith and the Weekly Magazine." MP, xxxii. 281-299.

Shows that Goldsmith was a contributor, identifies two essays with fair certainty, and considers others on which the evidence is admittedly less final ——— "Goldsmith's Life of Bolingbroke and the Biographia Britannica." MLN, L. 25-29.

Determines the extent of Goldsmith's borrowings.

Hawkins, Aubrey. "The 'Security' of Our Odes." LTLS, Nov. 16, p. 746.

Graves, Richard. Hill, Charles J. The Literary Career of Richard Graves, The Author of The Spiritual Quixote. Northampton, Mass. (Smith College Studies in Mod. Languages, Vol. xvi, Nos 1-3.)

Hammond, Fisher, J. "James Hammond and the Quatrain of Gray's Elegy." MP, xxxii. 301-310.

Hammond's influence on later elegists and his determining its characteristic form, the elegiac quatrain.

Hill, Aaron. Archibald, R. C. "Aaron Hill on Sir Isaac Newton." LTLS, June 27, 1935, p. 416.

Hume. Church, Ralph W. Hume's Theory of the Understanding. Ithaca, N. Y. See Section III, s.v. Abbott.

Hutcheson, Francis. Thorpe, Clarence D. "Addison and Hutcheson on the Imagination." ELH, II. 215-234.

Points of agreement between Hutcheson and Addison, and Hutcheson's part in giving currency to Addison's ideas.

Hyland, Wm. Huse, William. "The Shipwreck." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 341-345.

Inchbald. McKee, William. Elizabeth Inchbald, Novelist. Washington, D. C. (Catholic Univ. of Amer. diss.)

Johnson. Barnouw, A. J. "Rasselas in Dutch." LTLS, April 11, 1935, p. 244.

Coleman, William H. "Samuel Johnson after a Century and a Half." Dalhousie Rev., xiv. 479-492.

Hazen, Allen T., and McAdam, Edward L., Jr. A Catalogue of an Exhibition of First Editions of the Works of Samuel Johnson in the Library of Yale University 8 November to 30 December, 1935. New Haven.

Hornberger, Theodore. See AMERICAN, Section III, s.v. Johnson.

Metzdorf, R. F. "An Unpublished Johnson Letter Concerning Percy's Reliques." MLN, L. 509-513.

Murphy, Mallie J. "The Rambler, No. 191." PMLA, L. 926-928.

Osborn, James M. "Johnson on the Sanctity of an Author's Text." PMLA, L. 928-929.

Read, Allen W. "The Contemporary Quotations in Johnson's Dictionary." ELH, II. 246-251.

Smith, Florence A. "The Light Reading of Dr. Johnson." Univ. of Toronto Quar., v. 118-127.

Jones, Henry. See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Aubin.

Kimber, Edward. Black, Frank G. "Edward Kimber: Anonymous Novelist of the Mid-Eighteenth Century." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 27-42.

A survey of the eight novels now identifiable as to authorship through the manuscript notebook noted in the article by S. A. Kimber, below.

Kimber, Sidney A. "The Relation of a Late Expedition to St. Augustine, with Biographical and Bibliographical Notes on Isaac and Edward Kimber." Papers of the Bibl. Soc. of Amer., xxviii (1934). 81-96.

Lennox, Mrs. Small, Miriam R. Charlotte Ramsay Lennox: An Eighteenth Century Lady of Letters. New Haven. (Yale Studies in English, lxxxv.)

Lewis, M. G. Coykendall, Frederick. "A Note on The Monk." Colophon, n.s. i. 87-96.

Peck, Louis F. "Southey and Tales of Wonder." MLN, L. 513-514.

Lillo, Griffith, R. H. "Early Editions of Lillo's London Merchant." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, xv. 23-27.

Locke, Anderson, F. H. "On Interpreting Locke." Univ. of Toronto Quar., iv. 524-533.

London Journal. Realey, Charles B. The London Journal and Its Authors, 1720-1723. Lawrence, Kan. (Bull. Univ. of Kansas: Humanistic Studies, Vol. v, No. 3).

Meades, Anne. See below, s.v. Richardson.

Percy, Brooks, Cleanth, Jr. "Percy's History of the Wolf in Great Britain." JEGP, xxxiv. 101-103.

Churchill, Irving L. "Editions of Percy's Memoir of Goldsmith." MLN, L. 464-465.

Watkin-Jones, A. "Bishop Percy, Thomas Warton, and Chatterton's Rowley Poems (1773-1790)." PMLA, L. 769-784.

Unpublished letters clearing up the question of Percy's connection with the controversy and throwing light on Warton's position.

See above, s.v. Johnson.

Philips, Torre Bueno, Lillian de la. "Was Ambrose Philips A Ballad Editor?" Anglia, lxx. 252-270.

Attacks the attribution of A Collection of Old Ballads (1723-25) to him.

Pittis, Wm. Newton, Theodore F. M. "William Pittis and Queen Anne Journalism." PQ, xxxiii. 169-186 (to be concluded).

Pope, Case, Arthur E. "Pope, Addison, and the 'Atticus' Lines." MP, xxxiii. 187-193.

Fletcher, Edward G. "Belinda's Game of Ombre." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, xv. 28-38.

Sherburne, George. "'Timon's Villa' and Cannons." Huntington Library Bull., No. 8, pp. 131-152.

Considers it improbable that Pope's fourth Moral Essay, the Epistle to Burlington, was meant as a criticism of Cannons, seat of the Duke of Chandos. The conclusion follows from a full examination of the Duke with Pope and his friends in the year preceding the Epistle.

——— "Pope's Lost Sermon." LTLS, June 20, p. 399; July 11, p. 448.

Vincent, Howard P. "A Pope Problem." LTLS, Feb. 14, 1935, p. 92.

See GERMANIC, Section II, s.v. Beck.

Priestley. [Haraszti, Zoltan]. "John Adams on Dr. Priestley." More Books, x 301-318.

Published the marginal notes of Adams in Priestley's theological works. The article is followed by "Priestley Letters in this Library," pp. 319-320

Prior. Chandler, W. K. "Prior's Poems, 1718: A Duplicate Printing" MP, xxxii. 383-390.

Moore, John R. "A Riddle by Prior." LTLS, July 4, 1935, p. 432.

Wright, H. Bunker. "Matthew Prior's Estate." LTLS, March 28, p. 210.

Richardson. Sale, William M., Jr. "Samuel Richardson and Sir William Harrington." LTLS, Aug. 29, 1935, p. 537.

Evidence that Richardson revised this novel by Anne Meades.

——— "Samuel Richardson's House at Fulham." N&Q, CLXIX. 133-134.

——— "The Singer Copy of Sir Charles Grandison." Univ. of Pa. Library Chronicle, III. 42-45.

Copy of first edition containing cancelled leaf in volume II not hitherto found.

Schleck, Florian J. "Richardson on the Index." LTLS, April 25, 1935, p. 272.

See above, s.v. Drama; and SPANISH, Section V, s.v. Miscellaneous, Coe, Ada M.

Ritson. Moreland, Carroll C. "Ritson's Life of Robin Hood." PMLA, L. 522-536.

Rowe. Whiting, George W. "Rowe's Debt to Paradise Lost." MP, xxxii. 271-279.

Sheridan. Purdy, Richard L. (ed.). The Rivals, A Comedy. As it was first Acted at the Theatre-Royal in Covent-Garden. Written by Richard Brinsley Sheridan, Esq. Edited from the Larpent MS. Oxford.

Smollett. Jones, Claude E. (ed.). An Essay on the External Use of Water, by Tobias Smollett. Baltimore. (Reprinted from Bulletin of the Institute of the History of Medicine, Vol. III, No. 1, January.)

Jones, Claude. "A Smollett Letter." MLN, L. 242-243.

Kahrl, George M. "The Influence of Shakespeare on Smollett." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 399-420.

Knapp, Lewis M. "Smollett and the Case of James Annesley." LTLS, Dec. 28, 1935, p. 899.

Smythies. Black, Frank G. "Miss Smythies." LTLS, Sept. 26, 1935, p. 596. Conclusive evidence that The Brothers was by a Miss Smythies of Colchester.

——— "A Lady Novelist of Colchester." Essex Rev., XLIV. 180-185.

Sterne. Curtis, Lewis P. (ed.). Letters of Laurence Sterne. Oxford.

——— "Forged Letters of Laurence Sterne." PMLA, L. 1076-1106.

Swift. Boyce, Benjamin. "Predecessors of The Tale of a Tub." N&Q, CLXVII. 110-111.

Davis, Herbert (ed.). The Drapier's Letters to the People of Ireland against receiving Wood's Halfpence, by Jonathan Swift. Oxford.

McCain, John W. "Swift and Heywood." N&Q, CLXVIII. 236-238.

Evidence that Swift was directly influenced by John Heywood's The Spider and the Fly.

McCracken, George. "Homerica in Gulliver's Travels." Class. Jour., xxix (1934). 535-538.

McCue, G. S. "A Seventeenth-Century Gulliver." MLN, L. 32-34.

Calls attention to the periodical The Weekly Comedy (1699) as a possible influence on Swift.

Rockwell, Frederick S. "A Probable Source for Gulliver's Travels." N&Q, CLXIX. 131-133.

Arresting parallels with Ned Ward's "The Humours of a Coffee-House," issued in ten weekly numbers between May 10 and July 12, 1699, the year in which, according to Swift, the essential idea of Gulliver's Travels had its inception.

See Section VIII, s.v. Miscellaneous, Webster.

Thomson. Drennon, Herbert. "James Thomson's Ethical Theory and Scientific Rationalism." PQ, xiv. 70-82.

Fletcher, Edward G. "Notes on Two Poems by James Thomson." N&Q, CLXVIII. 274-275.

Walpole. Coykendall, Frederick. "Publication Dates." LTLS, Oct. 10, p. 631.

Lewis, W. S. "Horace Walpole." LTLS, Jan. 24, 1935, p. 48.

——— "Horace Walpole's Correspondence." LTLS, June 20, 1935, p. 399.

——— "Yale Edition of Horace Walpole's Correspondence." N&Q, CLXIX. 45-46; 63; 84-85; 99; 118; 136.

Ward, Ned. See below, s.v. Weekly Comedy; above s.v. Swift, Rockwell.

Warton. See above, s.v. Percy.

Weekly Comedy. Allen, Robert J. "Ned Ward and The Weekly Comedy." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 1-13.

Traces the fortunes of the dramatic periodical published under the title The Weekly Comedy and offers reasons for discrediting Ward's authorship of a part of the later publication

X. NINETEENTH CENTURY

Miscellaneous. Alexander, Calvert. The Catholic Literary Revival: Three Phases in Its Development from 1845 to the Present. Milwaukee.

Bailey, James O. "Scientific Fiction in English: 1817-1914. A Study of Trends and Forms." Univ. of No. Carolina Record: Research in Progress, No. 292 (Oct., 1934), pp. 47-49 (abstract of diss.)

Bluhm, H. S. "The Reception of Goethe's Faust in England after the Middle of the Nineteenth Century." JEGP, xxxiv. 201-212.

Brussel, Isadore R. Anglo-American First Editions 1826-1900: East to West, with an introd. by Graham Pollard. N. Y.

Christensen, Lorenzo F. "Three Romantic Poets and the Drama." Harvard Univ. . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 314-318.
Studies of Southey, Wordsworth, and Coleridge.

Conklin, Robert J. Thomas Cooper the Chartist. (Columbia Univ., diss.) Manila.

Decker, C. R. "Ibsen's Literary Reputation and Victorian Taste." SP, xxxii. 632-645.

Doherty, Eleanor C. "The Influence of Wordsworth on the Verse of the Oxford Movement." Radcliffe College . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1931-1934, pp. 159-163.

Sherwood, Margaret P. Undercurrents of Influence in English Romantic Poetry. Cambridge, Mass., 1934.

Steward, Samuel M. "Provocatives of the Oxford Movement and Its Nexus with English Literary Romanticism." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctors' Dissertations, No. 15, pp. 219-228.

"Victorian Bibliography for 1934." MP, xxxii. 397-430.

Wellard, James H. "State of Reading among the Working Classes of England during the First Half of the Nineteenth Century." Library Quar., v. 87-100.

Winwar, Frances. The Romantic Rebels. Boston.
Biographies of Byron, Shelley, Keats.

Winters, Arthur Y. "A Study of the Post-Romantic Reaction in Lyrical Verse, and Incidentally in Certain Other Forms." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., x. 49-51.

Anster, John. Schwarz, Barbara. "John Anster, 1793-1867." N&Q, CLXVIII. 9-10.

Arnold, M. Brown, E. K. "The Scholar Gipsy: An Interpretation." Revue Anglo-Américaine, xii. 219-225.

Tinker, C. B., and Lowry, H. F. "Arnold's Dover Beach." LTLS, Oct. 10, 1935, p. 631.

See Section XI, s.v. Eliot, T. S.; GENERAL, Æsthetics, Cooper.

Bagehot. Irvine, William. "Walter Bagehot as Literary Critic." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 320-322.

Blackwood's. Strout, Alan L. "A Note on Blackwood's Magazine of October, 1817." N&Q, CLXIX. 452-454.

Bronte. Aiken, Ralph. "Wild-heart: An Appreciation of Emily Jane Brontë." So. Atl. Quar., xxxiv. 202-210.

Browning, E. B. Benet, William R. "Addressed to Wimpole Street." Woman's Home Companion, Sept., 1935, pp. 15-17, 76-80; Oct. 1935, pp. 13-14, 38, 40, 42, 44, 47-48, 50; Nov., 1935, pp. 10-11, 52, 54, 56; Dec., 1935, pp. 22, 36, 38. Twenty-two unpublished letters by Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Robert Browning sold in New York in April, 1935.

Shackford, Martha H. E. B. Browning; R. H. Horne: Two Studies. [Wellesley, Mass.]

Varner, J. G. "Poe and Miss Barrett." LTLS, April 11, 1935, p. 244.

Browning, R. Armstrong, A. J. "The Browning Set to Music." LTLS, March 14, 1935, p. 160.

DeVane, William C. A Browning Handbook. N. Y.

Dodge, R. E. Neil. "Bishop Blougram's Apology." LTLS, March 21, p. 176.

Knickerbocker, Kenneth L. "An Echo from Browning's Second Courtship." SP, xxxii. 120-124.

———"Browning and His Critics." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 283-291.

Phelps, William L. "A Rhyme in Browning." LTLS, Aug. 29, 1935, p. 537.

Tracy, C. R. "Bishop Blougram's Apology." LTLS, Jan. 24, 1935, p. 48.

Brydges. Woodworth, Mary K. The Literary Career of Sir Samuel Egerton Brydges. Oxford.

Butler. Davis, Herbert. "Samuel Butler: 1835-1902." Univ. of Toronto Qu., v. 21-36.

Jordan-Smith, Paul. "Samuel Butler—The First Century." Colophon, n.s. I. 271-280.

Perry, Edward D. "Butler and the Odyssey." Sat. Rev. of Lit., XI. 472.

Byron. Calvert, William I. Byron, Romantic Paradox. Chapel Hill, N. C.

Motter, T. H. Vail. "Byron's Werner Re-estimated: A Neglected Chapter in Nineteenth Century Stage History." Parrott Presentation Volume, pp. 243-275.

See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Winwar.

Carlyle. Goldberg, Maxwell H. "Carlyle and Ruskin." LTLS, May 16, p. 313.

Harrold, Charles F. "Carlyle and the Mystical Tradition." Cath. World, CXLII. 45-49.

Scudder, Townsend, III. "Thomas Carlyle Receives a Friend." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Sept. 14, 1935, p. 9.

Unpublished letter rather critical of Emerson.

Shine, Hill. "Carlyle and the German Philosophy Problem during the Year 1826-1827." PMLA, L. 807-827.

Clare, John. Whiting, B. J. "Clare and the Nightingale." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Oct. 5, 1935, p. 11.

Coleridge. Kennedy, Virginia W., and Barton, Mary N. Samuel Taylor Coleridge: A selected bibliography of the best available editions of his writings, of biographies and criticisms of him, and of references showing his relations with contemporaries. Baltimore. (A Fiftieth Anniversary Publication, The Enoch Pratt Free Library.)

Lindsay, Julian I. "Coleridge Marginalia in Jacobi's Werke." MLN, L. 216-224.

Sanders, Charles R. "Coleridge as a Champion of Liberty." SP, xxxii. 618-631.

Smith, Fred M. "The Relation of Coleridge's Ode on Dejection to Wordsworth's Ode on Intimations of Immortality." PMLA, L. 224-234.

Parallelisms indicate Coleridge's indebtedness to Wordsworth's poem.

Watson, H. F. "The Borderers and The Ancient Mariner." LTLS, Dec. 28, 1935, p. 899.

Woodbridge, Homer E. "Coleridge and the Nightingale." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Sept. 28, 1935, p. 9.

See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Christensen.

Cornwall, Barry. See Procter, B. W.

Dickens. Boll, Theophilus E. M. "Great Expectations." LTLS, Aug. 15, 1935, p. 513.

Brush, Lilian M. "A Psychological Study of Barnaby Rudge." Dickensian, xxxi. 24-30.

Chartier, Emile. "A French Appreciation of Dickens." Dickensian, xxxi. 52-58.

Edinburgh Review. Wheeler, Paul M. America through British Eyes: A Study of the Attitude of The Edinburgh Review toward the United States of America from 1802-1861. Baltimore.

Eliot. Lemke, Frederick D. George Eliot and Her Predecessors in Village Literature. Urbana, 1934. (Univ. of Illinois abstract of diss.)

Williams, Blanche C. "George Eliot and John Chapman: A Fragment." Colophon, n.s. I. 65-70.

Elliott, M. B. Jordan, Philip D. "The Juvenilia of Mary Belson Elliott: A List with Notes." Bull. N. Y. Pub. Libr., xxxix. 869-881.

Giffillan, George. See Section ix. s.v. Miscellaneous, Aubin.

Gissing. Shafer, Robert (ed.). Worker's in the Dawn, by George Gissing. 2v., Garden City, N. Y.

—— "The Vitality of George Gissing." Amer. Rev., v. 459-487.

Grahame, James. Mabbott, T. O. "A Suppressed Anonymous Work of James Grahame." N&Q, clxix. 438.

Gray, David. Pitfield, Robert L. "Old Fashioned Poetry and An Old Fashioned Poet." [Univ. of Pa.] General Magazine and Hist. Chron., xxxviii. 73-84.

Hallam. Motter, T. H. Vail "A 'Lost' Poem by Arthur Hallam." PMLA, I. 568-575.

Hardy. Elliott, Albert P. Fatalism in the Works of Thomas Hardy. Philadelphia. (Univ. of Pennsylvania diss.)

Lillard, Richard G. "Irony in Hardy and Conrad." PMLA, I. 316-322.

Purdy, Richard L. "The Thomas Hardy Collection." Yale Univ. Library Gazette, x. 8-9.

Smith, Fred. "Hardy: The Poet of Life at Its Worst." Personalist, xv (1934). 32-38.

Weber, Carl J. "Thomas Hardy's 'Aeschylean Phrase'." Class. Jour., xxix (1934). 533-535.

—— "A Careful Chronology." The Writer, xlvi (1934). 236-237.

—— "'History' as It Is Written." Colby Mercury, v (1934). 37-40.

—— "Mrs. Grundy's Wheelbarrow." Colby Mercury, v (1934). 56-57.

—— "The Colby Collection of Hardy Letters." Colby Mercury, vi (1934). 11-16.

—— ["Notes on Hardy's Chosen Poems"] Scribner's Mag., xcvi (1934). 111.

—— "Thomas Hardy's 'Song in The Woodlanders'." ELH, II. 242-245. Identifies and traces the fortunes of the poem printed as from The Woodlanders.

—— "Brazil, as it is in Thomas Hardy's Novel." Revue Anglo-Américaine, XII. 520-523.

—— "Care and Carelessness in Hardy." MLN, I. 41-43.

Weber, Carl J. (ed.). An Indiscretion in the Life of an Heiress, by Thomas Hardy: Hardy's "Lost Novel," now first printed in America . . . Baltimore.

—— Colby Notes on Far from the Madding Crowd. Waterville, Me.

—— Tess of the D'Urbervilles, by Thomas Hardy. N. Y.

—— "In Thomas Hardy's Handwriting: A Record of Sixty-two Years in the Colby Collection of Hardy Manuscripts." Colby Mercury, vi. 18-19.

Hazlitt. Larrabee, Stephen A. "Hazlitt and the Augustan 'Rocking Horse'." LTLS, March 14, 1935, p. 160.

Olney, Clarke. "William Hazlitt and Benjamin Robert Haydon." N&Q, clxix. 237-239; 256-258.

Zeitlin, Jacob. "William Hazlitt: An Appreciation of a Great Literary Journalist." Sat. Rev. of Lit., xi. 417-418.

Hogg, Strout, Alan L. "James Hogg and 'Maga'." LTLS, Dec. 14, p. 859.

Holcroft, Stallbaumer, V. R. "Thomas Holcroft." LTLS, May 2, p. 288.

Hood, Thos. See FRENCH, Section IV, s.v. Baudelaire.

Hopkins, Gerard Manley. Downey, Harris. "A Poem Not Understood." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 506-517.

James, Stanley B. "The Sacrifice of Song." Cath. World, cxli. 290-295.

Horne. Grauel, George E. "'Orion' Horne." LTLS, July 11, 1935, p. 448.

See above, s.v. Browning, E. B., Shackford.

Keats, Bush, Douglas. "Notes on Keats's Reading." PMLA, L. 785-806.

Reminiscences in Keats, especially of his reading in John Potter's Archaeologia Graeca

Havens, Raymond D. "Unreconciled Opposites in Keats." PQ, xiv. 289-300.

Jones, Claude. "The message . . . to be done." English Studies, xvii. 146.

Norris, Edward T. "Hermes and the Nymph in Lamia." ELH, ii. 322-326.

Roberts, John H. "The Significance of Lamia." PMLA, L. 550-561.

Stroup, Thomas B. "Cymbeline, II, ii, and The Eve of St. Agnes." English Studies, xvii. 144-145.

Thorpe, Clarence D. John Keats: Complete Poems and Selected Letters. Garden City, N. Y.

See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Winwar.

Kingsley, Hanawalt, Mary W. "The Attitude of Charles Kingsley Toward Science." [Univ. of Iowa] Programs Announcing Candidates for Higher Degrees . . . 1935, no pagination (abstract of diss.)

Lamb. Charles Lamb (10 February 1775-27 December 1834). An Exhibition of Books and Manuscripts in the Library of The University of Texas Commemorative of the Centenary of His Death. Austin, Texas.

Johnson, Edith C. Lamb Always Elia. London.

Views the essays of Elia not as an escape but as the natural product of Lamb's mind as it evolved slowly under easily demonstrated influences.

McKillop, Alan D. "Charles Lamb Sees London." Rice Institute Pamphlet, xxii. 105-127.

Landor. Elkin, Felice. Walter Savage Landor's Studies of Italian Life and Literature. Philadelphia, 1934. (Univ. of Pennsylvania diss.)

Lockhart. Macbeth, Gilbert. John Gibson Lockhart: A Critical Study. Urbana, Ill. (Illinois Studies in Lang. and Lit., xvii, Nos. 3-4.)

Lytton. Watts, Harold H. "Lytton's Theories of Prose Fiction." PMLA, L. 274-289.

Based on an essay "On Art in Fiction" in the Monthly Chronicle, 1838.

Macaulay. Rolfe, John C. "Macaulay's Lays of Ancient Rome." Class. Jour., xxix (1934). 567-581.

"Gift of Macaulay Letters." Bull. N. Y. Pub. Libr., xxxix. 38.

Letters to Henry S. Randall of New York, written 1857-59, now in the library. All were printed by H. M. Lydenberg in the Bulletin (July, 1925) and separately in What Did Macaulay Say about America.

See Section III, s.v. Abbott.

Martineau. Stearns, Bertha M. "Miss Sedgwick Observes Harriet Martineau." New England Quar., vii (1934). 533-541.

Morris. Litzenberg, Karl. "William Morris and Scandinavian Literature: A Bibliographical Essay." SS, xiii. 93-105.

Morton. Mortvedt, Robert A. L. "Thomas Morton: His Life and Works." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, pp. 325-327.

Newman. Cronin, John F. Cardinal Newman: His Theory of Knowledge. Washington, D. C. (Cath. Univ. of Amer. diss.)

Grennan, Margaret R. (ed.). The Heart of Newman's Apologia, with an intro. by Joseph J. Reilly. N. Y., 1934.

Pater. Green, Zaidee E. "Walter Pater's Unhappy Beginnings." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 421-422

Sagmaster, Joseph (ed.). Marius the Epicurean: His Sensations and Ideas, by Walter Pater. Garden City, N. Y.

Proctor, B. W. Armour, Richard W. Barry Cornwall: A Biography of Bryan Waller Procter, with a Selected Collection of Hitherto Unpublished Letters. Boston.

Rossetti. M[abbott], T. O. "Echoes of Poe in Rossetti's Beryl Song." N&Q, clxviii. 77.

Ruskin. See above, s.v. Carlyle.

Scott. Boatright, Mody C. "Scott's Theory and Practice concerning the Use of the Supernatural in Prose Fiction in Relation to the Chronology of the Waverley Novels." PMLA, l. 235-261.

Grady, Sister Rose Marie. The Sources of Scott's Eight Long Poems. Urbana, 1934. (Univ. of Illinois abstract of diss.)

Millett, Fred B. The Date and Literary Relations of "Woodstock". Chicago, 1934. (Univ. of Chicago diss.)

Randall, David A. "Waverley in America." Colophon, n.s. i. 39-55.

Smock, George E. Sir Walter Scott's Theory of the Novel. Ithaca, 1934. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Shelley. Ballman, Adele B. "The Dating of Shelley's Prose Fragments—'On Life,' 'On Love,' 'On the Punishment of Death'." ELH, ii. 332-335.

Ebeling, Elizabeth. "A Probable Paracelsian Element in Shelley." SP, xxxii. 508-525.

Glenn, Keith. "Shelley's 'To Constantia Singing'." LTLS, April 11, p. 244.

Grabo, Carl. Prometheus Unbound: An Interpretation. Chapel Hill, N. C.

——— Meaning of "The Witch of Atlas". Chapel Hill, N. C.

[Griffith, R. H.] An Account of An Exhibition of Books and Manuscripts of Percy Bysshe Shelley, with Something of Their Literary History, Their Present Condition, and Their Provenance. Austin, Texas.

Jones, Claude E. "Christ a Fury?" MLN, l. 41.

Jones, Frederick L. "Mrs. Shelley's Lodore." LTLS, April 4, 1935, p. 228.

——— "Shelley's Leonora." MP, xxxii. 391-395.

Makes clear from Shelley's correspondence, freed from Hogg's alterations, that the novel was almost entirely the work of Hogg and that the association of Shelley's name with it arose largely from his efforts to get it published.

——— "Two Notes on Epipsychidion." MLN, l. 40.

- "Shelley and Christianity." Crozer Quar., xii. 266-273.
- Kessel, Marcel. "Shelley's 'To Constantia Singing'." LTLS, Jan. 17, 1935, p. 33.
- Lind, L. Robert. "Shelley Re-Appraised." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 413-435.
- Mabbott, T. O. "An Early American Printing of Shelley." N&Q, clxix. 242.
- Mousel, Sister Mary Eunice. "Falsetto in Shelley: A Critical Study." [Univ. of Iowa] Programs Announcing Candidates for Higher Degrees . . . 1935, no pagination. (abstract of diss.)
- Richards, Irving T. "A Note on Source Influences in Shelley's Cloud and Skylark." PMLA, l. 562-567.
- Weaver, Bennett. "Shelley's Biblical Extracts: A Lost Book." Papers of the Michigan Acad. of Science, Arts, and Letters, xx. 523-538.
- See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Winwar; Section VII, s.v. Spenser, Lemmi.
- Southey. See above, s.v. Miscellaneous, Christensen; Section IX, s.v. Lewis, M. G.
- Stevenson. Morley, Christopher. "F.D.R. and Treasure Island." Sat. Rev. of Lit., May 4, 1935, p. 15.
- Tennyson. Bush, Douglas. "The Personal Note in Tennyson's Classical Poems." Univ. of Toronto Quar., iv. 201-218.
- Thackeray. More, Paul Elmer (ed.). Vanity Fair: A Novel without a Hero. 2v., Garden City, N. Y.
- Day, Clarence. "There Was a Young Englishman." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Oct. 5, 1935, p. 9.
- Thompson, Francis. Willson, Cecil H. S. "Francis Thompson: Poet of Childhood." Dalhousie Rev., xiv. 474-478.
- Thomson, James. Worcester, David. "James Thomson the Second: Studies in the Life and Poetry of 'B.V.'." Harvard Univ. . . . Summaries of Theses . . . 1934, p. 349.
- Wilde. See AMERICAN, Section IV, s.v. Whitman.
- Wilson, John. Strout, Alan L. "Purple Patches in the Noctes Ambrosianae." ELH, ii. 327-331.
- Wordsworth. Bishop, David H. "Wordsworth's 'Hermitage': Racedown or Grasmere?" SP, xxxii. 483-507.
- Suggests that the opening passage in The Prelude "has reference to a journey of inspection made by Wordsworth from Temple Sowerby to Grasmere in the autumn of 1799."
- Burton, Mary E. Wordsworth's Revision of The Prelude. [Ithaca], 1934. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)
- Hamilton, C. C. "Wordsworth's Decline in Poetic Power: The Conflict of the Supreme Period." Univ. of Pittsburgh. Abstracts of Theses, xi. 123-130.
- Hartsell, E. H. "The Date of the Ode to Duty." LTLS, May 30, 1935, p. 348.
- Maynard, Theodore. "Wordsworth's Exquisite Sister." Cath. World, cxli. 523-532.
- Patton, Cornelius H. The Rediscovery of Wordsworth. Boston.
- Stresses Wordsworth's ideas and interprets his message to readers of today.
- Rowland, Buford. "William Wordsworth and Pennsylvania State Bonds." Pennsylvania Mag. of Hist. and Biog., lxx. 301-303.

——— "William Wordsworth and Mississippi Bonds." Jour. of Southern Hist., I. 501-507.

Sperry, Willard L. Wordsworth's Anti-Climax. Cambridge, Mass. (Harvard Studies in English, XIII.)

Weber, Carl J. Thanks to the Censor. Waterville, Me. (Colby Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa), [1932].

Translations, with comment, of Annette Vallon's two letters.

See above, s. v. Miscellaneous, Christensen; Dougherty, GENERAL, Æsthetics, Cooper.

XI. CONTEMPORARY

Miscellaneous. See AMERICAN, Section VI, s. v. Walter.

Baker, Howard. "Some Notes on New Fiction." Southern Rev., I. 178-191.

Blinkley, Robert C. "New Tools for Men of Letters." Yale Rev., XXIV 519-537.

Boyd, Ernest. "Marxian Literary Critics." Scribner's Mag., xcvi. 342-346.

Burke, Kenneth. "Recent Poetry." Southern Rev., I. 164-177.

Devoe, Alan. "The Riddle of Modern Writing." Cath. World, cxli. 403-408.

Millett, Fred B. Contemporary British Literature. A Critical Survey and 232 Author-bibliographies. Third revised and enlarged edition, based on the second revised and enlarged edition by John M. Manly and Edith Rickert. N. Y.

Ransom, John C. "Poets without Laurels." Yale Rev., xxiv. 503-518.

——— "Autumn of Poetry." Southern Rev., I. 609-623.

Strong, L. A. G. "English Poetry since Brooke." Amer. Mercury, xxxv. 56-62.

Bennett, Arnold. Tresidder, Argus J. Arnold Bennett: A Critical Study. Ithaca. (Cornell Univ. abstract of diss.)

Binyon. Southworth, James G. "Laurence Binyon." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 341-355.

Bridges. Lipscomb, Herbert C. "Lucretius and The Testament of Beauty." Class. Jour., xxxi. 77-88.

Chesterton. Reilly, Joseph J. "Chesteron as Poet." Cath. World, cxlii. 266-276.

Conrad. Ferguson, J. DeLaney. "The Plot of Conrad's The Duel." MLN, L. 385-390.

Conrad traced the inspiration for the story to a ten-line paragraph in a provincial French newspaper. It really comes in much more detail from Harper's Magazine for September, 1858

Wood, Miriam H. "A Source of Conrad's Suspense." MLN, L. 390-394.

Striking verbal and other agreements with the Memoirs of the Comtesse de Boigne

See Section X, s. v. Hardy, Lillard.

Coppard, A. E. Saul, George B. "Literary Parallels: Yeats and Coppard." N&Q, CLXVIII. 314.

——— Cherry Ripe, by A. E. Coppard, with a Bibliographical Note. Windham, Conn.

Dowson. Lane-Latimer, J. Ronald. "Ernest Dowson." LTLS, Jan. 3, p. 9.

Eliot, T. S. Brown, Wallace C. "T. S. Eliot and the Demon of the Ego." New Humanist, VIII. 81-85.

Loring, M. L. S. "T. S. Eliot on Matthew Arnold." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 479-488.

Matthiessen, Francis O. The Achievement of T. S. Eliot: An Essay on the Nature of Poetry. Boston.

Holme, Constance. Berry, James G. "Constance Holme: An Appreciation." Dalhousie Rev., xv. 357-364.

Housman, A. E. Lind, Levi R. "Additions to a List of Classical Echoes in the Poetry of A. E. Housman." Classical Weekly, XXIX. 56.

Ryan, John K. "Defeatist as Poet." Cath. World, CXLI. 32-38

Tinker, Chauncey B. "Housman's Poetry." Yale Rev., xxv. 84-95.

Huxley, Aldous. Rogers, Winfield H. "Aldous Huxley's Humanism." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 262-272.

See below, s v. Lawrence, D. H.

Joyce, Strong, L. A. G. "James Joyce and the New Fiction." Amer. Mercury, xxxv. 433-437.

More Paul E. "James Joyce." Amer. Rev., v. 129-157.

Kipling. Mirrielees, Edith. "Time and Mr. Kipling." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 37-46.

Lawrence, D. H. Alexander, Henry. "Lawrence and Huxley." Queen's Quar., XLII. 96-108.

Lucas. Shaw, Charles B. "The Lure of Mr. Lucas." Colophon, Part 20, no pagination (10 pages).

Mansfield, Kath. Schneider, Elizabeth. "Katherine Mansfield and Chekhov." MLN, L. 394-397.

Moore. Morgan, Charles. "Epitaph on George Moore." Amer. Mercury, xxxvi. 176-186.

Novel. Field, Louise M. "Emancipating the Novel." North Amer. Rev., CCXL. 318-324.

Frederick, John T. "New Techniques in the Novel." Eng. Jour., XXIV. 355-363.

Martin, Burns. "The English Novel since 1900." Dalhousie Rev., xv. 213-218.

Warren, Robert P. "Some Recent Novels." Southern Rev., I. 624-649.

Russell. Colum, Mary A. "A.E." Sat. Rev. of Lit., July 27, 1935, pp. 11-12.

Shaw. Longstreth, T. Morris. "Fanny's First Play." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Sept. 14, 1935, p. 9.

Withington, Robert, "The Sage of Dubdon." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 224-229.

Synge. Alspach, R. K. "Synge's Well of the Saints." L T L S, Dec. 28, 1935, p. 899.

Parallels with a story in Patrick Kennedy's Bardic Stories of Ireland.

Woods, Anthony S. "Synge Stayed at Home by the Fireside." Cath. World, CXLI. 46-52.

Trevena, John. Henry, Myrtle C. John Trevena: A Study with Special Reference to the Romantic Elements in his Work. Philadelphia. (Univ. of Penna. diss.)

Yeats. Flaccus, Kimball. "Yeatsiana." Sat. Rev. of Lit., Sept. 14, 1935, p. 9.

See Coppard, A. E.

AMERICAN LITERATURE

BY GREGORY PAINE

I. LINGUISTICS

Bloch, Bernard. "Interviewing for the Linguistic Atlas." AS, x. 3-9.

——— See GENERAL, Experimental Phonetics.

Bloomfield, Leonard. See ENGLISH, Section I.

Brauer, Dora L. "Trade Names in the Petroleum Industry." AS, x. 122-128.

Cannell, Margaret. "Indian Personal Names from the Nebraska and Dakota Regions." AS, x. 184-187.

Clifford, James L. "New Light on the Origin of Eastern American Pronunciation of Unaccented Final 'a'." AS, x. 173-175.

Evans, Medford. "Southern 'Long I'." AS, x. 188-190.

Gibson, Martha J. "'Swamp' in Early American Usage." AS, x. 30-35.

Graff, W. L. See GENERAL, Linguistics.

Hill, A. A. "A Report on Proposed Investigations of Southern Speech." Dialect Notes, vi. 420-424 (1934).

——— "Research in Southern Speech in Co-operation with the Linguistic Atlas." AS, x. 237-240.

Hughes, Dorothy. "The Language of the Fashion Sheet." AS, x. 191-194.

Johnston, Winifred. "Newspaper Balladry." AS, x. 119-121.

Joos, M. See GENERAL, Experimental Phonetics.

Kennedy, Arthur G. et al. "Bibliographical Department." AS, x. 61-74; 139-152; 218-231; 304-313.

Contains reviews of books on American speech, with brief notices of books and articles on "Present-Day English," "The Study of Names," "General and Historical Studies," "The Art of Speaking and Writing," and "Phonetics" (by S. N. Treviño).

Kuethe, J. Louis. "Runs, Creeks, and Branches in Maryland." AS, x. 256-259.

Kurath, Hans. "Progress of the Linguistic Atlas." Dialect Notes, vi. 449-452. Continued in each issue, published semiannually, since Vol. vi Part II. 1930.

Marckwardt, Albert H. See ENGLISH, Section I.

Maurer, David W. "The Lingo of the Good-People." AS, x. 10-23.

Good-People are old-timers, of thirty years or more ago, to the modern gangsters.

Miller, Edmund E. "American and English Translations of 'The Oppermanns'." AS, x. 180-183.

Parmenter, C. E., and Treviño, S. N. "The Length of the Sounds of a Middle Westerner." AS, x. 129-133.

Prescott, Russell T. "Language of the Livestock Mart." AS, x. 269-272.

Ramsay, Robert L., Read, Allen W., and Leech, Esther G. "Introduction to a Survey of Missouri Place-Names." Univ. of Missouri Studies, ix. 1-24 (1934). The first chapters, "Inception and Progress of the Survey," "Directions for Students of Missouri Place-Names," and "Typical Problems Still Unsolved," are by R. L. Ramsay; the "Bibliography of Library Sources for the Study of the Place Names of Missouri" was compiled by A. W. Read; the chapters on Pike County Place-Names are by Miss Leech.

Read, Allen W. "Attitudes toward Missouri Speech." Missouri Hist. Rev., xxix. 259-271.

——— "The Bear in American Speech." AS, x. 195-202.

——— "Nantucketisms of 1848." AS, x. 38-42.

——— "Two New England Lists of 1848." Dialect Notes, vi. Part x. 452-454.

Lists of Americanisms compiled by George Edward Ellis and an anonymous compiler.

——— See ENGLISH, Section I.

Richie, Eleanor L. "Spanish Place Names in Colorado." AS, x. 88-92.

Russell, I. Willis. See ENGLISH, Section I.

Steadman, J. M. "Language Taboos of American College Students." Eng. Studies, xvii. 6-91.

——— See ENGLISH, Section I.

Stewart, George R., Jr. "Popular Names for the Mountain Sheep." AS, x. 283-288.

Struble, George G. "The English of the Pennsylvania Germans." AS, x. 164-172.

Thomas, C. K. "Pronunciation in Upstate New York." AS, x. 107-112; 208-212; 292-297.

Thornton, R. H. "Thornton's American Glossary, Vol. III, Part VIII." Dialect Notes, vi. 456-480.

Trager, George L. "Some Spanish Place Names of Colorado." AS, x. 203-207.

Tysell, Helen T. "The English of the Comic Cartoons." AS, x. 43-55.

II. GENERAL

Aiken, Riley (ed.). "A Pack Load of Mexican Tales." Texas Folk-Lore Soc. Publications, No. XII. 1-87.

Allen, Gay W. American Prosody. N. Y.

A history of versification of eleven poets from Freneau to Emily Dickinson.

Brawley, Benjamin. Early Negro American Writers: Selections with Biographical and Critical Introductions. Chapel Hill, N. C.

Twenty Negro writers, from Jupiter Hammon to Alexander Crummell.

De Huff, Elizabeth W. "The Metamorphosis of a Folk Tale." Texas Folk-Lore Soc. Publications, No. XII. 122-134.

Dictionary of American Biography. Edited by Dumas Malone. Vol. xv. Platt-Roberdeau. Vol. xvi. Robert-Seward. Vol. xvii. Sewell-Stevenson. N. Y. This very valuable dictionary of biography will be completed in 1936.

Ditzion, Sidney. "The History of Periodical Literature in the United States: A Bibliography." Bull. of Bibliography, xv. 110; 129-133.

Dobie, J. Frank. "Catorce." Texas Folk-Lore Soc. Publications, No. XII. 194-200.

Ferguson, J. DeLancey. "American Humor: Roots or Flowers?" Amer. Scholar, iv. 380-382.

A reply to Miss Rourke, see below.

——— "The Roots of American Humor." Amer. Scholar, iv. 41-48.

The tall story is not autochthonously American, but descends from medieval sagas, romances, the Mabinogion, the proverbs, and the chapbooks of seventeenth and eighteenth century England.

Gohdes, Clarence, et al. (comps.). "Articles on American Literature Appearing in Current Periodicals." Am Lit, vi. 448-454; vii. 90-104; 211-219; 337-349.

Halline, Allan G. (ed.). American Plays: Selected and Edited with Critical Introductions and Bibliographies. N. Y.

Hunt, Everett L. "The Social Interpretation of Literature." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 214-219.

Jones, Howard M., and Leisy, Ernest E. (comps.). Major American Writers. N. Y.

Professor Jones writes the "Introductory Survey. Backgrounds of American Literature."

Kirk, Clara M. See ENGLISH, Section III.

Long, Orie W. Literary Pioneers: Early American Explorers of European Culture. Cambridge, Mass.

"One of the most important contributions to American intellectual life in the nineteenth century resulted from the romantic impulse which impelled a group of aspiring young scholars to pursue their studies in foreign countries. George Ticknor and Edward Everett, as students at the University of Göttingen, were the earliest of the pioneers in this movement. In the course of years they were followed by Joseph Green Cogswell, George Bancroft, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, John Motley, and others of distinction."

McKay, George L. (comp.). "American Book Auction Catalogues 1713-1934: A Union List." Bull. N. Y. Pub. Libr., xxxix. 141-166; 388-410; 461-478; 561-576; 638-661; 724-744.

A list of some nine thousand American auction catalogues

McVoy, Lizzie C., and Campbell, Ruth B. (comps.). A Bibliography of Fiction by Louisianians and on Louisiana Subjects. Baton Rouge. (Louisiana State University Studies. No. 18.)

Fiction in the English language, exclusive of magazine fiction.

Mott, F. L. "One Hundred and Twenty Years." North Amer. Rev., ccxl. 144-174.

A history of the North American Review, which will form a chapter of the forthcoming History of American Magazines: 1850-1885 This informative article lacks the illuminating footnotes of the History, which I have had the privilege of reading in MS

Mowat, R. B. Americans in England. Boston.

A general, historical study of various Americans who have visited England during three centuries.

Orians, G. Harrison. "The Cult of the Vanishing American." Univ. of Toledo Bull., xiii. 3-15.

A study of the "Last of the Tribe" tradition in the decade following Cooper's The Last of the Mohicans (1826).

Pattee, Fred L. The First Century of American Literature: 1770-1870. N. Y. Ignoring the colonial productions, to which Tyler devoted two long volumes, Professor Pattee portrays the writers and analyzes the literary products of the Revolutionary and Romantic periods.

Pennington, Edgar L. "The Beginnings of the Library in Charles Town, South Carolina." Proceedings Amer. Antiquarian Soc., N S, XLIV. 159-187.

"The lending library of colonial America owes most to the industry and example of an English clergyman, the Reverend Doctor Thomas Bray," who collected funds for lending libraries to fourteen British colonies, including five American colonies. We have a complete list of the books sent to Charles Town, South Carolina, in 1698. This list is appended, with an identification of titles

Read, Allen W. "The Membership in Proposed American Academies." Am Lit, vii. 145-165.

An examination of the membership of several proposed American academies and that of the organized National Institute of Arts and Letters aids in the study of literary history

Rourke, Constance. "Examining the Roots of American Humor." Amer. Scholar, iv. 249-252, 254.

A reply to Mr. Ferguson's article

Sabin, Joseph (comp.). Bibliotheca Americana: A Dictionary of Books Relating to America, from Its Discovery to the Present Time. Vol. xxv. Part 150; Vol. xxvi. Parts 151-156; Vol. xxvii. Part 157 (To Virginia).

Begun by Joseph Sabin, continued by Wilberforce Eames, and completed by R. W. G. Vail for the Bibliographical Society of America

Shipton, Clifford K. "A Plea for Puritanism." Amer. Hist. Rev., xl. 460-467.

Spiller, Robert E. "The Task of the Historian of American Literature." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 70-79.

American literary historians "must be philosophers and economists as well as critics." They must do for poetry, the essay, and the novel what has been done for the drama, and, to an even lesser extent, for the short story "Our first task as research investigators is not, at the present time, the writing of this new history, but the conservation and classification of the sources from which it is to be written, and the continued and intensive fact-finding in limited fields and on specific problems."

Weiss, Harry B. (comp.). "A Catalogue of the American, English, and Foreign Chapbooks in the New York Public Library." Bull. N. Y. Pub. Libr., xxxix. 3-34; 105-126; 181-192; Supplement and index 789-810.

An annotated catalogue of nearly twelve hundred chapbooks, with a bibliography of general works.

Willard, James F. See ENGLISH, Section III.

Winterich, John T. Early American Books and Printing. Boston.

A popular history of printing, with expert comments on some pieces of rare Americana.

III. SEVENTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH CENTURIES

Miscellaneous. Adams, Randolph G. "America's First Bibles." Colophon, N S, i. 11-20.

Although Isaiah Thomas stated in his History of Printing (1810) that Kneeland and Green of Boston printed a Bible in English in 1752, later bibliographers believe that he was incorrect, since no copy or record of a copy has appeared. They maintain that the first Bible in English in America was printed by Robert Aitken in Philadelphia in 1782.

Brayton, Susan S. "The Library of an Eighteenth-Century Gentleman of Rhode Island." New Eng. Quar., viii. 277-283.

Jones, Howard M. "American Prose Style: 1700-1770." Huntington Libr. Bull., No. 6. 115-151 (1934).

This original study shows that Colonial sermons had a marked influence on literary style towards clarity and simplicity.

Lovely, N. W. "Notes on New England Almanacs." New Eng. Quar., viii. 264-277.

Almanacs published before the Revolution.

Pattee, Fred L. "The British Theater in Philadelphia in 1778." AmLit, vi, 231-388.

Pollock, Thomas C. "Notes on Professor Pattee's 'The British Theater in Philadelphia in 1778'." AmLit, vii, 310-314.

Points out errors in fact and inference in Professor Pattee's article Spruill, Julia C. "The Southern Lady's Library, 1700-1776." So. Atlantic Quar., xxxiv, 23-41.

Ames, Nathaniel. Jorgenson, Chester E. "The New Science in the Almanacs of Ames and Franklin." New Eng. Quar., viii, 555-561.

Barlow, Joel. Zunder, Theodore A. "Notes on the Friendship of Joel Barlow and Tom Paine." ABC, vi, 96-99.

Byrd, William. Murdock, Kenneth B. "William Byrd and the Virginian Author of The Wanderer." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii, 129-136.

Byrd wrote a letter, here reprinted, on the fly-leaf of John Fox's Motto's of the Wanderer (London, 1718). The life of Fox is sketched.

Edwards. Faust, Clarence H., and Johnson, Thomas H. (eds.) Jonathan Edwards: Representative Selections, with Introduction, Bibliography, and Notes. N. Y.

A volume in the American Writers Series. The greater part of the Introduction, written by Dr. Faust, treats "Jonathan Edwards as a Thinker."

Johnson, Thomas. "Jonathan Edwards as a Man of Letters." Harvard Summaries of Theses, 1934, 332-327.

Evans, Nathaniel. Pennington, Edgar L. Nathaniel Evans: A Poet of Colonial America. Ocala, Fla.

This 32-page pamphlet also treats "Evans the Priest."

Franklin. Jorgenson, Chester E. "Benjamin Franklin and Rabelais," Classical Jour., xxix, 538-540 (1934).

Godfrey, Thomas. Carlson, C. Lennart. "Thomas Godfrey in England." AmLit, vii, 303-309.

Hopkins, Samuel. Elsbre, Oliver W. "Samuel Hopkins and His Doctrine of Benevolence." New Eng. Quar., viii, 534-550.

Johnson, Samuel. Hornberger, Theodore. "Samuel Johnson of Yale and King's College: A Note on the Relation of Science and Religion in Provincial America." New Eng. Quar., viii, 378-397.

Mather, Cotton. Hornberger, Theodore. "The Date, the Source, and the Significance of Cotton Mather's Interest in Science." AmLit, vi, 413-420.

Mather's "delight in the wonder and beauty of design in the external world" was expressed as early as 1693, which was many years before the fuller expression of this deistic attitude in The Christian Philosopher (1720).

Priestley. Browne, Charles A. "Joseph Priestley and the American 'Fathers'." Amer. Scholar, iv, 133-147.

Well known to his American contemporaries, this theologian and chemist was the friend of Franklin, Jefferson, and John Adams.

Smith, John. Morse, Jarvis M. "John Smith and His Critics: A Chapter in Colonial Historiography." Jour. Southern Hist., i, 123-137.

Thomas, Isaiah. Marble, Annie M. From 'Prentice to Patron: The Life Story of Isaiah Thomas N. Y.

A very readable biography of this important publisher, editor, and bookseller—the founder of the American Antiquarian Society and the author of the History of Printing in America. Students of American publishing wish that the author had discussed Thomas's works with more antiquarian interest.

Williams, Roger. Wiener, F. B. "Roger Williams' Contribution to Modern Thought." R. I. Hist. Soc. Coll., xxviii. 1–20.

IV. NINETEENTH CENTURY, 1800–1870

Miscellaneous. Brooks, Cleanth. The Relation of the Alabama-Georgia Dialect to the Provincial Dialects of Great Britain. Baton Rouge. (Louisiana State University Studies, No. xx)

Brown, Herbert R. "The Great American Novel." Am Lit, viii. 1–14.

Excerpts from critics of the nineteenth century who were not in agreement about the best American fiction

Jones, Howard M. "The Influence of European Ideas in Nineteenth-Century America." Am Lit, vii. 241–273.

"The British version of post-revolutionary rationalism" had "the most vogue in the New World" The Scotch "common-sense" school had the most striking influence upon American metaphysics. The "dynamic conception of nature" brought to a focus such subsidiary forces of European influence as literary romanticism, transcendentalism, and an affirmative optimism

Loewenberg, Bert J. "The Controversy over Evolution in New England, 1859–1873." New Eng. Quar., viii. 232–257.

———"The Import of the Doctrine of Evolution on American Thought, 1859–1900." Harvard Summaries of Theses, 1934, 165–168.

McCloskey, John C. "The Campaign of Periodicals after the War of 1812 for National American Literature." PMLA, i. 262–273.

Enthusiastic over American naval victories in the War of 1812, Democratic periodicals attempted the establishment of a national American literature. The illustrative quotations are from The Portico (Baltimore, 1816–1818).

Macdonald, Allan. "A Sailor Among the Transcendentalists." New Eng. Quar., viii. 307–319.

Father Edward Taylor stood by Emerson. Writings by Emerson, Dana, Whitman, Dickens (American Notes), and Melville (Father Mapple in Moby-Dick) contain references to Taylor.

O'Neill, Edward H. A History of American Biography, 1800–1935. Phila. A Univ. of Pa. dissertation, in which the author writes expository and critical comments on hundreds of biographies.

Sedgwick, William E. "The Problem of American Literature as Seen by Contemporary Critics, 1815–1850." Harvard Summaries of Theses, 1935, 333–334.

———"The Materials for an American Literature: A Critical Problem of the Early Nineteenth Century." Harvard Studies and Notes in Phil. and Lit., xvii. 141–162.

Wilson, Arthur H. A History of the Philadelphia Theatre, 1835–1855. Philadelphia.

The third volume in the series on the history of the Philadelphia theatre, written as a Univ of Pa. dissertation.

Audubon. Hopkins, Frederick M. "Audubon's Birds of America." Publishers' Weekly, cxxviii. 1545-1546.

Peattie, Donald C. Singing in the Wilderness: A Salute to John James Audubon. N. Y.

Baldwin, J. G. Parish, Hunter D. "An Overlooked Personality in Southern Life," N. C. Hist Rev, xii. 341-353.

An Alabama editor, Samuel Hale, is the original of a character in Flush Times

Brown, C. B. Alcuin: A Dialogue. A Type-facsimile Reprint of the First Edition Printed in 1798. With an Introduction by Leroy Elwood Kimball. New Haven.

Brown's first book, and the earliest championing of the rights of women by an American

Bryant. Glicksberg, Charles I. "Bryant, the Poet of Humor." Americana, xxix. 364-374.

——— "An Uncollected Poem by William Cullen Bryant." ABC, vi. 131-134.

A poetical translation from the Spanish.

——— See s.v. Cooper.

——— "William Cullen Bryant and Fanny Wright." Am Lit, vi. 427-432.

Herrick, Marvin T. "Rhetoric and Poetry in Bryant." Am Lit, vii. 188-194.

McDowell, Tremaine (ed). William Cullen Bryant: Representative Selections, with Introduction, Bibliography, and Notes. N. Y.

This volume of the American Writers Series contains a carefully selected annotated bibliography, an extensive range of selections, and adequate notes. The choice of a large number of prose selections is wise. The editor's critical judgment is sound in his treatment of Bryant as a poet, critic, and Romantic writer. It is difficult to treat Bryant's politics in so short a space, but the discussion of Bryant's religion is excellent.

Carey, Mathew. Randall, David A. "Waverley in America." Colophon, N S, i. 39-55.

Carey secured advance sheets of the Waverley Novels from Ballantyne

Channing, W. E. Silver, Rollo G. "Ellery Channing's Collaboration with Emerson." Am Lit, vii. 84-86.

Letters by William Ellery Channing the younger to secure aid in publishing a book

Cooper. Glicksberg, Charles I. "Cooper & Bryant: A Literary Friendship." Colophon, Part 20. 12 pages.

The reprinting of editorials and reviews by Bryant and of letters by Cooper, from the New York Evening Post.

Marckwardt, Albert H. "The Chronology and Personnel of the Bread and Cheese Club." Am Lit, vi. 389-399.

The probable date of organization was 1822 instead of 1824, and the club roster included about thirty-five men of prominence.

Orians, G. Harrison. See above, s.v. General.

Spiller, Robert E. "Fenimore Cooper and Lafayette: Friends of Polish Freedom, 1830-1832." Am Lit, vii. 56-75.

DeBow, J. D. B. Nixon, H. C. "J. D. B. DeBow, Publicist." Southwest Rev., xx. 217-219.

Deering, Nathaniel. Chaplin, Leola B. The Life and Works of Nathaniel Deering, 1791-1881: With the Text of Deering's Plays Carabasset and The Clairvoyants. Orono, Maine, 1934. (Univ. of Maine Studies, Second Ser., No. 32.)

A Portland, Maine, poet and playwright

Drake. Johnson, Merle, and Birss, John H. (comps.). "American First Editions: Joseph Rodman Drake, 1795-1820." Publishers' Weekly, CXXVII. 1926.

Pleadwell, F. L. The Life and Works of Joseph Rodman Drake Boston.

A biography by an officer of the U. S. Medical Corps

Emerson. Scudder, Townsend. "Emerson in Dundee." Amer. Scholar. iv. 331-344.

——— "Emerson's British Lecture Tour, 1847-1848. Part I. The Preparations for the Tour, and the Nature of Emerson's Audience; Part II. Emerson as a Lecturer in Britain and the Reception of the Lecturer." Am Lit, vii. 15-36; 166-180.

Scudder, Townsend, III. See ENGLISH, Section x, s.v. Carlyle.

Silver, Rollo G. "Mr. Emerson Appeals to Boston." ABC, vi. 209-219.

Anti-slavery lecture printed in the Daily Evening Traveller, Boston, Jan. 26, 1855.

Warfel, Harry R. See s.v. Margaret Fuller.

Zink, Harriet R. Emerson's Use of the Bible (Univ. of Nebraska Studies in Language, Literature, and Criticism. No. 14.)

Foster, Stephen. Bowman, John G. "A Singer to Pioneers." Atlantic Mo., CLVI. 83-88.

The character and achievement of Stephen Foster

Fletcher, Edward G. "Stephen Collins Foster, Dramatic Collaborator." Colophon, N S, i. 33-37.

Fuller, Margaret. Warfel, Harry R. "Margaret Fuller and Ralph Waldo Emerson." PMLA, L. 576-594.

Griffith, Mary. Adkins, Nelson F. "An Early American Story of Utopia." Colophon, N S, i. 123-132.

Mrs. Mary Griffith wrote "Three Hundred Years Hence," published in a volume of tales, Camperdown; or, News from our Neighborhood (1836).

Halleck, Fitz-Greene. Johnson, Merle, and Birss, John H. (comps.). "American First Editions: Fitz-Greene Halleck, 1790-1867." Publishers' Weekly, CXXVII. 2306.

Hawthorne. Cherry, Fannye N. "A Note on the Source of Hawthorne's 'Lady Eleanore's Mantle'." Am Lit, vi. 437-439.

Stewart, Randall. "Hawthorne in England: The Patriotic Motive in the Note-Books." New Eng. Quar., viii. 3-13.

Turner, Arlin. "Autobiographical Elements in Hawthorne's 'The Blithedale Romance'." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, No. 15. Pp. 39-62.

Warren, Austin. "Hawthorne's Reading." New Eng. Quar. viii. 480-497.

Irving. Osterweis, Rollin G. Rebecca Gratz: A Study in Charm. Introduction by A. S. W. Rosenbach. Foreword by David Philipson. N. Y.

"Rebecca Gratz survives in American literary history . . . as the putative original of the Rebecca in Scott's Ivanhoe, and as the friend of Washington Irving."

Parsons, Coleman O. "Washington Irving Writes from Granada." AmLit, vi. 439-443.

Reichart, Walter A. "Washington Irving, the Fosters, and the Forsters." MLN, L. 35-39.

The confusion by biographers of the family of Mrs John Foster and her daughters, Emily and Flora, of Bedford, England, with another English family, that of Edward Forster Starke, Aubrey. "Irving's 'Haunted Ship'—A Correction." AmLit, vi. 444-445.

Not by Irving, for it had been reprinted in the New York Mirror, Jan. 9, 1836, from some English annual.

Williams, Stanley T. The Life of Washington Irving. 2 vols. N. Y.

The definitive study of Irving, by the best authority, who writes with charm and scholarly thoroughness.

James, Henry. Warren, Austin. The Elder Henry James. N. Y., 1934.

Key, F. S. Weybright, Victor. Spangled Banner: The Story of Francis Scott Key. N. Y.

Longfellow. Curti, Merle E. "Henry Wadsworth Longfellow and Elihu Burritt." AmLit, vii. 315-328.

A reprinting of letters in exchange between Longfellow and "the learned blacksmith" of Worcester.

Flanders, Bertram H. "An Uncollected Longfellow Translation." AmLit, vii. 205-207.

Thompson, Lawrance R. "Longfellow's Original Sin of Imitation." Colophon, N S, I. 97-106.

Melville. Aaron, Daniel. "Melville and the Missionaries." New Eng. Quar., viii. 404-408.

Anderson, Charles R. "A Reply to Herman Melville's White-Jacket by Rear-Admiral Thomas O. Selfridge, Sr." AmLit, vii. 123-144.

Selfridge states his objections to Melville's pictures of life on a man-of-war, in a newly discovered manuscript.

Fagin, N. Bryllion. "Herman Melville and the Interior Monologue." AmLit, vi. 433-434.

Forsythe, Robert S. "Herman Melville in Honolulu." New Eng. Quar., viii. 99-105.

——— "Herman Melville's 'The Town-Ho's Story'." N&Q, CLXVIII. 314

This story, later published as Chapter 54 in Moby-Duck, first appeared in Harper's Magazine, for Oct., 1851, from which it was printed in the Baltimore Weekly Sun for Nov. 8, 1851.

Journal up the Straits: October 11, 1856-May 5, 1857. Edited with an Introduction by Raymond Weaver. N. Y.

The transcription and editing of two hundred pages of manuscript from three journals, which gives the record of Melville's trip to the Far East, and furnished him background for his poem Clarel.

Wegelin, Oscar. "Herman Melville as I Recall Him." Colophon, N S, I. 21-24.

Paulding. Davidson, Frank. "Paulding's Treatment of the Angel of Hadley." AmLit, vii. 330-332.

Paulding's The Puritan and His Daughter should be added to G. H. Orians' list of literary treatments of the regicide theme. See article in AmLit, iv. 227-269.

Poe. Allen, Mozelle S. "Poe's Debt to Voltaire." Univ. of Texas Studies in English, No. 15. Pp. 63-75.

Alterton, Margaret, and Craig, Hardin. (eds.). Edgar Allan Poe: Representative Selections, with Introduction, Bibliography, and Notes. N. Y.

The choice of selections, the critical bibliographies, and the detailed notes form a rich collection. The Introduction contains Miss Alterton's theory of the effect upon Poe's writings and critical dicta of his increasing grasp of unity—a theory which is one of several in interpreting Poe. Dr Craig's admirably written sections of the Introduction stress, almost overstress, Poe's literary skill and genius Belden, H. M. "Poe's 'The City in the Sea' and Dante's City of Dis." AmLit, vii. 332-334.

Jackson, D. K. "Four of Poe's Critiques in Baltimore Newspapers." MLN, l. 251-256.

Lloyd, J. A. T. "Who Wrote 'English Notes'?" Colophon, N S, i. 107-118.
An unconvincing argument, upon internal evidence, that Poe wrote English Notes

Mabbott, Thomas O. "Allusion to a Spanish Joke in Poe's 'A Valentine'." N&Q, CLXIX. 189.

——— "Joel Chandler Harris: A Debt to Poe." N&Q, CLXVI. 151-152 (1934).

McLean, Sydney R. "A Valentine." Colophon, N S, i. 183-187.
A poem to a girl who gave poetic promise.

Silver, Rollo G. See below, s.v. Whitman.

Varner, J. G. "Poe's Tale of Jerusalem and The Talmud." ABC, vi. 56-57.

Whitty, J. H. "A Parrot." Colophon, N S, i. 188-190.

A French-speaking parrot in the home of the Misses Dubourg, Poe's first school abroad.

Zunder, Theodore A. See above, s.v. Barlow.

Simms. Hoole, William S. "William Gilmore Simms's Career as Editor." Georgia Hist. Quar., xix. 47-54.

Tabb. Starke, Aubrey. "Father John B. Tabb: A Checklist." ABC, vi. 101-104.

Thoreau. Flanagan, John T. "Thoreau in Minnesota." Minnesota Hist., xvi. 35-46.

Stewart, Charles D. "A Word for Thoreau." Atlantic Mo., CLVI. 110-116.
Nature facts which discredit Burroughs' criticisms of Thoreau.

White, Viola C. "Thoreau's Opinion of Whitman." New Eng. Quar., viii. 262-264.

Thoreau's letter to Harrison Blake about Whitman.

Timrod. Cardwell, G. R. "The Date of Henry Timrod's Birth." AmLit, vii. 207-208.

The poet was born on Dec. 8, 1828, and not Dec. 8, 1829, as universally stated.

Whitman. Adkins, Nelson F. "Walt Whitman and William Motherwell: 'Goodbye My Fancy'." N&Q, CLXIX. 268-269.

Allen, Gay W. (comp.). "Walt Whitman Bibliography, 1918-1934." Bull. of Bibliography, xv. 84-85; 106-109.

Baker, Portia. "Walt Whitman's Relations with Some New York Magazines." AmLit, vii. 274-301.

Cooke, Alice L. "Whitman's Background in the Industrial Movements of His Time" Univ of Texas Studies in English, No. 15. Pp 76-91.

Glicksberg, Charles I. "A Friend of Walt Whitman." ABC, vi. 91-94

——— "A Whitman Discovery." Colophon, N S, I. 227-234.

Mr Glicksberg supports Emory Holloway in attributing the authorship of a Harper's article to Whitman

——— "A Walt Whitman Parody" AmLit, v. 436-437.

Gohdes, Clarence. "The 1876 English Subscription for Whitman." MLN, L. 252-258

The astonishing financial success of the Centennial Edition of Leaves of Grass and Two Rivulets (1876).

Silver, Rollo G. "Seven Letters of Walt Whitman." AmLit, vii. 76-81.

——— "A Note about Whitman's Essay on Poe." AmLit, vi. 435-436.

——— "Oscar Makes a Call." Colophon, Part 20. 4 pages.

A reporter's account of Oscar Wilde's visit, reprinted from the Philadelphia Press, Jan. 19, 1882.

Van Doren, Mark. "Walt Whitman, Stranger." Amer. Mercury, xxxv. 277-288.

White, Viola C. See above, s.v. Thoreau.

Whittier. Coleman, Mary H. "Whittier on John Randolph of Roanoke." New Eng. Quar., viii. 551-554.

Currier, Thomas F. "Whittier and the Amesbury-Salisbury Strike." New Eng. Quar., viii. 105-112.

Whittier's sympathy for the strikers

Willis. Fenn, William P. "The Source of One of Willis's Sketches." AmLit, vi. 421-426.

V. NINETEENTH CENTURY, 1870-1900

Miscellaneous. Shurter, Robert L. "The Utopian Novel in America, 1888-1910." So. Atlantic Quar., xxxiv. 137-144.

Starke, Aubrey. "'No Names' and 'Round Robins'." AmLit, vi. 400-412.
The identification of the authors of four popular series of novels published anonymously in the last quarter of the nineteenth century

Clemens. Altick, Richard D. "Mark Twain's Despair: An Explanation in Terms of His Humanity" So. Atlantic Quar., xxxiv. 359-367.

Clemens, Cyril "Mark Twain's Joan of Arc." Commonweal, xxii. 323-324.

——— Mark Twain's Religion. Webster Groves, Mo.

——— (ed.). Mark Twain's Wit and Wisdom. Preface by Stephen Leacock. N. Y.

Dreiser, Theodore. "Mark the Double Twain." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 615-627.

Emberson, Frances G. "Mark Twain's Vocabulary; A General Survey." Univ of Missouri Studies, x. No. 3 Pp. 1-53.

Johnson, Merle (comp.). A Bibliography of the Works of Mark Twain, Samuel Langhorne Clemens: A List of First Editions in Book Form and of First Printings in Periodicals and Occasional Publications of His Varied Literary Activities. N. Y.

A revised and enlarged edition of the 1910 Bibliography.

Mark Twain's Notebook. Prepared for Publication with Comments by Albert Bigelow Paine. N. Y.

In twenty-five chapters the editor prints passages from the notebook, covering most of Mark Twain's life.

Masters, Edgar L. "Mark Twain: Son of the Frontier." Amer. Mercury, xxxvi. 67-74.

Pattee, Fred L. (ed.). Mark Twain (Samuel Langhorne Clemens): Representative Selections, with Introduction and Bibliography. N. Y.

Another volume of the American Writers Series. The Introduction contains Professor Pattee's opinion that the real Mark Twain lies in his earlier volumes, the richest of them being Huckleberry Finn, Life on the Mississippi, and the first eleven chapters of The Gilded Age. He views Mark Twain as important as a humorist and a romanticist.

Paullin, Charles O. "Mark Twain's Virginia Kin." William and Mary College Quar. Hist. Mag., xv. 294-298.

Phelps, William L. "Mark Twain." Yale. Rev., xxv. 291-310.

Stewart, Herbert L. "Mark Twain on the Jewish Problem." Dalhousie Rev., xiv. 455-458.

Taylor, Coley B. Mark Twain's Margins on Thackeray's "Swift." N. Y.

The comments written on the margins of Thackeray's chapter on Swift in English Humorists were savage thrusts at Swift Underhill, Irving S. "The Haunted Book: A Further Exploration Concerning Huckleberry Finn." Colophon, N S, i. 281-291.

Cf. the author's previous article in the Colophon, Part 6, 1931.

Wagenknecht, Edward. Mark Twain: The Man and His Work. New Haven. An analysis and synthesis of all that biographers and critics have said about Mark Twain, which makes a very readable, helpful book.

Wister, Owen. "In Homage to Mark Twain." Harper's Mag., CLXXI. 547-556.

Crane, Jones, Claude. "Stephen Crane at Syracuse." AmLit, viii. 82-84

Dickinson, Sherrer, Grace B. "A Study of Unusual Verb Constructions in the Poems of Emily Dickinson." AmLit, vii. 37-46.

Unpublished Poems of Emily Dickinson. Edited by Martha Dickinson Bianchi and Alfred Leete Hampson. Boston.

Lanier, Jackson, Lena E., and Starke, Aubrey. "New Light on the Ancestry of Sidney Lanier." Va. Mag. of Hist. and Biog., XLIII. 160-168.

Lorenz, Lincoln. The Life of Sidney Lanier. N. Y.

Norris, Martin, Willard E. "Frank Norris's Reading at Harvard College." AmLit, vii. 203-204

Porter, W. S. Clarkson, P. S., "A Decomposition of Cabbages and Kings." AmLit, vii. 195-202.

Spofford, Harriet P. Halbeisen, Elizabeth K. Harriet Prescott Spofford: A Romantic Survival. Philadelphia.

A Univ. of Pennsylvania dissertation in which the student adds to the usual biography an analysis of the extensive literary product of this minor writer who tried to change from a romanticist to a realist.

Stockton, Pforzheimer, Walter L. "The Lady, the Tiger and the Author." Colophon, N S, i. 261-270.

Facts and legends about the famous story.

Taylor. Warnock, Robert. "Bayard Taylor's Unpublished Letters to His Sister Annie." AmLit, vii. 47-55.

Thaxter. Stubbs, W. Wilma. "Celia Loughton Thaxter, 1835-1894." New Eng. Quar., viii. 518-533.

VI. CONTEMPORARY

Miscellaneous. Davidson, Donald. "Regionalism and Nationalism in American Literature." Amer. Rev., v. 48-61.

Brooks, Cleanth, Jr. "The Modern Southern Poet and Tradition." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 305-320.

Hatcher, Harlan. Creating the Modern American Novel. N. Y.

Hicks, Granville. "Literature and Revolution." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 219-239.

O'Neill, E. H. "Modern American Biography." North Amer. Rev., ccxl. 488-497.

Quinn, A. H. "The Real Hope for the American Theatre." Scribner's Mag., xcvi. 30-35.

Ransom, John C. "Modern with the Southern Accent." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 184-200.

Tate, Allen. "The Profession of Letters in the South." Va. Quar. Rev., xi. 161-176.

Walter, Erich A., et al. (comps.). "An Annotated Bibliography of Contemporary Literature for 1934: A Partial List." Eng. Jour., xxiv. 283-332.

Allen. Knight, Grant C. James Lane Allen and the Genteel Tradition. Chapel Hill, N. C.

As valuable for its critical point of view as for its biographical material.

Austin. DuBois, Arthur E. "Mary Hunter Austin, 1868-1934." Southwest Rev., 231-264.

Babbitt, Irving. MacCampbell, Donald. "Irving Babbitt: Some Entirely Personal Impressions." Sewanee Rev., xliii. 164-174.

Connelly, Marc. Withington, Robert. "Notes on the Corpus Christi Plays and 'The Green Pastures'." SAB, ix. 193-197 (1934).

Frost. Newdick, Robert S. "The Early Verse of Robert Frost and Some of His Revisions." AmLit, vii. 181-187.

Lindsay. Masters, Edgar L. Vachel Lindsay: A Poet in America. N. Y.

——— "Vachel Lindsay and America." Sat. Rev. Lit., xii. 3-4, 15.

Lowell, Amy. Damon, S. Foster. Amy Lowell: A Chronicle with Extracts from Her Correspondence. Boston.

A detailed, elaborate biography; an appraisal of Miss Lowell's poetry; extracts from correspondence with literary celebrities; a chronological arrangement of first printings of poems and prose.

Scott, Winfield T. "Amy Lowell after Ten Years." New Eng. Quar., viii. 320-330.

Monroe, Harriet. Hayakawa, S. Ichiye. "Harriet Monroe as Critic." Studies in Eng. Lit. (Tokyo), xiv. 1-7 (1934).

Moody. Henry, David D. William Vaughn Moody. Boston.

"This study of the writings of William Vaughn Moody was not intended to be a biography. Moody's work was so completely his whole life, however, that a history and an analysis of his criticism, poetry, and prose unfold a picture of the man."

More, Brett, G. S. "Paul Elmer More: A Study." Univ. Toronto Quar., iv. 279-295.

O'Neill, Eugene. Parks, Edd W. "Eugene O'Neill's Symbolism." Sewanee Rev., XLIII. 436-451.

Skinner, Richard D. Eugene O'Neill: A Poet's Quest, with a Correct Chronology of the O'Neill Plays as Furnished by Eugene O'Neill. N. Y.

Robinson, E. A. App, A. J. "Edwin Arlington Robinson's Arthurian Poems." Thought, x. 468-479. Maynard, Theodore. "Edwin Arlington Robinson." Catholic World, CXLII. 266-275.

FRENCH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE (INCLUDING PROVENÇAL)

BY H. CARRINGTON LANCASTER

I. LINGUISTICS

Miscellaneous. Holmes, U. T. "French Words with e for o in Unaccented Initial Syllables." Lang, xi. 231-237.

——— "Waldensian Speech in North Carolina." ZRPh, LVIII. 500-513.

Lane, G. S. "Notes on Louisiana French." Lang, xi. 5-16.

Rice, C. C. "Romance Etymologies." Lang, xi. 238-241.

Provençal avalur and French potiron.

II. MEDIEVAL LITERATURE

Miscellaneous. Patterson, W. F. Three Centuries of French Poetic Theory. A Critical History of the Chief Arts of Poetry in France (1328-1630). (Univ. of Mich. Pub.: Lang and Lit., xiv, xv).

Shaver, C. L. "A Mediaeval French Analogue to the Dunmow Flitch." MLN, L. 322-325.

Skidmore, M. The Moral Traits of Christian and Saracen as portrayed by the Chansons de Geste. (Colorado College Pub.)

Wright, J. G. A Study of the Themes of the Resurrection in Mediaeval French Drama. Bryn Mawr diss.

Bodel, Frank, Grace. "Wine Reckonings in B.'s Jeu de S. Nicolas." MLN, L. 9-13.

Bonet, Honoré. Kilgour, R. L. "H. B.: a Fourteenth-Century Critic of Chivalry." PMLA, L. 352-361.

Chrétien de Troyes. Anacker, R. "C. de T. The first French psychological novelist." FR, VIII. 293-300.

Vigneras, L.-A. See GENERAL, Arthurian Cycle.

Ciperis de Vigneaux. Krappe, A. H. and Steiner, A. "The Date of C. de V." With reply and rejoinder. MLN, L. 343-346.

Du Pin, Jean. Pike, R. E. "A Sixteenth-Century Substitution in the Roman de Mandevie." MLN, L. 325-328.

Eneas. Fredrick, Edna C. "The Date of the E." PMLA, L. 984-996.

Fouke Fitz Warin. Painter, Sidney. "The Sources of F.F.W." MLN, L. 13-15.

Fournival. McLeod, W. M. "The Consaus d'Amours of Richard de F." SP, xxxii. 1-21.

Froissart. Whiting, B. J. "Proverbs in the Writings of Jean F." Speculum, x. 291-321.

Garin de Loherain. Parmly, Ruth. The Geographical References in G. de L. (Institute of French Studies)

Girart de Rossillon. Ham, E. B. "G de R., an Exception in Text Criticism." MP, xxxiii. 1-12.

Lay du Trot. Grimes, E. M. "Le Lay du Trot." RR, xxvi. 313-321.
A new edition.

Oresme, Nicolas. Menut, A. D. "N.O.'s First Work in French." RR, xxvi. 12-17.

Translation of Ptolemy's Quadripartitum.

Paiens de Maisières. Levy, Raphael. "La Damoisele à la mure: étude textuelle." MA, iv. 194-198.

Peire D'Alvernhe. Pattison, W. T. "The Troubadours of P. d'A.'s Satire in Spain." PMLA, L. 14-24.

Prise de Defur. Peckham, L. P. G., and La Du, M.S. P. de D., la, and le Voyage d'Alexandre au Paradis terrestre. (Elliott Monographs.)
Critical editions of the two works.

Renart. Beekman, P. H. Jean R. and his Writings. Columbia diss.

Koenig, V. F. "New Studies on J. R. The Date of the Escoufle." MP, xxxii. 343-352.

Roi Flore, Ie. Levy, Raphael. "Le Roi Flore et la belle Jehane." PQ, xiv. 253-262.

Glossary.

Roman de Waldef. Ham, E. B. "The Language of the R. de W." MA, iv. 176-193.

Tristan de Nanteuil. Krappe, A. H. "T. de N." Romania, lxi. 55-71.

Venjançe Alixandre. Ham, E. B. Five Versions of the V. A. (Elliott Monographs.)

Vie de Tobie. Dean, Ruth J. "A Missing Chapter of the V. de T." MP, xxxiii. 13-19.

Voyage d'Alexandre. See Prise de Defur.

III. LITERATURE FROM 1500 TO 1800

Miscellaneous. Atkinson, G. Les nouveaux horizons de la Renaissance française.

Ideas in works dealing with travel.

Bachman, A. Censorship in France from 1715 to 1750. Voltaire's Opposition. (Institute of French Studies.)

Baudin, M. "L'Art de régner in XVIIth Century French Tragedy." MLN, L. 417-426.

Brenner, C. D. "Some Notes on Volange and Janot." MLN, L. 18-20.

Brown, Harcourt. Scientific Organizations in seventeenth century France, 1620-1680. Columbia diss.

Cummings, E. K. The Literary Development of the Romantic Fairy Tale in France. Bryn Mawr diss.

Moore, A. P. Le Genre poissard and the French Stage of the eighteenth century. (Institute of French Studies)

Patterson. See Section II, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Rowbotham, A. H. The "Philosophes" and the propaganda for inoculation of smallpox in eighteenth-century France. (Univ. of Calif. Pub., Vol. XVIII, no. 4.)

Seeber, E. D. "Anti-slavery Opinion in the poems of some early French followers of James Thomson" MLN, L. 427-434.

Storer, Mary E. "Information furnished by the Mercure galant on the French Provincial Academies in the Seventeenth Century." PMLA, L. 444-468.

Berquin. Carrière, J.-M. "A French Adaptation of Sandford and Merton." MLN, L. 238-242.

—— "B.'s Adaptations from German Dramatic Literature." SP, xxxii. 608-617.

—— "Notes on Arnaud B.'s Adaptations from English Poetry." RR, xxvi. 335-340.

Beys, Charles. See Hardy.

Bouhours. Beall, C. B. "Le Père B. et le Tasse." MLN, L. 434-438.

Cansoun de Saint-Alexis. Altrocchi, R. C. de S. A., a Modern Provençal Parody of the Legend of Saint Alexius. (Univ. of Calif. Pub. Vol. XVIII, no. 3.)

Corneille. Woodbridge, B. M. "A New Interpretation of C.'s Polyeucte." RR, xxvi. 57-59.

Pauline's conversion was miraculous.

Desportes. Cameron, Alice. "A Note on D. and Du Bellay." MLN, L. 378-380.

—— "D. and Ariosto: Additional Sources in the Orlando and the Liriche." MLN, L. 174-178.

Diderot. Chinard, G. Supplément au Voyage de Bougainville, publié d'après le manuscrit de Léningrad.

Naughton, A. E. A. "D. and his Brother." RR, xxvi. 17-26.

See Voltaire, Torrey.

Du Bartas. Holmes, U. T. The Works of G. Salluste, S<sup>r</sup> D. B. Vol. I. Life and criticism.

Du Bellay. See Desportes.

Merrill, R. V. "Considerations on Les Amours de I. du B." MP, xxxiii. 129-138.

Favart. Salvatore, P. J. F.'s Unpublished Plays. (Institute of French Studies.)

Hardy, Alexandre. Lancaster, H. C. "Lope's Peregrino, Hardy, Rotrou, and Beys." MLN, L. 75-77.

La Fare. Streeter, H. W. "M. de la Cochonnière—Apostle of Laziness." FR, viii. 300-310.

Marguerite d'Autriche. Françon, M., et Boom, Gh. de. "Lettres inédites de M. d'A." RR, xxvi. 232-235.

Molière. Talamon, R. "La Marquise du Bourgeois Gentilhomme." MLN, L. 369-375.

Rabelais. Darby, G. O. S. "The Pilgrims in Gargantua's Salad." MP, xxxiii. 125-128.

Rotrou. See Hardy.

Sainte-Marthe, Charles de. Will, S. F. "An Unpublished Letter of C. de S.-M." RR, xxvi. 235-240.

Voltaire. See Bachman, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Crist, C. M. "Some Judgments of V. by Contemporaries." MLN, L. 439-440.

Crowley, F. J. "Corrections and Additions to Bengesco's Bibliographie." MLN, L. 440-441.

——— "Some Neglected Letters of V." MLN, L. 215-216.

Lowenstein, Robert. V. as an Historian of Seventeenth-Century French Drama. Johns Hopkins diss.

Pike, R. E. "Des Notes sur V." RHL, xlii. 214-217.

Roosbroeck, G. L. van. "An Unpublished Letter of Mme de Pompadour to V." Neophilologus, xx. 90.

Torrey, N. L. "V.'s Reaction to Diderot." PMLA, L. 1107-1143.

Wade, I. O. "A Favorite Metaphor of V." RR, xxvi. 330-334.

Comparison between passions and wind.

——— "V. and Baillet's Manual of Pseudonyms." MLN, L. 209-215.

Evidence concerning the pseudonym.

——— "V. and Malesherbes." FR, viii. 357-369, 455-480.

IV. LITERATURE FROM 1800 TO THE PRESENT

Miscellaneous. Dale, G. I. "Une tranche de vie." MLN, L. 265-266.
As early as 1885.

Friedenberg, Janice. The Teacher in the Modern Theater of France. Columbia diss.

Langley, E. F. Romantic Figures in Pen and Color, a French Portrait Album of a Century ago.

Shumway, Anna E. A Study of the Minerve française.

Seeber. See Section III, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Stansbury, M. H. French Novelists of To-day.

Wyzewska, Isabelle. La Revue wagnérienne, essai sur l'interprétation esthétique de Wagner en France. Columbia diss.

Balzac. Daudon, R. "L'Accent allemand dans B." MLN, L. 382-384.

Fess, G. M. "A Source for B.'s Determinism." PMLA, L. 1186-1190.
Jean-Philibert Dessaigues.

Baudelaire. Gilman, Margaret. "B. and Thomas Hood." RR, xxvi. 240-244.
B.'s reference to H. in a Salon.

Henning, G. N. "B. and monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens." MLN, L. 446.

A suggestion from Vergil.

Chateaubriand. Malakis, E. "Another Feminine Answer to C.'s Slighting Remarks made about Venice in 1806." MLN, L. 243-248.

——— "C. se méprend-il sur Avramiotti?" MLN, L. 249-251.

——— "C., Shaw, and Sannazzaro." MLN, L. 346.

——— "Documents inédits sur le voyage de C. en Orient." Bulletin de la Société C., n° 4, pp. 28-30.

Courteline. Koëlla, C. E. "G. C., causes et effets de son amertume." FR, VIII. 123-128

Erckmann-Chatrian. March, Harold. "The Background of E.-C." FR, VIII. 370-381.

Fargue. Rhodes, S. A. "The Poetry of Léon-Paul F." FR, IX, 26-35, 127-136.

Flaubert. Denceu, Fr. "L'Ombre de Madame Bovary." PMLA, L. 1165-1185.

Sources in Norman life.

Fréchette. Grimes, Margaret. "Louis F." FR, VIII. 206-221.

Hugo, V. Grant, E. M. "Victor H. and the Doctrine of the Right to Work." MLN, L. 71-75.

——— Victor H. during the Second Republic. (Smith College Studies, Vol. XVII, no. 1.)

Schinz, A. "Victor H., le grand poète humanitaire . . ." FR, IX. 11-25.

Jarry, Alfred. Grubbs, H. A. "A. J.'s Theories of Dramatic Technique." RR, XXVI. 340-345.

——— "L'Influence d'Isidore Ducasse sur les débuts littéraires d'A. J." RHL, XLII. 437-440.

L'Épine. Gullette, C. C. "Fanfluche—Cousin of Candide." FR, VIII. 93-107.

Mallarmé. Cooperman, H. The Aesthetics of S. M. Columbia diss.

Mauriac. Bessent, Edna. "Solitude in the Novels of F. M." FR, VIII. 129-134.

Maurras. Roche, A. V. Les Idées traditionalistes en France et le traditionalism de Charles M. Univ. of Illinois diss. (abstract).

Meilhac et Halévy. Fredrick, Edna C. "L'Été de la Saint-Martin and le Consentement forcé." MLN, L. 21-24.

Mérimée. Woodbridge, B. M. "M.'s Colomba." RR, XXVI. 244-246.

Answer to Michaut's argument that M. is a mystificateur

Quinet. Chazin, M. "Extracts from Emerson by Edgar Q., 1844-1845." RLC, xv. 136-149.

——— "Extracts from Emerson in Q.'s Cahiers." RLC, xv. 310-326.

Ricard. Schaffer, A. "Louis-Xavier de R., Poet of Progress." PMLA, L. 1191-99.

Rostand. Talamon, R. "Porto-Riche et Rostand." MLN, L. 446-451.

Influence of P.-R. on R.

Sarment, Jean. Storer Mary E. "J. S. and the French Theater." RR, XXVI. 26-29.

Tocqueville. Chinard, G. "Alexis de T." FR, IX. 101-110.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

By J. E. SHAW

I. LINGUISTICS

Altrocchi, Rudolph. Deceptive Cognates: Italian-English and English-Italian University of Chicago Press.

Rice, C. C. See GENERAL, s.v. Romance Linguistics, and SPANISH, Section I, s.v. Etymology.

Tuttle, Edwin H. See GENERAL, s.v. Romance Linguistics.

Williams, Edwin B. See SPANISH, Section VII, s.v. Linguistics.

Zinno, Donato. "Doublets and Popular Etymologies in Neapolitan." RR, xxvi. 321-325.

Popular and learned forms of the same word, compared with the Italian, and popular transformations of words.

II. LITERATURE

1. GENERAL

Fucilla, Joseph G. See SPANISH, Sections IV and VII, s.v. Miscellaneous. "Parole identiche in the Sonnet and Other Verse Forms." PMLA, L. 372-402.

The history of the use in Italian poetry, and of its influence in other countries.

Hutton, James. See ENGLISH, Section III.

Rotunda, D. P. See SPANISH, Section III, Martínez de Toledo.

Webster, J. P. and Gnudi, Martha T. Documenti inediti intorno alla vita di Gaspare Tagliacozzi. Studi e memorie per la storia dell'università di Bologna, Serie I, vol. xiii. Bologna, presso l'Istituto per la Storia dell'Università.

2. THIRTEENTH AND FOURTEENTH CENTURIES

Miscellaneous. Gordon, Lewis H. "Two Versions of a Fourteenth Century Pater Noster in Italian." Ital, xii. 116-122.

A critical edition of the two versions, with an account of the eight fifteenth-century MSS and the variants. The poem, in terza rima, is by Maestro Antonio da Ferrara according to one MS.

Albertano da Brescia. See ENGLISH, Section VI, s.v. Chaucer.

Cavalcanti, Guido. Shaw, J. E. "The Commentary of Dino Del Garbo on Cavalcanti's Canzone d'amore, Compared with the Italian Translation. Ital, xii. 102-105. Corrections 168.

Cecco d'Ascoli. Rice, John P. "Notes on the Oxford Manuscripts of Cecco d'Ascoli's Acerba." Ital, xii. 136-138.

Dante. Altrocchi, Rudolph. "The Present Status of Dante Iconography." Ital, xii. 106-115.

Austin, H. D. "Gleanings from 'Dante's Latin Dictionary.'" Ital, xii. 81-90. Light thrown on 15 passages in the Commedia, by meanings of words in the Magnae Derivationes of Ugucione da Pisa.

—— "Number and Geometrical Design in the Divine Comedy." The Personalist, xvi. 310-330.

Cooper, Lane. See GENERAL, Æsthetics.

Fletcher, Jefferson B. "The Serpent in Ante-Purgatory." Ital, xii. 45-50. The possibility of temptation and sin after death.

Latini, Brunetto. Carmody, Francis J. "The Revised Version of Brunetto Latini's Tresor." Ital, xii. 146-147.

The MSS, thirteen of which were overlooked by Chabaille, sorted out according to their relation to the two versions and to each other. The relation of text to tables of contents.

Petrarch. Hamilton, George L. "An Unknown Edition of the Rime of Petrarch." Ital., XII. 91-98.

Description of the only known copy of this edition (Florence Marescotti, 1573), belonging to the Fiske Collection, its history, and that of other 16th cent. eds.

Varagine, Jacopo da. Richardson, E. C. Materials for a life of Jacopo da Varagine. New York.

3. FIFTEENTH AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES

Miscellaneous. Bryson, Frederick R. "The Point of Honor in Sixteenth-Century Italy: an Aspect of the Life of a Gentleman. New York. Publications of the Institute of French Studies, Columbia University.

A history of expert opinion on private honor, insults, the duel, and other means of reparation, with bibliography, etc.

Alciato. Fucilla, Joseph G. "De Morte Et Amore." PQ, XIV. 97-104.

An "emblem" perhaps used by Bembo. Other imitations and the literature on the "emblem."

Ariosto. Bullock, W. L. "Di qualche edizione ariostea sfuggita agli Annali." Giorn. Stor. d. Lett. It. civ. 254-261. Corrections in cv. 216.

Description of three sixteenth-century editions of the Orlando Furioso, and two of the Satire. Corrections of descriptions in Annali delle edizioni ariostee. Bologna, 1933.

Cameron, Alice. See FRENCH, Section III, s.v. Desportes.

Fucilla, Joseph G. "Four Notes on Italian Influences." RR, XXVI. 325-329.

The fortune of lines in the Orlando inspired by Juan de Mena, and of a sonnet of Ariosto. Borrowing by Bandello from Angeriano, and by Mesdames des Roches from Bernardo Accolti.

Morby, Edwin S. See SPANISH, Section IV, s.v. Crotalón.

Bandello. Gaw, Allison. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Shakespeare.

Benivieni. Bennett, Josephine W. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Spenser.

Boiardo. Lemmi, Charles W. See ENGLISH, Section III, s.v. Spenser.

Bruni, Antonio. De Filippis, M. "Antonio Bruni, 1593-1635." MLJ, XX. 151-157.

Secretary of state to Francesco Maria II of Urbino. his Epistole eroiche.

Castiglione. Harrison, Thomas P., Jr. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Milton.

Comti, Natale. Lemmi, Charles W. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Spenser.

Equicola, Mario. Merlino, Camillo P. "Boccaccio in the Works of Mario Equicola. Ital., XII. 142-145.

Machiavelli. Thompson, D. W. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Drama.

Nifo, Agostino. Thorndyke, Lynn. "That Agostino Nifo's De falsa diluvii prognosticatione Was Not Published until December 24, 1519." RR, XXVI. 118-121.

Papazzoni, Vitale. Bullock, Walter L. "Vitale Papazzoni. A Whimsical Petrarchista of the Cinquecento." Ital., XII. 51-65.

Sannazzaro. Malakis, Emile. See FRENCH, Section IV, s.v. Chateaubriand.

Tasso, Bernardo. Tatlock, J. S. P. See ENGLISH, Section VII, s.v. Sidney.

Tasso, Torquato. Beall, Chandler B. See FRENCH, Section III, s.v. Bouhours.

4. SEVENTEENTH AND EIGHTEENTH CENTURIES

Campanella. Ellison, Lee M. See ENGLISH, Section IX, s.v. Berington.

McKenzie, Kenneth. "Italian Fables of the Eighteenth Century." Ital, XII. 39-44.

Nicolson, Marjorie. "The Telescope and Imagination." MP XXXII. 233-260. Effect of the discoveries of "the new astronomy". Michelangelo the younger, Marino, Campanella.

Sims, E. R. "An Italian Translation of Lazarillo de Tormes." HR, III. 331-337.

Il Picariglio Castigliano, Seconda Parte, by Barezzo Barezzi. Venice, 1635. Contains also ten stories from Giraldu's Ecatommiti.

5 NINETEENTH AND TWENTIETH CENTURIES

Gregersen, Halfdan. See SPANISH, Section v, s.v. Miscellaneous.

Loria, Norman, Hilda. "Arturo Loria." Ital, XII. 197-199.

Maroncelli. Lograsso, Angeline H. "Piero Maroncelli's Religion." Ital, XII. 123-127.

Pirandello. Blankner, Fredericka. "The Art of Luigi Pirandello, Its Problem and Answer." The Christian Register, Boston, July 25. Pirandello's philosophy explained as potentially Christian.

SPANISH LANGUAGE AND LITERATURE

BY EDWIN B. WILLIAMS

I. LINGUISTICS

Miscellaneous. Canfield, Delos L. "Spanish Literature in Indian Languages of New Spain." The Spanish Rev., II. 9-14.

Hodge, F. W. "Pueblo Names in the Oñate Documents." New Mexico Hist. Rev., x. 36-47.

Qualia, Charles B. "Mexican Spanish." The Spanish Teacher, III. 1-8. Supposed corruptions are mostly archaisms.

Rubio, Antonio. "Comments on Eighteenth Century Purismo." HR, III. 317-330.

Opposition to gallicisms from Feijóo to Gallardo, on aesthetic and patriotic grounds.

Trager, George L. "Some Spanish Place Names of Colorado." AS, x. 203-207.

Dialectology. Besso, Henry V. "A Further Contribution to the Refranero Judeo-Español." BHi, XXXVII. 209-219.

Espinosa, Aurelio M., Jr. "Arcaísmos dialectales: La conservación de s y z sonoras en Cáceres y Salamanca." Madrid.

Etymology. Rice, C. C. "The Etymology of Spanish Corral, Loco, and Moço." HR, III. 162-163.

—— "The Etymology of Spanish bastar, despachar, rajar, and regunzar." HR, III. 340-342.

—— See GENERAL, s.v. Romance Linguistics.

Lexicology. Solalinde, A. G. "Más sobre la fecha de perro." REF, XXII. 54-55.

Morphology. Kelly, Edith L. "Fer, Far, Facer, Façer, Fazer in Three Works of Berceo." HR, III. 127-137.

Phonology. Espinosa, Aurelio M. "La palabra Castilla en la lengua de los indios hopis de Arizona." RFE, xxii. 298-300.

Syntax. Place, E. B. See GENERAL, s.v. Linguistics.

Spaulding, R. K. "Notes and Queries on the Relative Pronouns in Modern Spanish." Hisp, xviii. 161-164.

Versification. Arnold, Harrison H. "Irregular Hemistichs in the Milagros of Gonzalo de Berceo." PMLA, l. 335-351.

Fucilla, Joseph G., See ITALIAN, Section II, s.v. General.

II. GENERAL

Miscellaneous. Buchanan, M. A. "Alhambraism." HR, iii. 269-274.
Pseudo-orientalism, its beginning and growth, especially in Spanish literature.

Reid, John T. "St. John's Day in Spanish Literature." Hisp, xviii. 401-412.

Shoemaker, William H. The Multiple Stage in Spain and Catalonia during the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Centuries. Princeton, N. J.

Williams, Ronald B. The Staging of Plays in the Spanish Peninsula Prior to 1555. Iowa City. (Univ. of Iowa Stud. in Spanish Lang. and Lit. No. 5.)
Internal evidence of time and place in the plays of Encina, Gil Vicente, Torres Naharro, and others.

Bibliography. Cilley, Melissa A. El teatro español (Las épocas en el desarrollo del drama). Madrid, 1934.

Contains notices on each period and short biographical notices.

Coe, Ada M. Catálogo bibliográfico y crítico de las comedias anunciadas en los periódicos de Madrid desde 1661 hasta 1819. Baltimore. (Johns Hopkins Stud. in Rom. Lit. and Lang. Extra Vol. ix.)

Grismer, Raymond L. A Bibliography of Articles and Essays on the Literatures of Spain and Spanish-America. Minneapolis.

Templin, E. H. "Carolingian Titles in the Spanish Drama Before 1800: Corrections and Additions." RR, xxvi. 345-349.

Folk-lore. Krappe, Alexander H. "Notes on Spanish Cuentos edificativos." HR, iii. 66-69.

III. LITERATURE BEFORE 1500

Miscellaneous. Davis, Gifford. "The Development of a National Theme in Medieval Castilian Literature." HR, iii. 149-161.
From Lucas de Tuy to Alfonso de Palencia.

Amadís de Gaula. Matulka, Barbara. "On the Beltenebros Episode in the Amadís." HR, iii. 338-340.

Berceo. See Section I, s.v. Morphology and s.v. Versification.

Cid. Kilgour, Raymond L. "The Chivalry of the Cid." Harvard Studies and Notes in Philol. and Lit., xvii. 113-128.

The historic Cid found to possess the high qualities of the legendary Cid.

Juan Manuel. Oelschläger, Victor R. B. "Dos correcciones al texto del Libro de los estados de D. Juan Manuel." RFE, xxi. 399-400.

Libro de Alexandre. Willis, Raymond S., Jr. El libro de Alexandre. Princeton, N. J., 1934 (Elliott monographs, No. 32.)

Edition of Paris and Madrid manuscripts with important fragments.

Martínez de Toledo. Rotunda, D. P. "The Corvacho Version of the Husband Locked Out Story." RR, xxvi. 121-127.

IV. LITERATURE FROM 1500 TO 1700

Miscellaneous. Delano, Lucile K. "The Gracioso Continues to Ridicule the Sonnet." Hisp, xviii. 383-400.

Fucilla, Joseph G. "A Decade of Notes on Spanish Poetry." SP, xxxii. 40-54.

Imitations from the Italian.

Leavitt, Sturgis E. "Some Aspects of the Grotesque in the Drama of the Siglo de Oro." Hisp, xviii. 77-86.

Matulka, Barbara. "The Feminist Theme in the Drama of the Siglo de Oro." RR, xxvi. 191-231.

Pérez, Elisa. "Algunos aspectos de la evolución del Romancero." Hisp, xviii. 151-160.

Use of romances in the drama of the Siglo de Oro.

Torreyson, Dorothy. "Woman in the Spanish Comedia of the Golden Age." [Univ. of Pittsburgh] Abstracts of Dissertations, x (1934). 372-376.

Tyre, Carl A. "Three Autos Sacramentales from Manuscript 14864, Biblioteca Nacional, Madrid, edited with Preface, Intro., and Notes." [Univ. of Iowa] Programs Announcing Candidates for Higher Degrees . . . 1935, no pagination (abstract of diss.)

Argensola (Bartolomé Leonardo de). Green, Otis H. "Notes on the Lucianesque Dialogues of Bartolomé Leonardo de Argensola." HR, iii. 275-294.

Calderón. Cummings, Dorothy P. "El Secreto a Voces of Don Pedro Calderón de la Barca. An Edition with Introduction and Notes of the Autograph Manuscript of 1642." Ohio State Abstracts, xii (1933). 41.

Matulka, Barbara. "The Courtly Cid Theme in Calderón's Afectos de odio y amor." Hisp, xviii. 63-76.

Cervantes. Arnold, Harrison H. "The Most Difficult Passage of Don Quijote." MLN, l. 182-185.

Centeno, Augusto. "Sobre el pasaje del Quijote referente al Tirant lo blanch." MLN, l. 375-378.

Crotalón (El). Morby, Edwin S. "Orlando furioso y El Crotalón." RFE, xxii. 34-43.

Encina (Juan del). Turk, Laurel H. "Juan del Encina and the Spanish Renaissance." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., ix (1934). 69-72.

Góngora. Gates, Eunice J. "Góngora's Use of Proverbs." Hisp, xviii. 45-52.

Gracián. Romera-Navarro, Miguel. "Un hermano imaginario de Gracián." HR, iii. 64-66.

Proof that 'Lorenzo Gracián' was merely a pseudonym.

——— "Sobre la moral de Gracián." HR, iii. 119-126.

Lazarillo de Tormes. Sims, E. R. See ITALIAN, Section IV.

Lope de Vega. Adams, Mildred. "Spanish Theatre Then and Now." Theatre Arts, xix. 690-702.

Brooks, John. El mayor imposible. Tucson, Arizona, 1934.

Bruerton, Courtney. "On the Chronology of Some Plays by Lope de Vega." HR, III. 247-249.

Buchanan, M. A. "Lope de Vega: 1562-1635." Univ. of Toronto Quarterly, v. 92-104.

Delano, Lucile K. A Critical Index of Sonnets in the Plays of Lope de Vega. Toronto. (Univ. of Toronto diss.)

Fichter, William L. "A Manuscript Copy of the Lost Autograph of Lope de Vega's Al pasar del arroyo." HR, III. 202-218.

Evidence that the autograph existed as late as the eighteenth century and that the date of the play was 1616.

——— "Lope de Vega's La conquista de Cortés and El marqués del Valle." HR, III. 163-165.

Alternate titles of one and the same play, now lost.

Gilder, Rosamond. "Lope de Vega." Theatre Arts. xix. 660-685.

Leonard, Irving A. El desdén vengado. Berkeley, Calif. and Madrid.

Edition of autograph found in the National Library of Madrid

Matulka, Barbara. "The Tercentenary of Lope de Vega (1562-1635): His International Diffusion." The Spanish Rev., II. 93-103.

Moore, Jerome. "Note on Lope de Vega and the Romancero." HR, III. 245-247.

Price, Eva R. "The Romancero in El bastardo Mudarra of Lope de Vega." Hisp., XVIII. 301-310.

del Río, Ángel. "Lope de Vega y el espíritu contemporáneo." Rev. Hisp. Mod., II. 1-16.

Robles Pazos, José. "Sobre la fecha de Fuente Ovejuna." MLN, L. 179-182.

Date shown to be not later than 1613 on the basis of imitations in Tirso's La Santa Juana.

——— Cancionero teatral. Baltimore.

Text and Study

Romera-Navarro, Miguel. La preceptiva dramática de Lope de Vega. Madrid. Compilation of articles which have appeared in recent years in a number of journals.

——— "Lope de Vega y las unidades dramáticas." HR, III. 190-201.

Schevill, Rudolph. "Lope de Vega and the Golden Age." HR, III. 179-189.

A consideration of Vossler's Lope de Vega und sein Zeitalter, Munich, 1932.

——— "Lope de Vega, 1562-1635." MLJ, XIX. 257-263.

Simpson, Lesley B. La prueba de los amigos. Berkeley, Calif. and Madrid, 1934.

Edition of autograph found in the National Library of Madrid.

Spaulding, Robert K. La batalla del honor. Berkeley, Calif. and Madrid, 1934.

Edition of autograph found in the National Library of Madrid.

Templin, E. H. "The Mother in the Comedia of Lope de Vega." HR, III. 219-244.

Zeitlin, Marion A. El cordobés valeroso Pedro Carbonero. Berkeley, Calif. and Madrid.

Edition of autograph found in the National Library of Madrid.

López de Vega (Antonio). Buceta, Erasmo. Paradojas Racionales (escritas en forma de diálogos . . . entre un cortesano i un filósofo) Madrid.

Edition with introductory study

Mal Lara (Juan de). Sánchez y Escribano, F. "Algunos aspectos de la elaboración de la Philosophia vulgar." RFE, xxii. 274-284.

Moncada (Francisco de). Green, Otis H. "Documentos para la biografía de don Francisco de Moncada." Arch. de la Biblioteca, Archivo y Museo, Año xii 207-209.

Moreto. Kennedy, Ruth L. "Concerning Seven Manuscripts Linked with Moreto's Name." HR, iii. 295-316.

Proof of correct attribution of some plays and of mistaken attribution of others to Moreto Segura (Juan de). Place, Edwin B. "The First Novel of Letters: the Proceso de cartas de amores." The Spanish Rev., ii. 36-40.

Early appearance of realistic fiction.

Tirso de Molina. Bushee, Alice H. "The Five Partes of Tirso de Molina." HR, iii. 89-102.

V. LITERATURE SINCE 1700

Miscellaneous. Barja, César. Libros y autores contemporáneos. New York. Ganivet, Unamuno, Ortega y Gasset, Azorín, Baroja, Valle-Inclán, A. Machado, Pérez de Ayala.

Buffum, Mary E. "Literary Criticism in the Essays of the Generation of 1898." Hisp, xviii. 277-292

Coe, Ada M. "Richardson in Spain." HR, iii 56-63.

Douglas, Frances. "Contemporary Spanish Literature." Hisp, xviii. 485-490.

Gregersen, Halfdan. "Visiting Italian Interpreters of Ibsen in Barcelona and Madrid." HR, iii 166-169

Spanish and Catalan theatrical criticism

——— See GERMANIC, Modern Scandinavian Literature, s.v. Ibsen.

de Onís, Federico. Antología de la poesía española e hispano-americana. (1882-1932). Madrid, 1934.

Selections accompanied by biographical sketches and bibliographies of works and studies.

Spell, Jefferson R. "An Eighteenth Century Liberal Review of Reviews: El espíritu de los mejores diarios." The Spanish Rev., ii. 27-31.

Aleixandre (Vicente). del Río, Ángel. "La poesía surrealista de Aleixandre." Rev. Hisp. Mod., ii. 21-23.

Azorín. Balseiro, José A. "Azorín y Cervantes." MLJ, xix. 501-510.

——— "Azorín y Cervantes." Puerto Rico, i. 198-207.

An extension of previous article.

Blasco Ibáñez. Balseiro, José A. "Vicente Blasco Ibáñez. Hombre de acción y de letras." Puerto Rico, i. 31-53.

Swain, J. O. "The Albufera Thirty Years After." Hisp, xviii. 25-34.

Bécquer. See Section vi, Spanish American Literature, s.v. Miscellaneous, Fraker, Charles F.

Escalante (Amós de). Nicholson, Helen S. "A Montañés Poet: Amós de Escalante (1831-1902)." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., x. 53-56.

——— "Amós de Escalante, 1831-1902: A Montañés Poet." Hisp, xviii. 35-44.

Fernán Caballero. Spell, Jefferson R. "An Incident Recounted by Fernán Caballero." Hisp, xviii. 449-450.

García Lorca (Federico). del Río, Ángel. "El poeta Federico García Lorca." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 174-184.

Rosenbaum, Sidonia C. and Guerrero Ruiz, J. "Bibliografía de García Lorca." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 186-187.

Gómez de Avellaneda. Kelly, Edith L. "Bibliografía de la Avellaneda." Revista Bimestre Cubana, xxxv. 107-139, and 261-295.

Jarnés (Benjamín). Putnam, Samuel. "Benjamín Jarnés y la deshumanización del arte." Rev. Hisp. Mod., ii. 17-21.

Larra. Centeno, Augusto. "La Nochebuena de 1836 y su modelo horaciano." MLN, L. 441-445.

López de Ayala (Adelardo). Harlan, Mabel M. "D. Adelardo López de Ayala, 'Figura o Figurón?'" Hisp, xviii. 413-436.

Contests the point of view of Luis de Oteyza in his López de Ayala o el figurón político-literario, Madrid, 1932.

Pérez Galdós. Berkowitz, H. Chonon. "Galdós' Literary Apprenticeship." HR, iii. 1-22.

Costumbrismo in his early journalistic work.

——— (ed.) "Un joven de provecho." PMLA, L. 828-898.

Casaldueiro, Joaquín. "Marianela y De l'Intelligence de Taine." PMLA, L. 929-931.

Galdós' use of scientific material.

Rolán (Feliciano). Guerrero Ruiz, Juan. "Bibliografía de F. Rolán." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 261.

Unamuno. Putnam, Samuel. "Unamuno y el problema de la personalidad." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 103-110.

Benardete, M. C. "Personalidad e individualidad en Unamuno." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 25-39.

Rosenbaum, Sidonia C. "Bibliografía de Unamuno." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 19-25.

Valle-Inclán. See GENERAL, Folk-lore.

VI. LITERATURE IN SPANISH AMERICA

Miscellaneous. Coester, Alfred. "Algunas influencias del romanticismo en la literatura hispanoamericana." Homenaje a Enrique José Varona, Havana, 301-315.

Larra, Rivas and Martínez de la Rosa, especially in Cuba.

Espinosa, Aurelio M. "New Mexican Spanish Coplas Populares." Hisp, xviii. 135-150.

Fraker, Charles F. "Gustavo Adolfo Bécquer and the Modernists." HR, iii. 36-44.

Bécquer's influence, chiefly on Gutiérrez Nájera and Nervo.

González, Manuel P. Fichero (Índice Hispano-Americano). Havana.

Spell, Jefferson R. "The Costumbrista Movement in Mexico." PMLA, L. 290-315.

Study covering the period from 1840 to 1890: includes a bibliography of costumbrista articles ——— "Rousseau in Spanish America." Hisp. Amer. Hist. Rev. xv. 260-267.

——— "El teatro en la ciudad de México." El Libro y el Pueblo, xii. 442-454.

Wheeler, Howard T. "The Mexican Novel as a Reflection of the National Problems of Mexico." Abstracts of Diss., Stanford Univ., x. 57-58.

Bibliography. Doyle, Henry Grattan. A Tentative Bibliography of the Belles-Lettres of the Republics of Central America. Cambridge, Mass.

Leavitt, Sturgis E. Hispano-American Literature in the United States (A Bibliography of Translations and Criticism, 1932-1934). Chapel Hill, N. C.

——— "A Bibliography of Theses Dealing with Hispano-American Literature." Hisp., xviii. 169-182.

Manchester, A. K. A Descriptive Bibliography of the Brazilian Section of the Duke University Library. Durham, N. C., 1934.

Nichols, Madeline W. and Kinnaid, Lucia B. "Philological Articles in Nosotros (Supplement)." PQ, xiv. 365-366.

——— See GENERAL, s.v. Æsthetics

Torres-Ríoseco, Arturo and Silva-Castro, Raúl. Ensayo de bibliografía de la literatura chilena. Cambridge, Mass.

Waxman, Samuel M. A Tentative Bibliography of the Belles-Lettres of Venezuela. Cambridge, Mass.

See below, s.v. Darío, Doyle, Henry Grattan. See Section v, s.v. Gómez de Avellaneda, Kelly, Edith L.

Azueta (Mariano). Englekirk, John E. "The 'Discovery' of Los de abajo." Hisp., xviii. 53-62.

Belated fame of a Mexican novel.

Bustillo Oro (Juan). Benardete, M. J. "Unas apostillas sobre dos dramaturgos mexicanos." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 111-113.

Chocano (José Santos). Torres-Ríoseco, Arturo. "José Santos Chocano." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 188-191.

Rosenbaum, Sidonia C. "Bibliografía de Santos Chocano." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 191-193.

Darío (Rubén). Doyle, Henry Grattan. A Bibliography of Rubén Darío (1867-1916). Cambridge, Mass.

Englekirk, John. "Rubén Darío y los críticos chilenos." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 261-265.

Mapes, E. K. "Rubén Darío's First Sonnets in Alexandrines." PQ, xiv. 16-37.

Decided French influence.

——— "Escritos inéditos de Rubén Darío." Rev. Hisp. Mod., ii. 41-59.

Collected from newspapers of Buenos Aires.

Enriqueta. Rosenberg, S. L. Millard. "Un nombre literario: María Enriqueta." BHi xxxvii. 57-79.

Mexican poetess.

Magdaleno (Mauricio). See above, s.v. Bustillo Oro.

Mármol (José). Cuthbertson, Stuart. The Poetry of José Mármol. Boulder, Colo. (Univ. of Colorado Stud., xxii, Nos. 2 & 3)

Palma (Ricardo). González, Manuel P. "En torno al centenario de Ricardo Palma." Rev. Hisp. Mod., ii 24-26.

Urbina. Rosenbaum, Sidonia C. "Luis G. Urbina; Bibliografía." Rev. Hisp. Mod., i. 101-102.

VII. PORTUGUESE

Miscellaneous. Fucilla, Joseph G. "A Miscellany of Portuguese Imitations." HR, iii. 45-54.

Imitations of Italian, Spanish, and Latin verse by Camoens, Diogo Bernardes, Faria e Souza and others.

Bibliography. See Section vi, s.v. Bibliography, Manchester, A. K.

Linguistics. Williams, Edwin B. "Shift of Stress in Proparoxytonic Verb-Forms of the First Conjugation in Portuguese." RR, xxvi. 139.

——— "Portuguese Intervocalic n." MLN, l. 16-17.

——— "Portuguese ser in the Third Singular Present Indicative." Lang, xi. 243.

——— "Hiatus in the Third Plural of Portuguese Verbs." Lang, xi. 243-244.

GERMANIC LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES

BY HENRY W. NORDMEYER

I. LINGUISTICS

Miscellaneous. Leopold, Werner. See ENGLISH, Section i.

Schlicher, J. J. (tr.). "Jacob Grimm's De desiderio patriae." MFD U, xxvii. 177-183.

Senn, Alfred. "Zu den litauischen Zahlwörtern für 11-19." Studi Baltici, v. 69-84.

Treats also the Germanic problem of "11" and "12."

Voss, Ernst. "Jacob Grimm: Zur Erinnerung an seinen 150. Geburtstag, 4. Januar 1785." MFD U, xxvii. 1-13.

Gothic

Heffner, R.-M. S. "A Note on Phonologic Oppositions." Harvard Studies and Notes in Philol. and Lit., xvii. 99-104.

Denies their bearing on a solution of the problem of Gothic ai and au.

Mezger, Fritz. "Got. sōkeis=lat. sāgis?" Zeitschrift für vergleich. Sprachforsch., lxii. 259-262.

Concludes a searching argument in the negative.

Nordmeyer, George. "Gothic Initial þl-" Lang. xi. 216-219.

Regarded as peculiar to Wulfila (<þ); flodus, etc., explained as strictly Ostrogothic forms; IE etymologies suggested for all þl-words.

Old Norse

Sturtevant, Albert M. "Certain Analogical Changes in Old Norse." JEGP, xxxiv. 180-187.

——— "Old Norse Phonological Notes." SS, xiii. 69-72; 81-85.

German

Dirks, Hellmut G. "The Development of Aspects in German." Northwestern Univ. Summaries of Ph.D. Dissertations, ii. 27-34.

Haessler, Luise. Old High German biteilen and biskerien. Univ. of Chicago diss. (Language Diss'n's, No. xix.) Philadelphia.

Kip, Herbert Z. "Ahd. Heibistesbiunta." GR, x. 195-198.

Modifies Roth's emendation Hibiscs- to read Heibiscs- (i in Hei- proclitic diphthongal glide).

Roberts, Murat H. "The Genesis of Old High German bera-mēs." Lang, xi. 220-230.

-mēs attributed to an IE medio-passive as partly surviving in Gothic.

Selmer, Carl. "Die Herkunft der Palatalisierung und Mouillierung des l-Lautes in deutschen Dialekten." PMLA, l. 1200-22.

Combines a critical survey of possible theories with a presentation of the historical facts of ethnic settlement, showing Celtoromanic, Celtic, and Slavic influences.

——— "Standardized or non-Standardized Old German Prose Texts" GR, x. 126-129.

Urges the abandonment of all normalizing, gives specific editorial rules.

Senn, Alfred. "Deutsch lebendig." GR, x. 49-51.

Reviews the controversy, finds lebēndec e.g. in Wolfram's Parzival, 796.1.

——— "The Literary German Language and Its Relation to the German Dialects." Transactions of the Wisconsin Academy of Sciences, Arts, and Letters, xxix. 341-346.

——— "Verhältnis von Mundart und Schriftsprache in der deutschen Schweiz." JEGP, xxxiv. 42-58.

Comprehensive information as to the raison d'être and function of the two types of expression in public and private life, writing and speaking, expository prose and fiction, etc., in different parts of the country.

Strothmann, F. W. "The Influence of Aspect on the Meaning of nomina agentis in Modern German." JEGP, xxxiv. 188-200.

Competent study, showing the tense difference between, e.g., Bewunderer and Erbauer to correspond to the durative and perfective aspects respectively of bewundern and erbauen; careful consideration of borderline cases.

Valk, Melvin. "Die Entwicklung der deutschen Fussballsprache." JEGP, xxxiv. 567-571.

Sketches the gradual elimination of English terms after 1900 (Deutscher Sprachverein!).

Walz, John A. "Harmlos, Harm: A Supposed Anglicism in German." GR, x. 98-113.

Refutes the common view by abundant quotations from eighteenth-century writers, contributing to dialect geography and semasiology.

II. LITERATURE

Miscellaneous. Jockers, Ernst. "Philosophie und Literaturwissenschaft." GR, x. 73-97; 166-186.

Competent and thoroughly integrated plea, leaning chiefly on Dilthey and Gestalt-psychology, in favor of philosophy (Weltanschauung) as the pivot of literary research and interpretation; incidentally a critical bibliography on methods of approach.

Wenger, Christian N. See GENERAL, Æsthetics.

Wolff, Max I. See GENERAL, Æsthetics.

SCANDINAVIAN COUNTRIES

Old Norse

Hermannsson, Halldór. See below, BIBLIOGRAPHICAL.

Jeffrey, Margaret. The Discourse in Seven Icelandic Sagas. Bryn Mawr College diss. Bryn Mawr, 1934.

Kelchner, Georgia D. Dreams in Old Norse Literature and Their Affinities in Folklore. Cambridge (England).

Inventories the material with a view to tracing the transition from heathendom to Christianity in the dream-occurrence of symbolic images and of living or dead persons. An indexed appendix (pp. 77-146) furnishes "Texts and Translations."

Larson, Laurence M. (tr.). The Earliest Norwegian Laws: Being the Gulathing Law and the Frostathing Law. N. Y.

With Introduction (pp. 3-34), Glossary (pp. 409-430), Bibliography and Index (pp. 433-451).

Litzenberg, Karl. See ENGLISH, Section x, s.v. Morris, William.

Malone, Kemp. "The Votaries of Nerthus." Namn och Bygd, xxii. 26-51.

Mezger, Fritz. "Aisl. þunngæðr." APS, ix. 313-314.

Suggests þunngæðr, "depressed and irritated, unreconciled," for this hapax legomenon.

Modern Scandinavian Literatures

Beck, Richard. "Jón Þorláksson—Icelandic Translator of Pope and Milton." JEGP, xxxiv. 74-100.

Appreciative account of the poet's individual productions and translations (apart from Paradise Lost), complex character, and place in Icelandic literature.

———. "Matthías Jochumsson—Icelandic Poet and Translator (1835-1935)." SS, xiii. 111-124.

Sympathetic account of the writer's achievements; copious bibliographical notes.

Eikeland, P. J. Ibsen Studies. Northfield, Minn. 1934.

Deals on 177 pages with Peer Gynt, The Pretenders, Brand, and The Pillars of Society from a Christian point of view.

Einarsson, Stefán. "Gamanbréf Jónasar Hallgrímssonar." Skirnir, cix. 145-156.

———. "Guðmundur Gíslason Hagalín." Iðunn, xviii. 64-88.

———. "Halldór Kiljan Laxness." Island: Vierteljahrsschrift der Vereinigung der Islandfreunde, xx. 19-24; 75-80.

Feise, Ernst. See below, s.v. Hauptmann.

Larsen, Hanna A. "Selma Lagerlöf." ASR, xxiii. 7-19; 113-128; 207-222; 309-326.

Litzenberg, Karl. "The Poet on the Stairs." [Hakon Holm.] Michigan Quarterly Review, xli. 452-455.

Springer, Otto. "The Nordic Renaissance in Scandinavia (1800-1825)." GR, x. 267-280.

An exposition of thought-currents leads up to a stylistic comparison of Tegnér's Frithjofssaga with its Old Icelandic model.

GERMANY AND THE NETHERLANDS

Dutch and German to 1500

Barnouw, A. J. "Semiramis in Treves" GR, x. 187-194.

Discusses the origin of a legend found in a fifteenth-century Story Bible in Middle Dutch Breitenbucher, Jacques R. "Die Judasgestalt in den Passionsspielen." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctors' Dissertations, No. 16, pp. 47-54.

Fuchs, Edward A. H. (ed.). Studies in the Dresdener Heldenbuch (An edition of Wolfdietrich K). Chicago. [Private ed.]

Goetz, Sister Mary Paul. The Concept of Nobility in German Didactic Literature of the Thirteenth Century. (The Catholic University of America Studies in German, Vol. v.) Washington, D. C.

Summarizes, and ably enlarges upon, the research of the two decades, following the lead of Ehrisman. Bibliography (pp. 121-138).

Gudde, Erwin G. "The Swiss Struggle for Independence in Popular Poetry." JEGP, xxxiv. 530-552.

Some 50 quotations, chiefly from Rochus von Liliencron, with historical comments.

Kurtz, J. W. "An Interpretation of the Stage Plan of the Donaueschingen Passion Play." GR, x. 219-222.

Interprets the three barriers as indicating division into acts, each taking place in a different part of the stage.

Nock, Francis J. The Parzival Manuscript G<sup>k</sup>. (Ottendorfer Memorial Fellowship Series of Germanic Monographs, No. 22.) N. Y. [Lithographed ed.]

Minute palæographical and linguistic description shows that the MS (once owned by Bernhard Puttrich) was written by one scribe in a South Bavarian dialect about A.D. 1300, and exhibits striking similarities to the Nibelungen MS. A Bibliography (pp. 68 f.).

Sehrt, E. H., and Starck, Taylor. "Zum Text von Notkers Schriften." Zeitschrift für deutsches Altertum, LXXI. 259-264. (Cf. ibid., LXXII. 109-112.) Reply to Behaghel's and Jelinek's criticisms of their Boethius edition.

Sokol, Arthur E. "The Conception of a Calling in the German Literature of the Middle Ages." PMLA, l. 1-13.

Attempts to trace, in terms of history of thought, the causes of the disintegration of the mediæval social order, esp. as regards the value set upon work and its worldly reward.

Williams, Charles Allyn. The German Legends of the Hairy Anchorite. (Illinois Studies in Lang. and Lit., Vol. xviii. Nos. 1-2.)

A fifteenth-century Meisterlied and a contemporary Latin prose version are here printed for the first time, accompanied by two other German and Latin versions (pp. 49-79) and two Old French texts edited by Louis Allen (pp. 81-140). The study proper (pp. 9-48) discusses editorial, folkloristic, and related problems succinctly and judiciously. There are seven plates.

Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries

Miscellaneous. Stoughton, Marion W. "The Influence of the Kirchenlied of the Reformation (1524-1599) on Protestant Hymnody in England and America." Northwestern Univ. Summaries of Ph.D. Dissertations, II. 35-45.

Taylor, Archer. The "Überlange Tone" in Meistergesang. MP, XXXII. 225-231.

Sketches and interprets their development through two centuries.

Gryphius. Friederich, W. P. "From Ethos to Pathos: the Development from Gryphius to Lohenstein." GR, x. 223-236.

A contrasting study of G and L is followed by a sketch of the development from Æschylos to Euripides, stressing parallels and differences

Lohenstein. See Gryphius.

Luther. Kurrelmeyer, W. "Wes das Herz voll ist, des gehet der Mund über." MLN, L. 380-382.

Quotes practically the same rendering of Mt. XII. 34 from Geiler von Kaisersberg's Evangelienbuch (1515), implications.

Spee. Arlt, Gustave O. See below, BIBLIOGRAPHICAL.

Eighteenth and Early Nineteenth Centuries

Miscellaneous. ten Hoor, G. J. "Ben Jonson's Reception in Germany." PQ, xiv. 327-343.

Lucid and instructive account of the sporadic interest manifested chiefly between 1750 and 1840 (Jonson as foil to Shakespeare).

Howard, William G. "Ungedruckte Nachträge Hayms zum Text seiner Romantischen Schule." Harvard Studies and Notes in Philol. and Lit., xvii. 105-112.

Some 80 marginalia from Haym's Handexemplar, with references to the 1870 and 1928 editions.

Nolte, Fred O. The Early Middle Class Drama (1696-1774). (Ottendorfer Memorial Fellowship Series of Germanic Monographs, No. 19.) Lancaster, Pa. This book (213 pp.) attempts a Wesensbestimmung, primarily on the basis of contemporary theory and practice. Æsthetic failure of the movement is attributed to mistaken views concerning the nature of drama that were unavoidable in the Age of Enlightenment. There is no systematic bibliography, no index.

Shine, Hill. See ENGLISH, Section x, s.v. Carlyle.

Arndt. Pundt, A. G. Arndt and the Nationalist Awakening in Germany. N. Y. Brentano. See Hensel.

Brockes. Pfund, Harry W. Studien zu Wort und Stil bei Brockes. (Ottendorfer Memorial Fellowship Series of Germanic Monographs, No. 21.) N. Y.

Five chapters presenting, in a lucid and forceful style, a rich harvest of observations based on an intensive study of the whole age. A typical poet of a transition period is made to stand out in his intimate stylistic individuality. The bibliography (pp. 209-215) omits Pongs.

Goethe. Bluhm, H. S. "The Reception of Goethe's Faust in England after the Middle of the Nineteenth Century." JEGP, xxxiv. 201-212.

Brief but lucid and illuminating survey, hinging the problem on "growth of thought."

Feise, Ernst. "Der Hexameter in Goethe's Reineke Fuchs und Hermann und Dorothea." MLN, L. 230-237.

Discusses decisive differences with regard to rhythm and melody.

von Gruening, John Paul. "Goethe in American Periodicals, 1860-1900." PMLA, L. 1155-64.

Statistics, characterization, and significance presented in a rich and thorough survey.

Henel, Heinrich. "Ausländische Goethe-Kritik: Aus Anlass von Fairleys Buch." Deutsche Vierteljahrsschrift für Literaturwissenschaft und Geistesgeschichte, XII. 600-612.

Leuchs, Fritz, A. H. "Goethe on the German-American Stage." GR, x. 237-259. The New York City record from 1829 to 1914 extracted from (incomplete) newspaper files, confirming and occasionally modifying Zeydel.

Schreiber, Theodore. "Zum Begriff des jungen Goethe." PMLA, L. 1144-54. An analysis of Goethe's attitude toward landscape, the common people, love, and art points to June, 1775, to July, 1779, as a period of transition.

Schuchard, G. C. L. "Julirevolution, St. Simonismus und die Faustpartien von 1831." Zeitschrift für deutsche Philologie, LX. 240-274. (To be continued.) Bold but well-reasoned attempt to refute the perfectibilists by (1) demonstrating Goethe's intense anti-revolutionary interest in European politics in 1830-31; (2) a general reinterpretation of the Conclusion of Faust (1800, 1816, 1825-26, 1831) in terms of a pronounced Kulturpessimismus; (3) an exposition of St. Simonistic doctrines accessible to Goethe with reference to the Fifth Act, which would thus assume an (implied) "satirischen Character."

Sommerfeld, Martin. Goethe in Umwelt und Folgezeit: Gesammelte Studien. Leiden.

Eight Goethe studies (283 pp.), three of them slightly revised reprints, treat of Rousseau, the contemporary public, Lenz, early impressions of the theater, roads to classicism, pre- and post-Goethean lyrics, and autobiography and Wahlverwandschaften in the 19th and 20th centuries. A wealth of minute, delicate, and penetrating observations merges into a thought-provoking presentation of the poet as an historical phenomenon.

Hensel. Spiecker, Frank. "Clemens Brentano und Luise Hensel: Eine Schicksalsstunde im Leben zweier Romantiker." JEGP, XXXIV. 59-73.

The tragic story ably retold and somewhat reinterpreted on the strength of the Nachlass ——— "Die Gartnerlieder Luise Hensels aus dem Singspiel 'Die schöne Müllerin'." GR, x. 1-16.

Seventeen poems published from the Nachlass, the history of which is traced in detail.

Jacobi, F. H. Lindsay, Julian Ira. See ENGLISH, Section x, s.v. Coleridge.

Jean Paul. Dunnington, G. W. "Jean Paul und Carl Friedrich Gauss." MFDU, XXVII. 268-272.

Kotzebue. Holzmänn, Albert W. Family Relationships in the Dramas of August von Kotzebue. Princeton.

Essentially a sociologist's spirited and by and large successful attempt (1) to disprove the "immorality" of Kotzebue's production; (2) to explain his hold on an international public. Of a grand total of 218 plays, 136, mainly comedies dealing with German domestic life, are methodically analysed as to types of characters, motifs, and plots. Bibliographies and indexes (pp. 161-179).

Coleman, A. P. "Kotzebue in tschechischer Übertragung." Zeitschrift für slavische Philologie, XI. 54-72.

Lessing. Kaufmann, F. W. "Zu Lessings Emilia Galotti." MFDU, XXVII. 50-53.

Finds a new interpretation of Emilia's suicide on the basis of Heidegger, pointing out the tragic potentialities of an abrupt transition from heteronomy of faith to autonomy of reason Kies, Paul P. "Lessing and Burnaby." MLN, I. 225-230.

Detailed comparison of Die aufgebrachte Tugend (1753 ?) and The Modish Husband (1702).

Vail, Curtis C. D. "Lessing and Montiano." JEGP, xxxiv. 233-237.
Lessing's source of information on Montiano's tragedy Virginia.

Tieck. Hewett-Thayer, H. W. "Tieck and the Elizabethan Drama: His Marginalia." JEGP, xxxiv. 377-407. (Cf. Miscellaneous, ten Hoor.)
Reports critically on Tieck's copies, now in the British Museum, of Ben Jonson, Hazlitt's Lectures, and Collier's History; copious quotations, notes, and references.

Wiens, Abram G. "Tieck's Novellen from 1821 to 1840 as a Mirror of the Times." Ohio State Univ. Abstracts of Doctor's Dissertations, No. 16, pp. 267-274.

Zeydel, Edwin H. Ludwig Tieck, the German Romanticist. Princeton.
The first truly exhaustive study since Kopke (1855), based on the most intimate knowledge of sources published and unpublished. In 18 chapters packed with detailed biographical information, the essential unity of Tieck's long literary career is set forth as determined by a dualistic native endowment and shifting sociological forces. There is a bibliography of bibliographies with pertinent supplements (pp. 343 f. and 391 f.) and an index of names (pp. 395-406).

—— "Tieck's Essay Über das Erhabene," PMLA, I. 537-549.
Unfinished, dated 1792, published for the first time from the Nachlass; pertinent notes.

Wieland. Kurrelmeyer, W. Wielands Werke, Vol. XII: "Dichtungen," I. 1775-1779; Vol. XIII: "Dichtungen," II. 1780-1812.
Includes the "Bericht des Herausgebers" (notes, variants) and "Register."

Nineteenth Century

Miscellaneous. Hofacker, Erich. "Fatherless Writers." GR, x. 35-48.
Reviews childhood and adolescence of 18 such writers from Jean Paul to Nietzsche in juxtaposition with their careers, suggesting an anthroposophic interpretation.

Jehle, Mimi I. Das deutsche Kunstmärchen von der Romantik zum Naturalismus. (Illinois Studies in Lang. and Lit., Vol. XIX. Nos. 1-2.)
Attempts an interpretation up to Poetic Realism, mainly in terms of Motiv- and Stilgeschichte, particularly expansive on Eichendorff, Immermann, Hauff, Morike, Ludwig, and Storm. Calls attention to a great deal of research yet to be done. Bibliography (pp. 186-191), Index.

Anzengruber. Blankenagel, John C. "Naturalistic Tendencies in Anzengruber's Das vierte Gebot." GR, x. 26-34.

Stresses the poet's didacticism as a force counteracting his naturalistic tendencies.

Fontane. Davis, Arthur L. "Fontane and the German Revolution of 1848." MLN, I. 1-9.

The poet's fleeting enthusiasm and quick disillusionment, briefly related to his general make-up.

Keller. Silz, Walter. "Motivation in Keller's Romeo und Julia." GQ, VIII. 1-11.

Penetrating exegesis of Keller's "Novelle" as a bürgerliches Trauerspiel in Hebbel's sense.

Zippermann, Charles C. See below, BIBLIOGRAPHICAL.

Ludwig. de Jong, Gerrit. "Elements of Musicality in the Literary and Critical Works of Otto Ludwig." Stanford Univ. Abstracts of Dissertations 1933-34, IX. 59-61.

Wagner. Park, Rosemary. Das Bild von Richard Wagners Tristan und Isolde in der deutschen Literatur. (Deutsche Arbeiten der Universität Köln, No. 9.) Compact and comprehensive study of the reaction to Tristan in ever-widening circles, beginning with the "Tagespresse" of the 1860's and ending with the "Erlebnis" of the present. The development, mainly attributed to a changing conception of the limits of æsthetic appreciation, is considered of relative significance. An abundance of pertinent and critically evaluated quotations, presented with taste and discrimination, documents the various aspects of the phenomenon. Bibliography (pp. 135-141).

Recent and Contemporary Literature

Miscellaneous. Dukes, Ashley. "The Scene in Europe: Nazi Theatre, Second Phase." Theatre Arts Monthly, xix. 177-184.

Funke, Erich. "Die Schallform des Expressionismus." JEGP, xxxiv. 408-413.

Insists that an evaluation of Expressionism as art presupposes an analysis of its sound-form. Koischwitz, Otto. Germany. Milwaukee.

Memming, G. H. R. Niederdeutsche "Vörloopvertellsels" mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Ostfriesland. Univ. of Illinois diss. (abstract).

Syring, Rudolf A. "Contemporary Authors in the New Germany." MFDU, xxvii. 311-316.

Presents statistics intended to prove the high quality of the literary output in spite of non-recognition of Th. Mann, Hauptmann, Rilke, Werfel, etc.

Tresidder, Argus J. "The Meininger and Their Influence." Quar. Jour. of Speech, xxi. 467-475.

Bonsels. Goedsche, C. R. "Bonsels' Indienfahrt: A Travel Book as a Work of Art." MFDU, xxvii. 81-87.

Grimm. Danton, George H. "Hans Grimm's Volk ohne Raum." MFDU, xxvii. 33-43; 177.

Trenchant analysis of thought-content and form, backed by a most useful tabulation of events, themes, artistic characteristics, and motifs.

Halbe. Root, Winthrop H. "New Light on Max Halbe's Jugend." GR, x. 17-25.

Conjectures autobiographical qualities in both Amandus and Schigorski, attempting to explain the superimposition of tragedy on a factual idyll.

Hauptmann. Feise, Ernst. "Hauptmanns Einsame Menschen und Ibsens Rosmersholm." GR, x. 145-165.

Suggests that, with its intermingling of deterministic and teleological thinking, Einsame Menschen conforms closely to Bölsche's theories of poetry; Rosmersholm used for contrast.

Steinhauer, H. "The Symbolism in Hauptmann's Veland." MLN, l. 258-264.

Reduced to terms of Klassenkampf and Christian pity, with added psychoanalytical explanations.

Hofmannsthal. von Bradish, Joseph A. Der Briefwechsel Hofmannsthal-Wildgans. Ergänzter und verbesserter Neudruck. Zurich-München-Paris.

The original number of letters increased from 27 to 42, of explanatory notes from 56 to 92.

Kafka. Neuse, Werner. "Franz Kafka." Books Abroad, ix. 266-268.

Keyserling. Reichart, Walter A. "Graf Eduard Keyserling: Abendliche Hauser." MFD U, xxvii. 44-49.

Kolbenheyer. Sepmeier, Kurt A. "Kolbenheyer's Zeitdramen." MFD U, xxvii. 226-232.

Lucka. Morgan, B. Q. "Emil Lucka—Austrian Poet and Thinker." Books Abroad, ix. 131-134.

Mann. Jacobson, Anna. "Thomas Mann: Zum sechzigsten Geburtstag am 6. Juni 1935." MFD U, xxvii. 169-176.

Morgenstern. See Rilke.

Nietzsche. Bluhm, Heinz. "Nietzsche's Early Views on Literary Studies." MFD U, xxvii. 259-267.

Well-oriented presentation of extracts from Briefe and Werke von Bradish, Joseph A. "Elisabeth Förster-Nietzsche, gestorben 8. November 1935." MFD U, xxvii. 321-325.

Reports also on the Nietzsche-Archiv.

Fairley, Barker. "Nietzsche and the Poetic Impulse." Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, xix. 344-361.

Subtle analysis delineating (1) the incompatibility of the poetic impulse in Nietzsche with the philosophical, and the resultant "vulnerability" of Zarathustra; (2) this cleavage in his work as a possible clue to his peculiar tension of character.

Rosenberg, Ralph P. "Nietzsche and George Sand." GR, x. 260-266.

Nietzsche's antagonism viewed in the light of his Umwertung philosophy, esp. anti-feminism and anti-romanticism.

See Sudermann.

Rilke. Hofacker, Erich. "R. M. Rilke und Christian Morgenstern." PMLA, l. 606-614.

Comparative study, particularly of reaction to the problems of solitude, love, and death.

Schäfer. Ehrlich, Godfrey. "Wilhelm Schäfer." MFD U, xxvii. 130-139.

Schnitzler. Ilmer, Frida. "Das Thema der künstlerischen Schöpferkraft bei Schnitzler." MFD U, xxvii. 73-80.

——— "Schnitzler's Attitude with Regard to the Transcendental." GR, x. 114-125.

Defines it largely as one of reverent skepticism.

Seidel. Jaeger, Hans. "Die Lebensgestaltung im Werk Ina Seidels." Dichtung und Volkstum (N.S. of Euphorion), xxxvi. 479-496.

Shows that womanhood in its mature aspect, and thus in polarity with the masculine urge for liberation and freedom, is the determining factor in Ina Seidel's epic work.

Stehr. Boeschstein, H. Hermann Stehr. (Sprache und Kultur der germanischen und romanischen Völker, Reihe B, xv.) Breslau.

Kaufmann, F. W. "Hermann Stehr: Der Geigenmacher." MFD U, xxvii. 317-320.

Sudermann. Bockstahler, O. L. "Nietzsche and Sudermann." GQ, viii. 177-191.

Waggerl. Kaufmann, F. W. "Karl Heinrich Waggerl: Brot." MFD U, xxvii. 183-186.

Wildgans. See Hofmannsthal.

Germans in America

Carlson, Harold G. "A Distinguished 48'er: Eduard Dorsch." Michigan History Magazine, xix. 425-437.

Dana, Julian. Sutter of California. N. Y.

Fife, Robert H. "To Camillo von Klenze." GQ, viii. 49.

Gribsch, Max. "Dr. H. H. Fick†." MFDU, xxvii. 191-194. (Cf. ibid., pp. 147-148.)

von Klenze, Camillo. "The Teaching of German Literature and the Genteel Tradition." GQ, viii. 97-105.

Reflects the German contribution, actual and potential, to American culture.

Kubler, E. A. "Johann August Sutter in der deutschen Literatur." MFDU, xxvii. 121-129.

Well-informed critique of recent attempts to master a tantalizing theme (cf. PMLA, xlix. 1276).

Leuchs, Fritz A. H. "Die Geschichte des Vereins deutscher Lehrer von New York und Umgebung." GQ, viii. 50-59.

Mahr, August C. "A Pennsylvania Dutch 'Hexzettel'." MFDU, xxvii. 215-225.

Charms in Pennsylvania with parallels in German folk-lore; bibliography.

Metzenthin-Raunick, Selma. Deutsche Schriften in Texas. Bd. I: Dichtung San Antonio.

Reichart, Walter A. "Professor Tobias Diekhoff†." MFDU, xxvii. 237.

[Roeseler, R. O.] "Professor Max Gribsch†." MFDU, xxvii. 211-213; 213-214.

Zollinger, James P. "John Augustus Sutter's European Background." California Historical Society Quarterly, xiv. 28-46.

Sutter's prosy if turbulent life up to 1834. (From MS and other sources.)

III. BIBLIOGRAPHICAL

Arlt, Gustave O. "Friedrich von Spee's Trutznachtigall: The Editions and a Bibliography." MP, xxiii. 159-168.

Lists ca. 30 editions (1649-1929) and ca. 60 items of research (1843-1928) with brief critical comments.

Books Abroad. Vol. ix. Univ. of Oklahoma.

A quarterly comment on foreign book publications topically arranged.

Bradley, Lyman R. "A Tentative Bibliography of Translations from the German, 1934." Books Abroad, ix. 229-231.

Deutsches Haus Bulletin, Vol. v. Columbia Univ.

Catalogues and briefly characterizes recent German books, including fiction and poetry; "Literature and Linguistics," pp. 64-73.

Gerig, John L. "Modern Philology: Germanic." New Int. Year Book, p. 561.

——— "Philology: Germanic." Americana Annual, p. 565.

Hermannsson, Halldór. The Sagas of Icelanders (Íslendinga Sögur): A Supplement to Bibliography of the Icelandic Sagas and Minor Tales. (Islandica, Vol. xxiv.) Ithaca, N. Y.

Covers the period from 1908 to date, adding "Collections and Selections of Texts and Translations," critical "Works on the Literature, History and Civilization of the Period," and a list of poetic treatments of Icelandic saga subjects.

Kaufmann, F. W. "Germanic Languages and Literatures." American Year Book, pp. 891-893.

Litzenburg, Karl. See ENGLISH, Section x, s.v. Morris.

Nolte, Fred O. "German Literature and the Classics: A Bibliographical Guide." Harvard Studies and Notes in Philol. and Lit., xviii. 125-163.

Intended as "a practical means of orientation," this judiciously arranged guide-book lists ca. 800 book and article titles.

Palmblad, H. V. E. "Scandinavian Literature." New Int. Year Book, pp. 639-640.

Pochmann, H. A ; Price, L. M.; Morgan, B. Q.; Harrold, C. F.; Chamberlin, W. A. "Anglo-German Bibliography for 1933 and 1934." JEGP, xxxiv. 294-306.

Lists (1) ca. 100 titles of books and articles, published in this country and abroad, that deal with linguistic, literary, theatrical, educational, and cultural relations between the German- and English-speaking worlds; (2) ca. 100 "projects" and items of "research in progress," mainly in the literary field.

Sharp, Stanley L. "A Critical Study of the German Literature Read in the United States." Stanford Univ. Abstracts of Dissertations 1933-34, ix. 63-68.

Shuster, G. N. "German Literature." New Int. Year Book, pp. 265-268.

Zippermann, Charles C. Eine Gottfried Keller Bibliographie: 1844-1934. Zurich.

Mainly based on printed bibliographical sources, this book (227 pp.) is intended to present the complete material, including translations, school and shorthand editions, in ca. 1900 titles. The standpoint is international and non-critical.

WORDS

By COLBERT SEARLES, President of the Association

THE germ of that which follows came into being many years ago in the days of my youth as a university instructor and assistant professor. It was generated by the then quite outspoken attitude of colleagues in the "exact sciences"; the sciences of which the subject-matter can be exactly weighed and measured and the force of its movements mathematically demonstrated. They assured us that the study of languages and literature had little or nothing scientific about it because: "It had no domain of concrete fact in which to work." Ergo, the scientific spirit was theirs by a stroke of "efficacious grace" as it were. Ours was at best only a kind of "sufficient grace," pleasant and even necessary to have, but which could, by no means ensure a reception among the elected.

Times have changed. The Jansenists of science have been largely silenced if not dispersed. So many new techniques, claiming fidelity to scientific principles, have crowded into the picture that there has arisen a general impression, if not an actual state, of scientific irreligion. It is a misfortune from which we suffer no doubt like all the rest.

It was of course naive to have been overawed, some thirty years ago, by the pretensions of our colleagues in the exact sciences. We had a science, a domain of concrete fact; it was philology, pioneer among modern sciences, and it was being cultivated with all the rigorous exactitude of which the human mind is capable. It is an ominous sign that the neophytes in our fraternity of scholars are showing an inclination to make detours around this, our fundamental science. One meets more and more frequently the argument that one interested in the literature of the last two or three centuries will derive no benefit from a study of the old language. This is clearly to forget, or to ignore, that the most vociferated claim of modern literature from Romanticism on, is that it produces extraordinary effects by taking advantage of the evocative power of the words employed. How can one hope to be able to grasp the image, the sensation, and the thought which a word is supposed to evoke, if one does not know its genealogy and the vicissitudes of usage through which it has passed and which have given it its evocative powers? But to appreciate all that, one needs to have had at least some training in philology, especially in so far as it applies to the derivation of words.

But philology has become a very complicated science. In doing the first thing that was to be done, it developed as tools of research two subsidiary sciences, Morphology and Phonology, until they have become complete sciences in themselves. The latter particularly bristles with laws and by-laws. These laws and by-laws teem with exceptions and special cases. Our graduate students are no doubt sincere when they claim that they are crushed before they start; that where they looked for guidance in their explorations they have encountered an avalanche.

Recognizing the magnitude and the quality of what has been achieved, stressing the necessity of maintaining the rigid technical discipline acquired, may it be permitted an amateur in this field to question whether the time has not arrived to shift some of the stress being given to phonology and morphology to semantics, which has been hitherto largely a by-product of the other philological processes.

Semantics, in its present stage of development, does hardly more than indicate the stages by which an etymon arrives at the meaning expressed by the word of which it is the parent. The period covered extends only from the birth of words to their appearance in ancient texts. For the rest we are limited to dictionary definitions substantiated by a number of detached phrases taken from standard authors. We need to know the lives of words more completely and more intimately.

There are few histories more interesting than the histories of words. They come into being and pass through many adventures. They take on the traits of those who use them. They have their social ratings, their periods of elevation, and their periods of decline and fall. The physician-author of one of the oldest etymological dictionaries in the English language justified his apparent straying from his particular field of scientific interest on the ground that he saw in words the same humors that he had observed in his patients. Semantics actuated by the rigorous technique which obtains in the other branches of philology and animated with something of the humanistic curiosity manifested by the pioneer etymologist of nearly two hundred years ago, might well lead to a quickening of interest in a study which is so fundamentally important; it might serve as an attractive portal to a science whose approaches have become, to say the least, formidable. It could not fail to furnish invaluable assistance to those who make literature the object of their special study.

For it was of the study of literature that our colleagues of other days were thinking when they condoled our lack of concrete, measurable material upon which to work. Rendered slightly fanatical by their splendid enthusiasm for what real science was accomplishing and for what it seemed destined to accomplish, they were distrustful of all that was not concrete fact. To many of them, all that was not concrete fact was literature: an inundation of words. They assumed that we were spending our time in writing essays on the sweetness and light wrapped up in the essays, novels, and poems which we had constrained ourselves to read and elucidate.

The truth was that we were being infected with this scientific enthusiasm, this thirst for concrete fact. We were spending our days and nights, not in writing euphonious essays, but in plowing through literature in an attempt to turn up the sources of what had been written. We were striving to fix the geographical locations of places named or alluded to in the works of writers of olden times, we were running down historical allusions and trying to estimate their authenticity; we were prying into the private lives of authors, investigating their heredity, their environment, their relations, their psychoses, forcing every closet to see that no skeleton should remain hidden.

No one would think of disparaging this activity in factual research, which came as a result of very genuine though perhaps exaggerated enthusiasm for bald and even naked facts. It brought to light an enormous mass of interesting and very often illuminating information; it sharpened historical and critical acumen; it not only revealed more fully the technique and the type of genius which had made possible the creation of old masterpieces of literary art, but it brought together elements out of which new techniques could arise, leading to the production of new and more diversified masterpieces. At the same time it can hardly be gainsaid that the effectiveness, or, if you will, the appeal of literature taken in and for itself was thereby impaired.

When one reads, even in translation, what is left of ancient Greek literature one marvels at the sensation of directness which the words convey. These words are more than symbols of things, thoughts, and sentiments: they are things, thoughts, and sentiments. The sense emanates from them, much as the tone of a violin in the hands of a virtuoso seems to hover in space, quite detached from the instrument and the artist. Is it not perhaps because we know so little of the Greek poet and the conditions under which he wrote? Take, for example, the line and a half from the Bacchæ of Euripides where the poet, speaking of Dionysius, says:

He giveth night that sinks the fretful day
In cool forgetting.

Would we have the same instantaneous and grateful recognition that we find here, luminously expressed, a sensation that comes often into the experience of all who live? and should we feel to the same extent the divine fitness of those adjectives, "the fretful day," "cool forgetting," if our memory made us read them or think of them through a barrage of more than prosaic details about the private life of Euripides, his troubles with his landlord, with the censors, the actors and his amours? if we had to read him for example as we can hardly escape reading Le Misanthrope of Molière?

The ancients indeed seem to have had very little curiosity in regard to the private life, the personality, or even the moral qualities of their poets.

Perhaps believing that the poet is privileged to hold intercourse with the gods, they fancied that such distinguished persons should be treated with discretion and respect. Perhaps they were satisfied with merely enjoying truth and beauty, cast in artistic word-patterns, and did not care to grub in the soil out of which these fine things came. The progress of modern civilization has, no doubt, made forever impossible the recurrence or even the imitation of such simplicity.

And yet the study of language and literature is still classified as one of the humanities, a term which, according to Webster, is used to designate the "branches of polite learning." It is at all events a study which deals with human phenomena, and it should be feasible to preserve one's scientific attitude and still treat human phenomena in a human way. Poets and writers in general are made of the same stuff that those who study them are made of; the only difference is that the former generally see things more quickly and more clearly, feel them more keenly and express them in words which are better chosen and more skilfully arranged. The fact that they become famous and die hardly abolishes the privilege of treating them as one gentleman treats another. It is significant as well as pathetic that a poet like Burns should feel called upon to plead for the tolerant consideration that most men spontaneously accord to each other:

One point must still be greatly 'dark
 The moving why they do it,
 And just as lamely can ye mark
 How far perhaps they rue it.
 . . . . .
 Then at the balance let's be mute
 We never can adjust it,
 What's done we partly may compute
 But know not what's resisted.

It is still more significant that so distinguished and judicious a man of letters as Wordsworth should have protested against indiscriminate prying with the lives of authors, not out of consideration for them, but in the interests of literature itself. A then recent biography of Burns which devoted much attention to the moral lapses of the poet was the occasion for Wordsworth's pronouncement upon this point. "Assuredly," he wrote, "there is no cause why the lives of that class of men should be pried into with the same diligent curiosity, and laid open with the same disregard of reserve, which may sometimes be expedient in composing the history of men who have borne an active part in the world." Speaking specifically of Burns, he goes on to say:

Neither the subjects of his poems, nor his manner of handling them, allow us long to forget their author. On the basis of his human character he has reared a poetic one, which with more or less distinctness presents itself to view in almost every part of his earlier, and, in my estimation, his most valuable verses. This poetic fabric, dug out of the quarry of genuine humanity, is airy and spiritual.—and although the materials, in some parts, are coarse, and the disposition is often fantastic and irregular, yet the whole is agreeable and strikingly attractive. Plague, then, upon your remorseless hunters after matter of fact (who, after all, rank among the blindest of human beings) when they would convince you that the foundations of this admirable edifice are hollow, and that its frame is unsound! Granting that all which has been raked up to the prejudice of Burns were literally true; and that it added, which it does not, to our better understanding of human nature and human life . . . how poor would have been the deduction made by this extrinsic knowledge, from the intrinsic efficacy of his poetry—to please, and to instruct . . .

Then, by way of general conclusion Wordsworth adds:

Our business is with their books,—to understand and to enjoy them. And, of poets more especially, is it true—that if their works be good, they contain within themselves all that is necessary to their being comprehended and relished.<sup>1</sup>

It may be said that this contention of Wordsworth applies rather to readers than to students, teachers, historians, and interpreters of literature. But does it? Students of literature have only an incidental interest in what an author was, their principal concern is with what he has done, and the way in which he has done it. In so far as his work can be narrowed down to a presentation of thoughts and feelings peculiar to himself, it is a thing of very little importance. It appeals only to the type of mind for which the recent “confession” magazines have been invented. For all except the pettily or morbidly curious, the real interest lies in the effectiveness with which the poet has portrayed in words human traits which are characteristic not only of himself but of his contemporaries and of all humanity.

Literature in sum is chosen reality: for fiction and the stuff dreams are made of, as well as matters of fact, are reality to him who writes literature. It is the element of choice which differentiates literature from the daily newspaper which prints everything fit to print and somewhat more. The student of literature is concerned with what his author has chosen to present. The public has decided or will decide, whether the choice be good or bad, whether it is, or is not, representative of humanity. The problem then is to determine to what extent and by what art of presentation this chosen reality has stirred the heart, kindled the imagination, and affected the thought and action of men at a given moment and during a more or less extended period. There would be little reason, for example, to occupy one's self with the ideas and personal details offered by Jean Jacques Rousseau, if they merely served to justify his claim that he was "made like no one of those who exist." If the claim be true or false, what of it? It would be at best a problem for a pathologist. But that there should have been in what he chose to say, and in his way of saying it, a certain "vibration," as Lemaitre puts it, which enabled his books while he yet lived to "deflect the life of a people to which he did not belong," and to "transform a literature and a history" that came after him, that is a prodigious literary phenomenon worthy of almost endless investigation.

<sup>1</sup> The Prose Works of William Wordsworth (London, 1876), II, 11 ff.

Literary art, the art of selecting and arranging words, is then often much more important than the subject-matter. It has many rules and precepts which may or may not be followed. But its efficacy depends upon the one fundamental principle so admirably suggested by Montaigne in his Essay "On some verses of Virgil": "When I see these brave forms of expressing one's self, so vivid, so profound, I do not say 'Tis fine speaking'; I say 'Tis fine thinking'." Now, the peculiar characteristic of this "fine thinking" is that it is a perfectly normal, human process, for it is thinking in terms of common sense, upon matters of universal experience, by men who were not at all professional historians, nor systematic philosophers, nor trained psychologists. Creators of literature have, to be sure, sometimes penetrated by sheer force of intuition more deeply than the specially trained into scientific phases of the subject matter being treated. Doestoevsky, for example, is credited by Dr. Collins with having seen more clearly in abnormal psychology than the abnormal psychologists of his time. Nevertheless, Doestoevsky was preëminently a man of letters, a novelist, perhaps unconscious that he was even an amateur in a field of research which his novels exemplified and illuminated. Students, teachers, and interpreters of literature are, like those whose works they investigate, laymen in all that does not pertain to the understanding or the creation of literature. It is obviously dangerous to try to introduce a smattering, or an impression, of the technique which is requisite in other sciences into a type of research, which in the long run must succeed or fail in producing enduring results as a consequence of procedures more or less peculiar to itself.

It is of course indispensable to have the authentic text of an author's work and extremely desirable to know the essential facts of his life in so far as they affect his right to be considered a representative of a race, of a time, and of a social milieu. It is essential to know the order in which the author's works appeared, and something of the reception accorded them by the public of his time, if one would trace the evolution in the "fine thinking" by which the author transformed his sense of reality into accepted literature. When a literary work owes its genesis to some special event or to some special motive, one needs to know that special event and that special motive but always with reference to the work produced. For the work of an author, taken in its entirety, is the author as far as we are concerned. The object of our researches is to discover whether the material which he presents comes from the quarry of universal humanity and how it is made into the poetic fabric of which Wordsworth speaks.

To exhume non-essential elements, to seek sources of inconsequential details, merely to find sources; to exhume even essential elements without reference to the structure to which they belong, is hardly more than an effort of well-intentioned Sammelleiß. It serves, as often as not, to clutter up rather than make clear that which is being investigated. To project one's self by the exercise of amateurish psychiatry into the life of a writer or into the work which he has created is one of the most vicious of modern pseudoscientific vices. The study of a source or of an "influence," to use a much abused term, has its raison d'être only when it is undertaken in the reasonable hope of discovering some persistent thought or feeling which forms a part of the mental and spiritual life of an individual, a society, a nation, or a race, and which endures and changes as does life itself.<sup>2</sup>

The professor of language and literature is not merely a student and interpreter of literature. He is, in most cases by his personal tastes, in all cases by his self interest, a promoter of literature. He is striving to create a demand for the object of his labors. Many literary works have held a high place in the minds and hearts of men in spite of academic promoters. Their assistance alone has never been able to give a long existence to a work of art. Their function then is to facilitate the appreciation of that which they investigate. Dr. Schutze, in his recent book entitled Academic Illusions,<sup>3</sup> has made a statement which would have brought us no little comfort some thirty years ago:

It is no more essential, to agree in "liking" or "disliking" a poem or a picture than in liking or disliking a chemical experiment or a mathematical demonstration. It is necessary in the first place only to know specifically in each case the essential elements of the structure and the directions, proportions and weights or degrees of force of their integral values. It matters, in other words, to understand. The proper understanding of poetry and art requires the highest mental powers of discernment, generalization and order.

That is to say, I take it, that if fine thinking dominates in one who creates what is accepted as literature, then fine thinking is necessary on the part of one who would understand it and still more on the part of one who would explain it. It is neither scientific nor reasonable to treat a piece of literature as if it were a chemical compound. The one is an inert mass, the other a product into which have entered the thoughts, the ideas, the sentiments, and the sensations of very human beings. It is the peculiarity of our type of research that, in it, matters of fact may be very treacherous things. Because of their connection with personalities, they carry with them a nimbus which blurs their outline, distorts their shape, and magnifies or diminishes their stature. We can rarely say that one and one make two, for we rarely have one and one. We deal with almost constant variables as far as thoughts and feelings are concerned and they are major components of the substance which we treat. These thoughts and feelings are as complicated and mysterious as the ultimate laws of chemistry and physics. But we have, to study them, units which are perhaps as tangible as the atoms and ions of the chemist and physicist. The words which enter into the composition of ideas are our atoms and ions. A patient study of usage can come very near to establishing their "integral value" at a given moment. Grammar and rhetoric, directed by clear thinking, enable us to calculate their "directions, proportions and weights or degrees of force." The most essential object of the study of literature is to make clear the power of words put in their place.

<sup>2</sup> Cf., Ellsworth Barnard, Shelley's Religion, an unpublished Dissertation, University of Minnesota, 1935, Introduction, p. xx.

<sup>3</sup> The University of Chicago Press, 1933, p. 215.

The year upon which we are about to enter marks the tercentenary of the founding of the French Academy. No one can deny that the French Academy, by insisting upon the quality of words, by holding up a standard of literary art and literary discipline, has contributed greatly to the intellectual culture of France. No American corps of scholars is better placed than the Modern Language Association of America to realize a similar destiny.

REPORTS

SECRETARY'S REPORT

The Secretary submits as his formal report the following seven items:

1. The Supplement of 1934 and the four quarterly issues of PMLA, 1935, including the Acts of the Executive Council.
2. Three books published by the Association in 1935:

Monograph No. V. The Real War of the Theaters. By Robert Boies Sharpe;
Monograph No. VI. Peter Idley's Instructions to his Son. By Charlotte D'Evelyn;
General Series. The Sublime: a Study of Critical Theories in XVIII-Century England. By Samuel Holt Monk.

3. Three books to be published by the Association in 1936:

General Series. Volkssprache und Wortschatz des badischen Frankenlandes. By Edwin Carl Roedder;

Revolving Fund Series No. VI. Topographical Poetry in XVIII-Century England. By Robert A. Aubin;

An Index to PMLA, Vols. I-L.

4. Aid extended toward the publication of three other books:

The Syntax of Castilian Prose, XVI Century. By Hayward Keniston;

The History of French Dramatic Literature, Part III. By H. Carrington Lancaster;

Widsith. By Kemp Malone.

5. Grants from the Research Fund to print The Arthurian Bibliography, Part II, and to assist in preparation of The Originals and Analogues of the "Canterbury Tales."

6. Membership in the Association totalling 3,714 (in 1934, 3,828). Of these 392 are life members.

7. Grants received by the Association, totaling $9,975, as follows:

From the American Philosophical Society, $3,000 to aid in preparation of the Variorum Shakespeare.

From the American Council of Learned Societies, $200 toward the expenses of the Committee on Research Activities, $5,275 in aid of publication, and $1,500 for the extension of the M.L.A. Rotograph Service.

Certain events of the year call for particular mention.

During 1935 the Association has sustained the loss by death of 26 members, and of one honorary member, Antoine Thomas of the University of Paris. Among the members two, T. Atkinson Jenkins, of the University of Chicago, and Hermann Collitz, of the Johns Hopkins University, had been presidents of the Association. Others whose services to the Association had been of especial distinction are Earle Brownell Babcock and B. Sprague

Allen, of New York University, Charles Sears Baldwin, of Columbia University, Charles Read Baskervill and Starr W. Cutting, of the University of Chicago, and R. E. Neil Dodge, of the University of Wisconsin.

Our losses in other respects have been less severe. The resignations in 1934 totalled 147; this year there were only 79. On January 1, 1935, the number dropped for arrears was 241; tomorrow it cannot exceed 169. The number of new memberships was then 151; today it is 279. The prospective membership tomorrow is therefore 3,814, as against 3,722 last year.

The geographical distribution of the 1935 membership is displayed in the following table.

(27 December)	1929	1932	1935
New England States	569	639	580
Middle Atlantic States	1086	1307	1211
Southern States	522	627	533
Middle Western States	951	1179	983
Far Western States	427	332	312
Island Possessions	3	3	6
Dominion of Canada	61	54	42
Central and South America	2	1	1
Europe	34	26	37
Asia	6	6	8
Africa	—	—	1
	3661	4174	3714

The Association has been represented at the following occasions:

At the centenary of Marietta College, by Professor John W. Draper of West Virginia University.

At the Fiftieth Anniversary of Bryn Mawr College, by Professor E. C. Armstrong of Princeton University.

At the inauguration of President William S. A. Pott of Elmira College, by Professor Lane Cooper of Cornell University.

At the inauguration of President J. Hillis Miller of Keuka College, by Professor Clark S. Northup of Cornell University.

At the inauguration of President Alan Valentine of the University of Rochester, by Professor Horace A. Eaton of Syracuse University.

At the inauguration of President John A. Schaeffer of Franklin and Marshall College, by Professor Norman L. Torrey of Swarthmore College.

As Chairman of the Program Committee, the Secretary reports that the Executive Council has accepted for our meeting in 1936 a joint invitation by the College of William and Mary and the University of Richmond. The South Atlantic Modern Language Association has accepted our invitation to meet there with us.

As Chairman of the Editorial Committee, the Secretary reports that the March number has gone to the printers and that all accepted papers have been prepared for printing. The departmental distribution of the PMLA for 1935 is: Germanic, 8 articles, 103 pages, Romance, 12 articles, 272 pages; English, 57 articles, 822 pages—closely corresponding to the percentage of papers submitted. At the Executive Offices or undergoing revision there remains a stock of 71 accepted articles: German 9, Romance 14, English 48—somewhat more than enough to fill PMLA for 1936. In 1935 the rejections total 81 articles and notes: Germanic 12; Romance 19; English 50. Under revision for reconsideration are 19 other articles—chiefly English. Received too recently for report by the Editorial Committee there are also 42 articles: Germanic 6; Romance 11, English 25. Though two-thirds of the 213 articles here recorded are in the field of English, the Editor has made in the March number a distribution of three articles in Germanic, six in Romance, and nine in English. A questionnaire sent to life members revealed that all the articles printed in 1934 were widely read and that these members have a reading average of 15 articles. The Style Sheet has been revised and enlarged, it is now available. An index to Volumes I-L has been prepared by a staff of 33 specialists covering their respective fields. The copy has been assembled and is ready for editing.

The administrative work of 1935 has been greatly benefited by the active coöperation of the various Committees and the officers of Sections and Groups, by the labors of our Index staff, and by the ever helpful guidance of our First Vice-President, Professor Carlton Brown.

TREASURER'S REPORT

SUMMARY OF FUNDS FOR 1935

	Dec. 26, 1935	Dec. 26, 1934	Increase
General Funds
Permanent Fund:
Investments . . . . .	$44,775.50	$44,338.00	$ 437.50
Cash . . . . .	620.37	565.74	54 63
Current Account—Cash . . . . .	1,321.49	15.76	1,305.73
Total . . . . .	$46,717.36	$44,919.50	$1,797.86
Monograph Funds:
Endowment Fund:
Investments . . . . .	$20,952.38	$21,252.38	$ 300.00*
Cash . . . . .	387.33	87.33	300.00
Current Account—Cash.. . . .	2,949.52	3,950.12	1,000.60*
Total . . . . .	$24,289.23	$25,289.83	$1,000.60*

Research Funds:

Endowment Fund Investments	$ 9,943.61	$ 9,943.61
Current Account—Cash	418.60	329.66	$ 88.94
Total	$10,362.21	$10,273.27	$ 88.94
Emergency Fund—Cash	$ 52.04	$ 1,116.42	$1,064.38*
Revolving Book Fund—Cash	45.78	19.92	25.86
Rotograph Fund—Cash	6,293.15	6,450.68	157.53*
Variorum Shakespeare—Cash	3,946.11	1,147.56	2,798.55
Joint Photostat Service—Cash	180.28	339.08	158.80*
Committee on Research Activities—Cash	69.81		69.81
General Book Fund—Cash	4,047.80		4,047.80
Total	$96,003.77	$89,556.26	$6,447.51

* Decrease

A. CURRENT ACCOUNT

BALANCE, December 27, 1934 $ 15.76

RECEIPTS:

Membership dues.

Life memberships	$ 549.38
Prior years . .	1,414.73
The year 1935	13,177.49
Paid in advance	1,498.98	$16,640.58

Library subscriptions:

Volume XLIX	$ 157.50
Volume L	838.49
Volume LI	832.49	1,828.48

Sale of Advertising Space 1,085.98

Interest from Investments:

Permanent Fund (less service charges $76.48)	$ 1,617.94
Monograph Endowment Fund	1,078.57
Research Fund.	276.12	2,972.63

Sales:

PMLA.	$ 612.70
Reprints . .	75.87
Arthurian Bibliography	4.29
Monographs.	8.40
General Series Books.	35.45	736.71

Collections for others:

Societies .	$ 603.75
University Presses—sales	7.25	611.00

Miscellaneous:

Contribution to Rotograph Fund	$ 25.00
Excess corrections	32.66
Administration of Joint Photostat Fund	200.00
Sundry...	278.37	536.03

Total Receipts $24,411.41

Total.. $24,427.17

DISBURSEMENTS:

Administrative expenses:

Salaries:

Secretary and Editor .	$ 4,000.00
Treasurer... .	2,000.00
Clerical staff. .	2,731.00

Total salaries $ 8,731.00

Printing... .	459.21
Postage and Telegraph	1,264.57
Supplies and Express...	252.18	$10,706.96

Quarterly PMLA (four numbers and Supplement) 8,292.95

Miscellaneous expenses:

Annual meeting—circular and program .	$ 611.32
Committee expenses	186.91
Auditing .	185.00
Insurance and bonding. .	40.15
American Council of Learned Societies .	75.00
American Council on Education. .	20.00
Refunds and exchange.	19.37
Sundry.. .	191.98	1,329.73

Collections remitted to others:

Societies.. . . .	$ 603.75
University Presses. . . . .	7.25	611.00

Funds transferred:

Life Memberships to LeRoy E. Kimball, Managing Trustee .... .	$ 492.13
--	-----------

Interest from investments:

Monograph Fund...	1,078.57
Research Fund..... .	276.12

Sales:

Emergency Fund—40% of sales of PMLA	245.08
Research Current Account — Arthurian Bibliography . . . .	4.29
Monograph Account—Monographs . . .	8.40
General Book Fund—General Series Books	35.45
Contribution to Rotograph Fund . . . . .	25.00	2,165 04

Total disbursements. . . . . $23,105.68

BALANCE, December 26, 1935 . . . . . $ 1,321.49

Notes Balance due from Revolving Book Fund for advances made in prior years remaining uncollected 12/26/1935—$1,350 00.

Charges for advertising space amounting to $161 00 and other receivables amounting to $204 04 remained uncollected at December 26, 1935.

Bills amounting to $1,639.21 remain unpaid at December 26, 1935.

B. MONOGRAPH ACCOUNT

BALANCE, December 27, 1934. . . . . $ 3,950.12

RECEIPTS:

Interest on investments—Transferred from Current Account..	$ 1,078.57
Interest on bank balance. . . . .	83.21
Sales of monographs. . . . .	146.64
Excess corrections. . . . .	104.71	1,413.13

Total. . . . . $ 5,363.25

DISBURSEMENTS:

Cost of producing Sharpe's "Real War" . . . . .	$ 1,021.13
Cost of producing D'Evelyn's "Peter Idley". . . . .	1,392.60	2,413.73

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 . . . . . $ 2,949.52

Note: Receivables amounting to $29.37 remain uncollected at December 26, 1935.

C. RESEARCH CURRENT ACCOUNT

BALANCE, December 27, 1934. . . . . $ 329.66

RECEIPTS:

Interest on investments—Transferred from Current Account..	$ 276.12
Interest on bank balance. . . . .	4.50
Sales of "Arthurian Bibliography". . . . .	4.29	284.91

Total. . . . . $ 614.57

DISBURSEMENTS:

Printing of questionnaire. . . . .	$ 132.28
Purchase of rotographs. . . . .	63.69	195.97

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935. . . . . $ 418.60

Note: Receivables amounting to $1.34 remain uncollected at December 26, 1935.

D EMERGENCY FUND

BALANCE, December 27, 1934 $ 1,116.42

RECEIPTS:

Interest on bank balance	$ 15.39
40% of office sales of PMLA —Transferred from Current Account	245.08	260 47
Total		$ 1,376.89

DISBURSEMENTS:

Cost of reproducing seven numbers of PMLA	$ 1,324.85
--	-------------

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 $ 52 04

E. REVOLVING BOOK FUND

BALANCE, December 27, 1934 $ 19.92

RECEIPTS:

Interest on bank balance.	$ .56
Sales of books.	25.30	25.86

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 $ 45.78

Note: Advances by the Current Account made in prior years amounting to $1,350.00 remain unpaid at December 26, 1935.

F. ROTOGRAPH FUND

BALANCE, December 27, 1934 $ 6,450.68

RECEIPTS

Contributions .	$ 1,425 00
Interest on bank balance	90 36	1,515.36
Total .		$ 7,966.04

DISBURSEMENTS:

Purchase of rotographs .	$ 1,329.21
Joint Photostat Service	160 88
Postage, printing and clerical	182.80	1,672.89

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 $ 6,293.15

G. VARIORUM SHAKESPEARE

BALANCE, December 27, 1934 $ 1,147.56

RECEIPTS:

Interest on bank balance.	$ 45.50
Grants from the Philosophical Society	4,750.00	4,795.50
Total.....		$ 5,943.06

DISBURSEMENTS:

Nine installments to editors	$ 1,636.80
Editorial assistance	221.00
Purchase of rotographs	139.15	1,996.95

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935. . . . . $ 3,946.11

H. JOINT PHOTOSTAT SERVICE

BALANCE, December 27, 1934. . . . . $ 339 08

RECEIPTS:

Grants from A.C.L.S.	$ 1,500 00
Interest on bank balance	4.07
Refund from Rotograph Fund	160.88	1,664.95
Total.		$ 2,004.03

DISBURSEMENTS:

Purchase	$ 1,623.75
Administration of Fund.	200.00	1,823.75

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 . . . . . $ 180.28

I. COMMITTEE ON RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

RECEIPTS:

Grant from the A.C.L.S. . . . .	$ 200.00
Interest on bank balance	.80
Total. .		$ 200.85

DISBURSEMENTS:

Expenses of committee meeting. . .		131.04
------------------------------------	--	--------

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935. . . . . $ 69.81

J. GENERAL BOOK FUND

RECEIPTS:

Grants from the A.C.L.S. . . . .	$ 4,900.00
Interest on bank balance. .	13.80
Sales of books. . . . .	47.95
Total. . . . .		$ 4,961.75

DISBURSEMENTS:

Cost of producing Monk's "Sublime" . . . . .		913.94
--	--	--------

BALANCE, Under control of Treasurer, December 26, 1935 . . . . . $ 4,047.80

ACCOUNTANTS' CERTIFICATE

Executive Council of The Modern Language Association of America.

We have made an examination of the records of cash receipts and disbursements of your Treasurer in charge of current funds of the Association for the period from December 27, 1934, to December 26, 1935, inclusive, and in our opinion the accompanying Exhibits A to J, inclusive, set forth the Treasurer's cash receipts during the period as recorded, his disbursements during the period, and the cash balances in the respective funds under his control at December 26, 1935.

New York, January 17, 1936

HASKINS & SELLS
Certified Public Accountants

TRUSTEES' REPORT

K. PERMANENT FUND

SECURITIES ON DEPOSIT WITH THE UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

Par Value		Book Value
$ 9,000.	National Dairy Products Corporation 5½% Gold Debenture Bonds, due February 1, 1948, int. payable Feb. 1 and Aug. 1.	$ 8,797.50
8,000.	Western Pacific Railroad Company 5% Gold Bonds, Series A, due March 1, 1946, int. payable March 1 and Sept. 1.	7,976.00
7,000.	Purity Bakeries Corporation Sinking Fund 5% Gold Debenture Bonds, due Jan. 1, 1948, int. payable Jan. 1 and July 1.	6,576.50
4,000.	Brooklyn Manhattan Transit Corporation Sinking Fund 6% Gold Bonds, Series A, due July 1, 1968, int. payable Jan. 1 and July 1.	4,034.75
3,000.	Municipal Service Real Estate Company, Inc., 5½% Bonds, due April 1, 1938, int. payable April 1 and Oct. 1.	3,000.00
3,000.	Shell Union Oil Corporation Sinking Fund 5% Gold Debenture Bonds, due May 1, 1947, int. payable May 1 and Nov. 1.	2,904.75
2,300.	United States of America 1½% Treasury Notes, due March 15, 1940, int. payable March 15 and Sept. 15 (Taken in exchange for United States of America First Liberty Loan 3½% Bonds, due June 15, 1947).	2,291.00
2,000.	Equitable Office Building Corporation 35-Year Debenture Sinking Fund 5% Bonds, due May 1, 1952, int. payable May 1 and Nov. 1.	1,720.00
2,000.	Missouri Pacific Railroad Company General Mortgage 4% Gold Bonds, due March 1, 1975, int. payable March 1 and Sept. 1.	1,575.00
1,400.	Prudence Company 5½% Gold Bonds, due May 1, 1961, int. payable May 1 and Nov. 1.	1,065.00
1,000.	International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation 25-Year 5% Gold Debenture Bond, due Feb. 1, 1955, int. payable Feb. 1 and Aug. 1.	972.50
1,000.	Socony-Vacuum Company Debenture 3½% Bond, due 1950, int. payable April 15 and Oct. 15.	1,037.50
1,000.	Prudence First Mortgage Certificate 5½%, due Oct. 1, 1932, being participation in Bond and Mortgage made by Langham Hotel Corporation, being premises on west side of Central Park West from 73rd Street to West 74th Street, New York, int. payable April 1 and Oct. 1.	1,000.00
1,000.	United States of America Treasury 3½% Bond, due June 15, 1949/46, int. payable June 15 and Dec. 15.	982.50
875.	Realty Associates Securities Corporation guaranteed Sinking Fund 5% Gold Bond, due Oct. 1, 1943, int. payable April 1 and Oct. 1.	842.50
$46,575.		$44,775.50

RECEIPTS:

	Principal	Income
Balance carried forward from 1934 report.....	$ 565.74
From the Treasurer—Life Membership payments.....	492.13
From the United States Trust Co. of New York:
Payment of $250 per $1,000 principal of Prudence Co. 5½% Gold Bonds.....	500.00

Payment of $50 per $1,000 principal of Prudence Co. 5½% Gold Bonds.....	100.00
Income on Investments (1935)—$1,626.45—
National Dairy Products 5½% Bonds.	$ 472.50
Purity Bakeries Corp 5% Debenture Bonds	350.00
Brooklyn Manhattan Transit Corp. 6% Gold Bonds	240.00
Municipal Service Real Estate Co. 5½% Bonds...	165.00
Shell Union Oil Sinking Fund 5% Bonds ..	150.00
Equitable Office Building Debenture 5% Bonds.	100.00
International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. 5% Bond	50.00
United States of America 1½% Treasury Notes. .	49.59
United States of America 3½% Treasury Notes	31.25
Realty Associates Securities 5% Bond..	18.11
1934 income received during 1935—$74
Prudence Company 5½% Bonds	74.00

$1,657.87	$1,700.45
-------------------	-------------------

DISBURSEMENTS:

	Principal	Income
To the Treasurer:
Income on investments....		$1,617.94
To the United States Trust Company of New York:
For the purchase of $1,000 Socony-Vacuum Oil Company, Inc., 3½% Debenture Bond, due Oct. 15, 1950, at 103½ net...	$1,037.50
Accrued interest on above.. . . . .		6.03
For services rendered in safekeeping of securities, collection of income, etc., for Permanent Fund, Monograph Endowment Fund and Research Fund (their charge being 2½% of the income collected)...		76.48
	$1,037.50	$1,700.45
Total Receipts....	$1,657.87	$1,700.45
Total Disbursements.. . . . .	1,037.50	1,700.45
Cash balance on deposit with United States Trust Company of New York.....	$ 620.37

L. MONOGRAPH ENDOWMENT FUND

SECURITIES ON DEPOSIT WITH THE UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

Par Value		Book Value
$11,000.	National Dairy Products Corporation 5½% Gold Debenture Bonds, due Feb. 1, 1948, int. payable Feb. 1 and Aug. 1.	$10,677.50
2,000.	United States of American Treasury 3½% Bonds, due 1947/43, int. payable June 15 and Dec. 15.	1,990.00
2,000.	Electric Power and Light Corporation 5% Debenture Bonds, due Feb. 1, 2030, int. payable Feb. 1 and Aug. 1.	1,855.00
1,400.	Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Company 5½% Mortgage Certificate participating in $45,000 Bond and Mortgage of Wolcott Holding Corp., secured by property 36-06-31st Avenue, Long Island City, N. Y., due Dec. 1, 1932, int. payable June 1 and Dec. 1.	1,400.00

1,000.	Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co. 4½% Mortgage Certificate participating in $100,000 Bond and Mortgage of Krim-Far Realty Corp., secured by property on S. W. corner of Ave. Y and East 19th St., Brooklyn, N. Y., due August 15, 1938, int. payable Feb., May, Aug. and Nov.	1,000.00
1,000.	International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. 25-Year 5% Gold Debenture Bond, due Feb. 1, 1955, int. payable Feb. 1 and Aug. 1.	972.50
1,000.	Purity Bakeries Corp. Sinking Fund 5% Gold Debenture Bond, due Jan. 1, 1948, int. payable Jan. 1 and July 1.	952.50
1,000.	Equitable Office Building Corp. 35-Year Debenture Sinking Fund 5% Bond, due May 1, 1952, int. payable May 1 and Nov. 1.	865.00
700.	Prudence Co. 5½% Gold Bond, due May 1, 1961, int. payable May 1, 1961, int. payable May 1 and Nov. 1.	545.00
600.	Brooklyn Manhattan Transit Corp. Sinking Fund 6% Gold Bonds, Series A, due July 1, 1968, int. payable Jan. 1 and July 1.	596.00
100.	United States of America 1½% Treasury Note, due March 15, 1940, int. payable March 15 and Sept. 15 (Taken in exchange for United States of America First Liberty 3½% Bond, due June 15, 1947).	98.88
$21,800.		$20,952.38

RECEIPTS:

	Principal	Income
Balance carried forward from 1934 report	.. $ 87.33
From the United States Trust Company of New York:
Payment of $250 per $1,000 principal of Prudence Co. 5½% Gold Bond.	250.00
Payment of $50 per $1,000 principal of Prudence Co. 5½% Gold Bond.	50.00
Income on investments—$974.39—
National Dairy Products Corp. 5½% Bonds		$ 577.50
Electric Power and Light 5% Debenture Bonds		100.00
United States of America 3½% Bonds		67.50
Equitable Office Building Corp. Debenture 5% Bond		50.00
International Telephone and Telegraph Corp. 5% Bond		50.00
Purity Bakeries Corp. 5% Gold Debenture Bond		50.00
Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co. 4½% Mortgage of Krim-Far Realty Corp.		41.24
Brooklyn Manhattan Transit 6% Gold Bonds		36.00
United States of America 1½% Treasury Notes		2.15
1934 income received during 1935—$69.48—
Prudence Company 5½% Bonds		37.00
Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co. 4½% Mortgage of Krim-Far Realty Corp.		32.48
1933 income received during 1935—$34.70—
Bond and Mortgage Guarantee Co. 5½% Mortgage of Wolcott Holding Corp.		34.70
	$ 387.33	$1,078.57

DISBURSEMENTS:

	Principal	Income
To the Treasurer, income on investments... ..		$1,078.57
Total Receipts..	$ 387.33	$1,078.57
Total Disbursements		1,078 57
Cash balance on deposit with United States Trust Company of New York.. . . . .	$ 387.33

M. RESEARCH FUND

SECURITIES ON DEPOSITS WITH THE UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK

Par Value		Book Value
$ 4,000.	United States of America Treasury 3½% Bonds, due June 15, 1949/46, int. payable June 15 and Dec. 15.	$ 3,912 50
3,700.	United States of America 1½% Treasury Notes, due March 15, 1940, int. payable March 15 and Sept 15 (Taken in exchange for United States of America First Liberty Loan 3½% Bonds, due June 15, 1947).	3,683.69
2,000.	United States of America Treasury 3% Bonds, due 1951/55, int. payable March 15 and Sept 15	1,934.38
400.	United States of America 2½% Treasury Notes, due March 15, 1960, int. payable March 15 and Sept. 15 (Taken in exchange for United States of America First Liberty Loan 4½% Bonds, due June 15, 1947/32).	413.04
$10,100.		$ 9,943.61

RECEIPTS:

	Principal	Income
From the United States Trust Company of New York:
Income on investments—$276 12—
United States of America 3½% Treasury Bonds.....		$ 125.00
United States of America 1½% Treasury Notes.		79.78
United States of America Treasury 3% Bonds		60 00
United States of America 2½% Treasury Bonds. .		11.34
		$ 276 12

DISBURSEMENTS

To the Treasurer, income on investments.....	$ 275.12
--	-----------

Respectfully submitted,

LEROY E. KIMBALL

GEORGE H. NETTLETON

J. P. WICKERSHAM CRAWFORD

Trustees

ACCOUNTANTS' CERTIFICATE

Executive Council of The Modern Language Association of America

We have made an examination of the accounts of the Trustees in charge of the permanent funds of your Association for the period from December 27, 1934, to December 26, 1935, inclusive, and in our opinion the accompanying Exhibits K to M, inclusive, set forth the Trustees' cash receipts during the period as recorded, their disbursements during the period, and the securities and cash in the respective funds under their control at December 26, 1935.

New York, January 17, 1936

HASKINS & SELLS
Certified Public Accountants

REPORT OF THE AUDITING COMMITTEE

The Auditing Committee met in the office of the Treasurer at New York University on the afternoon of Friday, December 27th, 1935. The accounts and reports of the Treasurer were examined by the Committee and were found correct and so certified. We take pleasure in adding that the work of the Committee was facilitated by the thorough and capable manner in which the accounts of the Treasurer have been kept and presented.

Respectfully submitted by the Committee.

E. H. WRIGHT, Chairman

FELIX WEILL

JOHN C. BLANKENAGEL

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON ROTOGRAPHS OF MANUSCRIPTS AND RARE PRINTED BOOKS

By Professor COLBERT SEARLES Co-Chairman

Fifty-eight Colleges, Public Libraries, and Universities have contributed to the support of the Rotograph Service of the Modern Language Association of America during the past year, 1935.

Amherst College	University of New Mexico
Brooklyn College	College of the City of New York
Brown University	New York Public Library
Bryn Mawr College	New York University
University of Buffalo	Northwestern University
University of California (Berkeley)	University of Notre Dame
University of Chicago	Oberlin College Library
University of Cincinnati	Ohio State University
Columbia University	University of Oklahoma
Connecticut College for Women	University of Pennsylvania
Cornell University	Princeton University
Dartmouth College	University of Rochester
University of Delaware	Rosary College
Duke University	Saint Louis University
Fordham University	Smith College
Gettysburg College	Stanford University
Goucher College	Swarthmore College
Harvard University	Syracuse University
Haverford College	Texas Technological Institute
Henry E. Huntington Library and Art Gallery	University of Texas
Howard University	University of Toronto
Indiana University	University of Vermont
State University of Iowa	University of Virginia
University of Kansas	University of Washington
University of Michigan	Wesleyan University
University of Minnesota	Western Reserve University
University of Montreal	Williams College
Mount Holyoke College	University of Wisconsin
Newberry Library	Yale University

We have been able to grant all well-grounded requests for reproductions during the last three years by drawing, not heavily, but steadily, upon the surplus which was accumulated in more prosperous times. In order to meet the constantly increasing demands made upon us we shall need in the near future to acquire at least twenty or thirty more subscribers to this enterprise.

REPORT ON THE PURCHASE OF ROTOGRAPHS

By Professor NORMAN L. TORREY, Co-Chairman

The reports of this committee have been traditionally sad, which is not entirely explainable by the well-known melancholia of my Co-Chairman. This year we have one unmitigated tragedy to report; namely, the loss of Professor Bullock, who served your committee most competently and tactfully and patiently over a period of years. The crowning achievement of his régime was the publication of the corrected Short Title List, with its two indispensable indices.

Since the printing of that list, twenty-two items have been added; also twelve additional titles, purchased in conjunction with the Mediaeval Academy and the Philological Society, and paid for from funds generously provided by the A.C.L.S. The 4,163 sheets chargeable this year to our own fund shows a considerable falling off from last year's figures. However, the large number of orders outstanding and a recent deluge of applications prove this decrease to be a fluctuation and not a tendency.

Your committee is deeply indebted to the Division of Manuscripts of the Library of Congress: to its chief, Dr. J. F. Jameson, who carefully checks the items and prepares the catalogue cards, and to Mr. J. P. Martin, whose technical skill and knowledge of the markets considerably reduce the cost of reproductions. [Saving is obtained, for example, through the purchasing, wherever possible, of master negatives on films, from which enlargements may be readily made. Material from Spain is thus usually procured on films, and the enlargements made in France where the rate is cheapest.] The Library of Congress purchases for many other organizations and is able to secure rates which I believe no individual society or library could hope to obtain. It is unfortunate, too, but true, that the authority of the Library of Congress is becoming of greater and greater importance in dealing with the libraries of several European governments.

It is therefore natural that your committee should be impressed by the Library of Congress's opposition at the present moment to the suggested substitution of films for rotographs. It is very possible that the film process may solve the problem of preserving newspaper material; but our problem is different. We are endeavoring to collect and preserve for the use of scholars rare manuscripts and books, mostly from European libraries. By no means all European libraries are equipped to supply film reproductions. Also the rag paper on which our reproductions are made is of proved durability. Uniformity and durability are highly desirable qualities in a permanent collection.

Once our rotographs have been obtained, they may be readily and cheaply filmed at any time. Mr. Martin, who is especially interested in the utilization of films, is perfecting a reproducing machine, which he hopes will be of great use to scholars, and which should perhaps be brought here to their attention. Any rotograph in our collection (any book in the Library of Congress, for that matter) may this coming year be reproduced on film for the low price of two cents a frame (normally two pages to a frame). A rotograph of 200 sheets could thus be reproduced, and purchased by the requester for two dollars, hardly more than the cost of shipping and insuring the original. It is expected that individual scholars and libraries will make increasing use of this service.

While there appear then to be great possibilities in making research materials more available through the film process, there would seem to be obvious advantages in continuing the purchase of rotographs for the present, using the film process as a welcome auxiliary. It make take a new generation, too, to entirely "uncondition" the essentially humanistic association of a pipe, a book, and a log fire.

REPORT OF THE DELEGATES TO THE AMERICAN COUNCIL OF LEARNED SOCIETIES

By Professor WILLIAM A. NITZE

In the absence of the senior delegate, Professor Karl Young (Yale), Professor William A. Nitze (Chicago) reported on the American Council of Learned Societies. He dwelt on two aspects of the Council; one of which is the fact that, owing to the recent action of the Rockefeller Board, the Council can no longer look forward to active support from that quarter for encouragement in research. To be sure, the Board is financing the continuance of the offices of the Council during a period of three years. But the money for new research projects will presumably have to come from other sources—a circumstance that places an added responsibility of providing such funds on organizations like the Modern Language Association. Professor Nitze then gave an account of the 1935 meeting at Copenhagen of the Union académique internationale, which he attended (together with Mr. Leland) as a delegate of the A.C.L.S. He described the type of international research that the Union is now engaged in, and also reported the gratifying fact that the German and Austrian academies have been admitted to the Union by a formal vote.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

The fifty-second meeting of the MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA was held, on the invitation of the University of Cincinnati, at Cincinnati, Ohio, Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, December 30 and 31, 1935, and January 1, 1936. The Association headquarters were in the Netherland Plaza Hotel, where all meetings were held except those of Tuesday morning and afternoon. These took place at the University of Cincinnati. Registration cards at headquarters were signed by about 900, though a considerably larger number of members were in attendance. The Local Committee estimated the attendance at not less than 1400. This Committee consisted of Professor Frank W. Chandler, Chairman; Professor Edwin H. Zeydel; Professor Phillip Ogden; Mr. John J. Rowe (for the Directors); and Mr. Joseph S. Graydon (for the Alumni).

(Associated meetings were held by the American Dialect Society, and the American associations of teachers of French, German, and Italian.)

MONDAY MORNING AND AFTERNOON

DISCUSSION GROUP MEETINGS

The morning and afternoon of Monday were devoted to meetings of Discussion Groups, which were held in three divisions, the first beginning at 10:30 A.M., the second at 2:00 P.M., and the third at 4:00 P.M.

FIRST DIVISION: 10:30 A.M. ATTENDANCE: 525.

(General Topics I) Poetic Form and General Aesthetics. Chairman, A. E. ZUCKER, Univ. of North Carolina. Attendance: 147.

Nominating Committee: Professors R. P. Bond (chairman), C. N. Wenger, R. P. McCutcheon.

Papers: 1. "Portraiture of Transmuting Characters in Contemporary Literature." C. N. Wenger, Univ. of Michigan. Discussion led by C. E. W. L. Dahlström, Univ. of Michigan.

2. "Expression and Communication." Frank W. Chandler, Univ. of Cincinnati.

3. "Hobbes's Contribution to the Psychological Approach in Criticism." C. D. Thorpe, Univ. of Michigan. Discussion led by Roger P. McCutcheon, Tulane Univ.

Discussion: Professor Chandler's adverse criticism of the so-called "new" poetry and the theories of which it is an expression stimulated a number of vigorous rejoinders. Among those who took part were W. S. Knickerbocker, Mildred Boie, David Brown, T. C. Pollock, C. W. Thomas, Kate Tibbals. Business: None.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Oscar James Campbell, Columbia Univ.; Secretary, John Crowe Ransom, Vanderbilt Univ.

OSCAR J. CAMPBELL, Secretary

(Comparative Literature IV) The Renaissance. Chairman, J. C. LYONS, Univ. of North Carolina. Attendance: 75.

Nominating Committee: Professors John Van Horne, Jefferson B. Fletcher, Robert V. Merrill.

Papers: 1. "The Cyclic Theory in the Renaissance and After." Jefferson B. Fletcher, Columbia Univ.

2. "Hernán Cortés in the Renaissance." John Van Horne, Univ. of Illinois.

3. "A Bibliography of American Studies on the French Renaissance." Samuel F. Will, Univ. of Illinois.

4. "Elizabethan Memory Systems." Carroll Camden, Jr., Rice Institute.

5. "The Nature of Ferabosco's Service at Elizabeth's Court." Emma Marshall Denkinger, Wesleyan College.

Discussion: (1) by Hardin Craig; (4) by George B. Parks, James Holly Hanford, Don Cameron Allen. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Marcus Selden Goldman, Univ. of Illinois; Secretary, Joseph G. Fucilla, Northwestern Univ.

MARCUS S. GOLDMAN, Secretary

(English II) Middle English Language and Literature. Chairman, A. A. Hill, Univ. of Virginia. Attendance: 68.

Nominating Committee: Professors Howard R. Patch, C. C. Fries, P. F. Baum.

Papers: 1. Report on the Progress of the M. E. Dictionary. Thomas A. Knott, Univ. of Michigan.

2. Report of the Committee on M.E. Texts in need of editing or re-editing. Sir William A. Craigie, Univ. of Chicago.

3. "Some Characteristics of Norfolk Dialect as Illustrated in the Autobiography of Margery Kempe." S. M. Meech, Univ. of Michigan.

4. "A Projected Edition of the Northern Homily Collection." James E. Carver, College of the City of New York.

Discussion: (2) Various methods were suggested for keeping members of the group informed as to activity in editing M.E. texts. It was moved by Professor Knott and approved by the group that the secretary prepare and include in the minutes an abstract of Sir William Craigie's report.

Abstract: New editions of texts already available should be avoided unless needed for class use. Texts now being edited. All MSS of Ancren Riwele; South English Legendary (MS Harleian 2277 and others); Northern Homilies; the early metrical Alexander. Texts of primary importance that need editing:

1. The two earliest MSS of the Wycliffe Bible, MS Bodley 959 and Douce 368, containing the portion of the Old Testament translated by Nicholas of Hereford.

2. Trevisa's translation of Higden's Polychronicon in MS Cotton Tiberius D. VII.

3. The Tollemache MS of Trevisa's translation of Bartholomaeus De proprietatibus rerum.

4. Robert of Brunne's version of Langtoft's Chronicle.

5. The North. version of Maudeville, already edited for Roxburgh Club, but difficult to obtain or use.

6. Various Wycliffe texts showing unusual dialectic peculiarities.

7. Harding's Chronicle, taking account of dialect variants in MSS.

It was suggested by Professor Meech to add the translations by Shirley.

Business: By recommendation of the nominating committee the Group adopted the practice of a two-year tenure for officers with one change each year.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Archibald A. Hill, Univ. of Virginia; Secretary, Henning Larsen, Univ. of Iowa.

HENNING LARSEN, Secretary

(English VIII) Literary Tendencies During the Second Half of the XVIIIth Century. Chairman, FREDERICK H. HEIDBRINK, Northwestern Univ. Attendance: 43.

Nominating Committee: Professors J. D. Ferguson, R. W. Frantz, R. T. Fitzhugh.

Papers: 1. "Some Aspects of the Problem Drama of the Last Quarter of the Eighteenth Century." Stewart S. Morgan, The Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas.

2. "William Godwin's Herald of Literature." A Dayle Wallace, Municipal University of Omaha.

3. "The Irish Background of Goldsmith's Political and Social Philosophy." Robert W. Seitz, Univ. of Buffalo.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Margery Bailey, Stanford Univ.; Secretary, Robert W. Seitz, Univ. of Buffalo.

MARGERY BAILEY, Secretary

(French I) Mediæval Literature and Linguistics. Chairman, RAPHAEL LEVY, Univ. of Baltimore. Attendance: 130.

Nominating Committee: Professors Albert D. Menut, Ephraim Cross, Ed. B. Ham.

Papers: 1. "The Basis for Mediæval Emotionalism." Stephen Hays Bush, State Univ. of Iowa.

2. "Provençal serpanic as used by Daude de Pradas." Alexander H. Schutz, Ohio State Univ.

3. "Martin le Franc and the Ancient Classics." H. R. Brush, Univ. of California at Los Angeles. Read by M. I. Barker of the same university.

4. "Le Recueil Trepperel (pièces inédites du XV<sup>e</sup> siècle)." Louis Cons, Columbia Univ.

5. "An American School of Romance Philology." E. F. Parker, Cambridge, Mass.

Discussion: (1) by H. A. Smith; (2) by C. C. Rice; (3) by A. H. Schutz and C. A. Knudson; (4) by H. A. Smith; (5) by C. A. Knudson, A. H. Schutz, G. M. Fess.

The chairman of the group paid homage to the memory of T. Atkinson Jenkins and of Antoine Thomas. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Urban T. Holmes, Jr., Univ. of North Carolina; Secretary, Earl G. Mellor, Univ. of Virginia.

ROBERT W. LINKER, Secretary

(German II) Early New High German Language and Literature. Chairman, PHILIP M. PALMER, Univ. of Cincinnati. Attendance: 58.

Nominating Committee: Professors Albert W. Aron, Edwin C. Roedder.

Papers: 1. "The Proverbia Communia and the Early German Proverb." Richard Jente, Washington Univ.

2. "The Origins of Modern German Polite Sie-Plural with Particular Reference to the Works of Christian Weise." George J. Metcalf, Univ. of Alabama.

3. "Lohenstein's Treatment of French Classical Topics." Werner P. Friederich, Univ. of North Carolina.

Discussion: (2) by Alfred Senn. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Neil C. Brooks, Univ. of Illinois; Secretary, George J. Metcalf, Univ. of Alabama.

OTTO SPRINGER, Secretary

(Slavonic I) Slavonic Languages and Literatures. Chairman, CLARENCE A. MANNING, Columbia Univ. In the absence of the Chairman, ARTHUR P. COLEMAN of Columbia Univ. presided. Attendance: 4.

As no program had been provided, the period was spent in discussion of the future of this group and in preparation for a meeting on Wednesday, at 9.00 A.M.

ARTHUR P. COLEMAN, Acting Secretary

SECOND DIVISION: 2:00 P.M. ATTENDANCE: 760.

(General Topics II) Critical Study of Romanticism. Chairman, ALICE D. SNYDER, Vassar College. Attendance: average 100.

Nominating Committee: Professors Edwin H. Zeydel (chairman), Clarence D. Thorpe, David H. Carnahan.

Topic of Discussion: "Romantic Contributions to Theories of Genius and Imagination." Professor Fernand Baldensperger gave a most illuminating analysis of the genius conception in the last centuries, especially in France. Miss Margaret L. Wiley from the University of Texas ably presented new material on the subject; Professor Clarence DeWitt Thorpe, University of Michigan, gave a thorough and philosophical explanation of J. A. Richardson's new interpretation of Coleridge's imagination-fancy theory; and Ernst Jockers, University of Pennsylvania, closed the discussion by pointing out the different elements contained in the German romantic conception of genius and by asking an isolated investigation of these elements as a preamble for successful comprehensive study.

Business: The committee appointed to consider the compilation of a bibliography asked that it be allowed to continue its work and bring in its proposals at the 1936 meeting of the Association. Accepted.

The committee on the advisability of merging General Topics II and English IX proposed to continue with the coexistence of the two groups, with separate meetings under the same chairman and work done in more intimate connection. It was resolved not to make any changes for the time being.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Ernst Jockers, Univ. of Pennsylvania; Secretary, Margaret L. Wiley, Univ. of Texas.

ERNST JOCKERS, Secretary

(Comparative Literature V) Anglo-French Literary Relations. Chairman, IRA WADE, Princeton Univ. In the absence of the chairman EDWARD D. SEEGER of The College of Charleston presided. Attendance: c. 50.

Nominating Committee: Professors Frances S. Miller (chairman), Edith Phillips, Franc Thenaud.

Papers: 1. "Two Unknown Eighteenth Century Adaptations from Shakespeare." Alfred Iacuzzi, The College of the City of New York.

2. "A Seventeenth-Century French Source for Hurd's Letters on Chivalry and Romance." Victor M. Hamm, College of Mount St. Joseph-on-the-Ohio.

3. "Buffon et deux académies américaines: rapports personnels de Buffon et de Benjamin Franklin." William F. Falls, Univ. of Maryland.

4. "L'Influence de Benjamin Franklin sur les origines du matérialisme français." Adrienne C. Gobert, Sarah Lawrence College.

5. "The First Continental Criticism of Contemporary American Literature (1824-1830)." Walter Wadepuhl, West Virginia Univ.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Ira Wade, Princeton Univ.; Secretary, Kerby Neill, St. Louis Univ.

KERBY NEILL, Acting Secretary

(Comparative Literature VI) Anglo-German Literary Relations. Chairman, WALTER A. REICHART, Univ. of Michigan. Attendance: 70.

Nominating Committee: Mrs. Bertha Reed Coffman (chairman), and Professors A. W. Aron, A. B. Faust.

Papers: 1. "The Baroque in English and German Literary Criticism." Ben B. Rosenberg, The Johns Hopkins Univ.

2. "Sealsfield as Interpreter of the American Spirit." William P. Dallmann, Washington Univ.

3. "Some Literary Contributions of German Immigrants to America." Carter Davidson, Carleton College.

Discussion: (2) by Professors Faust, Diez, and Heller.

Business: On motion by Professor Otto Heller, seconded by Professor Margareta Hochdoerfer, this group goes on record as favoring the publication of the Anglo-German Bibliography prepared by Professor Henry A. Pochmann and urges that a publisher soon undertake this work.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Walter A. Reichart, Univ. of Michigan; Secretary, Ernest E. Leisy, Southern Methodist Univ.

WILLIS A. CHAMBERLIN, Secretary

(English I) Old English. Chairman CLAUDE M. LOTSPPEICH, Univ. of Cincinnati. Attendance: 45.

Nominating Committee: Professors Thomas A. Knott, Francis P. Magoun, Archibald A. Hill.

Papers: 1. "Lawrence Nowell and his Contributions to Old English Lexicography." Albert H. Marckwardt, Univ. of Michigan.

2. "Old English Elements in Old Norse." Henning Larsen, Univ. of Iowa.

3. "Old English bestiran." Luise Haessler, Brooklyn College.

4. "The Waegmundings—Swedes or Geats?" W. F. Bryan, Northwestern Univ.

Discussion: none.

Business: 1. Upon motion by Professor Charles Fries it was voted that a Committee, to be appointed by the Chair, survey the field of Old English publication proposed and in progress, and report its findings at the next annual meeting. 2. Professor T. A. Knott announced that the project of an Old English Dictionary would continue dormant pending completion of other English dictionaries.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Claude M. Lotspeich, Univ. of Cincinnati; Secretary, Stanley Rypins, Brooklyn College.

STANLEY RYPINS, Secretary

(English VII) Philosophy and Literature of the Classical Period. Chairman, A. W. SECORD, Univ. of Illinois. Attendance: 125.

Nominating Committee: Dean Robert K. Root and Professors R. F. Jones, George Sherburn.

Papers: 1. "Pope and Man." A. E. Case, Northwestern Univ.

2. "Pope and Neo-Classicism." Louis I. Bredvold, Univ. of Michigan.

3. "A Difficulty Stated." R. H. Griffith, Univ. of Texas.

4. "Work Now in Progress on Pope." George Sherburn, Univ. of Chicago.

Discussion: The general basis of discussion was the life and work of Alexander Pope, with special attention to Sherburn's Early Career of Alexander Pope (1934) and Ault's Pope's Own Miscellany (1935). Many members participated.

Business: 1. The chairman reported for Professor F. A. Patterson on the status of the project of the Facsimile Text Society to reprint Defoe's Review. 2. Professor A. E. Case was elected to succeed Dean Root on the Advisory and Nominating Committee. 3. The Committee recommended that Jonathan Swift be the topic of discussion at the next meeting.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Richmond P. Bond, Univ. of North Carolina; Secretary, W. A. Eddy, Dartmouth College.

RICHMOND P. BOND, Secretary

(English X) Victorian Literature. Chairman, HOWARD MUMFORD JONES, Univ. of Michigan. Attendance: 57.

Nominating Committee: Professors Thomas M. Parrott, Samuel C. Chew, Carl J. Weber.

Papers: 1. "The Early Correspondence of Thomas Carlyle and Geraldine Jewsbury, 1840-41." Waldo H. Dunn, Scripps College. Read by Charles Frederick Harold, Michigan State Normal College.

2. A Study of Arnold's 'Empedocles on Etna.' " Howard F. Lowry, College of Wooster.

Discussion: none.

Business: 1. The report of the Bibliography Committee announced the resignation of Miss Helen C. White, and the appointment of Miss Ruth C. Wallerstein, also of the University of Wisconsin. 2. The chairman urged the setting up of a continuing program, to extend over several years. Professor Parrott's motion was passed: That a special committee be appointed by the chairman to study the question of the development of a continuing program. 3. Howard F. Lowry, College of Wooster, was elected member of the Executive Committee, to serve for three years.

Officers for 1936: The present officers were reelected.

WILLIAM D. TEMPLEMAN, Secretary

(French III) French Literature of the XVIth and XVIIth Centuries. Chairman, C. D. ZDANOWICZ, Univ. of Wisconsin. Attendance: 200.

Nominating Committee: Professors A. Schinz, C. F. Zeek, S. F. Will.

Papers: The meeting was devoted to Calvin and to the Académie Française in commemoration of the fourth century of the Institution Chrétienne, and the third centenary of the founding of the Academy.

1. "1535." Marcel J. Brun, Swarthmore College.

2. "Le Classicisme de Calvin." Leon Wencelius, Swarthmore College.

3. "Chapelaine and the Genesis of the French Academy." Colbert Searles, Univ. of Minnesota.

4. "The French Academy of Today as Seen in Its Inner Working in 1934." Fernand Baldensperger, The Sorbonne and Harvard University.

Discussion: (1) and (2) by Louis Cons and Albert Schinz. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, H. Carrington Lancaster, The Johns Hopkins Univ.; Secretary, Lawrence M. Riddle, Univ. of Southern California.

JOSEPHINE DE BOER, Secretary

(Spanish I) Spanish Language and Mediæval Literature. Chairman, A. R. NYKL, Univ. of Chicago. In the absence of the chairman, the secretary R. S. BOGGS of the Univ. of North Carolina presided, and J. G. FUCILLA of Northwestern Univ. acted as Secretary. Attendance: about 70.

Nominating Committee: Professors Hayward Keniston (chairman), Edwin B. Williams.

Papers: 1. "The Etymology of halagar, nesga, and socarrar." C. C. Rice, Catawba College.

2. "An Old French Source of the General Estoria of Alfonso X." Lawrence W. Kiddle, Univ. of New Mexico.

3. Report of the committee on an Old Spanish Dictionary. Hayward Keniston, Univ. of Chicago, Chairman.

Discussion: (2) by Professors Parker and C. P. Wagner.

Business: The following report was adopted:

The Committee recommends that:

1. The Group approve in principle of Solalinde's project and lend its official support to any applications for subsidies to defray the cost of publication.

2. The Group approve in principle Boggs' project for the publication of a manual dictionary of Old Spanish.

3. The Group authorize the appointment of a Standing Committee on Old Spanish Lexicography, to consist of five members, named by the Chairman of the Group. This Standing Committee should, in particular, undertake (a) to determine the scope and method of the manual dictionary of Old Spanish, proposed by Boggs; (b) to standardize the technique of preparing special vocabularies in Old Spanish; (c) to serve as a clearing house for all lexicographical work in Old Spanish which is being carried on in the United States and Canada.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, C. P. Wagner (for 2 years), Univ. of Michigan; Secretary, R. S. Boggs, Univ. of North Carolina.

R. S. BOGGS, Secretary

(German I) Historical Grammar. Chairman, HENRY W. NORDMEYER, Univ. of Michigan. Attendance: 70.

Nominating Committee: Professors D. B. Shumway, W. F. Twaddell.

Papers: 1. "Zeitstufe, Modi und Aktionsart in der platt-deutschen Mundart zu Williamsburg, Iowa." Alfred P. Kehlenbeck, Iowa State College.

2. "Modern Enclitics." B. Q. Morgan, Stanford Univ.

3. "Lautverschiebungserklärungen." George Nordmeyer, West Virginia Univ.

4. "Von den Aktionsarten des Verbums." Karl Reuning, Swarthmore College.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Eduard Prokosch, Yale Univ.; Secretary, A. J. F. Zieglschmid, Northwestern Univ.

W. F. TWADDELL, Acting Secretary

THIRD DIVISION: 4:00 P.M. ATTENDANCE: 866.

(General Topics IV) Practical Phonetics. Chairman, MILES L. HANLEY, Univ. of Wisconsin. Attendance: about 50.

Nominating Committee: Professors Amos R. Morris (chairman), J. S. Kenyon, C. E. Parmenter.

Papers: 1. "The Diphthong au in Virginia." Guy S. Lowman, Jr., The Linguistic Atlas.

2. "The Program of the Prague Phonologists." R. M. S. Hefner, Harvard Univ
Discussion led by W. F. Twaddell, Univ. of Wisconsin.

Discussion: (1) by Messrs. Dantzler, Morris, Kenyon, Reuning; (2) by Messrs. Hill, Hefner, Kurath, Hanley, Fries, Joos, Bloch. (3) Discussion of the topic "What Should be the Content of a Course in Phonetics?"

Business: The chairman was authorized by vote of the group to appoint a committee to investigate the content of courses now offered at various colleges and universities under the name of phonetics, and to submit a report of their findings before the next meeting of the Association.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Guy S. Lowman, Jr., The Linguistic Atlas; Secretary, R. M. S. Hefner, Harvard Univ.

BERNARD BLOCH, Secretary

(English V) Shakespere. Chairman, ALWIN THALER, Univ. of Tennessee. Att.: 200.

Nominating Committee: Professors R. A. Law, C. F. Tucker Brooke, T. W. Baldwin.

Papers: 1. "Shakspere and Gloucestershire." E. P. Kuhl, Univ. of Iowa.

2. "Hamlet: Dramatist." John F. Ross, Univ. of California.

3. "Plot Patterns in Elizabethan Drama." Hardin Craig, Stanford Univ.

4. "What Can We Believe Concerning the Sonnets?" C. F. Tucker Brooke, Yale Univ.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Hardin Craig, Stanford Univ.; Secretary, Madeleine Doran, Univ. of Wisconsin.

ATCHESON L. HENCH, Acting Secretary

(English VI) The Seventeenth Century. Chairman, R. F. JONES, Washington Univ. Attendance: 50.

Nominating Committee: Professors George B. Parks, Louis I. Bredvold, James Holly Hanford.

Papers: 1. "Milton's 'Advocatum nescio quem'." Samuel Lee Wolff, Columbia Univ.

2. "Milton's Use of Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century Maps." George W. Whiting, Rice Institute.

3. "Paradise Lost and the New Astronomy." Grant McColley, Washington, D.C.

4. "Remarks on the Plot of Samson Agonistes." William R. Parker, Ohio State Univ.

5. "The Rhetoric of Donne's Sermons." Herbert H. Umbach, Valparaiso Univ.

Discussion: (1) by J. H. Hanford and Don M. Wolfe. Discussion of William Haller's Tracts on Liberty in the Puritan Revolution, led by James Holly Hanford, Western Reserve University.

Business: The members of the nominating committee were appointed to act as a committee on the program for next year together with the officers.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, William Haller, Columbia Univ.; Secretary, Hoyt H. Hudson, Princeton Univ.

WILLIAM HALLER, Secretary

(English XI) Contemporary Literature. Chairman. BENNETT WEAVER, Univ. of Michigan. Attendance: over 200

Nominating Committee: Professors Harlan Hatcher, Carter Davidson, Donald Davidson.

Papers: 1. "Literature: Living and Dead." John C. Ransom, Vanderbilt Univ.

2. "Scholarly Works in the Field of Contemporary Literature." Louis P. Waldo, Michigan State College.

3. "Creative Writing and Its Teachers in the Colleges: A Discussion." Bernard DeVoto, Harvard Univ.

Discussion: spontaneous and lively. Most of it centered around the question of the nature of scholarship and its relation to the contemporary field.

Business: The 1936 chairman was authorized to appoint a new member to the executive committee of the group.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, John T. Frederick, Northwestern Univ.; Secretary, Donald Davidson, Vanderbilt Univ.

HARLAN HATCHER, Acting Secretary

(French VI) French Literature of the XIXth and XXth Centuries. Chairman, ALBERT SCHINZ, Univ. of Pennsylvania. Attendance: about 110.

Nominating Committee: Dean Eunice Morgan Schenck, and Professors E. Preston Dargan, Harry Kurz.

Papers: 1. "The Vogue of Victor Hugo in the United States (1830-1900)." Emile Malakis, Univ. of Pennsylvania.

2. "V. Hugo and Ch. Baudelaire." Robert E. Turner, College of the City of New York.

3. "The Career of Barrès with the Action-Française." W. M. Frohock, Brown Univ.

4. "Le Nationalisme chez Barrès et Maurras." Alphonse V. Roche, Univ. of Illinois.

5. "A Minimum List of Critical Works on Proust." David C. Cabeen, Vanderbilt Univ.

6. "Vildrac, Outstanding Post-War Dramatist." Clifford H. Bissell, Univ. of California.

7. "Remarques sur le cimetière marin de Paul Valéry," Madelaine Soubeiran, Bryn Mawr College.

Discussion: On Victor Hugo's popularity and influence in New Orleans by C. I. Silin, Tulane University. (6) by Marc Denking, Hugh Smith, Helene Harvitt.

Business: Recommendation that next year or the year after French VI should be split into two groups—19th Century and 20th Century (if possible).

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Louis Cons, Columbia Univ.; Secretary, Armand Begue, Columbia Univ.

HELENE HARVITT, Secretary

(Spanish II) Spanish Literature of the Renaissance and Golden Age. Chairman, C. E. ANIBAL, Ohio State Univ. Attendance: 84.

Nominating Committee: Professors Edwin B. Place, J. P. W. Crawford, W. S. Hendrix.

Papers: 1. "Lope de Vega's Conception of the New World." Raymond L. Grismer, Univ. of Minnesota.

2. "The Pizarro Trilogy of Tirso de Molina." Otis H. Green, Univ. of Pennsylvania.

3. "Calderón's Amor, honor y poder, a reworked Lope play." Harry C. Heaton, New York Univ.

4. "The sovereign in the comedias of Calderón de la Barca." José M. de Osma, Univ. of Kansas.

Discussion: (1) by E. Neale-Silva, F. Callcott; (2) E. Neale-Silva, C. E. Anibal, H. C. Heaton. Business: None.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Otis H. Green (also for 1937), Univ. of Pennsylvania; Secretary, E. Herman Hespelt, New York Univ.

E. HERMAN HESPELT, Secretary

(German IV) German Literature of the XIXth Century. Chairman, JOHN C. BLANKENAGEL, Wesleyan Univ. Attendance: 120.

Nominating Committee: Professors M. Blakemore Evans, F. W. J. Heuser, Friedrich Bruns.

Papers: 1. "On the Advantage of a Chronological Study of Lyric Poetry, with Illustrations from Buch der Lieder." T. M. Campbell, Northwestern Univ.

2. "The Monologue as Monodrama in Grillparzer's Hellenic Dramas." T. C. Dunham, Ohio Wesleyan Univ.

3. "The Solution of the Problem in Kleist's Prinz Friedrich von Homburg." Walter Silz, Harvard Univ.

4. "Hettner's Influence on Ibsen's Brand." A. E. Zucker, Univ. of North Carolina.
Discussion: (1) by Otto Heller; (2) by Edwin Zeydel, Martin Schutze, Friedrich Bruns, Max Diez, Ernst Feise, (3) by Friedrich Bruns. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, A. E. Zucker, Univ. of North Carolina; Secretary, Gilbert J. Jordan, Southern Methodist Univ.

MIMI I. JEHL, Secretary

(Scandinavian I) Scandinavian Language and Literature. Chairman, JESS H. JACK-SON, College of William and Mary. Attendance: 15.

Nominating Committee: none.

Papers: 1. "Situation in Strindberg's Damascus Trilogy." Carl E. W. L. Dahlström, Univ. of Michigan.

2. "Style of the Islandinga Sagas." Otto Springer, Wheaton College.

3. "Verbal Litotes in Old Norse." Lee M. Hollander, Univ. of Texas. Abstract of this paper was read by the chairman.

Discussion: (1) by Jess H. Jackson, Margaret Schlauch; (2) by Jess H. Jackson, Margaret Schlauch, Carl E. W. Dahlström, Einar Haugen. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Jess H. Jackson, College of William and Mary; Secretary, Otto Springer, Wheaton College, Norton, Mass.

MARGARET SCHLAUCH, OTTO SPRINGER, Acting Secretaries

Celtic Languages and Literatures. Chairman, F. N. ROBINSON, Harvard Univ.

Attendance: 37.

Nominating Committee: none. Business: none.

Papers: 1. "The Irish Verb For-innet." Vernam Hull, Univ. of Michigan.

2. "The Penalty of Setting Adrift in Celtic Law and Germanic Saga." J. R.
Reinhard, Univ. of Michigan.

3. "Some Welsh Material in the Historia Regum Britanniae." Arthur E. Hutson,
Univ. of California.

4. "The Irish Smith Turbe in the Grail Romances." A. C. L. Brown, Northwestern
Univ.

5. "Irish Poetry in English from the Conquest to the Seventeenth Century."
Russell K. Alspach, Univ. of Pennsylvania.

Discussion: at an ensuing group dinner.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Arthur C. L. Brown, Northwestern Univ.; Secretary, Roland M. Smith, Wesleyan Univ.

ROLAND M. SMITH, Secretary

MONDAY EVENING

SUBSCRIPTION DINNER AND ADDRESSES

A subscription dinner arranged by the Local Committee was held in the Hall of Mirrors of the Netherland Plaza Hotel on Monday evening at 7:30 P.M. Attendance
486. For the addresses, which followed immediately in the same room, Mr. JOSEPH
S. GRAYDON, acted as toastmaster.

PROGRAM

1. Welcome to the University President RAYMOND WAITERS
2. Presidential Address: "Words," Professor COLBERT SEARLES, University of Minnesota
3. "The Doctor Looks at Life," Dr. MARTIN H. FISCHER, University of Cincinnati
4. "Linguistic Modernism," The Hon. RUSSELL WILSON, Mayor of Cincinnati.
5. Songs by the Diners

TUESDAY MORNING

DEPARTMENTAL SECTION MEETINGS

For the Tuesday morning session the Association met at 9:30 A.M. at the University of Cincinnati in three sections devoted respectively to English, Romance, and Germanic Philology.

ENGLISH SECTION

Chairman, Professor RAYMOND D. HAVENS of The Johns Hopkins Univ. Att.. 425.

Nominating Committee: Professor Frank Chandler, Margery Bailey, J. S. P. Tatlock (chairman).

Papers: 1. "Wordsworth's Concept of the Spirit of Nature." By Professor JOSEPH WARREN BEACH of the Univ. of Minnesota. Discussed by NEWTON P. STALLKNECHT and R. D. HAVENS.

2. "American Literature and American Scholarship." By Professor HOWARD MUMFORD JONES of the Univ. of Michigan. Discussed by A. H. QUINN (by letter), Marjorie Nicolson, E. H. Wright.

3. "Tiedling's Amelia: An Interpretation." By Professor GEORGE W. SHERBURN of the Univ. of Chicago. Discussed by ERNEST BERNBAUM.

4. "Browning's Early Debt to Elizabeth Barrett." By Professor EDWARD D. SNYDER of Haverford College. Discussed by WILLIAM C. DEVANE and F. N. RAYMOND.

During the course of the meeting the Secretary of the Association presented the official record of the Association with respect to American Literature; and Professor Fries reported on the present status of the Early Modern English Dictionary.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Dr. Joseph Q. Adams, * Folger Shakespeare Library; Secretary, Professor W. G. Rice, Univ. of Michigan. Having in mind the possibility that the Section might be divided next year, the Nominating Committee also presented the names of Professor T. M. Parrott, Vanderbilt Univ. for Chairman, and Dr. W. L. Ustick, San Marino, Calif., for Secretary of the second half of the Section; and they were unanimously elected.

FRANKLYN B. SNYDER, Secretary

ROMANCE SECTION

Chairman, Professor HUGO P. THIEME of the Univ. of Michigan. Attendance: 250.

Nominating Committee: Professors H. Keniston (chairman), K. McKenzie, U. T. Holmes.

Papers: "Four Representative Critics":

5. "Gustave Larson." By Professor ANDRE MORIZE of Harvard Univ. Read by Professor STEPHEN A. FREEMAN.

* Declined to Serve

6. "Benedetto Croce." By Professor RUDOLPH ALTROCCHI, Univ. of California.
7. "Remy de Gourmont." By Professor MARC DENKINGER, Univ. of Michigan.
8. "Ortega y Gasset." By Professor AUGUSTO CENTENO of Princeton Univ.

Discussion: (5) Reminiscences and comment by Professors Jamieson, Schinz, Baldensperger, Thieme; (7) reminiscences and comment by Professor Thieme.

Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Professor Urban T. Holmes, Univ. of North Carolina; Secretary, Professor F. Courtney Tarr, Princeton Univ.

F. COURTNEY TARR, Secretary

GERMANIC SECTION

Chairman, Professor BERT J. VOS of Indiana Univ. Attendance: about 175.

Nominating Committee: Professors E. P. Appelt, Richard Jente, Walter Wadeuhl.

Papers: 9. "Ein dichterisches Selbstbekenntnis Lessings." By Professor MARTIN SOMMERFELD of New York Univ. Read in his absence by Professor JOHN WHYTE.

10. "Friedrich von Spee: A New Evaluation." By Professor GUSTAVE O. ARLT of the Univ. of California at Los Angeles.

11. "Herders Begriff der Humanitat." By Professor RUDOLF SYRING of the Western College for Women.

12. "The Theory of Tragedy Since Schiller." by Dr. J. B. FULLER of Chicago.

13. "A Biogram of German Literature." By Professor ERNST FEISE of The Johns Hopkins Univ.

Discussion: (10) by Professors Hohlfeld, Schütze, Fife, Feise, Bruns; (11) by Professors Baginsky, Schutze, Jockers.

Business: Professor Hohlfeld announced that the word list to Goethe's Faust, in preparation at the University of Wisconsin, had been completed, a prospectus for publication was distributed. An announcement by Professor P. W. Long was read regarding the increase of papers in Germanic published in the PMLA. Ten German papers, totalling 306 printed pages (25 per cent of the whole), will be published in 1936.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Professor John C. Blankenagel, Wesleyan Univ.; Secretary, Professor Lilian L. Stroebe, Vassar College.

HAROLD S. JANTZ, Secretary

Following these meetings the members of the Association, and attending members of their families, were entertained by the University of Cincinnati at 1:00 P.M. with a buffet luncheon in the Commons, McMicken Hall. Attendance: 975.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON

GENERAL MEETING OF THE ASSOCIATION

A general meeting of the Association was held in the Wilson Auditorium of the University of Cincinnati at 2:00 P.M.

Business Meeting (one hour):

The meeting was called to order by President COLBERT SEARLES.

1. The reports (printed on pages 1328-40) of the Secretary, Treasurer, Trustees, and Auditing Committees were read and accepted.

2. The reports (printed on pages 1340-42) of the Co-Chairmen of the Rotograph Committee and of the Delegates to the American Council of Learned Societies were read and approved.

3. The name of Professor MAX FÖRSTER was presented by the Secretary, as the Executive Council's nominee to our roll of Honorary Members, and he was duly elected an honorary member of the Modern Language Association.

4. The results of the ballot election were announced by the Secretary. The number of ballots cast was 551 (6 defective). The three members chosen in the order of the number of ballots they received were:

Frank W. Chandler, University of Cincinnati
George R. Coffman, University of North Carolina
T. Moody Campbell, Northwestern University

5. The Committee on Nominations, consisting of Professors E. C. Armstrong, A. R. Hohlfeld, A. C. Baugh, R. A. Law, and W. M. Hart, presented their report as follows:

For President: Professor CARLETON BROWN of New York University.

For Vice-Presidents. Professois EDUARD PROKOSCH of Yale University, and Professor SYLVANUS GRISWOLD MORLEY of the University of California.

It was Voted: that a ballot of the Association be cast for the officers as named; and they were declared elected.

6. The Committee on Resolutions, consisting of Professors Orie W. Long, Gordon Hall Gerould, and John Van Horne, then presented the following resolutions, which were successively adopted by vote of the Association.

1. The Modern Language Association of America regrets the lack of opportunity afforded young men and women with university training to pursue careers as teachers in the high schools of the country. Properly organized training, which coordinates the student's knowledge of his field with mastery of the technique of presentation, furnishes better preparation for teaching than work directed by schools and departments of Education. The Association, as an organized body of teachers, protests that, since teaching is an art and not a science, and since practical experience is preferable to theory, the training of teachers should be in the hands of those who combine mastery of subject and method.

2. The Modern Language Association of America wishes to express to President Raymond Walters and his colleagues of the Faculty of the University of Cincinnati, to the Local Committee, to the Queen City Club, and to all those who have contributed to the success of the meeting, its deep appreciation of their gracious hospitality.

7. The following resolution was offered from the floor by Professor George Havens and was adopted by vote of the Association:

Moved: That the Program Committee request Chairmen of Discussion Groups to limit the number of papers accepted in each group to three, or at the most four, papers of such length that they will not take up more than half of the total allotted time, the rest being given to discussion;

That not more than four papers be announced in the printed program for each group;

And that abstracts or complete copies of each paper be sent in advance to a member or members competent to lead the discussion.

(This is to be combined with provisions already in force, such as the one providing that copies of the papers be submitted to the Chairmen for consideration not later than October 31, as reiterated by Professor Lancaster.)

8. The following resolution was offered from the floor by Professor O. J. Campbell:

Resolved: That the Executive Council be requested to appoint a committee of seven, broadly representative of all the interests of this Association, to study the purposes and objectives of scholarship in this Association, and the relation of the Modern Language Association, as reflected in its publications and programs, to the trends of scholarship and culture in this country; and that the committee be directed to make a preliminary report to the Executive Council not later than September 1, 1936, a syllabus of this report to be printed and distributed to the members of the Association before the formal report is presented at its next general meeting.

After brief discussion it was Voted: that this resolution be referred to the Executive Council for action.

Addresses by invitation (two hours):

14. "A Report on the Historical Dictionary of American English." By Sir WILLIAM A. CRAIGIE of the University of Chicago.

15. "The Amsterdam Conference on Periods of Literary History." By Professor FERNAND BALDENSPERGER of The Sorbonne and Harvard University.

16. "The Linguistic Atlas of the United States and Canada." By Professor HANS KURATH of Brown University.

TUESDAY EVENING

On Tuesday evening the members of the Association, and attending members of their families, were entertained with a buffet supper at the Queen City Club at 7:30 P.M. at the invitation of Messrs. Joseph S. Graydon, John J. Rowe, and other Cincinnati friends of the Association. Following this supper an entertainment arranged by the Local Committee was presented in the Hall of the Western and Southern Life Insurance Company.

Attendance: about 900.

Program for New Year's Eve

Songs. Members of the University Glee Club

Salutation. Frank W. Chandler

A Saber Duel. Arranged by Chesley M. Hutchings

Songs. Members of the University Glee Club

Doggerelliana. Rudolph Altrochi

English Broadside Ballads and Their Tunes. Roy Lamson, Jr. Accompanied by R. G. Noyes

Stephen C. Foster in Cincinnati. Raymond Walters

Foster Songs. James Moore

Songs from the Stage Version of Milton's "Comus," as adapted by Dr. John Dalton for Drury Lane Theater in 1738; the music composed by Dr. T. A. Arne, 1710-78. Arranged, Scored, and Introduced by Edwin S. Lindsey; Sung and played by students of The Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

Scenes from "Comus" with the Original Incidental Songs by Henry Lawes, 1595-1662 and Instrumental Numbers arranged by Sir Frederick Bridge from the works of William Lawes, 1582-1645; John Bull, 1563-1628; William Byrd, 1538-1623. Presented through the courtesy of Edgar Friedlander by members of the Drama and Music departments of The Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

WEDNESDAY MORNING

DISCUSSION GROUP MEETINGS

The morning of Wednesday was devoted to meetings of Discussion Groups, which were held in two divisions, the first beginning at 9:00 A.M., and the second at 11:00 A.M.

FIRST DIVISION: 9:00 A.M. ATTENDANCE: 470.

(General Topics V) Experimental Phonetics. Chairman, S. N. TREVIÑO, Univ. of Chicago. Attendance: 45.

Nominating Committee: Professors Agnes Blanc, Miles Hanley, A. R. Morris (chairman).

Papers: 1. "Eduard Sievers' and E. W. Scripture's Analysis of Poetry." Erich Funke, State Univ. of Iowa.

2. "A Comparative Study of the Pronunciation of Anglicisms in French and in the American-French of Hartford, Conn." Edward Pousland, Trinity College.

3. "X-Ray Study of Pharyngeal Changes in Consonant Articulations." Francis J. Carmody, Univ. of California.

4. "A Further Step Towards a New Theory of Vowel Formation." Gaston L. Malécot, New York City.

5. "Functional Nasal Vowels in Dialectical American English." Leon P. Smith, Jr., Washington and Lee Univ.

Discussion: by Miles L. Hanley, C. E. Parmenter, J. S. Kenyon, A. A. Hill, and others.

Business: The group accepted a report: (a) That officers be chosen for term of two years, to be elected alternately to secure continuity. (b) That the group urge upon the officers the desirability of close cooperation in planning the program (c) That the secretary render a prompt report of this meeting.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, S. N. Treviño, Univ. of Chicago; Secretary, W. L. Schramm, Univ. of Iowa.

FRANCIS J. CARMODY, Acting Secretary

(Comparative Literature I) Prose Fiction. Chairman, ALPHEUS SMITH, Northwestern Univ. Attendance: 30.

Nominating Committee: Professors Alan D. McKillop (chairman), Frederic T. Blanchard, A. M. Turner.

The meeting was devoted to informal discussion of recent scholarship in Prose Fiction, and informal reports on research in progress. Special attention was paid to recent studies in German, Romance, and American prose fiction. Among those participating were: Ernest Bernbaum, H. G. Dirks, Lennox Grey, R. D. Havens, Eugene Joliat, Charles Knudson, G. H. Orians, and R. W. Seitz.

Business: The chairman reported progress on his bibliography of prose fiction in English, 1475-1740.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Arthur H. Quinn, Univ. of Pennsylvania [declined to serve]; Secretary, Helen Sard Hughes, Wellesley College.

ARTHUR SECORD, Acting Secretary

(Comparative Literature II) Popular Literature. Chairman, RALPH S. BOGGS, Univ. of North Carolina.
Attendance: about 60.

Nominating Committee: Professors Martha Beckwith, Stith Thompson, Louise Pound.

Papers: 1. "Popular French Literature of the Near East, Syrian and Lebanese Folklore in Modern French Verse and Prose." Basile G. D'Oukail, Fordham Univ.

2. "Wesselski's Recent Attacks upon the Finnish School." Ernst A. Philippon, Univ. of Michigan.

3. "Folksongs of Southern Indiana." Paul G. Brewster, Oakland City, Ind.

Discussion: none.

Business: 1. Report on the Conference for the Study of the Folktale, at Lund, Sweden, on Nov. 6, 1935, by Stith Thompson, Indiana Univ. 2. Report of the Group's Folksong Committee by its Chairman, Reed Smith, Univ. of South Carolina.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Arthur Kyle Davis, Univ. of Virginia; Secretary, Edwin C. Kirkland, Univ. of Tennessee.

EDWIN C. KIRKLAND, Secretary

(English III) Chaucer. Chairman, WILLIAM F. BRYAN, Northwestern Univ. Att.: 56.

Nominating Committee: Professors Carleton Brown, Robert K. Root, H. S. V. Jones.

Papers: 1. "The Present State of the Work on the Text of the Canterbury Tales, and the Prospect of its Early Completion." J. M. Manly, University of Chicago. Read by W. F. Bryan, Northwestern Univ.

2. "Chaucer and an Italian Contemporary Bearing on the Framework of the Canterbury Tales and the Physician's Tale." E. P. Kuhl, Univ. of Iowa.

3. "The Place of the Franklin's Tale in the Chaucer Chronology." L. F. Hawkins, New York Univ.

4. "Analogues to the Pardoner's Gaudes." C. P. Wagner, Univ. of Michigan.

5. "The Present Status of the New Edition of the Originals and Analogues of the Canterbury Tales." W. F. Bryan, Northwestern Univ.

Discussion: (3) by T. A. Knott, R. K. Root. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Walter Clyde Curry, Vanderbilt Univ.; Secretary, Haldeen Braddy, Sul Ross State Teachers College.

SANFORD B. MEECH, Secretary

(English IV) The Period of Spenser. Chairman, C. BOWIE MILLICAN, New York Univ. Attendance: 72.

Nominating Committee: Professors Hoyt H. Hundson (chairman), C. F. Tucker Brooke, Percy W. Long.

Papers: 1. "Hakluyt's Authors." George B. Parks, Washington Univ.

2. "Spenser's Rosalind: a Conjecture." Theodore H. Banks, Wesleyan Univ.

3. "On the Axiochus Translated by 'Edw.' Spenser." Constance Miriam Syford, Yale Univ.

4. "Shakspeare and Spenser: the Epithalamion." Alwin Thaler, Univ. of Tennessee.

5. "Elizabethan Poets in France and Italy." Mark Eccles, Univ. of Wisconsin.

6. "Sir John Harington's Lost Treatise on Vergil, Recovered." Marcus S. Goldman, Univ. of Illinois.

Discussion: (2) by Richard Feuerstein; (3) by Frederick Hard, (4) by C. G. Osgood.

Business: 1. That ensuing programs may be more definitely unified, the Group, on motion of Hoyt H. Hudson, elected an Advisory Committee of three, one to retire each year. 2. On motion of Ray L. Heffner the Group again endorsed Miss Dorothy F. Atkinson's MS Edmund Spenser: A Bibliographical Guide, 1923-1934, and recommended that the Association be requested to sponsor its publication.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Jefferson B. Fletcher, Columbia Univ; Secretary, Frederick M. Padelford, Univ. of Washington.

RAYMOND JENKINS, Secretary

(French V) French Literature of the XVIIIth Century. Chairman, EDITH PHILIPS, Swarthmore College. Attendance: 56.

Nominating Committee: Professor Albert Schinz, Norman L. Torrey, William F. Falls.

Papers: 1. "De Malesherbes et la censure du Traité de l'Esprit." Albert Bachman, Gettysburg College.

2. "Une Intégration des idées de Vauvenargues." Fernand Vial, Fordham Univ.

3. "Notes on Montesquieu's Reading with Reference to the Lettres Persanes." Alessandro Crisafulli, Columbus, Ohio.

4. "Some Comments of Voltaire on Montesquieu's Theories of Roman Greatness." E. H. Price, Ohio State Univ.

5. "Voltaire and Gracián; Candide and El Criticon." Dorothy McGhee, Hamline Univ.

Discussion: (1) by Albert Schinz, (2) by Louis Cons; (4) by George Havens and Albert Shinz. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Harry Kurz, Univ. of Nebraska; Secretary, William F. Falls, Univ. of Maryland.

HARRY KURZ, Acting Secretary

(Spanish III) Modern Spanish and Spanish-American Literature. Chairman, NICHOLSON B. ADAMS, Univ. of North Carolina. Attendance: 52.

Nominating Committee: Professors E. B. Price, R. H. Williams, S. A. Stoudemire.

Papers: 1. "The Influence of Whitman in Spanish America." J. E. Englekirk, Univ. of New Mexico.

2. "The Degeneration of Patricio Riguelta." James O. Swain, Mich. State College.

3. "Florencio Sánchez's Debt to Eugène Brieux." Karl E. Shedd, Mary Baldwin College.

4. "The Development of the Character of the Raisonneur in the Social Drama of Spain from Tamayo to Linares Rivas." C. B. Qualia, Texas Technological College.

5. "New Light on An Important Episode in Larra's Life." F. Courtney Tarr, Princeton Univ.

Discussion: (4) by L. E. Brett. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, H. Chonon Berkowitz, Univ. of Wisconsin (two years), Secretary, J. R. Spell, Univ. of Texas.

J. R. SPELL, Secretary

(German V) Modern German Literature. Chairman, OTTO HELLER, Washington Univ.

In the absence of the chairman, the Secretary, WALTER WADEPUHL, presided. LUISE HAESSLER, Brooklyn College, acted as Secretary. Attendance: 90.

Nominating Committee: none.

Papers: 1. "Ostpreussen im Werke Agnes Miegels." E. P. Appelt, Univ. of Rochester.

2. "Zur geistesgeschichtlichen Deutung des Fruhnaturalismus." William R. Gaede, Swarthmore College.

3. "Ausseres und Inneres in Stehrs Geigenmacher." Erich P. Hofacker, Washington Univ.

4. "Das Ethos deutscher Krigsromane." Wilhelm K. Pfeiler, Univ. of Nebraska.

5. "Thomas Mann's Concept of Irony." Helmut Rehder, Univ. of Missouri.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, W. R. Gaede, Swarthmore College; Secretary, Ruth Hofrichter, Vassar College.

WALTER WADEPUHL, Acting Chairman

(Slavonic I) Slavonic Languages and Literatures. (Second Meeting.) Attendance: 9.

The following papers were read and discussed:

1. "The Russian Theatre of the Revolution." Nikander Strelsky, Vassar College.

2. "Notes on Translating from Yugoslav Languages." Anthony Klančar, The Slovene National Library, Cleveland, Ohio.

3. "The Poetry of Kazimiera Iłłkiewicz." Arthur P. Coleman, Columbia Univ.

Business: A proposal to change the name of the group to East European Languages and Literatures was rejected.

Officers for 1936. The following were elected: Chairman, Alfred Senn, Univ. of Wisconsin; Secretary, Arthur P. Coleman, Columbia Univ. (for 1936 and 1937).

ARTHUR P. COLEMAN, Acting Secretary

SECOND DIVISION: 11:00 A.M. ATTENDANCE: 573.

(Comparative Literature III) Arthurian Romances. Chairman, ROLAND M. SMITH, Wesleyan Univ. Attendance: 90.

Nominating Committee: Professors A. C. Baugh (chairman), Wm. A. Nitze, John W. Spargo.

Papers: 1. "An Early Welsh Commentary on the Prophecy of Merlin." John J. Parry, Univ. of Illinois. Discussed by J. S. P. Tatlock and A. C. L. Brown.

2. "Is the Green Knight a Vegetation Myth?" William A. Nitze, Univ. of Chicago. Discussed by R. M. Smith, J. S. P. Tatlock, A. C. L. Brown, and G. H. Gerould.

3. "Further Evidence of Pictish Material in the Arthurian Romances." Roland M. Smith, Wesleyan Univ. Discussed by W. A. Nitze, M. Schlauch, J. S. P. Tatlock, M. S. Goldman, and J. J. Parry.

Discussion: of current bibliography in progress. (1) Additional copies of the bibliography for 1935 may be secured from either the chairman or the secretary by sending 25¢ (2) Professor Stith Thompson reported that one of his students was working on a "Motiv-Index to Malory."

Business: 1 Professor A. C. L. Brown reported that while awaiting arrangements for publication, Pennington is making another revision of his translation of the 1536 Prose Perceval. 2. Professor Baugh asked the members of the group to send to the secretary, for transmission to the nominating committee, suggestions to guide them in making nominations for 1937.

Officers for 1936: the present officers were reelected.

JOHN J. PARRY, Secretary

(English IX) Wordsworth and His Contemporaries Chairman, WALTER GRAHAM, Univ. of Illinois Attendance: 45.

Nominating Committee: Professors C. D. Thorpe (chairman), C. F. Harrold, Thomas M. Raysor.

Discussion: Topic: The Social Theories of Wordsworth and His Older Contemporaries. De Quincey, led by Horace A. Eaton; Wordsworth, led by Leslie N. Broughton; Coleridge led by Alice D. Snyder.

By the chairman's special invitation, Mr. R. C. Bald of London, England, commented briefly on his work with the Coleridge notebooks.

Business: 1. The Merger Committee reported to General Topics II, and the Group voted against the merger. 2. The Bibliography Committee was, by request, authorized to continue its work, now incomplete, and make its report to the 1936 meeting. The Committee agreed to prepare a sample bibliography showing what it proposes to do.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Raymond D. Havens, The Johns Hopkins Univ.; Secretary, Horace Eaton, Syracuse Univ.

FLOYD STOVALL, Secretary

American Literature. Chairman, HOWARD M. JONES, Univ. of Michigan.

Attendance: 151.

Nominating Committee: Professors Tremaine McDowell, Theodore Hornberger, T. C. Pollock, Leonard Harley, Lyon Richardson (chairman).

Papers: 1. "Walt Whitman and Jules Michelet." Gay Allen, Bowling Green State Univ.

2. "New Holmes and Old." Mentor Williams, Univ. of Michigan.

3. "Fantasy and the Novel of the American City." Lennox Grey, Univ. of Chicago.

Discussion. Topic: Mark Twain. After papers by Bernard DeVoto and Franklin J. Meine, the discussion was led by Walter Blair, Univ. of Chicago.

Business: [report delayed]

Officers for 1936: the present officers were reelected.

SCULLEY BRADLEY, Secretary

(English XIII) Present-Day English. Chairman, ATCHESON L. HENCH, Univ. of Virginia
Attendance: 40.

Nominating Committee: Professors Louise Pound, Harold Wentworth, and Cabell Greet.

Papers: 1. "The Characteristics of British English as Noted by American Travelers in England before 1850." Allen Walker Read, Univ. of Chicago.

2. "American Euphemisms for Dying and Death" Louise Pound, Univ. of Nebraska.

3. "Early Loss of r before Dentals, and Later Regressions" Archibald A. Hill, Univ. of Virginia.

4. "The Linguistic Unconventionalities of O. Henry." Margaret Cannell, Univ. of Nebraska.

5. "Postvocalic r in New England: A Study in Linguistic Geography." Bernard Bloch, Brown Univ.

Discussion: by Professors Kenyon, Hanley, Knott, Kurath, Twaddell and others.
Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Thomas A. Knott, Univ. of Michigan; Secretary, Lee S. Hultzen, Columbia Univ.

ALBERT H. MARCKWARDT, Secretary

(English XIV) English Drama. Chairman, ROBERT A. LAW, Univ. of Texas.
Attendance: 50.

Nominating Committee: Professors George P. Reynolds, Margery Bailey, Hazelton Spencer.

Papers: 1. "Manuscript and Printed Play." Madeleine Doran, Univ. of Wisconsin.

2. "The Love-and-Honor Theme in Davenport's Plays." James G. McManaway, The Johns Hopkins Univ.

3. "The 'Toasters' and the Theatre." Brice Harris, Cornell Univ.

4. "The Commonplace Book of Arthur Murphy." J. Homer Caskey, Ohio Univ.

Discussion: (1) by C. F. Tucker Brooke, G. R. Coffman, H. M. Price; (2) by Alwin Thaler, L. J. Mills; (3) by A. F. White; (4) by S. S. Morgan, Margery Bailey.

Business: Professor Margery Bailey gave a short notice concerning the course in Shakespearian production at Stanford during the summer of 1935.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, T. W. Baldwin, Univ. of Illinois; Secretary, Ralph de Someri Childs, Bowdoin College.

WILLIAM S. CLARK, Secretary

(Italian I) Italian Literature. Chairman, RUDOLPH ALTROCCHI, Univ. of California.
Attendance: 60.

Nominating Committee: Professors Camillo P. Merlino (chairman), John Van Horne, Hilda Norman.

Papers: 1. "Three Dante Notes." Herbert D. Austin, Univ. of Southern California.

2. "Certain Aspects of Pirandello's Dramatic Development." Domenico Vittorini, Univ. of Pennsylvania.

3. "The Genesis of Sercambi's Novelle." Robert A. Pratt, Univ. of Rochester.

4. "A Note on the Name D'Annuncio." James Geddes, Boston Univ.

Discussion: led by Rudolph Altrocchi.

Business: A request was made that the Chairman-elect request provision for two groups for the Richmond meeting.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, Angeline H. Lograsso, Bryn Mawr College; Secretary, Lewis H. Gordon, Hamilton College.

ANGELINE H. LOGRASSO, Secretary

(German III) Goethe. Chairman, ERNST FEISE, The Johns Hopkins Univ. Att.: 76.

Nominating Committee: Professors Max Diez, George J. ten Hoor, Jane F. Goodloe.

Papers: 1. "Goethe und das Phänomen der Nacht." Paul H. Baginsky, Brooklyn College.

2. "The Union of the Arts in Die Braut von Messina." Robert T. Clark, Jr., Louisiana State Univ.

3. "Schönheit als ethische Idee bei Schiller und Goethe." Hans Jaeger, Princeton Univ.

4. "Grillparzers Auseinandersetzung mit dem Idealismus." Friedrich W. Kaufmann, Oberlin College.

Discussion: none. Business: none.

Officers for 1936: Chairman, George M. Priest, Princeton Univ.; Secretary, A. J. Prahl, The Johns Hopkins Univ.

J. P. VON GRUENINGEN, Secretary

Belgian Languages and Literatures. Chairman, G. L. VAN ROOSBROECK, Columbia Univ. Attendance: about 61.

Nominating Committee: Professors Barbara Matulka, F. Ernst, Mary E. Storer.

Papers: 1. "Michel Riz's Changement de Fortune en toute prospérité." Marcel Françon, Harvard Univ.

2. "Edmond Glesener, A Walloon Novelist." Benjamin M. Woodbridge, Reed College.

3. "The Don Carlos Theme in Verhaeren's Philippe II." Barbara Matulka, New York Univ.

4. "An Astrological Treatise in Mediaeval Belgium." Raphael Levy, Univ. of Baltimore.

5. "Commemoration of Henri Pirenne (1862-1935)." Gustave L. van Roosbroeck, Columbia Univ.

Discussion: (3) by L. E. Brett, C. E. Anibal, R. Levy; (4) by A. H. Schutz.

Business: none.

Officers for 1936: the present officers were reelected.

ROSE-MARIE DAELE, Secretary

MEETINGS OF THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

I

The Executive Council met in Parlor I of the Netherland Plaza Hotel, Cincinnati, Ohio, on December 30, 1935, at 1:00 P.M., with all the officers, the Managing Trustees, and Professors Craig, Lancaster, Nitze, Tatlock, Taylor, and Walz present.

The following actions were taken:

1. Committee on Research Activities.—The expiration of terms of members was changed from December 31 to the following July 1.

2. The Treasurer's Budget for 1936 was approved, with reservation for further consideration of the item allotting $850 to a meeting of the Executive Council.

3. Professor Max Förster was chosen as the Council's nominee to fill in the roll of Honorary Members the vacancy created by the decease of Antoine Thomas.

Action on a resolution presented by Professor Hardin Craig was deferred. [This resolution was superseded by the one presented by Professor Oscar J. Campbell.]

II

The Executive Council met in Parlor L of the same hotel on January 1, 1936, at 1:00 P.M., with all the officers (except the new vice-presidents), and Professors Chandler, Coffman, Lancaster, Nitze, Tatlock, and Walz present.

In default of a quorum the following actions were taken (subject to confirmation by a mail ballot of absentees):

1. Advisory Committee of 1936.—Professors Lancaster and Walz were continued as members and Professor Brown chosen temporarily to represent English.

2. Committee on Research Activities.—The following recommendations were approved:

a. That application to the A.C.L.S. be made for aid in publication of three books.

The Literary History of Meistergesang. By Archer Taylor.

John Dennis's Critical Works (edition). By Edward Niles Hooker.

The Unextinguished Hearth: Shelley and the Contemporary Reviewers. By Newman I. White

b. That these applications and those made in 1935 be presented in one group in the order: Taylor, Jackson, Harbage; Raysor, Hooker, White; Parsons, Clement, Miller.

c. That $75 be granted for the editorial expenses of the Originals and Analogues of the Canterbury Tales together with the remainder of the $150 previously granted for photostats.

d. That $100 be granted for the preparation and circulation of a check-list of American ballads.

3. Dates of the 1936 Annual Meeting.—The choice of these dates was committed to the Program Committee.

4. American Literature.—The present subscription arrangement was continued for 1936.

5. Next meeting of the Council.—A spring meeting in Chicago was approved for a week end near (preferably after) the meeting of the Medieval Academy.

6. Discussion Groups.—The Council voted that the Program Committee be requested to enforce its recommendations upon the Discussion Groups.

7. Resolution requesting a committee of seven.—The Advisory Committee was requested to make nominations for such a committee.

[These actions were confirmed by the ballot vote.]

PERCY W. LONG, Secretary

BUDGET FOR 1936

ESTIMATE OF EXPENDITURES

For Administration:

Secretary . . . . .	$ 4,000.00
Treasurer . . . . .	2,000.00
Clerical Assistance . . . . .	2,808 00
Postage and Telegraph. . . . .	500.00
Printing . . . . .	300 00
Supplies and Express . . . . .	250.00

For Publishing PMLA . . . . . 11,000 00

For Publishing Index . . . . . 500 00

For Miscellaneous Purposes

American Council of Learned Societies . . . . .	75 00
American Council on Education . . . . .
Committee Expenses . . . . .	185.00
Officers' Traveling Expenses . . . . .	150.00
Circulars and Programs . . . . .	25.00
Bond and Insurance . . . . .	40.15
Public Audit.. . . .	150.00
Executive Council Meeting . . . . .	850.00

For Mandatory Transfers:

To the Emergency Fund (40% Sales of PMLA) . . . . . 100.00

Total . . . . .	$22,933.15
-----------------	-------------

ESTIMATE OF RECEIPTS

From balance on hand . . . . .	$ 1,300 00
From Membership Fees. . . . .	16,500 00
From Library Subscriptions to PMLA . . . . .	1,800 00
From Sales of Back Numbers of PMLA . . . . .	250 00
From Reprints & Corrections. . . . .	100 00
From Advertising . . . . .	1,500.00
From Income and Permanent Fund . . . . .	1,600.00
From Revolving Fund (return of advances from Current Account) . . . . .

Total . . . . .	$23,050.00
-----------------	-------------

COMMITTEE ON RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

Information concerning its services

The Committee on Research Activities was constituted early in 1934 under By-Law VI, which defines its membership, duties, and permissive activities. The Acts of the Council (in PMLA, December, 1935) record its recommendations of grants in aid of research from the M.L.A. Research Fund, and of aid to publication, chiefly from the American Council of Learned Societies.

Thus far the Committee has secured aid for the publication of five books and one pamphlet (three by the Association), grants of aid for two group projects, and (informally) one fellowship. At present the Association by its recommendation is applying for aid in publication on behalf of nine books.

The Committee has held five meetings and considered nearly 250 projects of members of the Association. It does not ordinarily attempt assistance in the publication of dissertations, and has as yet not found means of aid for bibliographies, concordances, translations, and texts.

Every member of the Association has been invited by its questionnaire to give notice of projects of research which he is undertaking or knows to be in progress, and to suggest other profitable lines of investigation. This request applies even when the member is not in need of financial assistance.

The Committee has assembled lists of experts in nearly all the fields covered by the activities of the Association. To these experts scholars may be referred for specific assistance in their problems, and for appraisal of their results.

KARL YOUNG
Chairman

CONSTITUTION OF THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

[Adopted December 29, 1903. Amended December 29, 1915, March 31, 1920, December 29, 1923, 1925, 1927, and December 30, 1929.]

I. NAME

The name of this Association shall be: THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA.

II. PURPOSE

The object of the Association shall be the advancement of research in the modern languages and their literatures.

III. MEMBERSHIP

1. Any person approved by an officer of the Association may become a member on the payment of five dollars and may continue a member by the payment of the same amount each year. Persons who for twenty-five years or more have been members in good standing may, on retiring from active service as teachers, be continued as members without further payment of dues.

2. Any person eligible to membership may become a life member and exempt from dues by a single payment of seventy-five dollars or by the payment of twenty-six dollars for three successive years. With each completed decade of membership in good and regular standing, the fee for life membership shall be diminished by one-fourth. Persons who have paid forty annual membership dues automatically become life members without further payment.

3. Foreign scholars may be elected to honorary membership by the Association on the nomination of the Executive Council, but the number of honorary members shall not at any time exceed forty.

IV. OFFICERS

1. The Officers of the Association shall be: a President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer.

2. The President and Vice-Presidents shall be elected by ballot for one year at the regular Annual Meeting. The Secretary and Treasurer shall be chosen by the Executive Council, and shall hold office for such term and under such conditions as the Council may specify.

V. ADMINISTRATION

The administration of the Association shall be in the hands of the Executive Council consisting of the President and Vice-Presidents of the Association, ex officio the Secretary and the Treasurer of the Association (without votes), and twelve members, of whom three shall be elected by ballot at each Annual Meeting, for terms of four years in a manner described in the By-Laws. The Council shall administer the affairs of the Association and take such action as is necessary to carry out its purpose and promote its interests. It shall appoint such Boards and Committees as are specified in the By-Laws and such others as may be necessary from time to time. It shall make a report of its activities at each Annual Meeting, and its policies and actions shall be subject to the direction and approval of the Association.

VI. MEETINGS

The Association shall hold an Annual Meeting, at such place and time as the Executive Council shall from year to year determine. The Annual Meetings shall be held alternately East and West of the Eastern boundaries of Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Alabama. For the transaction of business at an Annual Meeting, twenty-five members shall constitute a quorum of the Association.

VII. AMENDMENTS

Amendments of this Constitution must first be approved by two-thirds of the members of the Executive Council, and afterwards be ratified by a majority vote at two successive Annual Meetings of the Association.

---

BY-LAWS OF THE MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

[Adopted December 30, 1929. Amended December 30, 1933 and December 28, 1934.]

I. DUTIES OF OFFICERS

All officers shall hold office until their successors are chosen.

The President shall preside at all business meetings of the Association and of the Executive Council. In his absence, his duties shall fall successively upon the Vice-Presidents in the order of their election.

The Secretary of the Association shall also act as Secretary of the Executive Council. He shall be Chairman of the Editorial and Program Committees and editor of the quarterly Publications and of all books, pamphlets, or prints which may be issued by the Association, and shall serve as an advisory member of all other standing Committees.

The Treasurer shall be the custodian of all current funds, collecting membership fees, and other monies due the Association, and paying bills properly incurred, taking vouchers for such expenditures. He shall also have charge of the business arrangements for the quarterly Publications and any books published by the Association, and sign contracts with printing and other firms, subject to the approval of the Executive Council. He shall be bonded in a sum not less than ten thousand dollars.

Such clerical assistance shall be provided for the Secretary and Treasurer in the performance of their duties as may be approved by the Council and authorized in the annual budget.

II. THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL

Each year three members of the Council shall be elected according to the following procedure: (1) The Council shall nominate six candidates, whose names shall be announced in the September issue of the Publications. (2) Any member of the Association may then propose three additional names and forward them to the Secretary before November 1. (3) The Secretary shall enter on an official ballot attached to the program of the Annual Meeting the six candidates proposed by the Council, together with the three names receiving the most votes among those proposed by members of the Association. (4) At the Annual Meeting, members may vote for any three of the persons named on the official ballot, absent members being permitted to forward their ballots, duly signed, by mail. (5) Of the nine names on the ballot, the three receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected to the Council for the ensuing four years, unless thereby the twelve members of the Council shall consist of more than six or less than two representatives of English, Germanic, and Romance languages, respectively. In such case, the choice shall pass automatically to the person receiving the highest number of votes whose election would not result in over-representation or under-representation in any department.

The Council shall elect from its own number three persons, representing the three departments, to serve as an Advisory Committee, who shall meet at the call of the Secretary and make recommendations to the Council for its consideration.

The Executive Council shall fill any vacancy occurring among the officers of the Association. It may fill a vacancy in its own body until a successor can be elected according to the provisions above specified.

III. TRUSTEES OF INVESTED FUNDS

The Permanent Fund of the Association and the Monograph Endowment Fund shall be administered by a Board of three Trustees, appointed without term by the Executive Council, of whom one shall be designated the Managing Trustee.

The Treasurer of the Association shall pay over to the Trustees any sums which may be due to the Permanent Fund, either as payments for life membership or as gifts to the Association, and also any sums which may be contributed to the Monograph Endowment Fund.

The Trustees shall invest and reinvest all funds so received by them, and shall hold the same until such time as the Association shall be dissolved or shall otherwise cease to exist and shall then turn over all property remaining in their hands to the Trustees of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

The income accruing on all property in their hands shall be paid over to the Treasurer of the Association, who shall add the income received from the Permanent Fund to the Current Funds of the Association and shall add the income received from the Monograph Endowment Fund to the Monograph Expense Account.

Said Trustees, or any of them, may be removed by the Executive Council by a unanimous vote at a meeting called for the purpose, and any vacancy arising from the death, resignation, or removal of any Trustee shall be filled by the Executive Council.

IV. STANDING COMMITTEES

The standing committees shall be as follows: An Editorial Committee, a Program Committee, a Committee on the Monograph Series, a Committee on the Revolving Book Fund, a Committee on Rotographs, and such others as may, on recommendation of the Executive Council, be authorized at any Annual Meeting. Each shall consist of five members who shall hold office for five years, one being elected each year. The following three departments shall always be represented on each committee: English, Germanic languages, and Romance languages.

The Editorial Committee shall have charge of the quarterly Publications of the Association in cooperation with the Secretary, who shall be managing editor.

The Program Committee shall prepare the programs for the Annual Meeting. It shall have authority to make regulations regarding papers and discussions and to coordinate or modify the program of the various sections and research groups.

The Committee on the Monograph Series shall select the monographs to be published in the Series.

The Committee on the Revolving Book Fund shall have general charge of the selection of manuscripts and of publications under the Fund.

The Rotograph Committee shall have charge of the solicitation of subscriptions and of the selection, manufacture and distribution of the rotographs.

V. DISCUSSION GROUPS

The system of Discussion Groups shall be under the supervision of the Program Committee, which has the authority to discontinue or add to the number of the existing groups.

Each group shall maintain a roll of its members corrected from year to year.

Suggestions for the conduct of the group meetings shall be transmitted to the officers of the groups by the Secretary of the Association, and the Program Committee may modify these from time to time.

VI. RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

The Executive Council of the Association shall appoint a Committee on Research Activities, consisting of six persons and the Secretary of the Association as a non-voting member. The voting members of this committee shall serve for terms of three years, two being appointed each year. The English, Romance, and Germanic languages shall always be represented on this committee, and its membership shall always include at least one representative of linguistics and at least one representative of literary history.

The duty of this committee shall be to further the search activities of the Association and its members. It shall consider projects of research or publication that may be presented to it, either by the Discussion Groups or by individual members of the Association, and shall report such projects with its recommendations to the Executive Council. It may also initiate projects of research or publication. It shall make such suggestions to the Council for the continuing direction of approved projects as may seem desirable.

The Committee on Research Activities shall meet, normally twice a year, to act upon projects submitted to it.

No project shall be officially sponsored by the Association until it has received the approval of the Committee on Research Activities.

This shall not be construed as affecting the authority and functions of the Standing Committees enumerated in By-Law IV.

VII. BUDGET

The Treasurer shall each year prepare for presentation to the Council a budget of expenditures for the ensuing year. After approval by the Council the budget shall be laid before the Association for its information at the Annual Meeting. For budgetary and other administrative purposes the official year shall be the calendar year.

VIII. AUDIT

Previous to the Annual Meeting, the President shall designate a committee to audit the financial accounts of the Association, including the security bond of the Treasurer. The Auditing Committee shall then submit the report to examination by a commercial auditing firm. The report as thus audited shall be transmitted to the Council and published in the annual Proceedings of the Association.

IX. AMENDMENT

These By-Laws may be amended, after approval by the Executive Council, by a majority vote at any Annual Meeting of the Association, notice of such amendment having been distributed to the members with the program of the same meeting.

THE PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION OF THE PACIFIC COAST

The thirty-seventh annual meeting of the Philological Association of the Pacific Coast was held at Stanford University, California, on November 29 and 30, 1935.

The plan had been adopted of having placards, announcing the meeting, printed and sent to all the institutions represented by the members of the Association, as well as to a few other colleges on the Pacific Coast; about 200 were thus distributed. The executive committee had likewise, at its meeting on November 2, given its approval to a suggestion expressed by Professor J. S. P. Tatlock that an additional type of membership be created whereby promising graduate students should be invited to become junior members of the Association, at the cost of only one dollar per annum but without the privilege of receiving the publications of the national associations with which this Association is affiliated.

Friday, November 29, after a meeting of the executive committee the first session was called to order by President George Miller Calhoun at 10:30 A.M. The Secretary-Treasurer made no report at this time. President Calhoun announced the appointment of the following committees:

Nominating: Foster (1 year), L. M. Price (2 years), Kennedy (3 years).

Social: Foster (chairman), Bonno, Fite.

Auditing: Harriman, L. M. Price.

Resolutions: Bowen (chairman), Cline.

Special Resolution for Professor W. L. Schwartz: Kennedy, Noyes.

Professor Anna Cox Brinton made an announcement of the exhibit of Horatiana at Mills College, California, and extended an invitation to all members to visit it during the week-end.

The reading and discussion of papers followed, about one hundred persons being in attendance. The afternoon session was held in three groups, English, American Literature, and Foreign Language, presided over by Professors Briggs, Stewart, and Gordon, respectively; about forty or fifty persons attended each section.

The annual dinner took place at the Villa Lafayette, about five miles south of Stanford University. Professor Foster presented the report of the nominating committee, and the vote of the Association was cast for the following officers:

President: William Dinsmore Briggs.

Vice-Presidents: Rudolph Altrocchi, Hardin Craig.

Secretary-Treasurer: Arthur Ernest Gordon.

Executive Committee: The above officers and Frederick Mason Carey, Martha Ada Klett, George Z. Patrick, Kurt F. Reinhardt.

A resolution prepared by Professors Kennedy and Noyes was read, expressing the Association's regrets at the premature retirement of Professor William Leonard Schwartz from the office of secretary-treasurer and its appreciation of his services during the years 1922-1925 (as treasurer) and 1932-1935.

Professor William Dinsmore Briggs presided during the reading of President Calhoun's address, entitled "Olympian Manners," which was followed by speeches in lighter vein by Professors Majl Ewing and Clifford H. Bissell.

The third session was held on Saturday morning, with an attendance of about fifty. Before adjournment Professor Ray Preston Bowen submitted a resolution of cordial thanks to the members resident at Stanford University for their friendliness and gracious hospitality during the meeting, and Professor J. S. P. Tatlock made an announcement concerning the character and history of the Mediæval Academy of America and its publication Speculum.

The program printed above exceeded by one paper that of the previous year, which had been the fullest in the history of the Association; this year, however, no papers were read by title.

The Secretary-Treasurer now reports that 18 persons accepted membership during the year, as against 6 resignations, the dropping of 13 members for delinquency in dues, one death, and the permanent departure of 2 members with dues unpaid since 1933-1934, a decrease of 4 and a total membership of 236.

The financial report has been submitted to the auditing committee and by them approved:

RECEIPTS

Balance on hand, Dec. 1, 1934.....	$ 354.36
Dues paid by members.....	1,162.00
Interest on deposits.....	6 91
	<hr/>
Total receipts....	$1,523.27

DISBURSEMENTS:

To Modern Language Association of America..	$ 725.89
To American Philological Association..	186.34
Printing.....	126.20
Secretarial allowance (W. L. Schwartz) ..	50.00
Stationery and postage ....	41 31
Annual meeting, November 1934 ..	21.25
Annual meeting, November 1935. ....	10.00
Refund to members ..	1.00
Telegrams ..	.94
Rubber stamp....	.72
	<hr/>
Total disbursements....	$1,163.65
Balance in bank.....	359.62
	<hr/>
Total. ....	$1,523.27

ARTHUR ERNEST GORDON, Secretary-Treasurer

LIST OF MEMBERS

OF THE

MODERN LANGUAGE ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

(Corrected to Feb. 18, 1936)

HONORARY MEMBERS

(The roll dates from July 13, 1893)

	Elected		Elected
FERNAND BALDENSPERGER	1931	OTTO JESPERSON	1904
The Sorbonne and Harvard University		Lundehave, Helsingør, Denmark
MICHELE BARBI	1916	KARL AXEL KOCK	1927
R. Inst. Sup. di Magiesterio, Florence		University of Lund
JOSEPH BÉDIER	1920	EUGEN KUHNEMANN	1906
College de France, Paris		University of Breslau
OTTO BEHAGHEL	1932	ABEL LEFRANC	1913
University of Giessen		College de France
ALOIS L. BRANDL	1893	EMILE LEGOUIS	1934
University of Berlin		The Sorbonne
FERDINAND BRUNOT	1914	FERDINAND LOT	1927
University of Paris		The Sorbonne
KONRAD BURDACH	1894	R. B. MCKERROW	1934
Akademie der Wissenschaften, Berlin		London, England
SIR EDMUND CHAMBERS	1922	W. MEYER-LUBEKE	1894
Eynsham, Oxfordshire, England		University of Bonn
R. W. CHAMBERS	1930	LORENZ MORSBACH	1926
University College, London		University of Gottingen
VITTORIO CIAN	1926	FRITZ NEUMANN	1893
University of Turin		University of Heidelberg
GEORGES CIROT	1926	RAMON MENÉNDEZ PIDAL	1910
University of Bordeaux		University of Madrid
SIR WILLIAM CRAIGIE	1922	ALFRED W. POLLARD	1916
University of Chicago		British Museum, London
BENEDETTO CROCE	1909	MARIO ROQUES	1926
Naples, Italy		Ecole des Hautes Etudes, Paris
ARTURO FARINELLI	1930	VITTORIO ROSSI	1923
University of Turin		University of Rome
MAX FÖRSTER	1935	EDWARD SCHROEDER	1913
Yale University		University of Göttingen
LUCIEN FOULET	1932	RUDOLPH THURNEISEN	1926
Paris, France		University of Bonn
WALTER WILSON GREG	1923	FRANCESCO TORRACA	1913
London, England		University of Naples
H. J. C. GRIERSON	1932	KARL VOSSLER	1926
University of Edinburgh		University of Munich
JOHANNES HOOPS	1933	MAURICE WILMOTTE	1934
University of Heidelberg		Bruxelles, Belgium
ALFRED JEANROY	1914	HENRY CECIL WYLD	1930
University of Paris		Oxford University

[40]

Life Members and Emeritus Members are indicated by ❖

- Abbot, William Richardson, Assoc Prof Eng., Coll. of Charleston, Charleston, S. C.
- Abbott, Allan, Prof. Eng., Teachers Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Abbott, Charles David, Director of Libraries and Prof. Eng., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y.
- Aberle, Nellie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Kansas State Coll., Manhattan, Kans.
- ❖ Abramson, (Mrs) Muriel Morris, 4800 Drexel Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
- Ackerman, Ethel M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Hamline Univ., St. Paul, Minn.
- Adam, Jean Joseph, Assoc Prof. Mod. Foreign Langs., Johnson C. Smith Univ., Charlotte, N. C.
- ❖ Adams, Arthur, Prof. Eng. and Librarian, Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn.
- ❖ Adams, Edward Larnabee, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1850 Washtenaw Ave.]
- Adams, John Chester, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Adams, John Cranford, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [345 Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Adams, John R., Assoc Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., San Diego, Calif.
- Adams, Joseph Quincy, Director of Research, Folger Shakespeare Lib., Washington, D. C.
- Adams, Martin Ray, Prof. Eng., Franklin and Marshall Coll., Lancaster, Pa. [620 Race Ave.]
- Adams, Nicholson Barney, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [Route 4]
- Adams, Raymond William, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C. Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Adams, Robert D. W., Chairman of Music, Univ. of Kansas City, Kansas City, Mo.
- ❖ Adams, Warren Austin, Prof. German, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Adkins, (Mrs) Mary Grace Muse, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Texas [Box 1687, Univ. Sta.]
- Adkins, Nelson Frederick, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [19 Christopher St.]
- Agard, Frederick Browning, Instr. French and Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [30 Nassau St.]
- Ahern, Agnes Madeleine, Prof. and Head French Dept., Mt. St. Joseph Coll., West Hartford, Conn.
- Ahlstrom, Alvida, Head French Dept., State Teachers Coll., La Crosse, Wis.
- Ahrens, Frederick C., Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va.
- Aiken, Pauline, Eng. Dept., Lingnan Univ., Canton, China
- Aiken, Wellington E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. [52 N. Prospect St.]
- Albertine, Sister, Librarian, St. Mary's of the Spring Coll., East Columbus, Ohio
- Albrecht, Otto Edwin, Instr. French, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [463 W. Ellet St., Mt. Airy]
- Albright, Evelyn May, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange 13]
- Alden, Donald Hitt, Instr. Eng., Los Angeles Junior Coll., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Alderman, William E., Dean of Liberal Arts; Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [112 N. Campus Ave.]
- Alexis, Joseph E. A., Chairman Dept. Germ. Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Allan, Celia Knight (Mrs. G. W. C.), 27 Mill Lane, Stockton-on-Tees, Co. Durham, England.
- Allard, Louis, Prof. French, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [1130 Massachusetts Ave.]
- Allen, Catherine, Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Meredith Coll., Raleigh, N. C.
- Allen, Don Cameron, Instr. Eng., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash. [702 W. Washington Blvd., Urbana, Ill.]
- Allen, Gay Wilson, Asst. Prof. Eng., Bowling Green State Univ., Bowling Green, Ohio
- Allen, Harold B., Sub-editor, Early Mod. Eng. Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [315 Packard St.]
- Allen, Hope Emily, Asst. Editor, Early Mod. Eng. Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [Angell Hall]
- ❖ Allen, Morse S., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn. [3 Fern St.]
- Allen, N. B., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Dela.
- Allen, Ralph Bergen, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [Box 16, College Hall]

- Allen, Robert Joseph, Instr. and Tutor Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [32 Shepard St.]
- Allen, Samuel E., Assoc. Prof. Rhet., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Allison, Tempe Elizabeth, Chairman Eng. Dept., San Bernardino Jr. Coll., San Bernardino, Calif.
- ❖ Almstedt, Hermann Benjamin, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Germ. Langs., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [302 Westmount Ave.]
- Almy, Robert F., Asst. Prof. Eng., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [126 W. High St.]
- Alsopach, Russell K., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [314 Bennett Hall]
- Altrocchi, Rudolph, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Italian, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [443 Wheeler Hall]
- Ament, William Sheffield, Prof. Eng., Scripps Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Amiel, Joseph Henri, Asst. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [705 West Elm]
- Amos, Flora Ross, Prof. Eng., Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Anacker, Robert H., Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn. [104 Asbury Dr.]
- Ancilla, Sister Maria, Head Eng. Dept., Mt. St. Joseph Coll., West Hartford, Conn.
- Andersen, Hans Holst, Asst. Prof. Eng., Oklahoma A. and M. Coll., Stillwater, Okla.
- Anderson, Charles Roberts, Instr. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 296, College Sta.]
- Anderson, George Kumler, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Anderson, Jean J., Hanover Coll., Hanover, Ind.
- Anderson, Louise, Teacher French, Humes H. S., Memphis, Tenn. [Y.W.C.A., 291 S. Second St.]
- Anderson, Marjorie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [106 E. 52nd St.]
- Anderson, Paul Bunyan, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Parsons Coll., Fairfield, Iowa
- Anderson, Ruth L., Prof. Eng., Central Coll., Fayette, Mo.
- Andersson, Theodore, Instr. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [67 Morris St., Hamden]
- Andrews, Albert LeRoy, Asst. Prof. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Andrus, Lawrence Russell, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Club]
- Angelica, Mother, Our Lady of the Lake, San Antonio, Tex.
- Angell, Pauline Knickerbocker, 184 Pike St., Port Jervis, N. Y.
- ❖ Anibal, Claude E., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [1329 Wyandotte Rd., Grandview]
- Annan, Margaret C., 1440 E. 66th Pl., Chicago, Ill.
- Anstensen, Ansten, Prof. and Head German Dept., Univ. of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, Sask., Can.
- ❖ App, Austin J., Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., St. Thomas Coll., Scranton, Pa.
- Appelt, E. P., Prof. German, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [69 Dartmouth St.]
- Appelt, Theodore C., Instr. German, Concordia Teachers Coll., River Forest, Ill.
- Arbib-Costa, Alfonso, Prof. Italian, The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Arce, José M., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [P.O. Box 102]
- Arends, Charles Clifford, Asst. Prof. Speech, Elmhurst Coll., Elmhurst, Ill.
- Ariail, J. M., Prof. Eng., Columbia Coll., Columbia, S. C.
- Arlt, Gustave O., Prof. and Chairman Dept. German Lang. and Lit., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Armour, Richard Willard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wells Coll., Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y.
- Armstrong, Amy, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [312 Folwell Hall]
- ❖ Armstrong, Edward C., Prof. French Lang., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [26 Edgehill St.]
- Arndt, Karl John Richard, Asst. Prof. German, Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge, La.
- Arnold, (Mrs.) Dorothy McSparran, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Arnold, Harrison Heikes, Prof. Rom. Langs., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [519 Holmes St.]
- Arnoldson, (Mrs.) Louise G., Assoc. Prof.

- Mod. Langs, Montana State Univ., Missoula, Mont.
- Aron, Albert W, Prof and Head German Dept., Univ of Illinois, Urbana, Ill
- Arons, (Mrs.) Gladys, Grad Stu Rom. Langs, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa [1430 Orchard Way, Rosemont]
- Arratia, Alejandro, Tutor Rom Langs., The City Coll, 17 Lexington Ave, New York, N. Y.
- Arvin, Neil Cole, Prof. French, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Ascher, Maigaretha, Assoc Prof. Mod. Langs, Texas Christian Univ, Fort Worth, Tex.
- Ashburn, Andrew Wilson, Assoc Prof Eng, Texas State Coll for Women, Denton, Tex [C.I.A. Sta.]
- Ashby, Stanley Royal, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Ashcom, Benjamin Bowles, Instr. Spanish, Wayne Univ., 4841 Cass Ave., Detroit, Mich.
- Ashton, John William, Asst Prof. Eng, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- Ashton, Madeline, Prof Mod Langs, Missouri Valley Coll, Marshall, Mo
- Atherton, Robert Willard, The Roosevelt, Madison Ave. at 45th St, New York, N. Y.
- Atkin, Ernest George, Prof. and Head French Dept, Univ of Florida, Gainesville, Fla.
- Atkins, Elizabeth, Asst Prof Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [111 Folwell Hall]
- Atkinson, Dorothy F., 2311 Manito Blvd., Spokane, Wash.
- Atkinson, Geoffroy, Prof. Rom Langs., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass. [123 S. Pleasant St.]
- Atwood, Leland Leavitt, Prof. and Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Worcester Polytechnic Inst, Worcester, Mass.
- Aubin, Robert Arnold, Instr. Eng, Radcliffe Coll., Cambridge, Mass. [17 Copley St., Newton]
- Auhagen, Frederick Ernest, Lecturer German, Seth Low Coll, Columbia Univ, 375 Pearl St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Aurner, (Mrs.) Nellie Slayton, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [303 Lexington Ave.]
- Austin, Herbert Douglas, Prof. Italian and French, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Austin, Horace Rosser, Instr. and Tutor Rom Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass [36 Holyoke House]
- Austin, Warren Barker, Tutor Eng, The City Coll, New York, N. Y. [335 E. 236th St]
- Avery, Curtis Edmund, Instr Eng, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn [General Ext. Div]
- Avery, Emmett Langdon, Instr. Eng, State Coll of Washington, Pullman, Wash.
- Awtrey, Hugh R., The Atlanta-Georgian, Atlanta, Ga.
- Aydelotte, Frank, Pres. of Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- ❖ Ayer, Charles Carlton, Prof Rom Langs., Univ of Colorado, Boulder, Colo
- ❖ Ayres, Harry Morgan, Prof. Eng, Columbia Univ, New York, N. Y. [Philosophy Hall]
- Babb, Lawrence, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ, Evanston, Ill.
- Babbitt, Theodore, Instr. Spanish, Yale Univ, New Haven, Conn. [858 Yale Sta.]
- Babcock, Robert Witbeck, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [3 Harvard Pl., Ann Arbor]
- Bach, Emma, Prof. and Head Mod Langs., Dept, Morehead State Teachers Coll., Morehead, Ky.
- Bachman, Albert, Prof. French and Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Gettysburg Coll., Gettysburg, Pa. [Box 33]
- Bachmann, Frederick William, Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., Coll. of Mines and Metallurgy, El Paso, Tex.
- Backus, Edythe N., 336 W. Foothill Blvd., Monrovia, Calif.
- Bacon, George William, Instr. French and Spanish, Germantown H. S., Phila., Pa. [Wyncote, Pa.]
- Bacon, Grace M., Prof. and Head German Dept., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [6 Wright Pl]
- Bader, Arno L., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Baer, Lydia, Asst. Prof German, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- Baer, William Bush, Asst. Dean of Eng. Dept., Univ. Coll., N. Y. Univ., Univ. Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Baerg, Gerhard, Prof. German, DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.

- Baginsky, Paul H., Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [230 Riverside Dr., N. Y. C.]
- Bagley, Charles Rutherford, Prof. French, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Bagster-Collins, Elijah William, Prof. German, Teachers Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Bagster-Collins, Jeremy Felix, Instr. Eng., Lafayette Coll. Easton, Pa. [Montrose, N. Y.]
- Bagster-Collins, Robert Denzil, Eng. Dept., Plattsburgh State Normal School, 185 Cornelia St., Plattsburgh, N. Y.
- Bailey, James Osler, Instr. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [Box 414]
- Bailey, Margery, Asst. Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., Stanford University, Calif. [1416 Tasso St., Palo Alto]
- Bailey, Mary Matilde, American Lit. Teacher, Clairton H. S., Clairton, Pa. [516 Waddell Ave.]
- Bailhache, (Mrs.) Marjorie, Teacher of Spanish, Galileo H. S., San Francisco, Calif. [1340 Lombard St., Apt. 403]
- Bainbridge, Margaret Pitkin, (Mrs. Kenneth T.), Tutor Rom. Langs., Radcliffe Coll., Cambridge, Mass. [86 Irving St.]
- Baird, Theodore, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass. [Hillcrest Pl.]
- Bakeless, John, Asst. Prof. Journalism, School of Commerce, N. Y. Univ., N. Y. C.; and Head Dept. Publications, Sarah Lawrence Coll., Bronxville, N. Y. [54 W. 11th St., N. Y. C.]
- Baker, Courtland Darke, Asst. Prof. Eng., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Baker, Fannie Anna, Prof. Mod. Langs. Northeastern State Teachers Coll., Tahquah, Okla. [Box 327]
- ❖ Baker, Harry Torsey, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md. [Box 581]
- Baker, John Milton, Chairman Eng. Dept., Hartwick Coll., Oneonta, N. Y.
- Baker, Joseph Ellis, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia. [311 Brown St.]
- Baker, Louis Charles, Prof. Mod. Langs., Lawrence Coll., Appleton, Wis.
- ❖ Baker, Ray Palmer, Prof. Eng., and Head Dept. Arts, Science, and Business Administration, Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst., Troy, N. Y. [36 Locust Ave.]
- ❖ Baker, Thomas Stockham, Emer. President, Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh Pa. [Schenley Park]
- Balcom, (Mrs.) Nanita MacDonell, Chevy Chase, Md. [406 Surrey St.]
- Bald, R. C., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Stellenbosch, University of Stellenbosch, C. P., South Africa
- Balderston, Katherine Canby, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Shepard House]
- Baldner, Ralph Willis, Instr. French, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn. [Y. M. C. A. Grad. School]
- ❖ Baldwin, Edward Chauncey, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [802 S. Lincoln Ave.]
- Baldwin, Thomas Whitfield, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [201 W. Vermont Ave.]
- Bale, Christian E., Concordia Coll., Moorhead, Minn.
- Ball, Margaret, Prof. Eng., Mt. Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [Faculty House]
- Ball, Robert Hamilton, Asst. Prof. Eng. and Dramatic Art, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [22 Alexander St.]
- Ballard, Louise, 560 Moreland Ave. N.E., Atlanta, Ga.
- Ballif, John Lyman, Jr., Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah [227 So. 13th East, Apt. 3]
- Ballman, Adele B., Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [3206 N. Calvert St.]
- Bally, Georges, Assoc. Prof. French, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn. [Vanderbilt Campus]
- Balph, Helen Rose, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [345 S. Aiken Ave.]
- Balseiro, José A., Visiting Prof. Spanish Lit., Univ. of Puerto Rico, Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico
- Bangs, Archie Roy, Prof. Germ. Lang., Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn. [24 Montclair Drive, W. Hartford]
- Banks, Lucy Young, Asst. Prof. Eng., Mississippi State Coll. for Women, Columbus, Miss. [204 S. 7 Ave.]
- Banks, Theodore Howard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [28 Lawn Ave.]
- Barba, Preston Albert, Prof. German, Muhlenberg Coll., Allentown, Pa.

- Barbour, Frances M., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Southern Ill. Teachers Coll., 718 S. Normal Ave., Carbondale, Ill.
- Barja, César, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Barker, James L., Prof. French and Phonetics, Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah
- Barker, Joseph Edmund, Assoc. Prof. French, Sweet Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Barker, Myron Irving, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [405 Hilgard Ave.]
- Barksdale, Noval P., Prof. French, Lincoln Univ., Jefferson City, Mo.
- Barlow, Joseph W., Prof. Spanish, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [26 Washington Pl.]
- Barnason, Charles Frederick, Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Downer Ave., Hingham]
- Barnes, John Hancock, Louisville, Ky. [c/o Mrs. R. F. Clendenin, 1204 Dahlia Drive, Hawthorne Heights]
- Barnes, Margaret Ayer, (Mrs. Cecil), 1152 N. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.
- Barnett, Esther F., Instr. Spanish, Monticello Coll., Godfrey, Ill.
- ❖ Barney, Winfield Supply, Prof. and Head Rom. Lang. Dept., North Carolina Coll. for Women, Greensboro, N. C. [310 Forest Ave.]
- Barnhart, C. L., Editorial Dept., Scott, Foresman & Co., 623 S. Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
- Barnhill, Mary Edmunds, (Mrs.), Assoc. Prof. Eng., Eastern State Teachers Coll., Richmond, Ky. [354 Lancaster Ave.]
- ❖ Barnicle, Mary Elizabeth, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Barnouw, Adna Jacob, Queen Wilhelmina Prof., Germ. Langs. Dept., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Barnstorff, Hermann, Instr. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [2024 Chamberlain Ave.]
- Baroway, Israel, Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Barr, Mary-Margaret H., Instr. French, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [112 Carnegie Ave., East Orange, N. J.]
- Barrell, Joseph, Instr. Eng., Pomfret School, New Haven, Conn. [279 Willow St.]
- Barry, Joseph A. S., Instr. Eng., Tulane Univ., New Orleans, La. [307 Audubon St.]
- Barry, Phillips, Research Specialist, 5 Craigie Circle, Cambridge, Mass.
- Bartlett, Adeline Courtney, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [88 Morningside Dr.]
- ❖ Bartlett, Mrs. David Lewis, Baltimore, Md. [16 W. Monument St.]
- Bartlett, Phyllis B., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Bartlett, W. I., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Roanoke Coll., Salem, Va. [P.O. Box 2018, Roanoke]
- Barton, Francis Brown, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Barzun, Henri Martin, Prof. and Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Coll. of New Rochelle, New Rochelle, N. Y. [151 Centre Ave.]
- Bashe, Edwin J., Prof. Eng., St. Mary-of-the-Woods Coll., St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Ind.
- Basilius, Harold A., Instr. German, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Baskett, Wm. Denny, Prof. Mod. Langs., Central Coll., Fayette, Mo.
- Baskin, Jane Feild, Assoc. Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., San Antonio Jr. Coll., San Antonio, Tex. [724 Baltimore Ave.]
- Basler, Roy P., Head Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Florence, Ala. [113 Wesleyan Ave.]
- Bass, Clare Reynolds, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lit., Western Coll., Oxford, Ohio
- Bass, William W., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Carson-Newman Coll., Jefferson City, Tenn. [Box 343]
- Bates, Madison Clair, Dean and Prof. Eng., Dana Coll., Newark, N. J. [40 Rector St.]
- Bates, Robert Chapman, Instr. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [765 Yale St.]
- Battell, Jack Straley, Stud. Eng., Yale Grad. School, New Haven, Conn. [466 3rd St., Brooklyn, N. Y.]
- ❖ Battin, Benjamin F., [Address unknown]
- Battut, Andrew, Visiting Prof., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [Apt. 54, 114 Morningside Dr.]
- Bauer, Friedrich G., Lichtensteinstrasse 5, Ulm, a D., Germany
- ❖ Baugh, Albert Croll, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Box 1, College Hall]
- Baugh, Nita Scudder, (Mrs. Albert C. Baugh) Phila., Pa. [317 S. 43rd St.]

- Baughan, Denver Ewing, Instr. Eng., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Baum, Paull Franklin, Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [College Sta.]
- Baumann, Carl L., Asst. Prof. and Head German Dept., Pomona Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Baumgardner, Karl Conant, Instr. Eng., Wright Jr. Coll., Chicago, Ill. [6058 Harper Ave.]
- Baumgartner, Milton D., Prof. Germ. Langs., Butler Coll., Indianapolis, Ind.
- Baur, William F., Act. Head Dept. Germ. Langs., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo. [1509 Cascade Ave.]
- Baxter, Arthur H., Prof. Rom. Langs., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass.
- Baxter, Curtis F., Prof. Eng. Lit., Glenville State Teachers Coll., Glenville, W. Va.
- Bayerschmidt, Carl Frank, Instr. German, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Beach, Constance Louise, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex. [1113 Oakland Ave.]
- Beach, Joseph Warren, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [1801 University Ave., S.E.]
- Beach, Leonard B., Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [816 Simpson St.]
- Beale, Robert Cecil, Prof. French, Hampden-Sydney Coll., Hampden-Sydney, Va.
- Beall, Florence G., Asst. Prof. Eng., Kent State Coll., Kent, Ohio [338 E. Main St.]
- Beals, Edith Mosher, (Mrs. Clyde), Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [547 Riverside Dr.]
- Beardsley, Wilfred Attwood, Prof. and Chairman Rom. Langs. Dept., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Beardwood, Jane, Teacher French, State Teachers Coll., Shippensburg, Pa.
- Beattie, Lester Middleswarth, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa. [72 Engineering Hall]
- ❖ Beatty, Arthur, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [1824 Vilas St.]
- Beatty, Joseph Moorhead, Jr., Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md. [308 Thornhill Rd., Homeland, Baltimore]
- Beatty, Richmond Croom, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala. [Box 1292]
- Beaty, John Owen, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex. [3533 Haynie Ave.]
- Beauchamp, George Emerson, Eng. Dept., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Beauchamp, William Theodore, Prof. Eng., Knox Coll., Galesburg, Ill.
- ❖ de Beaumont, Victor, Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada [73 Queen's Park]
- Becerra, Rafael A., Tutor Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [430 W. 116th St.]
- Beck, Richard, Prof. Scandinavian Langs., Univ. of North Dakota, Grand Forks, N. D. [University Sta.]
- ❖ Becker, Ernest Julius, Principal, Western H. S., Baltimore, Md.
- Becklund, Luther N., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [3629 34th Ave. S.]
- Beckwith, Martha Warren, Research Prof. on the Folk-lore Foundation, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Bédé, Jean-Albert, Assoc. Prof. French, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [102 Blackstone Blvd.]
- Beede, Margaret Adah, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of North Dakota, University, N. D. [Box 3]
- Bégué, Armand G., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [216 M. South Hall]
- Behnke, John A., Macmillan Co., Boston, Mass. [155 Aspen Ave., Auburndale]
- Bek, William Godfrey, Prof. German, Univ. of North Dakota, Grand Forks, N. D. [Box 66, Univ. Sta.]
- Belcher, Fannin S., Jr., Instr. Eng., West Virginia State Coll., Institute, W. Va. [Box 150]
- ❖ Belden, Henry Marvin, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [811 Virginia Ave.]
- Belnap, Arthur Train, Dean of Instruction, State Teachers Coll., Mansfield, Tioga Co., Pa. [Box J]
- Bell, Alexander, Asst. Master Mod. Langs., Deacon's School, Peterborough, Eng. [98 Lincoln Rd., Peterborough, Northants]
- Bell, (Walter) Herman, Prof. French, Hampden-Sidney Coll., Hampden-Sidney, Va.
- Bement, Newton S., Instr. French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [715 S. Forest]
- Bender, Harold H., Chairman Dept. Oriental Langs. and Lits., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.
- Benedict, George Wyllys, Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.

- ❖ Benham, Allen Rogers, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington Seattle, Wash.
- Benjamin, Philip Mohr, Asst. Prof. Eng., Allegheny Coll., Meadville, Pa
- Bennett, Charles Hodges, Research Asst Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [2800 Yale Sta]
- Bennett, (Mis) Josephine Waters, Asst. Instr Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [1163 Neil Ave]
- Bennett, Raymond M., Asst. Prof. Eng., New Jersey Coll. for Women, New Brunswick, N. J. [245 Delevan St]
- Bennett, Roger E., Instr Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [113 Mill St]
- Bennett, William Holmes, Asst. Prof. Eng., Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh, Pa
- Bennetton, Norman A., Instr. Rom Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2735 Prairie Ave]
- Benson, Adolph Burnett, Prof. German and Scandinavian, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [307 Hall of Grad Studies]
- Benson, Adolph Martin, Head Mod Lang. Dept., Jamestown Coll., Jamestown, N. D. [710 W 3rd St]
- ❖ Berdan, John Milton, Emily Sanford Prof. Eng. Lit., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1914 Yale Sta]
- Bergel, Lienhard, 210 Cranford Ave., Cranford, N. J.
- Berger, John W., Prof. German, Concordia Coll., St. Paul, Minn. [1229 Hague Ave.]
- ❖ Bergeron, Maxime L., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [511 W 146th St.]
- Bergé-Soler, Edward, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., H. S. of Commerce, Boston, Mass. [20 Hillside Rd., Newton Highlands]
- Bergin, Thomas Goddard, New York State Coll. for Teachers, Albany, N. Y.
- Berkowitz, H. Chonon, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [4145 Mandan Crescent]
- Berlitz, V. H., General Manager, Berlitz Schools of Langs., New York, N. Y. [30 W. 34th St.]
- Bernarda, Sister Mary, Head Mod. Lang. Dept. Mundelein Coll., 6363 Sheridan Rd., Chicago, Ill
- ❖ Bernbaum, Ernest, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [406 W. Illinois St.]
- Bernstorff, Frank Adolph, Asst. Prof. German, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Berrett, Donald S., Instr. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind [1007 E. 10th St]
- Bérubé, Ralph Louis, Prof. French, Fordham Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Berzunza, Julio, Asst. Prof. Langs., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H. [P. O. Box 74]
- Bethel, John P., General Editor, Merriam-Webster Dictionaries, G. and C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass
- ❖ de Béthune, Baron François, Bibliothèque de l'Université, Section de philologie romane, Place du peuple, Louvain, Belgium
- Bethurum, Dorothy, Prof. Eng., Lawrence Coll., Appleton, Wis [106 E. Lawrence St]
- Betz, Gotthelb Augustus, Asst. Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Box 983]
- Betz, Siegmund A. E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Lindenwood Coll., St. Charles, Mo
- Beutner, Sister Mary Louise, Prof. Eng., Webster Coll., Webster Groves, Mo.
- Bevans, Caleb Arundel, Grad. Stu. French, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [6938 Perry Ave]
- Bevington, Merle Mowbray, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Univ. Heights, New York, N. Y. [181st St. and University Ave.]
- Beyer, Ruth L., Assoc. Prof. French and German, Baldwin-Wallace Coll., Berea, Ohio [311 Front St]
- Bez, Paul G., Asst. Prof. German, Capital Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Biaggi, Zelmira, Instr. Spanish, Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn.
- Bieghler, Edward Wilson, Instr. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Biles, Myrtle Emily, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [404 W. Stocker St., Glendale]
- Billiod, Mathilde E., 2016 Cornell Rd., Cleveland, Ohio
- Bird, C. Wesley, Asst. Prof. French, Fresno State Teachers Coll., Fresno, Calif.
- Bird, James P., Prof. Rom. Langs., Carleton Coll., Northfield, Minn.
- Bishop, Carter Richard, Instr. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Bishop, David Horace, Vice-Chancellor and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss.
- Bishop, Morris G., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [903 Wyckoff Rd.]

- Bissell, Clifford Hershey, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1509 Euclid Ave.]
- Bissell, Kenneth M., Prof. French, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [7245 Hillside Ave.]
- Bizzoni, Maria Priglmeir, Instr. Italian, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Bjornstad, William B., Instr. Eng. and Hist., Colorado State Coll., Fort Collins, Colo. [629 S. College St.]
- Black, Frank Gees, Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [4 Humboldt St.]
- Black, Matthew Wilson, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Black, S. T., Grad. Stu., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [150 Atkinson Ave.]
- Blackburn, Bonnie Rebecca, Prof. French, James Millikin Univ., Decatur, Ill.
- Blackfan, Lucile L., Assoc. Prof. French, Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill.
- ❖ Blackwell, Robert Emory, Pres. and Prof. Eng., Randolph-Macon Coll., Ashland, Va.
- Blain, Stanton Forman, Instr. Spanish, Virginia Military Inst., Lexington, Va. [10 Sellers Ave.]
- Blair, William Lawrence, Michigan State Coll., East Lansing, Mich.
- Blake, George Holace, Asst. Prof. of Mod. Langs., Marietta Coll., Marietta, Ohio.
- Blanc, Agnes, Crane Junior Coll., Chicago, Ill. [415 Fullerton Parkway]
- Blanchard, Frederic Thomas, Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [1318 Maltman Ave.]
- Blanchard, Harold Hooper, Prof. Eng., Tufts College, Mass. [Box 14]
- Blanchard, Rae, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Blanchard, Ralph Leon, Instr., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- ❖ Blankenagel, John Charles, Prof. German, Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [214 High St.]
- Blankenbuehler, Lorenz, Prof. Eng., Concordia Coll., St. Paul, Minn. [1239 Carroll Ave.]
- Blankner, Frederika, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Western Reserve Univ., Flora Stone Mather Coll., Cleveland, Ohio
- Blau, Joseph L., Univ. Fellow, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [2095 Honeywell Ave.]
- Blegen, Anne Helene, Instr. French, Rochester Jr. Coll., Rochester, Minn.
- Bliss, Isabel T. John, Prof. Eng. Lit., Western Coll., Oxford, Ohio
- Bloch, Bernard, Editorial Staff, Linguistic Atlas, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Blodgett, Cornelia Otis Skinner, (Mrs. Alden S.), New York, N. Y. [7 Grace Sq.]
- Blodgett, Eleanor Dickinson, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Nassau Coll., Hempstead, N. Y. [330 Washington St.]
- Bloom, Margaret, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [905 W. Hill St., Champaign]
- Bloomfield, Leonard, Prof. Germanic Philology, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Bluhm, Heinz Siegfried, Instr. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Boas, Ralph P., Prof. Eng., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Boatright, Mody Goggin, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2616 Wichita St.]
- Bob, Elinore Helen, New York Univ., New York, N. Y. [525 West End Ave.]
- Bockstahler, Oscar Leo, Asst. Prof. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- Boege, Frederick William, Grad. Stu. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [85-14 90th St., Woodhaven, N. Y.]
- de Boer, Josephine, Instr. Rom. Langs., Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn. [772 Williams St.]
- Boesche, Albert Wilhelm, Prof. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Forest Home Dr.]
- Boeschstein, Hermann, Lecturer German, University College, Toronto, Canada
- Boesser, Otto H., Instr. German, Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala. [Box 503]
- Boggs, Ralph Steele, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [Box 625]
- Boie, Mildred, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Boillot, Sister Mary Paschal, O.P., Dominican Coll., San Rafael, Calif.
- Bossevain, Ottoline, Instr. French, Shorter Coll., Rome, Ga.
- Boll, Theophilus Ernest Martin, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [312 Bennett Hall]
- Bolles, Edwin Courtlandt, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [4 Griffin Lane, Haverford]
- Bolton, Frances, Librarian of Yale Forestry

- School, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [61 Division St]
- Bolton, Joseph Sheldon Gerry, Head Eng. Dept., Skidmore Coll., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
- Bolwell, Robert W., Prof. Am. Lit., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Bond, Donald Frederick, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- Bond, Otto Ferdinand, Prof. Teaching French and Chairman French and Spanish Langs. in the Coll., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- ❖ Bond, Richmond Pugh, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Bondy, Louis J., Prof. French, St. Michael's Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Bongiorno, Andrew, Instr. Eng., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [168 E. College St.]
- Bonilla, Lucia Dolores, Instr. Spanish, Colby Jr. Coll., New London, N. H.
- Bonner, Willard Hallam, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [3425 Main St.]
- Bonno, Gabriel, Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2574 Hilgard Ave.]
- ❖ Bonschur, Margaret Powers, Grad. Stu. Rom. Philology, Radcliffe Coll., Cambridge, Mass. [5 Concord Ave.]
- Booker, John Manning, Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. ["Senlac"]
- Boorsch, Jean, Asst. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [316 Hall of Graduate Studies]
- Boot, Estella May, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [B 2, Univ. Hall]
- Booth, Dorothy Winifred, Prof. French and German, La Salle-Peru Jr. Coll., La Salle, Ill. [821 Peoria St., Peru]
- Boothby, Sister Sylvia Marie, Prof. Eng., Fontbonne Coll., St. Louis, Mo.
- Borgerhoff, Elbert Benton Op't Eynde, Instr. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [76 Library Pl.]
- Borgese, Giuseppe Antonio, Comp. Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [35 Woodlawn Ave.]
- ❖ Borgman, Albert Stephens, Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Borish, Murray Eugene, Asst. Prof. Eng., Coll. of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.
- Borland, Lois Bertha, Head Eng. Dept., Western State Coll., Gunnison, Colo.
- Borresen, Alice Guénerat, Asst. Prof. French, Tufts Coll., Mass. [Capen House]
- Bosano, Gabriella, Prof. Italian, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass.
- Bossard, Samuel B., Instr. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [99 Alexander St.]
- Bosshard, Heinrich Morant, Asst. Prof. German, Clark Univ., Worcester, Mass.
- Botting, Roland Bassett, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington State Coll., Pullman, Wash. [700 Pine St.]
- Boucher, Sister M. Pierre, Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Coll. of Saint Teresa, Winona, Minn.
- Bouise, Oscar A., Prof. Eng., Xavier Univ., New Orleans, La.
- Bourgoin, Louise, Assoc. Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [231 Elm St.]
- Bourgoin, Marie-Jeanne, Asst. Prof. French, Mt. Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Bourland, Benjamin Parsons, Prof. Rom. Langs., Adelbert Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2193 Grandview Ave., Cleveland Heights]
- Bourland, Caroline Brown, Prof. Spanish, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [13 Belmont Ave.]
- ❖ Bouton, Archibald Lewis, Prof. Eng., Dean Coll. Arts and Pure Sciences, N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Bowe, Forrest, Head Mod. Lang. Dept., St. John's Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y. [110 Morningside Dr., N. Y. C.]
- Bowen, Abba Willard, Prin., Brownell Hall, Omaha, Neb. [Happy Hollow Blvd.]
- ❖ Bowen, Edwin Winfield, Prof. Latin, Randolph-Macon Coll., Ashland, Va.
- Bowen, Ray Preston, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore. [2271 Birch Lane]
- Bowen, Willis Herbert, Instr. Mod. Langs., Beloit Coll., Beloit, Wis.
- Bowers, Fredson Thayer, Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [110 Forest Ave., West Newton]
- Bowling, William Glasgow, Instr. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Bowman, Edgar Milton, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Wells Coll., Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y.
- Bowman, Francis Ezra, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [58 Summit Dr., Brighton]
- Bowman, John Russell, 40 Grace St., Malden, Mass.

- Bowman, Thomas Davies, Asst Prof Eng Lit., Pennsylvania State Coll, State College, Pa. [123 Hartswick Ave]
- Boywar, Emma, Southern Ill Teachers Coll, Carbondale, Ill
- Bowyer, John Wilson, Prof. Eng, Southern Methodist Univ, Dallas, Tex.
- Boyce, Benjamin, Asst. Prof. Eng, Municipal Univ. of Omaha, Omaha, Neb.
- Boyce, Margaret, Mitchell Coll, Statesville, N. C.
- Boyce, William Cosway, Instr. Eng, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Boyd, Clark Edward, Instr. Eng, Morris County Jr. Coll, Morristown, N. J.
- Boyer, Clarence Valentine, President and Head Eng Dept, Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.
- Boyer, Frances E., Grad. Stu., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [106 Morningside Dr.]
- Boynton, Grace M, Yenching Univ., Peiping, China
- Boynton, Percy Holmes, Prof. Eng, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- ❖ Boysen, Johannes Lassen, Prof. Germanic Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [Box 1510, University Sta.]
- Braasch, Theodor, Asst. Prof German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [5284 Turney Rd]
- Braddy, Haldeen, Head Eng. Dept, Sul Ross State Teachers Coll, Alpine, Tex.
- Bradford, Eugene Francis, Director of Admission, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Bradford, George Winthrop, Asst. Prof. Eng., Coll of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio [Douglass Hall]
- von Bradish, Joseph A., Asst. Prof. German, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [635 Riverside Dr.]
- Bradley, Edward Sculley, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [730 Vernon Rd., Mt. Airy, Phila.]
- Bradley, Francine Brustlein (Mrs. Lyman R. Bradley), 74 Macdougall St., New York, N. Y.
- Bradley, Francis Wright, Head Dept. German, Univ. of S. C., Columbia, S. C. [719 Bull St.]
- ❖ Bradley, Lyman Richard, Asst. Prof. German, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Bradley, Mary Margaret, Teach. Eng., Abraham Lincoln H. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. [2121 Beekman Pl.]
- Bradley, Robert Foster, Jr, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Bradley, Russell Layman, Instr. German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1110 Yale Sta.]
- ❖ Bradner, Leicester, Asst Prof. Eng, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Bradshaw, S. Ernest, Prof Mod. Langs., Furman Univ., Greenville, S C [321 Univ. Ridge]
- Brady, Caroline Agnes Von Egmont, Instr. Eng, Univ. of Calif., Branch of the Coll. of Agric., Davis, Calif.
- Branch, Leonora, Assoc. Prof Eng, Mt Holyoke Coll, South Hadley, Mass [Hooker House]
- Branchi, Eugene Camillus, Prof. Rom. Langs, Univ. of San Francisco, San Francisco, Calif [604 Montgomery St.]
- Brand, Robert F., Instr. French and German, College Dept., Cazenovia Seminary, Cazenovia, N. Y. [Box 211]
- ❖ Brandon, Edgar Ewing, Emeritus Prof. Rom. Langs., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio
- Brashear, Minnie M., Asst Prof Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [605 S. 4th St.]
- Braswell, William, Instr Eng., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind.
- Braun, George M., Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., St. Louis Univ., St Louis, Mo.
- ❖ Braun, William Alfred, Prof. Germanic Langs. and Lit., Barnard Coll, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Braunlich, Arthur Richard, Jr., Tutor, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [153 W. 82nd St.]
- Brawley, Benjamin G., Prof. Eng., Howard Univ., Washington, D. C. [1201 Harvard St., N.W.]
- Brawner, James Paul, Instr. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [25 Wilson Ave]
- Brede, Alexander, Jr., Instr. Eng, Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [529 Hawthorne St., Royal Oak, Mich.]
- Bredvold, Louis I., Prof. Eng, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2034 Norway Rd.]
- Breitenbach, H. L., Prof. German, Elmhurst Coll., Elmhurst, Ill. [179 S. Kenilworth Ave.]
- Brendemuhl, Gabriella Clara, Eng. Dept., State Teachers Coll, LaCrosse, Wis.
- Brenes-Mésen, Roberto, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [P.O. Box 88]

- Brennecke, Ernest, Jr., Lecturer Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [509 Journalism Bldg.]
- Brennecke, Henry, Assoc. Prof. German, N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [University Heights]
- Brenneman, Naomi, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Bluffton Coll., Bluffton, Ohio [102 Spring St.]
- Brenner, Clarence Dietz, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Bresnahan, Vivian H., Prof. Eng., Antioch Coll., Yellow Springs, Ohio [140 W. Limestone St.]
- Brett, Lewis Edward, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass. [1 Chapin Court]
- Brewer, Ann Eliza, Instr. French, Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga.
- Brewer, Edward Vere, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1305 Bay View Pl.]
- Brewer, Sam Pope, 7 Van Nest Pl., New York, N. Y.
- Brewer, Theodore Hampton, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla.
- Brewer, Wilmon, Great Hill, Hingham, Mass.
- Brewster, Dorothy, Asst. Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Brewster, Paul G., Eng. Dept., Oakland City Public School, Oakland City, Ind.
- ❖ Brewster, William Tenney, Prof. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Briggs, Margaret B., Grad. Stu., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [64 Maple Dr., Great Neck, L. I., N. Y.]
- Briggs, William Dinsmore, Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., California [Box 27]
- Brightfield, Myron F., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1431 LeRoy Ave.]
- Brill, Mary Campbell, Instr. Eng., Beaver Coll., Jenkintown, Pa.
- Brinkley, Roberta Florence, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Brinkmeier, Ina Hill, Head Spanish Dept., Mary Hardin-Baylor Coll., Belton, Tex. [Box 591 Baylor Sta.]
- Briscoe, John d'Auby, Instr. Eng., Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass. [Warren House]
- Briscoe, Walter Matthew, Head of French Dept., Baylor Univ., Waco, Tex.
- ❖ Bristol, Edward N., Henry Holt and Co., New York, N. Y. [One Park Ave.]
- Brittain, Robert Edward, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [1773 King Ave.]
- Broadus, Edmund Kemper, Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Alberta, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada
- Brock, Marianne, Stu. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Radnor Hall]
- Brodeur, Arthur Gilchrist, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2711 Shasta Rd.]
- Broeker, Hugo, Prof. and Head German Dept., Coll. of St. Francis, Joliet, Ill.
- ❖ Bronk, Isabelle, Prof. Emeritus French Lang. and Lit., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- Bronson, Bertrand Harris, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [415 Wheeler Hall]
- ❖ Bronson, Thomas Bertrand, Asst. Head Master Emeritus, Lawrenceville Sch., Lawrenceville, N. J. [936 Oxford St., Berkeley, Calif.]
- Brook, George Leslie, Asst. Lecturer Eng., Univ. of Manchester, Manchester, Eng. [Post Office, Shepley, nr. Huddersfield]
- ❖ Brooke, C. F. Tucker, Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [243 Hall of Grad. Studies]
- Brooke, C. Vyner, Instr. Rom. Langs., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [240 Maine St.]
- Brooking, Rollic M., Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Idaho State Normal Sch., Lewiston, Idaho
- Brooks, Cleanth, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge, La.
- Brooks, Frances Eleanor, Grad. Stu., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [166 Plymouth Rd., Newton Highlands, Mass.]
- Brooks, John, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [1738 E. Third St.]
- Brooks, John Lee, Asst. Prof. Eng., Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex. [3440 Haynie Ave.]
- Brooks, Neil Conwell, Prof. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- ❖ Broughton, Leslie Nathan, Prof. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [931 N. Tioga St.]
- ❖ Brown, Arthur C. L., Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [625 Colfax St.]
- ❖ Brown, Beatrice Daw (Mrs. Carleton

- Brown), Upper Montclair, N. J. [29 Warfield St.]
- ❖ Brown, Calvin S., Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss.
- Brown, Calvin S., Jr., Prof. Eng., West Tenn. State Teachers Coll., Memphis, Tenn. [555 Ellsworth St.]
- ❖ Brown, Carleton, Grad. Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [29 Warfield St., Upper Montclair, N. J.]
- Brown, Charles Barrett, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Brown, David, Asst. Prof. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- ❖ Brown, Frank Clyde, Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C.
- Brown, Harcourt, Prof. and Head French Dept., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- ❖ Brown, Harold Gibson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss. [Box 125]
- Brown, Herbert Ross, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [32 College St.]
- Brown, John David Miller, Head Eng. Dept., Muhlenberg Coll., Allentown, Pa. [1620 Walnut St.]
- Brown, John Hart, Assoc. Prof. French, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Brown, Joseph Epes, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Windsor Rd., Asheville, N. C.]
- Brown, Lydia, Teacher Commercial Subjects, Cardozo H. S., Washington, D. C. [1737 S St., N.W.]
- Brown, Mary Gilbert, Prof. Italian, Elmira Coll., Elmira, N. Y. [365 W. Fourth St.]
- Brown, Paul Alonzo, Instr. Eng., Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [Box 192]
- Brown, Thomas K., Jr., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila. Pa. [226 Dickinson Ave., Swarthmore]
- Brownfield, Lilian B., Eng. Dept., DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.
- Bruce, Kenneth Christopher, Senior French Master, Quarry Bank H. S., Liverpool, Eng. [21 Heathfield Rd., Liverpool, 15]
- Bruehl, Henry Joseph, Prof. French, German, and Greek, Rosemont Coll., Rosemont, Pa. [Bryn Mawr Gables D.5, Bryn Mawr]
- Bruel, Andrée, Assoc. Prof. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Tower Court]
- Bruerton, Courtney, Malden, Mass. [43 Ivy Rd.]
- Brugère, Raymond, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia. [220 D Schaeffer Hall]
- Brun, Marcel J., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- ❖ Bruner, James Dowden, 5350 Fleming Ave., Oakland, Calif.
- ❖ Bruns, Friedrich, Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Brush, Henry Raymond, Prof. French, Univ. of Calif. at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif.
- ❖ Brush, Murray Peabody, Headmaster, California Prep. Sch., Covina, Calif.
- Bryan, William Frank, Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1907 Orrington Ave.]
- Bryne, Eva A. W., Germantown, Phila., Pa. [372 Church Lane]
- Bryson, Frederick Robertson, 2506 Chester St., Little Rock, Ark.
- Buchanan, Dorothy Anne, Grad. Stu. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Wyndham Hall]
- Buchanan, Milton Alexander, Prof. Italian and Spanish, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Buck, Dorothy V., 651A Gilman St. Palo Alto, Calif.
- Buck, Philo Melvin, Jr., Prof. and Chairman Comparative Lit. Dept., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [1852 Summit Ave.]
- Buckingham, Elizabeth Lee, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 102]
- Buckingham, Leroy Howland, Asst. Prof. Eng., Newark Univ., Newark, N. J.
- ❖ Buckingham, Mary H., Boston, Mass. [96 Chestnut St.]
- Buckley, George Truett, Dean of Coll., Prof. Eng., Blue Mountain Coll., Blue Mountain, Miss.
- Bucknell, William H., 15, Osborne Rd., Southville, Bristol, 3, England
- Buehler, Reginald Guyon, Asst. Prof. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass. [College Place]
- Buell, Llewellyn Morgan, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [405 S. Beloit Ave.]
- Buffington, Albert Franklin, Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [21 Sparks St.]
- ❖ Buffum, Douglas Larabee, Prof. Rom. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [60 Hodge Rd.]
- Buka, Ruth, Prof. German, Elmira Coll., Elmira, N. Y.

- ❖ Bullock, Walter L., Univ. of Manchester, Manchester, 13, England
- Bulluck, Reading D., Jr, Fellow Eng, Univ of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn
- Bundy, Murray Wright, Prof. Eng, Head of Dept., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash.
- Burch, Charles Eaton, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Howard Univ., Washington, D. C
- Burgevin, Leslie Gale, Assoc. Prof. Eng Lit, Mt. Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Burgum, Edwin Berry, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. Univ, New York, N. Y.
- Burke, Charles Bell, Head Dept. Eng., Univ of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn [1635 Laurel Ave.]
- Burkhard, Arthur, Asst Prof German, Harvard Univ, Cambridge, Mass [3 Hillside Pl] (c/o Gelbrich, Uhlandstr 40, Dresden A24, Germany)
- Burkhard, Oscar Carl, Prof. German, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Burner, Jarvis Burr, Instr. Rom Langs, Univ of Illinois, Urbana, Ill [229 Lincoln Hall]
- ❖ Burnett, Arthur W, Henry Holt and Co., New York, N. Y. [One Park Ave.]
- Burnham, Josephine May, Prof Eng, Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kans [1652 Mississippi St.]
- Burns, J. Anderson, Prof. Eng, John Marshall Coll of Law, 136-25 39th Ave., Flushing, N. Y.
- Burris, Quincy Guy, Asst. Prof. Eng., Eastern Illinois State Teachers Coll, Charleston, Ill [1528 Fourth St.]
- Burris-Meyer, Harold, Asst Prof Eng., Stevens Inst. of Technology, Hoboken, N. J. [445 West 23rd St, New York, N. Y.]
- Bursley, Philip E., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Burton, Mary Elizabeth, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Louisville, Louisville, Ky.
- ❖ Busch, Ella Adeline, Teacher of Spanish, George Washington H. S., New York, N. Y. [417 W 120th St.]
- Bush, J. N. Douglas, Prof. Eng, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [220 Follow Hall]
- ❖ Bush, Stephen Hays, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- Bushee, Alice Huntington, Prof. Spanish, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Bushnell, Nelson Sherwin, Asst. Prof. Eng, Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass
- ❖ Busse, Adolf, Head Dept German, Hunter Coll, New York, N. Y.
- Bussom, Thomas Wannright, Prof. Rom. Langs, Wesleyan Univ, Middletown, Conn
- Butler, Geo Paul, Assoc Eng, Los Angeles, Jr Coll, 855 N. Vermont Ave, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Butler, (Rev) Patrick N, Prof Eng., St. Norbert Coll, West De Pere, Wis.
- Butler, Pierce, Dean and Prof Eng, Newcomb Coll, New Orleans, La.
- Butterworth, Joseph, Jr, Assoc Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash
- Byam, Edwin Colby, Assoc Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del
- Byington, Jeannette Gregory, Instr. Rom Langs, Wells Coll, Aurora, N. Y.
- Byrne, Sister St. Geraldine, Eng. Dept., D'Youville Coll, Buffalo, N. Y. [Sisters Coll., Brady Hall, Brookland, D. C.]
- Byrne, Carlton E., Acting Instr. German, Stanford Univ, Calif [878 Col. Ave, Menlo Park]
- Cabeen, David Clark, Prof. Rom. Langs, Vanderbilt Univ, Nashville, Tenn.
- Cady, Frank William, Prof. Eng., Middlebury Coll, Middlebury, Vt. [57 South St]
- Caffee, Nathaniel Montier, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [Box 453, University, Baton Rouge, La.]
- Cailliet, Emile, Prof. French Lit. and Civilization, Scripps Coll, Claremont, Calif. [1230 Harvard Ave]
- Cain, H. Edward, Instr. Eng., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C [3109 35th St., N.E.]
- Calcott, Emily Sinclair, State Teachers Coll, Troy, Ala.
- Calder, Grace J., Asst. Prof. Eng., Milwaukee-Downer Coll., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Caldwell, Henry Holland, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Florida, Gainesville, Fla. [1959 Leon St.]
- Caldwell, James R., Eng. Dept., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [414 Wheeler Hall]
- Caldwell, Mable, Asst. Prof. Eng., Oklahoma A. and M. Coll., Stillwater, Okla. [710 Monroe]
- Caldwell, Robert Atchison, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Hitchcock Hall]

- ❖ Callaway, Morgan, Jr., Prof. Eng., Univ of Texas, Austin, Tex. [1206 Guadalupe St]
- Callicott, Frank, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Columbia Univ, New York, N. Y.
- Calvert, William J., Prof. Mod Langs., State Teachers Coll, Jacksonville, Ala. [Box 37]
- Cambiaire, Célestin Pierre, Prof. Mod. Langs, Wildchif Jr. Coll, Swaithmore, Pa
- Camden, Charles Carroll, Jr., Instr. Eng., The Rice Inst, Houston, Tex
- Camera, Americo Ulysses Nicholas, Prof and Head Dept Rom Langs., Brooklyn Coll, 57 Willoughby St, Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Cameron, Donald Forrester, Asst. Prof Eng, Rutgers Univ, New Brunswick, N. J [Box 32]
- Cameron, (Rev ) Kenneth Walter, Univ. Fellow, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [80 Sachem St]
- Camillus, Sister M, Head German Dept, St. Xavier Coll. for Women, Chicago, Ill. [4928 Cottage Grove Ave]
- Camp, Truman Wildes, Instr. Eng, Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Tex. [Box 74, Tech. Sta.]
- ❖ Campbell, Killis, Prof. Eng, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [705 W. 23d St.]
- Campbell, Lily B., Prof. Eng, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif. [871 N. Kenmore Ave.]
- Campbell, Mary Elizabeth, Instr. Eng, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind [215 Forest Pl]
- ❖ Campbell, Oscar James, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ, New York, N. Y. [609 Philosophy Hall]
- Campbell, Robert Lee, Prof. Eng., Hendrix Coll, Conway, Ark,
- Campbell, T. Moody, Prof. German, Northwestern Univ, Evanston, Ill. [1903 Orrington Ave.]
- Canary, Peyton Henry, Jr., Head Dept. Eng., Central Normal Coll., Danville, Ind. [392 S. Kentucky]
- Canby, Henry Seidel, Lecturer Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [333 E. 53rd St, N. Y. C.]
- ❖ Canfield, Arthur Graves, Prof. Emeritus Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2104 Dorset Rd.]
- Canfield, Delos Lincoln, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Cannaday, Daniel Aldredge, Prof. Eng., Radford State Teachers Coll., East Radford, Va. [1323 Grove Ave]
- Cannell, Margaret, Instr. Eng, Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [2751 Washington St]
- Cannon, Lee Edwin, Prof and Chairman Dept. Mod Langs, Hiram Coll, Hiram, Ohio
- Cano, Juan, Assoc. Prof. Italian and Spanish, Univ of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Cantarella, Michele, Instr. Italian, Smith College, Northampton, Mass [51 Belmont Ave.]
- Caplan, Harry, Prof. and Act. Head Classics Dept, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y [121 Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Cappon, Alexander P., Asst. Prof Eng Lit., Montana State Coll, Bozeman, Mont.
- Card, William Martin, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis [Bascom Hall]
- Cardew, Robert H., Instr. Rom Langs., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Carey, Elisabeth, Assoc. Prof Eng, Michigan State Normal Coll., Ypsilanti, Mich.
- Cargill, Oscar, Asst. Prof. Eng, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ, New York, N. Y. [593 Upper Mountain Ave., Upper Montclair, N. J.]
- Carlson, Harold G., Assoc. Prof. German, Wells Coll, Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y. [P.O. #74]
- Carlson, Karl H., Prof. Eng, Elmhurst Coll., Elmhurst, Ill
- Carman, J. Neale, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ of Kansas, Lawrence, Kans. [1113 Kentucky St]
- Carmody, Francis James, Instr. French, Univ of California, Berkeley, Calif [463 Wheeler Hall]
- ❖ Carnahan, David Hobart, Head Dept Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [607 W. Nevada St]
- Carner, Robert Jordan, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass. [Box 8]
- Carpenter, Fred Donald, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt [28 Kingsland Terrace]
- Carpenter, Millington Farwell, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. H. S., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- ❖ Carr, Muriel Bothwell, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [Folwell Hall]
- Carrière, Joseph Médard, Instr. French, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.

- Carrigan, Rev. Edward, S. J., Dean, Coll. of Liberal Arts, Xavier Univ., Cincinnati, Ohio
- Carrington, Herbert DeWitt, Prof. German, Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [Box 4254, Univ. Sta.]
- Carroll, Welsey Barnett, Chairman Eng., Norman Jr. Coll., Norman Park, Ga.
- Carson, Lucy Hamilton, Prof. Eng., Montana State Normal Coll., Dillon, Mont.
- Carson, Morgan Steele, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Carson, William Glasgow Bruce, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Carter, Earl Kendall, Prof. French, Piedmont Coll., Demorest, Ga.
- Carter, Henry Holland, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [316 N. Jordan Ave.]
- Carver, James E., Tutor Eng., The City Coll., 17 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Cary, Esther C., Prof. French, Connecticut Coll. for Women, New London, Conn. [17 Fremont St.]
- Casady, Edwin R., Instr. Eng., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass. [Box 175]
- Casaldueiro, Joaquin, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [22 Paradise Rd.]
- ❖ Case, Arthur Ellicott, Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [713 Ingle-side Pl.]
- Cashin, Lillian E., Prof. Eng. and Comparative Lit., Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Casis, Lilia Mary, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Caskey, John Homer, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [84 Second St.]
- Cassal, Renée Madeleine, Instr. French and German, Milton Academy, Milton, Mass.
- Cast, Gottlob C., Prof. German, Lawrence Coll., Appleton, Wis. [925 E. Franklin St.]
- Castellano, Caudad Rodríguez, Instr. Spanish, Barnard Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Cattell, James L., Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind. [118 S. 9th St.]
- Caulfield, Ruby van Allen, Prof. Mod. Foreign Langs., Mississippi State Coll. for Women, Columbus, Miss. [Box 1034]
- Cawley, F. Stanton, Asst. Prof. Scandinavian Langs. and Lits., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [65 Fresh Pond Parkway]
- Cawley, Robert Ralston, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [124 Pyne Hall]
- Centeno, Augusto, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [134 Jefferson Rd.]
- Centeno, Juan, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Middlebury Coll., Middlebury, Vt.
- Cerf, Barry, Prof. Lit., Reed Coll., Portland, Ore. [6705 32nd Ave., S. E.]
- Certain, Casper Carl, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [Box 67, North End Sta.]
- Chalmers, Gordon Keith, Asst. Prof. Eng., Mt. Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [14 Silver St., South Hadley Centre]
- Chalmers, Roberta T. S. (Mrs. Gordon K.), Assoc. Prof. Eng., Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill. [1020 N. Second St.]
- ❖ Chamberlin, Willis Arden, Prof. Mod. Langs., Denison Univ., Granville, Ohio.
- Chambers, Florence Butler, 732 Ostrom Ave., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Chambers, Frank McMinn, Instr. Rom. Langs., Colorado Coll., Colorado Springs, Colo. [1317 N. Tejon St.]
- Chan, Shau Wing, Univ. Fellow Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif. [1235 Powell St., San Francisco]
- Chandler, Frank Wadleigh, Prof. Eng. and Comp. Lit., Dean Coll. of Liberal Arts, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [323 Warren Ave., Clifton]
- Chandler, Zilpha Emma, Prof. Eng., Keuka Coll., Keuka Park, N. Y. [to Sept. 1, '36. 406 S. Clinton St., Iowa City, Iowa]
- Chang, Y. Z., Prof. Eng., National Central Univ., Nanking, China [Visiting Prof., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.]
- Chapin, Elsa, Head Eng. Dept., Packer Collegiate Inst., Brooklyn, N. Y. [170 Jorammon St.]
- Chapin, Lloyd Walter, Prof. Eng., Georgia School of Technology, Atlanta, Ga.
- Chapman, Alfred K., Asst. Prof. Eng., Colby Coll., Waterville, Me. [Box 155]
- Chapman, Coolidge Otis, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Coll. of Puget Sound, Tacoma, Wash. [811 N. 11th St.]
- Chapman, Percy Addison, Assoc. Prof. French, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [293 Nassau St.]
- Chapman, Ruth Mowry, Shelbourne Falls, Mass. [15 Masonic Ave.]
- Chappell, Louis Watson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- ❖ Charles, Arthur M., Prof. German, Earlham Coll., Richmond, Ind.
- Charles, Mary Lane, Scholar French, Bryn

- Mawr Coll, Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Radnor Hall]
- Charvat, William, Instr Eng, Washington Sq Coll, N Y Univ, New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Chase, Gertrude, Prof Eng, Wells Coll, Aurora, N. Y. [16 Prescott St, Newtonville, Mass]
- Chase, Mary Ellen, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit, Smith Coll, Northampton, Mass.
- Chase, Stanley P, Prof Eng Lit, Bowdoin Coll, Brunswick, Me [254 Maine St]
- Chase, Mrs Stephen, Jr., Grad Asst Eng, Univ of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [432 Marcia Ave, Hamilton]
- Chatfield-Taylor, Hobart C, Santa Barbara, Calif [900 Hot Springs Rd]
- ❖ Chaytor, Rev H. J, Univ. Lecturer French, St Catherine's Coll, Cambridge University, England
- ❖ Cheever, Louisa Sewall, Assoc Prof Eng Lang and Lit, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass [172 Elm St]
- Chenel, Ernest, Prof. French Lit and Head French Dept, Fordham Grad. Sch., Fordham Univ, 223 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
- Chenot, Anna Adèle, Assoc Prof. French, Smith Coll, Northampton, Mass. [367 Prospect St.]
- Chernowitz, Maurice E., Instr Rom Langs, The City Coll, New York, N. Y. [640 W. 139 St]
- Chester, Allan Griffith, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Box 16, College Hall]
- Chew, Samuel Claggett, Prof. Eng. Lit., Bryn Mawr Coll, Bryn Mawr, Pa. [The Library]
- Cheydleur, Frederic D., Prof. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- ❖ Child, Clarence Griffin, Prof. Eng, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [Merion, Pa.]
- Child, Philip Albert, Instr. Eng, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [23 Grozier Rd.]
- Child, Ruth Carpenter, Head Eng. Dept., Dickinson Jr. Coll., Williamsport, Pa.
- ❖ Childs, Francis Lane, Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll, Hanover, N. H.
- Childs, Herbert Ellsworth, Instr. Eng, Oregon State Agric Coll., Corvallis, Ore.
- Childs, Ralph de Someri, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [2268 Sedgwick Ave]
- Chiles, James Alburn, Prof. Mod. Langs., Wofford Coll, Spartanburg, S. C. [510 Hampton Dr]
- Chinard, Gilbert, Prof. French Lit. and Comp Lit, The Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Chrétien, Charles Douglas, Instr Pub. Speaking, Univ. of Calif., Berkeley, Calif. [Faculty Club]
- Chrisman, Clarence G, Asst Prof French and Spanish, William Jewell Coll., Liberty, Mo [131 Morse Ave.]
- Christensen, Parley A, Prof Eng, Brigham Young Univ, Provo, Utah [369 North Third East]
- Christian, Mildred Gayler, Instr Eng., H. Sophie Newcomb Memorial Coll for Women, New Orleans, La [6316 Freret St]
- Christian, William Turner, Asst Prof. Eng, Fenn Coll., Cleveland, Ohio [2200 Prospect Ave]
- Christy, Arthur Edward, Instr. Eng, Columbia Univ, New York, N Y [606 Philosophy Hall]
- Chrysanthia, Sister M, O.S.F, Teach. Eng, Coll of Saint Francis, Joliet, Ill [303 Taylor St]
- Chrysologa, Sister Mary, Assoc. Dean, Notre Dame Junior Coll., 320 E Ripa Ave., St. Louis, Mo
- ❖ Church, Henry Ward, Prof. Rom. Langs., Allegheny Coll., Meadville, Pa. [296 Loomis St.]
- Church, Howard Wadsworth, Prof. German and Head Dept Mod. Langs, Lafayette Coll, Easton, Pa. [296 Loomis St]
- Churchill, Irving Lester, Asst Prof. Eng, Bucknell Univ Jr. Coll, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.
- Cilley, Melissa A, Asst. Prof Spanish, Agnes Scott Coll., Decatur, Ga.
- Clapp, Edwin Roosa, Asst Prof Eng., Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah [Box 118]
- Clapp, Harold L., Assoc Prof. Rom. Langs., Lake Erie Coll., Painesville, Ohio [23 W. High St.]
- Clapp, Sarah Lewis Carol, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Louisiana State Normal Coll, Natchitoches, La [106 Cypress Lane]
- Clark, Amelia Elizabeth, Prof. French, Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa.
- Clark, Charles Upson, Prof. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Clark, David Lee, Adjunct Prof. Eng, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.

- Clark, Donald L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [301 Business Bldg.]
- Clark, Eleanor Grace, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., Park Ave. and 68th St., New York, N. Y. [28 E. 70th St.]
- Clark, Ella Elizabeth, Assoc. Eng., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash. [212 Columbia]
- Clark, Evert Mordecai, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [University Sta.]
- Clark, Harry Hayden, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Clark, Joseph D., Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., N. C. State Coll., Raleigh, N. C.
- Clark, Robert Thomas, Jr., Asst. Prof. German, Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge, La. [Box 2244]
- Clark, Roy B., Head Eng. Dept., State Teachers Coll., Richmond, Ky. [249 Sunset Ave.]
- Clark, Ruth Elvira, Assoc. Prof. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Clark, William Smith, 2nd, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [McMicken Hall]
- Clarke, Dorothy Clotelle, Prof. Spanish, Dominican Coll., San Rafael, Calif. [1119 E. Las Tunas Dr., San Gabriel]
- Clawson, William Hall, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. Coll., Toronto, Canada.
- Clement, Nemours Honore, 208 Orchard Rd., Newark, Del.
- Clement, Sister M., Dean, Incarnate Word Coll., San Antonio, Texas.
- Clements, Robert John, Teaching Fellow Rom., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Clendenin, David Lawrence, Ardsley on Hudson, N. Y.
- Click, L. L., Prof. Eng. and Asst. Dean, Coll. of Arts and Sciences, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [University Sta.]
- Clifford, James Lowry, Cutting Traveling Fellow, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [1434 Riverside Dr., Evansville, Ind.]
- Cline, Clarence Lee, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [Box 1649, Univ. Sta.]
- Cline, James M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Clippinger, Frank Warren, Prof. Eng., Lawrence Coll., Appleton, Wis. [715 E. Alton St.]
- Clough, Wilson O., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo.
- Clubb, Merrel Dare, Prof. Eng., Texas Christian Univ., Fort Worth, Tex. [3025 Cockrell St.]
- Clugston, Phil R., Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Arkansas State Teachers Coll., Conway, Ark.
- Coad, Oral Sumner, Prof. Eng., New Jersey Coll. for Women, New Brunswick, N. J. [House R., Douglas Campus]
- Cobb, Lillian, Prof. and Head Dept. Foreign Langs., Northern Illinois State Teachers Coll., DeKalb, Ill. [322 Augusta Ave.]
- Cochran, Grace, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [P. O. Box 693]
- Coe, Ada May, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Coenen, Frederic Edward, Instr. German, Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [407A E. Franklin St.]
- Coester, Alfred, Prof. Spanish-American Lit., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 1725]
- Coeffin, Charles Monroe, Asst. Prof. Eng., Kenyon Coll., Gambier, Ohio.
- Coffin, Robert P. Tristram, Pierce Prof. Eng., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [44 Hayswell St.]
- Coffman, Mrs. Bertha Reed, Assoc. Prof. German, Simmons Coll., Boston, Mass. [274 Brookline Ave.]
- Coffman, George Raleigh, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Coie, John Sloss, Asst. Prof. Eng., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash. [1714 Monroe St.]
- Coindreau, Maurice Edgar, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [413 1903 Hall]
- ❖ Colburn, Guy Blandin, Prof. Foreign Langs., Fresno State Teachers Coll., Fresno, Calif.
- Colby, Ralph, Asst. Prof. Eng., Oregon State Agri. Coll., Corvallis, Ore.
- Colditz, Carl Otto, German Dept., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich.
- Cole, George Watson, Librarian Emeritus, Henry E. Huntington Lib. and Art Gallery, San Marino, Calif. [1445 Lombardy Rd., Pasadena]
- ❖ Coleman, Algernon, Prof. French, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5712 Dorchester Ave.]
- Coleman, Arthur Prudden, Lect. Slavonic Langs., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [406 Philosophy Hall]

- Coleman, Ernest Claude, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [436 Commerce Bldg.]
- Coleman, Helen Mary, Instr. French, Coll. of Notre Dame of Baltimore, Charles St. Ave., Baltimore, Md.
- Coleman, Rufus Arthur, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Montana, Missoula, Mont. [Furnald Hall, Columbia Univ., N. Y. C.]
- Coleman, Sarah Embry, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Knox Coll., Galesburg, Ill.
- Coleman, William Harold, Prof. Eng., Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa. [28 Univ. Ave.]
- ❖ Collier, Elizabeth Brownell, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [400 Clinton Ave., Brooklyn]
- Collins, Francis W., New York, N. Y. [70 E. 45th St.]
- Collins, Ralph L., Instr. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [321 N. Jordan Ave.]
- Collins, Ralph Stokes, Assoc. Prof. French and Germ., Maryville Coll., Maryville, Tenn.
- Collins, Seward, Editor, The American Review, 218 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Collins, William Howes, Montclair, N. J. [146 Walnut St.]
- Collitz, Klara H., (Mrs. Hermann), Late Lecturer in Mod. Phil., Baltimore, Md. [1027 N. Calvert St.]
- Colman, Charles Wilson, Instr. French, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith, Hall]
- ❖ Colville, William T., Carbondale, Pa.
- ❖ Colwell, William Arnold, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Adelphi Coll., Garden City, L. I., N. Y.
- Combs, Homer Carroll, Asst. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1307 Grant St.]
- Comfort, William Wistar, President, Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa.
- Compton, Alfred D., Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [605 W. 142 St.]
- ❖ Conklin, Clara, Prof. Emeritus Rom. Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Conklin, Henry Ernest, Roslyn, L. I., N. Y.
- Conklin, Jotilda, Asst. Prof. French, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [214 N. Dunn St.]
- Conklin, Paul S., Prof. Eng., Hanover Coll., Hanover, Ind. [on leave: 1455 Fulham St., St. Paul, Minn.]
- Conklin, Robert J., Instr. Eng., Muhlenberg Coll., Allentown, Pa.
- Conley, Carey Herbert, Prof. Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [79 Lawn Ave.]
- Connell, Chester Chisholm, Instr. Spanish, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Stonington, Conn.]
- Connor, Carl Yoder, Prof. and Head Eng., Dept., Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Connors, Donald Francis, Instr. and Program Adviser Eng. Dept., Teachers Coll., Fordham Univ., New York, N. Y. [1643 Glenwood Rd., Brooklyn]
- Conrad, Bernard Roy, Burnsville, W. Va.
- Conrad, Elisabeth, Dean of Women, Michigan State Coll., East Lansing, Mich. [3 Faculty Row]
- ❖ Conrow, Georgiana, Asst. Prof. French, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Cons, Louis, Prof. French Lit., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [70 Morningside Dr.]
- Constans, Antony, Head French and Italian Dept., Birmingham-Southern Coll., Birmingham, Ala.
- Cook, Francis Connor, Instr. French, Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Tex. [Box 114]
- Cook, Leroy James, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Cooke, Mrs. Alice Lovelace, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [4210 Ave. C.]
- Cooke, John Daniel, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [1136 S. Dunsmuir Ave.]
- Cool, Charles Dean, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [1921 Keyes Ave.]
- Coolidge, Lowell William, Instr. Eng., Coll. of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio [210 E. Henrietta St.]
- Cooper, Anna Pearl, Assoc. Prof. Eng., George Washington Univ., Washington D. C. [1028 Connecticut Ave.]
- Cooper, Charles W., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Whittier Coll., Whittier, Calif.
- ❖ Cooper, Lane, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- ❖ Cooper, William Alpha, Prof. Emeritus German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [625 Salvatierra St.]
- Copeland, Thomas Wellsted, Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1566 Yale Sta.]
- Corbató, Hermenegildo, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Calif. at Los Angeles, Calif. [2012 Manning Ave.]

- Corbière, Anthony S., Prof. Rom. Langs., Muhlenberg Coll., Allentown, Pa. [814 N. 21st St.]
- ❖ Corley, Ames Haven, Prof. Rom. Langs., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass. [Fort Hoosac Pl.]
- Cornelius, Roberta Douglas, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- ❖ Cornelson, Charles Arthur, Washington, D. C. [3041 Sedgwick St., N.W.]
- Cornog, William Hafner, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [903 Michigan Ave.]
- Cornwall, Irene, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- ❖ Corwin, Robert Nelson, Prof. German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [247 St. Ronan St.]
- Cattier, Hamilton, 65 Stockton St., Princeton, N. J.
- Cattrell, Miss Nickolas, Apt. 15A, 225 E. 79th St., New York, N. Y.
- Cues, Robert Wheaton, Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [3 Acacia St.]
- Coessin, Blanche, Instr. French, Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- Coulter, Vinell Carey, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo.
- Courtlines, Pierre, Instr. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 17 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Cousins, Clarence Edwin, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [1030 E. College St.]
- Cousins, Paul Mercer, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Shorter Coll., Rome, Ga. [205 Sherwood Rd.]
- Coutinho, Arno Carl, Fichenstr. 54, Ham-burg 19, Germany
- Coutinho, J. de Nogueira, Prof. Portuguese, Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C.
- Cowden, Merle C., Asst. Prof. German, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [Box 246]
- Cowden, Roy William, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [3227 Angell Hall]
- Cowie, Alexander, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn.
- Cowper, Frederick Augustus Grant, Prof. Rom. Langs., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [1017 Dacian Ave.]
- Cox, Edward Godfrey, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Cox, James Emery, Prof. Eng., Univ. of North Dakota, Grand Forks, N. D. [Univ. Sta.]
- ❖ Cox, John Harrington, Prof. Emeritus Eng. Philology, West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [34 Campus Drive-way]
- Craig, Eleanor Bryant, Instr. Eng., Hunter College, New York, N. Y. [Gramercy Park Hotel, 52 Gramercy Park North]
- Craig, George Dundas, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [451 Wheeler Hall]
- ❖ Craig, Hardin, Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif.
- Craig, J. Forest, Asst. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
- Craig, Mary Elizabeth, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Beaver Coll., Jenkintown, Pa.
- Crane, Ronald Salmon, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- Crane, William G., Eng., Dept., The City Coll., 17 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Craver, Arthur William, Prof. Eng., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio.
- Crawford, Bartholow Vincent, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [208 Richards St.]
- Crawford, Jack Randall, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [14 Lincoln St.]
- ❖ Crawford, James Pyle Wickersham, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa.
- Crawford, Mary Sinclair, Prof. French, Dean of Women, Univ. of Southern Calif., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Crawford, Polly Pearl, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [University Sta.]
- ❖ Crawshaw, William Henry, Dean and Prof. Gen. Lit., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y.
- Creanza, Joseph, Instr. French, Lewis Inst., Chicago, Ill.
- Creek, Herbert LeSourd, Prof. Eng., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind.
- Crocker, Lionel George, Prof. Speech, Denison Univ., Granville, Ohio.
- Crocker, S. F., Asst. Prof. Eng.; Director Student Affairs, West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Crofts, F. S., F. S. Crofts and Co., 41 Union Sq. W., New York, N. Y.
- Croissant, De Witt C., Prof. Eng., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- ❖ Croll, Morris William, Prof. Eng. Lit., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.

- Cromwell, Otelia, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Eng., Miner Teachers Coll., Washington, D. C. [1815 13th St. N.W.]
- Cronk, Gertrude Greenc, (Miss C. P.) Wellesley, Mass. [10 Crown Ridge Rd.]
- Crooks, Esther Josephine, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Crosby, Ruth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me. [Box 245]
- Cross, Ephraim, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [1840 Andrews Ave., Bronx]
- Cross, Wilbur Lucius, Prof. Eng., Dean Grad. School, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [24 Edgehill Rd.]
- Crouch, William George Alfred, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [Apt 209, Penn. Hall Hotel, 5700 Penn. Ave.]
- Crow, Martin Michael, Adjunct Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2612 Guadalupe St.]
- Crowell, Winifred Gardner, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Georgia State Coll. for Women, Milledgeville, Ga.
- Crowley, Francis Joseph, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
- Crowley, W. Irving, Dept. Foreign Langs., Lincoln Memorial Univ., Harrogate, Tenn.
- ❖ Crowne, Joseph Vincent, 221 S. 45th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Cru, Jean Norton, Assoc. Prof. French, Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Cumberlege, (Captain) G. F. J., Publisher, Oxford Univ. Press, 114 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Cummings, Edith K., Instr. French, Lake Erie Coll., Painesville, Ohio.
- Cumming, William Patterson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C. [Box 467]
- Cummings, Hubertis Maurice, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- ❖ Cunliffe, John William, Prof. Eng. and Director Emeritus, Sch. of Journalism, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Cunningham, Cornelius Carman, Prof. Speech, Sch. of Speech, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Cunningham, Robert Newton, Jr., Instr. Eng., Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.
- ❖ Curme, George Oliver, Lecturer German, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [359 Twenty-first St., Santa Monica]
- Currier, Francis Morton, Instr. German, Massachusetts Inst. of Technology, Cambridge, Mass.
- Curry, Walter Clyde, Prof. Eng., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- ❖ Curtis, Ford E., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [3533 Sassafras St., Erie]
- ❖ Curtis, George Bartlett, Assoc. Dean, Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [516 Broadhead Ave.]
- Curtis, Lewis Perry, Instr. History of Arts and Letters, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [64 Hall St., Hamden]
- Curtiss, George C., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Curtiss, Joseph Toy, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [760 Yale Sta.]
- ❖ Curtis, Paul Holroyd, Prof. German, Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn.
- Cushwa, Frank William, Prof. Eng., Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.
- Cuthbertson, Stuart, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- Cutright, (Mrs.) Gladys Pennington, Prof. Spanish, Beaver Coll., Jenkintown, Pa.
- Cutting, Helen Frances, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Women's Coll., Univ. of North Carolina, Greensboro, N. C.
- Cutts, Cecilia, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [6011 31st Ave. N.E.]
- Cuyler, Rev. Cornelius Mobler, S.S., Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [St. Mary's Seminary, Roland Park, Baltimore]
- Daehler, Albert Hartman, Prof. Eng., Colorado Coll., Colorado Springs, Colo.
- Daele, Rose-Marie, French Dept., High School and Ext. Divs., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [Hudson View Gardens, 183rd St. and Pinehurst Ave.]
- Daggett, Malcolm Daniel, Instr. French, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Dagley, Cynthia Ruby, Lexington, Ky. [4 Richmond Ave.]
- Dahl, Leif Christopher, Prof. French, Westminster Coll., Fulton, Mo. [8 W. 7th St.]
- Dahlström, Carl E. W. L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1304 Horman Court]
- Dahme, (Mrs.) Lena F., Instr. German, Hunter Coll., 68th St. and Park Ave., New York, N. Y. [324 W. 101st St.]

- Dale, George Irving, Prof. Rom. Langs., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Dallmann, William Paul, Prof. Mod. Langs., St. Louis Coll. of Pharmacy, St. Louis, Mo. [711 Luckystone, Kirkwood]
- Damon, Lindsay Todd, Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Damon, S. Foster, Asst. Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [106 Williams St.]
- Dana, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Prof., Cambridge Sch. of Drama, 105 Brattle St., Cambridge, Mass.
- Daniel, Robert Norman, Prof. Eng., Dean of Univ., Furman Univ., Greenville, S. C. [324 Univ. Ridge]
- Daniels, Earl, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y. [35 Payne St.]
- Daniels, R. Balfour, Prof. Eng., Edinburg Jr. Coll., Edinburg, Tex. [Faculty Club]
- ❖ Danton, George Henry, Prof. German, Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [College Grounds]
- Dantzler, L. L., Eng. Dept., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- Darbishire, Helen, Principal, Somerville Coll., Oxford, England.
- Darby, George Odell Switzer, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md. [3719 12th St. N.E., Washington, D. C.]
- de Dardano, (Mrs) Hersilia, Head Spanish Dept., Seton Hill Coll., Greensburg, Pa.
- Dargan, Edwin Preston, Prof. French Lit., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Dargan, Henry McCune, Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Daugherty, Kenneth L., Head Eng. Dept., Delta State Teachers Coll., Cleveland, Miss.
- Davey, Victor Graham, Instr. Mod. Langs., Lake Forest Coll., Lake Forest, Ill.
- Davidson, Carter, Prof. Eng., Carleton Coll., Northfield, Minn.
- Davidson, Donald, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn. [Calhoun Bldg.]
- Davidson, Frank, Instr. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [415 Ballantine Rd.]
- Davidson, Harold Matthew, Prof. French, Hillsdale Coll., Hillsdale, Mich. [180 Hillsdale St.]
- Davidson, Levette Jay, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Denver, Denver, Colo.
- Davidson, Mabel, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va. [879 Dearing St.]
- Davis, Arthur Kyle, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va.
- Davis, Arthur L., Prof. German, Washington Coll., Chestertown, Md.
- Davis, (Mrs) Dorothy Wilkinson, Cambridge, Mass. [8 Plympton St.]
- Davis, Earle R., Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Wichita, Wichita, Kans.
- Davis, Edward Porter, Prof. German, Howard Univ., Washington, D. C.
- ❖ Davis, Edwin Bell, Prof. Rom. Langs., Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J. [35 Huntington St.]
- Davis, Gifford, Instr. Rom. Langs., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 4022 Duke Sta.]
- Davis, Harold Hess, Asst. Prof. Eng., Pomona Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- ❖ Davis, Henry Campbell, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Rhet., Univ. of S. C., Columbia, S. C. [1 University Campus]
- Davis, Herbert John, Prof. Eng., University Coll., Toronto, Canada.
- ❖ Davis, Milton Cornwell, Lansdowne, Pa. [63 W. Plumstead Ave.]
- Davis, N. C., High School Teacher, McKinley H. S., Niles, O. [29 N. Chestnut St.]
- Davis, Rose Mary, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [30 Harlow St., Brewer, Me.]
- Davis, Ruby, Prof. Eng., Earlham Coll., Richmond, Ind.
- Davis, Ruth, Assoc. Spanish, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.
- Davis, William Hawley, Prof. Eng., Editor, Stanford Univ. Press, Stanford University, Calif. [686 Lasuen St.]
- Davis, William Rees, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Whitman Coll., Walla Walla, Wash. [16 S. Clinton St.]
- Dawson, John Charles, Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala.
- Day, Cyrus Lawrence, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del. [Purnell Hall]
- Dean, Ruth J., Instr. Rom. Langs., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Decker, Clarence R., Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Univ. of Kansas City, Kansas City, Mo.
- Dedeck-Hery, Venceslas Louis, Instr. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [434 W. 120th St.]
- Deering, Arthur, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C.

- ❖ Deering, Robert Waller, Prof. German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2931 Somerton Rd., Cleveland Heights]
- Deferrari, Harry A., Assoc. Prof. Rom Langs., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D C [Grad Sch.]
- De Filippis, Michele, Instr. Italian, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [440 Wheeler Hall]
- De Forest, John Bellows, Assoc. Prof. Rom Langs., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt [327 S Prospect St]
- ❖ Degeler, Alida, Prof. Mod Langs., Carroll Coll., Waukesha, Wis
- Deibert, Alan Thomas, Asst. Prof. Rom Langs., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Deily, Myron Bonham, Head Dept. Rom Langs. and Lits., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Delano, Lucile Kathryn, Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Queens-Chicora Coll., Charlotte, N. C.
- Delattre, Pierre, Instr. French, Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich.
- De Lozier, Arthur L., Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Ashland Coll., Ashland, Ohio [333 Samaritan Ave.]
- Demorest, Don Louis, Assoc. Prof. Rom Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
- Dempster, (Mrs.) Germaine, Chicago, Ill [5757 Kenwood Ave.]
- Denise, Mother Marie, Head French Dept., Rosemont Coll., Rosemont, Pa.
- Denkinger, Emma Marshall, Lec. Eng., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass [98 Addington Rd., Brookline]
- Denkinger, Marc, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Dennis, Dorothy Warner, Assoc. Prof. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Dennis, Leah Augusta, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Alabama Coll., Montevallo, Ala
- Denoeu, Francois, Asst. Prof. French, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [4 Occom Ridge]
- De Oyarzabel, Anita, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Deptula, Szymon St., Instr. Polish Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Wisconsin, Extension Div., 623 W. State St., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Derby, J. Raymond, Head Eng. Dept., Iowa State Coll., Ames, Iowa [1528 Grand Ave.]
- Detti, Marietta Emma, Asst. Prof. Italian, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Via Mossotti 3, Florence, Italy]
- De Vane, William Clyde, Jr., Head Eng. Dept., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- ❖ D'Evelyn, Charlotte, Prof. Eng. Lit., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass
- Devlin, Sister Mary Aquinas, Head Dept. Eng., Rosary Coll., River Forest, Ill.
- DeVoto, Bernard, Lecturer, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass [Lincoln, Mass]
- De Vries, Louis, Prof. Mod Langs., Iowa State Coll., Ames, Iowa.
- Dexter, Elise F., Instr. German, Hunter Coll. New York, N. Y.
- Dey, William Morton, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Dickens, William Byron, Instr. Eng., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [607 Univ. Ave.]
- Dickinson, L. E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich.
- Dickman, Adolphe-Jacques, Prof. and Head Mod. Lang. Dept., State Univ. of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo.
- Dickson, Arthur, Assoc. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [230 Riverside Dr.]
- Dickson, Robert Cook, Tutor Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Diekhoff, John Siemon, Instr. Eng., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio.
- Diez, Max, Assoc. Prof. German, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa
- Diggs, Alice, 3020 Auchentoroly Terrace, Baltimore, Md.
- Diller, George E., Instr. Rom. Langs., Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Dillingham, Louise Bulkley, Head Mistress, Westover Sch., Middlebury, Conn.
- Dimmick, Mildred, Assoc. Prof. French, Depauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind [Lucy Rowland Hall]
- Dingus, Leonidas Reuben, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Transylvania Coll., Lexington, Ky.
- Dippell, Victor William, Prof. German, Franklin and Marshall Coll., Lancaster, Pa.
- Dismukes, William Paul, Asst. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [214 Lincoln Hall]
- Disque, Elwood John, Instr. German, Bucknell Jr. Coll., Wilkes-Barré, Pa. [80 Birch St.]

- Dixon, Raymond Ephraim, Prof and Head
Dept Eng, Virginia Military Inst, Lexington,
Va [406 Parade]
- Dobberfuhr, William A, Prof German and Hebrew, Concordia Coll, St Paul, Minn
[305 N Guggs St]
- Dobbie, Elliott Van Kirk, Lecturer Eng,
Columbia Univ, New York, N Y [Philosophy Hall]
- Dodds, John Wendell, Assoc Prof. Eng,
Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa [225
S. Winebiddle St]
- Dodds, Madeleine Hope, Homehouse, Kells
Lane, Low Fell, Gateshead Co, Durham,
Eng
- Dodson, Sarah Clara, Instr Eng, Univ of Texas, Austin, Tex [709 W 25th St]
- Doering, J. Frederick, Univ Fellow Eng, Duke Univ., Durham, N C [208 E Trinity Ave]
- Dolch, Alfred Karl, Asst Prof. German,
Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
[325 N Vendome St]
- Dolk, Lester Charles, Asst Eng, Univ of Illinois, Urbana, Ill [208 E John St,
Champaign]
- Dollard, William A S, Assoc Prof. Eng,
Coll. of New Rochelle, New Rochelle,
N. Y. [1248 Fulton Ave, N. Y. C.]
- Donahue, Charles James. Inst. Eng., Fordham Grad Sch, 233 Broadway, New York, N Y.
- Donan, Dwight Fountain, Mound City, Mo.
- Dondo, Mathurin Marius, Assoc Prof.
French, Univ of California, Berkeley,
Calif [60 Tamalpais Rd.]
- Doney, Paul Herbert, Prof Eng, Dickinson
Coll., Carlisle, Pa
- Doniat, Josephine C, Prof. French, North Side Jr. Coll, 3400 N. Austin Ave., Chicago, Ill [4129 Kenmore Ave]
- Donnelly, Lucy Martin, Prof. Eng, Bryn Mawr Coll, Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Low Buildings]
- Donoho, William Stanton, Assoc. Prof. Eng.,
Texas State Coll for Women, Denton,
Tex.
- Donohue, (Rev.) James J., Instr. Eng.,
Columbia Coll, Dubuque, Iowa [Loras
Hall]
- Doolittle, Dorothy (Mrs. L. H.), Instr.
French, Mt. Holyoke Coll., South Hadley,
Mass [Faculty House]
- Doran, Madeleine Kathryn, Instr. Eng.,
Univ of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Dorian, Donald Clayton, Asst. Prof. Eng.,
New Jersey Coll for Women, Rutgers
Univ, New Brunswick, N J [19 Hale St]
- ❖ Doty, George Lewis, Instr. Mod. Langs, Santa Monica Jr Coll, Santa Monica,
Calif [139A Palisades Ave]
- D'Onakil, Basile Gabriel, Prof and Head
French Dept, Fordham Univ, New York,
N Y. [474 8th St, Brooklyn]
- Douds, John Boal, Instr. Eng, St Lawrence
Univ, Canton, N. Y [27 Pine St]
- Dougherty, David Mitchell, Asst. Prof. Rom
Langs, Clark Univ, Worcester, Mass
- Douglass, Philip E, Head Mod Lang Dept,
Rhode Island State Coll, Kingston, R I
- Dow, Blanche Hinman, Chairman Dept
Foreign Langs., State Teachers Coll,
Maryville, Mo [928 College Ave]
- Dow, Donald Preston, Grad Stu Eng,
Univ of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa [8931
86th St, Woodhaven, N Y]
- Dow, Louis Henry, Prof. French, Dartmouth
Coll, Hanover, N H
- Dow, Neal, Instr. French, Duke Univ, Durham, N C [302 E Trinity Ave]
- Dow, Robert Bruce, Asst Prof Eng., Washington Square Coll, N Y. Univ, New York, N. Y. [N Y U., Univ. Hgts]
- Dowlin, Cornell March, Instr. Eng, Univ of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa [6800 N. 11th
St]
- Downey, Thomas Edward, Assoc Prof.
Spanish, Quincy Coll, Quincy, Ill [807
Broadway]
- Downs, Brian Westerdale, Univ Lecturer,
Head Dept. Other Langs, Cambridge
Univ., Cambridge, Eng [Christ's Coll.,
Cambridge]
- Doyle, Henry Grattan, Prof. Rom. Langs,
Dean Junior Coll., George Washington
Univ, Washington, D C.
- Doyle, (Mis) James, Asst Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ, New York,
N. Y. [507 W. 149 St]
- Doyle, (Rev.) Louis F, S. J., Assoc. Prof.
Eng, Creighton Univ., Omaha, Neb.
- Drachman, Julian M., Teach. Eng, Morris H. S, New York, N. Y. [166th St and Boston Rd]
- Drake, Ione, 292 Sycamore St., New Braunfels, Tex.
- ❖ Draper, John William, Prof. Eng, West
Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Dreizler, Bernita, Head Eng. Dept., Findlay
Coll., Findlay, Ohio.
- Drennon, Herbert, Head Dept. Eng., State
Teachers Coll., Murray, Ky.

- Dreps, Joseph Antone, 107 Prospect St., Vermilion, S. D.
- Drew, Helen L., Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill.
- Drumm, Francis A., Prof. Eng. Lit., Holy Cross Coll., Worcester, Mass.
- Drummond, Robert Rutherford, Prof. German, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- DuBois, Arthur Edwin, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Ducibella, Joseph William, Instr. Italian and Spanish, Mt. St. Joseph Coll., W. Hartford, Conn.
- Dudley, David A., Instr. Eng., Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass. [1740 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge]
- ❖ Dudley, Louise, Prof. Eng., Stephens Coll., Columbia, Mo.
- Dudley, Sarah Eleanor, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [830 N. Cherry Ave.]
- Duerr, Dorothy Shields, Prof. Eng., Western Coll., Oxford, Ohio.
- Dugdale, Clarence Eugene, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [709 W. 22nd St.]
- Dunbar, Howard H., Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Dunham, Gertrude Helen, Research Fellow Linguistics, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [269 Dwight St.]
- Dunham, Theodore Chadbourne, Assoc. Prof. German, Ohio Wesleyan Univ., Delaware, Ohio.
- Dunkel, Wilbur Dwight, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [915 Harvard St.]
- ❖ Dunlap, Charles Graham, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan.
- Dunlap, George A., Head Dept. Eng., Ashland Coll., Ashland, Ohio.
- Dunn, Esther Cloudman, Prof. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [76 Crescent St.]
- Dunn, Florence Elizabeth, Prof. Emeritus Eng., Colby Coll., Waterville, Me. [4 Sheldon Pl.]
- Dunn, Joseph, Prof. Celtic Langs., Lecturer Rom. Langs., Catholic Univ., Washington, D. C. [47 Vista Terrace, New Haven, Conn.]
- Dunn, Thomas Franklin, Instr. Eng., North Dakota Agricultural Coll., Fargo, N. D.
- ❖ Dunn, Waldo H., Prof. Eng., Scripps Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Dupertuis, Samuel, Prof. French, Boston Univ., Boston, Mass. [27 Garrison St.]
- Dureau, Agnes Marie Emile, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio.
- Durham, Willard Higley, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [620 Woodmont Ave.]
- Dutton, George Eliot, Dean and Prof. Eng., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del.
- DuVal, Thaddeus Ernest, Instr. French, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [Box 218]
- Dyas, Frederick George, Jr., Instr. Spanish, Roxbury School, Cheshire, Conn. [2066 Yale Sta., New Haven, Conn.]
- Dye, William Seddinger, Jr., Prof. Eng. Lit., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [327 S. Atherton St.]
- Dykes, Eva B., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Howard Univ., Washington, D. C. [1724 Eighth St. N.W.]
- Eagleson, Harvey, Asst. Prof. Eng., Calif. Inst. of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.
- Eastburn, Iola K., Head Spanish and French Dept., John B. Stetson Univ., De Land, Fla.
- Easterling, Aldis B., DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.
- ❖ Eastman, Clarence Willis, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass.
- Eaton, Helen Slocomb, Linguistic Research Assoc., International Auxiliary Language Ass'n, New York, N. Y. [44 W. 10th St.]
- Eaton, Horace Ainsworth, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [332 Ostrom Ave.]
- Eaton, John Wallace, Prof. and Chairman Dept. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [204 Univ. Hall]
- Eby, Edwin Harold, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Eccles, Mark Williams, Lecturer Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Eckelman, Ernest Otto, Prof. and Chairman German Dept., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [3042 E. Laurelhurst Dr.]
- Eckler, Eric Alexander, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Mt. Union Coll., Alliance, Ohio [1445 Inwood Rd.]
- Eddy, William Alfred, Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Edgar, Pelham, Prof. Eng., Victoria Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada.

- Edgerly, Stuart, Instr. Eng., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [328 Roosevelt Ave.]
- Edwards, Bateman, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [58 Murray Place]
- Edwards, Ella Iden, Head Foreign Lang. Dept., Emmanuel Missionary Coll., Berrien Springs, Mich. [Route 1]
- Edwards, Murray French, Prof. German, Virginia Military Inst., Lexington, Va. [Box 786]
- van Eerden, Albert, Instr. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [22 Edwards Pl.]
- ❖ Ehrensperger, Edward Charles, Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of South Dakota, Vermillion, S. D. [304 Canby St.]
- Ehrlich, Godfrey, Instr. German, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
- ❖ Eickmann, Walter Theodore, Teacher German, Memorial H. S., Park Ave., West New York, N. J. [446 21st St.]
- Eidson, John Oun, Fellow Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 4793]
- Eiferl, Rudolf A., Prof. German, California Concordia Coll., Oakland, Calif.
- Eilenberg, Jeanette Helen, Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., 66 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [69 Tiemann Pl., N. Y. C.]
- Einarsson, Stefan, Assoc. Eng., The Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [2607 Roslin Ave.]
- Eisele, E., B. Westermann Co., Inc., Booksellers and Publishers, 13 W. 46th St., New York, N. Y.
- Eisenbrown, Harry, Instr. German, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [245 Nassau St.]
- ❖ Eisenlohr, Berthold A., Prof. German, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [Univ. Sta., Box 3002]
- Eiserhardt, Ewald, Prof. German, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [121 Dartmouth St.]
- Elcock, Helen Elizabeth, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Kansas State Coll. of Agri. and Applied Science, Manhattan, Kans.
- Elder, Lucius Walter, Librarian, Berrien and Cedar Sts., Galesburg, Ill.
- Ellinger, Esther Parker, Baltimore, Md. [12 W. 25th St.]
- ❖ Elliott, George Roy, Prof. Eng. Lit., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass. [3 Orchard St.]
- Elliott, Philip Lovin, Prof. Eng., Western Carolina Teachers Coll., Cullowhee, N. C.
- Ellis, (Mrs.) Frances H., Instr. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [1125 E. Hunter Ave.]
- Ellis, Milton, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Ellis, Warren J., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del. [14 Prospect Ave.]
- Ellison, Lee Monroe, Director, Dept. Eng., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex. [Box 575, C. I. A. Sta.]
- Elsasser, Albert, Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [182 Prospect Ave.]
- Elson, John James, Instr. Eng., The George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Emery, William Thalheimer, Instr. German, Franklin and Marshall Coll., Lancaster, Pa.
- Emling, R. A., 484 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- ❖ Emperor, John B., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.
- Emsley, Bert, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [306 Derby Hall]
- Englekirk, John, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of New Mexico, Albuquerque, N. M.
- English, James Henry, Prof. Rom. Langs., Grove City Coll., Grove City, Pa. [124 Monroe St.]
- English, Thomas Hopkins, Prof. Eng., Emory Univ., Emory University, Ga.
- Engram, Dennard, Inst. French and Italian, Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala.
- Entwistle, William James, King Alfonso XIII Prof. Spanish Studies, Univ. of Oxford, Oxford, Eng. [3 Linton Rd.]
- Eoff, Sherman H., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- von Erhardt-Siebold, Erika, (Mrs.), Lecturer Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Erhorn, Walter K. G. W., Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [963 E. 17th St.]
- Ericson, E. E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Ericsson, Emily, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Southwestern Coll., Winfield, Kans. [802 College St.]
- Ernst, Adolphine B., Assoc. Prof. German, Ext. Div., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Ernst, Carola Leonie, Prof. French and Chairman Rom. Lang. Dept., Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn. [772 Williams St.]
- Ernst, Frederic, Prof. French, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y.

- Ernst, James, Chandler Apts., Macomb, Ill.
 Ernst, Rudolf H., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore. [1841 Sunset Dr.]
 Erskine, John, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [130 Claremont Ave.]
 Erwin, Edward Jones, Prof. Eng., Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C.
 Espinosa, Aurelio Macedonio, Prof. and Executive Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 1555]
 Essa, Robert Newyia, Yale Grad. Sch., New Haven, Conn. [1987 Yale Sta.]
 Estrich, Robert Mark, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
 Ethelind, Sister Mary, Head Eng. Dept., Marylhurst Coll., Oswego, Ore.
 Euwema, Ben, Prof. Eng., Westminster Coll., New Wilmington, Pa.
 Evans, Charles, Prof. and Head Dept., German, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
 Evans, David Owen, Prof. and Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Univ. of British Columbia, Vancouver, B. C.
 Evans, George Pirtle, Prof. Eng., Sam Houston State Teachers Coll., Huntsville, Tex. (On leave: Grad. Study Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [Apt. G, 2107 San Antonio St.])
 Evans, M. Blakemoir, Prof. German, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
 Evans, Medford B., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn.
 Evans, Walter Bennett, Instr. History, Grand Rapids Senior H. S., Grand Rapids, Minn.
 Evans, Willa M., 501 W. 113 St., New York, N. Y.
 Everett, Edward Simpson, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1421 Harpst St.]
 Evers, Helene M., Prof. Mod. Langs., Lindenwood Coll., St. Charles, Mo.
 Evins, Samuel Carroll, Prof. Eng., Tennessee Wesleyan Coll., Athens, Tenn.
 ❖ Ewart, Frank Carman, Prof. Rom. Langs., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y.
 Ewen, Frederic, Instr. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., 383 Pearl St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Ewing, Boyd Ross, Jr., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Washington and Lee Univ., Lexington, Va. [Box 62]
 Ewing, Majl, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif.
 Ewing, S. Blaine, Jr., Instr. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [2733 St. Paul St.]
 Eyster, Clement Manley, Prof. Eng., Milligan Coll., Johnson City, Tenn.
 Fagin, N. Bryllion, Assoc. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
 Fahnestock, Edith, Prof. Spanish, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
 Fairchild, Arthur Henry Ralph, Chairman Dept. Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [10 Glenwood Ave., South]
 Fairchild, Hoxie Neale, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [509 W. 121st St.]
 Fairfield, Eile, Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [1023 E. End Ave., Wilkinsburg, Pa.]
 Falls, William Franklin, Prof. French, Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md.
 Faries, Randolph, 2d, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., 23rd St. and Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
 ❖ Farley, Frank Edgar, Prof. Eng. Lit., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn.
 ❖ Farley, Malcom Fisk, Prof. Eng., Fukien Christian Univ., Foochow, China.
 Farnham, C. Evangeline, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Judson Coll., Marion, Ala.
 Farnham, Willard Edward, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
 Farnsworth, William Oliver, Prof. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
 ❖ Farr, Hollon Augustine, Assoc. Prof. German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1249 Yale Sta.]
 Farrand, Wilson, Head Master, Newark Academy, Newark, N. J.
 Farrier, Paul H., Dean and Prof. Eng., Kentucky Wesleyan Coll., Winchester, Ky.
 Farrison, W. Edward, Prof. Eng., Bennett Coll., Greensboro, N. C.
 Faure, Maurice, Asst. Prof. French, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [1525 Missouri Ave.]
 ❖ Faurot, Albert A., 649 Poplar St., Terre Haute, Ind.
 ❖ Faust, Albert Bernhardt, Prof. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [125 Kelvin Pl.]
 Faust, George Patterson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh, Pa. [Pennsylvania Apts., 4403 Centre Ave.]

- Faverty, Frederic Everett, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [311 Kedzie St.]
- Favreau, Alphonse Roland, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. [64 N. Prospect St.]
- Fay, Mary M., Acting Dean, Hunter Coll Annex, 145 E. 32nd St., New York, N. Y.
- Fay, Percival Bradshaw, Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [955 Mendocino Ave.]
- Faye, Paul-Louis, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- Fehling, Fred Louis, Instr. German, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [Schaeffer Hall 2]
- ❖ Feise, Ernst, Prof. German, The Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Fenn, William Purviance, Univ. of Nanking, Nanking, China [1 Chin Yin Chieh, Nanking, Ku]
- Fenton, Doris, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Beaver Coll., Jenkintown, Pa. [621 Westview St., Mt. Airy, Phila.]
- Feraru, Léon, Prof. Rom. Langs., Long Island Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y. [45 Burtis St., Lynbrook]
- Ferguson, John De Lancey, Prof. Eng., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2504 Euclid Hgts Blvd.]
- Ferguson, Wilbert, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Illinois Wesleyan Univ., Bloomington, Ill.
- Fernberg, Pabeth G., Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Aurora Coll., Aurora, Ill. [164 Gladstone Ave.]
- Ferrando, Guido, Chairman Italian Dept., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Ferrell, Harrison Herbert, Prof. German, West Virginia State Coll., Institute, W. Va.
- Ferrin, Dana Holman, Vice-President and Editor, Educational Book Dept., The D. Appleton-Century Co., 35 W. 32nd St., New York, N. Y.
- Fess, Gilbert Malcolm, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [1610 Bass Ave.]
- Feuerstein, Richard, Prof. Mod. Langs., Rollins Coll., Winter Park, Fla. [Box 232]
- Feuillerat, Albert, Prof. French Lit., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Fichter, William L., Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [323 Morris Ave.]
- ❖ Ficke, Herman Styles, Prof. Eng., Dubuque Univ., Dubuque, Iowa.
- Ficken, Clarence Elwood, Assoc. Prof. French and Dean of Men, Macalester Coll., St. Paul, Minn.
- Ficken, Hilbert Theodore, Prof. Mod. Langs., Baldwin-Wallace Coll., Berea, Ohio [28 Third Ave.]
- Fiedler, H. G., Prof. German, Univ. of Oxford, Oxford, Eng. [The Lane House, Northam Rd.]
- ❖ Fife, Robert Herndon, Gebhard Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Finch, Edith, Grad. Stu. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Low Buildings]
- ❖ Fine, Janet B., Teacher Eng., The Hartridge Sch., Plainfield, N. J. [Bryn Mawr, Pa.]
- Finney, Claude Lee, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [304 W. Pennsylvania St.]
- Firor, Ruth A., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Geneva Coll., Beaver Falls, Pa.
- Fisher, John Roberts, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Coll. of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.
- Fishtine, Edith, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Simmons Coll., Boston, Mass.
- Fiske, Christable Forsythe, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Fiske, Henry Metcalf, Head French and Spanish Depts., St. Paul's Sch., Concord, N. H.
- Fitch, Girdler B., Instr. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
- Fite, Alexander Green, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- ❖ Fitz-Gerald, John Driscoll, Prof. Rom. Philology and Head Spanish Dept., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz.
- ❖ Fitzgerald, (Mrs.) Sara Porter, Fort Worth, Tex. [2233 Winton Terrace East]
- Fitzhugh, Robert Tyson, Inst. Eng., Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md.
- ❖ Fitz-Hugh, Thomas, Prof. Latin, Univ. of Virginia, University, Va.
- Flanagan, John Theodore, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [680 Cable Ave., St. Paul]
- Fleisher, Jeannette, Research Asst. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Fleissner, O. S., Prof. German, Wells Coll., Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y.
- ❖ Fletcher, Edward Garland, Adjunct Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [149 Concord St., Portland, Me.]
- Fletcher, Harris, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [705 Indiana Ave.]

- Fletcher, Jefferson Butler, Prof. Comp. Lit., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Flint, Frank Cudworth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [4 W. Wheelock St.]
- Fliteroft, John Ehret, Prof. Eng., Carroll Coll., Waukesha, Wis.
- Flom, George T., Prof. Scand. Langs. and Eng. Phil., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [611 W. Green St.]
- Foerster, Norman, Prof. Eng. and Director Sch. of Letters, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [421 Woolf Ave.]
- ❖ Fogg, Wendell Frederick, Cambridge, Mass. [2 Arnold Circle]
- Foladare, Joseph, 3936 Halldale Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Foley, Louis, Prof. Eng., Western State Teachers Coll., Kalamazoo, Mich. [1830 Oakland Dr.]
- Ford, Anita W., Asst. Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Comstock House]
- Ford, Harry Egerton, Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Victoria Coll., Toronto Univ., Toronto, Canada
- ❖ Ford, J. D. M., Prof. French and Spanish Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [9 Riedesel Ave.]
- Forehand, Brooks, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala.
- Forest, H. Ubald, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [The College]
- Forsythe, Robert Stanley, Head Dept. Book Selection, The Newberry Library, 60 W. Walton Place, Chicago, Ill.
- Forward, Kenneth, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Foster, Dorothy, Prof. Eng. Lit., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Foster, Edward, Asst. Prof. Eng., Rollins Coll., Winter Park, Fla.
- Foster, Edwin Hardy, Prof. and Head German Dept., Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala.
- Foster, Finley Melville Kendall, Oviatt Prof. Eng., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio.
- ❖ Foster, Frances Allen, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Foster, James Ralph, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Long Island Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y. [11 Rockwood Ave., Baldwin]
- Foster, Richard Allen, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [33 Woodward Ave.]
- Foulet, Alfred, Research Assoc. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [127 Jefferson Rd.]
- Foulks, Carol, Instr. Spanish, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [Box 247]
- Fowler, Agnes, Asst. Prof. French, Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [301 Patterson Ave.]
- Fowle, Wallace Adams, Lit. Div., Bennington Coll., Bennington, Vt.
- Fox, Bernice, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky. [McVey Hall]
- ❖ Fox, Charles Shattuck, Prof. Rom. Langs., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [445 High St.]
- Fox, George Gillespie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Frampton, Mendal G., Prof. Eng. Lang. and Rhet., Pomona Coll., Claremont, Calif. [927 Harvard Ave.]
- Franchere, Lucille Corinne, Prof. Mod. Langs., Coll. of St. Scholastica, Duluth, Minn.
- Francis, Elizabeth Annie, Tutor Mediaeval French, St. Hugh's Coll., Oxford, England
- Francis, Mary, Technical Abstractor, Library Dept., Hercules Experimental Sta., Wilmington, Dela.
- Francis, W. Nelson, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [22 W. Gowen Ave., Mt. Airy, Phila.]
- Francis, William Alvah, Head Dept. Eng., Texas Coll. of Arts and Industries, Kingsville, Tex. [310 West Alice Ave.]
- Francon, Marcel, Instr. French, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Holworthy Hall]
- ❖ Frank, Grace, (Mrs. Tenney Frank), Non-resident Prof. Old French Philology, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [110 Elmhurst Rd., Roland Park, Baltimore, Md.]
- Frank, John Geisenberger, Asst. Prof. Germ., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Frantz, Adolf Ingram, Assoc. Prof. Germ., Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa. [306 S. 3rd St.]
- Frantz, Ray William, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [2414 Calumet Ct.]
- Fraser, Margaret E. N., Prof. Rom. Langs., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- Frazier, Allegra, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz.
- Frederick, John Towner, Prof. Contemporary Thought, Northwestern Univ.,

- Evanston, Ill [5529 Blackstone Ave, Chicago]
- Fredrick, Edna Caroline, Instr. French, Dickinson Jr. Coll, Williamsport, Pa
- Freeman, Maxwell M, Instr Eng, Univ of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis [809 W Lakeside]
- Freeman, Stephen A, Prof and Dean French Sch, Middlebury Coll, Middlebury, Vt
- Freiday, George William, Jr, Master French The Salisbury Sch, Salisbury, Conn
- Frein, Pierre Joseph, Prof. Rom Langs and Lits and Executive Officer, Univ of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [4317 15th Ave N.E.]
- French, George Franklin, Instr. Mod Langs, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass [12 School St]
- French, Herbert G, Cincinnati, Ohio [Gwynne Bldg]
- French, J. Milton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll, Hanover, N. H [Parker Apts]
- French, Reginald Foster, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb [Univ. Hall]
- French, Robert Dudley, Prof Eng., Yale Univ, New Haven, Conn [70 High St]
- French, Walter Hoyt, Asst Prof Eng, Cornell Univ, Ithaca, N. Y [119 Ferris Pl]
- Freund, Max, Prof German, Rice Inst, Houston, Texas [2217 Bolsover Road]
- Frey, John R, Asst German, Northwestern Univ, Evanston, Ill [Foster House]
- Freyd, Bernard, 516 McGilvra Blvd, Seattle Wash
- Frick, Grace, Kansas City, Mo [5200 Oak St.]
- Friederich, Werner P, Instr. German, Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Friedlaender, Marc, Instr. Eng, Tulane Univ, New Orleans, La [1122 Pine St]
- Friedlander, Edgar, Hotel Broadway, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Friend, Albert C, Oncl Coll, Oxford, England
- ❖ Fries, Charles Carpenter, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [7 Harvard Pl]
- Frohock, Wilbur Merrill, Instr. French, Brown Univ, Providence, R. I. [Marston Hall]
- Frost, George Loring, Asst. Prof. Eng, Dartmouth Coll, Hanover, N. H. [Box 551]
- Frost, Robert, Amherst, Mass
- Fuchs, Edward A. H., Prof German, Centre Coll., Danville, Ky
- Fucilla, Joseph G, Assoc Prof Rom Langs, Northwestern Univ, Evanston, Ill
- Fuess, Claude Moore, Headmaster, Phillips Academy, Andover, Mass
- Fulcher, Paul Milton, Assoc Prof Eng, Univ of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis [Bascom Hall]
- Fuller, John B, Assoc Prof German, Amherst Coll, Amherst, Mass [7 Hitchcock Rd]
- Fundenburg, George B, Assoc Prof Rom Langs, Univ of Maine, Orono, Me
- Funke, Erich, Assoc. Prof German, Univ of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- Funnell, George Banks, Asst Prof French, Amherst Coll, Amherst, Mass [71 S Pleasant St]
- Furnas, Philip William, Head Eng Dept, Guilford Coll, Guilford College, N. C.
- Gable, Sister Mariella, Prof Eng. Lang. and Lit, Coll of St Benedict, St Joseph, Minn.
- Gaede, William R, Instr German, Swarthmore Coll, Swarthmore, Pa [423 Harvard Ave]
- Gaffney, Wilbur Geoffrey, Editorial Dept, American Book Co., 88 Lexington Ave, New York, N. Y [312 Second Ave]
- Gaines, William Judson, Jr, Prof Rom. Langs, Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va
- Gaiss, Aloysius Joseph, Asst Prof German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [1306 Kensington Dr]
- Gale, Lloyd Blanchard, Prof. Eng, DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind. [613 Anderson St]
- Galitz, Christine, Asst Prof French, Scripps Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Galland, Joseph Stanislaus, Prof and Head Dept Rom Langs., Northwestern Univ, Evanston, Ill.
- Gallardo, José Miguel, Prof. Rom Langs, Coll. of Charleston, Charleston, S. C [57 Bull St.]
- Gallaway, W. F., Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- ❖ Galloo, Eugénie, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1324 Louisiana St]
- Galway, Margaret, Court House, Inley, Oxford, Eng.
- Gamper, Anna Frieda, Prof. German, MacMurray Coll., Jacksonville, Ill. [349 E. State St.]
- Gamzue, Benjamin, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y.

- Gardner, Elizabeth Frances, Grad. Stu. Linguistics Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [18 Garden Pl., Derby]
- Gardner, Emelyn E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich
- Gardner, May, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan [1200 Mississippi St.]
- Gartland, Edith M., Prof. Mod. Langs., Teachers Coll. of City of Boston, Huntington Ave., Boston 17, Mass [9 McIlm St., Dorchester Center]
- Garver, Milton, Asst. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [38 Yale St.]
- Gary, Franklin, Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [14 Alexander St.]
- Gasool, Anne, Instr. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass [Comstock House]
- Gatch, Katherine Haynes, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [Milford, Ohio]
- Gates, C. E., Head Germ. Dept., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y.
- Gates, Eunice Joiner, (Mrs. W. Bryan Gates), Asst. Prof. Spanish, Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Tex.
- Gates, William Bryan, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Texas
- Gaudin, Lois Strong, (Mrs. Albert C.), Instr. French, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [59 Pineapple St.]
- Gault, Pierre, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa. [Box 14]
- Gauss, Christian, Prof. and Chairman Mod. Lang. Dept., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.
- Gaw, Allison, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif [1915 Cordova St.]
- Gay, Alva A., Jr., Instr. Eng., Adelbert Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [11483 Hessler Rd.]
- Gay, F. R., Prof. Eng., Bethany Coll., Bethany, W. Va.
- ❖ Gay, Lucy Marie, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [216 N. Pinckney St.]
- Gearhart, (Mrs.) Mildred M., Instr. Eng., Municipal Univ. of Omaha, Omaha, Neb.
- Geary, (Rev.) James A., Asst. Prof. Celtic Langs., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C.
- Gebert, Clara L., 3940 Grant Ave., Torresdale, Phila., Pa.
- ❖ Geddes, James, Jr., Prof. Rom. Langs., Boston Univ., Boston, Mass [39 Fairmont St., Brookline]
- Gee, John Archer, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [90 High St.]
- Geismar, Arthur, Instr. German, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [319 W. 18th St.]
- Geissendoerfer, John Theodore, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [223 Lincoln Hall]
- Gemeinhardt, Laurence Edwin, Instr. German, Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [330 Washington St.]
- Generose, Mother M., Holy Family Convent, R. 1, Manitowoc, Wis
- Genschmer, Fred, Instr. Mod. Langs., Rose Polytechnic Inst., Terre Haute, Ind.
- Genzmer, George Harvey, Librarian of Coll. and Lecturer Eng., Bard Coll., Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y.
- Georgi, Carl Gustav, Instr. German, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [1526 Big Bend Blvd.]
- Gerard, Jean M., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [2105 So. Geddes]
- Gerberich, Albert H., Prof. Mod. Langs., Dickinson Coll., Carlisle, Pa.
- ❖ Geriá, John Lawrence, Prof. Celtic, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Gerould, Gordon Hall, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.
- Gerriets, John S., Instr. Eng., Loyola Univ., Chicago, Ill. [7132 Eberhart Ave.]
- Ghigo, Francis, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Hampden-Sydney Coll., Hampden-Sydney, Va.
- Ghosh, Praphulla Chandra, Prof. Eng. and Univ. Lecturer in Eng., Presidency Coll., Calcutta, India
- Gianturco, Elio, c/o Dr. Lapiana, 3 Berkeley St., Cambridge, Mass.
- Gibbs, Lincoln Robinson, Prof. Eng., Antioch Coll., Yellow Springs, Ohio
- Gibson, Anne Elizabeth, Asst. French, Univ. of California, Los Angeles, Calif. [2476 Cass Pl., Huntington Park]
- Gibson, Byron Hall, Head Eng. Dept., Union Coll., Barbourville, Ky.
- Gibson, Delbert L., Instr. French and Italian, Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [27 College Pl.]
- Gibson, Martha Jane, Lec. Eng., Barnard Coll., New York, N. Y. [Brooks Hall]
- Giddings, Joseph Addison, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [217 Mitchell St.]
- ❖ Giffin, Mary Elizabeth, Cleveland Heights, Ohio [2116 Surrey Rd.]

- Gifford, George H. Secy. Prof. Rom. Langs., Tufts Coll., Tufts College, Mass. [Box 52]
- ❖ Gilbert, Louis H. Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [516 Carolina Circle]
- Gilbert, Donald Monroe Prof. Mod. Langs., Adrian Coll., Adrian, Mich. [506 N. Superior St.]
- Gildersleeve, Virginia Crocheron, Dean Barnard Coll. and Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Gill, Emma M., Adjunct Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- ❖ Gillet, Joseph Eugene Prof. Spanish, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
- Gilligan, Arthur Chew, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [7A Dickken St.]
- Gilman, Margaret, Assoc. Prof. French, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
- Gilman, William E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [404 S. Williams St.]
- Gilmer, Gertrude, Prof. Eng., Georgia State Woman's Coll., Valdosta, Ga.
- Gilmore, David Percy, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Rutgers Coll., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Gilmore, Grant, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [352 Temple St.]
- Gimmestad, Herman, Prof. Eng., Midland Coll., Fremont, Neb.
- Giovannini, G., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Detroit, Detroit, Mich.
- Glascocock, Clyde Chew, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Glavis, Margot G. (Mrs. Edward S.), German Dept., The Chapin School, New York, N. Y. [18 E. 92nd St.]
- Glenn, Sidney Erwin, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [509 S. Race St.]
- Gobert, Adrienne C., Sarah Lawrence Coll., Bronxville, N. Y.
- ❖ Goddard, Eunice Rathbone, Assoc. Prof. French, Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md. [Calvert Court Apts, Calvert and Thirty-first Sts.]
- ❖ Goddard, Harold Clarke, Prof. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- Gode-von-Aesch, Alexander G. F., Instr. German, Seth Low Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [518 W. 232nd St., N. Y. C.]
- Goedeke, W. J., Second Vice-President, Prentice-Hall, Inc., 70 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y. [Apt. 1-A, 10 Park Terrace East]
- Goedsche, C. Rudolf, Instr. German, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [Fisk 23]
- Goetsch, Charles, Assoc. Prof. Germ. Philology, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [6015 Kimbark Ave.]
- Goggio, Charles, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Goggio, Emilio, Prof. Italian and Spanish, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont.
- ❖ Gohdes, Clarence L. F., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [College Sta.]
- Gold, Maxwell B., Jersey City, N. J. [100 Glenwood Ave.]
- Goldberg, Maxwell Henry, Asst. Prof. Eng., Massachusetts State Coll., Amherst, Mass. [Stockbridge Hall]
- Goldman, Marcus Selden, Assoc. in Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1003 W. Oregon St.]
- Goodale, Ralph Hinsdale, Prof. Eng. Lit., Hiram Coll., Hiram, Ohio.
- Goodchild, Donald, Secy. Fellowships and Grants, American Council of Learned Societies, 907 Fifteenth St., Washington, D. C.
- Goode, Clement Tyson, Bostwick Prof. Eng., Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va.
- Goode, Sister Teresa Clare, Head Spanish Dept., Nazareth Coll., Louisville, Ky. [851 South Fourth St.]
- Goodloe, Jane Faulkner, Assoc. Prof. German, Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Goodman, Theodore, Asst. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [20 W. 84 St.]
- Goodyear, Nolan Austin, Prof. Rom. Langs., Emory Univ., Emory University, Ga.
- Gordon, Lewis Hall, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y. [90 College St.]
- Gordon, T. Agnes, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- ❖ Gorman, Frank Thorpe, Princeton, N. J. [142 Hodge Rd.]
- Gorr, Adolph C., Instr. German, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [446 Stevens St., Camden, N. J.]
- Gorse, William John, Prof. Mod. Langs., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [703 Livingston Ave.]
- ❖ Gott, Charles, Prof. Eng., Tufts Coll., Mass.
- Gottfried, Rudolf B., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [510 N. Carroll St.]
- Gould, Chester Nathan, Assoc. Prof. German and Scandinavian Literatures, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Box 130, Faculty Exchange]

- Gove, Philip Babcock, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Grabo, Carl H., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Grace, Sister Mary, R S M., Registrar, Our Lady of Cincinnati Coll., Edgecliff, Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Graff, Willem Laurens, Assoc. Prof. German, McGill Univ., Montreal, Canada.
- Graham, Neil Henry, Asst. Instr. French, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Rushville, N. Y.]
- Graham, Paul Gerald, Asst. Prof. Germanic Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [124 South St.]
- Graham, Walter James, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [324 University Hall]
- ❖ Grandgent, Charles Hall, Prof. Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [107 Walker St.]
- Grannis, Valleria B., Prof. Rom. Langs., Coker Coll., Hartsville, S. C.
- Grant, Elliott Mansfield, Prof. French Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [95 Maynard Rd.]
- Grant, Jason Clifton, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Howard Univ., Washington, D. C. [330 College St. N.W.]
- Grauel, George E., Grad. Fellow Eng., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Gravit, Francis West, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [Romance Languages Bldg.]
- Gray, Austin K., Librarian, Phila. Library Co., 4107 Spruce St., Phila., Pa.
- Gray, Charles Harold, Secy. Lit. Division, Bennington Coll., Bennington, Vt.
- ❖ Gray, Charles Henry, Prof. Emeritus Eng., Tufts Coll., Mass. [The Fairfax, 43rd and Locust Sts., W. Phila., Pa.]
- Gray, Claudine, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Gray, Henry David, Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., Stanford University, Calif.
- Gray, Philip H., Jr., Yale Grad. Sch., New Haven, Conn. [235 Bishop St.]
- ❖ Graydon, Joseph S., Attorney at Law, Cincinnati, Ohio [2208 Union Central Bldg.]
- Green, A. Wigfall, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss. [Box 22]
- Green, Clarence Corleon, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.
- Green, Hattie Cora, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Sterling Coll., Sterling, Kansas [121 W. Cleveland Ave.]
- Green, Otis Howard, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Green, Zaidee E., Asst. Prof. Eng., Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Greene, Edward M., Prof. and Chairman French Dept., Univ. of S. D., Vermillion, S. D. [323 Lewis St.]
- Greene, Ernest Roy, Prof. Rom. Langs., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Greene, Guy Shepard, Prof. and Head Dept. Public Speaking, Iowa State Coll., Ames, Iowa.
- ❖ Greene, Herbert Eveleth, Prof. Emeritus Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [33 Somerset Rd., W. Newton, Mass.]
- Greene, (Miss) Marion Austin, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Westhampton Coll., Richmond, Va.
- Greene, Richard Leighton, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Greene, Walter Kirkland, Prof. Eng. and Dean Curriculum, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C.
- Greenfield, Eric V., Prof. Mod. Langs., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind. [Forest Hills Rd., West Lafayette]
- Greenough, Chester Noyes, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [935 Memorial Drive]
- Greenwald, Benjamin, Prof. Eng., Colby Academy, Brooklyn, N. Y.; and Grad. Stud., Eng. and Comp. Lit. Dept., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [2707 Creston Ave.]
- Greenway, George Lander, "Kincraig," Greenwich, Conn.
- Greer, Clayton Alvis, Austin, Tex. [510 Atlanta St.]
- Greer, Ina May, Research in Linguistics, State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia. [Box 525]
- Greet, William Cabell, Asst. Prof. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Greever, Garland Gustavus, Visiting Prof. Eng., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [565 N. Lucerne Blvd.]
- Gregersen, Halfdan, Instr. Rom. Lang., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Winthrop House]
- von Greiffenstein, Baroness Berta, Hotel Woodward, 55th St. and B'way, New York, N. Y.

- Grevenig, Gustave Valentin, Director Dept. Mod. Langs, St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Grey, Lennox B., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5548 Woodlawn Ave.]
- ❖ Griffin, James O., Prof. Emeritus German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [570 Alvarado]
- ❖ Griffin, Nathaniel Edward, Cambridge, Mass. [31 Concord Ave.]
- ❖ Griffith, Helen, Prof. Eng., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [Woodbridge Terrace]
- Griffith, (Mrs.) Marie T., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wichita, Wichita, Kans. [127 W. 14th St.]
- Griffith, Reginald Harvey, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Grigaut, Paul P., Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Griggs, Earl Leslie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Griggs, Marion Thurston, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Pennsylvania Coll. for Women, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Grimes, Evie Margaret, Prof. French, Elmira Coll., Elmira, N. Y.
- Grimm, Charles, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- ❖ Grimm, Karl Josef, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Gettysburg Coll., Gettysburg, Pa.
- ❖ Griscom, Rev. Acton, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [25 Sixth St., North Pelham]
- Grismer, Raymond Leonard, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [1401 E. River Rd.]
- Groth, J. II., Assoc. Prof. German Langs., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Groult, Suzanne Lina, Professeur de Français, Lycée de Jeunes Filles, Toulouse, France.
- Grubb, Kenneth M., Instr. German, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange 222]
- Grubbs, Henry Alexander, Asst. Prof. French, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [127 Jefferson Rd.]
- Grube, Frank W., Acting Head Dept. Langs. and Lits., Iowa Wesleyan Coll., Mt. Pleasant, Iowa [c/o P.E.O. Memorial Lib., Iowa Wesleyan Coll.]
- Gruenbaum, Gustav, Assoc. Prof. Italian, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Gruenberg, Elsa, Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., Park Coll., Parkville, Mo.
- von Gruening, John Paul, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [2219 Chadbourne Ave.]
- Gruwell, Sallie Marvin (Mrs. Tom A.), Instr. Eng., Tulsa Central H. S., Tulsa, Okla. [1108 S. Rockford Ave.]
- Gudde, Erwin G., Asst. Prof. Geom., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Guelich, (Mrs.) Ernestine Dewes, Instr. German, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [370 Manhattan Ave.]
- Guérard, Albert Léon, Prof. General and Comp. Lit., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 1663]
- Guier, René Georges, Assoc. Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Guillaumant, (Mrs.) Hazel Tallman, Asst. Prof. French and Spanish, Valparaiso Univ., Valparaiso, Ind.
- Guilloton, Vincent, Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Guinotte, Marguerite, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [217 Harvard St. S. E.]
- Guiton, Jean William, Asst. Prof. French, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [227 Roberts Rd.]
- Gulick, Sidney Lewis, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Mills Coll., Calif.
- Gullette, Cameron Charles, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [228 Lincoln Hall]
- ❖ Gulliver, Harold Strong, Prof. Eng., Georgia State Woman's Coll., Valdosta, Ga.
- Gunn, Alan M., Head Eng. Dept., Pacific Univ., Forest Grove, Ore.
- Gustafson, Alrik Theodore, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [1 East Avenue]
- Gustafson, Laura, Assoc. Prof. Latin and French, Hollins Coll., Hollins, Va.
- Gustafson, Walter William, Prof. Eng., Upsala Coll., East Orange, N. J.
- Gutowski, Adriana C., Instr. Polish, Extra Mural Div., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [473 Main St., Paterson, N. J.]
- ❖ Guyer, Foster Erwin, Prof. French, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Haber, Tom Burns, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [64 Glenmont Ave.]
- Haddon, Charles M., Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [613 Zollinger Way, Merion]
- Haden, Ernest F., Prof. and Head French Dept., McMaster Univ., Hamilton, Ont., Canada

- Hadley, Frances Willard, Prof. Eng., Milwaukee-Downer Coll., Milwaukee, Wis
- Hadley, Marie Pauline, Asst. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [31 Thirtieth Ave.]
- Hadsell, Sardis Roy, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla. [720 De Barr Ave.]
- Haessler, Luise, Prof. German, Brooklyn Coll., 66 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [400 W. 119th St., N. Y. C.]
- Hafkesbrink, Hanna, Asst. Prof. and Acting Head German Dept., Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn.
- Hagboldt, Peter, Prof. German, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5451 Woodlawn Ave.]
- Hagen, Sivert N., Head Eng. Dept., Franklin and Marshall Coll., Lancaster, Pa.
- Hager, Frank L., Prof. Mod. Langs., Central Coll., Fayette, Mo. [204 Spring St.]
- Hagge, Carl W., Instr. German, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
- Haight, Gordon S., Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [439 Yale Sta.]
- Halbeisen, Elizabeth K., 1420 Bellevue Ave., Camden, N. J.
- Hale, Chandler, Jr., Santa Fe, New Mexico [364 E. De Vargas St.]
- Hale, Charles Brockway, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md.
- Hale, Will Taliaferro, Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [521 N. Park Ave.]
- Haley, Sister Marie Philip, Instr. French, Coll. of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
- Hall, A. Violet, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [Box 787, R.F.D. 2, Edmonds]
- Hall, Edgar A., Prof. Eng., Adelphi Coll., Garden City, L. I., N. Y. [147 Fenimore St., Brooklyn]
- Hall, Robert A., Grad. Stu. Indo-European Philology, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5649 Blackstone Ave.]
- Hallenbeck, Chester Traver, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Hamilton Hall]
- Haller, William, Prof. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Halverson, Nelius O., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Iowa State Teachers Coll., Cedar Falls, Iowa
- Ham, Edward Billings, Asst. Prof. French, and Fellow of Calhoun Coll., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [Calhoun Coll.]
- Ham, Philip Martin, Instr. French, Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H. [41 Front St.]
- Ham, Roscoe James, George Taylor Files Prof. Mod. Langs. (German), Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Maine
- Ham, Roswell Gray, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [769 Yale Sta.]
- Hamilton, Arthur, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1109 W. California Ave.]
- Hamilton, Edith, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [222 Claflin Hall]
- Hamilton, George Livingstone, Prof. Rom. Langs., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [316 Fall Creek Dr.]
- Hamilton, Harlan W., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Tulsa, Tulsa, Okla.
- Hamilton, John Allen, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Hamilton, (Mrs.) Marie Padgett, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [2324 E. First St.]
- Hamilton, Rachel Elizabeth, Assoc. French, Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [Denny Hall]
- Hamilton, Theodore Ely, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Hamm, Victor M., In Charge of Eng. Studies, Coll. of Mount St. Joseph-on-the-Ohio, Mount St. Joseph, Ohio [2832 Harrison Ave., Cincinnati]
- Hammer, (Rev.) Dominic E., S.J., Instr. German, Jesuit Novitiate, Wernersville, Pa.
- Hammond, Lansing V., Instr. Eng. Lit., Middlebury Coll., Middlebury, Vt. [c/o College Editor]
- Hanawalt, Leslie L., Asst. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [96 W. Greendale Ave.]
- Hand, Irene, Supervising Critic Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, O. [34 N. Congress St.]
- Haney, John B., Asst. German, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Haney, John Louis, President and Prof. Eng. Philology, Central H. S., Philadelphia, Pa. [6419 Woodbine Ave., Overbrook]
- Hanford, James Holly, Grad. Prof. Eng., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Hangen, Eva C., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wichita, Wichita, Kans. [1843 N. Lorraine]
- Hanhardt, Arthur Monroe, Prof. German, Union Coll., Lincoln, Neb. [On leave: 240 Linden Ave., Ithaca, N. Y.]

- Hankins, Everett M., Instr. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich.
- ❖ Hanley, Miles L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Hannay, Nelson Campbell, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept. Boston Univ., School of Religious Education Boston, Mass. [55 Horace Rd., Belmont]
- Harbage, Alfred Bennett, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [College Hall]
- Harbarger, Sada Annis, Asst. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Hard, Frederick, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Tulane Univ., New Orleans, La.
- Hardaway, Richard Travis, Instr. German, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Harding, Harold Friend, Asst. Prof. Public Speaking, George Washington Univ., 2033 G St. N.W., Washington, D. C.
- ❖ Hardy, Ashley Kingsley, Prof. German and Instr. Old Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Harlan, Earl, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [407 Locust St.]
- Harlan, Mabel Margaret, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [804½ E. 8th St.]
- Harmer, Florence E., Lecturer Eng. Lang. and Lit., The University, Manchester, Eng.
- Harmon, Lucy, Dean, and Prof. Eng., State Normal School, Geneseo, N. Y.
- Harn, Edith Muiel, Prof. German and Spanish, Agnes Scott Coll., Decatur, Ga.
- ❖ Harper, George McLean, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [36 Mercer St.]
- Harper, Quen Cox, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Kansas State Teachers Coll., Emporia, Kans. [114 Neosho St.]
- Harrington, Anne, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Harris, Alexander Logan, Prof. Mod. Langs. and Lits., Hobart and William Smith Coll., Geneva, N. Y.
- Harris, Brice, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [61 Goldwin Smith Hall]
- ❖ Harris, Charles, Prof. Emeritus German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2466 Kenilworth Rd. Cleveland Heights]
- Harris, Jesse, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [324 University Hall]
- Harris, John West, Jr., Prof. Eng., Wofford Coll., Spartanburg, S. C. [458 N. Church St.]
- Harris, Julia H., Prof. Eng., Meredith Coll., Raleigh, N. C.
- Harris, Julian Earle, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Harris, Paul Hyland, Instr. French, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [65 Mount Auburn St., #5 (Ridgely Hall), Cambridge]
- Harrison, Benjamin S., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Redlands, Redlands, Calif. [702 The Terrace]
- ❖ Harrison, John Smith, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind. [347 N. Audubon Rd.]
- Harrison, Mary W., Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., Kansas State Teachers Coll., Emporia, Kans. [822 Merchant St.]
- Harrison, Thomas Perrin, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [University Sta.]
- Harrold, Charles Frederick, Prof. Eng., Michigan State Normal Coll., Ypsilanti, Mich. [935 W. Forest Ave.]
- Hart, Anne B. G., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Hart, Charles Randall, Prof. Rom. Langs., Emory Univ., Emory University, Ga.
- Hart, Humes Houston Whittlesey, Prof. Rom. Langs., Western Carolina Teachers Coll., Cullowhee, N. C. [Box 336]
- Hart, Walter Morris, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1401 LeRoy Ave.]
- Hartley, Lodwick Charles, Asst. Prof. Eng., North Carolina State Coll., Raleigh, N. C. [Box 5362, State Coll. Sta.]
- Hartman, Anabel Eugenia, Teacher Eng., Eastern H. S., Baltimore, Md.
- Hartman, Herbert Weidler, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [17 Belmont St.]
- Hartmann, Maurice M., Instr. Eng., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [4238 Maryland Ave.]
- Hartzell, Carl, Instr. French, Franklin and Marshall Coll., Lancaster, Pa. [602 W. Chestnut St.]
- Harvitt, Hélène, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Brooklyn Coll., 66 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [1309 Carroll St.]
- Haselmayer, Louis A., Jr., Grad. Stu., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [2716 Yale Sta.]
- Hastings, George Everett, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark. [210 W. Maple St.]

- ❖ Hastings, Harry Worthington, Prof. Eng., N Y State Coll for Teachers, Albany, N Y.
- Hastings, Hester, French Teacher, Mary C. Wheeler School, Providence, R. I. [34 Benevolent St]
- Hastings, Walter Scott, Assoc. Prof. French, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [9 Greenholm]
- ❖ Hastings, William Thomson, Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Haswell, Richard E., Asst. Eng., Coll. of Liberal Arts, Univ. of Louisville, Louisville, Ky.
- Hatcher, Harlan H., Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- ❖ Hatfield, James Taft, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill [617 Foster St]
- Hatfield, W. Wilbur, Head Eng. Dept., Chicago Normal Coll., Chicago, Ill. [211 W. 68th St]
- Hathaway, Lillie Vinal, Asst. Prof. German, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [37 Riverside Dr.]
- Hauch, Edward F., Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Haugen, Einar, Asst. Prof. Scandinavian, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Häusermann, Hans Walter, Chantemerle, Neuveville, Canton de Berne, Switzerland
- Hausmann, Maude M., Grad. Scholar German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [508 N. Frances St.]
- ❖ Havens, George R., Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Havens, Paul Swain, Asst. Prof. Eng., Scripps Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- ❖ Havens, Raymond Dexter, Prof. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Haviland, Thomas P., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Hawk, Grace Ethel, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Horton House]
- Hawkins, Joseph Elmer, Prof. German, Baylor Univ., Waco, Tex. [1624 S. Tenth St.]
- Hawkins, Laurence Faulkner, Instr. Eng., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [18 W. 8th St]
- Hawkins, Richmond Laurin, Assoc. Prof. French, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [22 Prescott St.]
- Hawley, Charles A., Prof. Religion, State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia.
- Haxo, Henry E., Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of N. D., University Sta., N. D.
- Hay, Fanny A., Head Eng. Dept., Adrian Coll., Adrian, Mich.
- Hayakawa, S. Ichiye, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Hayes, Albert McHarg, Instr. Eng., Duquesne Univ., Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Hayes, Francis Clement, Instr. Spanish, Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [218 Vance St.]
- Hayes, George Passmore, Head Eng. Dept., Agnes Scott Coll., Decatur, Ga.
- Hayes, Joseph C., Asst. German, Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y.
- Haynes, French, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Elon Coll., Elon Coll., N. C.
- Hazen, Allen Tracy, Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [2705 Yale Sta.]
- Heald, (Effie) Catherine, c/o Dr. A. R. Masten, Lutheran Sanitarium, Wheatridge, Colo.
- Hearsey, Marguerite Capen, Prof. Eng., Hollins Coll., Hollins, Va.
- Heaton, Harry Clifton, Prof. Rom. Langs., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [University Heights]
- Heffelfinger, Clarence Edgar, Instr. Eng., Washington and Jefferson Coll., Washington, Pa.
- Heffner, Hubert Crouze, Prof. Dramatic Lit., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2044 Pratt Ct.]
- Heffner, Ray Lorenzo, Research Assoc. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 292]
- Heffner, Roe-Merrill Secrist, Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [27 Pinehurst Rd., Belmont]
- Hegar, Joseph, Instr. German, Mary Hardin-Baylor Coll., Belton, Bell Co., Tex. [S. 47th St., Temple, Bell Co.]
- Hegeman, Daniel VanBrunt, Instr. German, Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- Heidbrink, Frederick Henry, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [4305 N. Lincoln St., Chicago]
- Heidler, Joseph Bunn, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [76 Morris Ave.]
- Heiskell, Mary L., Prof. Spanish, State Teachers Coll., Memphis, Tenn. [1208 E. Parkway So.]
- Helff, Gertrude, Head German Dept., Coll. of St. Elizabeth, Convent Sta., N. J. [Box 13]

- Heller, Edmund Kurt, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [403 Wheeler Hall]
- ❖ Heller, Otto, Head German Dept., Prof. Mod. European Lit., Dean Grad. Sch., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Helming, Vernon Parker, Instr. Eng., Massachusetts State Coll., Amherst, Mass. [34 Amity St.]
- Helmrich, Elsie W., Prof. German, Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- Heltzel, Virgil Barney, The Huntington Lib., San Marino, Calif.
- Hemelt, Francis J., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C. [340 Decatur St. N. W.]
- Hemingway, Samuel Burdett, Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Hench, Atcheson L., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va.
- Hendren, Joseph W., Instr. Eng., Rice Institute, Houston, Texas.
- Hendrickson, Dean White, Asst. Prof. Eng., Western Maryland Coll., Westminster, Md. [37 Ridge Rd.]
- Hendrix, William Samuel, Chairman Dept. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [423 W. Ninth Ave.]
- Henel, Heinrich, Prof. and Head German Dept., Queen's Univ., Kingston, Ont., Canada [148 Lower Albert St.]
- Hénin, Benjamin L., 27 W. 74th St., New York, N. Y.
- Henneberger, Olive, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Henning, George Neely, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Dean Grad. Studies, George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Henninger, Isolde A., Prof. Mod. Langs., Talladega Coll., Talladega, Ala.
- Henry, Blossom L., Dept. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Henshaw, Millett, Asst. Director Eng. Dept., St. Louis Univ., 221 N. Grand Blvd., St. Louis, Mo.
- Heras, Antonio, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Southern Calif., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Herben, Stephen Joseph, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Philology, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [on leave. c/o R. R. Robbin, Holly Croft, Sipsen, W. Drayton, Middlesex, England]
- Herbert, Thomas Walter, Prof. Eng., Berry Coll., Mount Berry, Ga. [Box 46]
- Herlands, Lillian, (Mrs. George D. Hornstein), Asst. Eng., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y. [355 Riverside Dr., Apt. 15W]
- Hermannsson, Halldor, Prof. Scandinavian Langs. and Lits., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [The Library]
- Herold, Amos Lee, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex.
- Herold, Rev. George, Prof. Eng. Lit., Providence Coll., Providence, R. I.
- Herrick, Maivn Theodore, Assoc. Prof. Eng., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Herrick, Raymond Morse, Chairman Eng. Dept., Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [1003 Nott St.]
- Herrington, Hunley Whatley, Dept. Eng., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Herriott, J. Homer, Asst. Prof. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [723 Conklin Pl.]
- Herrmann, Alfred, Asst. Prof. German, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- ❖ Hespelt, Ernest Herman, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [2226 Loring Pl.]
- Hess, Dorothea C., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., 68th St. and Park Ave., New York, N. Y. [317 Fisher Ave., White Plains]
- Heuser, Frederick W. J., Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits. and Director of Deutsches Haus, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [423 W. 117th St.]
- Hewett-Thayer, Harvey Waterman, Prof. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [3 Evelyn Pl.]
- Hewitt, Frank L., Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Robert Coll., Constantinople, Turkey [On leave: 93 High St., Winsted, Conn.]
- Hewitt, Theodore Brown, Prof. and Head Dept. German, Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y.
- Hewlett, James Howell, Prof. Eng., Centre Coll., Danville, Ky.
- Heyberger, Anna, Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Coe Coll., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
- Heyse-Dummer, E., Prof. German, Elmhurst Coll., Elmhurst, Ill. [126 Virginia St.]
- Hiatt, Lulu Blanche, Prof. Rom. Langs., Union Coll., Lincoln, Neb. [On leave: 508 W. 9th Ave., Winfield, Kans.]
- Hibbitt, George Whiting, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [425 Riverside Dr.]
- Hickerson, William Howard, Prof. Eng.,

- Lake Erie Coll., Painesville, Ohio [115 Levan Dr]
- Hicks, Arthur C., Chairman Eng. Dept., Washington State Normal Sch., Bellingham, Wash
- Hicks, Philip Marshall, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa
- Hieble, Jacob, Inst. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Highfill, Robert David, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., State Teachers Coll., Memphis, Tenn. [3572 Watauga St.]
- Hilberry, Clarence Beverly, Instr. Eng. Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [519 Maplewood West, Ferndale]
- Hilborn, Harry Warren, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Acadia Univ., Wolfville, Nova Scotia, Canada [Box 10]
- Hill, Archibald Anderson, Assoc. Prof. Eng. and Eng. Philology, Univ. of Virginia, University, Va. [Box 1001]
- Hill, Charles J., Asst. Prof. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [16 Paradise Rd.]
- Hill, Edith Abigail, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Redlands, Redlands, Calif. [14 Clifton Court]
- Hill, Grace Annie, Prof. and Head French Dept., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich.
- Hill, Herbert Wynford, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [234 W. Adams St.]
- ❖ Hill, John M., Prof. Spanish, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [317 E. 2nd St.]
- Hill, L. Alfreda, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [402 Anderson Hall]
- Hill, (Mrs.) Mary A., Head Dept. Eng., Northern Arizona State Teachers Coll., Flagstaff, Ariz. [108 W. Aspen St.]
- Hill, Murray Gardner, Chairman Dept. Eng., Pasadena Junior Coll., Pasadena, Calif. [20 Oak Knoll Gardens]
- ❖ Hill, Raymond Thompson, Assoc. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1091 Bingham Hall]
- Hillebrand, Harold N., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1005 W. California St.]
- ❖ Hilles, Frederick Wiley, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1922 Yale Sta.]
- Hillhouse, James T., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Hilmer, William Charles, Head For. Lang. Dept., Simpson Coll., Indianola, Iowa [310 W. Iowa Ave.]
- Hilton, George Robert, Asst. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [309 University Hall]
- Hinckley, Edward Barnard, Asst. Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Univ. of Tampa, Tampa, Fla.
- ❖ Hinckley, Henry Barrett, 75 Linden St., Brattleboro, Vt.
- Hinds, Asher Estey, Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Box 55]
- Hinz, Stella M., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- ❖ Hochdoerfer, K. F. Richard, Prof. Emeritus Mod. Langs., Wittenberg Coll., Springfield, Ohio [2600 A St., Lincoln, Neb.]
- Hochdoerfer, Margaret, Assoc. Prof. Germanic Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [Andrews Hall, 204]
- Hocking, Elton Capper, Instr. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- ❖ Hodder, Mrs. Alfred, Princeton, N. J. [341 Nassau St.]
- Hodges, John Cunyus, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn. [1908 White Ave.]
- Hodopp, William Carrithers, Instr. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [1937 Frankfort Ave., Louisville, Ky.]
- Hoelzel, Virginia, Instr. Mod. Langs., Union Coll., Lincoln, Neb.
- Hofacker, Erich, Asst. Prof. German, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Hoffherr, Fred G., Assoc. Prof. and Departmental Representative of French, South Hall, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Hoffman, Caius Marion, French Teacher, Hobart H. S., Hobart, N. Y. [Box 35]
- Hoffman, Eleanor Myrtle, Instr. Eng., Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Hoffsten, Ernest Godfrey, Prof. Eng., Harris Teachers Coll., St. Louis, Mo. [17 West Swan Ave., Webster Groves]
- Hofrichter, Ruth J., Asst. Prof. German, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Hogan, Charles Beecher, Woodbridge, Conn. [Center St.]
- Hogrefe, Pearl, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Iowa State Coll., Ames, Iowa [18 Central Hall]
- ❖ Hohlfeld, Alexander R., Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Hohn, Max T., Instr. Eng., Oak Park and River Forest Township H. S., Oak Park, Ill. [117 S. Kenilworth Ave.]
- Holbrook, Newton D., III, Instr. German, Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del. [343 S. College Ave.]

- Holbrook, William Collar, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Hole, Allen D., Jr., Inst. French, Westtown School, Westtown, Pa.
- Holland, Dorothy, Head Eng. Dept., Lower Merion St. H. S., Ardmore, Pa. [105 Cricket Ave.]
- Hollander, Lee M., Prof. Germ. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Texas [3204 West Ave.]
- Holley, Emile Trevelle, Asst. Prof. Eng., Miner Teachers Coll., Washington, D. C.
- Holloway, Owen Ernest, Lecturer Eng., Univ. of Egypt, Ghuzh, Cairo, Egypt
- ❖ Hollowell, Bennet M., Prof. Eng., Bradley Polytechnic Inst., Peoria, Ill.
- Holm, Mrs. Jessie Lu, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [8020 Dixiel Ave.]
- Holmes, Henry Alfred, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [464 Riverside Dr.]
- Holmes, Henry Bert, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky. [R. F. D. #2]
- Holmes, Urban Tigner, Jr., Prof. French, Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Holsapple, Cortell King, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [P. O. Box 1507, Univ. Sta.]
- Holstein, Mark G., New York, N. Y. [104 E. 40th St.]
- Holzknicht, Karl J., Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., New York Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Holzmann, Albert William, Assoc. Prof. German and Head Dept., Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Honora, Sister M., Head Eng. Dept., Marygrove Coll., McNichols Rd., W., Detroit, Mich.
- Hooker, Edward Niles, Instr. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 651, Gilman Hall]
- ten Hoor, George John, Asst. Prof. German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Hoover, Merle M., Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [50 Morningside Drive]
- Hopkins, Annette<sup>2</sup> Brown, Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore Md.
- Hopkins, Edwin Mortimer, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1234 Mississippi St.]
- Hoppe, Harry R., c/o Chase National Bank, 10 Moorgate, London, England
- Hopper, Georgia Etherton, Head French Dept., Bradley Polytechnic Inst., Peoria, Ill. [213 N. Underhill St.]
- Hopper, Vincent Foster, Asst. Prof. General Lit., School of Commerce, New York Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Horn, Robert Dewey, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore. [1825 Fairmount Blvd.]
- Hornbeak, Katherine Gee, Asst. Prof. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [277 Crescent St.]
- Hornberger, Theodore, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2212 Angell Hall]
- Horner, George F., Instr. Eng., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [213 N. Boundary St.]
- Horsfield, Margaret B., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- Hoskins, John Preston, Prof. Emeritus Germ. Langs. and Lits., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [10 College Rd.]
- Hotchner, Cecilia Audrey, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [632 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn]
- Hotson, Clarence Paul, Asst. Prof. Eng., Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Tex. [11 Bonfoy Ave., Colorado Springs, Colo.]
- ❖ Hotson, J. Leslie, Prof. Eng., Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa. [3 College Circle]
- Houck, (Mrs.) Helen Phipps, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Houck, Margaret, Asst. Prof. Eng., State Coll., Chico, Calif. [810 Esplanade]
- Houk, Raymond A., 3781 Oliver St. N.W., Washington, D. C.
- ❖ House, Ralph Emerson, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [619 Brown St.]
- House, Roy Temple, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla. [317 W. Eufaula St.]
- ❖ Houston, Frances Hundley (Mrs. Wilmer Willis), The Charlton, 902 Greenway Court, Norfolk, Va.
- Hovey, Alma Burnham, Instr. Eng., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [314 N. Dubuque St.]
- Howald, Ernest, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Seton Hall Coll., South Orange, N. J.
- Howard, Edwin Johnston, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [116 E. High St.]

- Howard, Leon, Asst. Prof. Eng., Pomona Coll., Claremont, Calif. [217 W. 11th St.]
- ❖ Howard, William Guild, Prof. Eminentus German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [91 Garden St.]
- Howe, E. Barton, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Elmira Coll., Elmira, N. Y.
- Howe, George Maxwell, Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [160 Lake View Ave.]
- Howe, Herbert Crombie, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.
- Howell, Almonte C., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [Box 363]
- Howell, Beatrice, Bennington Coll., Bennington, Vt.
- Howell, Mortimer Brooks, Instr. Eng., New York Univ., Univ. Hgts., New York, N. Y. [1617 Urban St., Mamaroneck, N. Y.]
- Howgate, George Washburne, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [College Hall]
- Howland, Felix, Ministry of Education, Kabul, Afghanistan
- Hubbell, George Shelton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Hubbell, Jay Broadus, Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C.
- Huber, Iene Maria, Instr. German, Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Hudson, Arthur Palmer, Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [P. O. Box 523]
- Hudson, Hoyt Hopewell, Prof. Rhetoric and Oratory, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [28 Edgehill St.]
- Huganir, Kathryn, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Wayne State Teachers Coll., Wayne, Neb. [114 W. Tenth St.]
- Hughes, Arthur Howard, Instr. German, Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn. [21 Jarvis Hall]
- Hughes, Helen Sard, Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Hughes, Herbert Leland, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Dean of School of Arts and Sciences, Louisiana Polytechnic Institute, Ruston, La.
- Hughes, Merritt Y., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [784 Euclid Ave.]
- Hughey, Ruth Willard, 18 Tavinton St., London, W. C. 1., England
- Hulbert, James Root, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [82 Faculty Exchange]
- Hulbert, Mary Vernam, Chairman Dept. Rom. Langs., Skidmore Coll., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
- Hull, Vernam Edward, Asst. Ed. Early Modern Eng. Dictionary and of Hessens Triesches Lexikon, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [605 Oxford Rd.]
- Hultzen, Lee S., Lecturer Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [513 Hamilton Hall]
- Humbert, Gabriele M. A., Asst. Prof. German, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Humphreys, Wilber Ray, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1220 Angell Hall]
- Hungerford, Edward Buell, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [Lunt 2]
- Hunt, Douglas L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Birmingham-Southern Coll., Birmingham, Ala.
- Hunt, Everett Lee, Prof. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [604 Elm Ave.]
- Hunt, Helen Mustard, Instr. German, Extension Dept., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Apt. 44, 401 W. 118 St.]
- Hunt, Percival, Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Hunt, Theodore Brainerd, Asst. Prof. Eng., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa. [312 March St.]
- Hunter, Edwin Ray, Prof. Eng., Maryville Coll., Maryville, Tenn. [111 Wilson Ave.]
- Hunter, Ruth Viola, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Western Coll., Oxford, Ohio
- Huntley, Frank Livingstone, Prof. Eng. Lit., Doshisha Univ., Kyoto, Japan
- Huppé, Bernard F., Eng. Dept., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Hurlbrink, Luise Johanna, Asst. Prof. German, Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [North Liberal Arts Bldg.]
- Hurlburt, Albert Francis, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Box 26, College Hall]
- Hurley, Jesse Raymond, Instr. Eng., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash. [Box 114, Coll. Sta.]
- Hurley, Leonard Burwell, Prof. Eng., N. C. Coll. for Women, Greensboro, N. C.
- Huse, William Woodman, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., California Inst. of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.
- Hustvedt, Sigurd Bernhard, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [405 Hilgard Ave.]

- Hutchins, Elizabeth, Prof. Spanish, Blue Mountain Coll., Blue Mountain, Miss.
- ❖ Hutchins, Henry Clinton, Research Assoc. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [137 Cottage St.]
- Hutchins, John Harold, Tutor Eng., City College, New York, N. Y. [418 W. 118 St.]
- Huth, Mari Lause, Asst. Prof. German, Guilford Coll., Guilford Coll., N. C.
- Hutson, Arthur Eugene, Inst. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2513 Hill Ct.]
- Hutton, James, Asst. Prof. Classics, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- ❖ Hyde, James Hazen, Lannes, Paris XVI, France [67 Blvd.]
- ❖ Hyder, Clyde Kenneth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [The University Club]
- Iysham, Julia H., Asst. Prof. Eng., Skidmore Coll., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
- Iacuzzi, Alfred, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 17 Lexington Ave., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Ichikawa, Sanki, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Imperial Univ. of Tokio, Tokio, Japan [25 Kitayamabushicho, Ushigome]
- Imbault-Huart, Yvonne, Assoc. Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Imbert, Louis, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [508 Hamilton Hall]
- Ingalls, Gertrude Van Arsdale, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Washington Coll., Chestertown, Md. [224 Washington Ave.]
- Ingenhuett, Arthur Hilmer, Instr. German Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [2940 Broadway]
- Ingersoll, Julia Day, Prof. French, Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill.
- Iribas, Mercedes, 130 Gladstone Rd., Gladstone Manor, Lansdowne, Pa.
- Irvine, (Mrs.) Annie S., Adjunct Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [311 E. Thirty-fourth St.]
- Irving, William Henry, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2125 Ridge Ave.] [On leave: 32 Tavestock Sq., London, W. C. 1, England]
- Irwin, (Mrs.) Charlotte W., Teacher French, Hathaway-Brown School for Girls, Cleveland, Ohio [10703 Ashbury Ave.]
- Irwin, John Scott, Grad. Asst. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [206 W. Gorham St.]
- Ittner, Robert, Asst. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [37 Arundel Place, St. Louis, Mo.]
- Ives, Elizabeth H., Librarian and Head Dept. Italian, College of the Sacred Heart, Manhattanville, N. Y.
- Jablonski, Bernard S., Prof. French, John Carroll Univ., 1911 W. 30th St., Cleveland, Ohio
- Jack, Alta, Asst. Prof. French, Baylor Univ., Waco, Tex.
- ❖ Jack, William Shaffer, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [1926 Diamond St.]
- Jackson, Alfred, Head Eng. Dept., Scarborough Coll., Yorks, England
- Jackson, Elizabeth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Jackson, Elizabeth Hope, Inst. Eng., Maryville Coll., Maryville, Tenn.
- Jackson, George Pullen, Prof. German, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Jackson, Jess Hamilton, Head Eng. Dept., College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.
- Jackson, Joseph Francis, Asst. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1321 Yale Sta.]
- Jackson, Ruth M., 6032 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.
- Jackson, William Alexander, 47 E. 60th St., New York, N. Y.
- Jacob, Cary Franklin, Assoc. Prof. Spoken Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [69 Prospect Pl.]
- Jacob, Wilmer Foster, Instr. Eng., Alabama Polytechnic Inst., Auburn, Ala. [Box 2203]
- Jacobson, Anna, Assoc. Prof. German, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [315 E. 68th St.]
- Jaeger, Hans, Asst. Prof. German, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [57 Jefferson Rd.]
- Jaeger, Julius Peter, Prof. Eng., College of Puget Sound, Tacoma, Wash.
- de Jaive, Edmond M., Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Gulf Park Coll., Gulfport, Miss.
- James, Thelma G., Asst. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., 4841 Cass Ave., Detroit, Mich.
- Jameson, Grace Emily, Prof. Eng., Tarkio Coll., Tarkio, Mo. [901 Main St.]
- Jameson, Russell Parsons, Prof. and Head Dept. French and Italian, Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [162 S. Cedar Ave.]
- Jamison, Wylie M., c/o Bankers Trust Company, New York, N. Y. [501 Fifth Avenue]

- Janney, Francis LaMar, Prof. Eng., Hollins Coll., Hollins, Va
Jantz, Harold S., Asst. Prof. German, Clark Univ., Worcester, Mass
von Jaworska, Joan, Miss Chapin's School, 100 East End Ave., New York, N. Y.
Jeans, Fred Wilson, Asst. Spanish, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [57 Waterman St.]
Jefferson, Bernard L., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [402 W. Iowa St.]
Jeffrey, Margaret, Instr. German, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass
Jehle, Mimi Ida, Instr. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
Jelinek, Vladimir, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
Jenkins, Raymond, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Catawba Coll., Salisbury, N. C.
Jenney, Florence G., Prof. Eng., Russell Sage Coll., Troy, N. Y.
Jensen, Dana O., Instr. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
❖ Jensen, Gerard Edward, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn. [51 Hall Ave.]
❖ Jente, Richard, Assoc. Prof. German, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
Jesse, Bredelle, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [810 Hillcrest Ave.]
Jessen, Mrs. Myra Richards, Asst. German, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
Jewitt, A. R., Grad. Stu. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [503 Dryden Rd.]
Jockers, Ernst Wilhelm, Prof. German Lit., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.
John, (Miss) Lisle Cecil, Instr. Eng., Evening Session, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [411 W. 116 St.]
Johnson, A. Theodore, Prof. Eng., Southwestern Coll., Memphis, Tenn.
❖ Johnson, Edith Christina, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Comp., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [18 Washington St., E. Milton]
Johnson, Edna, Asst. Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [822 Atwater]
Johnson, Elizabeth F., Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Winthrop Coll., Rock Hill, S. C.
Johnson, Ellen Marie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Eureka Coll., Eureka, Ill. [On leave: 60 Gates Hall, Univ. of Chicago]
Johnson, Francis R., Instr. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif.
Johnson, Harvey Leroy, Instr. Rom. Langs., Rice Inst., Houston, Tex. [2231 Albans]
Johnson, Herman Patrick, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va. [Box 1164]
Johnson, Irvin A., Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [470 W. 24th St.]
Johnson, John Rochelle Lee, Prof. Eng., College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va. [134 Jamestown Rd.]
Johnson, Thomas H., Head Eng. Dept., Hackley School, Tarrytown, N. Y.
Johnson, Walter Gilbert, Instr. Swedish and English, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [324 University Hall]
Johnson, William Savage, Prof. Eng. Lit. and Chairman Dept., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1509 Crescent Rd.]
Johnston, George Burke, 1914 Sixth St., Tuscaloosa, Ala.
Johnston, Oliver Martin, Emeritus Prof. Romanic Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 1132]
Joliat, Eugene Aime, Special Lec. French, McMaster Univ., Hamilton, Ont., Canada [8 Langwood Rd. N.]
Jones, Frederick Lafayette, Prof. Eng., Mercer Univ., Macon, Ga.
❖ Jones, Frederick Mason, Prof. Rom. Langs., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y. [52 Maple Ave.]
Jones, Harry Stuart Vedder, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [419 Lincoln Hall]
Jones, Howard Mumford, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
Jones, John Langdon, Instr. French, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [301 College Hall, 34th and Spruce Sts.]
Jones, Joseph J., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [409 E. 31st St.]
Jones, Louis C., Instr. Eng., N. Y. State Coll. for Teachers, Albany, N. Y. [26 Albion Ave.]
Jones, Putnam Fennell, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Jones, Raymond Watson, Prof. German, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
Jones, Richard Foster, Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
Jones, S. Paul, Instr. French, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Philosophy Hall]
Jones, Virgil Lauren, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark. [728 W. Maple St.]
Jones, W. Powell, Asst. Prof. Eng., Adelbert Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio

- de Jong, Gerrit, Jr., Prof. Mod. Langs., Brigham Young Univ., Provo, Utah
- Jordan, Arthur Carl, Teacher of Langs., Frankford H. S., Phila., Pa.
- Jordan, Brady R., Prof. Rom. Langs., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 4883, Duke Sta.]
- Jordan, Elizabeth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla.
- Jordan, Emil Leopold, Asst. Prof. German, N. J. Coll. for Women, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J. [28 Hale St.]
- Jordan, Gilbert J., Asst. Prof. German, Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex. [On leave German Dept., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio]
- Jordan, Howard S., Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Jordan, John Clark, Prof. Eng. and Public Speaking, Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.
- ❖ Jordan, Mary Augusta, Prof. Emeritus Eng. Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., [24 Lincoln St., New Haven, Conn.]
- Joughin, George Louis, Adjunct Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Judson, Alexander Corbin, Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [310 N. Park Ave.]
- Judy, Clinton K., Prof. Eng. Lit., California Inst. of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.
- Justinian, Sister M., Principal, St. Clare Academy, Sylvania, O.
- Kahin, Helen (Mrs. George), Assoc. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [4753 18th Ave. N.E.]
- Kamman, William F., Prof. and Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa. [5 Roselawn Terrace, Oakland Sta.]
- Kane, Robert Joseph, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [454 Alden Ave.]
- Kapstein, Israel James, Instr. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [131 Hope St.]
- Kase, Charles Robert, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Dela.
- Kasten, Lloyd A., Instr. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Kaufmann, Friedrich Wilhelm, Prof. and Head German Dept., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio
- Kaun, Alexander, Assoc. Prof. Slavic Langs., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1429 Leroy Ave.]
- Keal, Josephine Nevins, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [7387 Byron Ave.]
- Keating, L. Clark, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Macalester Coll., St. Paul, Minn.
- Keaton, Anna Lucile, Asst. Prof. Eng. and Dean Women, Dakota Wesleyan Univ., Mitchell, S. D.
- Keeler, Sister Jerome, Prof. French, Mount St. Scholastica Coll., Atchison, Kansas
- Keenan, D'Elbert Ernest, Asst. Prof. French, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y. [40 Monroe St., Apt. B 66]
- Keep, Robert Porter, Principal, Miss Porter's Sch., Farmington, Conn.
- Kegel, Friedrich Otto, Asst. Prof. German, Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [1028 W. North St.]
- Kehlenbeck, Alfred Paul, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Iowa State Coll., Ames, Ia.
- ❖ Keil, Gunther, Asst. Prof. German, Hunter Coll., Kingsbridge Sta., New York, N. Y. [117 W. 197th St.]
- Keiley, Jarvis, Asst. Prof. Eng., The City College, New York, N. Y. [527 W. 113th St.]
- Keiser, Albert, Head Eng. Dept., Lenoir Rhyne Coll., Hickory, N. C.
- Keith, John Alexander Hull, Instr. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [101 Haven House]
- Kek, (Mis) Anna Dale, Prof. Latin and German, Indiana Central Coll., Indianapolis, Ind.
- Kellenberger, Hunter, Route No. 2, Newark, Ohio
- Keller, May Lansfield, Prof. Eng. and Dean, Westhampton Coll., University of Richmond, Va.
- Kelley, Abner Wellington, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- Kelley, Cornelia Pulsifer, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [808 S. Lincoln St.]
- Kelley, Maurice Wille, Instr. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [32 Edgehill St.]
- Kellogg, Eleanor Humphrey, Grad. Stu. Eng., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [71 Columbia Heights]
- ❖ Kellogg, Robert James, 415 S. Cedar St., Ottawa, Kans.
- Kelly, Blanche Mary, Prof. Eng., Coll. of Mt. St. Vincent, Mt. St. Vincent, N. Y.
- Kelly, Horace Jerome, 489 E. 18th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

- Kelly, John Alexander, Assoc. Prof. German, Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa.
- Kelso, Ruth, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [508 S. Goodwin Ave.]
- Kemp, Alice, Instr. Spanish, Milwaukee-Downer Coll., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Kendall, Paul Murray, Prof. Eng., Southern Coll., Petersburg, Va.
- Keniston, Hayward, Prof. Spanish Lang., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Kennan, Clara, Instr. Eng., Arkansas A. and M. Coll., Monticello, Ark.
- Kennedy, Arthur G., Prof. Eng. Philology, Stanford Univ., Calif. [435 Colendge Ave., Palo Alto]
- Kennedy, Charles William, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [The Nassau Club]
- Kennedy, Milton Boone, Assoc. Prof. Eng., The Citadel, Charleston, S. C. [719 E. Capitol St., Washington, D. C.]
- Kennedy, Ruth Lee, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Gillett House]
- Kenny, Robert Webb, Eng. Dept., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Kent, Elizabeth Eaton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Russell Sage Coll., Troy, N. Y. [The Caldwell]
- Kenyon, Herbert Alden, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2037 Norway Rd.]
- ❖ Kenyon, John Samuel, Prof. Eng. Lang., Hiram Coll., Hiram, Ohio.
- ❖ Kern, Alfred Allan, Prof. Eng., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- Kern, John Dwight, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Sch. of Commerce, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Kerr, Albert S., 311 E. 9th St., New York, N. Y.
- Kessel, Marcel, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Connecticut State Coll., Storrs, Conn.
- Ketrick, Paul John, Instr. Eng., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C. [P.O. Box 4511, Brookland, D. C.]
- Keyes, Charles Reuben, Alumni Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Cornell Coll., Mount Vernon, Iowa.
- Kies, Paul Philemon, Assoc. Prof. Eng., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash. [214 Columbia Ave.]
- Kilbourne, Harry Robert, Instr. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 632]
- Kilgour, Raymond Lincoln, Instr. and Tutor Rom Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [29 Highland Ave., Lexington]
- Kilpatrick, (Mrs.) Norman La Verne, Grad. Stu. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [314 Benefit St.]
- Kimball, LeRoy Elwood, Comptroller, N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [100 Washington Square]
- Kincaid, Martha May, Asst. Prof. French, Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind.
- King, J. Percival, Prof. German, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- King, James S., Dean, Hamline Univ., St. Paul, Minn.
- King, Lucille, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2600 Whitis Ave.]
- King, Martha Louise, Instr. Spanish and Eng., Rio Grande County H. S., Monte Vista, Colo.
- King, Paul Charles, Instr. Spanish and Italian, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [531 Central Ave., University City]
- King, Rolf, Faculty Club, Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa.
- Kinzek, Charles, Instr. Mod. Langs., Compton Jr. Coll., Compton, Calif. [603 N. Willow]
- ❖ Kirby, Thomas Austin, Asst. Prof. Eng., Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge, La. [Box 1264]
- Kirk, Clara Marburg, (Mrs. Rudolf), Assoc. Prof. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [628 Overhill Rd., Ardmore]
- ❖ Kirk, Rudolf, Asst. Prof. Eng., Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Kirkland, Edwin Capers, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.
- Kitchel, Anna Theresa, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Kittel, Paula M., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [508 N. Frances St.]
- Kittle, William, Washington, D. C. [3131 Military Road N.W.]
- ❖ Kittredge, George Lyman, Prof. Eng. Lit., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [8 Hilliard St.]
- ❖ Klaeber, Frederick, Prof. Emeritus Comp. and Eng. Philology, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [15 Chamberlainstr., Berlin-Zehlendorf West, Germany]
- Klancar, Anthony J., Grad. Stu. Eng., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, O. [1000 E. 64 St.]
- Klarmann, Adolf D., Instr. German, Univ. of

- Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [3730 Locust St.]
- Klees, Fredric S., Instr. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- ❖ Klein, David, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Klein, John Frederick, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Klein, Manfred, Instr. German, Simmons Coll., Boston, Mass.
- Kleiner, Mathilde, (Mrs. E. G.), Prof. German, Cumnock Coll., Los Angeles, Calif. [Rm. 1700, 51 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.]
- ❖ von Klenze, Camillo, Prof. Emeritus German Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Munich, [Kingscote Gardens, Stanford Univ., Calif.]
- Klett, Martha Ada, Asst. Prof. German, Scripps Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Kline, Earl Kilburn, Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Brothers Coll., Drew Univ., Madison, N. J.
- Kloekner, Emil P., Prof. German and French, St. Johns Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y. [1144 Bergen St.]
- Klug, (Mrs.) Flora Buck, Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [Apt. 6A, 140-20 Sanford Ave., Flushing, N. Y.]
- Knapp, Lewis M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Knease, Tacie Mary, Instr. Rom. Langs., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [1022 E. College St.]
- Knedler, John Warren, Jr., Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Univ. Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Knickerbocker, Kenneth Leslie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Rhode Island State Coll., Kingston, R. I.
- Knickerbocker, William Edwin, Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Knickerbocker, William Skinkle, Prof. Eng. and Editor, Sewanee Review, Univ. of the South, Sewanee, Tenn.
- Knott, J. Proctor, Assoc. Prof. French, Centre Coll., Danville, Ky.
- ❖ Knott, Thomas A., Prof. Eng., and Editor of Middle Eng. Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1103 Ferdon Rd.]
- Knowles, Edwin B., Jr., Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Knowlton, Edgar Colby, Eng. Dept., State Teachers Coll., LaCrosse, Wis.
- Knox, Guy Mortimer, Head Mod. For. Langs. Dept., Piedmont H. S., Piedmont, Calif. [83 Lane Court, Oakland]
- Knox, Robert Strachan, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Knudson, Charles Anthony, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Koch, Einst., Instr. German, New York Univ., New York, N. Y. [Box 166, Univ. Hgts.]
- ❖ Koch, Richard F. [Address unknown]
- von Koch, Sigfrid Richeitson, Post-Doctorate Research Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [123 Ogden Ave., Swarthmore, Pa.]
- Koella, Charles Emile, Instr. French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [430 Cross St.]
- Koenig, V. Frederic, Instr. French, Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz.
- Koester, Leonard, Instr. Germ., Univ. of Louisville, Louisville, Ky. [3928 Southern Parkway]
- Kohler, Mrs. Theodora Dobler, 5804 Glenview Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio
- Kohr, Walter R., Manager, Educational Dept., Thomas Nelson and Sons, New York, N. Y. [381-4th Ave.]
- Kolb, Philip, Fondation des Etats-Unis, 15 Boulevard Jourdan, Paris XIVe, France
- ❖ Koller, Armin Hajmin, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [207 E. Washington St.]
- Koller, Kathrine, Instr. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Low Buildings]
- König, Selma S., Prof. Mod. Langs., State Teachers Coll., Peru, Neb.
- Korfmacher, William Charles, Asst. Prof. Classical Langs., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [4548A Alice Ave.]
- ❖ Kotz, Theodore Franklin, Cleveland, Ohio [1341 E. 110th St.]
- Krakeur, Lester Gilbert, Teaching Asst. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [Wheeler Hall]
- Krakovski, Meyer, Instr. German, Los Angeles Jr. Coll., Los Angeles, Calif. [843½ Hyperion Ave.]
- Kramer, Charles F., Jr., Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md. [Box 262]
- Kramer, Priscilla Manton, Instr. German, Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Krauss, Russell, Instr. Eng., New Jersey State Coll., Montclair, N. J. [Box 93, Great Notch, N. J.]

- Kreider, Paul V, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Kretzmann, Edwin M. J., Instr. German, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I [56 Olney St.]
- Kretzmann, Otto Paul, Eng. Dept., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [6438 Eggleston Ave.]
- Kreuzer, James R, Research Asst, The City Coll, New York, N Y [116 W. 72nd St.]
- Kreye, George W, Insti German, Yale Univ, New Haven, Conn [1609 Chapel St.]
- Kroesch, Samuel, Prof. and Chairman Dept. German, Univ of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn [1205 Seventh St, S E.]
- Krummel, Charles A, Prof German, Duke Univ, Durham, N. C.
- Krumpelmann, John Theodore, Prof and Head German Dept, Marshall Coll, Huntington, W Va [1223 5th Ave.]
- Kubler, Ernest A., Instr German, Cornell Univ, Ithaca, N Y [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Kuehn, George W., Instr. Eng., Harvard Coll, Cambridge, Mass. [21 Coolidge Hill Rd.]
- Kuersteiner, (Mrs.) Agnes D., Grad. Stu and Library Cataloger, Indiana Univ, Bloomington, Ind. [1827 E. Third St.]
- Kuhinka, Julius Victor, Prof Eng., Loyola Univ., Chicago, Ill. [5121 W. Twenty-second Pl, Cicero]
- Kuhl, Ernest Peter, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.
- Kullmer, Charles Julius, Prof. German, Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [868 Westmoreland Ave.]
- Kummerle, Katharine E, Head Dept. Mod Lang., Walton H. S., 195th St and Reservoir Ave, New York, N Y. [91 Vernon Ave, Mt. Vernon]
- ❖ Kurath, Hans, Prof. Germ. Langs. and General Linguistics, Director of the Linguistic Atlas U S. and Canada, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Kurath, William, Instr German in the Coll., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [122 Faculty Exchange]
- ❖ Kurrelmeyer, William, Prof. German, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [1529 Linden Ave.]
- Kurtz, John William, Instr. German, Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [228 Elm St.]
- Kurtz, Leonard P., Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y.
- ❖ Kurz, Harry, Prof. and Head Rom. Langs. Dept., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Ladd, Henry Andrews, Member Eng. Faculty, Sarah Lawrence Coll, Bronxville, N. Y.
- Ladd, Jonathan B., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Thiel Coll, Greenville, Pa. [282 Main St.]
- La Driere, James Craig, Fellow in Grad Sch, Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [208 N. Division Ave.]
- LaDu, Milan S, Univ. of Kansas City, Kansas City, Mo [4923 Wyandotte St.]
- LaGrone, Gregory Gough, Jusserand Traveling Scholar in Romanics, U. of Pennsylvania [Santa Enciacia, 5, 2<sup>a</sup> dra, Madrid, Spain]
- ❖ Lahser, Conrad, Prof. German, Greensboro Coll., Greensboro, N. C.
- Laird, Hilda Campbell, Asst. Prof. German, Queen's Univ., Kingston, Ont.
- Laird, Sara G, Assoc Prof Eng, Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan [1715 Indiana St.]
- Lamont, Wilham H. F, Asst. Prof Eng., Rutgers Univ, New Brunswick, N J.
- LaMotte, Frank A, Prof. Mod. Langs., Junior Coll, Hackettstown, N. J. [c/o C.C.I., Hackettstown]
- Lamson, Roy, Jr., Instr. and Tutor Eng., Harvard Univ, Cambridge, Mass [13 Lancaster St.]
- ❖ Lancaster, H. Carrington, Prof. French Lit., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- de Landero, Pedro A, Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind. [P.O. Box 62]
- Landis, Paul Nissley, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [609 W Oregon St.]
- Landrum, Grace Warren, Dean Women and Prof. Eng., Coll of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.
- Lane, Howard Clinton, Prof Eng., Cornell Coll, Mt. Vernon, Iowa
- Laney, Emma May, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Agnes Scott Coll, Decatur, Ga.
- Langdale, A. Barnett, Eng. Teacher, Brooklyn Technical H. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. [209 Lincoln Pl.]
- Langdon, Ida, Prof. Eng. Lit., Elmira Coll., Elmira, N Y. [303 N. Main St.]
- Lange, Carl Frederick Augustus, Prof. German Lang and Lit, Smith Coll, Northampton, Mass. [Prospect Heights]
- Lange, Victor, Lecturer German, Univ. Coll, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Langley, Ernest F., Prof. Rom. Langs., Massachusetts Inst. of Technology, Cambridge, Mass. [Office 2-161]

- Langsjoen, Nels P., Head Mod Lang Dept., Gustavus Adolphus Coll., St. Peter, Minn. [410 N. 4th St.]
- Langwell, Earl Frederick, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.
- Lanier, Emilio Agunaldo, Asst. Prof. Eng., Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- de La Rochelle, Phillippe, Prof. French, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Box 39, Philosophy Hall]
- Larrabee, Stephen Addison, Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [2767 Yale Sta.]
- Larsen, Henning, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [21 E. Davenport St.]
- Larwill, Paul Herbert, Prof. Rom. Langs., Kenyon Coll., Gambier, Ohio.
- Lasher-Schlitt, Dorothy, Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., 66 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [1006 Caton Ave.]
- Lasley, Robert Law, Head Dept. Eng., Morris Harvey Coll., Charleston, W. Va. [1336 Virginia St.]
- Lathrop, Henry Burowes, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Laughton, Elizabeth R., Assoc. Prof. Spoken Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Laurie, Frank Alan, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa.
- Laurina, Sister Mary, 1219 Avenue O, Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Lavery, Lorna Isabella,—See Stafford, Lorna Lavery
- Law, Marie Hamilton, Vice-Director, Sch. of Library Science, Drexel Inst., Phila., Pa. [5515 Wissahickon Ave.]
- ❖ Law, Robert Adger, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2614 Salado St.]
- ❖ Lawrence, William Witherle, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [605 Philosophy Hall]
- ❖ Leach, Henry Goddard, Editor, The Forum, Trustee American-Scandinavian Foundation, 170 E. 64th St., New York, N. Y.
- Leach, Mac Edward, Asst. Prof., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Bennett Hall, Box 5]
- Learned, Henry Dexter, Prof. and Head French Dept., Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Learned, Mary R., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Wells Coll., Aurora, N. Y.
- Leary, Lewis Gaston, Jr., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Miami, Coral Gables, Fla.
- Leavitt, Sturgis Eeleneo, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Lebsanft, Armin, Prof. German, Dillmann-Realgymnasium, Stuttgart, Germany [27, Elsäweg, Stuttgart-Degerloch]
- Lecompte, Irvile Charles, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [225 Folwell Hall]
- Le Duc, Alma de L., Asst. Prof. French, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Lec, Donald W., Instr. Eng. Comp., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [612 E. Beaver Ave.]
- Legner, Wolfram Karl, Grad. Stu. German, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [P. O. Box 82, Rydal, Pa.]
- Leible, Arthur Blank, Asst. Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [515 Hawthorne Dr.]
- Leineweber, C. H., Prof. German, American Univ., Washington, D. C. [5612 Edgemoor Lane, Bethesda, Md.]
- Leisy, Ernest Elwin, Prof. Eng., Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex.
- Le Levandier, Marie Hélo, Assoc. Prof. French, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Lemaitre, Georges E., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., McGill Univ., Montreal, Canada.
- Lemke, Frederick Daniel, Prof. Eng., Heidelberg Coll., Tiffin, Ohio.
- Lennon, Mary E., Instr. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [4841 Cass Ave.]
- Lennox, P. J., Prof. Eng. Lit., Dean College of Letters, Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C. [1336 Eye St. N. W.]
- Lenz, Harold H. F., Instr. German, N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y. [20 Laurel Hill Terrace]
- Leo, Sister Mary, S. S. J., Head French Dept., Nazareth Coll., Nazareth, Mich.
- Leonard, Arthur Newton, Prof. German, Bates Coll., Lewiston, Me. [12 Abbott St.]
- Leonard E. Louise, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Hood Coll., Frederick, Md. [270 Dill Ave.]
- Leonard, William Ellery, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- ❖ Leopold, Werner, Assoc. Prof. German, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Leser, (Mrs.) Hedwig G., Asst. Prof. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [420 Woodlawn Ave.]
- Leslie, John Kenneth, Instr. Spanish, Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del.
- Leuchs, Fritz A. H., First Asst. Mod. Langs., New Utrecht H. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. [1040-82nd St.]

- Levensgood, Sidney Lawrence, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Graduate College]
- Lévêque, André Camille, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [916 Conklin Pl.]
- Lévêque, Ernest J., Asst. Prof. French, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [Route 3]
- Leverton, Garrett H., Prof. Dramatic Production, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1915 Sherman Ave.]
- ❖ Levi, Moritz, Prof. Emeritus French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [928 Olivia Ave.]
- Levinson, Ronald Bartlett, Prof. Philosophy, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Levy, Babette May, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [600 West 116 St.]
- ❖ Levy, Raphael, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Baltimore, Baltimore, Md. [2246 Eutaw Place]
- Lewis, B. Roland, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah
- Lewis, Cecil, Prof. German, Trinity Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- ❖ Lewis, Edwin Herbert, Prof. Eng. and Dean Faculty, Lewis Inst., 1951 W. Madison St., Chicago, Ill.
- Lewis, Leon Eli, Mahanoy City, Pa. [26 Spruce Lane]
- Lewis, Mary Delia, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [45 Prospect St.]
- Lewis, Wilmarth Sheldon, Farmington, Conn.
- Lichtenstein, Vernon E., Instr. Eng., Coe Coll., Cedar Rapids, Iowa
- Licklider, Albert Harp, Prof. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Little, Albert W., Chairman, Dept. Eng., Antioch Coll., Yellow Springs, Ohio
- ❖ Lieder, Frederick William Charles, Assoc. Prof. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [18 Brown St.]
- ❖ Lieder, Paul Robert, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [186 Elm St.]
- Lietzan, Lena Louise, Prof. and Head German Dept., Lebanon Valley Coll., Annville, Pa. [Box 990]
- Lillard, Richard Gordon, Instr., Los Angeles, Jr. Coll., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Lilly, Henry Tracy, Prof. Eng., Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C.
- Limpus, Robert M., Instr. Eng., South Dakota State Coll., Brookings, S. D.
- Lincoln, Eleanor Terry, 43 West St., Northampton, Mass.
- ❖ Lincoln, George Luther, Instr. Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [2008 Commonwealth Ave., Boston]
- Lincoln, Joseph Newhall, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1005 Berkshire Rd.]
- Lindahl, Lilly Esther Junia, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Knox Coll., Galesburg, Ill. [347 S. West St.]
- Lindsay, (Miss) Jean Stirling, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [440 Riverside Dr.]
- Lindsay, John Randolph, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [203 White Park Rd.]
- Lindsay, Julian Ira, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. [292 S. Prospect St.]
- Lindsey, Edwin Samuel, Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn.
- Lingl, Sister Agnes Rita, Prof. German, The Coll. of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
- Linker, Robert White, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [Box 57]
- Linn, Irving, Tutor Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [109 Throop Ave., Brooklyn]
- Linscheid, John Edward, Prof. Eng., Bethel Coll., Kan. [Bethel Coll. Lib.]
- Lipa, Charles Buell, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [115 Ithaca Rd.]
- ❖ Lipari, Angelo, Assoc. Prof. Italian, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- ❖ Liptzin, Sol, Asst. Prof. German, The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Lister, John Thomas, Head Dept. Spanish, Coll. of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio [325 E. Pine St.]
- Little, David Mason, Instr. Eng.; Tutor Mod. Lang. Div., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Harvard Coll. Lib.]
- Little, Thomas Alexander, Prof. Eng., Union Coll., Lincoln, Neb. [Box 66, College View Sta.]
- Little, Vivian, Grad. Stu. French, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 664]
- Littlefield, Henrietta, Special Instr. German, Simmons Coll., Boston, Mass. [11 Pearl St., Middleboro]
- ❖ Livingston, Charles Harold, Prof. Rom. Langs., Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [80 Federal St.]
- Lockert, Charles Lacy, Jr., Nashville, Tenn. [General Delivery]

- Lockwood, Helen Diusilla, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Loeb, James, Jr., Dept. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Logan, Dawn, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Waynesburg Coll., Waynesburg, Pa.
- Logan, James Venable, Jr., Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [2084 Neil Ave., Apt. 8]
- Logan, Sister Eugenia, Dean, St. Mary-of-the-Woods Coll., St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Ind.
- Lograsso, Angeline H., Assoc. Prof. and Head Italian Dept. Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [The Library]
- ❖ Loiseaux, Louis Auguste, Assoc. Prof. of French, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Lomax, John Avery, Honorary Consultant Folk-Songs; Curator Folk-Song Archives, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C. [Univ. Sta., Austin, Tex.]
- Long, Francis Taylor, New York, N. Y. [3110 Kingsbridge Terrace]
- Long, Mary D., Prof. Eng., Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Long, Orie William, Prof. German, Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- ❖ Long, Percy Waldron, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Long, William Stapleton, Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., East Radford, Va.
- ❖ Longden, Henry Boyer, Vice-President, DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.
- Longest, Christopher, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss.
- Longi, Olga P., Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Longsdorf, Kenneth Dwight, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Inst. for Education of Blind, 999 Pelham Parkway, New York, N. Y. [40 E. Orange St., Lititz, Pa.]
- Longueil, Alfred E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [405 Hilgard Ave., W. Los Angeles]
- Loomis, Grant, Inst. German, Tufts Coll., Mass. [84 Packard Ave., W. Somerville]
- Loomis, Laura Hibbard (Mrs. Roger S.), Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Loomis, Roger Sherman, Asst. Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [454 Riverside Dr.]
- Lorenz, Jennie, Assoc. Prof. Speech, Louisiana Polytechnic Inst., Ruston, La.
- Loss, H., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Carleton Coll., Northfield, Minn. [200 College Ave.]
- ❖ Lotspeich, Claude Meek, Prof. Comparative and Eng. Philology, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Louden, Eva, Assoc. Prof. Eng., N. J. Coll. for Women, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Loughrey, Mary Ellen, Instr. Rom. Langs., Rhode Island Coll. of Education, Providence, R. I. [24 Mount Hope Ave.]
- de Lourdes, Sister Marie, Instr. Eng., Mount St. Mary's Coll., Brentwood Heights, Los Angeles, Calif. [12001 Chalon Rd.]
- Lovejoy, Arthur O., Prof. Philosophy, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [827 Park Ave.]
- Loveland, Winslow Harding, Prof. Eng., Boston Univ., Boston, Mass. [29 Lincoln St., Hyde Park]
- Lovering, Stella, Instr. French, Los Angeles Jr. Coll., Los Angeles, Calif. [851½ N. Heliotrope Dr., Hollywood]
- Lovett, Robert Morss, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Lowden, Eleanor, Prof. Eng., Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa [1207 Fifth Ave.]
- Lowe, Lawrence Francis Hawkins, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [104 Henry Hall]
- Lowenstein, Robert, 5 Stanley Rd., S. Orange, N. J.
- Lowery, Ruth, Instr. Eng., Northwest Missouri State Teachers Coll., Maryville, Mo. [541 W. Second St.]
- ❖ Lowes, John Livingston, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [984 Memorial Dr.]
- Lowman, Guy Sumner, Sterling Fellow Linguistics, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [Linguistic Atlas, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.]
- Lowrey, Rosewell Graves, Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Hattiesburg, Miss. [Box 153, Sta. A.]
- Lowry, Howard F., Prof. Eng., Coll. of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio [238 W. Henrietta St.]
- Loyola, Mme. M., Marymount Coll., Tarrytown, N. Y.
- Lucas, Wm. D., P.O. Box 1105, Olympia, Wash.
- Luce, Allena, Principal American H. S., 6100 Rivadavia, Buenos Aires, Argentina, S. A.
- Luch, Myron J., Prof. Eng., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [737 Seventh Ave.]

- ❖ Luebke, William Ferdinand, Prof. Eng. Lang., Univ. of Denver, Denver, Colo [2076 S Filmore St.]
- Luisa, Sister Maria, Head Spanish Dept, St Mary's Coll, Notre Dame, Ind
- Luker, Julia Eugenia, Prof. Eng, McMurry Coll, Abilene, Tex. [McMurry Sta]
- Lumpkin, Ben Gray, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss.
- Lundeberg, Olav K., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C.
- Luquins, Frederick Bliss, Street Prof. Mod. Langs, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [189 E. Rock Rd.]
- ❖ Lussky, Alfred E., Prof. and Head Dept. German, Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.
- Lussky, George Frederick, Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn [214 Folwell Hall]
- Lutz, Caroline Stookey, Prof. Eng., Westhampton Coll, Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va
- Luyckx, Joseph A., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Detroit, Detroit, Mich
- Lyle, Marie C., Dean and Head Eng. Dept., Keuka Coll., Keuka Park, N. Y.
- Lyman, Dean B., Head Eng. Dept., Concord State Teachers Coll., Athens, W. Va [210 Blake Ave., Princeton]
- Lynch, Kathleen M., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Mount Holyoke Coll, South Hadley, Mass. [Jewett Lane]
- Lynch, Samuel Adams, Head Eng. Dept., Iowa State Teachers Coll., Cedar Falls, Iowa.
- Lynn, Margaret, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1224 Mississippi St.]
- Lyon, Albert E., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [2121 Chadbourn Ave.]
- Lyons, Clifford P., Instr. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [3924 Cloverhill Rd]
- Lyte, Herbert O., Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [Route 3]
- ❖ Mabbott, Thomas Ollive, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [1232 Madison Ave.]
- MacClintock, Lander, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- ❖ MacClintock, William D., Prof. Emeritus Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- ❖ MacCracken, Henry Noble, President Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- MacDonald, Mary B., Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [407-4th St, S E]
- MacDowell, M. Gyla, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept, Geneva Coll., Beaver Falls, Pa. [3603 Sixth Ave.]
- Mack, Jesse Floyd, Prof. Eng, Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [168 E. College St.]
- Mackall, Leonard Leopold, Hon. Member, Georgia Historical Society, Savannah, Ga. [217 E. 34th St]
- MacKellar, Walter, Instr. Eng., N. Y Univ., New York, N. Y. [Blauvelt, N. Y.]
- MacKenzie, Harriet Margaret, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif. [405 Hilgarde Ave]
- Mackenzie, William Roy, Prof. Eng., Washington Univ, St. Louis, Mo
- MacLaggan, Catherine Fraser, Prof. and Head Dept. Foreign Langs, South Dakota State Coll., Brookings, S. D.
- Macleod, William Robert, Teacher Eng., DeWitt Clinton H. S., New York, N. Y. [20 Walgrove Park Ave, Dobbs Ferry]
- Macmillan, William Dougald, III, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Univ. of N. C, Chapel Hill, N. C. [On leave: Huntington Library, San Marino, Calif.]
- MacMinn, George R., Assoc. Prof. Eng, California Inst. of Tech., Pasadena, Calif.
- MacMinn, Ney, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill [11 Lunt]
- MacMullan, Hugh Murdoch, Hotel Iroquois, 49 W. 44th St., New York, N. Y.
- MacNaughton, Jacquelin Adele, Instr. German, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [3 W. 192nd St]
- MacNeil, Anne Mary, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Denison Univ., Granville, O.
- MacPhail, Marion Laurie, Assoc. Prof French, Hood Coll., Frederick, Md. [600 Oakland Ave., Charlotte, N. C.]
- MacPherson, Harriet Dorothea, Asst. Prof., Sch. of Library Service, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Madeleva, Sister M., President, St. Mary's Coll., Notre Dame, Ind.
- Magers, Mildred Kirtland, Instr. Eng, Northern State Teachers Coll, Marquette, Mich.
- ❖ Magoun, Francis Peabody, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [4 Berkeley Place]

- Mahaffey, Pearl, Prof. Mod. Langs., Bethany Coll., Bethany, W. Va.
- Mahr, August Carl, Prof. German, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [2079 W. Fifth Ave.]
- Maire, Raymond Ivan, Asst. Prof. French, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [44 W. 10th St.]
- Major, John C., Dept. Eng. Composition, Pennsylvania State Coll., State Coll., Pa.
- Major, Mabel, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Texas Christian Univ., Fort Worth, Texas
- Makosky, John Donald, Asst. Prof. Eng., Western Maryland Coll., Westminster, Md. [85½ W. Green St.]
- Malakis, Emile, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Malécot, Gaston Louis, 144 W. 98th St., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Malone, Kemp, Prof. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Mammen, Edward W., Tutor Public Speaking, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [617 W. 141 St.]
- Manderfeld, Viola, Univ. Coll., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- de Mangecere, Rev. Paul, Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Boston Coll., Chestnut Hill, Mass.
- Mangiafico, Salvatore C., Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Mankiewicz, Frank, Assoc. Prof. Education, The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Manly, John Matthews, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Mann, Albert, Prof. Rom. Langs., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [329 Washington Terrace]
- Mann, Elizabeth L., Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Western Coll., Oxford, Ohio.
- Manning, Clarence Augustus, Asst. Prof. East European Langs., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Manning, Richard C., Prof. Latin, Kenyon Coll., Gambier, Ohio.
- Mansfield, Luther Stearns, Asst. Prof. Eng., Jamestown Coll., Jamestown, N. D. [Box 1551]
- Manthey-Zorn, Otto, Prof. German, Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass.
- Manwaring, Elizabeth Wheeler, Prof. Rhet. and Eng. Composition, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Mapes, Erwin Kempton, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [616 North Dubuque St.]
- Marburg, Helen, Asst. Prof. French, Mills Coll., Oakland, Calif. [Box 375]
- Marceitt, Mildred Elizabeth, Asst. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [18 E. 9th St.]
- March, Harold Merriam, Asst. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [115 Canner St.]
- Marchand, Ernest L., Instr. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif. [235 Waverley St., Palo Alto]
- Marcial-Dorado, Carolina, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Brooks Hall]
- Marckwardt, Albert H., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Marie, Sister Aloysia, Director Eng. Dept., Webster Coll., Webster Groves, Mo.
- Marinoni, Antonio, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.
- Marjarum, E. Wayne, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [Eastman School of Music]
- Mark, Mrs. Eva Hatch, Eng. Teacher, Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex. [Box 336]
- Marks, Jeanette, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng. Lit. and Drama, Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Marni, Archimede, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- ❖ Marsh, George Linnaeus, Extension Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Marsh, T. Reese, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Southwestern Coll., Winfield, Kan. [0101 Massachusetts Ave.]
- Marshall, Mary H., Colby Coll., Waterville, Me.
- Marshall, Roderick, Instr. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Marshall, Thomas F., 3rd, Head Dept. Eng., Milford H. S., Milford, Delaware [3505 N. Sydenham St., Phila., Pa.]
- Martin, Albert Pray, Asst. Prof. German Langs. and Lits., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Martin, Grace Nealy, Instr. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [902 E. Third St.]
- Martin, John L., Instr. Spanish and French, Marshall Coll., Huntington, W. Va.
- Martin, Joseph Walford, Instr. Eng., Black Mountain Coll., Black Mountain, N. C.

- Martin, Richard, Grad. Stu. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Graduate Coll.]
- Martin, William Cliff, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Martinez, Manuel Guillermo, Prof. Spanish, School of Foreign Service, Georgetown Univ., Washington, D. C. [6411 Beechwood Dr., Chevy Chase, Md.]
- ❖ Maivin, Robert B., First Asst. Mod. Lang. Dept., Alexander Hamilton H. S., Brooklyn, N. Y. [193 E. 31st St.]
- Marx, Milton, Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Mason, Harold Carlton, Pres., Huntington Coll., Huntington, Ind.
- Mason, James Frederick, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Matenko, Percy, Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [Apt. EB 8, 40 Monroe St., N. Y. C.]
- Mather, Thomas Ray, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Eng., The College of Liberal Arts, Boston Univ., Boston, Mass. [216 Prospect St., Belmont]
- Matheson, Belle Seddon, Instr. Eng., Temple Univ., Philadelphia, Pa. [513 Prescott Ave., Merion]
- Matheus, John Frederick, Head Dept. Rom. Langs., West Virginia State Coll., Institute, W. Va.
- Mathews, Bernardine, 423 E. Lawrence, Springfield, Ill.
- Mathews, J. Chesley, Teaching Asst. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [945 Euclid Ave.]
- Matthews, Maude Cryder, Assoc. Prof. German, Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [60 E. Mulberry St.]
- Matulka, Barbara, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Maughan, Kevin, Washington, D. C. [3119 35th St. N.W.]
- ❖ Maxfield, Ezra Kempton, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Washington and Jefferson Coll., Washington, Pa. [311 E. Beau St.]
- Maxwell, Baldwin, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [Box 322]
- Maxwell, William Cary, Instr. German, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 4841]
- Mayer, Elisabeth Marie, Instr. German, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [German House]
- Mayfield, George Radford, Prof. German, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Maynadier, Gustavus Howard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [12 Prescott St.]
- Mays, Alma, Asst. Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Memphis, Tenn.
- McAdam, Edward L., Jr., Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1750 Yale Sta.]
- McAllister, Quentin Oliver, Instr. Mod. Langs., Washington and Jefferson Coll., Washington, Pa. [54 S. Lincoln St.]
- McBeth, Mary Reid, Asst. Prof. Eng., Indiana State Teachers Coll., Terre Haute, Ind. [1905 N. 8th St.]
- McCabe, William Hugh, Prof. and Director Dept. Eng., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- McCain, John Walker, Jr., Prof. Eng., Winthrop Coll., Rock Hill, S. C.
- McCain, Rea, Head Eng. Dept., Bowling Green State Univ., Bowling Green, O.
- McCann, Grace L., Berkeley, Calif. [2635 Etna St.]
- McCary, Ben Clyde, Assoc. Prof. French, Coll. of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va.
- McCaslin, Davida, Eng. Dept., Millikin Univ., Decatur, Ill.
- McCausland, Harriet, Teacher Eng., Union H. S., Palo Alto, Calif. [1419 Byron St.]
- McCaw, Genevra Lee, 344 W. 12th St., New York, N. Y.
- McCleary, Oscar Wood, Haddon Ave., Woodbrook, Baltimore Co., Md.
- McClelland, George William, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- McCloskey, Frank Howland, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [289 Starling Rd., Englewood, N. J.]
- McCloskey, John C., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.
- McClure, Norman Egbert, Prof. Eng., Ursinus Coll., Collegeville, Pa. [30-6th Ave.]
- McColley, Grant, 3338 Military Rd., Washington, D. C.
- McConkey, Elizabeth, Prof. German and Spanish, Keuka Coll., Keuka Park, N. Y.
- McCorkle, Julia Norton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Southern Calif., Los Angeles, Calif. [4101 Budlong Ave.]
- McCormick, James Patton, Jr., Instr. Eng., Evanston Collegiate Inst., Winnetka, Ill. [425 Linden Ave.]
- McCoy, John Franklin, V., Assoc. Prof. and

- Head Dept. Mod Langs., Colby Coll, Waterville, Me [36 Morrill Ave]
- McCrimmon, Margaret Ferguson, Asst Prof. Mod. Langs., Juniata Coll, Huntingdon, Pa.
- McCulley, Bruce, Prof. Eng., Pomona Coll, Claremont, Calif. [210 E Foothills Blvd]
- McCullough, Bruce Welker, Assoc. Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll, New York, N. Y. [56 N. Montic St]
- McCusker, Honor Cecilia, Grad Stu Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Radnor Hall]
- McCutcheon, Roger Philip, Prof. Eng., Tulane Univ., New Orleans, La. [Gibson Hall]
- McDaniel, Stella, Prof. and Head Dept Eng., Colorado Woman's Coll, Denver, Colo. (On leave: 203 S. University, Norman, Okla.)
- McDavid, Raven Ioor, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., The Citadel, Charleston, S.C.
- McDermott, John Francis, Instr. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- McDonald, Mary V., The Grafton Jr. H. S., Worcester, Mass.
- McDowell, Tremaine, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [45 Barton Ave. S. E.]
- McElderry, Bruce Robert, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington State Coll, Pullman, Wash
- McEuen, Daniel Carroll, Prof. Eng., Grove City Coll., Grove City, Pa. [509 Stewart Ave]
- McGaffey, Mary Edith, Prof. Eng., McPherson Coll., McPherson, Kan.
- McGalliard, John Calvin, Asst. Prof. Eng., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- McGee, Rosa, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Bessie Tift Coll., Forsyth, Ga.
- McGee, Sidney Lamont, Prof. and Head French Dept., Georgia State Coll. for Women, Milledgeville, Ga.
- McGhee, Dorothy M., Prof. and Head Rom. Langs. Dept., Hamline Univ., St. Paul, Minn.
- McGill, Frederick Thomas, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Dana Coll., Newark, N. J. [40 Rector St.]
- McGinn, Donald J., Head Eng. Dept., Rutgers Preparatory Sch., New Brunswick, N. J.
- McGinnis, Myrta Ethel, Asst. Prof. Eng., Fort Hays Kansas State Coll., Hays, Kan. [409 W. Eighth St.]
- McGlinchee, Claire, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll, New York, N. Y. [30 E. 68th St.]
- McGrail, Thomas Henry, Instr. Eng., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- McGuire, Thomas A., Instr. French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [906 E. Huron St.]
- ❖ McHale, Carlos F., Author, 440 Riverside Dr., New York, N. Y.
- McIntyre, Clara Frances, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wyoming, Laramie, Wyo. [1406 Custer St.]
- McJimsey, George Davis, Lecturer Eng., Columbia Coll. of Pharmacy, New York, N. Y. [503 West 121st St.]
- McJimsey, Ruth Buchanan, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- McKee, William, Head Eng. Dept., Graduate School, St. John's Univ., 75 Lewis Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. [68 Dunnell Rd., Maplewood, N. J.]
- McKeehan, Irene Pettit, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- McKeithan, Daniel Morley, Assoc. Prof. Eng., East Texas State Teachers Coll., Commerce, Tex.
- ❖ McKenzie, Kenneth, Prof. Italian, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [9 Battle Rd.]
- McKeon, (Rev.) Frederick T., Prof. and Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.
- McKillop, Alan Dugald, Prof. Eng., The Rice Inst., Houston, Tex.
- ❖ McKnight, George Harley, Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- McLaughlin, William Aloysius, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1124 Hill St.]
- ❖ McLean, Charlotte Frelinghuysen, Phila., Pa. [277 S. Fourth St.]
- McLean, Sydney Robertson, Instr. Eng., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- McLeod, Malcolm, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- McLeod, W. M., Instr. French, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [Box 335]
- McManaway, James Gilmer, Assoc. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- McMullan, Richard D., Cambridge, Mass. [3 Kennedy Rd.]
- McMullen, Jennie M., Minneapolis, Minn. [2256 W. Lake of the Isles Blvd.]
- McNeal, Thomas H., Assoc. Prof. Eng., East Texas State Teachers Coll., Commerce, Tex. [111 E. 18th St., Austin]

- McNulty, Margaret Marcella, Grad. Stu., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [126 Herkimer St., Brooklyn]
- McPhee, Marguerite Cameron, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [Andrews Hall]
- McQuiston, Raymer, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [48 Mill St.]
- Mead, Douglass Sargeant, Prof. Eng. Lit., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa.
- ❖ Mead, William Edward, Prof. Emeritus Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [Haddam, Conn.]
- Meach, Sanford Brown, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [10 Ridgeway]
- Meeks, Leslie H., Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Indiana State Teachers Coll., Terre Haute, Ind.
- Meessen, Hubert J., Instr. Mod. Langs., Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa [1217 Park St.]
- Meier, Hermann, Asst. Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Brothers Coll., Drew Univ., Madison, N. J. [3 Belmont Ave.]
- Meinhardt, Emilie A., Prof. Germ. and French, Westchester Collegiate Center, White Plains, N. Y. [25 Linda Ave.]
- Meisnest, Frederick William, Prof. German, Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [4705 Sixteenth Ave. N.E.]
- Melcher, Edith, Asst. Prof. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [6 Roanoke Rd.]
- Mellor, Earl Godfrey, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Philology, Univ. of Virginia, University, Va. [Box 1195]
- Melvin, Harold W., Prof. Eng., Northeastern Univ., Boston, Mass. [316 Huntington Ave.]
- Mendenhall, John Cooper, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Menger, F. J., Asst. Prof. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- Menner, Robert James, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Mensel, (Mrs.) Ann Elizabeth, Assoc. Prof. German, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- ❖ Mensel, Ernst Heinrich, Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Menut, Albert Douglas, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Syracuse, Syracuse, N. Y.
- Mercer, Harry Toner, Berkeley, Calif. [2134 Essex St.]
- Mercer, Sherwood Rocke, Stu. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [36 Miles Ave., Middletown]
- Mercier, Louis Joseph Alexander, Assoc. Prof. French and Education, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [134 Brattle St.]
- Meredith, J. A., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Meredith, Mamie Jane, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [118 Andrews Hall]
- Meritt, Herbert Dean, Instr. Eng., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Merlino, Camillo Pascal, Asst. Prof. Italian, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Merrill, Richard Wilder, Instr. German, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me. [395 Center St., Old Town]
- Merrill, R. March, Instr., in charge of French, Coll. of Fine Arts, N. Y. Univ., 1071 Sixth Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Merrill, Robert Valentine, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Mesick, Jane Louise, Dean and Asst. Prof. Eng., Simmons Coll., Boston, Mass.
- Mespoulet, Marguerite, Assoc. French, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Metcalf, George J., Instr. German, Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala. [Box 1462]
- Metcalf, John Calvin, Prof. Eng. Lit. and Dean Grad. Sch., Univ. of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va.
- Métivier, Marguerite, Assoc. Prof. French, Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Metlen, Michael, Head German Dept., Loyola Univ., Rogers Park Campus, Chicago, Ill.
- Metzenthin, Esther Marie, Instr. Germ., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va. [318 Warwick Lane]
- Meyer, Erika M., German Dept., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Meyer, George A., Prof. and Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Utah State Agri. Coll., Logan, Utah
- Meyer, Heinrich, Instr. German, Rice Inst., Houston, Tex.
- Meylan, Edward F., Instr. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [464 Wheeler Hall]
- Mezger, Fritz, Assoc. Prof. German, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Oak Hill Farm, Henderson Rd., Bridgeport]
- ❖ Mezzotero, Richard Francis, Instr. Rom. Langs., Education Dept., Y.W.C.A., New Haven, Conn.

- Michaud, Régis, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Michaud, Régis, Jr., Instr. Rom. Langs., Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [1039 Park Ave.]
- Michels, Anna Ward, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [North Broadway, Nyack]
- Michie, Sarah, Instr. Eng., Barstow Sch., Kansas City, Mo. [4950 Cherry St.]
- Micks, Wilson, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Middlebrook, (Mrs.) Leah Ruth, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Miles, L. Wardlaw, Prof. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [506 Woodlawn Rd.]
- Mill, Anna Jean, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Miller, Anna Irene, Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md. [105 Woodlawn Rd., Roland Park, Baltimore]
- Miller, Edmund Erskine, Luisenstr. 67, Munchen, Germany.
- Miller, Frances Schouler, Instr., N. Y. State Coll. for Teachers, Albany, N. Y. [2809 Mt. Holly St., Baltimore, Md.]
- Miller, James McDonald, Prof. Eng., Waynesburg Coll., Waynesburg, Pa.
- ❖ Miller, John Richardson, Assoc. Prof. French, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Miller, Joseph Roddey, Jr., Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Greensboro Coll., Greensboro, N. C.
- Miller, Louis Gardner, 750-B N. Euclid Ave., Ontario, Calif.
- Miller, (Mrs.) Maria Tastevin, Prof. French, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Miller, Meta Helena, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Woman's Coll., Univ. of North Carolina, Greensboro, N. C.
- Miller, Victor Clyde, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Indiana State Teachers Coll., Terre Haute, Ind. [2031 S. 8th St.]
- Miller, Walther M., Assoc. Prof. German, Valparaiso Univ., Valparaiso, Ind.
- Miller, William Marion, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [111 E. Spring St.]
- Millett, Fred Benjamin, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- Millican, C. Bowie, Assoc. Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Mills, Clarence Harvey, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs. and Lits., A. and T. College, Greensboro, N. C.
- Mills, Laurens Joseph, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [510 Woodlawn Ave.]
- Mills, Mirah, Prof. Eng., Morningside Coll., Sioux City, Iowa
- Mills, Randall V., Teaching Asst. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2491 Ellsworth St.]
- Mims, Edwin, Prof. Eng., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Mineka, Francis Edward, Instr. Eng., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Minkel, (Rev.) Augustine, Prof. Social Sciences, St. Vincent Coll., Latrobe, Pa. [St. Vincent Archabbey]
- Miriam, Sister, Prof. French, Coll. of Mt. St. Vincent, Mt. St. Vincent, N. Y.
- Mirrieles, Edith Ronald, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 926]
- Misrahi, Jean, Tutor Rom. Langs., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [521 W. 112th St., N. Y. C.]
- Mitchell, Frank Bertram, Instr. Mod. Langs., Peekskill Military Academy, Peekskill, N. Y.
- Mitchell, Frank Kirby, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C.
- Mitchell, George Rankin, Instr. Eng., Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Mitchell, Lee, Instr. Drama, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [School of Speech]
- Mitchell, (Mrs.) Pearl Beattie, 10 Sea View Terrace, Santa Monica, Calif.
- Mitchell, Robert McBurney, Assoc. Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [90 Congdon St.]
- Mizener, Arthur M., Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1492 Pierson Coll.]
- Moehlenbrock, Arthur Henry, Instr. German, Tulane Univ., New Orleans, La.
- Moffatt, Lucius Gaston, Prof. Rom. Langs., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Mohl, Ruth, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Adelphi Coll., Garden City, L. I., N. Y.
- ❖ Mohme, Erwin Theodor, Prof. German, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Mohr, Franz Karl, Asst. Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va. [Box 1016]
- Monk, Samuel Holt, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Southwestern Coll., Memphis, Tenn.

- Monroe, Benton Sullivan, Prof. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Monroe, Robert Emmett, Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
- du Mont, Francis Meyer, Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [439 N. Park Ave.]
- Montgomery, Lois Elizabeth, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Mood, Robert Gibbs, Jr., Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Moody, Dorothy, Instr. Eng., Canal Zone Junior Coll., Canal Zone [Box 52 Balboa Heights]
- Moody, George Tufford, Instr. Rom. Langs., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn.
- Moon, Emma Louise, Head French Dept., Sullins Coll., Bristol, Va. [Lyndon, Ohio]
- Moore, Alexander Parks, Astoria, L. I., N. Y. [135 Franklin St.]
- Moore, Cecil Albert, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [1011 E. River Rd.]
- Moore, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Ohio [Studio 84, 222 W. 4th St.]
- Moore, Clarence King, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Moore, Earl Austin, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Western Kentucky Teachers Coll., Bowling Green, Ky. [1530 Normal Blvd.]
- Moore, Elise H., Asst. Prof. Eng., Mississippi State Coll. for Women, Columbus, Miss. [Box 804]
- Moore, Elizabeth Lowndes, Asst. Prof. French, St. Lawrence Univ., Canton, N. Y. [11 Elm St.]
- Moore, Fritz, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Mod. Langs., Kansas State Coll., Manhattan, Kan.
- Moore, Grace Edna, Grad. Stu. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [7837 Spring Ave., Elkins Park, Pa.]
- Moore, Jerome A., Asst. Prof. Foreign Lang., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex.
- Moore, John Robert, Prof. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [611 S. Jordan Ave.]
- ❖ Moore, Olin Harris, Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Moore, Wm. Dyer, Prof. Mod. Langs., Texas State Coll. for Women, Coll. of Industrial Arts, Denton, Tex. [Box 505, C.I.A. Sta.]
- Moore, Winifred T., Prof. Mod. Langs., Carson-Newman Coll., Jefferson City, Tenn.
- Moran, Francis E., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind. [1409 E. Madison St., South Bend]
- ❖ Morand, (Mrs.) Ruth Shepard Phelps, c/o Bankers Trust Co., Place Vendome, Paris, France
- Morand, Marcel, Prof. French and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Rice Inst., Houston, Tex.
- More, Robert Pattison, Assoc. Prof. German, Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [1830 Maine St.]
- Morehouse, Andrew Richmond, Asst. Prof. French, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1543 Yale Sta.]
- Moreland, Carroll Collier, Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 529, J.H.U.]
- Morgan, Bayard Quincy, Prof. German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [730 Santa Maria Ave.]
- ❖ Morgan, Charlotte E., Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [1173 Bushwick Ave., Brooklyn]
- Morgan, Elford C., Asst. Prof. Eng., Converse Coll., Spartanburg, S. C. [166 N. Fairview Ave.]
- Morgan, (Mrs.) June J., 712 Neosho St., Emporia, Kan.
- Morgan, Junius S., 23 Wall St., New York, N. Y.
- Morgan, Robert Handel, Instr. Eng., The Hill School, Pottstown, Pa.
- Morgan, Rose Ruth, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1101 Missouri St.]
- Morgan, Stewart S., Prof. Eng., A. and M. Coll. of Texas, College Station, Tex.
- Morize, André, Prof. French Lit., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [145 Widener Library]
- Morley, Sylvanus Griswold, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2635 Etna St.]
- Morrill, Dorothy Isabella, Prof. Eng., Hood Coll., Frederick, Md.
- Morris, Amos Reno, Asst. Prof. Rhet., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [R.R. 2]
- Morris, Delyte Wesley, Instr. Public Speaking, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Morris, George Davis, Prof. French, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [902 E. Third St.]
- Morris, John, Prof. Germ. Langs., Univ. of Georgia, Athens, Ga. [145 Mell St.]

- Morris, Robert L., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark. [340 W. Lafayette]
- Morrison, Florence Irene, Asst. Prof. Rom Langs., Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind [4628 Washington Blvd]
- Morrisette, Bruce Archer, Jr., Instr. Rom Langs, Johns Hopkins Univ, Baltimore, Md. [Box 729]
- Morse, William Northrop, Fletcher Prof. Dramatic Lit., Eng Dept., Tufts Coll., Mass [15 Vernon St., West Medford]
- Moseley, Thomas Addis Emmet, Prof Spanish, Virginia Military Inst., Lexington, Va. [450 Parade]
- Moser, John W., Long Island Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Moses, Walter L., Grad Stu., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [Durham, N. C.]
- Mossner, Ernest Campbell, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Mott, Frank Luther, Director, School of Journalism, Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
- ❖ Mott, Lewis F., Prof. Emeritus Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [790 Riverside Dr.]
- Motter, Thomas Hubbard Vail, Asst. Prof. Eng Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Mousel, Sister Mary Eunice, Briar Cliff Coll, Sioux City, Iowa
- Muchnic, Helen, Instr. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [69 Prospect St.]
- Mueller, Hermann C. P., Prof. Mod. Langs., Waynesburg Coll., Waynesburg, Pa. [405 N. Morris St.]
- Mueschke, Paul, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Muller, Henri Francois, Prof. Rom. Philology, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Muller, Herbert J., Instr. Eng., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind.
- Müller, Otto P., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [21 Fairway Close, Forest Hills, L. I.]
- Mullins, Marjorie, Head French Dept., Baylor Coll., Belton, Tex.
- ❖ Munn, James Buell, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [58 Garden St.]
- Munn, Kathleen Miriam, Grad. Stu. French, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Box 291, Johnson Hall, 411 W. 116 St.]
- Munro, Donald Farnham, Prof. German and Spanish, Wentworth Military Academy, Lexington, Mo.
- Murbach, (Mrs) Janet M., Prof. French, Eastern Kentucky State Teachers Coll., Richmond, Ky. [614 North St.]
- Murch, Herbert Spencer, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ, Princeton, N. J. [6A Holder Hall]
- Murdaugh, James Edmund Dandridge, Eng. Dept., Mercersburg Academy, Mercersburg, Pa
- ❖ Murdock, Kenneth Ballard, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Master's Lodgings, Leverett House]
- Murdock, Leander Bartlett, Prof. Mod. Langs., Franklin Coll., Franklin, Ind. [Willard Hotel]
- Murphy, Agnes Genevieve, Asst. Prof. German, Southern Ill. State Normal Univ., Carbondale, Ill.
- Murphy, Mallie John, Washington, D. C. [1647 35th St. N.W.]
- Murray, Arthur T., President, American Bosch Co., Springfield, Mass. [184 Mill St.]
- Murray, Hermann Stump, New York, N. Y. [20 W. 12th St.]
- Murray, John Tucker, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ, Cambridge, Mass. [3 Warren House]
- Murray, William Henry, Prof. Mod. Langs., Amos Tuck Sch., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Musser, Paul Howard, Dean of the Coll., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa [937 Edmonds Ave., Drexel Hill, Pa.]
- Mutschler, Mary L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill.
- ❖ Muyskens, John Henry, Asst. Prof. Phonetics, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [230 Wildwood Ave.]
- Myers, A. Michael, Asst. Prof. Eng., Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [155 Maryland St., Germantown]
- ❖ Myers, Rowland Mason, Acting Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [1091 Wendell Ave.]
- Myers, Walter L., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [3251 Latonia Ave., Dormant]
- Myers, Weldon Thomas, Prof. Eng., Converse Coll., Spartanburg, S. C. [251 N. Fairview Ave.]
- Myrick, Arthur Beckwith, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. [43 S. Prospect St.]

- Myrick, Kenneth Orne, Asst. Prof. Eng., Tufts Coll., Medford, Mass [101 Allston St., West Medford]
- Myron, Herbert Benjamin, Jr., Instr. French, Boston Univ., Coll. of Liberal Arts, Boston, Mass. [8 Plympton St., #46, Cambridge]
- Myrvaagnes, Kaspar O., Instr. German, Alfred Univ., Alfred N. Y.
- Nachreiner, Edward, Instr. German, Union Coll., Lincoln, Neb.
- Naeseth, Henriette C., Prof. Eng., Augustana Coll., Rock Island, Ill.
- Nagel, Elsa L., Instr. German, Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [Butler Apts]
- Nangle, Benjamin Christie, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn
- Nason, Arthur Huntington, Prof. Eng. and Director Univ. Press, N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [P.O. Box 84, University Heights]
- Natalie, Sister M., Head Eng. Dept., St. Joseph's Coll. for Women, Brooklyn, N. Y. [245 Clinton Ave]
- Nathan, Edward I., American Consulate, Monterrey, Mexico
- Naylor, Louis Hastings, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn.
- Neale-Silva, Eduardo, Instr. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Box 95, Bascom Hall]
- Neff, Merlin Lee, Asst. Prof. Eng., Walla Walla Coll., Coll. Pl., Wash. [Box 223]
- Neff, Sherman Brown, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah
- ❖ Neill, James Kerby, Instr. Eng., St. Louis Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- ❖ Neilson, William Allan, President of Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Nelson, Iver N., Instr. French and Spanish, Univ. of Calif., Branch of Coll. of Agric., Davis, Calif.
- Nelson, John Herbert, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan.
- Nelson, Rowland Whiteway, Instr. Eng., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C. [P.O. Box 223]
- Nelson, William, Grad. Stu. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [200 W. 108 St.]
- Nesbitt, George L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Nesbitt, John Guild, Prof. French, Sterling Coll., Sterling, Kans. [614 N. Broadway]
- Ness, Frederic W., Grad. Asst. Eng., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [2521 Auburn Ave]
- Nethercot, Arthur Hobart, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [811 Central St.]
- ❖ Nettleton, George Henry, Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [570 Prospect St.]
- Neu, Jacob Lorenz, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [300 Moore Blvd]
- Neuen-Schwander, Elise, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1324 Louisiana St.]
- Neumann, Joshua H., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [484 Oak Ave., Cedarhurst, L. I.]
- Neumann, R., French Dept., Carthage Coll., Carthage, Ill. [Box 328]
- Neuse, Werner, Assoc. Prof. German, Middlebury Coll., Middlebury, Vt.
- Newdick, Robert S., Asst. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [1294 W. First Ave., Grandview Heights]
- Newlin, Claude M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Michigan State Coll., East Lansing, Mich.
- Newman, Evelyn, Prof. Eng. Lit., Rollins Coll., Winter Park, Fla. [Univ. Coll. of the South West, Exeter, Eng.]
- Newport, (Mrs.) Clara Price, Prof. German, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [609 Elm Ave.]
- Newstead, Helaine, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [118 E. 93rd St.]
- Newton, Theodore Francis Moorehouse, Instr. and Tutor Division Mod. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [30 Holyoke House]
- Neyman, Clinton Andrew, Lieutenant Commander, Chaplain Corps, U. S. N., U. S. Navy Yard, Pearl Harbor, T. H.
- Nichols, Charles Washburn, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- ❖ Nichols, Edwin Bryant, Prof. Rom. Langs., DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind. [707 E. Seminary St.]
- Nicolai, Martha, Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Nicolson, Marjorie Hope, Prof. Eng. and Acting Dean, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Niemeyer, Carl Anthony, Instr. Eng., Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa [1131 Park St.]
- Nippert, Eleonore Cathrine, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Nitchie, Elizabeth, Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.

- Nitze, William Albert, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom Langs, Univ of Chicago, Chicago, Ill [1220 E. Fifty-sixth St]
- Noad, Algy Smilie, Asst. Prof. Eng, McGill Univ, Montreal, Canada
- Nobbe, George, Instr. Eng, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [R.D. 2, Westport, Conn.]
- Nobbe, Susanne H., (Mrs George), Asst. Prof. Eng, Columbia Univ, New York, N. Y [R.D. #2, Westport, Conn]
- ❖ Noble, Charles, Prof. Emeritus, Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa [1101 Clifton St, Washington, D. C.]
- Nock, Francis Jay, Instr. German, N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y.
- Nock, Samuel Albert, Vice-President, Kansas State Coll., Manhattan, Kans.
- Nolle, Alfred Henry, Prof. Mod. Langs. and Dean Faculty, Southwest Texas State Teachers Coll., San Marcos, Tex.
- Nolte, Fred O., Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [10a Chauncy St.]
- Nordmeyer, George, Instr. German, West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va
- Nordmeyer, Henry W., Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1416 Granger Ave.]
- Norman, Hilda Laura, Asst. Prof. Rom Langs, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Norris, Edward Taylor, Instr. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Norris, Walter Blake, Prof. Eng., U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. [Wardour]
- ❖ Northup, Clark Sutherland, Prof. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [407 Elmwood Ave.]
- Northup, George Tyler, Prof. Spanish Lit., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5413 Greenwood Ave.]
- Norton, Ethel C., Prof. Mod. Langs., Onachita Coll., Arkadelphia, Ark. [624 Pine St]
- Norton, Winifred Quincy, Newtonville, Mass. [16 Foster St.]
- Norwood, Luella Fredericka, Prof. Eng., Spelman Coll. and Atlanta Univ., Atlanta, Ga.
- ❖ Noss, Mary Theodora, Prof. French, Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [48 University Terrace]
- Notopoulos, James A., Capitol Theatre, Butler, Pa.
- Noyes, Edward Simpson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ, New Haven, Conn [132 Canner St]
- Noyes, E. Louise, Head Eng. Dept., Santa Barbara H. S., Santa Barbara, Calif. [4 Victoria Court]
- Noyes, George Rapall, Prof. Slavic Langs, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1486 Greenwood Terrace]
- Noyes, Gertrude Elizabeth, Instr. Eng, Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn. [484 Montauk Ave.]
- Noyes, Russell, Asst. Prof. Eng, Indiana Univ, Bloomington, Ind. [1206 E. Wylie St]
- Nugent, Homer Heath, Prof. Rhet, Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst, Troy, N. Y
- Nunemaker, J. Horace, Prof. Foreign Langs, State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash
- Nungezer, Edwin, Asst. Prof. Eng, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Nye, Russell Blaine, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Jordan Coll., Menominee, Mich.
- Nykl, Alois Richard, The Oriental Inst, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill [Escuela de Estudios Arabes, 60 Calle de San Vicente, Madrid, Sp]
- Oakes, Catherine, Asst. Prof. Eng, Connecticut Coll. for Women, New London, Conn. [56 Oneco Ave.]
- O'Brien, Justin McCortney, Instr. French, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y [South Hall, 219-M]
- O'Connor, (Rev.) Eugen Joseph, S. J., Loyola Univ., New Orleans, La.
- ❖ O'Connor, Norreys Jephson, 139 E. 66th St., New York, N. Y.
- Odebrecht, August, Prof. Mod. Langs., Denison Univ., Granville, Ohio [Box 365]
- Odell, George C. D., Prof. Dramatic Lit., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Odell, Ruth, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Odilia, Sister, Prof. German, Trinity Coll., Washington, D. C.
- O'Donnell, (Rev.) George Edward, Prof. Eng., St. Charles Seminary, Overbrook, Phila., Pa.
- ❖ O'Donnell, George Hugh Roe, Prof. French and German, Russell Sage Coll., Troy, N. Y.
- Ogburn, Vincent Holland, Prof. Eng., Coe Coll., Cedar Rapids, Ia.
- Ogden, Henry V. S., Sub-Editor, Early Mod. Eng. Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.

- Ogden, Phillip, Prof. Rom. Langs, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- O'Hara, Frank Hurburt, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- O'Kane, Katharine V., Grad. Stu. Eng. and Asst. to Directress of Women, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [Sergeant Hall, 34th and Chestnut Sts.]
- Okerlund, Gerda, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Illinois State Normal Univ., Normal, Ill. [815 S. Fell Ave.]
- Oldham, John Newton, Instr. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Memphis, Tenn.
- ❖ O'Leary, Raphael Dorman, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1106 Louisiana St.]
- Oliver, Revilo Pendleton, Special Research Asst., Grad. School, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1210 W. University Ave.]
- ❖ Oliver, Thomas Edward, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1004 W. California Ave.]
- ❖ Oliver, Walter, Textile Supt. and Designer, Danielson, Conn.
- Oller, Jack Ezra, Assoc. Prof. French, Juniata Coll., Huntingdon, Pa. [1801 Millin St.]
- Olmsted, Everett Ward, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [3766 Calhoun Blvd. W.]
- Olsen, M. Ellsworth, Prof. Eng., The Home Study Inst., 502 Flower Ave., Takoma Park, Washington, D. C.
- Olson, (Mr.) Clair Colby, Instr. Eng., Armour Inst. of Technology, Chicago, Ill. [5847 Blackstone Ave.]
- O'Neill, Sister M. Angelica, Eng. Dept., Our Lady of the Lake Coll., San Antonio, Tex.
- Orbeck, Anders, 2100 Coles Blvd., Norristown, Pa.
- Ordeman, Daniel Thomas, Asst. Prof. Eng., Oregon State Coll., Corvallis, Ore. [2779 Arnold Way]
- Orians, G. Harrison, Lecturer American Lit., Univ. of Toledo, Toledo, Ohio [181 N. Seffner Ave., Marion]
- Ortega, Joaquín, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Shorewood Hills, Madison]
- Orwen, Gifford Phillips, Instr. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [278 Goldwin Smith Hall]
- ❖ Osborn, James M., Grad. Stu., St. Catherine's Society, Oxford, Eng. [Shotover Cleve, Headington, Oxford]
- Osborn, Louise Brown, Instr. Eng., Central H. S., Evansville, Ind. [2210 W. Illinois St.]
- Osgood, Catharine F., Instr. Eng., Bennington Coll., Bennington, Vt.
- ❖ Osgood, Charles Grosvenor, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [92 Stockton St.]
- de Osma, Jose M., Prof. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan.
- ❖ Osthaus, Carl Wilhelm Ferdinand, Prof. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [417 S. Fess Ave.]
- O'Sullivan, Mary Isabelle, Prof. Eng., Rosemont Coll., Rosemont, Pa. [4230 Otter St., Phila.]
- Otis, William Bradley, Assoc. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [421 W. 114 St.]
- ❖ Ott, John Henry, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Northwestern Coll., Watertown, Wis.
- Overton, C. May, Instr. Eng., S. D. State Coll. of A. and M. Arts, Brookings, S. D. [College Sta.]
- Owen, Carroll Hepburn, Asst. Prof. German, Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [51½ S. Professor St.]
- Owen, John Isaac, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Owens, Alpha Loretta, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Morris Harvey Coll., Charleston, W. Va.
- Owens, Bess Alice, Dept. Mod. Langs., Pikeville Coll., Pikeville, Ky.
- Owens, John Henry, Prof. French, River Falls State Normal, River Falls, Wis.
- Ownbey, Egbert Sydnor, Asst. Prof. Eng., Birmingham-Southern Coll., Birmingham, Ala.
- Owre, Jacob Riis, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Miami, Coral Gables, Fla.
- Owsley, Roy, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [260 Convent Ave.]
- Padelford, Frederick Morgan, Dean Grad. Sch., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- ❖ Page, Curtis Hidden, Gilmanton, N. H.
- Page, Nadine, Instr. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Paine, Gregory L., Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Painter, Anna Mercy, Chairman Eng. Dept., Northwest Missouri State Teachers Coll., Maryville, Mo. [616 N. Buchanan St.]

- Palfrey, Thomas Rossman, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston Ill. [2735 Noyes St.]
- Palmblad, Harry Victor Emmanuel, Prof. French and German, Phillips Univ., Enid, Okla. [1705 E Broadway]
- Palmer, Earle Fenton, Assoc. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [440 Riverside Dr.]
- ❖ Palmer, Phillip Mason, Prof. German, Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa.
- Palmer, Philip Motley, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Palomo, José R., Instr. Spanish, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Panaroni, Alfred G., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Pape, Eulalie, Instr. Mod. Langs., Central Coll., Fayette, Mo. [Givens Hall]
- Paradise, N. Burton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [2 Lincoln St.]
- Parcell, Harold Dawes, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Wake Forest Coll., Wake Forest, N. C.
- Pardini, Adeline Kathryn, Holiday House, Pacific Grove, Calif.
- ❖ Park, Clyde William, Prof. Eng., Coll. of Engineering and Commerce, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Park, Rosemary, Instr. German, Conn. Coll. for Women, New London, Conn.
- Parker, Alice, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Lindenwood Coll., St. Charles, Mo. [301 Prospect St., New Haven, Conn.]
- Parker, Clifford Stetson, Prof. and Head Dept. Langs., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Parker, Edward Locke, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Sq. Coll., New York, N. Y. [26 E. 81st St.]
- Parker, Eugene F., 3 Crawford St., Cambridge, Mass.
- Parker, Richard Alexander, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [University Heights]
- Parker, Roscoe E., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.
- Parker, William Riley, Instr. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Parks, Edd Winfield, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Georgia, Athens, Ga. [1196 Prince Ave.]
- Parks, George B., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Parlett, Mathilde Mayer, Eng. Dept., Shorter Coll., Rome, Ga.
- Parmenter, Clarence Edward, Prof. Rom. Phonetics, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Parmenter, Mary, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hollins Coll., Va.
- Parrott, Thomas Maic, Prof. Eng., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Parry, John Jay, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [805 W. Iowa St.]
- Parsons, Alice Eleanor, at The Drift, Cane End, N. Reading, Berks, England
- Parsons, Coleman Oscar, Internat'l. Research Fellow, Huntington Lib., San Marino, Calif. [955 E. California St., Pasadena]
- Parsons, Edward S., President, Marietta Coll., Marietta, Ohio
- Paschall, Clarence, Prof. German, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2800 Derby St.]
- Passarelli, Luigi A., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Ark.
- ❖ Patch, Howard Rollin, Prof. Eng. Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [4 Barrett Pl.]
- Paton, Lucy Allen, Paris, France [c/o Morgan & Cie, 14 Pl. Vendôme]
- Patrick, George Zinovei, Assoc. Prof. Russian, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2441 Haste St.]
- Patterson, Arthur Sayles, Prof. Rom. Langs., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y. [415 University Pl.]
- ❖ Patterson, Frank Allen, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Philosophy Hall]
- Patterson, Gordon Cummings, Assoc. Prof. Italian and Spanish, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Patterson, Merrill Reeves, Instr. Eng., Marietta Coll., Marietta, Ohio [407 Sixth St.]
- Patterson, Shirley Gale, Prof. Rom. Langs., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Pattison, Walter T., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn.
- Patton, Julia, Prof. Eng., Russell Sage Coll., Troy, N. Y.
- Patzer, Otto, Prof. French, Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Paul, Harry Gilbert, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [713 W. Oregon St.]
- Pauline, Rev. Mother Mary, Eng. and French Depts., Academy of the Holy Child Jesus, Sharon Hill, Del Co., Pa.
- Payne, Foster P., Prof. Eng., Shaw Univ., Raleigh, N. C.

- Payne, Leonidas Warren, Jr., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2104 Pearl St.]
- Peach, Arthur Wallace, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Norwich Univ., Northfield, Vt. [6 Prospect St.]
- Peacock, Vera Louise, Head Lang. Dept., Southern Illinois State Normal Univ., 218 W. Main St., Carbondale, Ill.
- Pearce, Helen, Asst. Prof. Eng., Willamette Univ., Salem, Ore. [267 N. Winter St.]
- Pearce, Thomas Matthews, Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of New Mexico, Albuquerque, New Mexico
- Pearson, (Mrs.) Lu Emily, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
- Pearson, Norman Holmes, Stu. Grad. School, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [147 Cottage St.]
- Pease, Raymond Burnette, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Akron, Akron, Ohio
- Peckham, Harry Houston, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [98 N. Congress St.]
- Peckham, Lawton P. G., Instr. French, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [13 Brown St.]
- Peebles, Rose Jeffries, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Pei, Mario A., Instr. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [35 Hamilton Pl.]
- Pekary, Charlotte H., Asst. Prof. German, Wash. Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y. [14 Washington Pl., E.]
- Pelmont, Andrew Prosper, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [514 Wyckoff Rd.]
- Pence, Raymond Woodbury, Prof. Eng., DePauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.
- Pendleton, Charles Sutphin, Prof. Teaching of Eng., George Peabody Coll. for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn.
- Penn, Dorothy, Prof. Rom. Langs., The St. Mary Coll., Leavenworth, Kan.
- ❖ Penniman, Josiah Harmar, Provost, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [4037 Pine St.]
- Pennington, Walter, Head Eng. Dept., College of Emporia, Emporia, Kans. [917 Market St.]
- Pennock, Emily C., Prof. Spanish, Carthage Coll., Carthage, Ill. [37 N. Adams]
- Penny, John J., Instr. and Tutor Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [34 Edgehill Rd., Arlington]
- Peoples, Margaret H., Asst. Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [81 Prospect St.]
- Peple, Edward Cronin, Asst. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [3200 Hawthorne Ave., Richmond, Va.]
- Percival, Milton, Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Pérez, Elisa, Assoc. Prof. Foreign Langs., Baker Univ., Baldwin, Kan.
- Perkins, Agnes Frances, Prof. Rhet. and Composition, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [15 Roanoke Rd.]
- Perkins, Thomas Peirce, Jr., Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [235 Chancery Rd.]
- Perkins, Wallace Wyman, Instr. and Tutor Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Holyoke House B1]
- Perkinson, Richard Henry, Instr. Eng., Fordham Univ. Grad. School, New York, N. Y. [233 Broadway]
- Pernot, Nicolette, Lec. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Olive Davis Hall]
- Perrin, Porter Gale, Asst. Prof. Eng. Comp., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y.
- Perrine, George H., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Perry, Aaron Jenkins, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Canada [61 Home St.]
- Perry, Henry Ten Eyck, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [15 Arlington Pl.]
- Perry, William Gilmer, Prof. Eng.; Dean General Subjects, Georgia Sch. of Technology, Atlanta, Ga.
- Peterson, Earl Herman, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [211 W. Illinois]
- Peterson, Frederick William, Asst. Prof. Rhet., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [Foster Rd.]
- Peterson, Otto P., Instr. German, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [640 Riverside Dr.]
- Peterson, Roy Merle, Prof. Spanish and Italian, Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Petsch, Philip Robert, Instr. German, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif. [2327 Camden Ave., West Los Angeles]
- Pettingill, Ray Waldron, Prof. Latin and German, Skidmore Coll., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
- Pettigrew, (Mrs.) Helen P., Instr. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [76 Grandview Ave.]
- Pettit, Henry Jewett, Jr., Instr., Univ. of Tulsa, Tulsa, Okla.

- Petty, McKendree, Prof. Spanish, Coll. of Saint Teresa, Winona, Minn.
- Pfander, Homer Garrison, Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Pfeiffer, Frederick L., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [159 Montrose Pl., St. Paul]
- Pfeiler, Wilhelm K., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Porzheimer, Carl H., Hidden Brook Farm, Purchase, N. Y.
- Pfund, Harry William, Asst. Prof. German, Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa.
- Phelps, William Lyon, Prof. Eng. Lit., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Phelps-Perry, Miss. F., Bournemouth, England [33 W. Cliff Rd.]
- Philippson, Ernst A., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1047 Olivia Ave.]
- Philips, Edith, Assoc. Prof. French, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- Phillips, Elias Hiester, Jr., Instr. Latin, M. S. Hershey H.S., Hershey, Pa. [Box 163]
- Phillips, Helen M., Asst. Prof. Eng., N. Y. State Coll. for Teachers, Albany, N. Y.
- Phillips, Roy Cleveland, Head Dept. Foreign Langs., Henderson State Teachers Coll., Arkadelphia, Ark. [1704 Hanover Ave. N.W., Roanoke, Va.]
- Phillips, William J., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [312 Bennett Hall]
- Phy, Charles Wesley, Instr. Eng., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [Christmas-Saucon Hall]
- Pianca, Alvin Louis, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [61 Lebanon St.]
- Piccirilli, Maria de Negri, Instr. Italian, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Piercy, Josephine Ketcham, Instr. Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [708 S. Ballantine Rd.]
- ❖ Pierson, Lorraine, Prof. Rom. Langs., Alabama Coll., Montevallo, Ala.
- Pillington, Mary Alice, Commercial Dept., Messick H. S., Memphis, Tenn. [175 Stonewall]
- Pitman, James Hall, Newark, N. J. [88 Chadwick Ave.]
- Place, Derrill R., Instr. Eng. and Speech, Valparaiso Univ., Valparaiso, Ind.
- Place, Edwin B., Prof. and Chairman, Dept. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Plairs, Edith Pennington, 104 Jones Ave., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Platt, Harrison Gray, Jr., Instr. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [258 Medway St.]
- Pocattera, Jose Rafael, Prof. Spanish, "Ecole des Hautes Etudes Commerciales," Univ. of Montreal, Montreal, Canada [P.O. Box 65, Station "B"]
- Pochmann, Henry August, Dean Grad. School, Head Eng. Dept., Miss. State Coll., State College, Miss.
- Poitras, Thomas L., Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Dayton, Dayton, Ohio
- Pokrantz, Elsie, Instr. German, Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa. [Gibson, Iowa]
- ❖ Poll, Max, Prof. German, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Pollock, Thomas Clark, Asst. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Polt, Hugo Karl, Instr. German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Poole, Mary Elizabeth, Instr. Eng., Mary Baldwin Coll., Staunton, Va.
- ❖ Pope, Emma Field, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Kansas Teachers Coll., Pittsburg, Kan. [Harvard Hotel, 5714-22 Blackstone Ave., Chicago, Ill.]
- ❖ Pope, Isabel, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Radcliffe Coll., Cambridge, Mass. [5 Concord Ave.]
- Pope, John Collins, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- ❖ Pope, Paul Russel, Prof. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Pope, Willard B., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt. [253 S. Union St.]
- Porohovshikov, Pierre S., Adj. Prof. Mod. Langs., Oglethorpe Univ., Ga. [85 Avery Dr. N.E., Atlanta]
- Porterfield, Allen Wilson, Prof. and Head German Dept., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Post, Anita Calneh, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [1143 E. Lowell Ave.]
- Poteat, Mary, Instr. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [402 Buchanan Rd.]
- Potter, Albert Knight, Prof. Eng., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [212 Waterman St.]
- Potter, George Reuben, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.

- Potter, Robert Russell, Director, Inst. of Arts and Sciences, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [307 School of Business]
- ❖ Pottle, Frederick Albert, Prof. Eng, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Potts, Abbie Findlay, Prof. Dramatic Lit Rockford Coll., Rockford, Ill.
- Potts, Edgar L., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Ithaca, Pa.]
- ❖ Pound, Louise, Prof. Eng. Lang., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [1632 L St.]
- Powell, Francis T. S., Assoc. Prof. Spoken Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [76 Crescent St.]
- Powell, Francis Warren, Prof. Eng., Davis and Elkins Coll., Elkins, W. Va. [Bishop Apts.]
- Powell, Nellie Virginia, Prof. Eng., Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll., Lynchburg, Va.
- Power, Esther Melvina, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Southern Ill. Normal State Univ., Carbondale, Ill.
- Prahl, Augustus John, Instr. German, The Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- ❖ Pratt, Robert Armstrong, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [422 Morey Hall, River Campus]
- Pratt, Willis Winslow, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Pray, Frances Mary, Bristol, New Hampshire
- Prescott, Frederick C., Prof. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [2 Grove Pl.]
- Presta, Peter S., Head French Dept., St. Francis Coll., Joliet, Ill.
- Prezzolini, Giuseppe, Prof. Italian Lit., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [1161 Amsterdam Ave.]
- Price, E. H., Instr. French, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, O.
- Price, Hereward Thimbleby, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1228 Olivia Ave.]
- ❖ Price, Lawrence M., Prof. German, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1518 Hawthorne Terrace]
- Pride, Armistead Scott, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Bishop Coll., Marshall, Tex.
- ❖ Priest, George Madison, Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.
- Priest, Harold M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Kansas State Teachers Coll. of Emporia, Emporia, Kan.
- Proctor, Sigmund K., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Prodoehl, Austin, Prof. and Head German Dept., Birmingham-Southern Coll., Birmingham, Ala.
- ❖ Prokosch, Eduard, Prof. Germ. Langs., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Protzman, Merle I., Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Provine, William Kolb, Asst. Prof. German, Tufts Coll., Medford, Mass.
- Piovost, Antonio J., Prof. French, Boston Coll., Chestnut Hill, Mass. [Hotel Westminster]
- Prull, Fletcher W., New York, N. Y. [10 E. 39th St.]
- Pucci, Dominic Louis, Head Spanish and Italian Dept., Wayne Univ., 4841 Cass Ave., Detroit, Mich.
- Puckett, Hugh Wiley, Assoc. Prof. German, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Pugh, William Leonard, Prof. Eng., Wofford Coll., Spartanburg, S. C. [1052 Otis Blvd.]
- Pumpelly, Laurence, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Punderson, Dorothy Mary, Asst. French and Italian, Home-Study Dept., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Gates Hall]
- Purcell, James Mark, Assoc. Prof. and Acting Head Eng. Dept., Marquette Univ., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Purcell, Sister Margaret John, Eng. Dept., Fontbonne Coll., St. Louis, Mo. [Wydown and Big Bend Blvd.]
- Purdy, Mary Martha, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wittenberg Coll., Springfield, Ohio [837 N. Limestone St.]
- Purdy, Richard Little, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [606 Berkeley Coll.]
- Purin, Charles Maltador, Prof. German and Director, Univ. of Wisconsin, Ext. Div., Milwaukee, Wis. [623 West State St.]
- Qualia, Charles Blaise, Head Dept. For. Langs., Texas Technological Coll., Lubbock, Tex.
- Quinlivan, Frances M., Asst. Prof. Eng., Notre Dame Coll., South Euclid, Ohio [1419 East 94th St., Cleveland]
- ❖ Quinn, Arthur Hobson, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [401 Pembroke Rd., Cynwyd, Pa.]
- Quintana, Ricardo Beckwith, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]

- Quynn, William Rogers, Instr. French, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [507 Watts St.]
- Rabow, Hans, Head French Dept., Waterloo Coll., Waterloo, Ont., Canada
- ✧ Racer, Marion Milton, Urbana, Ohio
- Raddin, George G., Jr., Grad. Stu., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [520 W. 122nd St.]
- Radoff, Maurice Leon, Instr. Rom. Langs., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 1226]
- Raessly, Ellis Lawrence, Grad. Stu., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [439 W. 123rd St.]
- Raines, John Marlin, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Missouri Valley Coll., Marshall, Mo.
- Ramage, Ethel, Asst. Prof. Eng., Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va. [Box 215]
- Ramsay, Robert Lee, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [1320 Wilson Ave.]
- Ramsey, Lenore P., Assoc. Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Wayne, Neb.
- Randall, Randolph C., Prof. Eng., Fenn College, Cleveland, Ohio
- Rankin, James Walter, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [311 Thilly Ave.]
- Rankin, Thomas Ernest, Prof. Eng., Carleton Coll., Northfield, Minn.
- Ransom, Ellene, Coll. Dept. Eng., Ward-Belmont Sch., Nashville, Tenn.
- Ransom, Harry Hunt, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [704 E. 23 St.]
- Raschen, John Frederick Louis, Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Raser, George Bernard, III, Instr. French and Spanish, Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [14 South Section, South Coll., Union Coll.]
- Raska, Francis J., Instr. Mod. Langs., Central H. S., Philadelphia, Pa. [4324 Pine St.]
- Ratchford, Fannie, Librarian, The Wrenn Lib., Univ. of Texas Austin, Tex.
- Ratcliff, Dilwyn Fritschel, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., McMicken Coll., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Rathborne, Isabel Elizabeth, Grad. Stu. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Scarborough, N. Y.]
- Ratti, Gino A., Head Dept. Rom. Langs.; Acting Dean Coll. Liberal Arts and Sciences, Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind. [329 Buckingham Dr.]
- Rauschenbush, (Mrs. Carl) Esther, Eng. Dept., Sarah Lawrence Coll., Bronxville, N. Y. [20 E. 8th St., N. Y. C.]
- Raven, Anton Adolph, Asst. Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Ray, John Arthur, Prof. Spanish and Italian, Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Raymond, Frederic Newton, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan.
- Raymond, William Ober, Prof. Eng. Lit., Bishop's Univ., Lennoxville, Province of Quebec, Canada
- Raynor, Anne Washington, Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Peace Junior Coll., Raleigh, N. C.
- Raysor, Thomas M., Chairman Eng. Dept., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Read, Allen Walker, Research Assoc. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Hitchcock Hall]
- Reber, John, Prof. Eng., Grad. Sch., Fordham Univ., New York, N. Y. [352 W. 122nd St.]
- Reed, Amy Louise, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Reed, Edward Bliss, Director, Education Division, The Commonwealth Fund, New York, N. Y. [215 Bishop St., New Haven, Conn.]
- Reed, Gwendolen Willits, Assoc. Prof. French, Greenville Woman's Coll., Greenville, S. C.
- Reed, William Howell, Prof. German, Tufts Coll., Tufts College P. O., Medford, Mass. [Box 54]
- Reese, Elizabeth Irene, Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [Box 1144, Sta. A]
- Reese, Helen R., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Wittenberg Coll., Springfield, Ohio
- ✧ Reeves, William Peters, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Kenyon Coll., Gambier, Ohio
- Rehder, Helmut, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [1321 Ross St.]
- Rehor, Charles Frank, Instr. Eng. and Journalism, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [Suite 15, 9806 Woodward Ave.]
- Reichart, Walter Albert, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- ✧ Reid, Elisabeth, Prof. Eng., Huron Coll., Huron, S. D. [657 Kansas Ave., S.D.]
- Reid, (Frances) Lucile, Instr. Mod. Langs., Hastings Coll., Hastings, Neb.
- Reigart, Catherine Mifflin, Instr. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., 383 Pearl St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [70 Remsen St.]
- Reilly, Joseph J., Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., Park Ave. and 68th St., New York, N. Y.
- Reinhard, John Revell, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2220 Angell Hall]

- Reinhardt, (Mrs) Aurelia Henry, President, Mills Coll., Mills College, Calif.
- Reinhardt, Kurt Frank, Assoc Prof German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [712 Salvaterra St.]
- Reinsch, Frank Herman, Assoc Prof. German, Univ of California at Los Angeles, Los Angeles, Calif
- Remy, Arthur Frank Joseph, Villard Prof. Germ. Philology, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Remy, Renata, Assoc. Prof Eng, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [315 E. 68th St.]
- Renzulli, Michele, Prof. Medicine, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [6500 Haverford Ave.]
- Rettger, James Frederick, Research Assoc., Middle Eng Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [510 Forest Ave.]
- Reuning, Karl, Asst Prof German, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa
- Rey, Agapito, Assoc Prof Spanish, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- Reynolds, Cecil John, 28 Eaton St., Hartford, Conn
- ❖ Reynolds, Floyd T., Grad. Stu. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [80 Summer St., Providence, R. I.]
- Reynolds, George Fullmer, Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ of Colorado, Boulder, Colo. [1220 Grand View]
- Reynolds, Minna Davis, Asst. Prof Eng., Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va.
- Reynolds, Paul Everett, Grad Stu., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass [15 Linden St., Framingham]
- Rhoads, Howard Garrett, Research Librarian, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [403 S 42nd St.]
- Rhodes, S. A., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 138 St and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Rhyne, Orestes P., Prof. Mod. Langs., Clemson Coll., Clemson, S. C.
- Riback, William H., Grad. Stu. Amer. Lit., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1541 S. St. Louis Ave., Chicago]
- Rice, Allan Lake, Instr. German, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [4217 Osage Ave., Phila., Pa.]
- Rice, Carlton Cosmo, Prof. Rom. Langs., Catawba Coll., Salisbury, N. C.
- Rice, James V., Instr. French, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [318 Forest Ave., Dayton, Ohio]
- Rice, John Pierpont, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom Langs, Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [211 Highland Ave.]
- Rice, Richard Ashley, Prof Eng. Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Rice, Warner Grenelle, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [1305 Cambridge Rd.]
- Rice, Winthrop H., Instr. Rom. Langs, Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Richards, Ernest C., Chairman Dept. Rhet., Willamette Univ., Salem, Ore. [966 Center St.]
- Richards, Frances, Eng Dept., Western Kentucky State Teachers Coll., Bowling Green, Ky. [1340 College St.]
- Richards, Irving T., 49 Washington Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
- Richards, J. K., Instr. French and Italian, Junior Coll., Riverside, Calif.
- Richards, Marguerite L., (Mrs N. W.), Asst. Prof. French Lang. and Lit., New Jersey Coll. for Women, New Brunswick, N. J.
- Richardson, Dorothy, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [35-22 167th St., Flushing, N. Y.]
- Richardson, Elizabeth, Assoc. Prof. French, Berea Coll., Berea Ky.
- Richardson, (Mrs.) Evelyn Owen, [Address unknown]
- Richardson, Henry Brush, Asst. Prof. French Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [50 Pendleton St.]
- Richardson, Lula McDowell, Instr. French, Coll. for Teachers, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [2618 N. Charles St.]
- Richardson, Lyon Norman, Asst. Dean, Dept. Eng., Adelbert Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Richardson, (Mrs.) Mary Rienhoff, 7 Whitfield Rd., Guilford, Baltimore, Md.
- Richardson, Ruth, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Wooster Coll., Wooster, Ohio [912 College Ave.]
- Richardson, William Rittenhouse, Instr. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Richner, Theophilus G., Instr. French, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [2940 Broadway]
- Richter, Margaret Rose, 723 S. Bronson Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Rick, J. F. Abbott, 22 Royal Ave., Jamestown, N. Y.
- Rickert, Edith, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Rico y Fraga, Federico, Instr. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.

- ❖ Riddell, Agnes Rutherford, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Riddle, Lawrence M., Prof. French, Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Ridenour, Chauncey Owen, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [507 Pugh St.]
- Ridenour, Harry Lee, Prof. Eng., Baldwin-Wallace Coll., Berea, O. [117 Seminary St.]
- Rideout, Blanchard Livingstone, Instr. Rom. Langs., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Rieder, (Mrs.) Miriam, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo. [1801 S. Broadway]
- Righino, John Antoine, Prof. Rom. Langs., St. Norbert Coll., West De Pere, Wis.
- Riker, Charles Cook, Jr., Instr. Eng., Eastman Sch. of Music, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [40 N. Goodman St.]
- Riley, Edgar Heisler, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa.
- ❖ Rinaker, Clarissa, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [908 Nevada St.]
- Ringler, William Andrew, Jr., Grad. Stu. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [73 Nassau St.]
- Rippere, John Brockway, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Ala. [401 Reed St.]
- Riske, Ella Theodora, Asst. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [117 Waverly Place]
- Ristine, Frank Humphrey, Prof. Eng. Lit., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Rivillé-Rensch, Emma, Assoc. Prof. Emeritus French, Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [4803 Garden St., Bridesburg, Phila., Pa.]
- Roach, William Joseph, Instr. Rom. Langs., Catholic Univ. of America, Washington, D. C.
- ❖ Robbins, Harry Wolcott, Prof. Eng., Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa.
- Robert, Osmond T., Prof. French, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [29 Kensington Ave.]
- Roberts, Charles Walter, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [324 University Hall]
- Roberts, Donald A., Instr. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Roberts, John G., Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of Miami, Coral Gables, Fla.
- Roberts, John Hawley, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Roberts, Philip Woodford, Grad. Stu. German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [80 Clark St.]
- Roberts, Sister Mary, Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Loretto Heights Coll., Loretto, Colo.
- Robertson, Charles Archibald, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Florida, Gainesville, Fla.
- Robertson, Stuart, Prof. Eng., Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Robinson, Archer Tyler, Prof. Eng., Mass. Institute of Technology, Cambridge, Mass.
- Robinson, Catharine P., Grad. Stu. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [Radnor Hall]
- ❖ Robinson, Fred Norris, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Longfellow Park]
- Robinson, Henry L., Syracuse Univ., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Robinson, Herbert Spencer, Head Dept. Eng. and Lit., Coll. of Paterson, Paterson, N. J.
- Robinson, Kenneth Allan, Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [40 Occom Ridge]
- Robinson, Vern Wade, Asst. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [223 Lincoln Hall]
- Roche, A. J., Head French Dept., St. Francis Xavier Univ., Antigonish, N. S.
- Roche, Alphonse Victor, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [228 Lincoln Hall]
- Rochedieu, Charles Alfred, Asst. Prof. French, Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Rockwell, Leo L., Prof. Germanic Langs., Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa.
- ❖ Rockwood, Robert Everett, Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [223 Derby Hall]
- Rockwood, Stanley Walker, Prof. French and Spanish, Arkansas Coll., Batesville, Ark.
- Rodenbaeck, Louise, Prof. and Head Dept. German, Lake Erie Coll., Painesville, Ohio
- Roe, Frederick William, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [2015 Van Hise Ave.]
- ❖ Roedder, Edwin Carl, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Rogers, Ada March, Royen II. S., Youngstown, Ohio
- Rogers, Carmen, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Georgia State Coll. for Women, Milledgeville, Ga.
- Rogers, Gretchen Louisa, Instr. German, George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C. [Apt. 602, 2100 Eye St. N.W.]

- Rogers, Lyman Willets, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs, Washington and Jefferson Coll, Washington, Pa
- Rogers, Paul P, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Oberlin Coll, Oberlin, Ohio
- Rogers, Samuel G A, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis
- Rogers, Winfield H., Assoc. Prof. and Acting Head Dept. Eng. and Comp. Lit., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [1792 Wilton Rd., Cleveland Hgts.]
- Rolfe, Franklin Prescott, Instr. Eng., Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif. [310 E. Royce Hall]
- Rollins, George Alcuin, Lecturer Eng., Sch. of Commerce, Northwestern Univ., McKinlock Campus, Chicago, Ill. [6205 N. Paulina St.]
- Rollins, Hyder Edward, Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [19 Garden St.]
- Romera-Navarro, Miguel, Prof. Spanish Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Rooker, Henry Grady, Prof. Eng., Phillips Univ., Enid, Okla. [Univ. Sta.]
- van Roosbroeck, Gustave L., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [504 Philosophy Hall]
- ❖ Root, Robert Kilburn, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J.
- Root, Winthrop H., Asst. Prof. German, Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass. [230 Main St.]
- Ropp, Philip Hortenstine, Hampden-Sydney, Va.
- Rose, Ernest Gottlieb Andreas, Asst. Prof. German, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [85 Vreeland Ave., Midland Park, N. J.]
- Rose, Harold David, Asst. Prof. Eng. and Director Dramatics, Bowling Green State Univ., Bowling Green, Ohio
- Rose, Lewis Day, Asst. Prof. German, Elizabethtown Coll., Elizabethtown, Pa.
- Rose, Ruth O., Instr. Eng., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Roseler, Robert O., Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- Rosenbach, A. S. W., Philadelphia, Pa. [2006 De Lancey St.]
- Rosenberg, Ben B., German Dept., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Rosenberg, Eleanor, Grad. Stu. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [290 Riverside Dr.]
- Rosenberg, Ralph P., Instr. German, Brooklyn Coll., 80 Willoughby St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Rosenfeld, Selma, Instr. German, Los Angeles Jr. Coll., Los Angeles, Calif. [4451½ Burns St.]
- Rosenfeld, Sybil Marion, 171 Gloucester Terrace, London W.2, England
- Rosenhaupt, Hans L., Instr. German, Oak Park Jr. Coll., Chicago, Ill. [5625 Woodlawn Ave.]
- Ross, Ernest Carson, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla. [763 Jenkins Ave.]
- Ross, Flora, Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., James Milhkin Univ., Decatur, Ill.
- Ross, John Frederic, Instr. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [450 Wheeler Hall]
- Ross, Margaret L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Westhampton Coll., Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va.
- Ross, Woodburn Overstreet, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of North Dakota, Grand Forks, N. D. [Box 285, Univ. Sta.]
- Rosshberg-Leipnitz, Elizabeth, Prof. German, Milwaukee-Downer Coll., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Rosset, Jeanne, Asst. Prof. French, Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Roth, Harold H., Tutor Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Rothensteiner, Rev. John, St. Louis, Mo. [1911 N. Taylor Ave.]
- Roulston, Robert Bruce, Collegiate Prof. German, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- ❖ Routh, James, Prof. Eng. and Head Dept. Langs., Univ. of Georgia Jr. Coll. and Evening Sch., 223 Walton St., Atlanta, Ga.
- Rovillain, Eugene Etienne, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Rowbotham, Arnold H., Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [260 Southampton Ave.]
- Rowe, Kenneth Thorpe, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [5 De Wolf St., Cambridge, Mass.]
- Rowland, Durbin, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Junior Coll., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- ❖ Rowland, Mary Zollikofer, Teacher French, Catonsville, H. S., Catonsville, Md. [1118 St. Paul St., Baltimore]

- Rubel, Veré L., Instr. Eng, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [311 E. 72nd St.]
- Rubio, Antonio, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., De Paul Univ., Chicago, Ill. [6030 Ellis Ave.]
- Ruby, James Stai, Jr., Asst. Prof. Eng., Georgetown Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Rudman, Harry, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- ❖Ruebhausen, Ella, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Ruet, Françoise, Asst. Prof. French, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Beebe Hall]
- Ruff, William, Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1941 Yale Sta.]
- Rugh, James Torrance, Jr., Instr. German, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa. [Box 398]
- Ruhmer, Otto Emil Martin, Instr. German, Long Island Univ., Brooklyn, N. Y. [39 Lenox Rd.]
- Rusk, Ralph Leslie, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [445 Riverside Dr.]
- Russell, (Mrs.) Frances Theresa, Prof. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif. [534 Lasuen St.]
- Russell, Harry James, Asst. Prof. Romanic Langs., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio
- ❖Russell, Isaac Willis, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, Ala. [1104 Riverside Dr.]
- ❖Russell, Jason Almus, Principal, Bacon Academy, Colchester, Conn.
- Russo, Frank Anthony, Instr. Spanish, N. Y. University, New York, N. Y. [186 Linden St., B'klyn.]
- Russo, Harold J., Instr. Rom. Langs., The Hill School, Pottstown, Pa.
- Russo, Joseph Louis, Assoc. Prof. Italian, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Rust, (Mrs.) Isabel B., Prof. Latin, State Teachers Coll., Wayne, Neb.
- Rund, Martin B., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Ryan, Alice M., 32 Roycroft Ave., Belmont Shores, Long Beach, Calif.
- Ryan, Teresa M., Assoc. Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Emporia, Kan.
- Ryland, Archie G., Prof. French, Coll. of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va. [331 E. Francis St.]
- Ryland, Hobart, Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky.
- Rypins, Stanley I., Prof. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Sabine, Ernest L., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Ball State Teachers Coll., Muncie, Ind.
- Saidla, Leo Eralv Alexandre, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Polytechnic Inst. of Brooklyn, Brooklyn, N. Y. [99 Livingston St.]
- St. Clair, Foster York, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Jamestown Coll., Jamestown, N. D.
- St. Francis, Sister M., Prof. French, Regis Coll., Weston, Mass.
- St. Helene, Sister, Head Eng. Dept., Coll. of Saint Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.
- St. Ignatius Ward, Sister, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., St. Mary-of-the-Woods Coll., St. Mary-of-the-Woods, Ind.
- Saintonge, Paul Frederic, Assoc. Prof. French, Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [19 Park St.]
- Sale, William M., Jr., Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [972 Prospect St.]
- de Sales, Sister Francis, Instr. Rom. Langs., Loretto Heights Coll., Loretto, Colo. [New Dominican House of Studies, Catholic Sisters' Coll., Washington, D. C.]
- Saleski, Elsie, College Misericordia, Dallas, Pa.
- Saleski, Mary Agnes, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., St. Lawrence Univ., Canton, N. Y.
- Salinger, Herman, Instr. German, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [100 Hodge Rd.]
- Salley, William Callier, Prof. Spanish, Georgia State Coll. for Women, Milledgeville, Ga. [Fowler Apts., McIntosh St.]
- Salomon, Louis B., Instr. Eng., Western Kentucky State Teachers Coll., Bowling Green, Ky.
- Salter, F. Millet, Kansas City, Mo. [2546 Drury Ave.]
- de Salvio, Alfonso, Prof. Rom. Langs., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- Sampley, Arthur McCullough, Prof. Eng., North Texas State Teachers Coll., Denton, Tex. [Teachers Coll. Sta.]
- Sampson, Harriet, New York, N. Y. [23 Perry St.]
- Sanchez y Escribano, Federico, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn.
- Sanders, Albert Godfrey, Prof. Rom. Langs., Millsaps Coll., Jackson, Miss.
- Sanders, Charles Richard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Emory Univ., Emory Univ., Ga. [406 E. Moore St., Valdosta]
- Sanders, Gerald De Witt, Head Eng. Dept., Michigan State Normal Coll., Ypsilanti, Mich.

- Sanders, Martha Pegues, Asst. Prof. For Langs., Texas State Coll for Women, Denton, Tex.
- Sandidge, William Lee, Jr, Prof. Eng., Virginia Polytechnic Inst., Blacksburg, Va.
- ❖ Sandison, Helen Estabrook, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie, N Y.
- Sargent, Cecilia Vennard, Prof. Spanish, Wilson Coll, Chambersburg, Pa.
- Sargent, Ralph Millard, 15 Giles St., Hamden, Conn.
- Satterfield, Chester E., Head Eng Dept., Kent State Univ, Kent, Ohio [114 Linden Rd]
- Sauerlander, Annemarie M., Instr German, Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N Y. [700 Potomac Ave]
- Saul, George Brandon, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Connecticut State Coll, Storrs, Conn.
- de Sauzé, Emile B., Director For. Langs, Board of Education; Prof. Grad. Sch., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [c/o Board of Education]
- Savage, David Jackson, State College, Miss
- Savage, Henry Lyttleton, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [104 Jefferson Rd]
- ❖ Savage, Howard James, Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, 522 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Savoie, Sister M. Alberta, Head Mod. Lang Dept., Marymount Coll., Salina, Kan.
- Sawyer, Newell Wheeler, Head Eng. Dept., Cortland Normal School, Cortland, N. Y [7 Church St]
- Saxe, Nathaniel Edgar, Head Dept. Mod Langs., Washburn Coll., Topeka, Kan.
- Scallon, (Miss) Brighidin Trumble, Prof. French, Marygrove Coll., Detroit, Mich
- Scenna, Anthony, Instr. German, Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass [Bank Block]
- Schacht, Paul Lamb, Head Dept. Eng, Capital Univ., Columbus, Ohio [2475 Bexley Park Rd.]
- Schaffer, Aaron, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [University Sta.]
- Schafheitlin, Anna, Head Dept. German, Kent State Univ., Kent, Ohio
- Scharf, Carl, 4707 Connecticut Ave. N.W., Apt. 307, Washington, D. C.
- Scheifly, Claude Knight, Instr. German, Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio
- ❖ Schelling, Felix Emanuel, Prof. Emeritus Eng. Lit., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Schenck, Eunice Morgan, Prof. French, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
- Schenk, Philip Louis, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [743 Miller Ave.]
- Schevill, Rudolph, Prof. Spanish, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [77 Tamalpais Rd.]
- Schick, George Baldwin, Instr. Eng., Purdue Univ, Lafayette, Ind [244 Littleton St. W. Lafayette]
- Schick, Joseph Schlueter, Grad. Asst. Eng. Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia.
- Schillings, Dorothy C., Prof. Eng, Tempe State Teachers Coll, Tempe, Ariz
- Schindelin, Magdalene, Asst Prof. German, Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie, N Y.
- Schinnerer, Otto Paul, Instr. Geom Langs., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [251 W. 71st St.]
- ❖ Schinz, Albert, Prof. French Lang. and Lit, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa.
- Schirmer, Mariele, Head Dept. Mod For Langs, State Teachers Coll, Milwaukee, Wis. [942 N. 14th St.]
- Schlatter, Edward Bunker, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [2259 Regent St.]
- Schlauch, Margaret, Assoc. Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [219 Division Ave., Hasbrouck Heights, N. J.]
- Schmidt, Alfred Francis William, Prof. German and Univ. Librarian, George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C. [2023 G. St., N.W.]
- Schmidt, Katherine Kunz, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Hunter Coll., 68th St. and Park Ave, New York, N. Y.
- Schmitz, Matthias F., Asst. Prof. German, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [57 Henshaw Ave.]
- Schmitz, R. Morell, Instr. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo.
- Schneider, Elisabeth Wintersteen, Asst. Prof. Eng, Temple Univ., Philadelphia, Pa.
- Schneiders, Marie H., Germ. Teacher, Ethel Walker Sch., Simsbury, Conn. (After 6-20-36: 1680 First Ave., N. Y. C.)
- Schnurer, Herman, Prof. French, Antioch Coll., Yellow Springs, Ohio [431 Walnut St.]
- Schoberg, Gustav L., Head German and French Dept., Concordia Coll., Moorhead, Minn.

- ❖ Schobinger, Elsie, Head Dept Mod Langs, Harvard Sch for Boys, 4731 Ellis Ave, Chicago, Ill
- Schoedinger, Paul Siebert, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Schoenberger, Harold W., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa
- Scholl, John William, Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [917 Forest Ave]
- Scholz, Magdalena, Stu. German, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Coll. of the Sacred Heart, Convent Ave and 133 St]
- Schomaker, Christel B., Assoc. German, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif.
- Schons, Dorothy, Adjunct Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Schons, Emily, Prof. and Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Olivet Coll., Olivet, Mich.
- Schradieck, Claire Strube, (Mrs. Henry E.), Asst. Prof. German, Flora Stone Mather Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Schramm, Wilbur Lang, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia.
- Schreiber, Carl Frederick, Prof. German and Curator William A. Speck Collection of Goetheana, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [65 Elmwood Rd]
- Schreiber, Theodore, Prof. German, Alma Coll., Alma, Mich.
- Schreiber, William I., Head Foreign Langs, Parsons Coll., Fairfield, Ia.
- Schuchard, Gottlieb Carl Ludolf, Assoc. Prof. German, Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [421 Riverside Dr, Brooklake Park, Madison, N. J.]
- Schug, Howard L., Head Dept Mod. Langs., Abilene Christian Coll., Abilene, Tex. [402 Grape St]
- Schultz, John Richie, Prof. Eng. Lit., Allegheny Coll., Meadville, Pa [380 N. Main St]
- Schultz, William Eben, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Illinois Wesleyan Univ., Bloomington, Ill.
- Schulz, R. E., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Schulze, Henry H. L., Assoc. Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [407 Hamilton Hall]
- Schulze, Ivan L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex.
- Schuman, (Mrs.) Ethel K., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Denver, Denver, Colo. [2075 S. High St.]
- Schumann, Detlev W., Acting Asst. Prof. German, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa.
- Schutz, Alexander Herman, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [Derby Hall]
- Schütze, Martin, Prof. Emeritus German Lit., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [1330 E. 56th St.]
- Schuyler, William Moorhouse, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [1500 Lake Shore Dr]
- Schwab, Walter H., German Dept., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [1604 Hazel Dr]
- Schwartz, Laura Virginia, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Hawaii, Honolulu, T. H.
- Schwartz, William Leonard, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 572]
- ❖ Scott, Charles Payson Gurley, c/o Carl F. Scott, 26 Sarles Lane, Pleasantville, N. Y.
- Scott, David Gallup, Instr. Rom. Langs., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [1612 Linden St.]
- Scott, Florence, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Scott, Franklin William, Editor-in-Chief, D. C. Heath & Co., Boston, Mass. [193 Lake Ave., Newton Highlands]
- Scott, John Hubert, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [Engineering Bldg]
- Scott, Laila C., Assoc. Prof. German, Trinity Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Canada
- Scott, Myra E., Instr. Eng., Kansas State Coll., Manhattan, Kan.
- Scott, Ralph Lucas, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [Apt. D-4, 1320 Chicago Ave.]
- Scudder, Harold H., Prof. Eng., Univ. of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Scudder, Townsend, III, Asst. Prof. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [115 Thayer Rd.]
- Seaman, Walter L., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Muhlenberg Coll., Allentown, Pa. [427 N. 23rd St.]
- Searles, Colbert, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.
- Seaver, Henry Latimer, Assoc. Prof. Eng. and History, Massachusetts Inst. of Tech-

- nology, Cambridge, Mass [491 Boylston St., Boston]
- Sehring, Anna L., Div. Chairman Foreign Langs., Asbury Coll., Wilmore, Ky.
- Seckerson, Howard Arnold, Prof. and Head Eng Dept., Connecticut State Coll., Storrs, Conn.
- ❖ Secord, Arthur Wellesley, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [203 S. Lincoln Ave.]
- Sedgwick, Ruth, Instr. Rom. Langs., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass
- Seeber, Edward Derbyshire, Assoc. Prof. Rom Langs., Coll. of Charleston, Charleston, S. C.
- Seemann, Eric, Instr. German, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- ❖ Segall, Jacob Bernard, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., St. John's Coll., Annapolis, Md.
- Sehrt, Edward H., Prof. German, George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C. [1844 Columbia Rd. N.W.]
- Seiler, Sister Mary Hilaine, C.D.P., Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Villa Madonna Coll., Covington, Ky. [St. Anne Convent, Melbourne]
- Seitz, Robert Wilcox, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [1166 Delaware Ave.]
- Seiver, George Otto, Asst. Prof. French, Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa
- Sellards, John Armstrong, Asst. Prof. Romanic Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 112]
- Selmer, Carl, Asst. Prof. German, Hunter Coll., 68th St. and Park Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Senecal, (Rev.) Lucien J., O.S.B., Prof. French, St. Benedict's Coll., Atchison, Kan.
- Senn, Alfred, Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [1522 Chandler St.]
- Sensabaugh, George Frank, Instr. Eng., Stanford Univ., Calif. [Box 876]
- Sérafon, Amélie Catherine, Prof. French, Milwaukee-Downer Coll., Milwaukee, Wis.
- Serjeantson, Mary Sydney, Reader in Eng. Lang. in the Univ. of London, Westfield Coll., London, N.W.3, England
- Seronde, Joseph, Chairman French Dept. and Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lit., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Setchanove, Léonie Jeanne, Head Rom. Lang. Dept., Thiel Coll., Greenville, Pa.
- Sethur, Frederick S., Instr. German, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [105 Haven Ave.]
- Severs, Jonathan Burke, Asst. Prof. Eng., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [717 Seventh Ave.]
- Sewall, Richard Benson, Instr. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [452 Yale Sta.]
- Sexton, Meta Maria, Cataloger in charge Cavagna Collection, Univ. of Ill., Urbana, Ill. [112 W. Hill St., Champaign]
- Seymour, Mabel, c/o Miss Elizabeth Forgeus, Sterling School of Law, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn.
- Shaaber, Matthias A., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [Bennett Hall]
- Shackford, Martha Hale, Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [7 Midland Rd.]
- Shaddock, Ada Jennings, Beaumont, Tex. [2195 Calder]
- ❖ Shafer, Robert, Prof. Lit. and Fellow Grad Sch., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio
- Shane, Milton Lanning, Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., George Peabody Coll. for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn.
- Shanks, Elsie, Instr. Eng., Carleton Coll., Northfield, Minn. [22 Judson St., Albany, N. Y.]
- Shannon, Edgar Finley, Prof. Eng., Washington and Lee Univ., Lexington, Va.
- Shannon, George Pope, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Alabama, University, Ala.
- Sharp, Robert Lathrop, Instr. Eng., Rensselaer Polytechnic Inst., Troy, N. Y.
- Sharp, Stanley L., Instr. Germ. Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif.
- Sharpe, Robert Boies, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [321 McCauley St.]
- Shaver, Chester Linn, Instr. Eng., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [111 Forest St.]
- Shaw, Esther Elizabeth, Prof. Eng., Hood Coll., Frederick, Md.
- Shaw, Harry L., Jr., Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Shaw, Helen Arnot, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa. [Oxford, Pa.]
- Shaw, James Eustace, Prof. Italian and Spanish, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont. [75 Walmer Rd.]
- Shearer, James Francis, Instr. Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [7 Greenview Ave.]

- Shears, Lambert Amour, Instr. German, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [College Sta., Box 262]
- Shedd, Karl Eastman, Prof. Rom. Langs., Mary Baldwin Coll., Staunton, Va. [20 N. Market St.]
- Shelley, Philip Allison, Instr. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [11 Linnacott St.]
- Shelly, Percy Van Dyke, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [College Hall]
- Shelton, Whitford H., Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa.
- Shepard, Ernest Sewall, Asst. Prof. Eng., George Washington Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Shepard, Grace Florence, Prof. Eng., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Shepard, Odell, Prof. Eng., Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn. [69 Vernon St.]
- ❖ Shepard, William Pierce, Prof. Rom. Langs., Hamilton Coll., Clinton, N. Y.
- Shepperson, Archibald Bolling, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va.
- ❖ Sherburn, George, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Sherover, Max, Director, Linguaphone Inst., Rockefeller Center, New York, N. Y.
- Sherwin, Proctor Fenn, Prof. Eng., Knox Coll., Galesburg, Ill.
- Shewmake, Edwin Francis, Alumni Prof. Eng. and Chairman of Dept., Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C. [Box 504]
- Shield, George W. II., Instr. For. Langs., Los Angeles City Schs., Los Angeles, Calif. [1537 W. Forty-sixth St.]
- Shields, Archibald Kenneth, Editorial Board, Mod. Lang. Dept., Henry Holt and Co., 1 Park Ave., New York, N. Y.
- de Shields, Laura Belle, 121 Arlington Ave., Greenville, S. C.
- Shine, Hill, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Maryville Coll., Maryville, Tenn. [Route 4]
- Shipley, Frederick Cary, Tutor Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [500 W. 140th St.]
- Shipley, Joseph T., Asst. Prof. Eng. and Sec'y. of Faculty, Yeshiva Coll., New York, N. Y. [200 6th Ave.]
- Shipman, Jennie S., Teacher French, Crane Junior Coll., Chicago, Ill. [5807 Dorchester Ave.]
- Shippin, Eliza Pearl, Instr. Eng., Miner Teachers Coll., Washington, D. C. [1120 Columbia Rd. N.W.]
- Shoemaker, William Hutchinson, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [11 Greenview Ave.]
- Short, Raymond W., Instr. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [3 Reservoir Ave.]
- Shumaker, Eric L., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Denison Univ., Granville, Ohio
- Shumaker, Lawrence Kenneth, Asst. Prof. Eng. and Supervisor of Eng. Bureau, Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore. [5 McClure Hall]
- ❖ Shumway, Daniel Bussier, Prof. German Phil., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa.
- Sibley, Robert Pelton, Prof. Eng., Asst. Dean and Sec'y., Coll. of Arts and Sciences, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Sicre, Annette, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., North Central Coll., Naperville, Ill. [141 N. Brainard St.]
- Silber, Gordon Rutledge, Instr. Rom. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [8 Dickinson St.]
- Silin, Charles Intervale, Assoc. Prof. French, Tulane Univ., New Orleans, La.
- Silverstein, Theodore, Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [11 Everett St.]
- Silz, Walter, Asst. Prof. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [33 Pinehurst Rd., Belmont]
- Simmons, Ernest Joseph, Instr. and Tutor Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Leverett House, K-32]
- Simmons, Lucretia Van Tassel, Head German Dept., Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [409 Allen St.]
- ❖ Simonds, William Edward, Ithaca, N. Y. [210 Mitchell St.]
- Simpson, Georgiana Rose, Assoc. Prof. German, Howard Univ., Washington, D. C. [328 9th St. S.E.]
- Simpson, Lurline V., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Simpson, Milton, Prof. Eng., Kalamazoo Coll., Kalamazoo, Mich.
- Sinclair, Gregg M., Assoc. Prof. Eng.; Director Oriental Inst., Univ. of Hawaii, Honolulu, Hawaii
- Sinclair, Robert B., Asst. Prof. Eng., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [121 E. High St.]
- Sine, Edward W., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [Crosby Hall]
- Siraguddin, Prof., Roselands, Rashid Rd., Lahore, India.
- Sirich, Edward Hinman, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn.

- Sisson, Louis Eugene, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1236 Louisiana St.]
- Sisson, Sarah T., Asst. Prof. Eng., Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind. [1805 Talbott St.]
- Sixbey, George Lawton, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md.
- Skidmore, Mark, Prof. Rom. Langs., Colorado Coll., Colorado Springs, Colo. [1109 Wood Ave.]
- Skinner, Laurence Hervey, Assoc. Prof. Romanic Langs., Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio [111 E. Walnut St.]
- Skinner, Prescott Orde, Prof. Rom. Langs., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Slater, John Rothwell, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Sloane, William, Instr. Eng., St. Francis Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [456 Riverside Dr., N. Y. C.]
- Sloat, William Eugene, Prof. Eng., Central Y. M. C. A., Coll. of Arts and Sciences, Chicago, Ill. [5228 Woodlawn Ave.]
- Small, B. Mac, Asst. Prof. Eng., Northern Illinois State Teachers Coll., De Kalb, Ill.
- Small, George William, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me.
- Small, Miriam Rossiter, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Wells Coll., Aurora-on-Cayuga, N. Y.
- ❖ Small, Samuel Asa, Prof. Eng., Houghton Coll., Houghton, N. Y.
- Smalley, Welcome Talmage, Prof. Eng., Mercer Univ., Macon, Ga.
- Smart, George Kenneth, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Alabama, Univ., Ala.
- Smart, Walter Kay, Prof. Eng., Sch. of Commerce, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [721 Foster St.]
- ❖ Smead, Jane Van Ness, Temple Univ., Phila., Pa.
- Smith, Alpheus, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2503 Payne St.]
- Smith, Charles G., Prof. Eng., John B. Stetson Univ., DeLand, Fla.
- Smith, (Mrs.) Cornelia Marschall, Prof. Biology, John B. Stetson Univ., DeLand, Fla.
- Smith, C. Willard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Bucknell Univ., Lewisburg, Pa. [312 St. George St.]
- ❖ Smith, Dane Farnsworth, Eng. Dept., Univ. of New Mexico, Albuquerque, N. M.
- Smith, Dorothy B., Instr. Eng., Carroll Coll., Waukesha, Wis. [317 N. Hartwell Ave.]
- Smith, Florence Alice, Lecturer Eng., Victoria Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont., Canada
- ❖ Smith, Frank Chifton, [Address Unknown]
- Smith, Frederick Danesbury, Prof. and Head Dept. of Comparative Lit., Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex. [Box 495]
- Smith, Fred Manning, Assoc. Prof. Eng., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va.
- Smith, Garland Garvey, Asst. Prof. Eng., Emory Univ., Ga. [Box 764]
- Smith, George Wellington, Head Eng. Dept., Peru State Teachers Coll., Peru, Neb.
- Smith, Gordon Winslow, Instr. Mod. Langs., Colby Coll., Waterville, Me. [25 Winter St.]
- Smith, Hallett D., Instr. Eng., Williams Coll., Williamstown, Mass.
- Smith, Henry, Asst. Prof. Eng., Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex.
- Smith, Horatio Elwin, Prof. French, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [184 University Ave.]
- ❖ Smith, Hugh Allison, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [15 Prospect Ave.]
- Smith, J. Allan, Grad. Stu., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [502 W. Illinois St.]
- Smith, John Harrington, Asst. Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [530 E. Essex, Kirkwood]
- Smith, Leon Perdue, Jr., Head Dept. Rom. Langs., Washington and Lee Univ., Lexington, Va. [513 Jackson Ave.]
- Smith, Madeline M., Instr. French, Southern Ill. State Normal Univ., 718 S. Normal Ave., Carbondale, Ill.
- ❖ Smith, Mahlon Ellwood, Dean Lower Div. and Prof. Eng., Oregon State System of Higher Education [2745 Arnold Way Corvallis, Ore.]
- Smith, Margaret Florence Saumarez, Dover, Eng. [Waldershare Rectory]
- Smith, M. Ruth, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., Coll. of the Pacific, Stockton, Calif. [153 Knowles Way]
- Smith, Maxwell A., Dean and Prof. French, Univ. of Chattanooga, Chattanooga, Tenn.
- Smith, May B., Prof. Eng., Berea Coll., Berea, Ky.
- Smith, Rebecca Washington, Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Texas Christian Univ., Fort Worth, Tex.
- Smith, Reed, Dean Grad. School, Univ. of South Carolina, Columbia, S. C. [812 Sumter St.]

- Smith, Robert Lewis, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Maryville Coll., Maryville, Tenn. [700 Court St.]
- Smith, Robert Metcalf, Head Eng. Dept., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa.
- Smith, Roland Mitchell, Asst. Prof. Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [Box 463, Wesleyan Sta.]
- Smith, Ruby C., Prof. and Director For. Langs., North Texas State Teachers Coll., Denton, Tex. [Teachers Coll. Sta.]
- Smith, Stanley Astredo, Prof. Rom. Langs., Stanford Univ., Calif. [2 Finger Ave., Redwood City]
- Smith, William Bradford, Lec. Eng. Lit., Imperial Univ.; Instr. Eng. Lit., St. Paul's Univ., Ikebukuro, Tokyo, Japan.
- Smith, Winifred, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Smithy, Estelle, Prof. Mod. Langs., State Teachers Coll., Farmville, Va. [704 High St.]
- Smock, George Edward, Prof. Eng., South Dakota State Coll., Brookings, S. D.
- Smyser, Hamilton Martin, Asst. Prof. Eng., Connecticut Coll., New London, Conn. [115 Mohegan Ave.]
- Snively, Guy Everett, President and Prof. Art History, Birmingham-Southern Coll., Birmingham, Ala.
- Snow, Royall H., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio
- Snow, Wilbert, Prof. Eng., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [Wesleyan Sta.]
- Snuggs, Henry Lawrence, Head Eng. Dept., Elon College, N. C. [Box 243]
- Snyder, Alice Dorothea, Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Snyder, Edward Douglas, Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa.
- Snyder, Franklyn Bliss, Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1624 Ashland Ave.]
- Sokol, Anthony E., Asst. Prof. German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [520 Princeton St., Palo Alto, Sta. A]
- Solalinde, Antonio Garcia, Prof. Spanish and Portuguese, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Solano, L. F., Faculty Instr. Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [377 Washington St., Somerville]
- Solomon, Alfred, Asst. Prof. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Solum, Nora O., Assoc. Prof. Eng., St. Olaf Coll., Northfield, Minn.
- Solve, Melvin T., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz. [El Encanto Estates]
- Sommerfeld, Martin, Visiting Prof. German, N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [18 Dobbs Terrace, Scarsdale]
- Sonkin, Robert, Tutor Public Speaking, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [835 Hunts Point Ave., Bronx]
- Soto, Rafael Arcangel, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa. [1621 Millard St.]
- Soubeiran, Madeleine, Assoc. Prof. French, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
- Souers, Philip Webster, Instr. and Tutor Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [10 Mason St.]
- Soule, Harold W., D. C. Heath and Co., 285 Columbus Ave., Boston, Mass.
- South, Helen Pennock, Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [226 E. 12th St.]
- Southworth, James Granville, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Toledo, Toledo, Ohio [2574 Monroe St.]
- Sowers, W. Leigh, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [422 Iowa Ave.]
- Spaeth, J. Duncan, Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Box 132]
- Spagnoli, John J., Instr. Rom. Langs., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Spalding, Mary Doan, Prof. Eng., Harris Teachers Coll., St. Louis, Mo. [3664 Washington Ave.]
- Spanhoofd, Arnold W., Prof. German, Georgetown Univ., Washington, D. C. [1624 Riggs. Pl. N.W.]
- Spann, Memo, Instr. German, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [401 Hillsboro St.]
- Spargo, John W., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Sparks, Don Willoughby, Instr. Eng., Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind. [Men's Union]
- Spaulding, Gordon, Eng. Dept., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [103 Music Building]
- Spaulding, Robert Kilburn, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Speare, Morris Edmund, 9 E. 8th St., New York, N. Y.
- Speckbaugh, (Rev.) Paul F., C.P.P.S., Dean Eng. Dept., St. Joseph's Coll., Collegeville, Ind. [to July 1: Caldwell Hall, Catholic Univ., Washington, D. C.]

- Specking, Inez, Prof. Eng., Harris Teachers Coll., St. Louis, Mo. [1517 S. Theresa Ave.]
- Spell, Jefferson Rea, Adjunct Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Texas [Box 1698, University Sta.]
- Spencer, Hazelton, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
- Spencer, William Gear, President, Franklin Coll., Franklin, Ind.
- Spens, Janet, Tutor Eng. Lit., Lady Margaret Hall, Oxford, Eng. [5 Lytheld Rd.]
- Sperber, Hans, Lect. German, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio.
- Spiecker, Frank, Asst. Prof. German, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1505½ Oak Ave.]
- Spiers, Alexander Guy Hollborn, Assoc. Prof. French, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Spiker, Claude Carl, Prof. French and Spanish, West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [104 Jackson Ave.]
- Spiller, Robert Ernest, Prof. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [6 Whittier Pl.]
- ❖ Spingarn, J. E., Troutbeck, America [Dutchess Co.], N. Y.
- Spooner, Edwin Victor, Instr. French, Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.
- Spotts, Carl Brooks, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., State Teachers Coll., Slippery Rock, Pa.
- Spragin, Lida A., Asst. Prof. Eng., Texas Christian Univ., Fort Worth, Tex. [2916 Princeton]
- Sprague, Arthur Colby, Asst. Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [2 Craigie St.]
- Sprau, George, Prof. Eng., Western State Teachers Coll., Kalamazoo, Mich. [949 Walwood Pl.]
- Spring, Gerald M., Instr. German, Univ. of California at Los Angeles, Calif. [10562 Kinnard Ave., W. Los Angeles]
- Springer, Otto, Head German Dept., Wheaton Coll., Norton, Mass.
- Sproull, Grace Mildred, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5848 University Ave.]
- Spurlin, Paul Merrill, Grad. Stu. and Junior Instr. French, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [Box 1037]
- Stabler, Lewis Bellinger, Head For. Lang. Dept., Bessie Tift Coll., Forsyth, Ga.
- Stack, Mary, Instr. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., 66 Court St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [1736 East 28 St.]
- Stafford, Loina Lavery, American Consulate, Cheibourg, France.
- ❖ Stair, Bird, Assoc. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Staley, Ethel M., Head French Dept., State Teachers Coll., West Chester, Pa. [26 W. Union St.]
- Staley, Ruth, Prof. German, Piedmont Coll., Demorest, Ga.
- Staley, Wren, Instr. Eng., National Coll. of Education, Evanston, Ill. [2525 Lincoln St.]
- Stallbaumer, (Rev.) Virgil R., Instr. Eng., St. Benedict's Prep Sch., Newark, N. J. [528 High St.]
- Stallknecht, Newton Phelps, Asst. Prof. Philosophy, Bowdoin Coll., Brunswick, Me. [1 Maple St.]
- Stanger, Christian G., Prof. French, Elmhurst Coll., Elmhurst, Ill. [232 Alexander Blvd.]
- Stanley, Helen Abigail, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [3576 Zumstein Ave., Hyde Park, Cincinnati]
- Stanley, Oma, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y. [Box 116]
- Stanton, Amida, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [2045 Learned Ave.]
- Stanton, Roger, Asst. Prof. Eng., California Inst. of Technology, Pasadena, Calif.
- Stapleton, Ada Bell, Prof. Eng. Lit., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- ❖ Starck, Taylor, Assoc. Prof. German, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [32 Bowdoin St.]
- Starnes, De Witt Talmage, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- ❖ Stathers, Madison, Prof. Rom. Langs., West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [288 Grand St.]
- Stauf, Zerline E., Instr. German, Coll. of Notre Dame of Maryland, Baltimore, Md. [North Charles St.]
- Stauffer, Donald Alfred, Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [302 Henry Hall]
- Stanton, Henry C. F., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Notre Dame, Notre Dame, Ind.
- Stauss, Hildegard R., Instr. German, Municipal Univ. of Omaha, Omaha, Neb.
- Steadman, John Marcellus, Jr., Prof. Eng., Emory University, Ga.

- Stearns, Bertha Monica, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Hallowell House]
- Stearns, Caroline, Instr. Eng., Flint Junior Coll., Flint, Mich.
- Stearns, Marshall Winslow, Grad. Stu. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [6 Lynwood Pl.]
- Stebbins, Henry Martin, Instr. Eng., Bethel Coll., McKenzie, Tenn.
- Steckelberg, Mathilde, Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb.
- Steckman, Lillian L., Prof. Eng., McKendree Coll., Lebanon, Ill.
- Steele, Mary Susan, Prof. Eng., Judson Coll., Marion, Ala. [On leave Wagram, N. C.]
- Steeves, Harrison Ross, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Stein, Elizabeth Paula, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., Bedford Park Blvd. and Navy Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
- Stein, Harold, Field Analyst, Federal Emergency Relief Administration, Washington, D. C. [1813 F St N.W.]
- Steiner, Arpad, Asst. Prof. German, Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [267 E. 198 St., Bronx]
- Steinhauer, Harry, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Saskatchewan, Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada
- Steinke, Christoph Friedrich, Prof. Mod. Langs., Westminster Coll., Fulton, Mo.
- Steitz, August, Assoc. Prof. German, N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [51 Lawrence Ave., West Orange, N. J.]
- Stelter, Benjamin F., Prof. Eng. and Head Dept., Occidental Coll., Los Angeles, Calif. [2042 Escarpa Dr.]
- ❖ Stempel, Guido Hermann, Prof. and Head Dept. of Comparative Philology, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [723 S. Park Ave.]
- Stenberg, Theodore, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
- Stengel, Therese K., Asst. Prof. Germanic Langs., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- ❖ Stepanek, Orin, Assoc. Prof. Eng. and Slavonic Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [Station A]
- Stephens, George Robert, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Dickinson Coll., Carlisle, Pa. [916 S. St. Bernard St., West Philadelphia]
- Stern, Elizabeth-Vera Loeb, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [140 East 81st St.]
- Stern, Lewis G., Teacher Eng., Frankford H. S., Philadelphia, Pa. [Somerton, Pa.]
- Stefkewicz, Joseph, Instr. Ukrainian, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Stevens, Alice Porter, Assoc. Prof. Emeritus German, Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass.
- Stevens, Caroline Harris, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [Vassar Club, 34 E. 50th St.]
- Stevens, Charles H., Jr., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- ❖ Stevens, David Harrison, Director for the Humanities, Rockefeller Foundation, 49 W. 49th St., New York, N. Y. [160 N. Mountain Ave., Montclair, N. J.]
- Stevens, Ernest Nichols, Asst. to Editor-in-Chief, Ginn & Co., 15 Ashburton Pl., Boston, Mass.
- Stevens, Henry Harmon, Watertown, N. Y. [249 South Massey St.]
- Stevenson, A. Lionel, Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., Tempe, Ariz. [939 Van Ness Ave.]
- Stevenson, Hazel A., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Florida State Coll. for Women, Tallahassee, Fla. [641 West Pensacola St.]
- Stevenson, Mary Lou, Supervisor Research, Public Instruction Dept., Harrisburg, Pa. [378 Education Bldg.]
- Stevenson, Samuel Whitefield, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Richmond, Va. [Box 163]
- Stevenson, Stella Johnson, Prof. French, Lebanon Valley Coll., Annville, Pa.
- Stewart, Allegra, Eng. Dept., Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind. [2621 College Ave.]
- Stewart, George R., Jr., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [115 Wheeler Hall]
- Stewart, Mary-Grace, 826 S. Forty-eighth St., Philadelphia, Pa.
- ❖ Stewart, Morton Collins, Assoc. Prof. German, Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y.
- Stewart, Randall, Prof. Eng., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn. [2305 Elliston Pl.]
- Stewart, Walter Powell, Jr., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [3003 Speedway]
- Stewart, William Kilborne, Prof. Comparative Lit., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H.
- Stiefel, Walter E., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn. [1640 Highland Ave.]
- Stillman, E. Clark, C.R.B. Educational Foundation Fellow, Brussels, Belgium [4876 Rustic Bridge Rd., Columbus, Ohio]

- Stine, Harold S., Asst Prof Eng., Univ of Pennsylvania, Phila, Pa [242 E Durham St]
- Stirling, Brents, Assoc Eng, Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Stokes, James Paul, Asst Prof Eng, Marshall Coll, Huntington, W Va
- Stochholm, Johanne M., Assoc. Prof Eng, Sweet Briar Coll, Sweet Briar, Va
- Stoddard, Paul Wakelee, New Haven, Conn [93 Henry St]
- Stoecklein, George A, Instr German, Univ of Pennsylvania, Phila, Pa [459 Leveing Mill Rd, Cynwyd]
- Stoker, (Mis) Ray Cooke, Prof. Eng, North Texas State Teachers Coll, Denton, Tex [210 Sawyer Ave]
- Stokes, George Stewart, Asst Instl Eng, Univ of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa [441 S 41th St]
- Stone, Emma Louise, Instr Mod Langs, Bethany Coll, Bethany, W Va
- Stone, George Winchester, Jr, Instr Eng, George Washington Univ, Washington, D C
- Storer, Mary Elizabeth, Prof French, Beloit Coll, Beloit, Wis [836 College St]
- Storer, Walter Henry, Asst. Prof Rom, Langs, Vanderbilt Univ, Nashville, Tenn [425 Y M C A, Grad School]
- ❖ Storn, Martin W, Prof Rom Langs, Southwestern Coll, Memphis, Tenn
- Story, Irving Chellis, Prof and Head Eng Dept, Central Coll, Fayette, Mo
- Stout, George Dumas, Asst Prof Eng, Washington Univ, St Louis, Mo
- Stovall, Floyd, Prof Eng., North Texas State Teachers Coll., Denton, Tex.
- Strahan, Mary, Asst Prof. Rom Langs, Univ. of Georgia, Athens, Ga [53 Prince Place]
- Strain, Mary Adelia, Prof. Eng., Tennessee Coll, Murfreesboro, Tenn
- Strathmann, Ernest Albert, Asst Prof. Eng., Pomona Coll., Claremont, Calif.
- Strausbaugh, John Anthony, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Emory Univ., Ga.
- ❖ Strauss, Louis A., Prof Eng., Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [1601 Cambridge Rd.]
- Streeter, Harold Wade, Asst. Prof Mod. Langs., Lafayette Coll, Easton, Pa. [620 Burke St]
- Streit, Olive Claire, Instr. French, Brooklyn Friends School, 112 Schermerhorn St., Brooklyn, N. Y. [418 W. 118 St., Apt. 31, N Y.C.]
- Strelsky, Nikander, Instr Russian, Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Stroebe, Lihan L., Prof. German, Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Strong, Everett Fisk, Assoc. Prof Mod. Langs, Colby Coll, Waterville, Me. [85 Silver St]
- Strong, Mary Louise, Asst. Prof. Mod Langs, Illinois Coll, Jacksonville, Ill [1228 W College Ave]
- Strothmann, Friedrich Wilhelm, Asst Prof. German, Stanford Univ., Calif. [246 Palo Alto Ave, Palo Alto]
- Stroup, Thomas Biadley, Prof. and Head Eng Dept, South Georgia Teachers Coll, Collegeboro, Ga [Statesboro, Ga]
- Strout, Alan Lang, Prof. Eng, Texas Tech Coll, Lubbock, Tex. [2515 21st St]
- Struble, George Goodell, Assoc. Prof Eng, Lebanon Valley Coll, Annville, Pa [Route 4, Lebanon]
- Struble, Mildred C, Prof Comp. Lit, Univ of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Stunk, William, Prof. Eng., Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [107 Lake St]
- Stuart, Donald Clive, Prof. Dramatic Lit, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [Western Way]
- Stuff, Frederick Ames, Prof. Eng, Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [216A Andrews Hall, Sta A]
- Stuff, Majorie Ann, Grad. Stu Eng., Univ of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [434 S 28th St, Lincoln, Neb.]
- Stumberg, Chas. Henry, Prof. German, Louisiana State Univ, Baton Rouge, La. [623 Lafayette St]
- Stunz, Arthur N, Instr Eng., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa.
- Sturdevant, Winifred, Lecturer French, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Sturgis, Cony, Prof. and Head Spanish Dept., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [Box 6]
- Sturmer, Anna Marie, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Kansas State Agricultural Coll., Manhattan, Kan.
- Sturtevant, Albert Morey, Prof. Germ. Langs. and Lits., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan [924 Louisiana St.]
- Sturtevant, Ethel G, Asst. Prof. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.

- Sulkin, George Richard, Room 103, Graduate Club, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Sullivan, (Rev.) Paul David, S. J., Prof. Eng Lit and Director Grad. Div., Univ. of Detroit, Detroit, Mich.
- Sullivan, (Rev.) Philip V., S. J., Instr. French, Jesuit Novitiate, Wernersville, Pa.
- Summerell, Jane, Assoc. Prof. Eng., N. C. Coll for Women, Greensboro, N. C.
- Sundheim, Borghild K., Asst. Prof. French, Macalester Coll., St. Paul, Minn. [3641 Bloomington Ave, Minneapolis]
- Suriano, Josephine, Instr. Eng., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [1525 W 7th St., Brooklyn]
- Sutcliffe, Emerson Grant, Prof. Eng., Purdue Univ., Lafayette, Ind.
- Sutton, (Mrs.) Annemarie von Bibra, Instr. Mod. For. Langs., Colorado Coll., Colorado Springs, Colo.
- Swain, Barbara, Asst. Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Swain, James O., Instr. French, Michigan State Coll., East Lansing, Mich.
- Swanson, Adolph Benjamin, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [Box 1899, University Sta]
- Swanson, Carl Alvin, Adjunct Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Texas [1734 University Sta]
- Swartley, Stanley S., Prof. Eng., Lang., Allegheny Coll., Meadville, Pa. [656 William St.]
- Swayne, Mattie, Assoc. Prof. Eng., West Texas State Teachers Coll., Canyon, Tex. [Box 204]
- Swedenberg, H. T., Jr., Prof. Eng., Presbyterian Coll., Clinton, S. C.
- Swenarton, Jane J., Asst. Prof. Eng., Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y. [153 College Ave]
- Switzer, Rebecca, Director For. Lang. Dept., Texas State Coll. for Women, Denton, Tex.
- Syford, Constance Miriam, Grad. Stu. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [700 N. 16th St., Lincoln, Neb]
- Sylvester, Wilfred B., Harvard Grad. Sch., Cambridge Mass. [135 High St., Reading]
- Sypherd, Wilbur Owen, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Delaware, Newark, Del.
- Syring, Rudolf Albert, Asst. Prof. German, Western Coll., Oxford, O. [22 E. Collins St.]
- Syvret, Clara Maud, Prof. French, Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Taaffe, Thomas Gaffney, Asst. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y. [68 Highland Ave., Yonkers]
- Tabor, Alice Post, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1194 Cragmont Ave]
- Taensch, Henry William, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Flora Stone Mather Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2291 Murray Hill Rd]
- Taft, Arthur Irving, Prof. Eng., Oberlin Coll., Oberlin, Ohio [250 Forest St]
- Taft, Kendall B., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Central Y.M.C.A. Coll., Chicago, Ill [836 E. 56th St]
- Taintor, Mary B., Assoc. Prof. French, Dickinson Coll., Carlisle, Pa. [Box 125]
- Taintor, S. Augusta, Ext. Dept., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [414 W. 121 St]
- Talamon, René, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1805 Hermitage Rd]
- Talmage, Irma, Asst. Prof. Eng., Cleveland Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [2881 Euclid Hgts. Blvd]
- Tamborra, Joseph, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of N. D., Grand Forks, N. D. [Univ. Sta]
- Tamin, Marion, Instr. French, Western State Teachers Coll., Kalamazoo, Mich.
- Tannenbaum, Samuel A., New York, N. Y. [808 West End Ave]
- Tanner, Rollin H., Prof. Education, For. Langs. and Lits., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y. [12 Pilgrim Ave., Tuckahoe, N. Y.]
- Tarr, F. Courtney, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [1 College Rd.]
- ❖ Tatlock, John Strong Perry, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [1994 San Antonio Ave]
- ❖ Taylor, Archer, Prof. German Lit., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- Taylor, Edward Ayers, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [131 Parrington Hall]
- Taylor, George Coffin, Kenan Prof. Eng., Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [408 E. Rosemary St]
- Taylor, (Mrs.) Irmgard Wirth, Instr. German, Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [519 S. Orange St., Media]
- Taylor, Pauline, Assoc. Prof. French, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New

- York, N. Y. [Butler Hall, Apt. 14B, 400 W 119 St]
- Taylor, Ross McLaury, Asst Prof. Eng., Centre Coll, Danville, Ky. [Faculty Exchange]
- Taylor, Rupert, Assoc Prof. Eng., Clemson Coll, Clemson, S C
- Taylor, Walter Fuller, Head Eng Dept, Mississippi Coll, Clinton, Miss.
- Taylor, Warner, Prof Eng, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis [619 N Frances St]
- Teague, Beatrice M., Head Dept Rom. Langs, MacMurray Coll., Jacksonville, Ill
- Teeter, Louis Blain, Grad Stu Eng Johns Hopkins Univ, Baltimore, Md. [317 W. Lorraine Ave]
- Teller, Wm Adams, Prof and Head Eng Dept, Battle Creek Coll, Battle Creek, Mich [Kellogg Hall]
- Templeman, William Darby, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1108 W Oregon St]
- Tenney, Edward Andrews, Instr. Eng, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [523 East State St]
- Terry, John Skally, Instr Eng, Washington Sq Coll, N Y. U., New York, N. Y [Rm 737, East Bldg]
- Terry, Selina M., Prof. Eng, Iowa State Teachers Coll, Cedar Falls, Iowa [1213 W. 23rd St]
- ❖ Thaler, Alwin, Prof. Eng, Univ of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn [905 Mountcastle St]
- Thalmann, Marianne, Assoc. Prof German, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Shafer Hall]
- Tharp, James Burton, Assoc. Prof. Teaching of Foreign Langs, Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [117 Educational Bldg.]
- Thaxton, James Ralph, Assoc. Prof Rom Langs, Univ. of Georgia, Athens, Ga [182 Catawba Ave]
- ❖ Thayer, Mary Rebecca, Prof. Eng., Coll. of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio [647 Beall Ave.]
- Thénaud, Franc Paul Gaston, Instr Rom Langs., Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [Marston Hall]
- Theobald, Otilie, Columbus, Ohio [388 Fairwood Ave.]
- Thiele, Friedrich, Instr. German, The City Coll., New York, N. Y. [328 Sterling Pl., Brooklyn]
- ❖ Thieme, Hugo Paul, Prof. French, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [3 Geddes Heights]
- Thier, (Rev.) A. R, Instr German, Columbia Coll, Dubuque, Iowa
- Thoma, Henry Francis, Instr Eng., Washington Univ, St Louis, Mo
- Thomas, C R Walther, Dept Langs, U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md.
- Thomas, Charles Wright, Asst Prof Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis
- Thomas, Eleanor Walter, Asst Prof. Eng, Western Reserve Univ, Cleveland, Ohio [11435 Euclid Ave.]
- Thomas, Mary Pettus, Head French Dept, State Teachers Coll, Memphis, Tenn. [21 S Rembert]
- ❖ Thomas, Roger, Instr. Eng, Boston Univ., Coll of Liberal Arts, Boston, Mass [32 Dana St, Cambridge]
- Thomas, William Andrews, Instr. Eng, Univ of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa [209 S 42nd St]
- Thompson, Albert Wilder, Asst. Prof. Foreign Langs, State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash [1905 "B" St]
- Thompson, Doris Stevens, (Mrs G. W), Asst Prof Eng, Lake Erie Coll, Painesville, Ohio [Aurora, N Y]
- ❖ Thompson, Elbert N S, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [819 N. Linn St]
- Thompson, Francis John, Tutor Public Speaking, The City Coll, New York, N. Y. [105-14 Farmers Ave., Hollis, L. I, N Y.]
- Thompson, Frank T., Head Eng. Dept, Woman's Coll of Alabama, Montgomery, Ala.
- Thompson, Franklin McCown, Pernambuco, Brazil [Garanhuns]
- ❖ Thompson, Harold W., Prof. Eng, N. Y. State Coll for Teachers, Albany, N. Y.
- Thompson, Karl Owen, Prof. Eng, Case Sch Applied Science, Cleveland, Ohio.
- Thompson, Paul Vern, Instr. Eng, Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo [1080 11th St]
- Thompson, Stith, Prof Eng., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- Thornton, Hermann H., Assoc. Prof French and Italian, Oberlin Coll, Oberlin, Ohio [294 Forest St]
- Thornton, Richard H., New York, N Y. [c/o Henry Holt & Co., 1 Park Ave]
- Thorp, Willard, Asst. Prof. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [142 Nassau St.]
- Thorpe, Clarence De Witt, Prof Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [2410 Vinewood Blvd.]
- ❖ Thrall, Miriam Mulford, 234 Allen Lane, Mt. Airy, Phila., Pa.

- Thrall, William Flint, Prof. Eng., Univ of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [P. O. Box 547]
- Thrift, Inez, Assoc Prof Eng., Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz [302 N Vine Ave]
- Throop, George Reeves, Chancellor, Washington Univ, St. Louis, Mo
- ❖ Thurber, Charles H., Boston, Mass [Gunn Co., 15 Ashburton Pl]
- Tibbals, Katharine M. W. A., Milton, Ulster County, N. Y.
- Tilghman, Cornelius A., Asst Prof. Eng., Geneva Coll., Beaver Falls, Pa
- Tiller, Fritz, Instr German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [2689 Yale Sta]
- Tillett, Nettie S., Assoc. Prof Eng., N. C. Coll. for Women, Greensboro, N. C.
- ❖ Tilley, Morris Palmer, Prof Eng., Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [2213 Angel Hall]
- Tilley, Winthrop, Assoc. Prof Eng., Connecticut State Coll., Storrs, Conn.
- Tilton, E. Katherine, 28 Waban Ave., Waban, Mass.
- Tindall, William York, Instr. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [606 Philosophy Hall]
- Tinker, Chauncey B., Sterling Prof Eng Lit., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn [1293 Davenport Coll]
- Tisdell, Frederick Monroe, Prof Eng and Dean Coll of Arts and Science, Univ of Missouri, Columbia, Mo [1316 Wilson Ave]
- Tobin, James E., Prof Eng., Fordham Univ., Grad. School, New York, N. Y. [633 Highland Ave., Newark, N. J.]
- ❖ Todd, Theodore Walter, Palo Alto, Calif [R.F.D. No 1]
- Toglia, Vito Giovanni, Assoc. Prof Italian and Spanish, Coll. of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va. [158 Lockwood Ave., New Rochelle, N. Y.]
- Tombaugh, John Richard, Head Eng Dept., The Manlius Sch., Manlius, N. Y.
- Toohy, John M., Assoc Prof. Rom. Langs., Lehigh Univ., Bethlehem, Pa.
- Torrens, Robert Warren, Asst Prof. Rom. Langs., Hobart Coll., Geneva, N. Y. [10 College Ave]
- Torrey, Norman Lewis, Prof. French, Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [521 Elm Ave.]
- Toven, Joseph Richard, Asst Prof Spanish, Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y. [71 Vernon Pl., Mt. Vernon]
- Towle, Carroll Sherburne, Asst Prof Eng., Univ of New Hampshire, Durham, N. H.
- Towles, Oliver, Prof. and Chairman French Dept., Washington Square Coll., N. Y. Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Towne, Laura, Asst Prof. Mod Langs., Iowa State Coll., Ames, Iowa
- Trager, George L., Prof. Foreign Langs., Adams State Teachers Coll., Alamosa, Colo
- Tramel, Agnes Katherine, Assoc Prof. Eng., Texas State Coll for Women, Denton, Tex. [C.I.A. Sta.]
- Trautman, William D., Dean, Adelbert Coll., and Prof German, Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [3327 Dellwood Rd., Cleveland Heights]
- Traver, Hope, Prof. Emeritus Eng., Mills Coll., Calif. [6044 Majestic Ave., Oakland]
- Treanor, Honoria Sapelo, Prof Mod For Langs., Georgia State Woman's Coll., Valdosta, Ga.
- Treille, Marguerite, Head Mod Lang. Dept., Hood Coll., Frederick, Md
- Tremblay, Napoleon J., Asst Prof. French, Univ. of Arizona, Tucson, Ariz.
- ❖ Trent, William Peterfield, Prof Emeritus Eng Lit., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [316 W. 76 St]
- Trethewey, William Hilliard, Prof Rom. Langs., Mount Allison Univ., Sackville, New Brunswick, Canada [Box 634]
- Trevino, Salomon Narciso, Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ of Chicago, Chicago, Ill
- Triess, Elmer William, Chairman Mod. Lang. Dept., Weequahic H. S., Newark, N. J.
- Trotter, Robert Chester, Grad Work, Dept Education, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Spring Lake, Mich.]
- Troyer, Howard William, Instr Eng., Lawrence Coll., Appleton, Wis [Brokaw Hall]
- Trumbauer, Walter Heinrichs Renner, Prof. Dramatic Lit. and Director Coll. Theatre, Alabama Coll., Montevallo, Ala.
- Trunz, Cecilia A., Asst. German, St. Joseph's Coll. for Women, Brooklyn, N. Y.
- ❖ Truscott, Frederick Wilson, Schippensburg, Pa.
- Tucker, (Rev.) Dunstan, O. S. B., Eng Dept., St. John's Univ., Collegeville, Minn.
- Tucker, Samuel Marion, Prof. and Head Dept. Eng., Polytechnic Inst. of Brooklyn, Brooklyn, N. Y. [99 Livingston St.]

- Tucker, Willis Carleton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Marshall Coll., Huntington, W. Va.
- Tuckerman, (Mrs.) Una Venable, c/o L. B. Tuckerman, Cosmos Club, Washington, D. C.
- Tuell, Annie Kimball, Prof. Eng. Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [Clafin Hall]
- ❖ Tufts, James Arthur, Prof. Eng., Phillips Exeter Academy, Exeter, N. H.
- Tull, Clyde, Prof. English Lit., Cornell College, Mt. Vernon, Iowa
- Tupper, Caroline Frances, Assoc. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [1207 W. Oregon St.]
- ❖ Tupper, Frederick, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Vermont, Burlington, Vt.
- ❖ Tupper, James Waddell, Prof. Eng. Lit., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa.
- Turgeon, Frederick King, Asst. Prof. French, Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass. [77 S. Pleasant St.]
- Turk, Laurel Herbert, Asst. Prof. Spanish, De Pauw Univ., Greencastle, Ind.
- ❖ Turk, Milton Haight, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Hobart Coll., Geneva, N. Y.
- ❖ Turner, Albert Morton, Assoc. Prof. Eng. and Comp. Lit., Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me. [86 N. Main St.] [On leave. 42 Kirkland St., Cambridge, Mass.]
- Turner, Alice Lucile, Prof. Eng., East Carolina Teachers Coll., Greenville, N. C.
- Turner, Henry Arlin, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [504 Fountain Terrace]
- Turner, Lorenzo Dow, Prof. Eng., Fisk Univ., Nashville, Tenn.
- Turner, Pattie Mangum, Assoc. Prof. French, Georgia State Coll. for Women, Milledgeville, Ga.
- Turner, Percie Hopkins, (Mrs. A. M.), Lecturer Eng., Univ. of Maine, Orono, Me. [86 N. Main St.]
- Turner, Robert Charles, Prof. Eng., Carroll Coll., Helena, Mont.
- Turner, Robert Elson, French Dept., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [132 E. 61st St.]
- Turrell, Charles Alfred, Prof. Rom. Langs., Oregon Inst. of Tech., Portland, Ore. [8040 N. Chautauqua Blvd.]
- Tuttle, Donald R., Asst. Prof. Eng., Fenn Coll., Cleveland, Ohio [2200 Prospect Ave.]
- ❖ Tuttle, Marion, Rockaway, N. J. [107 Church St.]
- Tuve, Rosemond, London W. C. 1, England [7, Taviton St.]
- Twaddell, William Freeman, Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [Bascom Hall]
- ❖ Tweedie, W. Morley, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Mount Allison Coll., Sackville, N. B.
- Tynan, Joseph L. Assoc. Prof. Eng., The City Coll., New York, N. Y.
- Tyre, Carl Allen, Head Dept. Mod. Langs., New Mexico State Coll. of A. and M. A., Las Cruces, N. M.
- Uhler, John Earle, Prof. Eng., Louisiana State Univ., Baton Rouge, La. [1215 Main St.] (to 5-1-36: Kingscote Apts., Stanford Univ., Calif.)
- Ulmer, Bernhard, Instr. German, Trinity Coll., Hartford, Conn.
- Umbach, Herbert H., Acting Head, Eng. Dept., Valparaiso Univ., Valparaiso, Ind. [507 Freeman St.]
- Umble, John S., Head Dept. Eng., Goshen Coll., Goshen, Ind. [Rural Route 5]
- Umphrey, George Wallace, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- ❖ Underwood, Charles Marshall, Cambridge, Mass. [152 Upland Rd.]
- Underwood, (Mrs.) Edna Worthley, Author and Translator, New York, N. Y. [Box 54, Hamilton Grange Sta.]
- Upham, Alfred Horatio, President, Miami Univ., Oxford, Ohio.
- Uppvall, Axel Johan, Prof. Scandinavian Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [216 S. 43 St.]
- Upton, Dorothy W., Asst. Prof. Eng., Skidmore Coll., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
- Ustick, Wm. Lee, 113 Lakeview Ave., Cambridge, Mass.
- ❖ Utter, Robert Palfrey, Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2440 Hillside Ave.]
- Vacquier, Tatiana Isnard, (Mme.), Prof. and Head French Dept., Nazareth Coll., 851 S. Fourth Ave., Louisville, Ky.
- Vail, Curtis C. D., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Buffalo, Buffalo, N. Y. [111 Capen Blvd.]
- Vaka, Paul Franklin, Master German, Choate Sch., Wallingford, Conn.
- Valente, John, Asst. Prof. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [552 W. 114 St., N.Y.C.]
- Vance, Josiah Gaddis, Columbus, Ohio [1462 Summit St.]

- Vanden Bosch, Jacob G., Prof. Eng., Calvin Coll., Grand Rapids, Mich. [857 Bates St. S E.]
- Vandiver, Edward Pinckney, Jr., Head Eng. Dept., Mary Baldwin Coll., Staunton, Va.
- Van Allen, George Raymond, 207 E. 19th St., New York, N. Y.
- Van Doren, Mark, Asst. Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Hamilton Hall]
- Van Horne, Edward C., Instr. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [4841 Cass Ave.]
- ❖ Van Horne, John, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [713 Pennsylvania Ave.]
- Van Kuren, Ernest C., Prof. Eng., Evansville Coll., Evansville, Ind.
- Van Lennep, William, Theatre Collection, Harvard Coll. Lib., Cambridge, Mass.
- Van Santvoord, George, Headmaster, Hotchkiss Sch., Lakeville, Conn.
- Varney, John, Instr. Eng., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y.
- Vaughan, Ethel, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1311 Chicago Ave.]
- Vaughan, Herbert Hunter, Prof. Italian, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif.
- Velten, Harry de Veltheim, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., State Coll. of Washington, Pullman, Wash.
- Verspreet, Rosa, Head French Dept., Mount St. Joseph Coll., Chestnut Hill, Phila., Pa.
- Veysey, Constance Southard, Instr. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [501 W. 113 St.]
- Vezzetti, Anacleto Candida, Assoc. Prof. Italian, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Haven House]
- Vial, Fernand, Assoc. Prof. French, Fordham Univ. Grad. School, 233 Broadway, New York, N. Y.
- Vicentia, Sister M., O.P., St. Mary of the Springs Coll., East Columbus, Ohio.
- Vidon-Varney, Jeanne, Lecturer French, Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- Vigneron, Pierre Robert, Assoc. Prof. French Lit., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
- ❖ Viles, George Burrige, York Beach, Me. [P.O. Box 288]
- Vincent, Howard P., 105 Noble Rd., Jenkintown, Pa.
- Virtue, John Bernard, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kans.
- de Visme, (Madame) Alice Williamson, Assoc. Prof. French Lang. and Lit., New Jersey Coll. for Women, New Brunswick, N. J.
- Vittorini, Domenico, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa.
- Voigt, Gilbert Paul, Prof. American Lit., Wittenberg Coll., Springfield, Ohio [602 N. Wittenberg Ave.]
- Vollmer, Clement, Prof. German, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [2114 Myrtle Dr.]
- Von der Mühl, Emanuel, Instr. Mod. Langs., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [75 Harrison St.]
- Voorhees, Edward L. N., Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Bard Coll., Columbia Univ., Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y. [to June 1. 1224 John Jay Hall, W. 116th St., N. Y. C.]
- ❖ Vos, Bert John, Prof. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- ❖ Voss, Ernest Karl Johann Heinrich, Prof. German Philology, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis. [175 Virginia Terrace]
- Vowles, Guy Richard, Prof. German, Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C. [Box 497]
- Waas, Glenn Elwood, Instr. German, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N. J.
- Wabnitz, William Scymour, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Wade, Ira Owen, Assoc. Prof. French, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [12 Aiken Ave.]
- Wade, John Donald, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Georgia, Athens, Ga.
- ❖ Wadepuhl, Walter, Assoc. Prof. German, West Virginia Univ., Morgantown, W. Va. [P.O. Box 100]
- ❖ Wadsworth, James Raymond, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb. [3434 Orchard St.]
- Wagenknecht, Edward, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash. [5637 20th Ave. N.E.]
- Wager, Willis J., Asst. Eng., Washington Sq. Coll., N. Y. U., New York, N. Y. [Apt. 8, 8 Barrow St.]
- Wagner, Bernard Mathias, Asst. Prof. Eng., Georgetown Univ., Washington, D. C.
- Wagner, Charles Philip, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [900 Lincoln Ave.]
- Wagner, Lydia E., Head Mod. Lang. Dept., Port Huron Jr. Coll., Port Huron, Mich.

- Wagner, Russell H., Asst. Prof. Public Speaking, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y. [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Wahr, Fred Burkhardt, Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Wainger, Bertrand Mac., Asst. Prof. Eng., Union Coll., Schenectady, N. Y. [831 Bedford Rd.]
- Wait, William Henry, Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [332 E. William St.]
- Waitt, Daisy Bailey, Raleigh, N. C. [117 Woodburn Rd.]
- Wakeman, Genevieve Bartlett, (Mrs. A. M.), Instr. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa. [183 Bishop St., New Haven, Conn.]
- Waldo, Louis Patrick, Asst. Prof. Eng., Michigan State Coll., East Lansing, Mich.
- Waldron, John, Prof. Eng., Georgetown Univ., School of Foreign Service, Washington, D. C. [1707 Rhode Island Ave.]
- Waldron, Norman Sumner, Head French Dept., The Manlius Sch., Manlius, N. Y.
- Wales, Julia Grace, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Walk, Francis Sidney, Instr. Mod. Langs., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa. [215 McCartney St.]
- Walker, Andrew Jackson, Asst. Prof. Eng., Georgia School of Technology, Atlanta, Ga.
- Walker, Franklin D., Assoc. Prof. Eng., State Teachers Coll., San Diego, Calif.
- Walker, Lee H., Grad. Asst. Eng., State Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Ia. [B-11 University Hall]
- Walker, Thomas Capell, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn.
- Wallace, A. Dayle, Asst. Prof. Eng., Municipal Univ. of Omaha, Omaha, Neb.
- Wallace, Paul A. W., Prof. Eng., Lebanon Valley Coll., Annville, Pa.
- Wallerstein, Ruth C., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Walley, Harold R., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, Ohio [260 Kenworth Rd.]
- Wallis, Lawrence Bergmann, Asst. Prof. Eng., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [15 Park St.]
- Walls, Francis Sidney, Instr. Mod. Langs., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa. [215 McCartney St.]
- Walpole, Hugh, French Lecturer, Queen's Univ., Kingston, Ont., Canada.
- Walten, Maximilian Giff, Instr. Eng., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y. [Box 44]
- Walter, (Mrs.) Dorothea, Lecturer French, Trinity Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont., Canada.
- Walter, Erich Albert, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1016 Michigan Ave.]
- Walter, Felix Harold, Assoc. Prof. French, Trinity Coll., Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont., Canada.
- Walters, Raymond, President, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio.
- Waltman, Samuel I., Instr. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Walton, Loring B., Dept. Rom. Langs., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [1012 Green St.]
- Walton, Wendell Wilder, Instr. Eng., Wayne Univ., Detroit, Mich. [2744 W. Buena Vista Ave.]
- ❖ Walz, John Albrecht, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [42 Garden St.]
- Wangness, Gina O., Instr. German, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. [Folwell Hall 115]
- Wann, Louis, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Southern California, Los Angeles, Calif. [10591 Blythe Ave.]
- Ward, Charles Eugene, Instr. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [4731 Duke Station]
- Ward, Henry Gordon, Senior Asst. Librarian, Univ. of Liverpool, Liverpool, Eng. [37 Ashfield, Wavertree, Liverpool]
- Ward, Laura Adelne, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Hood Coll., Frederick, Md.
- Ward, Robert Calvin, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Colgate Univ., Hamilton, N. Y. [8 Hamilton St.]
- Ward, (Mrs.) Ruth Shifflette, Head Eng. Dept., Amarillo Coll., Amarillo, Tex. [1209 Taylor St.]
- Wardle, Ralph Martin, Tutorial Asst. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [14 Story St.]
- Ware, Lois Philip, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex. [106 W. 17 St.]
- Warfel, Harry R., Prof. Eng., Univ. of Maryland, College Park, Md. [61 Franklin St., Hyattsville]
- Warkentin, A., Bethel Coll., Bethel Coll., Kan.
- Warner, James H., Prof. and Head Eng.

- Dept., Arkansas A. and M. Coll., Monticello, Ark.
- Warner, Ralph E., Instr. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo. [312 Main St.]
- Warnock, Robert, Instr. Eng., Connecticut State Coll., Storrs, Conn. [Box 392]
- Warren, Austin, Prof. Eng., Boston Univ., Boston, Mass. [28 Garden St., Beacon Hill]
- Warren, Virgil Alexander, Assoc. Prof. Mod. Langs., Carson-Newman Coll., Jefferson City, Tenn. [Box 391]
- ❖ Warshaw, Jacob, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Spanish, Univ. of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. [412 Stewart Rd.]
- Warthen, George Saylor, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Gettysburg Coll., Gettysburg, Pa.
- Washburn, Arthur Leverett, Lecturer Italian, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I. [175 Thayer St.]
- Washburn, Carolyn, Asst. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [324 Univ. Hall]
- Washburn, Harold Edward, Prof. French, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [28 E. Wheelock St.]
- Wasserman, Earl Reeves, Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [2933 Woodland Ave.]
- Watkins, Walter Barker Critz, Instr. Eng., Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [131 Pyne Hall]
- Watson, Bailey Gordon, Prof. Eng., West Georgia Coll., Carrollton, Ga. [Genola, Ga.]
- Watson, Ernest Bradley, Prof. Eng., Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [13 S. Park St.]
- Watson, Harold Francis, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Simpson Coll., Indianola, Iowa [1005 N. C. St.]
- Watson, Sara Ruth, Fellow Eng., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio [1934 Rosemont Rd., East Cleveland]
- ❖ Watt, Homer Andrew, Prof. Eng., N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [19 Douglas Rd., Glen Ridge, N. J.]
- Watt, William W., Instr. Eng., Lafayette Coll., Easton, Pa. [Box 20]
- Watts, George Byron, Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Davidson Coll., Davidson, N. C.
- Watts, Harold Holliday, Instr. Eng., Purdue Univ., W. Lafayette, Ind. [710 N. Ridge Dr.]
- Waxman, Samuel Montefiore, Prof. Rom. Langs. and Lits., Boston Univ., Boston, Mass.
- Way, Roland A., Grad. Stu. French, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [2818 Telegraph Ave.]
- Weatherly, Edward H., Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- Weaver, Bennett, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [801 Granger Ave.]
- Webb, Albert M., Prof. Rom. Langs., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [1017 W. Trinity Ave.]
- Weber, Carl J., Roberts Prof. Eng. Lit., Colby Coll., Waterville, Me.
- Weber, Hermann Julius, Berkeley, Calif. [1811 La Loma Ave.]
- Webster, Clyde Cannon, Instr. Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [G22 Eliot House]
- Webster, Frank Martindale, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Washington Univ., St. Louis, Mo. [Box 156]
- Webster, Harvey Curtis, Instr. Eng., Colorado State Coll., Fort Collins, Colo. [704 S. College Ave.]
- ❖ Webster, Kenneth G. T., Asst. Prof. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [Gerry's Landing]
- Wecter, Dixon, Asst. Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- Wedel, Theodore Otto, Secretary for College Work, National Council of the Episcopal Church, New York, N. Y. [281-4th Ave.]
- Weekes, E. J., Eng. Dept., Berea Coll., Berea, Ky.
- Weeks, Mabel Foote, Assoc. Eng., Barnard Coll., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y.
- ❖ Weeks, Raymond, Prof. Emeritus Rom. Philology, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Manakin, Va.]
- Wehrle, William O., S. M., Eng. Dept., Univ. of Dayton, Dayton, Ohio.
- Weigand, Hermann Johann, Prof. German, Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [Graduate School]
- Weill, Felix, Prof. and Head Dept. Rom. Langs., The City Coll., 139th St. and Convent Ave., New York, N. Y.
- Weimar, George Martin, Assoc. Prof. Eng. and History, Stevens Inst. of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.
- Weinberg, Bernard, Grad. Stu. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [5512 Van Buren St.]
- Weinger, I. M., Instr. German, Friends Univ., Wichita, Kan.

- Weitzmann, Francis White, Instr Eng, Cornell Univ, Ithaca, N Y
- Welch, Bessie, Assoc. Prof Eng, Judson Coll, Marion, Ala
- Weller, Earle Vonard, 832 Shattuck Ave, Berkeley, Calif.
- Welles, Paul, Asst. Prof German and French, Virginia Military Inst, Lexington, Va
- Welling, Corinne, Assoc Prof Eng, Butler Univ, Indianapolis, Ind [5202 Washington Blvd]
- Wells, Carlton F, Instr Eng, Univ of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich
- ❖ Wells, Edgar Hudekoper, New York, N. Y [602 Madison Ave.]
- Wells, Henry Willis, Lecturer Eng, Columbia Univ, New York, N Y.
- ❖ Wells, John Edwin, Prof and Head Eng Dept, Connecticut Coll for Women, New London, Conn [77 Vauxhall St]
- Wells, Minnie E., Asst Prof. Eng, South-eastern Teachers Coll, Durant, Okla.
- Wells, Mitchell Preston, Head Eng Dept., Trinity Univ., Waxahachie, Tex.
- Wells, Staring Bailey, Instr Eng., Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [River Campus]
- Wells, William, Instr Eng, Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Wencelius, Leon, Asst. Prof. Rom Langs, Swarthmore Coll, Swarthmore, Pa.
- Wendell, Richard G, Assoc Prof. Eng. and Head Dept, Tusculum Coll, Greeneville, Tenn.
- Wendriner, Karl Georg, Council on Research in the Social Sciences, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Butler Hall, 88 Morningside Dr.]
- Wendt, H. G., Instr. German, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y [404 Hamilton Hall]
- Wenger, Christian N., Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich [1319 Olivia Ave]
- Wenger, Jared Eric, 2 rue St Sulpice, Paris, France.
- Wentworth, Harold, Instr. Eng, West Virginia Univ, Morgantown, W. Va.
- ❖ Wernaer, Robert M., Cambridge, Mass. [20 Prescott St.]
- Werner, Charles Emil, Jr., Asst. Instr. German, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila., Pa. [308 Gilham St.]
- Werner, William L., Assoc. Prof. Eng, Pennsylvania State Coll, State College, Pa [217 E. Beaver Ave]
- Wertz, Dorothy May, Substitute Prof Eng, Keuka Coll, Keuka Park, N Y.
- Wesenberg, Alice Bidwell, (Mrs T. G.), Asst Prof. Eng, Butler Univ, Indianapolis, Ind [429 Buckingham Dr]
- Wesenberg, T Griffith, Prof Rom. Langs, Butler Univ., Indianapolis, Ind [429 Buckingham Dr.]
- West, Victor Royce, Head Dept. For Langs, Municipal Univ of Omaha, Omaha, Neb [On leave Heidelberg Univ., Germany]
- Westfall, Alfred, Prof. Eng, Colorado Agricultural Coll, Fort Collins, Colo.
- Weston, Arthur J., Assoc Prof Eng., Stevens Inst. of Technology, Hoboken, N J [30 Winsor Pl, Glen Ridge, N J]
- Weygandt, Cornelius, Prof Eng. Lit, Univ. of Pennsylvania, Phila, Pa
- Whaler, James, Assoc Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll, Baltimore, Md.
- Wharey, James Blanton, Prof. Eng., Univ of Texas, Austin, Tex
- Whately, Frances, Assoc Prof Spanish Texas Technological Coll, Lubbock, Tex
- Wheatley, Katherine Ernestine, Adjunct Prof. Rom. Langs, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex [2003 Guadalupe St]
- Wheeler, A Lloyd, Asst. Prof. Eng, Univ. of Manitoba, Winnipeg, Canada.
- Wheeler, Carleton Ames, Prof. and Head Rom Lang. Dept, Tufts Coll., Mass [Miner Hall]
- Wheeler, Charles Francis, Instr. Eng, Xavier Univ, Cincinnati, Ohio [1836 Chase Ave]
- Wheeler, Paul Mowbray, Head Eng. Dept, Winthrop Coll, Rock Hill, S. C.
- Whicher, George Frisbie, Prof. Eng., Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass
- Whipple, Thomas King, Prof. Eng, Univ. of California, Berkeley, Calif. [407 Wheeler Hall]
- Whitbeck, G. Paul, Asst. Prof. Eng., Bates Coll., Lewiston, Me. [24 Ware St.]
- White, Arthur Franklin, Assoc Prof. Eng., Adelbert Coll. of Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- White, Florence Donnell, Prof. French, Vassar Coll, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- White, Frederick Glover, Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ, Cambridge, Mass. [7 Mercer Circle]
- White, George LeRoy, Jr., Instr. Eng,

- Washington and Jefferson Coll, Washington, Pa
- White, Helen Constance, Assoc Prof Eng, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis [419 Sterling Pl]
- ❖ White, Henry Adelbert, Prof Eng, Univ of Nebraska, Lincoln, Neb [1718 S Twenty-sixth St]
- White, Irving H., Prof. Eng, Boston Univ, Boston, Mass [27 Garrison St]
- White, Milton Christian, Prof and Head Eng., Dept. Millsaps Coll, Jackson, Miss. [1715 Edgewood St]
- White, Newman Ivey, Prof Eng, Duke Univ, Durham, N C [On leave 6 Story St, Cambridge, Mass]
- White, Olive Bernardine, Assoc Prof Eng, Bradley Polytechnic Inst, Peoria, Ill [528 College St]
- Whiteford, Robert Naylor, Head Dept and Prof Eng Lit, Univ of Toledo, Toledo, Ohio [2046 Elliott Ave]
- Whitehall, Harold, Asst Editor, Middle Eng Dictionary, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- ❖ Whiteside, Donald Grant, Assoc Prof. Eng, Brooklyn Coll, 383 Pearl St, Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Whitford, Robert Calvin, Student Director and Prof. Eng, Long Island Univ, 300 Pearl St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Whiting, Ella Keats, Asst. Prof Eng. Lit, Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass.
- Whiting, George Wesley, Instr Eng, Rice Inst, Houston, Tex
- Whitman, Charles Huntington, Prof. Eng, Rutgers Univ, New Brunswick, N. J. [116 Lincoln Ave, Highland Park, N. J.]
- Whitney, Edward Allen, Asst Prof. History and Lit, Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [65 Sparks St]
- ❖ Whitney, Lois, Asst. Prof. Eng, Vassar Coll., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- ❖ Whitney, Marian P, Prof. Emeritus German, Vassar Coll. [186 Edwards St., New Haven, Conn.]
- Whitridge, Arnold, Prof. History, Arts, and Letters, Calhoun Coll, Yale Univ, New Haven, Conn [Master's House, 116 College St]
- ❖ Whittem, Arthur Fisher, Assoc. Prof. Rom. Langs., Harvard Univ, Cambridge, Mass. [11 Clement Circle]
- Whitten, Jennie A., Dept. Foreign Langs., Illinois State Normal Univ, Normal, Ill.
- Whitten, Olive McConnell, Asst. Prof Eng, Coll of Industrial Arts, Denton, Tex [Box 835, C I A]
- Whyte, Florence, Instr Spanish, Bryn Mawr Coll, Bryn Mawr, Pa
- ❖ Whyte, John, Prof German, Brooklyn Coll, Brooklyn, N. Y [36 Pondnick Rd, Bionville, N. Y.]
- Wichelns, Herbert August, Prof. Public Speaking, Cornell Univ, Ithaca, N Y [Goldwin Smith Hall]
- Wicks, C. Beaumont, Instr Rom Langs, Univ of Alabama, University, Ala [Box 1443]
- Widger, Howard De Forest, Assoc Prof Eng, Eastern Illinois State Teachers Coll, Charleston, Ill [1531 Third St]
- ❖ Wicher, Joseph, Prof. German Lang and Lit, Smith Coll, Northampton, Mass
- Wier, Marion Clyde, Assoc. Prof. Eng, Brown Univ. Providence, R I [400 Angell St.]
- Wilcox, Alfred M., Instt Mod Langs., The Hill School, Pottstown, Pa
- Wilcox, Helen Berkeley, Instr Rom Langs, Univ of Maryland, College Park, Md [1629 Columbia Rd, Washington, D C]
- Wilcox, John, Assoc Prof Eng, Wayne Univ, Detroit, Mich
- Wild, J Henry, Asst Prof German, Rutgers Univ., New Brunswick, N J [Box 88]
- Wilder, Lester O, Asst. Prof. Eng and Asst. Dean of the Coll for Men, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y.
- Wiles, Americus George David, Eng Dept, The Hun School, Princeton, N. J. [Ober and Springdale Rd]
- Wiles, Roy McKeen, Asst. Prof Eng, McMaster Univ, Hamilton, Ontario
- Wiley, Autrey Nell, Assoc Prof Eng, Texas State Coll for Women, Denton, Tex [110 W College Ave]
- Wiley, Margaret Lee, Instr. Eng., Univ of Texas, Austin, Tex. [2107 San Antonio St.]
- Wiley, William Leon, Assoc. Prof. French, Univ. of N. C., Chapel Hill, N. C. [412 Cameron Ave.]
- ❖ Wilkens, Frederick H., Prof. German, N. Y. Univ, New York, N. Y. [601 W. 156th St.]
- ❖ Wilkins, Ernest Hatch, President, Oberlin Coll, Oberlin, Ohio
- Wilkins, Lawrence A., Director Mod. Langs. in High Schools of N. Y. City, Board of Education, New York, N. Y. [54 Morning side Dr.]

- Will, Joseph Stanley, Prof. French, Univ. of Toronto, Toronto, Ont., Canada
- Will, Robert Ellsworth, Instr. Eng. and Public Speaking, Connecticut State Coll., Storrs, Conn.
- Will, Samuel Frederic, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Willard, Rudolph, Asst. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [1875 Yale Sta.]
- Willbern, Glen D., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind.
- Willcox, Alice, Eng. Dept., Grad. School, Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [63 Fairview Ave., Veona, N. J.]
- Wiley, Norman L., Assoc. Prof. German, Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich.
- Williams, Arthur George, Prof. Mod. Langs., Coll. of William and Mary, Norfolk Div., Williamsburg, Va. [Box 306]
- Williams, Blanche Colton, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Hunter Coll., Park Ave. and 68th St., New York, N. Y.
- Williams, Cecil B., Asst. Prof. Eng., De Paul Univ., Chicago, Ill. [9336 S. Elizabeth St.]
- William, Charles Allyn, Prof. German, Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill. [801 W. Nevada St.]
- Williams, Edna Rees, Instr. Eng., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Dickinson House]
- Williams, Edwin Bucher, Prof. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.
- Williams, Ethel M., Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Flora Stone Mather Coll., Western Reserve Univ., Cleveland, Ohio
- Williams, Franklin B., Jr., Instr. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [23 Ware St.]
- Williams, John Milton, Asst. Prof. Eng., Boston Univ., Boston, Mass. [170 Pine-ridge Rd., Waban]
- Williams, Mentor Lee, Teaching-Fellow Eng., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich. [1504 Marlboro Dr.]
- Williams, Ralph Coplestone, Prof. French, Amherst Coll., Amherst, Mass.
- Williams, Ralph Mehlin, Grad. Stu. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [2833 Yale Sta.]
- Williams, Robert Dickson, Asst. Prof. Eng., Superior State Teachers Coll., Superior, Wis.
- Williams, Robert H., Asst. Prof. Spanish, Brown Univ., Providence, R. I.
- ❖ Williams, Ronald Boal, Prof. Rom. Langs., Lake Forest Coll., Lake Forest, Ill. [College Campus]
- Williams, Stanley Thomas, Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [595 Whitney Ave.]
- Williamson, Alexander Jardine, Asst. Prof. Rom. Langs., Haverford Coll., Haverford, Pa.
- ❖ Williamson, Edward John, Prof. Mod. Langs. and Lits., Hobart Coll., Geneva, N. Y.
- Williamson, George, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oregon, Eugene, Ore.
- Willibrand, W. A., Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla.
- Willis, Raymond Smith, Jr., Instr. Spanish, Princeton Univ., Princeton, N. J. [39 Wiggins St.]
- Wills, George Stockton, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Western Maryland Coll., Westminster, Md. [42 Longwell Ave.]
- Wilmarth, Wilson Eleiy, Asst. Prof. Mod. Langs., Bradley Polytechnic Inst., Peoria, Ill.
- Wilsey, Mildred, Instr. Eng., Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Wilson, Arthur Herman, Prof. Eng., Susquehanna Univ., Selinsgrove, Pa.
- Wilson, Carroll A., New York, N. Y. [c/o Guggenheim Bros., 120 Broadway]
- ❖ Wilson, Charles Bundy, Prof. German Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa [Box 486]
- Wilson, Elkin C., Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Mississippi, University, Miss. [P.O. Box 451]
- Wilson, Frederick E., Asst. Prof. German, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [1007 Urban Ave.]
- Wilson, Gordon, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Western Kentucky State Teachers Coll., Bowling Green, Ky. [1434 Chestnut St.]
- Wilson, Henry Lovejoy, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Idaho, Moscow, Idaho
- Wilson, Hiram Roy, Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [34 Elmwood Pl.]
- Wilson, James Southall, Edgar Allan Poe Prof. Eng., Univ. of Virginia, University, Va.
- Wilson, Knox, Instr. Eng., N. Y. Univ., University Heights, New York, N. Y. [1950 Andrews Ave.]
- Wilson, Miriam Elaine, Prof. French, Park Coll., Parkville, Mo.
- Wilson, Rachel, Prof. French, Hollins Coll., Hollins Coll., Va.
- Wilson, Robert Henry, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Texas [Box 1515, Univ. Sta.]

- Wilson, Thomas James, New York, N. Y. [Henry Holt and Co., 1 Park Ave.]
- Wilt, Napier, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [Faculty Exchange]
- Wine, Celesta, Head Eng. Dept., Oak Park Jr. Coll., Oak Park, Ill. [857 Clinton Ave.]
- Winfrey, Lewis Edgar, Prof. Mod. Langs., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla. [428 Park Drive]
- Wing, Hugh Allan, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Pittsburgh, Pittsburgh, Pa. [4341 Andover Terrace]
- van Winkle, Cortlandt, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [96 Maynard Rd.]
- Winship, Harold Carter, Prof. Mod. Langs., The Citadel, Charleston, S. C.
- Winslow, Ola Elizabeth, Prof. Eng., Goucher Coll., Baltimore, Md.
- Winston, Alice, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan. [1620 Massachusetts St.]
- Winter, Calvert J., Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of Kansas, Lawrence, Kan.
- Winther, Sophus Keith, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Washington, Seattle, Wash.
- Wisewell, George Ellas, The Winslow, 45 E. 55 St., New York, N. Y.
- Witherspoon, Alexander Maclaren, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [604 Yale Sta.]
- ❖ Withington, Robert, Prof. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass.
- Witt, Marion Winnifred, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [242 E. 72 St.]
- Witt, Robert Edward, 510 E. Faulkner St., El Dorado, Ark.
- Wittman, Nora E., Instr. German, Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [145 N. Atherton St.]
- Wittmer, Felix, Instr. Mod. Langs., New Jersey State Teachers Coll., Montclair, N. J. [523 Highland Ave.]
- Woerner, Louis P., Asst. Prof. German, Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla.
- Wolfe, (Mrs.) Clara Snell, Instr. French, Marietta Coll., Marietta, Ohio [1740 Arlington Ave., Upper Arlington, Columbus]
- Wolfe, Don Marion, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Geneva Coll., Beaver Falls, Pa.
- Wolff, Max J., Heilbronnerstr. 29, Berlin, W. 30, Germany
- Wolff, Samuel Lee, Asst. Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [90 Morning-side Dr.]
- Wolle, Francis, Assoc. Prof. Eng. Lit., Univ. of Colorado, Boulder, Colo.
- Wolsan, Zenobia W., Head For. Lang. Dept., Wells H. S., Chicago, Ill. [1054 N. Menard Ave.]
- Wood, Charlotte Robertson, Instr. Eng., Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- ❖ Wood, Francis Asbury, Prof. Emeritus Germ. Philology, Univ. of Chicago, Chicago, Ill. [La Jolla, Calif.]
- Wood, George Campbell, Prof. Italian, Dartmouth Coll., Hanover, N. H. [Box 10]
- Wood, Gordon Reid, Asst. Eng., Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 4218, Duke Sta.]
- Wood, Kathryn Louise, Instr. French, Hollins Coll., Hollins Coll., Va.
- Wood, Milo Livingston, Instr. Eng.; Director Dramatics, Univ. of Rochester, Rochester, N. Y. [42 Prince St.]
- Wood, Paul Spencer, Prof. and Chairman Eng. Dept., Grinnell Coll., Grinnell, Iowa [1509 Park St.]
- Wood, Ralph, Instr. German, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Woodbridge, Benjamin Mather, Prof. Rom. Langs., Reed Coll., Portland, Ore.
- Woodbridge, Homer Edwards, Prof. Eng. Lit., Wesleyan Univ., Middletown, Conn. [178 Cross St.]
- Woodruff, Bertiam Lawrence, Prof. Eng., Johnson C. Smith Univ., Charlotte, N. C.
- Woods, Charles B., Instr. Eng., Univ. of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tenn. [303 Forest Hills Blvd.]
- Woods, Margaret Roberts, Instr. French, Wilson Coll., Chambersburg, Pa.
- Woodworth, Lewis Angle, The Macurda Schools, 332 Virgil Ave., Los Angeles, Calif.
- Woodworth, Mary Katharine, Asst. Prof. Eng., Bryn Mawr Coll., Bryn Mawr, Pa.
- Woofter, Carey, Registrar, Glenville State Normal Sch., Glenville, W. Va.
- ❖ Wooley, Elmer O., Instr. German, Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [318 S. Henderson St.]
- Woolf, Henry Bosley, Grad. Stu. Eng., Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md. [601 Chumleigh Rd.]
- Woolsey, Pierce E., Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Houghton Coll., Houghton, N. Y.
- Work, James Aiken, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2255 Ridge Ave.]
- Workman, Samuel Klinger, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [1224 Noyes St.]

- Worthington, Hugh S., Prof. French, Sweet Briar Coll., Sweet Briar, Va
Wray, E. H., Head Eng. Dept., East Texas State Teachers Coll., Commerce, Tex. [1401 Cooper St]
Wray, Edith Armstrong, Assoc. Prof. Eng., Ohio Univ., Athens, Ohio [35 Park Pl]
Wright, Austin, Asst. Prof. Eng., Carnegie Inst. of Technology, Pittsburgh, Pa
Wright, (Mrs.) Celeste Turner, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of California, Branch of the Coll. of Agri., Davis, Calif.
❖ Wright, Charles Baker, Prof. Emeritus Eng. Lit. and Rhet., Middlebury Coll., Middlebury, Vt
❖ Wright, Charles Henry Conrad, Prof. French Lang. and Lit., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [9 Lowell St]
Wright, Edith Armstrong, 160 Retreat Ave., Hartford, Conn
Wright, Edwin Miner, Prof. and Head Eng. Dept., Bates Coll., Lewiston, Me. [508 Main St]
Wright, (Mrs.) Elizabeth Cox, Instr. Eng., Swarthmore Coll., Swarthmore, Pa. [Moylan, Pa]
Wright, Ernest Hunter, Prof. Eng., Columbia Univ., New York, N. Y. [Philosophy Hall]
Wright, H(arold) Bunker, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
Wright, Jean Gray, Assoc. Prof. French, Westhampton Coll., Univ. of Richmond, Richmond, Va.
Wright, Lawrence Stauffer, Instr. Eng., Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [2201 Maple Ave]
Wright, Louis Booker, Research Prof. Eng. Lit., Henry E. Huntington Library, San Marino, Calif.
Wright, Luella M., Assoc. Eng., Univ. of Iowa, Iowa City, Iowa
Wright, Walter Francis, Prof. Eng. Dept., Doane Coll., Crete, Neb. [Gaylord Hall]
Wulff, Adolph Arthur, 49 George St., Manhasset, N. Y.
Wurfl, George John, Asst. Prof. German, Pennsylvania State Coll., State College, Pa. [317 W. Beaver Ave.]
Wurtzbaugh, Jewel, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Oklahoma, Norman, Okla. [Faculty Exchange]
Wykoff, George Steward, Asst. Prof. Eng., Purdue Univ., W. Lafayette, Ind. [244 Littleton St.]
Wyllie, John Cook, Curator of the Virginia Collection, Library of Univ. of Virginia, University, Va. [Box 1235]
Wyman, Mary A., Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [Edgehill Inn, Spuyten Duyvil, N. Y.]
Yamagiwa, Joseph Koshimi, Sub-Editor, Early Mod. Eng. Dictionary, Dept. Eng. Lang. and Lit., Univ. of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich
Yarborough, Minnie Clare, Asst. Prof. Eng., Hunter Coll., New York, N. Y. [411 W. 116 St]
Yoder, Samuel A., Instr. Eng., Goshen Coll., Goshen, Indiana
Yost, Calvin D., Librarian and Prof. German, Ursinus Coll., Collegeville, Pa.
Yost, Calvin Daniel, Jr., Instr. Eng., Ursinus Coll., Collegeville, Pa. [33-6th Ave]
Young, Beatrice, Prof. Spanish, Pacific Univ., Forest Grove, Ore
❖ Young, Bert Edward, Prof. Rom. Langs., Indiana Univ., Bloomington, Ind. [521 Kirkwood Ave.]
Young, Charles Edmund, Prof. and Chairman Dept. Rom. Langs., Univ. of Wisconsin, Extension Division, Milwaukee, Wis. [623 W. State St]
Young, Charles Lowell, Prof. Emeritus American Lit., Wellesley Coll., Wellesley, Mass. [2 Roanoke Rd.]
Young, Charles Stuart, Instr. Eng., Culver Military Academy, Culver, Indiana
Young, Edward Hudson, Asst. Prof. French, Duke Univ., Durham, N. C. [Box 581, College Sta.]
❖ Young, Karl, Prof. Eng., Yale Univ., New Haven, Conn. [195 Everitt St.]
❖ Young, Mary Vance, Prof. Emeritus Rom. Langs., Mount Holyoke Coll., South Hadley, Mass. [42 Woodvale Ave., Gracelyn, Asheville, N. C.]
Young, Ruth Elizabeth, Asst. Prof. Italian Lang. and Lit., Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [Martha Wilson House]
Young, William Foster, President, Benjamin H. Sanborn & Co., Chicago, Ill. [221 E. 20th St.]
Young, Rev. William J., S. J., Assoc. Dean, Grad. Sch., Xavier Univ., Milford Novitiate, Milford, Ohio
Youtz, Julia Caroline, Editorial Asst., G. & C. Merriam Co., Springfield, Mass. [Middlefield, Mass.]
Zabel, Morton Dauwen, Prof. Eng., Loyola Univ., Chicago, Ill. [1100 Pratt Blvd.]

- Zapata y Torres, Miguel, Assoc. Prof. Spanish, Smith Coll., Northampton, Mass. [87 Round Hill Rd.]
- ❖ Zdanowicz, Casimir Douglas, Prof. French, Univ. of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.
- Zeek, Charles Franklyn, Prof. French, Southern Methodist Univ., Dallas, Tex.
- Zeeveld, W. Gordon, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill.
- ❖ Zeitler, William Irving, Grad. Stu. Eng., Harvard Univ., Cambridge, Mass. [68 N. Pearl St., Albany, N. Y.]
- Zeitlin, Jacob, Prof. Eng., Univ. of Illinois, Urbana, Ill.
- Zeitlin, Marion Albert, Asst. Prof. Spanish, Univ. of California, Los Angeles, Calif.
- Zembrod, Alfred Charles, Prof. Emeritus Rom. Langs., Univ. of Kentucky, Lexington, Ky. [456 W. Fourth St.]
- ❖ Zeydel, Edwin Hermann, Prof. German, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, Ohio [2439 Middleton Ave.]
- Zieglschmid, A. J. Friedrich, Asst. Prof. German, Northwestern Univ., Evanston, Ill. [36 Lunt Library]
- Zimansky, Curt A., Graduate Coll., Princeton, N. J.
- Zinnecker, Wesley Daniel, Prof. German, N. Y. Univ., Washington Square Coll., New York, N. Y. [535 Hillside Terrace, W. Orange, N. J.]
- Zizka, Ernest J., Prof. Czech. Lang. and Lit., St. Procopius Coll., Lisle, Ill.
- Zollinger, (Mrs.) Anna R., Asst. Prof. German, Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [7040 Colonial Rd.]
- Zucker, Adolf Eduard, Prof. German Lit., Univ. of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, N. C.
- Zucker, Louis Clement, Asst. Prof. Eng., Univ. of Utah, Salt Lake City, Utah [60 Kirkland St., Cambridge, Mass.]
- Zunder, Theodore Albert, Asst. Prof. Eng., Brooklyn Coll., Brooklyn, N. Y. [3910]

ROLL OF DECEASED MEMBERS

- B. SPRAGUE ALLEN, New York University, Mar. 11, 1935
- LOUIS ALLEN, University of Toronto, August, 1935
- WM. H. ALLEN, Philadelphia, Pa., July 3, 1935
- EARLE BROWNELL BABCOCK, New York University, Mar. 1, 1935
- CHARLES SEARS BALDWIN, Barnard College, Columbia University, Oct. 23, 1935
- CHARLES READ BASKERVILL, University of Chicago, July 23, 1935
- MRS. ANDRÉ BÉZIAT, Radcliffe College, April 28, 1935
- NANCY JENNETTE CARPENTER, Iowa State Teachers College, Oct. 2, 1932
- TIMOTHY CLORAN, University of Oregon, Dec. 8, 1935
- GEORGE S. COLLINS, Polytechnic Institute of Brooklyn, Nov. 26, 1935
- HERMANN COLLITZ, The Johns Hopkins University, May 13, 1935
- RALPH B. CRUM, West Liberty State Teachers College (W. Va.), Dec. 31, 1935
- STARR W. CUTTING, University of Chicago, Oct. 19, 1935
- TOBIAS J. C. DIEKHOFF, University of Michigan, April 23, 1935
- R. E. NEIL DODGE, University of Wisconsin, Aug. 30, 1935
- OSCAR F. W. FERNSEMER, Brooklyn College, July, 1933
- EARLE B. FOWLER, University of Louisville, July 23, 1935
- MAX GRIEBSCHE, University of Wisconsin, Sept. 8, 1935
- ADELBERT C. HARTUNG, Valparaiso University, Sept. 18, 1935
- JOHN PRESTON HOSKINS, Princeton University, July 15, 1935
- T. ATKINSON JENKINS, University of Chicago, Mar. 24, 1935
- OSCAR L. KEITH, University of South Carolina, March 4, 1935
- JAMES KERR, Converse College, Aug. 27, 1935
- WALTER KIEN, Brown University, May 25, 1935
- HERBERT Z. KIP, Connecticut College for Women, July 10, 1935
- HARRY C. KROWL, The City College, Dec. 1, 1935
- ELISA G. MADISON, Waynesburg College, March 1, 1935
- MARSHALL LIVINGSTON PERRIN, Boston University, Dec. 1, 1935
- HOMER SMITH, Ursinus College, Aug. 26, 1934
- WILLIAM E. SMYSER, Ohio Wesleyan University, May 24, 1935
- FRANCIS HOVEY STODDARD, New York University, Feb. 6, 1936
- ANTOINE THOMAS, University of Paris, May 17, 1935 (Honorary Member)
- HARRY CONRAD THURNAU, University of Kansas, Aug. 6, 1935

LIBRARIES SUBSCRIBING TO PMLA

- Aberystwyth, Wales National Lib. of Wales
 Adelaide, South Australia Univ of Adelaide Lib.
 Akron, Ohio Bierce Lib., Univ of Akron
 Albany, N. Y. New York State Lib.
 Albion, Mich. Albion Coll. Lib.
 Albuquerque, N. M.: Univ. of New Mexico Lib.
 Algiers (Algeria), N. Africa [Rue Michelet] Bibliothèque de l'Université
 Allahabad, India Univ. of Allahabad Lib.
 Alpine, Tex.: Sul Ross State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Alton, Ill. Shurtleff Coll Lib.
 Ames, Iowa Iowa State Coll Lib.
 Amherst, Mass. Amherst Coll Lib.
 Amherst, Mass. Massachusetts State Coll Lib.
 Ann Arbor, Mich. General Lib. of the Univ. of Michigan
 Annville, Pa. Lebanon Valley Coll Lib.
 Appleton, Wis. Lawrence Coll Lib.
 Arcata, Calif. Humboldt State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Arkadelphia, Ark. Henderson State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Arkadelphia, Ark. Ouachita Coll. Lib.
 Atchison, Kan.: Abbey Lib., St. Benedict's Coll.
 Atchison, Kan.: Mt. St. Scholastica Coll Lib.
 Athens, Ohio. Ohio Univ. Lib.
 Athens, W. Va. Concord State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Atlanta, Ga. Atlanta Univ Lib.
 Aurora, N. Y. Wells Coll Lib.
 Austin, Tex.: Univ. of Texas Lib.
 Baltimore, Md.: Enoch Pratt Free Lib.
 Baltimore, Md.: Goucher Coll Lib.
 Bangor, Me. Bangor Public Lib.
 Basel, Switzerland: Universitätsbibliothek
 Baton Rouge, La.: Louisiana State Univ. Lib.
 Bellingham, Wash.: Lib., State Normal School
 Beloit, Wis.: Beloit Coll. Lib.
 Benares, India: Benares Hindu Univ. Lib.
 Berkeley, Calif.: Univ. of California Lib.
 Berlin, N.W. 7, Germany: Universitätsbibliothek
 Berlin, N.W. 7, Germany: Staats-Bibliothek
 Bethel Coll., Kan.: Bethel Coll. Lib.
 Bethlehem, Pa. Lehigh Univ. Lib.
 Birmingham, Eng. (Ratcliff Place) The Reference Lib.
 Bloomington, Ind. Univ. of Indiana Lib.
 Boston, Mass. Boston Univ. Lib.
 Boston, Mass. Public Lib. of the City of Boston
 Boulder, Colo. Univ. of Colorado Lib.
 Bowling Green, Ky.: Western Kentucky State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Brookings, S. D. South Dakota State Coll. Lib.
 Brooklyn, N. Y. (80 Willoughby St.) Brooklyn Coll Lib.
 Brooklyn, N. Y. (Montague Branch) (197 Montague St.) Brooklyn Public Lib.
 Brooklyn, N. Y. St. Francis Coll Lib.
 Brooklyn, N. Y.: St. John's Univ. Lib.
 Brunswick, Me. Bowdoin Coll Lib.
 Brussels, Belgium (11, rue D'Egmont) Alumni Club, Fondation Universitaire
 Bryn Mawr, Pa. Bryn Mawr Coll. Lib.
 Buffalo, N. Y. (Edmund Hayes Hall, 3335 Main St.) Univ. of Buffalo Lib.
 Burlington, Vt.: Univ. of Vermont Lib.
 Cairo, Egypt (113 Sharia Kasrel Aini): American Univ. of Cairo, Eng. Dept.
 Calcutta, India: Council of Post Graduate Teaching in Arts, Asutosh Bldg
 Cambridge, Eng.: Cambridge Univ. Lib.
 Cambridge, Mass.: (Harvard University) [Warren House] Child Memorial Lib.
 Cambridge, Mass. Radcliffe Coll Lib.
 Cambridge, Mass.: (Harvard Univ.) Widener Memorial Lib.
 Canton, China: Lingnan Univ. Lib.
 Canton, N. Y. Herring Lib.
 Canton, N. Y.: St. Lawrence Univ. Lib.
 Canyon, Texas. West Texas State Normal Coll Lib.
 Cape Girardeau, Mo.: Southeast Missouri State Teachers Coll Lib.
 Cape Town, South Africa: J. W. Jagger Lib., Univ. of Cape Town, Rondebosch
 Carbondale, Ill.: Southern Illinois State Normal Univ. Lib.
 Cardiff, South Wales: Univ. Coll. of South Wales Lib.
 Carlisle, Pa.: Dickinson Coll. Lib.
 Cedar Falls, Iowa: Iowa State Teachers Coll. Lib.
 Cedar Rapids, Iowa: Coe Coll. Lib.

- Charjkw, U S S R · Gopion, 4-j pod 5-et
 Charleston, S. C. Coll. of Charleston Lib.
 Charleston, S. C. · Citadel Lib
 Charlotte, N. C. Johnson C. Smith Univ.
 Lib.
 Chicago, Ill. · [19 S. La Salle St] Central
 Y. M. C. A. Coll. Lib.
 Chicago, Ill. · [3711 Douglas Blvd] Crane
 Junior Coll. Lib.
 Chicago, Ill. Liberal Arts Lib., De Paul
 Univ.
 Chicago, Ill. : General Lib. of the Univ. of Chicago
 Chicago, Ill. Newberry Lib
 Chicago, Ill. : North Park Coll Lib.
 Chickasha, Okla. : Oklahoma Coll for Women
 Lib.
 Chidambaram, South India. Annamalai
 Univ. Lib.
 Cleveland, Ohio: Adelbert Coll. Lib.
 Clinton, Miss. : Mississippi Coll. Lib.
 College Park, Md. : Univ of Maryland Lib.
 College Place, Wash. : Walla Walla Coll. Lib.
 Colorado Springs, Colo. · Coburn Lib., Colorado Coll.
 Columbia, Mo. · Univ. of Missouri Lib
 Columbia, S. C. : Allen Univ. Lib
 Columbia, S. C. : Univ. of South Carolina
 Lib.
 Columbus, Ohio Capital Univ Lib
 Columbus, Ohio. Ohio State Univ. Lib.
 Concord, N. H. · New Hampshire State Lib.
 Crawfordsville, Ind. · Wabash Coll. Lib.
 Cullowhee, N. C. : Western Carolina Teachers Coll Lib
 Dallas, Texas: Southern Methodist Univ.
 Lib.
 Davidson, N. C. · Union Lib., Davidson Coll
 Decatur, Ga. : Carnegie Lib., Agnes Scott
 Coll.
 Decorah, Iowa: Luther Coll. Lib.
 De Kalb, Ill. · Northern Illinois State Teachers Coll. Lib.
 Denton, Texas: North Texas State Teachers
 Coll. Lib.
 Denver, Colo. : Univ. of Denver Lib.
 Detroit, Mich. : Board of Education
 Detroit, Mich. : The Public Lib
 Detroit, Mich. : Univ. of Detroit Lib., 6 Mile Road and Livernois
 Detroit, Mich. · [4841 Cass Ave.] Wayne
 Univ. Lib.
 Dubuque, Iowa: Columbia Coll Lib.
 Duluth, Minn. : Coll. of St. Scholastica Lib.
 Durant, Okla. : Southeastern Teachers Coll.
 Lib.
 Durham, N. C. Duke Univ Lib
 Durham, N. H. · Univ. of New Hampshire
 Lib.
 East Lansing, Mich. : Michigan State Coll
 Lib
 Easton, Pa. : Lafayette Coll. Lib.
 Edmonton, Alberta, Canada · Univ. of Alberta Lib
 Elmhurst, Ill. · Elmhurst Coll Lib.
 El Paso, Tex. · Coll. of Mines and Metallurgy
 Lib.
 Emmitsburg, Md. : Mt. St. Mary Coll. Lib.
 Emory, Va. · Emory and Henry Coll Lib
 Emory University, Ga. · Emory Univ. Lib.
 Emporia, Kan. · Kansas State Teachers Coll
 Lib
 Eugene, Ore · Univ. of Oregon Lib.
 Eureka, Ill. Eureka Coll. Lib.
 Evanston, Ill. : Northwestern Univ. Lib
 Farmville, Va. State Teachers Coll. Lib
 Fayette, Mo. Central Coll. Lib
 Fayetteville, Ark · Univ of Arkansas Lib
 Florence, Ala · State Teachers Coll Lib
 Forest Grove, Ore · Pacific Univ. Lib
 Frankfurt, a. M., Germany Freiherr Carl v Rothschildsche off. Bibliothek (Unter-Mainken 15)
 Frederick, Md. Hood Coll Lib
 Fresno, Calif. · Eng. Dept., Fresno State Teachers Coll.
 Gainesville, Fla. : Univ. of Florida Lib
 Glendale, Calif. [210 E. Harvard St] Glendale Junior Coll Lib.
 Goodwell, Okla. : Panhandle A. & M. Coll
 Lib.
 Goosecreek, Tex. Robert E. Lee II S. Lib., Box 626
 Granville, Ohio. Denison Univ. Lib.
 Greensboro, N. C. : Bennett Coll for Women
 Lib.
 Greensboro, N. C. · North Carolina Coll. for Women Lib.
 Gunnison, Colo. : Western State Coll. Lib.
 Halifax, Nova Scotia: Dalhousie Coll. Lib.
 Hamilton, N. Y. : Colgate Univ. Lib.
 Hamilton, Ont. : McMaster Univ. Lib.
 Hanover, N. H. · Dartmouth Coll. Lib.
 Harrisonburg, Va. : State Teachers Coll. Lib.
 Hartsville, S. C. : Coker Coll. Lib.
 Hattiesburg, Miss. : State Teachers Coll. Lib.
 Hickory, N. C. : Lenoir Rhyne Coll. Lib.
 Hiram, Ohio: Hiram Coll. Lib.
 Hollins, Va. : Cocke Memorial Lib., Hollins
 Coll.

- Honolulu, Hawaii: Univ. of Hawaii Lib.
Houston, Tex The Wm Rice Institute Lib.
- Ikebukuro, Tokyo-Fu, Japan: St Paul's Univ Lib
Indianapolis, Ind Butler Univ Lib
Iowa City, Iowa State Univ of Iowa Lib
Ithaca, N Y . Cornell Univ. Lib
- Jacksonville, Ill . Illinois Coll Lib
Jamaica, N Y Queens Borough Public Lib ,
Periodical Division [89-14 Parsons Blvd ]
Jefferson City, Mo Lincoln Univ. Lib.
Jefferson City, Tenn Cason Newman Coll Lib
Jena, Germany Universitätsbibliothek
Johannesburg, S Africa Johannesburg Public Lib.
Johannesburg, South Africa [P.O Box 1176]
Univ. of the Witwatersand Lib.
Johnson City, Tenn. State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Kalamazoo, Mich.. Western State Teachers Coll Lib
Kiel, Germany: Englische Seminar der Universität
Kilgore, Tex . Kilgore Coll Lib.
Kingston, Ont. . Queens Univ Lib.
Kingsville, Tex.: Texas Coll of Arts and Industries Lib.
Knoxville, Tenn. Univ of Tennessee Lib
Koln, a. Rh., Germany: Universitäts- und Stadtbibliothek
Konigsberg, Germany: Universitätsbibliothek
- Lacey, Wash. . St Martin's Coll. Lib.
La Crosse, Wis. . State Teachers Coll Lib
Lafayette, Ind . Purdue Univ. Lib.
Lancaster, Pa. . Franklin and Marshall Coll Lib.
Laramie, Wyo : Univ. of Wyoming Lib
Lawrence, Kan.: Univ. of Kansas Lib
Leipzig, Germany . Universitätsbibliothek, Beethovenstrasse 6
Leningrad, U.S.S.R.: Bib-ka Akademii Nauk, Birshewaja Linija No 1
Lewisburg, Pa.: Bucknell Univ. Lib
Lexington, Ky. . Univ. of Kentucky Lib.
Lexington, Va.: Washington and Lee Univ. Lib.
Lincoln, Neb.: Union Coll. Lib.
Lincoln, Neb.: Univ. of Nebraska Lib.
Lindsborg, Kan.: Bethany Coll. Lib.
Little Rock, Ark.: Little Rock Jr. Coll Lib
Lock Haven, Pa.: State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- London, England [4 Buckingham Gate] The English Association
London, N. W , England (Regents' Park) Bedford Coll. for Women
London, England London Lib
London, England (Hampstead) Westfield Coll. Lib.
London, Ontario Univ. of Western Ontario Lib
Los Angeles, Calif Los Angeles Junior Coll. Lib
Los Angeles, Calif Los Angeles Public Lib
Los Angeles, Calif . Univ of Southern California Lib.
Louisville, Ky . Univ of Louisville Lib
Lubbock, Tex . Texas Technological Coll Lib.
Lynchburg, Va . Lynchburg Coll. Lib
Lynchburg, Va . Randolph-Macon Woman's Coll Lib
- Macon, Ga Wesleyan Coll Lib
Madison, N J Drew Univ Lib , Brothers Coll
Madison, Wis Univ. of Wisconsin Lib.
Manchester, England . The John Rylands Memorial Lib.
Manchester, England . Victoria Univ. Lib.
Manila, P. I : Univ. of the Philippines Lib.
Marburg, Germany: Universitätsbibliothek
Maryville, Tenn Lamar Memorial Lib , Maryville Coll.
McKenzie, Tenn : Bethel Coll. Lib
Memphis, Tenn . Cossitt Lib.
Memphis, Tenn.: West Tennessee State Normal Sch. Lib
Middletown, Conn. . Wesleyan Univ. Lib.
Milan, Italy: Biblioteca Nazionale di Brera
Milledgeville, Ga.. Georgia State Coll. for Women Lib.
Milligan College, Tenn.. Milligan Coll. Lib.
Milton, Wis.: Milton Coll. Lib.
Milwaukee, Wis.: [1131 W. Wisconsin Ave.] Marquette Univ., Johnston Hall Lib
Minneapolis, Minn.: Augsburg Seminary Lib.
Minneapolis, Minn . Minneapolis Athenaeum Lib
Minneapolis, Minn. . Univ. of Minnesota Lib.
Missoula, Mont.: Univ. of Montana Lib
Montclair, N. J.: State Teachers Coll. Lib
Montgomery, Ala.: Houghton Lib., Huntingdon Coll.
Montreal, P Q, Canada: McGill Univ. Lib.
Moorhead, Minn.: Concordia Coll. Lib.
Morehead, Ky.: Morehead State Teachers Coll. Lib.
Morgantown, W. Va.: West Virginia Univ. Lib.

- Morilton, Ark : Harding Coll Lib.
 Moscow, Idaho : Univ. of Idaho Lib
 Moscow, U S S R. Wsesojusnaya Biblioteka, imeni Lenina, Mokhovaya, 3
 Mount St Joseph, Ohio: Coll of Mt St.
 Joseph Lib.
 Munchen, Germany Bayerische Staats-Bibliothek
 Murray, Ky : Murray State Teachers Coll
 Lib.
 Nanking, China National Central Univ Lib
 Nashville, Tenn : Fisk Univ Lib.
 Nashville, Tenn. : George Peabody Coll. for Teachers Lib
 Nashville, Tenn : Vanderbilt Univ Lib
 New Brunswick, N. J : New Jersey Coll for Women Lib
 New Haven, Conn. : Germanic Seminary,
 Yale Univ.
 New Haven, Conn : Yale Univ. Lib.
 New Orleans, La Dillard Univ. Lib.
 New Orleans, La.: Sophie Newcomb Memorial Lib.
 New Orleans, La.: Tulane Univ Lib.
 New Orleans, La : Xavier Univ. Lib.
 New Rochelle, N. Y.: Coll. of New Rochelle
 Lib.
 New Ulm, Minn. : Dr. Martin Luther Coll
 Lib.
 New York, N. Y : [2555 Marion Ave.] Bronx
 Reference Center
 New York, N. Y Columbia Univ. Lib.
 New York, N. Y : Graduate School Lib.,
 Fordham Univ , Woolworth Bldg , 233
 Broadway
 New York, N. Y.: Hunter Coll. Lib.
 New York, N. Y : (University Heights) New York Univ. Lib.
 New York, N. Y.: [5th Ave. and 42nd St.]
 New York Public Lib.
 New York, N. Y.. Washington Sq. Lib.,
 N. Y. U.
 Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England: Armstrong
 Coll. Lib.
 Norfolk, Va.: Norfolk Division Lib., Coll. of Wilham and Mary
 Norfolk, Va.: Coll. of William and Mary Lib.
 Norman, Okla.: Univ. of Oklahoma Lib.
 Northfield, Minn.: Carleton Coll Lib.
 Northfield, Minn.: St. Olaf Coll Lib.
 Notre Dame, Ind . Notre Dame Univ. Lib.
 Oberlin, Ohio: Oberlin Coll. Lib.
 Omaha, Neb. Creighton Univ. Lib.
 Orono, Me : Univ. of Maine Lib.
 Oxford, England: The Taylor Lib.
 Painesville, Ohio Murray Lib , Lake Erie
 Coll.
 Peiping, China National Univ of Peking
 Lib
 Philadelphia, Pa (Logan Square) Free Lib.
 Philadelphia, Pa Temple Univ Lib
 Philadelphia, Pa. : Univ of Pennsylvania Lib.
 Pittsburg, Kans . Kansas State Teachers
 Coll., Porter Lib
 Pittsburgh, Pa : [4400 Forbes St.] Carnegie
 Lib , Periodical Room
 Pittsburgh, Pa.: Carnegie Free Lib of Allegheny
 Pittsburgh, Pa . Duquesne Univ. Lib
 Pittsburgh, Pa Mt Mercy Coll Lib
 Platteville, Wis. : State Teachers Coll Lib
 Port Arthur, Tex. High School Lib
 Poughkeepsie, N Y Vassar Coll Lib
 Princeton, N. J. : Princeton Univ Lib
 Providence, R I. : Brown Univ Lib
 Providence, R I. [Washington St] Providence Public Lib
 Pullman, Wash : State Coll. of Washington
 Lib.
 Raleigh, N. C . North Carolina State Coll.
 Lib.
 Rangoon, Burma (University Estate) Univ.
 Lib.
 Regina, Sask., Canada Regina Coll Lib.
 Rennes, France: Bibliothèque de l'Université
 Richmond, Va. Univ. of Richmond Lib
 Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, S A. Bibliotheca Central De Educacao, Caixa Postal [P.O Box]
 1,702
 Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico Univ of Puerto Rico Lib.
 Rochester, N. Y. : Lib., St. Bernard's Seminary
 Rochester, N. Y.. Univ. of Rochester Lib.
 Rock Island, Ill.: Augustana Coll. and Theological Seminary
 Sacramento, Calif : California State Lib.
 St Bonaventure, N. Y.: St. Bonaventure
 Coll. Lib.
 St Louis, Mo : St. Louis Public Lib.
 St. Louis, Mo.: Washington Univ. Lib.
 St. Paul, Minn.: Coll. of St. Catherine Lib.
 St. Paul, Minn.: Hamline Univ. Lib.
 St. Paul, Minn : Macalester Coll. Lib.
 St. Paul, Minn.: Public Lib.
 St. Paul, Minn.: Coll. of St. Thomas, Coll.
 Lib.
 Salem, Ore.: Willamette Univ. Lib.
 Salt Lake City, Utah: Univ. of Utah Lib.

- San Antonio, Tex.: Our Lady of the Lake Coll. Lib.
- San Antonio, Tex. Westmoorland Coll. Lib.
- San Bernardino, Calif. San Bernardino Valley Union Jr. Coll. Lib.
- San Jose, Calif.: State Coll. Lib.
- San Marino, Calif.: The Henry E. Huntington Lib. and Art Gallery
- Santa Barbara, Calif.: Santa Barbara State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Saratoga Springs, N. Y.: Skidmore Coll. Lib.
- Schenectady, N. Y.: English Department, Union Coll.
- Seattle, Wash. Public Lib., Periodical Dept.
- Seattle, Wash.: Seattle Pacific Coll. Lib.
- Seattle, Wash.: Univ. of Washington Lib.
- Shantung, China National Shantung Univ. Lib., Tsingtao
- Sheffield, Eng.: The Library, The University
- Shreveport, La.: Centenary Coll. Lib.
- Stanford University, Calif.: Stanford Univ. Lib.
- State College, Miss.: Mississippi State Coll. Lib.
- State College, Pa.: Pennsylvania State Coll. Lib.
- Staunton, Va.: Mary Baldwin Coll. Lib.
- Stellenbosch, S. Africa: Univ. Lib.
- Stillwater, Okla.: Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical Coll. Lib.
- Storrs, Conn.: Connecticut Agricultural Coll. Lib.
- Swansea, England. Univ. Coll. of Swansea, Singleton Park
- Swarthmore, Pa.: Swarthmore Coll. Lib.
- Sydney, Australia: Fisher Lib., Univ. of Sydney
- Sydney, New South Wales. Public Lib.
- Syracuse, N. Y.: Syracuse Univ. Lib.
- Tacoma, Wash.: Coll. of Puget Sound Lib.
- Taihoku, Formosa, Japan: Taihoku Imperial Univ. Lib.
- Tarkio, Mo.: Tarkio Coll. Lib.
- Tempe, Arizona: Arizona State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Terre Haute, Ind.: Indiana State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Tiffin, Ohio: Heidelberg Coll. Lib.
- Tokyo, Japan: Coll. of Lit., Imperial Univ.
- Toledo, Ohio [Collingwood Ave.] Mary Manse Coll. Lib.
- Toledo, Ohio [2801 W. Bancroft St.] Univ. of the City of Toledo Lib.
- Toronto, Can.: Univ. of Toronto Lib.
- Triplicane, Madras, India: Univ. Lib., Senate House
- Troy, Ala.: State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Tucson, Ariz. Univ. of Arizona Lib.
- Tufts College, Mass.: Tufts Coll. Lib.
- Tulsa, Okla.: Univ. of Tulsa Lib.
- Tuskegee Institute, Ala.: Carnegie Lib.
- University, Ala.: Univ. of Alabama Lib.
- University, Miss.: Univ. of Mississippi Lib.
- University, Va.: Univ. of Virginia Lib.
- Valdosta, Ga. Emory Jr. Coll. Lib.
- Valparaiso, Ind.: Valparaiso Univ. Lib.
- Vancouver, B. C.: Univ. of British Columbia Lib.
- Victoria, Australia: Central Lib., Univ. of Melbourne, Carlton N 3
- Voroneg., U.S.S.R.: Pedinstitut, Pr Revoliuzii, 24
- Waco, Texas: Baylor Univ. Lib.
- Walla Walla, Wash.: Whitman Coll. Lib.
- Washington, D. C.: Catholic Univ. of America Lib.
- Washington, D. C.: [East Capital St.] Folger Shakespeare Lib.
- Washington, D. C.: Howard Univ. Lib.,
- Washington, D. C.: Miner Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Washington, D. C.: Terrell Jr. H. S. Lib.
- Washington, Pa.: Washington and Jefferson Coll. Lib.
- Waterloo, Ont., Canada: Lib., Waterloo Coll. and Lutheran Theological Seminary
- Waterville, Maine: Colby Coll. Lib.
- Waukesha, Wis.: Carroll Coll. Lib.
- Wayne, Neb.: State Teachers Coll. Lib.
- Wellesley, Mass.: Wellesley Coll. Lib.
- Wernersville, Pa.: Jesuit Novitiate.
- West Los Angeles, Calif. [405 Hilgard Ave.] Univ. of California at Los Angeles
- Wheaton, Ill.: Wheaton Coll. Lib.
- Whittier, Calif.: Whittier Coll. Lib.
- Williamsburg, Va.: College of William and Mary Lib.
- Williamstown, Mass.: Williams Coll. Lib.
- Wilson, N. C.: Atlantic Christian Coll. Lib.
- Winfield, Kans.: Southwestern Coll. Lib.
- Winnipeg, Canada: [Arts Bldg., Fort Garry Site] Univ. of Manitoba Lib.
- Winona, Minn.: St. Mary's Coll. Lib.
- Wooster, Ohio: Wooster Coll. Lib.
- Worcester, Mass.: Clark Univ. Lib.
- Worcester, Mass.: Holy Cross Coll. Lib.
- Wuchang, Hupeh, China: Wuhan Univ. Lib.